The House met at three o'clock.

MARITIME RIGHTS COMMISSION —PERSONNEL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the following report from Ottawa in the press of Saturday, 27th March:

It was learned here to-day on the highest authority that the personnel of the commission to investigate conditions in the Maritime provinces would be as follows:

Mr. FORKE: Speak louder please.

Mr. MacLAREN: I continue quoting:

Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, Kent, England.
Dr. McGill, of Winnipeg.
Judge W. B. Wallace, of Halifax.
Hon. W. E. Foster, of Saint John.

Can the Prime Minister confirm this report given to the public?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There has been no order in council passed appointing a commission. I do not know from what source the information has come, but I can assure my hon. friend that up to the present time no appointments have been made.

AUSTRALIAN BUTTER—DUMPING CLAUSE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Yesterday I put an inquiry to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) with regard to the duty on dairy products now being imported into this country, particularly from Australia. I pointed out that the minister had stated on the 25th of February that butter imported into Canada from Australia will be subject to the provisions of the dumping clause. The minister said on that occasion:

The official in my department holds that there will be a dumping duty of approximately fifteen per cent on any butter that enjoys that privilege.

I desire to point out that upwards of one million pounds of butter have been imported from Australia during March of this year, and I should like to ask what duty is being collected on these imports. I understand from the Department of Customs that it is the duty of one cent per pound provided for in the trade treaty which has been and is being collected.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): If my hon. friend will place his question on the order paper I will give him a correct answer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I put a question yesterday and received a reply that was no answer at all. The reply was that the information asked for would be given in answer to a question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and it is not there.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT

The House resumed, from March 25, consideration in committee of the resolution to amend the Soldier Settlement Act, 1919—Hon. Mr. Stewart—Mr. Duff in the chair:

Mr. HANNESSON: When this matter was last before the House I felt that I ought to say something on it. The question is one of some importance and urgency, particularly in the west, and I trust that we shall consider it from the point of view of doing justice to the returned men, and not from any political or self-seeking standpoint. You will remember, Sir, that when demobilization took place the government of Canada was faced with a very serious problem. During the war there was a tremendous expansion of industrial development in Canada, and when the hundreds and thousands of men at the front were being returned to this country the government was faced with the problem not only of keeping in employment those who already had occupations, but of absorbing into our civil life all those who were coming back from the front. It was generally thought that the best way to meet this problem in the case of the returned soldiers was to place as many of them as possible on farms. That view was strengthened by the general policy that all parties had adopted to further agricultural development. The motives which actuated the returned soldiers largely in going on the land were chiefly these: In the first place, during the war high prices for agricultural products had prevailed; and in the next place, unless the soldiers had occupations in the professions or in industry to return to they had no alternative open to them. What I want to point out here is that although the soldier settlement scheme primarily was for the purpose of assisting the soldiers during the period of demobilization and reconstruction, other people in Canada received direct and immediate benefit from it. In the first place it lessened the competition for employment; in the next place it largely solved the unemployment question in Canada and in the third place it gave to people that had land holdings in the Dominion immediate cash for lands that in former years they had not been able to sell. What is now asked for is not a further bonus or relief for soldiers, but a recognition of the fact that so many of them were charged prices for land bought on their account by the government far beyond their actual value. It is not a bonus, but a recognition of a wrong done to them, and remember that many of the men who received those prices are the men who to-day complain that they are paying too much in the way of taxes in Canada. That money was not lost to Canada. It was largely paid out to people in Canada.

Another phase of the matter to which I wish to refer is that the soldier settlement scheme was of immense value to the Dominion of Canada. As the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) pointed out the other day, with his customary fair-mindedness, the soldier settlement scheme increased the value of lands in Canada above what it would otherwise have been and added to the present wealth and productive power of Canada. Some of the lands had been used at a prior time by farmers who had actually tilled them, but a large portion was new, virgin soil. These lands were brought into production but they would not have become productive had it not been for this scheme. For seven or eight years, these soldier settlers have been adding largely to the wealth of Canada. I desire to point out to this House that year after year, government after government have spent large sums of money for immigration, the expenditure having been principally outside of Canada. They are to-day adopting other schemes for settlement in Canada which involves the outlay of money. I maintain that even if the treasury takes a loss with respect to part of the price paid for the land, Canada still will have a bigger return than she has received from the money spent on immigration or will receive from the proposed expenditure for securing settlers on the land.

I wish to give the House some figures with regard to the settlement scheme. As a result of the scheme 30,846 men were placed on the land. Of this number 24,342 were placed as a result of loans advanced, and 6,504 on soldier grants. Of the number so settled on this land 819 have paid their loans in full, 6,635 have been foreclosed or have abandoned their farms, leaving approximately 17,000 settlers still on soldier settlement land owing money to the government. The total paid out under the scheme was $105,750,831. Something like $23,000,000 on account of principal and interest have been paid, and the principal now owing under the whole scheme is $88,228,890.65. Of the foreclosed land 1,789 units have been sold—that is land and chattels—at a profit to the Soldier Settlement Board of $625.949.35. Then in the case of 168 units where the land without the chattels has been sold, giving a surplus to the government of $19,396.75, and 182 units have been sold—but the sale not closed yet—with a prospective profit to the government of $6,293.43, there remained 4,496 of the units of the foreclosed lands still undisposed of. Last year this government made a bargain with the Imperial government to set aside for them 2,500 units for the empire settlement scheme. Five hundred families were brought out last year, and it is hoped to bring out 1,300 this year. These lands under the empire settlement scheme have all been revalued, and I am credibly informed that, although in some instances they have been sold for approximately the amount of the debt, in a large number of other cases they have been sold for one-half the amount owed by the soldier settler or less. The soldier settler has to pay the whole and is ejected from the land if he is unable to pay it. But in addition to the loan advanced by the Imperial government of $1,500 per unit, Canada makes further advances to the empire settler which are added to the purchase price.

From the foregoing several things are quite evident. Every time a unit was taken back from a returned soldier as a result of abandonment, or by foreclosure, there was a direct loss of productive power in Canada to the extent of that unit. In the next place there was a loss in the value of that unit. As soon as the land was abandoned or left, it reverted and became wild land again. Last year I understand some effort was being made to lease some of these lands. The next best lands to those sold before have been taken under the empire settlement scheme or reserved for it, and we have in addition almost half of these foreclosed lands, which undoubtedly are the poorest, on which Canada will suffer a further loss. If Canada can afford to take a loss in the manner I have described, to give a rebate to the empire settlers, surely she can afford to re-value the land and give some consideration to the men who have been on it seven or eight years, giving of their best, paying 10 per cent to begin with, and brushing, breaking, fencing, building and struggling. A new man, with no knowledge of conditions in this country is almost sure to make some losses for the government under the empire settlement scheme. Surely Canada can afford to do the right thing with regard to the men who were unfairly treated when the purchases were made.

I realize that in some cases there may not be a loss and revaluation is not necessary, but I desire to bring to the attention of the House some cases where there is a crying injustice. Two of these cases occurred near Teulon. In one case within my knowledge—the Soldier Settlement Board have the record of it—the man never went on the farm. He was a clerk in one of the offices engaged in selling lands to the Soldier Settlement Board. There was another case where a man made merely a pretence of going on. That land was taken back. In several cases the price fixed was two, three and four times the actual selling value at the time. Another soldier settler from the Petersfield district, came to me and told me about the course that was being followed by the Soldier Settlement Board; and he told me about men being driven off the farm and asked me to go and meet the soldier settlers who occupy the territory between Teulon and Winnipeg Beach. I attended the meeting and at that meeting these men drew attention to several things. The lands in that district were bought at from $15 to $31 per acre. Last year I sold a half section of land of the same character and was glad to get $5.50 per acre for it. I know of other lands in that district and very similarly located that were sold for $3.50 per acre. These soldier settlers paid tremendous prices. It is too late to criticize this feature now, but there is not the slightest doubt that they were induced to go on that land as the result of incompetence or something worse on the part of those who certified to these values. The land was practically all brush land, and wet, which meant an immense amount of work before they could begin to produce anything on it. They have gravel roads in the neighbourhood now which have ditches draining the lands, but when the men were put on those lands they were valued at a figure that they could not for a long time approximate. The men had to clear practically every foot of the land. It was at least two years before they could make any headway. The maximum improvement loans advanced amounted to one thousand dollars each and they were wholly inadequate to enable these men to get a start at all. I have seen some of these lands and I visited one location in particular that I propose speaking about. The least brushing done by any man on his unit is about a hundred acres, and brushing costs about five dollars an acre although the man does the work himself. Breaking cost at that time from twelve to fourteen dollars an acre, although the cost at the present time is only seven dollars an acre. None of the men to whom I have reference has done less than $2,000 to $3,000 worth of improvements on his land.

In 1923 when they were just beginning to get a start they were unfortunate enough to meet with rust following floods in the spring, and in 1924 that the crop of the whole district was frozen. The wheat was frosted in the blossom as Mr. Freer, superintendent and expert who was brought out from the Manitoba Agricultural College, stated. The result was that these men were left with absolutely nothing in the fall of 1924. They asked the Soldier Settlement Board for assistance in the way of seed grain in the spring of 1925 and they were informed that there was no provision for further advances in the way of seed grain. Some of the men were forced to leave their farms in order to go out and work as they had only a few cattle and they could not grow any grain that year. Others stayed on because they were fortunate enough to get advances from private sources. The credit of a soldier settler is not very high, because everything is tied up to the Soldier Settlement Board which has a preference over all claims if it desires to exercise it.

In the fall of 1925 the board told these soldier settlers that they would have to pay up their arrears or the board would seize the whole crop. Some of the men refused to do this because, as they said, they had to pay their seed grain advances and their store bill, and after going through the formality of making seizures and endeavouring to get the surrenders from the soldier settlers, the board said: We will pay the seed grain and the store bills if you will give the crop to us. This has been very discouraging to these men and I want briefly to make some reference to what happened at the meeting which I attended and to certain letters which I have since received. At a meeting at which some forty-five settlers who are still indebted to the board were present, a resolution was passed. It was signed by some twenty-six settlers—I could not wait for any more signatures at that time. This resolution was as follows:

We the undersigned having met at a public meeting at Petersfield, Manitoba, to discuss the problems of the soldier settlers, have passed the following resolution:

Resolved that we ask parliament of Canada to revalue all soldier settlers loans to the extent of fifty per cent with no discrimination as to what year he settled on the land.

One point which they brought out at the meeting was that the value of the land must be reduced to an extent where they could carry on. Next year they will have to pay interest although that has been waived for a number of years. They also maintained that having spent seven years on the land and having made considerable improvements and gained experience, they should be given a preference in regard to reductions over the British Empire settlers. They further urged that no more soldiers should be put off the land till something definite has been done in regard to revaluation. During the last year several of these men have been put off their land, although last session this House was considering revaluation which was also promised in the last election. They further urged that the board must help the soldier with seed grain where help is needed, as their outside credit is impaired. That is a problem which we must face because, in case of hardship, the settler has no credit that will enable him to go to a bank or even to a private individual in view of the way in which all assets are tied up to the board.

I have several letters from settlers giving further particulars, one from two Hermanson brothers who claim that after they had struggled along for seven years, an endeavour was made last year to put them off their land. They state that they cannot carry on with their present indebtedness. They have families; one of the boys is suffering under a disability, and yet threats are being made to put them off for empire settlers.

I have a letter from another man named Oliver, also at Petersfield, who claims that last fall after he had borrowed money in order to be reinstated, they came to him again and said that he must pay $500 or sign a surrender which, however, could be revoked later on. They called it a readjustment, and so as to have some control of his crop and to be able to pay his store bills and that kind of thing, he signed it. He is a man who has 150 acres broken and more improvements made than have been paid for by advances from the board. He has a large family and last year after paying the thresher and his store bill he had $267 left.

A man named G. A. Willis in that district who has 220 acres broken had a notice served on him last fall because he wanted to pay his seed grain and store bill. The same was the case with a man named Smallwood who had 160 acres broken. These men all have large families and are men who served throughout the war. I come now to a man named Mackenzie who could not borrow money in 1925 to do his seeding. His brother lives on the next farm. He had fall ploughed his land; he left his brother to look after the farm and the cattle; he left his furniture in the house and he went out to look for employment elsewhere. The board has seized that farm although that man had lived on it for seven years. I visited that farm and over 100 acres had been brushed and ninety acres broken and fall ploughed by his brother last fall. This winter under the empire settlement scheme, although his furniture was still there, they entered the house and put in new beaverboard walls which they painted. They say they are going to paint the house this spring and they are putting an empire settler on the land at exactly half the price that Mackenzie was charged. That in spite of the fact that last fall he offered to give them $175 in cash and 400 bushels of wheat. I might also cite the case of a man named Schofield whose land was bought by the board at $31.25 per acre and sold to empire settlers at $15 per acre.

That is all I propose saying with regard to the general merits of the matter, but I wish to point out two things in connection with this resolution. According to the first clause of the resolution the revaluation proposed is only for those who have not abandoned their land. That, I take it, would include those who have been driven off the land. I suggest that an amendment must be made to that provision so that any man who has been on the land for four or five years, who has done a certain amount of improvement that may be stated in the act, who for instance has broken fifty or sixty acres and who has made permanent improvements of a value of not less than $1,000, should have the right to go back and redeem on the same terms as an empire settler could buy. A provision of that sort should be in this measure.

I may point out that the Soldier Settlement Board in their report issued on 31st December recommended revaluation and I would suggest that it should be carried out in this way. The board themselves should do the revaluing because I think any other method would take too long and there is urgent need of this being carried out as expeditiously as possible. I then suggest an appeal to a county court judge before whom shall be the complete file of the Soldier Settlement Board and before whom shall be taken into consideration the value fixed by the board on any land in the same neighbourhood. I suggest the appeal to the county court judge so as to remove all suspicion of unfairness or partisanship. My hon. friends to the left objected to a county court judge primarily because he was a lawyer. Let me point out that they are almost the first people to seek the advice and assistance of lawyers. Indeed, one member of their body, when he was one of the commissioners appointed by this House to investigate the customs charges, sought the appointment of special counsel for himself. Now this matter would come up before the local county court judge, and as he is trained to weigh evidence and is removed from all suggestion of bias or partisanship, I do not know of anyone who would be better fitted to deal with cases of this kind. Furthermore, all assessments in Manitoba and, I believe, elsewhere in western Canada are revised before the county court judge, which would indicate that he is probably more intimately acquainted with the actual values of lands and with all the local circumstances than anybody else would likely be. A county court judge would be better qualified than almost any farmer who could be selected either from the Progressive group in this House or in the country.

In connection with the appeal before the county court judge, I suggest that the soldiers should have a special representative of their own, paid by the government. The question of cost has been referred to, but we must remember that the returned soldiers who are up against it now cannot afford to engage counsel. All the circumstances should be gone into exhaustively, and to this end it is imperative that counsel should be provided to act on behalf of the men for the purpose of presenting their cases before the judge. I trust there will be no division in the House on the question of revaluation; Canada as a whole has received large value from the services of these men. It is not a matter of giving the returned soldiers a bonus or a grant; what is needed is to remedy an evil from which they are at present suffering. For seven or eight years these men have shown their confidence in the country, and I believe that if a favourable opportunity were afforded them they could successfully carry on. As things are to-day they are labouring under adverse conditions that are almost unbelievable. In very many instances the wife is obliged to go out and work in order to secure the necessary groceries and other provisions for the family. It would be far better, in my judgment, to make it possible for these men to stay on the land than it would be to get new settlers to come into the country to displace them. Those returned soldiers who have put in four or five or six years and have made substantial improvements on the land have shown that they are fitted for farming and they should be given an equal opportunity to come in under this scheme.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As the hon member has been the first speaker this afternoon, I would put a question to him. In order to shorten the process of dealing with the question of readjustment by the representatives of the Soldier Settlement Board, what would he think of creating a board consisting of the district judge as chairman, the board supervisor in the district, and a representative of the soldiers themselves, the last named to be paid by the government? The judge and the supervisor would of course receive no salary. I offer this suggestion as it is possible that this readjustment could be very quickly made throughout Canada in that way, inasmuch as the cases could be heard in every judicial district practically as speedily as the soldier supervisors might be available. That would shorten up the process of readjustment. Perhap the hon. member would give the committee his opinion of that suggestion.

Mr. HANNESSON: I am always reluctant to have the majority of a board make the decision if there is no review of the matter. I think it would be satisfactory to take the board's valuation, which could be quickly made by the district supervisor or the superintendent of the board, provided there is to be a review by someone who is above suspicion of partisanship or as having any special interest in the matter.

Mr. STIRLING: This question of revaluation of soldier lands is one of the most complicated before parliament to-day. The conditions are exceedingly varied in this great country—varied as to the nature of the soil, varied as to the crops grown, and consequently as to the marketing of those crops, and varied again as to the men themselves who are employed in this work. One can find every description of man among the soldier settlers to-day in whatever part of Canada one may go. There are those who had previous knowledge of this kind of work, and others who had not. There are those who have been physically able to throw themselves wholeheartedly into the work and to reap a certain measure of success; while there are others who, while they have endeavoured just as much to attain success have been unable to reach it owing to various circumstances outside their own control. But the provisions of the act have been carried out under both administrations and so far as my experience in British Columbia is concerned, they have been fairly observed. A really earnest attempt has been made on the part of the officials of the board, at least, in Yale of which I can speak, to help the soldiers in their difficulties and to endeavour to assist them in making it go. But they have been met with serious obstacles. I think I am quite right in saying that the officials of the board themselves have foreseen for several years past that a revaluation of land must come but of course, hitherto they have been quite powerless to do anything in that direction. Last year when the question of revaluation of stock and equipment was before parliament there were appeals from all parts of the House to the government to include therein a revaluation of the land. The government was reluctant to undertake this. I remember my right hon. leader (Mr. Meighen) pointing out towards the close of that debate the very thorny question which we should some day have to tackle with regard to this revaluation. The difficulty is no less to-day than it was then. Indeed, if anything it has been rather aggravated by the intrusion into the question of the settlement of British government assisted immigrants.

Now, we do not know for lack of any pronouncement on the part of the government just under what conditions these immigrants are being placed on the land. I remember that the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) asked the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) for certain information. If I remember rightly he asked the question on two occasions, and the third time the minister made a reply. I will read what the hon. member for Burrard said in connection with the matter:

> May I remind the minister that the vital point of the question was, whether the lands are being turned over to the immigrants at values lower than those originally placed on them for soldier settlement?
> [Mr. Stirling.]

And the minister replied:

> I asked that question, and in some cases they are turned over at a lower value in the majority of cases, however, they are turned over at the value at which the soldier settler was placed upon the land.

A cartoon has been placed in my hands which was published in a Vancouver paper—what paper I do not know, for its name does not appear on this clipping. It depicts what is called a new settler marching along the high land, with a very small encumbrance on his back and a bright new hoe on his shoulders. The idea one gets from that is that the soldier is making his way to pastures new and is about to make a success of the undertaking. Below on a lower statum of land there is a soldier settler with a far bigger burden on his back, endeavouring to wheel a heavily laden barrow across some stony land. I do not know whether that cartoon represents the state of affairs, but I think it would be of very great assistance to the House, to the public, and especially to the soldiers themselves if the minister would make a full, ample detailed statement as to where we stand with regard to incoming immigrants. I can imagine no other circumstance making the soldier settler angrier than to feel that he has been pleading with the government for some time for a revaluation, and now to find that certain immigrants are being given a revaluation which he is not able to obtain.

As I say, conditions throughout Canada are most varied, and I want for a few moments to describe the situation of soldier settlement in Yale. In 1919 there was a big crop of fruit, the prices were good, optimism prevailed, and purchases of land commenced at about that date. Not only did fruit lands increase in value, but the optimism carried up the values of mixed farming land and general agricultural land at the same time and all lands, compared with the subsequent prices, were inflated in value. In 1920 there was a smaller fruit crop and the prices were still fairly good. But about that time was injected into this condition of affairs another matter altogether which directly affected land values. For some few years there had been difficulty between the water companies that supplied the irrigation water and the land owners, and that difficulty had become so tense by the end of 1920 that the provincial government stepped in and used its good offices to draw the water companies and the land owners closer together. Negotiations resulted in the forming of what are called irrigation districts, the whole of the water systems, including reservoirs, canals and ditches, in certain areas are now owned and administered by the land owners. But consequent on the development of those water systems, the rebuilding of certain structures which had fallen into disrepair and their proper maintenance, water rates, speaking very generally, were raised from somewhere in the neighbourhood of four and five dollars to eight and ten dollars; and as water is the lifeblood of the land in the irrigation district, and is looked upon as a direct charge on the land, so it had a very definite effect on the capital value of orchard properties. In 1921 followed another big crop at low prices. The optimism which had started in 1919 was already drooping, and in 1922 came an absolute devastation in fruit prices, the bottom dropped out of the market, its effect was severe on the value of orchard property, and in consonance with that the value of mixed farming property dropped a very great deal lower than it was at the time the majority of these purchases were made.

Now, with regard to the view which the soldier settlers themselves in that neighbourhood take of this matter, I should like to direct the attention of the committee to a resolution which was adopted by the soldier settlers in the middle section of the Okanagan valley. The covering letter which accompanied the resolution contains a paragraph which I desire to quote:

> That if Major Barnett is accurately reported in recent speeches that abandoned soldier holdings will be given to new immigrants at a price in keeping with present values, and if such is now to be the government's policy, then it is felt that the need for a reduction of original loans of soldiers becomes imperative if the immigrant is not to be more favourably treated than your soldier settlers.

That demonstrates what I consider might be called the frame of mind in which the soldier settlers met together and adopted this resolution. The resolution itself was passed at a meeting of soldier settlers in the Okanagan district of British Columbia on March 10. After referring to the inflation in land values and to the depreciation in their land, stock and equipment to the extent of 50 per cent or more, and to the incoming British government-assisted immigrants, the resolution proceeds:

> Therefore be it resolved that this meeting representing the districts of Kelowna, East Kelowna, Rutland, Glenmore, Ellison and the Mission, desires by this resolution urgently to request the Right Hon. Mackenzie King and the parliament of Canada to enact legislation which shall ensure reduction of the soldier settlers' lands to the extent of at least 50 per cent of their original amount.

I am glad to see that there is this further paragraph:

> Resolved that this meeting desires to express appreciation to Colonel Johnston, Superintendent, S.S.B., Vernon District, and staff, for their considerate treatment of the soldier settlers during the past difficult period.

I am glad of that expression of appreciation because, as I say, I can only speak with detailed knowledge of the conditions in Yale. My impression for years past has been that the officials in that office have been doing everything that was humanly possible to make the Soldier Settlement Act a success, and to assist soldiers in their efforts.

But the introduction of this entirely new suggestion, that the reduction should be 50 per cent of the original purchase value, I think perhaps may come about from lack of a clear understanding on the part of those soldier settlers of just what revaluation means. Take it for a moment with regard to orchard land. If an orchard is to be maintained, the work you have to do to it is not going to be definitely beneficial in the year in which it is done. The proper way to build up the soil of an orchard is to cover crop and to turn that cover crop in. There is no dollars and cents return to the owner during that year, nor indeed at any time, except in the effect which the increasing of the humus of the soil has on the quantity and quality of the fruit. The same remark applies, to an extent, to pruning, spraying, thinning—all this is work which has to be done if the orchard is to be maintained at a proper degree of excellence to carry the fruit of subsequent years. Now, the soldier settler says, if revaluation is taken on now it may easily develop that the present-day value of that orchard is higher than it was when it was purchased, but yet the purchase was made during a time when land values were inflated, and it still is and always will be an undue burden on that soldier settler so long as he has to make his payments to the board on too high a value. I think in that also if the minister would make a statement that all these matters will be taken into account and that a real investigation will take place as to the sum of money paid in the year of purchase with regard to what that land really was worth, then the soldier settlers of Yale will at least understand the question much more thoroughly than they do at present.

With regard to the details of the resolution on which the bill is to be based, I am inclined to think, again confining my remarks to those parts of which I have knowledge, that there is virtue in the suggestion that in the first place the settler and the representatives of the board should sit down across a table and endeavour to come to an understanding. As I said just now, officials of the board have realized for some time, I believe, that revaluation of at least some of these properties is an absolute necessity, and I believe that it will be possible to sift out those cases where the settler wishes revaluation and remove a considerable number of non-contentious cases from the list.

When it comes to the second proposition in the resolution, I cannot say that I am pleased with it, for that very reason which has already been mentioned. It matters not what government is in the saddle at the time; there will be the danger of partisanship entering into the provisions of the committee, and I would very much prefer to see a county court judge substituted, as has already been suggested by several hon. members, or in some way brought into the arrangement to be made, because I think the county court judge can reasonably be expected to be free from partisanship.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is one of the very baffling questions confronting this House, Mr. Chairman. The principle of revaluation after sale is one admitting of application very seldom. The ground advanced here is twofold, as I grasp the debate which took place the other day, and also that of to-day. The first point is that there were certain lands sold by the board—which is by the government—to the settler above the actual value at the time of sale. This is more or less a minor ground for applying the revaluation principle. The major point is that there has been, since the sale, a very marked depreciation in the value of these lands, as of all other lands in the country.

Referring to the first point for a moment, I would not endeavour to contend that in the performance of the enormous task undertaken by the Soldier Settlement Board, that in the administration of its great trust, involving the purchase of some 18,000 farms from one coast to the other and involving the value of lands far beyond this total for purposes of loans other than actual purchases and sales, there were not cases where the soldier paid too much. At the same time I hope I will be pardoned if I emphasize the fact that if ever precautions were taken to fortify the settler against inroads of that kind, they were taken in this great project. The land was valued not only by officers of the board but by independent appraisers, and the land had to be selected by and the price agreed to by the soldier himself. No soldier was permitted to enter who had not had farming experience which should have qualified him to value the land, or who had not had such training at the expense of the board as would similarly qualify him. I may say that so successfully did these precautions appear to have been that in every year during the time of those purchases, and during every session of parliament, hon. members were invited to lay before the board any case of a purchase and sale above the market value at the time, which had come to their knowledge. Until I left office, which was more than two years after the system was under way, and which was after the expiration of the purchase of almost all the soldier lands, there had not been one single case of a complaint presented by a member of this House on any side which even the member himself claimed to have been established. As a matter of fact I can still recall that members of the House, speaking from their seats, related cases of over-valuation; being subsequently requested in writing by the board to designate the farm and the purchaser, they refused to divulge the information. I may mention as well that in one province—for these circumstances I intimately recall—the board found it impossible to make any extensive purchases of school lands. The House will note that in the original act provision was made for the valuation by an officer of the province affected and by an officer of the board of any school lands requested by soldiers. In the case of the province of Alberta, for the simple reason that the officer of the provincial government absolutely declined to acquiesce in values low enough to meet the views of the representatives of the board, we found it impossible to make any substantial purchases of school lands. I may interpolate here that the then Premier of Alberta was the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton).

It is true that on the west shore of lake Manitoba we encountered a rascal who attained an office under the board. He subsequently got out of the country, which is the reason he is not serving a term in the penitentiary at the present time. He was largely responsible for purchases made there which certainly were not right, and some of which were nothing less than fraudulent. In addition though to his presence in the organization, we must remember that on the west shore of lake Manitoba there was at the time a very considerable development and optimism, resulting in extensive purchases by private individuals, among whom I will be forgiven if I include myself. Land was purchased then at prices not one-third of which could be realized today. The lands have since been simply abandoned, and the private individuals have had to take their losses. The district did not open up as expected, but it is to be hoped that subsequently it will revive, as I personally think it will.

Similar occurrences took place on the east shore to a degree, I cannot doubt it, after hearing the words of the hon. member for Selkirk. In a word, wherever new territory was invaded the results were by no means satisfactory. The board would have done better if it had confined its operations more rigidly to well settled districts. However, this minor cause or reason for revaluation may be dismissed with those few words. I do not think it applies very far, and wherever it does apply, though it is true that the soldier acquiesced, and that in the main he knew the values just about as well as anyone else, still the board did adopt a sort of relationship of trustee for the soldier. It was not a specific legal trusteeship, but the board acted in a measure as his guardian, and I would think that wherever there was a case of overvaluation as contrasted with the actual value at the time, there should be now some reparation made, to the full extent of the overvaluation.

Of course, were the cases confined to those our problem would be very simple—the number would be negligible as compared with the total. Unfortunately, the entire enterprise has run against difficulties infinitely more complicated and serious. In one sentence the difficulties are due to depreciation of farm lands. This depreciation, I should say, commenced about the middle of 1921 and was more marked over the western provinces, and naturally so, than over any other part of Canada for the reason that it was there the great bulk of the system was in operation. It was in the western provinces that the soldier settlement venture encountered a great share of its difficulties. What the depreciation has been it is not possible to fix, and even if it were the average would not apply everywhere. The question comes: Should we attack the problem of seeking to restore to the soldier his loss through depreciation? Ordinarily a purchaser would have no such right. The civil purchaser outside the soldier has no such right; he must take his chances of a fall in values as he takes his chances of a profit on the rise. But even aside from the special claims of the soldier, in the ordinary affairs of men the vendor very frequently has to bear a share of the loss caused by depreciation of the land he sold. I do not doubt that it is a very general practice throughout western Canada today, possibly extending into the eastern provinces, that vendors of land make new arrangements with the purchasers—make them simply for the reason that it is the best thing they can do. The only other alternative is to lose that purchaser and take chances of a resale later on. Consequently, in the interests of the vendor, they deem it wisdom to adopt the principle of revaluation such as this bill seeks to adopt here. When we add to these reasons the special claims which we always recognize the soldier to possess I do not think very much of a case can be made against revaluation.

Then we are immediately faced with the question: How is the revaluation to be effected? This is a most difficult and complicated, if not baffling, one. One parliament, during four sessions, because of the difficulties in the way, was unable to come to any conclusion or recommendation. The difficulties, of course, are manifest. There is the utter impossibility of being fair to all the soldiers. I do not like to see any principle applied that is not fair to all the soldiers, in fact I am very apprehensive of the difficulties we are going to encounter later in starting revaluation at all, simply because it is utterly beyond human compass to extend it to all alike. Possibly, though, the exigencies are such that even that objection must be cast aside; we have to try to do the best we can.

Now, the minister has laid before the committee a scheme which I am afraid is not very mature, which is the most vulnerable I think of anything that has yet come from his mind. Indeed, if it were not the Minister of the Interior but any other member of the government who was presenting this plan I would be inclined to move first of all to change the title, and I would head the bill something like this: An Act to coerce soldier settlers into voting for the government, and to replenish the campaign funds of the party. I am not attributing these purposes to the minister, I know how innocent he is politically, but if he had intended such a plan designedly he could not be more open to the charge.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know my right hon. friend is unduly suspicious but I should like him to explain where he sees any chance for political capital or campaign funds in this bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister might expect the answer much more readily and would, perhaps, get it more fully, if he would consult the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Cross). It he did that I am sure the hon.

gentleman would tell him how it could be done by means of this measure. However, I will try to make it plain in my own simple way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not talking to the hon. member for Athabaska, I am talking to the right hon. leader of the opposition just now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I will try my prentice hand at it, but in this category I am very much like the minister himself. The minister proposes that there will be committees appointed here, there and everywhere to revalue the land. First of all, though, he proposes that before the committee operates he himself, through his representative, and the soldier will sit down and decide what the soldier is going to get by way of substractions from his liability. Was ever such power given a minister in the world's history? Why the minister by that act is simply handed, I would suggest, thirty or forty million dollars of the credit of Canada, of cash if you wish to call it that, and he is given a free hand to distribute that as he likes, as may best suit his advantage or party advantage among the soldier settlers of this Dominion. That is really what it amounts to, there is no restriction put on him at all. There are 17,000 settlers to use that money and it will be distributed where it will do the most good, and the minister can put his own interpretation on the meaning of the word "good." That is what the minister could do under this legislation. He will not dispute it. Does my hon. friend suggest to me that such is not the case?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my right hon. friend's pardon. The minister would dispute it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He could not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): However, you are making your speech; go ahead.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister will not dispute it, not in any reasoned speech. The soldier settler claims a reduction, and the minister could give him $100, $1,000, or $5,000 if he owes that much.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister cannot do anything of the kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's representative can.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, well, that is different.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well it was always the same in my time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must confess my right hon. friend had more power over the people he appointed that I ever had.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The representative cannot do it without the minister's authority. The minister chooses the representative. He appoints him, he dismisses him, he does what he likes with him—the representative is his agent. But if it comports more with the minister's sense of propriety to say that he can do through his agent what he cannot do with his own hands I have no objection to the euphemism, none whatever. This money is placed in his hands. Seventeen thousand voters with seventeen thousand wives, and I know not how many children, are all there. The minister, through his agent, spreads the forty millions round and I do not think he will find it very hard to reach his objective. It is a different thing when a minister is given power to buy land which he must sell at the time he pays to the soldier. He has no incentive whatever there to do anything save to get the lowest price for that soldier. There is nothing on earth he can gain there. But here he has got everything to gain by being lavish to the soldier. In the one case he could not possibly misapply or abuse the power given in relation to the purchase. In this case he could misapply and abuse to his heart's content.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my right hon. friend still thinking of the minister?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I absolved the minister in point of intention at the first.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend appointed this board in the first place. I have never changed them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my right hon. friend just let me read for a moment what it is proposed to do:

> The minister may appoint district arbitration committees having jurisdiction in such soldier settlement districts as may be necessary, each committee to consist of three members, one of whom shall be an official of the Soldier Settlement Board, and one a representative of the Veterans organization in the district.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the distinction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not got to that point yet, but it will be bad enough when I get there. I am now at the preliminary stage.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The object is that there shall be a fair settlement between the Soldier Settlement Board and the soldier.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I am objecting to, the fact that the minister can do this through his own appointee. It is true that he was appointed before the present minister came into office, but the minister can dismiss him and appoint another. The appointee is the minister's own agent, and can throw whatever sum he likes off the price of the soldier's land. It does not matter what his will may be, if he feels and is so disposed he can just use that soldier whatever way he likes, and if the soldier is looking after his own interests—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If he controls the committee he can. However, I am perfectly willing and I will be delighted to be deprived of the power of appointing even the janitor, if that will suit my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not the matter of appointment, it is the whole principle of revaluation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my right hon. friend has that in his mind please get rid of it because I do not want it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I have made considerable progress if we have got to the extent of discussing a new measure, instead of the one before us. I was discussing this measure. I do not think parliament should really put such power in the hands of any minister, no matter who he is, and if I were putting it in anyone's power, certainly in this government, I would rather give it to the Minister of the Interior than any other. He may value that compliment more highly than I do.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am always perfectly willing to take it from the source from which it comes naturally.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says that if they do not agree there will be an arbitration board. Well, if he goes low enough we will always agree; if he is generous enough with the soldier there will be no difficulty in agreeing. In a word, as it stands this puts the whole settler population of Canada right in the political hands of the minister. Let us pass on from that and assume the minister is not prepared to make reductions sufficient to satisfy the soldier. This involves the necessity of erecting an arbitration tribunal. Now what a tribunal! The tribunal is the minister's representative, the official of the veterans association and someone else he names. I will not say that the other one will be president of the local Liberal association, but I know of ministers who would appoint no other, and I know this minister will appoint no other if he yields to the importunities of his colleagues. Consequently this bill will hand over to a long series of Liberal campaign committees all over Canada just thirty to forty million dollars of the money in the treasury of Canada. That is what it will do, and so sacrosanct is this tribunal to be that it is beyond all appeal. They know the final value of the land, and nobody else, and you cannot appeal from their decision to anybody, however high or however exalted. What they say finally ends it, and of course two of them could overrule the other. So that in the event of the representative on the committee named by the Soldier Settlement Board wishing to hold down the reduction, he would be utterly helpless and powerless in the hands of the official of the veterans association and of the Liberal named by the minister. The minister first of all takes all the power himself to distribute this largess, but if he is not willing to distribute it with a generous enough hand, he then puts it in the power of committees which he names, and whom he knows will be representative of the political interest of the party in power. I do not think the minister will seriously argue that any such thing should be done, or that we can justify before the people of Canada any such step. I know that he will contest the figure I suggest. I said thirty to forty million. The minister was good enough to tell me personally that he did not figure that this would cost over $10,000,000. I do not know how in the world he arrives at that figure, for this reason. If you tell a man owning a farm, whether a soldier or whatever he is, who is having a struggle—and most of them are—that if he finds the reduction insufficient he can get a committee appointed with power to make another reduction, you cannot tell me there will be only 25 per cent who will apply for reduction. I will give my estimate of the percentage, and my estimate will be, that 100 per cent will apply. What is the situation? We have 17,000 farms to be revalued. I do not think it is very seriously questioned that there is a natural depreciation, which would average, it may be, 40 per cent—forty per cent on over $30,000,000, because there is $38,000,000 owing—but does anyone think that with this plan we will keep up to the actual depreciation? Never in the world.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think in the light of the experience of the sales we have made it would run anything like 40 per cent. I placed it at 20 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope the minister is right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am basing that opinion on the result of the sales that have been made already.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But as hon. members have stated—and I do not doubt the truth of the statement—the sales have been largely of the better parcels of land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps it is unfair to say that. There are still 1,200 farms—I am simply repeating what I got from the Soldier Settlement Board—that have been selected as first-class farms, or in that category, that we hope to settle this year with British settlers. There will be about 1,100 farms of the class described by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson). Some of them are of little or no value. Fortunately they are located in three or four different districts. They will still be on hand. But taking the 1,200, plus the sales that have been made, and applying that average over the whole of the purchases, it would look as though there would not be more than 20 per cent of the settlers now on the land who are entitled to any reduction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister pays a compliment to the original purchasers even greater than I pay myself. I think in western Canada there has been a 40 per cent reduction in the value of real estate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend might be right with respect to 1923, but that is not true now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On account of appreciation since?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope it is not true. It will be a bright morning for me when I awaken and find it is not true. But I am afraid it is just about true, and the minister will have many cases where there is far more depreciation. I earnestly hope he is right. But my hopes are not very lively. I really think he will find that 40 per cent is just about the average reduction in the value of real estate. I mean since these lands were purchased in 1920, because undoubtedly they were then at the very acme, at the very height. So that the suggestion as to the tremendous amount involved is not an exaggerated suggestion. It certainly is not exaggerated if this method of arriving at the amount is to be finally decided upon. Then the question comes, what should take its place? What would be a better plan? This is a much more difficult question to answer. Here is certainly one instance where criticism is much easier than constructive suggestion. Ordinarily when the funds of the nation are to be claimed by a private individual the method adopted is to have a court decide on the merits of the case and make the valuation. The Exchequer court is erected for that purpose. I know it is needless to suggest that the Exchequer court could be used so extensively as would be necessary here. It has not ramifications wide enough nor members numerous enough, but nevertheless it seems to me the principle should apply and we should try to make such variation as will suit the altered circumstances. Of course if the minister himself were the owner of the lands and suffered by the loss, there would be no need of any protection. Self-interest would take care of the situation. But just because the government is trustee, and self-interest is eliminated, then there must be something in the nature of a court established, and if something in the nature of a court is to be established, let it be as nearly as possible a court with all the safeguards of a court, a court where all self-interest will be eliminated and all local prejudice will be removed from consideration of the court; in a word, with all those other qualities which have given the courts of the land the status they have among our people. Certainly the so-called tribunals which the minister suggests have none of those qualities at all; they have all the weaknesses and none of the virtues.

The best suggestion I have heard—and I have passed it to the minister—is that the county court judge could be used for this purpose. The objection has been raised that county court judges were lawyers and I suppose in a sense they are lawyers still. I do not appreciate the objection on that ground; I cannot understand its being presented, as I believe it has been, chiefly by hon. gentlemen to the left. If this objection is to apply as against a county court judge, it would apply just the same against the whole structure of the Exchequer court. The business of the Exchequer court judge is mainly to decide land values, very frequently farm land values, often city land values, sometimes the value of chattels, personal property. As a judge he does not know anything about the value of the land whether it is a farm or city property, or of the value of personal property, but as a lawyer he knows how to weigh the evidence of others on the value of the land or property and that is because he is so appointed. His experience as well as his training gives him that quality. That reasoning applies equally well to this case. County court judges not only are qualified to weigh evidence but have considerable experience along that line. They have to weigh evidence as to land values in the pursuit of their duties week in and week out, year in and year out. They have to do so not only in civil suits but in relation to appeals from assessments and all such things as that. That is their work. On the score of qualification, speaking generally—there will be exceptions—I do not think any attack can be made upon them.

But there is the further fact and an important one, that they have the time. Those situated where they will be required for the purpose of this legislation undoubtedly have the time to devote themselves to the task. I have long contended that we have far too many county court judges in this country. We could get along with far fewer, but if we have them, why not utilize them for this purpose? I am sure the great majority of them would be glad to be of service, and I know many of them who, like the sword laid by, rust and eat into themselves ingloriously because they have not enough to do. They are qualified for the work; they have the leisure, the time, to devote themselves to it, and they are on the ground. You do not have to go far in order to reach them; they are right there. I make this suggestion to the minister: Let him revise this scheme along those lines; put it into his power to come to the terms of the soldier, but make the terms so come to reviewable by the county court judge under such conditions that anybody who would pay more for the land could come in and make the offer and then the judge would say: No, this is not fair to the public; this is an attempt to gain political advantage at the expense of the treasury and I will not permit the reduction. If that safeguard is established, I doubt if it would ever need to be exercised in the whole courts of revaluation. The very presence of it would help.

Mr. NEILL: If the right hon. member will allow me to say so, I think the objection which arose in the Progressive corner of the chamber to county court judges was not so much because they were lawyers or ex-lawyers, but because they were comparatively ignorant of agricultural conditions. Would the right hon. member in his scheme allow or suggest the assistance to county court judges of agricultural experts, the same as is done in Admiralty court cases?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the province of the witness. The judge has to weigh the evidence adduced. As a matter of fact in the west the county court judges are pretty good judges of land; they are engaged in that work all the time; but in case they are not, it is the evidence they weigh.

Mr. NEILL: How about the Admiralty court?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That court deals with other subjects altogether.

Mr. NEILL: Admiralty court judges are always assisted by experts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the experts have no judicial role to play.

Mr. NEILL: Advisory.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good. The witness is advisory. I do not think such assistance would add to the value of the result; I think it would add to the expense. That would be my view of the matter, although undoubtedly it would be an improvement on this. I do not think there will be any difficulty in having county court judges very fairly and thoroughly review these cases, and I should like to see a provision which would make it unnecessary for the soldier to have a lawyer at all. I do not think a lawyer should be necessary. If we are going to authorize the court to appoint a lawyer for the soldier in any case, I would be appalled at the size of the lawyer's bill the board would have to pay, high as my opinion is of the profession, especially when I witness the bills which this government paid last session and the standard they have set. I do not say that they are alone in this offence; the standard has been set for quite a while. I think the standard is an outrage and I do not care who hears my words.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The right hon. gentleman hinted at the procedure prior to going to the court. Does he agree with the provision in the bill that an attempt should be made to settle the case with the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but the minister did not catch the precaution I set. After this settlement is made it should be reviewed on proper notice before a county court judge for the protection of the treasury. If they cannot come to a decision at all, they should both be given an opportunity to appear before the county court judge upon due notice, and the proceedings should be so simple that there should be no necessity of a lawyer appearing on either side. Let the proceeding be summary and quick, but at the same time thorough. It might be possible to have some system afterwards of bringing an appeal before a court composed of all, but I hope that would not be necessary. That would be cumbersome and slow, and if such a board existed, I am afraid it would be always or nearly always resorted to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A review would involve a stated case on the part of the board and on the part of the soldier. There would be a difficulty there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There would be no difficulty in stating the case. You would simply state the value; each side would append his reasons for that value, and the judge would probably want to hear some evidence in that case. But it is a precaution that is essential and I would think, if it existed, if each side knew that that precaution was there, there would be very few cases in which there would be any variation of the reduction made by the judge.

This general outline of a constructive suggestion I advance and I advance it with some timidity because I know the whole problem is difficult of solution. If I were to face it in view of one or two individual criticisms, I would say this: There is no provision for this class of cases where a considerable amount has been paid by way of reduction of the advance and where the tribunal would find that the depreciation represented a larger total than the balance owing. I do not doubt there will be many cases, perhaps hundreds of that kind. Is the man then to be given something back by the board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We did not insert any provisions; we are leaving that pretty largely to the discretion of the board simply to deal with the men who are on land.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is essential that there be such a provision. You cannot get away without it. You have either to make a provision that, in the event of the amount of the depreciation being greater than the amount owing, the man is to get that back from the board, or else that amount of depreciation shall in no case be found to be greater than the amount owing. The latter would seem to me to be the necessary, although in some senses an unfair, clause to put in the bill.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would that not lead on to another stage at which you would have to deal with a man who really is off the land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was just about to say that this latter suggestion is to my mind necessary, namely, that no depreciation should ever be allowed greater than the balance owing. And it would be necessary, although unfair, because if you put it the other way then you would certainly be obliged to pursue the same principle further and restore the depreciation to those who have paid in full. There are in the proposals other minor defects which it seems to me it would be inappropriate to labour now.

Mr. FORKE: This is a very important matter. I have been receiving a great many letters, as I have no doubt most hon. members have done, telling heartrending stories about the struggles in which soldier settlers have found themselves in the matter of payment upon their land. I trust that we shall give to this matter the very best consideration and make the most satisfactory arrangement which it is possible for parliament to arrive at. I have listened with a good deal of pleasure to the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and with the exception of a few of the little thrusts which I suppose he could not help making at the government his speech on the whole has, I think, been beneficial and helpful in solving this most important question. I do not see why we should be tied down to anything in the resolution in relation to the board which will finally adjudicate upon the value of the land. The valuation of land is one of the most difficult problems to be encountered in connection with agriculture inasmuch as land values vary so much in different localities and according to the geographical situation of the land. The question is also affected by considerations of transportation facilities and other factors that enter into the value of lands.

As regards the final appeal, I listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson). I want to assure that hon. gentleman that, speaking for myself personally as a member of the Progressive party, I am not particularly wedded to any one method so long as it is the best method we can devise of finding out the proper valuation of the lands. A number of years ago it was my privilege, or rather my duty, to value lands in the province of Manitoba, and there was no appeal from the valuation which I made in conjunction with another member of the board. I have always been impressed with the great difficulty of that position, for I used to feel that the task would have been much easier had I known that there might be an appeal from the decisions we gave. I have had a good deal of experience in Manitoba in the valuing of lands. I used to equalize all the assessments of land as between the various municipalities in the province, comparing one municipality with another, and as a result of the work I put in at that time I realize, perhaps as well as any one else can, just how difficult it is for one individual or a board to arrive at a fair and correct valuation of any given piece of land.

The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) referred to the valuation of land going down rapidly in British Columbia simultaneously with a fall in fruit prices. He said that the bottom fell out of the fruit market, so that fruit was practically of no value. It struck me as he made this statement that it was rather strange that the price of fruit did not vary very much in the prairie provinces at the time to which he referred. I mention this in passing to show that something is wrong with the economic system when the fruit growers in British Columbia must sell their fruit at very low prices while the consumers in the prairies never realize the fact that the value of this commodity to the growers in British Columbia is on the decline. Someone was evidently making far too big a profit out of the fruit growers.

Coming back to the question of valuing lands, I think we all realize that one of the great difficulties in connection with the matter is the fact that these lands were purchased during a time of inflation. As a matter of fact that is the trouble with the rural credit schemes in most of the prairie provinces. Rural credit was undertaken when land and stock were at peak prices, and when the security offered for loans seemed ample, although in a year or two it was not sufficient to cover the amount of the loan. When the soldiers came back from the war, an arrangement was made to have them settle on lands which unfortunately were being sold at very high prices. The soldier returned weary and worn from war service, and he was looking for a home immediately; he wanted a place in which to settle down and build a home for himself. I claim therefore that he was not then in the best condition to take care of himself. He was ready to take the first place that apparently suited him, and he entered into an arrangement which since he has found himself utterly unable to carry out. It is therefore the duty of parliament and of the country to see that justice is done to these men who have gone on the land.

I hope that we shall get some really constructive criticism from every quarter of the House. The measure having been introduced by the government, I do hope that the leader of the opposition will lend his constructive ability to make the act as fair and satisfactory as possible. We do not want it to prove a failure; we do not want it made an instrument for the aggrandizement of either one party or the other: we want a bill that will work to the advantage of the soldier settlers themselves and do full justice by them.

As to the appraisal of land values, I do not think that it would be the best thing to leave it to the superintendent of the board to decide upon the values. I must admit that while the leader of the opposition was speaking I could see some room for criticism in this regard; it seems to me that probably this would not be the very best method to adopt to begin with. I do not see why we could not adopt some system similar to a board of arbitration. The local superintendent acting with someone appointed by the soldier settlers might comprise the first board of appraisal. I do not think that the soldier settler's representative ought to be a lawyer or a businessman—well, I would not say that he should not be a businessman, but I would insist upon his being well acquainted with land valuation. These two might not agree; and while I was at first opposed to the idea of carrying an appeal to the county court judge, I have come to the view that if the two appraisers forming the first board could not agree then the appeal might be made to a judge. I would not be entirely averse to such an arrangement. It has been argued of course that a county court judge might not be a judge of land; he might not know very much about land values. But I am inclined to agree that he could perhaps come to some satisfactory decision, after listening to the evidence submitted to him on appeal, and strike a reasonable balance between the differences of opinion upon which he might adjudicate. So that I am not standing firmly against a proposal of this kind. In fact, Mr. Chairman, before the bill is passed I would be willing to accept almost any proposal, no matter how I might have regarded it at the outset if I thought it was an improvement on my own idea. The great thing after all is to enact a really good piece of legislation that will do justice to our returned men on the land. I know that this will be very difficult to accomplish. I shall not attempt to estimate the amount of money it will involve, but we might as well make up our minds to do what is necessary. This is a war loss, there is no mistake about it, and it is not going to be lessened by ignoring it year after year while conditions are steadily growing worse. I would rather see mistakes made and the land undervalued than have the present condition continue indefinitely. This is one of our post-war mistakes, and we are doing neither ourselves nor the soldiers on the land justice when we leave them unassisted to accomplish an impossible task.

One of the difficulties arose from the fact that at the outset a great many people would not believe what they were told about the unsatisfactory condition of our agriculture. Those of us who are farming our own unencumbered lands found during some of those lean years that the balance was on the wrong side of the ledger. I do not mind telling the committee that one year I went behind $2,000 although I did not owe one dollar upon my farm. How was a soldier settler to get through such a disastrous year when he was further handicapped by having to make payments on his land? It was an impossible task. The reason perhaps that we of the Progressive group were more sympathetic towards our soldier settlers was that we were in a better position than most other members to understand the actual difficulties which confronted those men.

I am sure the minister will be ready to adopt any suggestions to improve the bill which will be based on this resolution, and I appeal to every member of the committee to regard the proposed legislation as at least an attempt to do justice to our soldier settlers by helping to remedy what at the present time I believe is nothing less than a scandal.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, I was for many years a member of the Pensions committee of this House which had this question in their charge, and I can readily understand the difficulty the minister has in framing a bill which will be satisfactory to all of our returned soldiers who have settled on the land. I would ask him at the next sitting of the House to be prepared to give us a little information along these lines:

First, the total number of soldier settlers in each province.

Second, the number who have paid in full.

Third, the number who are in arrears.

Fourth, the total value of the land occupied at the present time by returned soldiers who will ostensibly come under this measure.

We should also like to know, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has suggested, who will properly come under this legislation. The bill itself reads:

[Mr. Forke.]

> The settler. . . . who has not repaid his indebtedness to the board,—

I presume that would mean those who have not repaid it in full.

> —and where there has been a decrease or depreciation in the market value of such land...

Also the settler apparently must be at present residing on the land. It appears to me that under this resolution a man who owed a few dollars to the board would find himself in the position of having some money coming to him from the government instead of having a further payment to make. Along that line the difficulty which we had in our committee in the past—and it is a difficulty that this or any other government must face—was to do justice to those men who by hard work—as contrasted with the carelessness of those who have failed to keep up their payments—have paid for their land in full. We have thousands of cases, I believe, in every province where two men on exactly similar land, which then and to-day would be valued at exactly the same figure, provide a striking contrast, one having paid in full and the other having paid practically nothing. Is it fair to the man who by his industry and by his thrift or by the assistance of his friends,—which ultimately he must repay—should receive no consideration while the other man, who simply through lack of industry and economy is in arrear with his payments, should be granted a reduction of from 30 to 40 per cent in his indebtedness? This is a question which the government must consider very seriously. It is a question that is receiving a great deal of attention among our returned soldiers.

I think this measure should be considered entirely upon its merits, not from the point of view, as expressed by the leader of our Progressive friends (Mr. Forke), that we should do everything we possibly can for the returned soldier, for in this case it would only lead to benefiting those who have not paid at the expense of those who have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Mr. Chairman, I also have been a member of the committee dealing with the pensions and settlement of returned soldiers, since its inception. I have a very distinct recollection at the time when legislation of this character was first brought down of saying that I was afraid many of these soldier settlers would curse the day that they ever accepted a loan to go on the land. I am sorry that my prediction has come true. It is generally admitted today that the conditions on our farms are not at all satisfactory. The government by this measure propose to help to a limited extent some of the soldiers who are still on the land which they secured under the soldier settlement scheme. But I think we should first of all very carefully consider what has brought about these deplorable conditions. I have witnessed a disposition on the part of the government ever since they came into office to belittle the interests of those who are engaged in agriculture, and to sacrifice those interests in order to obtain concessions and advantages for those engaged in other industries or occupations. I have repeatedly directed the attention of the government to this matter. A year ago when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) introduced a trade treaty with one of our sister dominions I took the ground that it was very unfair and unjust to those of our people who were engaged in agriculture, particularly to the returned soldiers who had been induced to go upon the land under the soldier settlement scheme. These men returning from the struggle and turmoil of war regarded these loans as very attractive, and the quietness of country life appealed to many of them, particularly to many who had not had very much farming experience, with the result that many of them have already been forced to abandon their farms and lose the money which they put into them, while others are in very difficult and straitened circumstances to-day. I readily admit that something must be done for those men. To my mind it is one of the greatest tragedies we have had happen in this country, that men who have rendered such sacrifice and service to their country should afterwards be placed in such a position that after years of labour and after spending everything they had, they are practically forced to abandon their last possessions. Now we are proposing a measure of relief or revaluation, and at the same time the government have another scheme under consideration, namely, old age pensions. All these things lead one to wonder what the end is to be. We talk about the wonderful possibilities of this country; the country apparently has great possibilities, but there is something radically wrong with the means by which this country is governed at this time. I have always taken the stand—and particularly so since the great country to the south adopted a tariff which is absolutely prohibitory—that it is absolutely essential for us to adopt something of that nature, so far as those engaged in agriculture are concerned.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. What has the tariff to do with this question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Notwithstanding the interruption, Mr. Chairman, I consider that it has very much to do with the question, and that it is largely responsible for the condition at present existing among those on our farms.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): What is the point of order?

Mr. DUNNING: The point of order is the one raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). Is my hon. friend discussing the resolution before the House?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I expected that a point of order would have been raised after the interruptions by the two hon. gentlemen opposite, but apparently none is to be raised. I was pointing out that the conditions which prevail to-day among the returned men, the conditions which are responsible for the remedial measures brought forward to assist those still on the land, might be remedied by other means. Before the orders of the day were called this afternoon I endeavoured to get some information from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) with regard to a matter which affects these men very very much indeed, but failed to do so.

The thing which is so apparent is that these men, with a very limited capital, engaged in mixed farming, in poultry raising, in dairying and in work of that kind being unable to start on an extensive scale, particularly in western Canada. I know that in Ontario they usually bought small farms and carried on that sort of farming, and to-day the government are endeavouring to supply the people of Canada with the products of foreign countries rather than with the products of our own farms. This is one of the most serious things with which the returned soldier has to contend. Realizing that, I introduced a motion in the House some time ago, regretting that some redress was not being provided for these men, and it was this class above all others that I had in mind at the time. Now we propose to take $30,000,000 or maybe $40,000,000 out of the treasury of the country and hand it over to the 17,000 men still left on the land, by a revaluation of their property, and attempt to remedy their difficulties in that way. If conditions are as bad as the government admit they are, and if agricultural conditions in this country are so unsatisfactory that the value of land has depreciated to so great an extent, what about the rest of the people who are not returned soldiers and who are leaving the land by the thousands? Even more would be leaving if they could get away. The blighting influence of this government has been noticed not only during the last year but almost since the time they came into office, and that influence has been encouraged by my hon. friends to my left who have stated, notwithstanding the remarks of the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke), that they understand the conditions of the returned soldiers better than anyone else. I say they have not shown the interest in the returned soldiers which they should have shown.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I would like to ask the hon. member if this distress did not commence before this government came into office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I am referring to the conditions which have developed since this government assumed office.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Did not this distress commence before this government came into office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Is it the distress in the government ranks which my hon. friend speaks of?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The distress due to the deflation of land values; did it not commence before this government came into office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): It is certainly much more pronounced at present than it has been at any time since the government took office.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I would like the hon. gentleman to answer the question. Will he not admit that this distress commenced before the present government came into office?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I do not understand that I am under orders from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I simply asked the hon. member if he would be courteous enough to answer my question. I am not trying to give out any orders.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I may say to my hon. friend that it has been so noticeable since the government took office, and at present the distress is so apparent that all these remedial measures are being suggested—old age pensions, relief for the men who have gone on the land. This is the best evidence I can advance to show that the distress is more acute to-day than it ever was before.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): So the hon. gentleman refuses to answer my question, does he?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Just along that line, Mr. Chairman, take the case of a returned soldier out in my hon. friend's constituency. Suppose he is carrying on a farm in a small way; his revenue is largely derived from dairying, or possibly from poultry raising. What does he find to-day, as a result of the operation of a measure put into effect by hon. gentlemen opposite?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, what does he find?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Yes, what does he find? He does not find what the farmer in the United States finds.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my hon. friend deny that butter and eggs are higher in Canada at the moment than they are in the United States? That is the final answer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): My hon. friend knows as well as anyone—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Certainly I know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): —that in the southern states, where the warm weather comes in much earlier than it does in Canada, conditions are much more favourable for production than in Canada during the winter. This was the argument advanced by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows perfectly well that in Canada to-day the price of butter and eggs is higher than it is in the United States. That is the point.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): And the hon. member ought to know the reason.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I know the reason.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The predictions of the government, and particularly of the Minister of Finance, that they were going to encourage by the Australian treaty a continuous supply of dairy products, meats and such things from the southern hemisphere during the winter months, induced the people of this country to export their stock of supplies early at low prices. They did not keep their stock for the higher prices, as had been customary in the past.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): My hon. friends laugh, and I heard the new Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) say, "Isn't this awful?" Let me inform the Min- of Railways that during the month of March to date we imported from the United States 1,734,651 dozen eggs, under a tariff of 3 cents per dozen. Let Canadians ship their eggs over to the United States and find out what treatment they will get from that country.

Mr. DUNNING: Because the price is higher here than it is there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The United States imposed a tariff of 12 cents a pound on butter going into that country in order to protect their own producers. What has happened in the case of this country? During the three months of this year, 1926, under the treaty negotiated by hon. gentlemen opposite, there have been imported into Canada no less than 4,406,610 pounds of butter from Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. DUNNING: And the price was higher than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The argument of the Minister of Agriculture seems to be: The more you bring in the higher the price will be. In consequence of heavy exports of Canadian butter somewhat of a shortage was created in the home market. This was followed by a rise in price with the result that we are now up against competition from Australia and New Zealand, who are shipping large quantities of their own butter into the Dominion bonused by Australians to the extent of 6 cents per pound. The inducement held out to soldier settlers, and others engaged in the farming industry is, "Keep down the tariff on butter to one cent a pound and permit of subsidized imports from abroad and everything will be well." During the month of March, up to the present, the 29th, we imported 1,165,232 pounds of butter from Australia—

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): —to compete with the butter which should be produced by our own people.

Mr. CANNON: Unless my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, promises to conclude his remarks soon I call your attention to rule 19.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): It is not to be conditional if it is a point of order.

Mr. CANNON: It will be peremptory. The rule to which I desire to draw attention is No. 19 which contains the following paragraph:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members to prevent them from reviving a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

I have heard my hon. friend speak at least fifty times on the question of Australian eggs and butter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Well, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hands the returns from the Department of Customs dated yesterday, and the minister never heard me discuss this matter before.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask the hon. member to keep as near the subject of the resolution as possible. I am quite sure that now his attention has been drawn to the point he will do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I rose to point out that the government, as a result of their own actions, have been largely responsible for the conditions which prevail. Instead of providing a real remedy or cure for those conditions they are now seeking to advance a scheme which will make possible by appointees of the government a supervision over the cancellation of the loans advanced to these men who are on the land, and in that way they will be able if so disposed to control them politically.

Mr. BROWN: Is the hon. member under the impression that this scheme provides for the lending of money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): It provides for the concellation of loans—

Mr. BROWN: My hon. friend had better read the resolution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): —which makes it much more objectionable. It provides for a reduction of the obligations of these men with respect to the amount they owe on these lands. I do not know what else my hon. friend (Mr. Brown) could term it. The resolution is one that certainly is necessary in order to relieve distress, and we might just as well understand the cause of that distress now as at any other time. The situation has become so acute that the prospects for the future are far from bright.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I tell the hon. gentleman that the situation is not acute at all? The soldiers have paid in more money this year than in any other year in their history.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When the hon. gentlemen wanders so far from the subject I find it necessary to correct him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): If that is the case and the soldiers at present on the land are that much more prosperous surely the case presented by my hon. friend from Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) should receive some consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): And those soldier settlers who have been forced off the land and who have lost everything they own are entitled to receive every consideration. Probably when the minister brings down the information which he has promised we will be in a position to discuss the question much more intelligently.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think that information will help my hon. friend one particle if he will permit me to say so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I have endeavoured to show that the stand taken by the minister at the present time has no substantial footing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The information in question has been brought down from year to year, and is on the records of the House. I am perfectly willing to bring down further information so that what is already available may be brought up-to-date.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Since the time of which the minister speaks a great many of these soldier settlers have been forced to give up their holdings and have been sold out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will certainly bring down the desired information. I do not carry it in my memory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I thought from the remarks made that you did.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no, not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I should have expected the minister to have full information for hon. members upon bringing a matter of such importance before the House.

[Mr. D. Sutherland.]

Mr. DUNNING: There appears to be a disposition in all quarters of the House to regard this problem as one which must be dealt with. There is also a general disposition, with one or two exceptions, to regard it as a problem which should be dealt with on a non-partisan basis, and to carry on the discussion from other than an acrimonious, partisan, political point of view. Some hon. gentlemen have departed from that course, and the hon. member who just sat down is one of them. It appears to be possible, notwithstanding the rules of the House, to interject protectionist matter into the discussion of every question, from old age pensions to soldier settlement, regardless of the irrelevancy of such interjections. The other exception I have in mind, of course, was my right hon. friend the leader of the Conservative party, who built up for our view a gigantic scheme of political manipulation which would be under the direction of the Minister of the Interior if the bill to be based on this resolution should pass.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be a lot more serious if it were done under your own.

Mr. DUNNING: I expected my right hon. friend would probably be a little more humble in connection with this matter, for the reason that this is another of those anaemic babies which his government left on the doorstep of the present administration in 1921. I do not think my right hon. friend can complain of having been ungenerously treated by the Minister of the Interior or by the government with regard to his motives at the time of the inception of the scheme. The right hon. gentleman has been treated, in the past and during the present session, with marked generosity in that regard, although he might very well have been subjected, following the line set by himself, to very grave criticism in connection with the expenditure of tens of millions of dollars of the country's money in the carrying out of the scheme of which he was the father. We all admit that his motives in inaugurating that scheme were of the best, but admitting that, we have a right to demand of him similar fair and courteous treatment in our endeavours to clean up the mess which was left on our doorstep.

My right hon. friend says that the Minister of the Interior is to have the exercise of full power in connection with thirty or forty million dollars' worth of property, and he depicts what could be done in the way of the operation of a political machine when that large sum is being distributed. I ask him, is that fair? The board which will deal with this matter is identically the same board which my right hon. friend appointed when he inaugurated and administered this scheme, and if it was safe to entrust to that board the purchase of seventy or eighty million dollars' worth of land, if the members of this board were honest and non-partisan in all their dealings at that time and under those circumstances, have we not every reason to believe they will be equally fair, equally honest, and equally non-partisan in handling this proposed readjustment of values, that is, in so far as the initial steps provided for in the resolution now before the committee are concerned? What are the initial steps? They are that an arrangement may be made as to the amount of this depreciation between the soldier settler and the board direct, without any local or judicial intermediary. The board and the soldier have been dealing with each other for a number of years. The board purchased the land for the soldier under the regime of my right hon. friend. He says himself this afternoon that the great bulk of the purchases were made at prices which were too high, and he admits that the great bulk of them were made at a time when he was in office. This goes to prove what I said a few moments ago, namely, that we will have to clean up the mess; and in our endeavour to do that we are subject to attacks such as those to which I have referred. The men who were in charge in my right hon. friend's administration are still in charge. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has not displaced the appointees of the right hon. leader of the opposition. Is it the fact that my right hon. friend knows what his party endeavoured to do that makes him so suspicious about what might be done?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Endeavour to do where?

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with creating a political machine out of the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That we endeavoured to create a political machine?

Mr. DUNNING: I asked if the accusation that was made that we would have power to do certain things under this scheme is based upon the knowledge of what my right hon. friend endeavoured to do?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask my hon. friend now if he suggests that we attempted to make a political machine out of it?

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend denies that he ever attempted to make it a political machine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am asking my hon. friend if he suggests it.

Mr. DUNNING: I suggest nothing of the kind, but I ask him to be equally fair to us and not suggest that we would do the same thing. That was exactly what my right hon. friend did this afternoon. He made the suggestion with regard to the members of the government that they would do what he himself repudiates having done when he sat in the seat of authority. Honesty is not a matter of politics. There are honest Liberals and honest Conservatives. I believe that my right hon. friend endeavoured to operate this scheme honestly and fairly, and I only ask of him that he will be equally generous with regard to the motives of those of us who are in charge of affairs now. That is not asking too much.

With regard to the machinery set up under this resolution, does my right hon. friend not see the similarity between this machinery which he condemns and that which he set up for the purchase of the land in the first place? My hon. friend from Brandon will recognize the machinery which was established, I am sure, and it did involve the appointment of local boards of appraisement. If it was perfectly right and just to have local boards of appraisement when the land was purchased, what then is politically or publicly wrong with having local boards of appraisement with respect to the depreciation which has occurred since? Surely that is a matter of common sense. So far as the government is concerned we would appreciate suggestions not actuated by political malice or partisanship, but suggestions of the character my right hon. friend made during the greater part of his speech when he got away from political spleen and political malice.

So far as the district court judge is concerned, he, of course, by virtue of his position, would be above suspicion of influence in connection with this matter, but would deal with it from the purely practical point of view. In regard to the appeal going to the district court judge, may I say this: In connection with matters of an almost similar character, having to do with land values for assessment purposes, for many years each of the western provinces followed the procedure of appeal to the district court judge. There is a tendency to get away from that practice nowadays. That is not due to any lack of faith in the judiciary, but because the determining value of land is not merely a matter of evidence; all sorts of opinion as to the value of a parcel of land are expressed before a judge. It is rather a more practical method, and for that reason in the western provinces—and I believe in some of the eastern provinces—there have been developed special tribunals, usually for the whole province, having to do solely with the assessment work, men skilled in the matter of land value, skilled in the matter of assessment. In Saskatchewan, for instance, there is an assessment commission of three men, all of them experienced in the matter of assessment and land values, having to do with that and that alone; and they are the court of appeal with regard to the value of lands generally. I think it would be the testimony of men from that part of Canada who are familiar with that type of settlement that this system works better and more satisfactorily than an appeal to the local county court judge, for the reason that the opinion of one judge as to the value of land may vary very greatly from the opinion of his brother judge from the district alongside of him.

In conclusion, I say that the government is not desirous of approaching this matter at all from the point of view of party advantage. There is no thought in the mind of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior of creating a political machine; indeed the right hon leader of the opposition accorded to the minister a certain political innocence which I fear he would not accord to me. But perhaps he will believe me when I say that I never had in my mind any idea that it would be possible to do with this measure what he suggested we are going to do, until he himself made reference to it this afternoon—he compels me to think about it.

But after all this subject is too great for even the friendly bickering which may take place across the floor of the House. It bristles with too many problems. If we cannot deal with it without political partisanship we certainly cannot solve it by the aid of political partisanship, and I feel sure the minister will be prepared to give consideration, on the further stages of the bill, to the constructive suggestions which have been made, with the object of dealing more effectively with what is admitted to be a most difficult matter indeed. I am not much enamoured personally of the suggestion with respect to the appointment of the district court judge. I recognize the difficulties of the district board of arbitration. I have personally a great deal more faith in the possibility of securing a proper settlement as between the Soldier Settlement Board and the settler than I have in any subsequent appeal. The machinery for subsequent appeals must be created, of course, to deal with that class of case which cannot be settled by negotiation. But I do not believe that the appeal machinery should be set up in such form as to invite wholesale appeal, because costs will be involved in appeals. You may say, "Have no lawyers." Well there will be lawyers, and they will be needed. Usually they do a lot more than they are really required to do, and they charge a lot more than most of us like, but they are handy to have round in connection with matters of this kind.

The best solution may be to invoke the assistance of the district court, I feel sure the minister will consider that. But my object in rising was really to plead that we should attempt to deal with this matter on its merits. A general discussion on the tariff on which we cannot agree will not advance this matter, neither will a general discussion on old age pensions or rural credits help us in dealing with this practical question. We know this is before us. Australian butter is not before us at this moment, neither are Chinese eggs, but we are faced with the position in which we find ourselves in relation to the soldier settlement scheme. I feel sure that my right hon. friend will pardon my reference to his suggestion that we are going to get $40,000,000 of a campaign fund out of this matter. We have no such intention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) has evidently decided to import into this assembly methods that he has been accustomed to adopt in the legislature of Saskatchewan. It will be a kindness to him—I offer it not in any didactic spirit at all—if I advise him in advance that in this House argument is always of more value than loquacity and reason has much more effect than vociferation. He urges very strongly the abandonment of party spirit in the discussion of this measure and cites me as an instance of an offender. I will place the few remarks I ventured to offer to this House on the subject of this resolution by way of contrast to what we have just listened to from the Minister of Railways, and I will put myself in the judgment of those who certainly are not partial witnesses in my favour —say hon. gentlemen to my left—as to which was an example of heated and insane partisanship.

He is very strongly of the view that we should discuss this subject on its merits. With that we are in accord, but the first thing essential to a discussion of any subject on its merits is to really know that subject. It is this essential which the minister has yet to surmount. He does not understand the resolution to which he gives such vociferous adherence. He says that I cast aspersions upon the intention of the government, and in the next breath he admits that I cast none whatever; that I admitted in the first place that the minister himself had no desire to use this machinery for political purposes. What I contended was that the machinery was such that it could readily be used for such a purpose, and I stated that this parliament has no right to pass legislation which is open to any such use. Did the minister argue on that question? He never touched it. It is something he cannot appreciate. His mind is far removed from anything in the way of a machine in politics—a machine found in another stratum of existence far from that in which he has lived all his life—so much so that he cannot come to a discussion of its existence from one side or the other.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Keep cool, brother.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did the Minister of Justice say that he boasted of his machine?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A friendly press gives him credit for having done so, and in doing so he would speak words of sincerity with much more appeal to me than his words of this afternoon.

Mr. CANNON: It seemed to work well yesterday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What did?

Mr. CANNON: Our machine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I place the Solicitor General alongside of the Minister of Railways and I ask this House: Would you put either of them above the use of a machine? Would you like to entrust this conglomeration of quickly adjustable election machinery to the operation of either the Solicitor General or the Minister of Railways?

Mr. CANNON: I never use a telegram in cipher during any election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nor did I; nor did I ever suggest it against another when I had no evidence in support of the suggestion. I throw back at the Solicitor General the insinuation, and I say that whenever he comes before this House and makes the exhibition of himself that his colleague did when he brought that telegram into this chamber and failed entirely in support of it, I shall be sorry for him and think it is about time for him to extricate himself from public life. But from one point of view the collapse of the former minister at that time was even more creditable than the insinuation of his successor to-day.

The minister says: If the board was honest enough to operate a purchase of lands, why cannot it be honest enough to operate a reduction in price?

Mr. DUNNING: To negotiate it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good. I laboured to make that point clear, but I did not get it into the head of the minister. I will try again. The original act did not lend itself to political manipulation at all; there was no possibility under it of using the soldier as a political agent or of bringing coercion upon him. The act was not such that it could be used in that way, no matter how the minister might have desired to do so.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend's statement does not make it so. It is merely a statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I propose now to show why it was so, but it would have been rather appropriate for the minister to show that it could have been so before he used the language he did in his address. The minister, through his board going out to buy land for the soldier, could bring no pressure to bear upon that soldier whatever. The act did not give him the power to do so, and I demand of the minister to read me the clause of the act which gave him such a power. He could not offer the soldier any reward, nor could he hold out any penalty.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What about the man who was selling the land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He could not do the same either. The soldier himself had to be satisfied with that land and with its price, and so had the board of appraisers. There was no way therefore in which the machinery could have been used as election or political machinery in any sense. The parliament of the day was not asked to depend upon its opinion of the sincerity and public spirit of the minister, whatever its opinion might have been, before it could endorse that legislation. This parliament is now asked by the Minister of Railways—and the demand is made in imperious tones—to do that very thing in relation to this bill. Under this legislation the minister can go out and scatter favours with a largesse to his heart's content, and with no restraint whatever, among 17,000 men.

Mr. DUNNING: Rot.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says, "rot." Well, the minister perhaps knows what rot is.

Mr. DUNNING: That is it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's language is reminiscent of the legislature from which he comes and of the methods for which his government was notorious.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know whether it is in order for an hon. gentleman to reflect upon another parliamentary body as my right hon. friend has just done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is equally parliamentary to the language of the minister. We are in a parliament now where the minister will have to take the medicine he seeks so feebly to give. I suggest to him that he will have to arrive at a much higher state of competency before it will be wise for him to try again.

I repeat that under this bill, if it goes through in the form anticipated in the resolution, the minister can take the funds of Canada without any restraint whatever if he is so disposed. I do not suggest now, nor did I suggest when I first spoke, that he is so disposed; but the fact is that without any restraint at all he can take those funds to the extent of the whole value of the lands, to the extent of the whole indebtedness, and divide them among the returned soldiers owing money.

Mr. CANNON: How?

Mr. MEIGHEN: By reducing each indebtedness by the full amount.

Mr. CANNON: He cannot.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He can.

Mr. CANNON: He certainly cannot.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why can he not?

Mr. CANNON: Because there is machinery to prevent him from doing so, which machinery my right hon. friend has been discussing for ten minutes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Solicitor General has not read the resolution or he would not suggest any such thing. Whatever I might charge against the Solicitor General it would not be lack of brains. If he reads the resolution he will see that the minister never needs to invoke that arbitration machinery at all. All he has to do is to agree with the soldier to make whatever reduction he, the minister, feels disposed to make.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no. It is the board, not the minister.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has not read the resolution either; he has not the faintest notion of the resolution he has discussed. The board never comes into existence unless the minister and the soldier fail to agree.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no. My hon. friend is wrong.

An hon. MEMBER: It is the settlement board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister acts through his agent, the settlement board.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The settlement board is the representative and agent of the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: As it was under my right hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly. Let the minister try to hold his temper for a little while and keep his seat. This signalling of followers hardly becomes the House of Commons. I thought the minister when he mentioned "board" referred to the board of arbitration.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see now that he referred to the settlement board. But the settlement board in acting acts under the direction of and subject to the imprimatur of the minister. That always has been the case and is the case to-day.

Mr. DUNNING: Under your regime too.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. DUNNING: And that is my point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly it was the same under my regime.

Mr. CANNON: Would the right hon gentleman claim seriously as a lawyer of any standing that the Supreme court is the Minister of Justice?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. The Solicitor General is making a ridiculous suggestion.

Mr. CANNON: It is no more ridiculous than my right hon. friend's suggestion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the Solicitor General suggest that the Soldier Settlement Board bears to the minister the same relation as the Supreme Court of Canada bears to the government, or the Minister of Justice? The suggestion is ridiculous. The Soldier Settlement Board's conduct is O.K.'d. by the minister from day to day, and nothing of importance it does becomes effective until it is so authorized; but does the Solictior General suggest that decisions of the Supreme court must be O.K.'d by the government or the Minister of Justice? The Soldier Settlement Board's conduct is subject to the approval of the minister from day to day.

Mr. DUNNING: And always was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Always was, of course.

Mr. DUNNING: That is my point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who suggested anything else?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did anyone ever suggest anything else? Certainly the board has always been subject to the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the Minister of Railways think that he is doing himself credit by laughing foolishly?

Mr. DUNNING: Don't get angry.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, act like a gentleman.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the right hon. gentleman to leave personalities out of the discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will discuss the matter if the minister will let me.

Mr. DUNNING: The right hon. gentleman told me not to lose my temper. He is losing his now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It never was suggested by me in any sense that there is any difference whatever between the relationship of the board to the minister now and as it existed under my regime. I have never said anything of the kind. What I do say is that if this legislation goes through, then the minister, acting through the board, has a power which no government should ask for and which the former government never asked for in relation to the original act. And that power, I say, is this: the minister can take the whole amount of the value if necessary, or any part of it, and distribute it at will among all the returned soldiers on the land. The minister shakes his head. Well I invite him to get on his feet now and dispute the argument I am making. Here is a parcel of land bought from the board on which a man owes $5,000: the minister has it in his power to reduce that $5,000 to $5, has he not?

Mr. FORKE: Would it not be better for the leader of the opposition to speak of the superintendent, keeping in mind the fact that he is appointed by the minister? The right hon. gentleman speaks as though the minister acted directly. He does not do anything directly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well; he does it through a board which acts for him, this I have made clear. But that board is subject to dismissal at any time if it does not act as the minister desires. Surely then it is not too much to say that it is all in the power of the minister.

Mr. CAHAN: And the remuneration too depends on the minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, as under the former government.

Mr. DUNNING: Exactly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But no former government ever had the power to distribute the funds of the treasury in this way. There was no way in which the funds of the treasury could be used by the board to the advantage of a party. The point I am making is this: When a man owes $5,000 this legislation, if it goes through, will give the minister power to reduce that $5,000 to $5. Will the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) dispute that assertion? If he disputes it I will take his argument seriously. I will not take that of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want you to make your speech.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I knew the Minister of the Interior would not dispute it; I am quite confident the present minister does not purpose so reducing. I said so before. But I do not know that the Minister of the Interior may not become Minister of Railways, and the Minister of Railways become Minister of the Interior. The minister, I say, if the bill goes through, will have the power to reduce that $5,000 to nothing, and absolutely without appeal on the part of anybody. That is indisputable. And that, I say, is wrong. It does not matter whether or not we concede the government to be composed of saints and nothing but saints. No government should ask such a power from parliament; parliament should not give such a power to any government. That is all I argued before. Am I going very far in this contention? Am I casting aspersions on anybody? Surely parliament should adopt certain principles in enacting legislation. We abandon every principle of restraint, in fact we abdicate the whole function of parliament, if we place a power like that in the hands of any government. This was the argument I made before. The former act was not open to the same charge; it was not vulnerable in this respect, although I admit that the board at that time was just as much the agent of the minister of the day as the board will be now. I admit further that so far this is the same board as we appointed—not the board which acted under me but under my successor, Sir James Lougheed.

Mr. CANNON: Is that the reason the right hon. gentleman has no confidence in it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not saying that I have no confidence in the board. I am saying that it is wrong to ask parliament to give to the minister such power as it is proposed in this legislation to delegate to him. It is immaterial what confidence we have or have not in the board. The minister may change and the board along with the minister, or the minister's successor may change the board. But whether there be any change or not, the fact is that the thing is wrong in principle. That is my argument and in it I submit myself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. NEILL: I rise not to take any partisan view of the situation but to express my gratification at seeing the measure introduced. I note with interest the considerable and sudden change that has come over the House in regard to this matter. It was only last year that I was one of a small minority—and some years ago I was one of a still smaller minority—that contended for the principle we are now seeking to adopt.

Mr. FORKE: You had lots of support.

Mr. NEILL: Last year.

Mr. BROWN: And in former years.

Mr. NEILL: I can recall the occasion when a report was brought down recommending that this matter be dealt with by remitting the interest for a number of years, and a somewhat vague and glittering hope was held out that at the end of twenty-five years there should be a revaluation. That was a report by a committee of this House. It did not receive much support. Other members among them—the then member for Strathcona, Mr. Warner, advocated strongly, and the right hon. leader of the opposition took much the same view—contended that there should be a flat reduction all around, that it was not fair to discriminate against those who had left the land, and so on, and that if there was any reduction it should be a percentage reduction, and he was openly against the principle of revaluation. I recall very clearly the efforts made by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) and the then hon. member for Selkirk, Mr. Bancroft, and myself, to impress on the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) the urgency of enacting a measure of individual revaluation, and Hansard will show that after a long and weary debate near the end of the session the minister, presumably on the principle of getting rid of the importunate widow—or rather widows—said, "Well, if you will pass this bill,"—that was the bill dealing with the reduction in the valuation of stock—"I will guarantee an investigation into the three individual districts you have mentioned." On that basis the bill passed. The minister, I understand, did carry out that investigation, at least he did so far as my district is concerned, and I have no doubt that the report from the district of Dauphin and that from my own district probably had a great deal to do in changing the opinion of the government as evidenced by their bringing down this measure.

Now, the right hon. leader of the opposition in his opening remarks dealt with the immense size of this soldier settlement scheme, and also with its emergent character, and with the very few cases of what might be called absolute malfeasance in connection with it. In all that I can agree with him, considering the circumstances at that time, the insistent demand by everybody that the government act at once, and that the plan was something new. I think considerable credit is to be given the late government for the small number of actual cases of graft that occurred in the buying of land. Nevertheless graft did occur. There was another class of valuators almost more dangerous than the grafter class—the fool. You can tie up a grafter to be honest but there is no saying what a fool will do. Also, I would remind the right hon. gentleman that while these cases were few, nevertheless where they did occur they were very acute, which increases the necessity of dealing with them.

I should like to give a few illustrations of cases that occurred in the district of Comox-Alberni, contained in a report by a government investigator. He found that the valuations of one appraiser, who did a large portion of the work, of what constituted improved land varied to the extent of $175 an acre. That is, on a farm here he would value the improved land at $200 an acre, and on another farm of similar quality he would value the improved land at $370 an acre. Two farms of the same class he valued at $125 and $225 an acre respectively. Some improved land was bought at $300 an acre and the next place, just as good, was bought at $200 an acre. The inspector gives a list of fourteen typical cases comparing the appraised value and the vendor's price—and the vendor in those days always asked enough. It is on record that the board again and again compelled a reduction of the vendor's price. Here is a comparison of the vendor's price and the appraiser's price. The man who wanted to sell his land was satisfied to ask $5,500, but the government appraiser valued it at $10,782; and so on down the line. Of the total of fourteen cases the vendors—who were demanding the top-going price and in most cases were ready to take less—asked $59,600, but the government appraiser valued the properties at $96,310—very nearly 100 per cent above what the vendors at the peak of the market were willing to take.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In those cases was the valuation paid, notwithstanding the fact that the vendors were willing to sell for less?

Mr. NEILL: Surely not, but I have not got those facts. This is an illustration of the man's incompetence, that he valued this land at almost 100 per cent more than the vendors were willing to take. I think in some cases the board at Ottawa intervened, but in several of these instances the land was actually purchased at his valuation. I do not suggest that this man was a knave; he was simply incompetent for his position, to put it very mildly; and we can imagine the desire and the urgency for individual revaluation in cases of that description.

The right hon. leader of the opposition dealt with the constitution of the board, and although I would not go nearly as far as he did, and would not for a moment suggest what he suggested—in fact I do not see opportunities of making this a political machine or a political campaign fund—yet I can go this far with him: I can conceive an embarrassing political situation where you have a board consisting of a government official—and a government official is always supposed to be more or less willing to listen to argument put up by the member—the second man a representative of the soldiers, solely and entirely in sympathy with the soldiers' interests to get the revaluation as low as possible, and the third man a straight political appointee—I can imagine, I say, the embarrassment for the member when he is asked: Cannot you get these two friends, one a government servant and the other a political friend, to go a little easy on Bill Jones' place? For that reason I would rather agree with his suggestion that in some way there should be resort to a county court judge. But I certainly think that the county court judge, if he is to be made the arbiter, should be assisted by an agricultural expert, as I suggested before. I gave the precedent of a judge in the admiralty court, who by the way is always a man selected for having some cursory knowledge of the subject. He devotes his whole attention to such cases, and he is always assisted by one or more nautical assessors, whose opinion on the nautical aspects the judge is very much bound to follow. I think in that regard, while the county court judge would be the best man to weigh the evidence and decide on its real value, he should have associated with him someone familiar with agricultural subjects, because many of our county court judges are townsmen and know nothing about farming.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) made some remarks of which I think the "most unkindest cut of all" was when he associated in the same sentence, in the same breath and in the same class the member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) with the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen). When he has been longer in the House he will realize the enormous difference between those two gentlemen!

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope my hon. friend is complimenting the hon. member for South Oxford, for I do not feel that I am entitled to the compliment myself.

Mr. NEILL: I am sorry the argument took the political bias, so to speak, that it did, because I was going to pay what I thought a deserved compliment to the leader of the opposition. I admit he went too far in talking about campaign funds, but when he got down to the latter part of his address I thought it was really constructive criticism. I have in my hand, and was ready to produce it to his confusion had he taken his usual line of entirely destructive criticism, a letter written by him, to some of the soldier settlers in my district, wherein he expressed a distinctly favourable opinion on the subject of revaluation. He ended his remarks with these words:

> Permit me to assure you that I purpose making an earnest effort to solve this problem, and it is my very sincere hope that a real solution can be found. My efforts shall be applied, whether in power or out of power, because the returned men are entitled to our first consideration at all times.

I think in the latter part of his speech he did make a genuine attempt to carry out that pledge, for which I desire to congratulate him.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock and again went into committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have had a pretty fair discussion of the resolution this afternoon. I think we have gathered pretty well the consensus of opinion as to how the bill should be redrafted, paying particular attention to paragraphs 5, 6 and 7. I should be very glad to have the resolution passed, and I will redraft the bill in accordance with what the general opinion of the committee seems to be as to the best method of readjustment. If I might be permitted to express my own personal opinion, it is that we should either have the readjustment as between the settler and the representative of the board, or, to shorten the process, name a committee composed preferably of the superintendent—there are two in my own province—a judge of the district court in the particular district, and a representative of the settlers, the decision of this committee to be final with respect to any adjustment. My thought—and I confess that I was more attracted by it as I listened to the discussion—is that it will be easier for the settler to attend such sittings. The judicial districts are not large, and the procedure will involve very little expense. I am hoping to save expenses to the soldier settler—who, of course, would appear for himself—as well as to the government. I am very much impressed by what the right hon. leader of the opposition said this afternoon, that the soldier settler should appear in person and present his case, and the board might very well be represented by the superintendent. What I have outlined I gather will be fairly satisfactory. Of course I shall be glad to discuss these matters with interested parties in all sections of the House, and so amend the bill as to provide for such a method of adjustment. I make that suggestion, if it is agreeable to the committee.

Mr. EVANS: I wish to say a word regarding one feature of this proposed legislation. This scheme will give some heart and courage to a good many who have been halting between two opinions, I have no doubt, for a long time. But we must also consider the case of the soldier who has been forced off his land in, say, the last two or three years, and has become discouraged and gone. His land has been taken over and some of it has been sold to new settlers comprising a number of those settled under the British government plan. I would make a plea for those who have already left their land. Our obligation to the returned man does not end when we have rescinded the contract and he is clear of the board. I believe there will be many who would be glad to go back on the land, and I cannot understand that our obligation with respect to those men has ceased. As I say, some of them have been forced off the land, their land has been sold, and I understand that in the case of those lands sold there has been an accumulation of $20,000 over the price that was paid. Now, I do not think we should make money out of the returned soldiers in that way. I make an earnest plea on behalf of those who wish to go back to the land, and I should like the minister and the government to take that point into serious consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am perfectly willing to consider any matter in connection with this matter of readjustment. At the same time I wish to point out to my hon. friend that it is a very difficult thing to meet every angle of the situation. I can think of a dozen different obstacles that would arise in endeavouring to deal with the men who are now off the land and have ceased their connections with the board. However, I am perfectly willing to give the subject my best consideration.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am entirely in agreement with the minister that it is an utter impossibility to meet all these classes of cases. It cannot be done. How, for example, could you distinguish between soldiers who lost their land entirely through their own default or through their own mismanagement and misconduct, and those who perhaps were not quite so guilty? I know that if I were minister myself I would despair of attacking the task. I do not see how it can be attacked; but I simply use the fact that the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) has advanced this scheme on behalf of the soldiers who have been ousted from their properties to press upon the minister this: Let him keep just as close to the judiciary as he can in the settlement of everything. Let him keep the responsibility off the government and the government's representatives. If he once gets it there he will never in the world be able to close the door on this thing. And when he suggests that he will introduce a bill which will vary from this resolution in the direction of having a judge associated with an officer of the board, I ask him most earnestly to reconsider that too. He proposes to have a judge in association with some officer, and a veteran. Who is going to be the ruling party? Will the officer and the veteran be able to overrule the judge, or will the judge and the veteran be able to overrule the officer? He will certainly not get judges to act willingly under conditions of that kind. It is not natural that they should. Furthermore, it is not in the public interest. If you are going to bring the judges into this matter, make them responsible, but see to it that the public look to them as the responsible parties to do the fair and just thing between the veteran and the officer, and do not let the judge escape under the plea that these people had as much say in the matter as he had. I believe the public interest would be best served in that way, and I am sure if the minister will just revolve this matter in his mind for a few days he will come to the conclusion that it will be best served by centering the responsibility right on the judge. If the responsibility is there he will discharge it to the best of his capacity. It is quite true that one judge may decide upon a certain amount as the value of the land, and the decision of another judge might be at variance with that decision, and so on over the whole area. But it is equally true, no matter what tribunal is established, that another tribunal in another district will have a standard which is somewhat different. That cannot be avoided. The only way to avoid it would be to have some appellate tribunal to whom all could appeal. There are some objections to this proposition, and the difficulty may prove in the end to be unavoidable, but I hope it can be avoided. You cannot get absolute justice in all cases. The minister in his measure does not aim at absolute justice; it cannot be obtained. You are going to have scores of cases where the soldiers are dead, some of them having paid for their whole farms in full. Those men cannot be reached, but in justice their heirs are entitled to this boon the same as those on the land—probably more entitled than any of them, because they are the men who, facing the handicap of the purchase at a high price, fought the battle out and settled with their creditors in full. You cannot meet those cases. We are not aiming at any absolute justice. We are aiming at a rough method, as close to accuracy as we can get, to meet a very difficult situation that cannot be avoided, and I hope the minister will not inject into the tribunals off-side officials who are going to dissipate the responsibility and in the end very much impair the efficiency and the measure of justice that will be meted out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a great deal of admiration for the knowledge acquired by the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board, but I may say that there is a very practical difficulty in connection with the adjustments which take place. For example, last year I met a soldier at Stony Plain who was very much dissatisfied because he had not purchased stock to the same extent as his neighbour, who had been given back forty per cent of the purchase price; consequently this soldier, unlike his neighbour, got no readjustment. He was making good; he was one of the fortunate soldiers who were making their payments. He had been frugal and careful, but he felt that an injury had been done him. Now the human element enters into this matter very strongly. My right hon. friend has suggested—and I confess the scheme has a great deal of merit in it—that a representative of the board and the soldier get together and see if they cannot reconcile their differences, and if they can, that that adjustment be surveyed by the board. I think that is a fair description of the scheme proposed by my right hon. friend. But the human element that enters into the matter as between the soldier and the representative of the board rather puts the board, in my opinion, in a very delicate position There are so many angles to this matter that I would be inclined to think very favourably of the suggestion of my right hon. friend. It would be desirable if we could eliminate the feeling that sometimes arises. Here are two men who sit down together. Naturally their sympathies are identical; the government is going to be the payee, and perhaps too generous a settlement might be made in some cases; whereas in other cases if there is a little feeling of resentment against any particular settler, that might be exercised against him, and I fear the case as presented to the judge would not be brought quite as clearly to his attention as it would in the case of another settler. I quite understand that the judge can proceed, if he desires, and hear evidence. However, I am very willing to take the matter into consideration for the next few days, to discuss it with all those who are interested and see if we cannot arrive at some settlement that will be satisfactory to all concerned. After all this is a matter in which every member of the House is interested, and I have no desire to force upon parliament any piece of legislation, particularly legislation of this character, in regard to which we cannot be unanimous.

Mr. BENNETT: The other evening when this resolution was called I ventured to suggest that a judicial tribunal would be more desirable to determine the questions at issue than a board of arbitration constituted as suggested by the resolution. I have thought a good deal over the matter since, and I have not changed my view as then expressed. The observations made by the minister himself a few minutes ago as to the human element entering into the matter rather inclined me to hold more strongly to my opinion than I did on the previous occasion. The very fact that the human element enters into it will induce the representative of the board on the one hand and the settler on the other to be influenced by considerations that are not solely referable to the land in question, and it is of the utmost importance that the settlers should believe that they are receiving even-handed justice in every instance with respect to matters of this kind.

I was very much struck by the observations made by one hon. member the other evening, when he said that he could not trust the judiciary. I very greatly deprecate that observation in this House, for whatever may be the views that some of us entertain as to the fitness of men to discharge judicial duties, it is of the utmost importance, in the development of the institutions of the country, that members of parliament at least should not voice that sentiment, except in the manner and form provided by the constitution of this country, namely, by asking that the high court of parliament resolve itself into a tribunal to consider the impeachment of the judge in question. It is bad business, if I might use an ordinary term, that members of this House should express an opinion of that character with respect to judges. I say that in no censorious sense, but I say it because I believe, using the language of Palmerston, that hon. members on one side are as anxious to discharge their duties as gentlemen as hon. members on the other side, and it is desirable that those who have to come before the judiciary should not have in their minds the view that members of parliament are reflecting on the integrity and ability of those who discharge judicial duties. I hope my hon. friend will not misunderstand me when I make that observation, but I felt that, as a member of the profession from which, to use the language of a celebrated statesman, the judges are recruited, I could not allow the observation to pass in silence. Under those circumstances I hope the minister—and I for one, having raised this question, am delighted to see the attitude in which he approaches it to-day—in the next few days will turn over the suggestions that have been made. I firmly believe that in the long run he will find that he will have achieved the two objects that this legislation is to effect, namely, first, justice to the settler, and second, justice to the state. On the one hand the excessive price must be diminished having regard to the salability of the property in question; on the other hand the public exchequer must be protected and the loss made as little as possible. Those are the two factors that must be kept in mind. I ask my hon. friends whether they do not believe that in the ultimate analysis we have not best protected the settler on the one hand and the exchequer on the other by leaving these matters to the determination of men who are trained in the weighing of evidence and whose duty it is from time to time to decide on matters of law and fact. I say that more particularly having regard to the seventh resolution which provides:

> That the District Arbitration committee shall forthwith forward a copy of its decision to the board and if it be found there has been a depreciation in the value of the land purchased by the settler from the board—

Observe these words.

> —not resulting from neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler the amount of such depreciation so found shall be credited by the board as provided by resolution number four in respect of amount arrived at by agreement.

Who is going to determine whether the depreciation which is the subject matter of the award does or does not result from neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler? Who is so well able to decide that question of neglect or mismanagement as a judge? Neglect is not easy to define; mismanagement is difficult to determine, and under these circumstances, having regard to the language used in the seventh paragraph of the resolution which is very difficult language to construe, I submit that when the minister redrafts his bill he will find that the two-fold purposes of the legislation will be best served by having these matters determined by a judicial officer, one trained and skilled in dealing with matters of this kind.

I venture to repeat to my hon. friends that the determination of values has in modern practice been left to judges of the district courts rather than to arbitration boards. As I pointed out the other evening that has been the case with respect to rights-of-way of railways and various other matters, and if that has been the experience in dealing with matters of this kind, I feel satisfied that the suggestion made by my right hon. leader (Mr. Meighen) this afternoon as to preparing a brief will serve a useful purpose, but I personally would prefer that the settler present his case in person to the judge, knowing as we do that district courts are held in every small community in the three western provinces. They have their sittings defined, the days on which the courts are held, and the settler appears on that day in that little community. He makes his representations and the matter is dealt with. In the long run that will be found to be the most advantageous manner in which this question can be decided.

I am sure the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) is wholly innocent of any desire to utilize the machinery of these resolutions for political purposes and I listened with some delight to the observations that were made in this chamber this afternoon. But as I was listening to them I recalled the language of the Bard of Avon who said:

> How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
> Makes ill deeds done.

And possibly the opportunity being offered, evil results might follow. That sentiment I commend to the Minister of Railways. Those of us who live in western Canada and profess the Conservative faith may have reason at times to be a little suspicious of our opponents. None of us who read the public press can fail to be impressed by what we have seen during the last week. In Alberta in which I live, for instance during the last election the machinery of the machine was so used that two of those who operated it are now resting in the penitentiary at Prince Albert under sentences for two years, and only yesterday in the courts of Alberta the oaths of 102 people established that they had voted for a candidate, but alas when the votes were counted only seventeen had so recorded their franchise! I am sure the Minister of Railways will admit that a counting machine that is capable of such an achievement does credit even to its masters. I am also satisfied that the Minister of Railways has not forgotten that when the Prime Minister of this country left this city to visit Prince Albert where he found refuge, he stopped at the capital city of Regina, and the public press records that those who called upon him upon that Sabbath day were gentlemen proficient in the handling of the machine, members of the Liquor commission and the Highways commission. I am sure the Minister of Railways under those circumstances can forgive those of us who looking back three centuries realize that great judge of human nature was correct when he said:

> How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
> Makes ill deeds done.

I am sure it was the sight of the means that brought about what followed in Alberta in the constituencies of Peace River and Athabaska. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you would agree with me if you had lived as long as I have in western Canada and suffered as I have suffered, defeated as I was in one instance by a small majority, and yet after spending much time and money and several months of a summer with the aid of a Pinkerton detective whom I brought from Chicago I had convincing evidence, some of which I have yet, that ballots which had been marked for me were removed from the ballot box and marked for my opponent who was returned and sat not in this House of Commons, but in the Alberta legislature. The machine reached the climax of its power in latter days. If my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior would give us his confidence, I am sure he would tell us he thinks as I do because, while he was one who did not do much in oiling the machine—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Thank heaven.

Mr. BENNETT: —he only profited under its operations. Sometimes I do not know whether he thanked heaven for it, because after he studied out what it had done he concluded that heaven had little to do with its operations. But be that as it may, some of us who live in western Canada and sit on this side of the House have been victims of the machine the Minister of Railways has described as "a dandy," whatever that may mean. I take it that it means it is efficient and effective in producing results. For instance we heard something about it in this House yesterday. The other day I rose to bring to the attention of the House something of its operations in Prince Albert and there is further evidence that in due course will be presented to this House with respect to its operations. It is for that reason that those of us who sit to the left of the Speaker sometimes feel that we owe some duty to society, some duty to those men and women who think as we think in matters political, and willing as we are to acquit men of a desire to thwart the will of the electorate, we realize that some of them at least regard it as meritorious to be able to say that regardless of consequences they will return their candidate with a majority.

I have read English history and the history of this country with some care and it takes a long, long time sometimes to bring about a change. One of the papers in Winnipeg the other day pointed out that the machine in Saskatchewan had been operating since the days of Mr. Walter Scott, since Mr. Haultain was destroyed by its operations. It may be a long time before that machine is destroyed, before the efficiency of liquor commissions, highway commissions and telephone systems, paid for by all the people, cease to be made to work for only one political section of the people, and that the party in power. But the time always comes when the change is effected. It happened in Ontario. One of the distinguished leaders of the organization of the Liberal party in that province journeyed to Alberta in 1905—it is not necessary to name him—and in recent years found employment with the Minister of Agriculture for a season at the public expense. Afterwards he was dismissed from the public life of that province by a very aroused electorate, and if all the circumstances in relation to his participation in elections were known to the House, I do not think there would be much pride on the part of members sitting to the right of the Speaker. When my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) spoke so highly of the operations of the machine in West Middlesex yesterday, it occurred to me, having the knowledge that I have of the distinguished organizer of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario when he was in the province of Alberta, that perhaps the hon. gentleman had reference to his ability as a machine manager. I wondered if that was what he meant. Well, if it was, there is not much reason for hon. gentlemen to smile and smirk and regard such behaviour as clever. I know of course that there are men who have the idea it is clever to thwart the will of the electorate. Do my hon. friends opposite realize what happened in Alberta on the 29th October last as disclosed in a court of law? I am sure that there are gentlemen in this House who resent it, although others smile and smirk over it and regard it as something to be proud of. Sometimes even the ministers of the crown smile and smirk and consider that sort of thing clever, but I trust that no one in this House does so. I trust that this House is past that stage.

Mr. DUNNING: No insinuations.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman thinks the remarks applicable to his case, very well. If the cap fits, let him put it on. But the mere expression of a fact which can be seen is not an insinuation. The other night I suggested that the revaluation of soldier settlers land should be taken out of the hands of a tribunal appointed solely by the minister in order to avoid any possibility of temptation to do the things that have been done in the past. Those who have seen the operations of the Scrip commission in days gone by, when they wandered over western Canada on the eve of an election, taking advantage of the machinery of law for the purpose of depriving the public domain of much land, getting halfbreeds to sign quit claims, enabling by this means certain men whose names are known to all to become enriched; those who have seen the abuses that have taken place in connection with the administration of the homestead law and the encroachments that were made upon public rights in the matter of irrigation; those who have seen the public purse being plundered for the purpose of promoting the private fortunes of individuals—those who have witnessed all these things have indeed some cause for the suspicion that lurks in their hearts. Nor is this a vague, underfined, unreasonable feeling. It is the conviction that moved people in eastern Canada in the days that are gone to rise in their might and put a stop to the abuses which they could tolerate no longer. It is the feeling that characterized the people of the province of Ontario at the time when the Minnie M. was obliged to seek a haven of refuge in the waters of an American port. It is the feeling that provoked the people when Mr. Preston "hugged the machine" and sent the famous telegram about which we all know, and the same feeling precisely that contributed to the defeat of the administration as a result of revelations that were made in this parliament not so many years ago. It is for these reasons that we believe we can best serve the ends of democracy by lifting to a higher level the administration of a law such as this and removing the minister from the temptation to abuse the powers conferred upon him. It is the old, old tale:

> How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
> makes ill deeds done.

The government must surely realize that there is no ulterior motive in this effort to surround the administration of the act with proper safeguards, but rather an earnest desire born of experience and suffering, of privation, yes, and deprivation of rights by reason of the manipulation of ballots and ballot boxes, that induces us to urge at this time, as the minister himself very frankly recognizes, the necessity for ample precaution. This is a matter of very great importance and of far-reaching consequences, and one that should be removed from any possibility of maladministration.

Mr. POULIOT (Temiscouata) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest to the eloquent speeceh just delivered by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). Everybody has regard for his integrity, and all I have to say, in answer to his speech, is that boodlers are not to be found on this side of the House.

Mr. EVANS: Replying again to the leader of the opposition, I think the right hon. gentleman must admit, as I believe the government realizes, that this is a belated measure. Had it been brought forward three or four years ago as it should have been, it would have saved a large percentage of those who have left their lands. Many of these fellows have sacrificed all they had, some of them, indeed, having given up homesteads that they owned outright. It is all gone. They spent what money they had for seed and equipment, and in my judgment they have a claim upon the country as well as any of those who are still on the land. The door is open for a revaluation and all that is needed is to push it open a little wider. I should like to see section 2 include those who have already gone, but who can still take advantage of settlement under the revaluation scheme.

Mr. MURPHY: I want to make a few remarks which will be very brief, more for the purpose of placing myself on record with regard to this important legislation than with a view to adding anything to the discussion which has already taken place. This is a matter of vital import to a considerable portion of the constituency I represent. Probably all of the constituencies in western Canada are suffering to-day from the ill effects which have manifested themselves in connection with soldier settlement, but I believe that the condition is rather more marked in my riding than in any other. A revaluation of the lands held by returned men who purchased homes under the Soldier Settlement Act is in my opinion long overdue. Revaluation should have been made, not later than two years after the sensational drop in farm land values. I am speaking now, of course, of farm land values in western Canada, as I am not so familiar with the situation in other parts of the Dominion.

Let me make it clear at the outset that I am not in favour of the principle of state paternalism. Of late years we as a people seem to have been losing that admirable quality of sturdy independence that characterized our forefathers, that indomitable spirit which enabled them to subdue the wilderness and make Canada what she is to-day. There is a growing tendency in our country to shoulder upon the state responsibilities which should properly be borne by the individual, and if the assistance which this legislation proposes to give were intended for any other class than the returned soldiers I would be utterly opposed to it. I wish, however, to place myself on record here now as being absolutely in accord with the spirit of the legislation, for these reasons. In the first place it is an undoubted fact that in some cases unsuitable lands were chosen while other lands were given too high a valuation owing to the rascality of certain individuals who managed to have themselves placed upon the board which valued these lands. This applies particularly to that part of my constituency to which I have just referred. Lands were selected for the returned soldier which should never have been chosen. The land on which many returned soldiers were settled should never have been selected. It was not the fault of the government, nor was it the fault of the settlers themselves, it was the fault of certain individuals who, taking advantage of their knowledge of local conditions and of the desire of the soldiers to rehabilitate themselves, made them the target for their rascality.

Thirdly, I am in favour of this resolution because of the great depreciation in land values. This is true not only of the land purchased by the soldier settlers from the board, but also of all land in western Canada, and I am sure my Progressive friends will bear me out in this respect. I would say that there has been as great a drop in the value of farm lands generally as there has been in the value of land owned by soldier settlers.

On account of the difficulties encountered by soldier settlers and others, the situation of some municipalities in the west is critical, because a considerable area of wild land was taken up for the purpose of soldier settlement. Consequently the municipalities were put to great expense in constructing roads and establishing schools, and when many of these soldier settlers were forced to abandon their holdings the lands reverted to the crown, and became non-taxable, and the resultant loss of revenue seriously embarrassed the municipal authorities. The Union of Municipalities in Manitoba have endorsed this resolution, as they have passed similar resolutions, and I believe have forwarded them to the Dominion government. It has also been endorsed by the provincial legislatures of the three western provinces.

The men who took up the land under the soldier settlement scheme have in most cases done their utmost to make the proposition a success. They have carried on year after year in the hope that times would improve, but unfortunately they have become worse. I know the conditions in the district of which I am speaking, for I have the honour to be a director of the Red Cross Society, which has done considerable relief work in the district, and in many cases the people are in a pitiable condition. Some men have abandoned their homes, others are still hanging on hoping for a return of better times. It is for those people I am pleading, although I would gather that the feeling of the House is such that no further pleading is necessary at the present time. I believe we are all agreed that a revaluation should take place.

In this connection I may say that only last week I received a petition signed by soldier settlers and also by some of the most representative farmers in the district saying that these lands should be revalued. I should like to give the House certain clauses of this petition:

That certain returned soldiers purchased farm land from the Soldier Settlement Board at a time when the value of the said land was inflated and out of all proportion to the actual value thereof.

That the said scheme was introduced with the object of aiding the returned soldiers.

That after endeavouring to farm the said land for over five years the said settlers have become discouraged and can see no way in which they can carry the heavy burden placed upon them as the a result of said purchase.

That it appears that a great number of those who still remain on the said land are becoming deeper involved financially and the only reason they do not leave the land is on account of the fact that all their savings are invested in the said land, stock and equipment.

Here is a paragraph to which I would direct the particular attention of the government:

That certain supervisors of the said Soldier Settlement Board have often informed numerous settlers that the government would be only too pleased to see them quit the farms owing to the arrears in their payments, and owing to the fact that a sale could easily be effected at a greatly reduced price to new settlers from England.

That great injustice would be done if the soldier settlers were forced off the said land after putting in their savings and so many years of labour.

That it appears that the said settlers still remaining on the laid have farmed the same in a good and husband like manner and it appears the only solution is to have a revaluation of the said land for the purpose of attaining the object of the said scheme.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not hear my friend distinctly. Does he state that supervisors are forcing people off the land?

Mr. MURPHY: I am simply reading the clauses of a petition which I received, and which I believe the minister himself now has in his possession.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Who signed the petition?

Mr. MURPHY: It is signed by certain settlers in this district, and was forwarded to me to hand to the government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where do they live?

Mr. MURPHY: I received the petition from Gladstone, which is in the constituency of Neepawa, Manitoba. I think the minister will find the petition in his office, because I forwarded it to the Prime Minister, and have a letter from him to-day saying he had sent it on to the Minister of the Interior. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) this afternoon, if I heard him correctly, voiced the opinion that some consideration should be given to these men who have abandoned their land, and I believe the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) this evening made the same plea. While I recognize the difficulties of putting such a scheme into effect, I should like to also add my voice in support of that view. I think possibly the result would be achieved as well if the government would sell these lands to the returned soldiers who have abandoned them at the same price as would be available to immigrants under the land settlement scheme. I do not know why that result cannot be accomplished. Many of those men are off the land to-day after spending four or five years of hard labour on the part of themselves and of their families, simply because they have been starved out. That applies particularly to the district of which I am speaking. The conditions, I know, are purely local and do not apply generally all over the west. It was not the fault of the government or of the settler. It was more or less the result of settling these people on lands which require drainage. During the last two or three years the ditches which drain these lands became clogged, thus flooding the land in the spring, which prevented the settler from putting in any crop. I do plead with the government to give these people some consideration, for they have worked very, very hard to make homes for their families.

I have one or two criticisms to offer with regard to the bill itself. Clause 4 provides:

That if the board and settler agree upon the amount of depreciation in value of the said land,—

And so on. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) told the House this afternoon what I tell the House to-night in reading this petition, that there is not that sympathy between the board and the returned soldier that should exist. These returned soldiers, whether rightly or wrongly, have the impression that the board would be only too pleased to see them leave their lands in order that they might be sold to incoming settlers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely the hon. gentleman does not make that assertion of his own knowledge, does he? I do not think that is fair to the supervisors and field men in the employ of the board. There may be odd cases where there have been disagreements, but so far as I can ascertain, it is the last resort when a man leaves his land. To say that these men are trying to put soldier settlers off the land—if my hon. friend will say that of his own knowledge I am prepared to accept it, but it is going a long way.

Mr. MURPHY: I think if the minister had followed my remarks correctly he would have seen that I did not make that assertion of my own knowledge, but I am passing it on to the minister for his consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But I make this assertion, that no case has ever come to my knowledge where, if there was any chance in the world for the settler to make good, he was not encouraged by the officers of the board to stay on the land. That has been my experience.

Mr. MURPHY: Does it not appear strange, or at least worthy of consideration, that the hon. member for Selkirk stated the same thing this afternoon? And he had it directly from the soldiers, with whom he has been in communication.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will the hon. member for Selkirk say the men are forced off the land?

Mr. HANNESSON: I have a number of letters from the men.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. gentleman lives in a soldier settler district, does he not?

Mr. HANNESSON: I was not present when any man was put off, but I know that notices were served on men who were trying to pay and who had constructed improvements, and I told the House to-day of one instance where a man, not having seed grain, went to work, and they have taken possession of that farm. I have visited that farm myself, and the statements I referred to in the House to-day were made in the presence of Mr. Robertson, the supervisor of the district, who did not contradict any of them. I gave the names to-day of men who have been molested or threatened, off and on, for the past seven or eight years. I also informed Major Barnett, and he looked up MacKenzie's file and said that a man cannot take up a farm unless he lives on it. This man was with his brother and had a man ploughing his farm, doing the best he could, but because he could not get seed grain he did not operate last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In that case I suppose the farm was going to go without seed.

Mr. HANNESSON: Possibly so, but last year he offered to pay $175 and 400 bushels of wheat to remain on the land, and was refused. Surely that man should be given a chance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sure that in most of these cases the soldier has had a pretty fair chance. There may be cases of hardship where the soldier was forced off, but I can hardly understand it. These men are soldiers themselves; they fought side by side with the settlers, and I cannot understand it.

Mr. HANNESSON: I will send the minister the correspondence I have.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am quite well aware that the soldiers complain, but on the other hand I believe we should be fair to the officers of the board. These statements are made that men are forced off the land to let new settlers in and that is a serious accusation.

Mr. MURPHY: Possibly I could make it clearer if I read this clause again. This petition was received by me last week and is signed not only by returned soldiers but also by representative men living in the same district. This is what they say:

Whereas certain supervisors of the said Soldier Settlement Board have often informed numerous settlers that the government would only be too pleased to see them quit the farms owing to the arrears in their payments and owing to the fact that a sale could easily be effected at a greatly reduced price to new settlers from England.

If it will help any I will immediately communicate with these people and get affidavits and first hand information to lay before the minister. I am aware that it is a very serious charge to make against officials of the board, and I am not making the charge. I am reading this petition, as it is my duty to do.

The other criticism I have to make will be very brief, as the matter has been already dealt with by my right hon. leader and by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). That is the question of the process by which this revaluation would be arrived at. I am in hearty accord with the proposal under which a district court judge would be included in that scheme. In municipal affairs we have found that to be a very workable system. When lands are assessed by our local assessor and a ratepayer feels himself aggrieved, he first appeals to his local council, who sit as a court of revision. If an amicable adjustment cannot be arrived at between the council and the complainant, the matter is then left to the county court judge. That system has prevailed for a great many years and has proved to be very satisfactory. Surely if a county court judge can adjudicate on the assessed value of land he can just as well adjudicate on the value of a returned soldier's land.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is one feature of the resolution which I should call to the attention of the minister. Various hon. members have referred to an odd case where the soldier paid too much for the land in the first place. One hon. member intimated that on the east shore of lake Winnipeg there were cases of the soldier paying four times the value of the land. I want to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that the draftsman who framed this resolution has not covered any such case at all, and has not provided for it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Four times as much?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will follow me carefully he will see the point. In a case where the soldier, because of a foolish or perhaps fraudulent valuation, pays too much for his land, the excess over the actual value is not provided for in this resolution; he could not get any relief if the bill is founded on this resolution. The minister will note that the resolution provides only for depreciation from the time of purchase to the time of revaluation. Let me take a single instance and it will be followed more readily. Suppose for example $20 an acre was paid for a quarter section only worth $5 an acre. This resolution provides that if there has been any depreciation in value since the time of purchase, that depreciation shall be credited to the soldier. We will presume that there has been a depreciation of 20 per cent, which would mean that the land is worth now $4 an acre. The soldier is only going to be allowed $1 an acre of what he originally paid. Does the minister follow me? The settler is allowed the depreciation only, which is $1 an acre. That is all the depreciation that has taken place, and therefore that is all he is allowed, so in the end he will be paying $19 an acre, whereas the land was only worth $5 when he bought it and has depreciated $1 since. I do not know whether I have made myself clear; if I have not it is my own fault. The point is that the minister does not provide in his resolution—and his bill, if founded on the resolution will not provide—for anything except depreciation. Excess value paid in the first place cannot be atoned for by depreciation. I will take my case in point again. If the board in the first place paid $20 an acre for land worth only $5, and the land has since depreciated 20 per cent, that land is now only worth $4. The depreciation is one dollar an acre; that is all the depreciation that has taken place; that is all, therefore, that the soldier gets credit for. So that he gets credit for one dollar an acre whereas he paid $20 therefor; he is going to pay in the end $19. That case is not covered in the resolution and the bill will have to cover it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): If the land is only worth $5 an acre and it was purchased at $20, it was purchased at an inflated value. When the land returns to its true value will there not be deflation all the way through?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, depreciation in value is the difference between the value now and the real value when purchased.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The real value?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, the real value, not the value on the basis of which the soldier settler purchased.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Why not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because that is what depreciation is. Depreciation is the lessened value of the land. It is the difference between the value then and the value now. That is depreciation. That is my point exactly.

Mr. EULER: Would there be any real difficulty if we took the value the land had at the outset?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is just what the resolution does do. The resolution assumes that, but you cannot always make that assumption.

Mr. EULER: Would it not be the assumption that the value placed upon the land when it was first bought was the real value?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I am saying. That is the assumption in the resolution, but in individual cases it is not the fact. Indeed, it is these individual cases that are not covered by the resolution. The depreciation, let me repeat, is the value on the day of purchase—not the price paid, but the value—less the value to-day. That difference the soldier is allowed, he is allowed no more.

Mr. EULER: What means would there be of fixing the value other than the value that was placed upon the land when the soldier bought it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The provision could be worded so as to cover other cases as well.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the wording of the bill will cover it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It could, quite readily.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me read the wording of the provision itself:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, the board is hereby empowered upon the application of a settler who has agreed to purchase any land from the board, who has not abandoned his land, whose agreement with the board has not been terminated or rescinded, and who has not repaid his indebtedness to the board, and where there has been a decrease or depreciation in the market value of such land not the result of neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, to make provision for the revaluation of the said land, subject to the following conditions—

And so on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That does not cover the case. The way it should read is something like this: "Where he land is found to be worth less than the price paid." That will cover the case, but if it is worded in the way proposed in the bill it will never cover it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may say frankly that we had in mind the fact that there were men settled on lands who had paid too much when purchasing those lands; they had bought at an inflated value.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sure if the draftsman will read this discussion he will word the bill properly.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the Minister of the Interior a question as to paragraph 2 of the resolution? I have no intention of speaking on the resolution, because the general sentiment of the committee seems to be that there is absolute need for revaluation, and with that I heartily agree. The only question is as to who shall be brought within the purview of the bill, and also the methods that are to be adopted in order to ensure proper revaluation. Paragraph 2 of the resolution declares:

That application for revaluation shall be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the said land,—

Now I had the idea that the purpose of the act was to draw a distinction between a soldier purchaser whose agreement had been determined either by his having paid up in full or having made default and been ejected from the land, and a man whose agreement had not yet been terminated. If that is the distinction that the government intends to make, the wording of paragraph 2 is not quite accurate, because there may be a soldier purchaser in good standing whose agreement had not been determined by rescission or by complete payment and who for some reason or other had not himself been able to be on the land but was farming it through somebody else for the time being. Would it not be advisable to define the position of the soldier settler in clearer terms, that is, a soldier settler who had purchased and whose agreement had not been determined either by payment in full or by rescission?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course the whole object of the act is that the individual must be on the land and farming himself. The act never intended that he should release his land or that he should farm it out in some way.

Mr. BURY: That may be so, but I am assuming, although I do not know of any particular case, that there may be a soldier settler who is in possession of the land, though not himself in actual occupation. It may be he has had to go away for his health; it may be he is absent somewhere for some other reason, but he intends to go back into occupation. The wording of this particular paragraph would debar him from the benefits of the act. I think the bill ought to be so worded that one who has a current existent contract with the government should come within its purview.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course the proposal is confined to those whose contracts are still in existence and are on the land. I do not think there will be very many cases of the kind mentioned. However, I will look into the matter.

Mr. MULLINS: There are a very large number of returned men in my constituency. They are carrying on under great difficulties, but they are holding on, hoping that there will be revaluation. They have been so handicapped that they have not been able to make ends meet. With the experience these men have had I would much prefer to keep them on the land than to admit new settlers who have yet to acquire experience in the western country. It takes a number of years before they can get the experience necessary to carry on operations successfully. The Minister of the Interior knows, as does the Minister of Railways also, that it takes some years to become familiar with the climatic and farming conditions in the west. I am not going to occupy the time of the House unduly, but during my campaign I came across a number of these settlers who asked me to bring the matter up on the floor of the House and to apply for redress in their behalf. I would suggest that the first minister himself should take a trip into the rural parts of Manitoba instead of paying visits to Regina and Prince Albert, and thus inform himself at first hand of the actual conditions of these men and learn what is going on out in the western country. Having paid $20 an acre for some of these lands, it is absolutely impossible for these men, even in a period of ten years, to break even, in view of the present conditions and the existing ocean rates and railway rates. For the benefit of the House I have worked out a statement of the operation on a 320-acre farm in western Canada, allotting the settler a period of ten years, giving him twenty bushels to the acre and a price of $1 per bushel per year, but writing out the whole thing at the end of ten years. When that time arrives the settler has made nothing but a living unless he raises live stock and possibly poultry. If the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) takes exception to my remarks about raising nothing but wheat I am willing to put my statement, as to such a case, to which I have devoted considerable time and thought, on Hansard for his information. I suggest to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) that he should do something towards helping the men to have live stock on the farms, to make them contented and to keep them satisfied.

As to the working of the adjustment and as to how it is to be handled, I will have to leave that to the legal fraternity, and to others who are more acquainted with the details. But from the practical standpoint of the men out in the west, I say it is impossible for them to carry on under present conditions I would strongly support a measure for a readjustment of the status of the men on the land in the western country.

[Mr. Mullins.]

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stewart (Edmonton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17, to amend The Soldier Settlement Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Agriculture—Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council, $242,000.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Perhaps it would not be amiss if I should briefly review the progress of the dairy industry in Canada during the past twelve months. Probably at no time in the history of Canada have our exports of dairy products been so large since the war, or of such an acceptable nature in the markets of the world or at home. The increase in the exportable production of dairy products in Canada this year is fully forty per cent greater in value than similar exports of last year. The increase in this output has largely come from the west. Dairying has developed with extraordinary strides on the prairies within the last three or four years, but particularly last year. It is gratifying to note that not only has the output increased but the quality has also improved. This remark applies to butter, cheese and other dairy products. It will be noted that there is a slight increase in this vote. This is due to the enlargement of the grading system. Formerly some of the grading was done by provincial inspectors under an arrangement which we had with the three prairie provinces. In order to provide uniformity of inspection and uniformity of service, it has been found advisable, instead of paying the money to the provinces and having them do the grading, to take over the work ourselves and do the grading. Possibly with that explanation of the dairy industry further elaboration will follow as the result of questions by members of the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was favoured the other day with a piece of party literature sent out by the minister from the Department of Agriculture, a very laboured defence of the Australian treaty policy. The minister knows what I refer to, and he might tell me whether that document was got out at the public expense.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was stencilled in my department. I do not think it is campaign literature. It is a plain statement in respect to the Australian treaty. The department gets out information of this sort, especially when new legislation is not very well understood and is perhaps misrepresented.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not campaign literature, the minister says, because it was plain. Is the campaign literature he issues characterized by not being plain?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am responsible for this.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not doubting that at all, because it reads very much like the minister's literature. But how does he justify spending public money on campaign literature?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not consider this campaign literature.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister read it to the House, to see what hon. members think of it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is really an explanation of the working out of the Australian treaty in relation to the dairy industry. It gives a recital of the prices of butter and cheese, not only this year but in former years, and points out that up to the present the Australian treaty has had no deleterious effect upon our dairy industry.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was its object to improve the quality or the quantity of the butter, or what was it? As I read it, the object was to try to lose the government as few votes as possible over the Australian treaty.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The object of it was to improve the information of all who should read it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For what purpose?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To enlighten them as to what we were doing. We like to have an enlightened electorate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the object of campaign literature? Is the minister's object in issuing campaign literature to befuddle them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As a rule, any campaign literature I have seen from my right hon. friend is never signed. This is signed. That is the distinction.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Under the law, campaign literature must be signed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I never saw it signed by my hon. friends.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister seems to feel that it is all right to issue campaign literature from the department and pay for it at the public expense as long as his name appears at the top. That is one justification. The first justification is that it was plain; the next justification was that it was enlightening. It does not matter whether it is plain or enlightening; it has no objective whatever so far as the dairy industry is concerned. It was campaign literature through and through, every line of it—political party literature printed at the expense of the department. It was just the same kind of literature as the Minister of Trade and Commerce of that day, now extinct, got out in the press of Canada in large, full page advertisements costing many thousands of dollars, all at the public expense to serve the interests of the Liberal party.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know what my hon. friend is driving at. This is our regular practice with respect to any public question. I do not know how he can call it campaign literature with the name of the author in plain type at the top. Imagine some Conservative campaign literature with respect to the Australian treaty or whatever it might be issued by the leader of the opposition, the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen! You never hear of any of their campaign literature dealt with in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have watched the campaign literature of my hon. friends and there was not a single thing on it to show who was the author. All we know is that it emanated from Toronto.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister did not watch anything during the last election. What he was watching mostly was what constituency he could get into in order to be safe.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My right hon. friend had the same job and we both succeeded.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand the minister has succeeded in every election in his political career in getting into another constituency. I do not know whether he is going to succeed over the energetic efforts of his colleague to get rid of him. We hope he does; we hope he wins out in that heroic battle he has been conducting. I might mention to the minister that he succeeded in Athabaska too, and in Peace River, but there is an aftermath sometimes. That this is nothing but party literature shines out of every line of it. His own signature does not affect the matter in the least; it merely indicates that he is prepared to use his signature over party literature at the public expense from his department. That conduct is conduct that certainly this House should not condone. If carried on as the minister has commenced to carry it on and as one or two of his colleagues have commenced, it means simply this, that a government in office has full access to the public treasury for its own aggrandizement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is there any incorrect information in it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We bow in adulation before the minister's sense of morality. He is quite justified in publishing campaign literature at the public expense provided that he himself believes it to be correct. I have no doubt he thinks all his campaign literature is correct, but that does not justify his putting his hand into the public treasury in order to circulate campaign literature throughout this Dominion.

Mr. BURY: I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to regrading butter. I understand the minister stated that the government was instituting arrangements for regrading butter and doing away with provincial grading. I am sorry that some of my hon. friends from the rural districts of Alberta are not in the chamber, because I am certain they would have something to say on that point. I understand that the provincial gradings of Alberta butter are an asset to the province; that by reason of the high quality of the butter of that province a certain value has attached to particular grade marks, and that if those are done away with and the identity of Alberta butter in respect of grading marks is merged in the Dominion in a universal system, Alberta butter producers will suffer loss. I would like to hear what the Minister of Agriculture has to say on that question, because certainly the farmers and butter makers of Alberta are opposed to any such move. We have built up the butter industry in that province and we propose to keep the reputation we have.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand my hon. friend prefers to have provincial grading. We have introduced a national system of grading all butter and cheese that goes forward for export. The reason that this was continued under provincial jurisdiction in the three prairie provinces prior to the present was, my recollection is, because they were the only provinces that were grading prior to the federal government taking up the grading system. They have been grading for ten years or longer. When the Dominion government adopted the national grading system some three years ago it was found more convenient to carry on by a working arrangement with the three prairie provinces, paying them a certain amount of money for the service and having it performed through their graders, while we took on the work of appointing graders in the other provinces. That has worked very nicely, but yet there have been complications; sometimes by mistake they would issue provincial certificates on a federal grade, and sometimes two kinds of certificates, one provincial and one federal, have been known to go forward.

I am not so familiar with conditions in Alberta, but we have a friendly arrangement with Manitoba and Saskatchewan to take over their graders and they do the grading, except that the grading would be for us instead of for the province and instead of our handing the province the money to pay the graders we pay them ourselves. I understand that the same policy is being pursued with regard to Alberta.

Mr. BURY: Has that policy been put into operation yet? I understand not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, because this season's operations are not yet under way.

Mr. BURY: Has the minister communicated with those who are interested in the butter industry of Alberta to get their opinion on that question? Because one of the largest butter men in that province has expressed himself as being distinctly opposed to the movement, and his view is that the butter producers of Alberta are all opposed to it. They lose the benefit of the grading.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand from my deputy there is some opposition in Alberta to making this change, and they desire the present system to continue for another year, that is, that we shall pay for the service. We will continue it, and in that way there will be no difficulty. We owe a great deal to the three prairie provinces for assisting us in introducing this grading system, and we are desirous of working in conjunction with them. They have done a lot to help us establish it all over the Dominion and it is desired that we continue it another year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): The most important feature in connection with the dairy industry during the past year has been the effect of the Australian treaty, in which I am very much interested, coming as I do from a dairy riding. The benefits of that treaty were extended to New Zealand and there seems to be some uncertainty as to what that dominion gave us in return. Can the minister give us any information on the point?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend expect me to go fully into that question on this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that we are selling New Zealand about $12 worth of goods for every dollar they sell to us.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): What changes have they made in their tariff?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not familiar with their tariff. There was felt to be a danger that, unless something was done to equalize the trade between the two countries, Canada would lose the benefits she was enjoying in her relations with New Zealand.

Mr. HANSON: Were no concessions given to Canada in consideration for the extension of the benefits of the Australian treaty to New Zealand? Are we to understand that a big stick was held over the government and they meekly subsided?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Australian treaty contains a full list of the preferences and it has been discussed at least once before. Some one says it has been discussed a hundred times, but I would not go quite so far as that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): The minister might tell us what New Zealand gave us in return. We have heard what Australia has done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that the idea was to avoid the possibility of losing a large volume of trade which we had with New Zealand in newsprint and other articles. We are selling to that Dominion, as I have said, between $12 and $14 worth of goods for every dollar they sell us, and there was a danger of that relationship being disturbed and our losing that preference if we did not extend the terms of the Australian treaty to the smaller dominion. There was no big stick.

Mr. BURY: If the minister is so quick to respond to a threat from New Zealand, does he not think that the United States might be equally quick to respond to a threat from Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Last session we had some questions on the order paper in connection with imports of cheese from New Zealand and Australia for manufacture into kraft in Canada. Correspondence was read on the subject and it appeared that there were some applications for a rebate of duty paid. The minister intimated that some regulation would be made covering the manufacture of Canadian kraft cheese and dealing with the matter of duty. What has been done in that direction?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that cheese brought into Canada for manufacture into kraft pays the duty, and a rebate is given when that product is exported. My hon. friend should ask the Minister of Finance these questions. I would not care to be understood as speaking authoritatively; I am merely giving such information as I have myself gathered from the discussions that have taken place.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The manufacture of kraft cheese is increasing rapidly in Canada, to our satisfaction, and I for one do not think it is fair to the Canadian producer to allow these manufacturers to import cheese for processing and for export again as a Canadian product and receive a rebate of duty. It is unfair to the home producer. The minister said last year that there would be introduced some legislation regulating the matter, but I am not aware of any such legislation having been brought down. The minister says now that some applications for a rebate have been made. Were any refunds actually made?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have had I think only one consignment of Australian cheese for kraft purposes. The process consists in mixing a number of grades of Canadian cheese in order to produce the proper quality for the trade, and the manufacturers require some well matured cheese, preferably our own Canadian product, about a year old, to produce the right tone. About a year ago practically our entire cheese production was shipped out, and there was none left in Canada. We were supplying cheese to a line of cafeteria establishments at Wembley owned by Lyons and Company, and we had great difficulty in getting a sufficient quantity of well matured cheese to meet that demand. The Kraft people were therefore obliged to secure some New Zealand cheese. They bought that cheese in England, but only for the reason that they could get none of the Canadian product. The manufacturers however, as I have said, prefer to use Canadian cheese so long as it is procurable.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then am I right in assuming that notwithstanding the minister's promise to look into the matter and make necessary regulation, nothing has been done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think I promised that we would bring down any regulations with regard to kraft cheese this year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Hansard shows it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think hon. gentlemen will agree that I have brought down my share of regulatory legislation during the past four years, and it seems to me that we have enacted about as much legislation of that description as the public will stand just now. I do believe, however, that the point is well taken. I feel the public have a right to know what kraft cheese is made of, but we have not yet seen our way clear to formulate grades for it. There is another variety known as Phoenix, made in Montreal. As a matter of fact, we have been dealing more with the standardization of containers. As a result of two conferences which we have had during the past month, attended by all parties interested, we have formulated regulations for the standardization of containers for both butter and cheese. I understand that to give us the requisite authority to make regulations in regard to kraft cheese the act will have to be amended.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does not the minister agree that there should be some regulations in that respect?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and I think my officers agree with me. It is just a question of how fast we should go. I have met with a good deal of criticism by some hon. members with respect to what they term the multiplicity of regulations, but not from those who know most about the matter; for instance, I have never been criticized adversely by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) or by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Stewart). Besides, if we go too fast, instead of having public sentiment behind us a feeling develops that we are meddling with business. I quite agree there should be some control and classification of kraft cheese and other similar products.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think we all agree that the minister has not gone too fast in this case.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you, I am glad to get that tribute.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Will the minister inform me when the act was passed requiring the grading of butter and cheese for export?

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was the year before I came here, but it was not then declared law.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, when was it declared law?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it was in 1922 or 1923.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Was it not April 1, 1923?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think so, because the first year it was voluntary.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That was April fool in more ways than one. The act came into effect on April 1, 1923, and required the grading of butter and cheese for export and the stamping of the grade on the commodity so exported. Why was it that that legislation was not put into effect in 1923? Graded cheese to the amount of 110,000,000 pounds was exported after the act was passed and supposed to be in effect, without the grade being stamped on a single box. As a matter of fact, all through 1923 not a pound of butter or cheese exported was stamped with the grade which had been given to it by the officials appointed by the government to do the work. Why was that? The hon. minister says that we cannot go faster than public opinion. Surely we have the right to assume that public opinion was crystallized in this legislation which required certain things to be done, yet although it was enacted, as announced by the government, with the intention of protecting the quality of Canadian butter and cheese in the Old Country in competition with those commodities from other countries, over a million pounds of butter and cheese was sent out of this country unstamped in absolute violation of the law. I am not relying on hearsay in making this statement, because I hold in my hand a series of questions which were placed upon the order paper last session, and which were answered, I presume, by the minister himself as head of the agricultural department. The first question asked was:

When did federal grading of butter and cheese for export come into effect?

This is the answer:

Federal grading under the Dairy Products Act, came into force on April 1, 1923.

This is the next question:

Whether any cheese has been exported to Great Britain since federal grading went into effect without the grade being clearly indicated? If so, when and in what quantity?

The answer is:

1923, 110,513,200 pounds of cheese were graded and exported.

This was in direct violation of the act sponsored by the government, which came into effect on April 1, 1923. The failure on the part of the government to put the act into effect was most unfair to our factory men, especially to those who are most interested in the export cheese trade, namely, the people of eastern Ontario and western Quebec, because thousands of dollars were unfairly taken out of the pockets of our factory men and cheesemakers in those sections. I should like to know from the minister why this act was not put into operation immediately it became law. I have a list of about twenty graders appointed by the government, drawing salaries of $2,500 and upwards. The minister himself in answer to the questions put last session stated that in 1923 and 1924 cheese was graded by the salaried graders, but there was absolutely no protection to the cheese producers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec because the grade was not stamped on the commodity exported in 1923 as the act specified it should be. Then this might very well have been the result. The exporter sends his man into the warehouse to look over some cheese, some of which he tests and finds graded as No. 2, but which according to his taste is very close to No. 1, and in his opinion can be passed as No. 1. So he buys it at No. 2 price and it is sent over to the Old Country and sold at the No. 1 price simply because the exporter was not required to stamp the grade. That is what was done, Mr. Chairman, and the money came directly out of the pockets of the people. That was not kraft cheese, but an hon. gentleman suggests it is graft cheese. At all events, it seems to me that it requires an explanation from the minister. The minister says we must not act too fast in these things, but he did not go any too fast; he did not work any spavins or ringbones on himself by the speed he developed in putting that act into force, on his own admission

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am afraid my hon. friend has rather prejudged the situation. It is quite a regular thing to put through a piece of legislation one year and not proclaim it until possibly a year or two afterwards. This was new legislation, passed by my predecessor. I desire to give the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) credit for putting this bill through in 1921, I think it was. Here is a section which says:

This act shall come into operation on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What does the minister mean by saying the act came into force on April 1, 1923?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the hon. gentleman will sit down and let me get through, I am trying to make the explanation.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the minister object to being asked a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but what is the use of bobbing around like that?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not know that I am doing any bobbing around; I think the minister is the one doing the bobbing just now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When unnecessarily interrupted by my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, I was endeavouring to explain that it is quite a regular thing to let an act stay on the books for a year or more, until the people become familiar with it. I was making them familiar with some parts of the Australian treaty, where apparently the enlightenment was required, as in this case. This act was proclaimed on April 1, 1923. It was not done in 1922—I will tell hon. members the reason for that also—because there was a great deal of opposition to it. The hon. member for Victoria knew of that opposition; he had hard work in getting that bill through the House, with such peculiar interruptions and cantankerous questions as we have been having to-night. I have no doubt my hon. friend had the same difficulty, because he was blazing the trail and starting this good work. During the season of 1922 we did do some voluntary grading of both butter and cheese at Montreal, and I think elsewhere, although I do not recollect at the moment. I know we did some work with those who were ready to take advantage of this service. After we had the great mass of dairymen with us voluntarily, and after hearing from a number of the opponents of this movement,—whom we found generally around Brockville and Belleville—splendid dairy districts, too, but opposed to this grading system for reasons which I do not need to enter into—in the spring of 1923 we had the work so advanced that we then had a fair chance of making it applicable to the whole country, which we did as soon as possible. Following that, I do not know what my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) means when he says there was no grading after April 1923. We have no information to that effect; I have never heard of it before. Now I am ready for that other question.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister has clearly indicated that he is some bobber himself. He bobbed all over the year 1921; then he bobbed around the year 1922, and finally he bobbed along until he came to April 1, 1923, when he says the act came into force.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the complaint?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I will state my complaint again, and I hope this time the minister will get it clearly into his head. According to the minister's own statement, the act in regard to establishing the grades of cheese and butter to be exported from Canada came into force on the first of April, 1923. Notwithstanding that act, none of the cheese and butter exported in 1923 had the grade stamped upon it.

10 p.m.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Where—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Where is my authority? My authority is the answer given by the minister to a question placed on the order paper last session.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What does it say regarding that?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I will read it again; I have already read it once. This is sessional paper No. 159 from the Department of the Secretary of State, a return to an order of the House of Commons dated 30th March, 1925, for a return showing—this is question No. 1:

When federal grading of butter and cheese for export came into effect.

To which the answer was:

Federal grading under the Dairy Products Act came into force on April 1, 1923.

Now in answer to the eighth question, which was as follows:

Has any cheese been exported to Great Britain since federal grading went into effect without the grade being clearly indicate? If so, when and what quantity?

The answer was that in 1923, 110,513,200 pounds of cheese graded but not stamped, were exported from this country. This amount of cheese was exported from this country without fulfilling the conditions of that act, which was placed on the statute books on the first of April, 1923, and which required the grade to be stamped on cheese and butter. That is what I am trying to get the minister to justify, if he can. If I have bobbed around at all in asking the question, the minister seems to be doing some nice acrobatic work in trying to avoid answering it. I have asked the question twice; will the minister try some more acrobatics and see what he can do in getting around a plain answer to a plain question? I am asking the minister why this act was not made effective.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My recollection of it, Mr. Chairman, is that there were still a number of people who preferred to have their own brands on the boxes of their cheese, rather than anything the government at that time was prepared to put on. They were opposed to it, and the grade was put on the bill of lading instead of on the cheese. That was a compromise which was made. It is a matter of opinion just how we should deal with these questions, and that was the situation. It was graded; I want to assure my hon. friend that it was all graded.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It was graded, but the grading was not made effective at all, because the act was not carried into effect. Now we have the explanation; the minister says this government puts an act upon the statute books requiring the people to do thus and so, but some people do not like to do what that act requires, so the government let them do as they like. It does not make any difference what the act says; if they object or if they prefer not to comply with the statute, the minister says it is a very difficult matter to deal with those people, and so the act is not enforced. That is the explanation. It may satisfy the minister, but if that is not an indication of some very lively bobbing, I have never seen any in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not want my hon. friend to feel that there has been anything withheld from him. It is the experience of every man who has had anything to do with administering new legislation that for the first year it is the part of wisdom to not be too exacting in the carrying out of details. Everyone knows that. If my hon. friend does not know it, he will find it out from now on. As a matter of fact we did not place the act on the statute book; it was placed there by my hon. friend's own party and they deserve the credit for it. I am sorry my hon. friend has taken up the time of the committee in discussing pernickety, minor questions as to why we did not carry out the act from the first year it was introduced. I do not think any law, especially one that is entirely new, has ever been carried out in its minutest detail the first year it has been put into effect. Notwithstanding what my hon. friend has said, the cheese put on the market is graded and everything is now running along smoothly. My hon. friend is just two years behind the times in making his complaint.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am not two years behind the times. I made the complaint just as soon as I was in a position to do so from the floor of this House, and I am perfectly within my rights in acting as I have done. The answer of the minister is no answer at all. According to his own statement the public had ample information that this was going to be done, and those of us who have followed the course of the dairy industry in this country know that to be a fact. I may go so far as to say to my hon. friend that when I was a member of this House, previous to 1921, I supported this very sort of legislation, believing it would be effective in keeping up the standard and quality of Canadian cheese and Canadian butter. I thought that Alberta had done a wise thing in passing legislation to regulate the production of butter in the province, and that this legislation had raised the standard of Alberta butter to a much higher point than it had attained in many other provinces. I believe that still. I support this legislation, and I say that the people had ample opportunity to consider the whole question of grading. When the butter and cheese were graded and the factory shipped its cheese to Montreal it had no recourse but to accept the grade given to its cheese by the graders. There was no appeal on any ground at all, the grade had to be accepted. The cheesemakers of a certain factory might consider they had produced No. 1 cheese, but if that cheese on being sent to Montreal was graded as No. 2 they had to accept the grade; there was no appeal from it, consequently many of them lost considerable money. I say in all fairness to the cheese producers that if their cheese and butter was graded, that grade should have been stamped upon the cheese that was exported, as the act presumed it would be. The act was to become operative on the 1st of April, 1923. It did not, however, go into force then, although it should have done so. As a matter of fact none of the cheese exported from this country that year stamped with the required grade. I think it was very unfair to the cheese producers of Canada that that grading was not carried out in accordance with the provisions of the act. As for half a dozen years being necessary to enforce an act, that is absolute nonsense, and nothing else. The act was in existence and the public had ample warning with respect to it. The legislation had been discussed by cheese boards and dairy associations from one end of the country to the other, and these organizations were perfectly aware of what was contemplated. They had considered it, they had approved of it, and had submitted many resolutions for their own protection. The cheesemaker who produced a first-class article had a right to be protected and felt that he was going to be protected by the act. The act did grant him protection, but it was not put into operation as it should have been. That is why I make this complaint to-night and I think the complaint is justified. The minister may take a different view, in which case, we will have to agree to differ. There is a lot of money involved in the cheese business; it means a good deal to eastern Ontario and western Quebec particularly. We have built up a reputation for the excellent quality of our cheese through the high degree of skill which our makers possess, and in that regard Canada has taken a very high place. One man in my county secured first place in competition with the world at the royal show in the Old Country in 1923. Another man secured the third prize the same year. In 1924 the man who had obtained the third prize the previous year won the first prize, and in 1925 the producer who gained first prize in 1923 won the first prize once more. I have the figures here to show that the reputation which those men obtained for Canadian cheese at that particular show meant a gain of thousands of dollars to the shippers of the Canadian product. This is a matter of very great importance to my county. Due to the fact that many first-class cheesemakers did not get a square deal under this act as they should have done in 1923, several of the most expert went out of business entirely after suffering losses which I maintain they would not have encountered had the temptation not been open to exporters to take advantage of the grading that was done in Montreal and to ship out cheese under grades to suit themselves.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want to express my appreciation at finding such an ardent advocate of the grading system. During the last four years I have had to fight the battle for this system almost entirely alone. I am assuming that my hon. friend has always been in favour of it. There are, however, a great many people who are never heard from when a system is first introduced but who come forward and endorse it when it proves to be a success.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I advocated it long before the minister was in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was my hon. friend's own party that passed the act. Why did they not put it in force? In the act as passed by the hon. gentleman's friends it was provided that before the law came into force it should be proclaimed by order in council. This shows that those responsible for the act knew what they were doing and that the time to make the law effective was a matter for discretion. I am sure the hon. gentleman will be glad to know that of the cheese graded in 1923, 77.06 graded No. 1. That was pretty good to start with. In 1924, showing the stimulus given by the grading system, 84.38 of the cheese graded No. 1. In 1925 the stimulus was still more apparent, because 85.60 graded No. 1. I should not be disputing with my hon. friend as to why the act was not enforced. Apparently in the first place there was doubt as to the desirability of grading, and in the second place the effect the grading as introduced would have upon the quality was unknown.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Provision is made for a grant of $5,000 to the National Dairy Council. I would ask the minister if he has had any representations as a result of the meeting of the National Dairy Council held in Quebec last fall or this winter with reference to the Australian treaty. As I understand it, the National Dairy Council is a sort of parent institution which fathers all the provincial dairy associations. Such being the case I think its representations should have due weight with the minister. My information is that the dairy council did make some representations finding a good deal of fault with the Australian treaty. A number of other dairy associations I believe, in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have also made representations along the same line. Furthermore, I should like to ask the minister a question in view of the fact that in the first three months of the present year no less than four million pounds of butter entered Canada from New Zealand and Australia. When he considers that in the whole of the calendar year 1925 less than 70,000 pounds came in, I would like to get his opinion as to what effect that is having on the dairy industry. I should also be glad if the minister would take this opportunity to give us his own idea as to just what the effect of the treaty has been, since it has been in force, and what will the general effect be upon the dairy industry.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The National Dairy Council is not very much enamoured of those provisions of the Australian treaty that reduced the duty on New Zealand and Australian butter by two cents and three cents respectively, and they have so expressed themselves. The dairy association of Canada have so expressed themselves, but the Maritimes have not expressed themselves one way or the other. Out on the prairies, where we do not look for very much agitation on behalf of protection, there developed quite an agitation against that phase of the Australian treaty. I had the pleasure of meeting members of the dairy council here in Ottawa after their meeting at Quebec city, and they made a very fair representation in regard to their case. I asked them if they did not think it would be fair, before pronouncing judgment, to give this system a year's trial to see how it would work out. That was a month ago. I think my hon. friend knows that if it never works out any worse than it has this year we would hope the treaty would remain in force forever so far as the effect on the dairy industry is concerned. Under the provisions of the treaty we have had the magnificent amount of three cheeses coming in. So far as cheese is concerned we can leave it out. I do not think any eggs have come in, so that we can leave that item out as well, too. With regard to butter, in spite of the fact that it is coming in under a two-cent tariff reduction from New Zealand and a three-cent tariff reduction except where the dumping clause is applied automatically, from Australia, ever since it started to come in the price of butter has persistently gone up, week after week and month after month, until it has reached the price of 47½ cents retail, and has been sold to consumers in almost every market in Canada for over 50 cents a pound. I think the reason was that there was such an unusual shortage in Canada that it was not possible to get Australian or New Zealand butter rapidly enough to fill the vacuum or depress the prices. The result has been that the shortage continued all winter and prices kept stiffening up all the time. From 43½ cents it went up to 47½ cents to the retailer. That is the highest point it reached, and the price to the consumer was 52 cents. Consequently the price of butter has been so high that, in spite of the reduction in duty an agitation has sprung up for the restoration of oleomargarine as a substitute. That is no dream. The National Council of Women in this city about a week ago so expressed themselves. The price is beginning to come down, not because of the Australian or New Zealand butter coming in, because that is all here or is on the way here, but our natural production, which usually occurs about this time of the year, has been coming in, and the prices have been dropping until now they are about what they were at the beginning of January. The shortage of butter was so great that it could not be supplied quickly enough to keep the price from going up, and it went up steadily till about ten days ago.

I do not know that we can take this as a criterion as to how it will affect the trade another year. One thing is sure, that if we enter another winter with the same shortage and the same conditions we will have the same prices. There is not sufficient storage space at Vancouver to keep the butter and supply it quickly enough to take care of the vacuum. On the other hand, if we do not ship short then we will have sufficient butter ourselves, and there will be no attraction for New Zealand or Australian butter. Australian and New Zealand butter did not displace one pound of Canadian butter. It was not here. The farmers and dairymen had sold it under the attractive prices of last summer and had the money in their pockets, and we had to turn around and buy from Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the minister say we had no reserves of butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had not so many reserves. We had about 12,000,000 pounds less than the year before or 6,000,000 pounds less than the average of the last five years.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): But we had several millions in reserve?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, but we were 12,000,000 pounds short of the previous year's supply. That 12,000,000 pounds could not come across the Pacific in the four months, because there was not sufficient cold storage to take care of it. The Pacific route had storage room for 8,000,000 pounds and that left a shortage until our own production came and took care of it, and the prices went down. The prices will very soon be down to an export basis. All through the winter, while the Australian butter was coming here, it was ten cents above export prices. As long as our butter is selling ten cents higher than the world price there can be no very great grievance, and we should be willing to try this treaty out in a normal year, when we enter the winter with a normal supply on hand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Four million pounds of butter from Australia and New Zealand came in early this year, and the minister says that the price is the highest that it has been for many winters. That is probably true, but we must remember that it is the butter produced by the Australian and New Zealand farmers that is being sold at the high price. The Canadian farmer should be getting that price. I contend that when this legislation was put through in June of last year it discouraged the farmers, and they curtailed their production during last summer, in preparation for this winter's output, because they knew that in all prabability the Australian and New Zealand butter would come in. The Australian and New Zealand butter has come in. If our people had had their butter ready to sell at the high price, the Australian and New Zealand butter would have come in in any case, and they would not necessarily have got the high price which means so much profit to them. The Australian and New Zealand butter would have come in and would have been sold at a less price than the Canadian article, even if our butter had been on the market. I maintain it is the threat of that Australian and New Zealand butter coming in that is affecting the dairy industry and will continue to affect it. The minister also said that if the conditions so far were any criterion, he hoped the Australian and New Zealand treaty would continue forever. I do not think the dairy industry in this country will back him up in that statement. I think it has already given them a severe shock and the very threat of that product coming in when the price goes up is bound to have a deleterious effect on the industry.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As regards the production this year we have it as being forty per cent higher than that of last year. Even in the winter this year the production was greater than that of last winter, and as regards any production we have in the winter the farmers reap the benefit of the higher price.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Not for the 4,000,000 pounds that came in from Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What else could we have done? The farmers could not produce butter by flashlight. There are ways of making artificial butter, but there is only one way of making the real thing and the real thing was not here to eat or to sell. I believe our supply or stock on hand fell short by about 12,000,000 pounds of what it was a year ago; that quantity was not in sight and people had either to eat their bread dry or to get butter from somewhere. We brought it in from the logical place where we could get the best butter at the lowest price, and that was New Zealand and Australia. I am really astonished at people complaining that we got good butter at a cheaper price while at the same time our farmers were getting a higher price for butter than they had since the end of the war. Next year—and we expect to be here for several years yet—my hon. friend may have the argument on the statistics but we shall have to wait until that time. In the meantime all the figures are against my hon. friend's contention. The price on March 19 for first grade Australian butter at London prices converted into Canadian currency was equivalent to 36⅛ cents.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the London price?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the Vancouver price?

Mr. MOTHERWELL. The Montreal price the same day for first grade creamery butter in the wholesale jobbing houses was 47 cents, or eleven cents higher. I was giving it at ten cents higher.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): What was it in 1923? The minister says that prices now are higher than they have been at any time since the war. I have his own circular letter, this campaign literature, showing the price in 1923. Will he just read from it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I gave my copy to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I will read it. The price of butter was as high as 52½ cents.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is retail.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): This does not say retail. It gives the prices at Montreal in the month of February and these are his own figures. The high price is 52½ cents, which is the highest price quoted in the whole list.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The price I state has been going up all winter.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The price that I have reference to is published in this campaign literature, under date of 1923, not this year at all, and yet the minister says that the price now is higher than it has been at any time since the war. That statement does not agree with his printed letter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member is reading from the wrong scripture.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): A few minutes ago the minister said that this treaty came into effect only in October and that no harm had been done since then, although 4,000,000 pounds have come in. That sounds very much like the campaign literature that I am going to read from now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is Tory stuff.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): No. Hon. members will recognize the photograph on the outside, that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). This piece of campaign literature is published in September last. Let me read this sentence:

> No ill effects as yet have flowed from the Australian treaty.

This has the signature of the Liberal party and the photograph of the Prime Minister on it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We always sign ours.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): This says:

> No ill effects as yet have flowed from the Australian treaty.

Just imagine! This was dated in September and the Australian treaty came into effect on the first of October.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is easily accounted for. My hon. friend does not know the effect of his own campaign regarding this treaty. My hon. friends were howling about this for months before in anticipation of it, and as a matter of fact in Alberta and British Columbia, as a result of their propaganda against it, the dairymen dropped their prices even before the treaty came into effect. When my hon. friends opposite were in power there was no complaint about Australian butter coming in. I will give the total imports of butter from Australia and New Zealand for different years. In 1911, the last year that the Liberal government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power, the total imports of butter from Australia amounted in round figures to 900,000 pounds. The very first year that my hon. friends were in power the total from Australasia amounted to 2,241,000 pounds, or nearly three times as much of what they call this villainous stuff came in.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): That is for a year. My hon. friend did better in four months.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend would apparently rather be eating oleomargarine which his leader wanted to impose upon this country, oleomargarine that is made from intestinal parts of animals and other things. In 1913 the jump is three times as great again; there was 6,116,000 pounds of this so-called bad stuff imported from Australasia.

Did we hear any Tories going around the country howling their heads off about that? We never heard a word about it. The people of Canada thought it was a good thing to be able to get first class butter at a low price from their sister dominion, and if it had not been for the election last fall they would have continued to think the same thing. But my hon. friends have such a propaganda factory at Toronto that they have persuaded the people it is a bad thing for them to buy this butter from their sister dominion at two cents less.

An hon. MEMBER: What was the duty at that time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Four and three cents. It has been that for a long time, for a quarter of a century. My hon. friend cannot divert me from giving these figures by telling us bed-time stories. In 1914, 6,959,000 pounds of this kind of dope came in from our sister dominion, or nearly twice as much as has come this year, and yet not a word was said about it. I would ask the hon. member for Lincoln what the people of this country would have done if they lacked 4,000,000 pounds of butter with which to lubricate their bread. I will wait for an answer. We entered upon the winter with a shortage of 12,000,000 pounds, and we all know that you cannot order butter from the cow overnight.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister is certainly an expert at buffoonery. He knows that there were 10,000,000 pounds of butter in storage at the time this butter was brought in from Australia. What I would not have done was to take the duty off any of our own farm products.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is no answer. The fact is that we had 6,000,000 pounds less than the average of the last five years.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): And did 4,000,000 pounds that came in meet our needs? If it did, then I can tell the minister that we had several million pounds in storage.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We were short of butter or we would not have ordered any from abroad.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): There is another matter I want to have answered.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want this one settled first.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): A few minutes ago the minister referred to the fact that there was an automatic dumping clause in effect on Australian butter. Has that dumping clause been enforced against one solitary pound of Australian or New Zealand butter that has come into Canada in the last three months?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The answer from the department of the minister of Customs indicates that it has. The dumping clause was applied to Australian butter, as it is applied to all other butter.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I asked a plain question and the minister is not giving me a plain answer. I want to know whether one pound of Australian butter was subjected to the dumping clause.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is all subject to the dumping clause, whether from Australia or elsewhere.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understood the minister to say that this butter from Australia and New Zealand did not lower the price in Canada, but on the contrary almost stimulated it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the minister remember the telegrams read in this House from Vancouver and Victoria indicating that the first shipment of Australian butter had the effect of reducing our price by from two to four cents?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say what effect it had; I was assuming for the sake of argument that it did lower the price. I believe that the people of Vancouver, as I know was the case in Alberta, hearing so much talk about great quantities of butter coming in from Australia, lowered the price before that butter ever landed on their shores. Vancouver would be the logical place where the greatest effect would be felt from an importation of Australian butter inasmuch as it is the frontier of the antipodes. I know further that the Alberta creamery men had an arrangement with the produce dealers of Vancouver to supply them with butter at two cents below what it was at the time the treaty went into effect, provided they would patronize the Alberta creameries. They lowered the price in anticipation.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister gave us to understand a while ago that there was such a shortage of butter in this country that we had either to allow Australian and New Zealand butter to come in or eat our bread unbuttered. Now he tells us that in anticipation of Australian and New Zealand butter coming in the price immediately dropped in Vancouver and elsewhere from two to three cents per pound. On what? On the butter we did not have, for he said just now that we had no butter. According to his own statement we had a shortage. He tells us however that the price of our butter, which was non-existent, fell two, three or four cents per pound. The minister quoted figures in regard to importations covering a period going back eleven, twelve, thirteen and fourteen years, but he did not complete his statement. Perhaps he has the figures before him. I have not all the facts in my mind, but my impression is that during those years we had a shortage. Notwithstanding the statement of the minister, however, as to the present shortage in this country, I think I am right in saying that we had an exportable surplus of butter last year of between twenty-five and thirty million pounds.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: More than that; 34,000,000 pounds.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then what becomes of the minister's statement that the price went up because there was an absolute shortage here? The position which I take in this matter is this: there are two classes of people concerned in the sale of butter—the purchasers, whose representations have a right to be considered, and the consumers, who have an equal claim upon our consideration. That is the principle that should govern us in fixing the tariff, and I maintain that so long as Canada has an exportable surplus of 30,000,000 pounds of butter that very fact in itself should be an absolute guarantee to the consumers that they would never have to pay more than they should for the article. That is reasonable. At the same time I hold that the producers of this commodity in our own country have the first claim on our own home market. Australia and New Zealand take that view in regard to their own products. They have a high duty on butter, because they have a large exportable surplus, and they have also a considerable tariff on meats. They are one of the largest meat exporting countries in the world, and they say that inasmuch as they have more butter and cheese and meat than they know what to do with, they do not want outsiders to send those commodities into their country. They guarantee to the farmers that only Australian and New Zealand butter, meat, eggs and cheese shall be used on Australian and New Zealand tables. That, I maintain, is the proper attitude for us to take here, especially in view of this fact, which should not be lost sight of, that the dairy interests cannot be considered only in relation to the summer months, but from the standpoint of the entire year. In the course of the twelve months we have a severe winter during which the cost of production is necessarily high, and the producers of Alberta and other places in Canada where there exists a surplus of butter have a distinct grievance. At the very time in the winter months when the cost of production is at its highest in Canada, they are forced by the Australian treaty to compete with the product imported from that country, which is produced at a time when the cost of production is naturally low.

It is all very well to theorize on the subject of free trade and other questions of that sort, but we must not lose sight of the practical element. We cannot afford to forget that climatic conditions in this country are different from those that obtain in Australia and New Zealand, and owing to that difference our farmers are compelled to invest large sums of money in specially adapted barns and stables, in silos and other equipment, and to spend a good deal in providing forage and storing it for the winter, keeping their stock during that trying season at a heavy expense. It is therefore unreasonable, it is eminently unjust to expect the farmers in a country like Canada to compete on even terms with Australian and New Zealand butter and similar products by allowing those products to come into this Dominion at a very low rate of duty, or nominally free. That is the position which I take and it is the position taken by dairymen generally throughout the country. I do not believe that there was any shortage of butter such as the minister speaks of. There might be a shortage in this or that locality, but that might happen at any time; but on the whole our trade figures show, as the minister himself has admitted, that Canada did not have a shortage of butter last year. On the contrary we had a large exportable surplus of some 30,000,000 pounds and as the minister says, even more than that. My contention is that we should so arrange the tariff as to guarantee to our Canadian farmers that their produce shall have first place on Canadian tables and not the produce of countries which have a distinct advantage over us by enjoying a milder climate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is not much in the moralizing of the hon. member (Mr. Edwards) to which I take exception, but he tried to make my statements appear self-contradictory. I admitted that butter-fat prices dropped in October, not only when the treaty came in but even a little before it did, owing to all the noise that was made by my hon. friends prior to the election. But the prices went up again before the New Year as soon as it was understood that there was a shortage, and that condition continued until about two weeks ago. That is what I said, and there is nothing contradictory in it. As to our being short of butter, I did not say that; what I said was that we went into the winter with a shortage. It does not matter whether we exported 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 or 100,000,000 pounds of butter; the fact remains that so long as that butter went out of the country during the summer we did not have it in Canada. We could not sell our butter and have it at the same time. We therefore entered upon the winter with a shortage of 12,000,000 pounds as compared with last year, and that is what made butter prices go up. The great tide of Australian and New Zealand butter which had been dammed by the longshoremen's strike naturally flowed, when liberated, into the places where there was the greatest shortage, and one of those places happened to be Canada. Butter made right in this country had gone over to Great Britain, and when the shortage occurred here that butter was shipped back, paying a duty of four cents to enter the country of its origin.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Was that not due to the strike in Australia which prevented the Australian product from reaching the British market?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Australian butter was held back through the strike.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That was responsible for the enhanced price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, because the Australian butter could not get to the British market; there was a shortage there which attracted Canadian butter, so that when the winter came we had a shortage as compared with the previous year. We had therefore either to buy butter somewhere or go without it. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) apparently would have preferred to have us go without it, and that is a matter of choice.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): This minister can argue in a circle about as well as anyone I ever came across. He says there was a shortage here of 12,000,000 pounds, and in a circular letter, written in his own office over his own signature, only a few days ago, he has this to say:

> The present agitation originated largely with some dealers and creamery operators who hoped to realize higher prices on the stock of butter which they had on hand and for which the producers had been paid fall prices.

If you can beat that I want to hear the next one.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I can give explanations—

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): You bet you can.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —but I can never guarantee that the hon. gentleman will understand them.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): You won't yourself.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course there were stocks on hand, but the fact that is of significance is that we had 12,000,000 pounds too little as compared with the year before. That is the point.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): And 4,000,000 pounds we imported would save the situation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course, where would you have got it?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): And we had butter in storage. How much is in storage now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, what is the use of talking?

Mr. FOSTER: There seems to be in the examination of this question a double-barrelled difficulty. The minister himself says that Australian butter coming in cost the consumers a higher price, and if I understood him correctly I think he said that the fear of this same influx of butter drove down prices in Canada. And if we are to believe the statement that has been made, the producers in the country, or at least a great many of them, went out of business reducing their stocks and herds, so that there was an adverse effect, in consequence, as regards the production of butter in Canada and the necessity for the consumers to pay higher prices. I think it is true that the dealers in butter in this country, sometimes in the summer, when there is usually a large quantity produced from an abundance of grass feed, later on keep up their prices anticipating a higher market. When therefore the treaty went into effect, or was about to go into effect, the dealers in Canada were on the verge of panic, and they sold heavily of their reserve stocks. The minister speaks of Tory propaganda, at the time of the election, creating a hubbub in the country and frightening the dealers and producers; but there would have been no propaganda had there been no legislation of this kind proposed or any treaty in sight. There are therefore two evils in connection with this matter, one bearing harmfully upon the consumer, and the other affecting the producer.

One word more. I listened attentively to the minister and I heard him say that the price in Canada to-day was ten to eleven cents higher than the export price. Did I understand the minister correctly?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I read the dates.

Mr. FOSTER: That is all right, but approximately?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: 1921.

Mr. FOSTER: That is so, and that was maintained for some considerable time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. FOSTER: I wish to call the attention of the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. King) to that remark. Here is a statement by the minister admitting that the export price does not govern the home market price, the spread being 10 cents. I want hon. gentlemen to remember, therefore, that when they say the export price in the world market governs the price at home, it is at last on record, through the Minister of Agriculture, that that is not so.

Mr. BROWN: When you have an exportable surplus.

Mr. FOSTER: We had an exportable surplus.

Mr. BROWN: Not at the time the minister speaks of.

Mr. FOSTER: It is very peculiar, Mr. Chairman; I try to speak in a very mild manner, but the dogs of war hop on me from all corners of the House whenever I make a statement. It must be that I get under somebody's skin, and I can assure you that I do not mean to do so. I merely wish to point out what I hope is quite obvious to anyone giving a moment's thought to the subject. The minister says there is no exportable surplus, but in the next breath says there are 7,000,000 pounds in storage, and we export 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 pounds; we have 7,000,000 pounds more than are normally required. That is an exportable surplus. If the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) cannot see that that is an exportable surplus, he should have a pair of glasses.

Mr. BROWN: It does not follow that there is an exportable surplus because you have a small reserve stock on hand for your own use.

Mr. FOSTER: My hon. friend is like the man in some parts of our own country who, when laying in a little sauerkraut for the winter, puts in eleven barrels for his own use. Seven million pounds is practically one quarter of our total export.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): How much is that for each person in Canada?

Mr. FOSTER: It is 7,000,000 pounds more than is normally consumed, if that is anything to my hon. friend. Of course it would be a little difficult for him, I fancy, to figure that out offhand, but he may be one of those lightning calculators who come from certain sections of the country, and able to figure these things out rapidly. But my point is that when we have hon. gentlemen here telling the country and this House that the home market price is governed by the export price, we now know once and for all, from an authoritative source—the Minister of Agriculture himself—that that is not always true.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I feel sorry for my hon. friend if he does not see the difference between what the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) said and the conditions which have prevailed during the last four months. We were an importing country for the last four months; that is the reason.

11 p.m.

Mr. FOSTER: With 7,000,000 pounds in storage we are importing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is 7,000,000 pounds, spread over this Dominion?

Mr. FOSTER: It is a quarter of our total exports.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think perhaps my hon. friend finds difficulty in understanding the situation. My hon. friends from Nova Scotia make good butter and export it, but Canada as a country has been an importer of butter during the past four or five months. That is what the howl has been about, because we have imported 4,500,000 pounds of butter.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Under a low tariff.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what the kick is about; hon. gentlemen seem to want to pay more. If the producers have suffered, and I do not admit that, it must be remembered that the consumer has benefited. They can take it whichever way they like.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt this question is agitating the rural parts of Canada very much. During the last election the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. King) had to write a letter to the Globe saying that he did not vote in favour of the Australian treaty. Someone inadvertently said that he had voted in favour of it, and he had to go on record to the contrary. That shows the feeling in his riding, when he had to correct that impression before he could hope for re-election. There is one last question I want to ask the minister. What in his opinion will be the effect on Canadian dairying of the recent increase in the American tariff on butter from eight cents to twelve cents?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will be less apt to go there. There is very little butter goes there, it will go to the world market, which is the United Kingdom. Occasionally some goes to the United States but not very much, and that amount will decrease under the twelve cent duty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Would there not be less if our tariff was higher?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They do not bring butter in here.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): I mean from other countries as well as from the United States. Would not the same principle hold?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As soon as we begin exporting, which will be in a month or so, there will be no butter coming from anywhere, because we will be exporting it.

Mr. TOLMIE: I think we have had an interesting discussion on this very important subject. It is now eleven o'clock and many of our agricultural members who would like to take part in this discussion are not here. I want to say a few words myself, and I think under the circumstances the minister might let this stand over until after Easter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very well.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend offers no objection, perhaps we might pass this item, with the understanding that we will have a full discussion on it afterwards.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will have the whole question of dairying up again on the live stock vote. I would like to make a little progress.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has not forgotten that he made a similar promise once before and when he got into the estimates, where we could discuss the particular item, he called on the chairman to shut discussion off.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not make a promise.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister's memory is as poor as his dependability. That occasion is very clear in the minds of a number of us, and I do not think the minister could have forgotten it. It was on a similar vote. I am ready to accept any measure of repentance by the minister, and if he will promise not to do that again, so far as I am concerned I am prepared to let this go through.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I say I never did it and I never intend to do it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we produce the specific case, will the minister beg pardon?

Mr. LAPOINTE: He will recant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he will recant.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He will crawfish.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think he is too old to reform, even yet.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we are always improving.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And with the distance the minister has to go, he can start any time. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to let the item go through, on condition that this discussion will come in at a future time.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Wednesday, March 31, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, 30th March, 1926.

SIR:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. F. A. Anglin, acting as Deputy of the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 4.15 p.m., on Tuesday, the 6th of April, for the purpose of giving the royal assent to an interim supply bill.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. F. SLADEN,
Governor General's Secretary.

To The Hon.
The Speaker of the House of Commons, Ottawa.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—STATION GROUNDS, SHUBENACADIE, N.S.

Mr. FOSTER:

1. Has the government or the Canadian National Railways decided to rent, lease or sell all or any portion of their station grounds in Shubenacadie Hants county, Nova Scotia, bordering on the main highway and lying between Manning's garage and the Pineo property between the loading wharf and the main highway? If so, to whom has the property been rented, leased or sold and what remuneration, if any, has been secured for same?

2. For what purpose is the land to be used?

3. Was the decision, if any, to rent, lease or sell this property advertised, and if so, in what papers?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING:

1. No.

2. See No. 1.

3. See No. 1.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—WAREHOUSE AT GEORGETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings):

1. Have representations been made to any departments of the government during the years 1925 and 1926 regarding improvement to warehouse on the railway wharf at Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, with a view to making said warehouse suitable for handling potatoes for export during the autumn months?

2. What is the intention of the government regarding this matter?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Yes, by Senator J. J. Hughes.

2. Matter under consideration.

FREIGHT HAULAGE AND REVENUE

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. How many tons of grain and grain products did the Canadian Pacific Railway haul in western territory to the head of the lakes during the calendar year 1925?

2. In making this haul, what was the resultant total of tons of this traffic carried one mile?

3. What was the average length of haul of this traffic?

4. What additional total gross revenues would have been earned had this traffic been carried under existing rates on similar traffic in the United States?

5. How many tons of grain and grain products did the Canadian Pacific Railway haul in western territory to Vancouver in the year 1925?

6. In making this haul, what was the resultant total of tons of this traffic carried one mile?

7. What was the average length of haul of this traffic?

8. What additional total gross revenues would have been earned had this traffic been carried under existing rates on similar traffic in the United States?

9. What was the total percentage of grain and grain products hauled in western territory to the entire tonnage of that territory in 1925?

[Mr. Speaker.]

10. What percentage of the entire ton-mileage in the western territory in the year 1925, did the carriage of grain and grain products entail?

11. What was the percentage of the total revenue earned in western territory in 1925 by the carriage of grain and grain products?

12. What was the average rate per ton-mile earned by such traffic in said territory and year?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. 5,873,286 tons of grain.
2. 4,237,738,165 tons one mile.
3. 721 miles.
4. Approximately $16,267,972.00.
5. 733,065 tons.
6. 574,805,646 tons one mile.
7. 784 miles.
8. Approximately $1,658,351.00.
9. 51.7 per cent.
10. 63.3 per cent.
11. 41.4 per cent.
12. 56/100 of one cent.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS REVENUE

Mr. DOUCET:

What was the total revenue received from each branch of experimental farms and stations for, (a) 1924-25, (b) 1925-26 to date;
(1) In the province of Nova Scotia,
(2) In the province of Prince Edward Island,
(3) In the province of New Brunwick,
(4) In the province of Quebec,
(5) In the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

	1924-25	1925-26
Nova Scotia.		To March 30.
Kentville	$12,935.19	$10,853.58

MR. R. C. WRIGHT

Mr. DOUCET:

1. Was Mr. R. C. Wright, chief architect, of the Department of Public Works, absent from Ottawa from February 18, 1926, until noon of March 8, 1926?

2. If so, was he on government business, annual leave, special or sick leave?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. No.

2. Answered by No 1.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

RECLASSIFICATION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. STEWART (Leeds) (for Mr. Doucet):

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of Public Works, the Deputy Minister and Chief of Legal Branch with the Civil Service Commission, relating to reclassification of Mr. M. O. Durant, Miss Berthe Hébert, Miss Violet Becker and Miss Yvonne Parent, together with copy of report made by the investigator of the commission, Mr. C. R. Medland.

ABSENCE OF OFFICIALS OF PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Mr. STEWART (Leeds) (for Mr. Doucet):

For a statement showing the annual leave, special leave, sick leave, or absence on government business, of Mr. R. C. Wright, chief architect, T. W. Fuller, assistant chief architect, and Messrs. Antonio Boucher, T. D. Rankin, A. J. Barclay, all of the Department of Public Works, Ottawa, for the fiscal years 1921-1922, 1922-1923, 1923-1924, 1924-1925, 1925-1926, giving date in each case.

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD

On the Order for Motions:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): If I could have the unanimous consent of the House—I know I have no right otherwise—I desire to ask if the government is going to fulfil the promise of the Prime Minister in reference to laying on the table of the House a copy of the order in council giving the personnel and powers of the tariff advisory board.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I mentioned the other day that I hoped to be able to lay the order in council on the table of the House on Monday, but I beg now to inform my right hon. friend that it will be laid on the table immediately after Easter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the trouble?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no trouble.

PRISON REFORM

PRODUCTIVE WORK AND COMPENSATION FOR INMATES OF PENITENTIARIES

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the administration of penitentiaries be amended to provide: first, sufficient productive work to keep the inmates employed; and, second, that a share of the proceeds go to dependents, and in case of no dependents such share to be held in trust until release.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read by yourself was presented by me to the House last year and was received very favourably. I think it would have been adopted by the House if six o'clock had not arrived too soon. I believe that no party, as a party, opposed it, and if I remember correctly only one individual member objected to the resolution. I possibly should have inserted in the resolution a declaration that manufacturing operations in penitentiaries should be limited to state goods—that is goods needed by the state. In this case it would apply simply to goods required by the federal government, because there would be no control over provincial governments. That statement is not in the resolution, though it was my intention that it should be.

The object of penitentiaries is I suppose two-fold; first, to protect society by taking out of society those who are harmful to it and, second, to reform the criminal, making it safe for him to return to society again. The old idea of putting people in a place of confinement was one of revenge; that is, the state took upon itself the duty or task of revenging the wrong done. This idea has been gradually changing until now we think of a penitentiary as a place where people are reformed so as to be made fit again to come out into society. I should not like to say that punishment does not enter into the reform of the criminal. I think it does; I think it is just that it should. Possibly the most terrible punishment that can come to anyone is to have no freedom, to be confined, not to be able to move among one's fellows as one would wish. This terrifying punishment is the prisoner's and always will be. It is true, however, that the state should be above revenge.

The committee of three appointed under the Right Hon. C. J. Doherty to advise upon the revision of penitentiary regulations and the Penitentiary Act went into this question fully, and presented a report in which they state that the Penitentiary Act has not been changed for a very long time. They say:

The Penitentiary Act has from time to time been repealed and re-enacted and some of its provisions from time to time amended, but the present statute does not substantially differ from that passed in 1868.

There has been a great change in the public mind regarding the treatment of prisoners, regarding, indeed, what is meant by punishment and penitentiaries, but the act has not been changed so as to keep pace with changing public opinion. All that is said in the present act in regard to what I am advocating, namely, productive work for prisoners with pay, is said on page 17:

Section 62. Imprisonment in a penitentiary shall be with hard labour, whether so directed in the sentence by which such imprisonment is adjudged or not.

Paragraph 3 of the same section reads:

The convicts may be employed in labour under the control of the crown; but no labour shall be let out to any company or person.

The provision was a wise one that no labour should be let out to any company or person. But while convicts may be employed under the existing administration of penitentiaries, they are not employed in productive labour to the extent at least that those who are in charge of them would like. In regard to the pay of prisoners, the present act states that when a man is freed and leaves the penitentiary he is——furnished with a suit of clothing other than prison clothing, and with transportation to the place at which he received his sentence, and such other sum in addition, not exceeding ten dollars, as the warden deems proper.

That is all the provision that is made in the present act for productive employment with pay for prisoners. Inasmuch as this report prepared under the direction of the Right Hon. C. J. Doherty was exhaustive and was made with a view to amending the administration of penitentiaries and the act itself, we should put a good deal of reliance upon it. This report emphatically recommends that prisoners be given work and be paid for their labour. On page 21 of the report, after leading up to this conclusion, they say:

The committee, therefore, most emphatically recommends statutory provision to provide productive labour for all convicts. Such provision need not extend to any work except for what is known as "state use" and can, in Canada, not extend any compulsion beyond the federal service, but the evidence taken by the committee has satisfied it that manufactures within this limitation will afford much more than ample scope for all the industry and activity which the penitentiaries can put forth.

Further down on page 21 with regard to pay they say:

The mere provision of work is not, in the opinion of the committee, sufficient. That the heaviest penalty for a crime is paid not by the criminal, but by his dependents has been chiefly emphasized before the committee, not by philanthropists and charitable workers but by judicial, police and penitentiary officers of long standing. Their views are based upon the unfortunate and expensive social consequences of the pauperization of decent women and children, upon the destruction of the convict's sole anchor holding him to decency of conduct after discharge.

I need not read all the report. It concludes:

If anything but evil is to follow punishment by imprisonment for long terms, it is, in the opinion of the committee, essential that such provision should be made as will allow the convict to earn at least something towards the support of his dependents during his confinement or of himself after his release.

[Miss Macphail.]

I will give briefly a list of associations that I know of that favour this or a similar resolution, or at least this principle:

The Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association; General Secretary, John Kidman, Montreal.

The Child Welfare Bureau of Canada; Secretary, Charlotte Whitton.

Neighbourhood Workers' Associations—79 organizations in the city of Toronto; Secretary, F. N. Stapleford.

The Trades and Labour Council of Canada.

The United Farmers of Ontario.

Superintendent of Penitentiaries, Brigadier-General Hughes.

The wardens of all the penitentiaries.

Canadian Bar Association.

Committee of three appointed under the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty.

So we see that those who are most interested, not only in the welfare of prisoners, not only in the protection of society, but in the welfare of the women and children that are left helplessly upon society, are recommending that this step be taken at this time by the government.

I am going to quote briefly from the report of 1921 by the Superintendent of Penitentiaries, Brigadier-General Hughes:

The inmates of the penitentiaries are the wards of the Dominion government and there is no valid reason why goods required for state use, and state use only, should not be made, as far as possible, in the penitentiaries. The government spends many thousands of dollars yearly for furniture, furnishing, and equipment of various kinds, a small portion of which could be made in the penitentiaries. The revenue derived from this source would enable the institutions to pay each inmate on his discharge, or to his family while he is in prison, a small wage, which would materially assist the stricken family in keeping the wolf from the door while the wage-earner is incarcerated; or, in case the inmate had no family responsibilities, would furnish him with sufficient funds on discharge to assist him in making a fresh start in life.

The Superintendent of Penitentitaries goes on to point out that he has recommended the same thing in his reports of 1896, 1897, 1905, 1909, 1913, 1914, and 1915; I have read the reports of 1919, 1921, and 1923, and he has continued to ask for this thing which up to the present has not been granted.

One could quote in a way that might weary the House from the reports of the superintendent and from the reports of the wardens of the penitentiaries, the different wardens asking that work be provided for the prisoners under their charge. The situation is not as difficult in a pentitentiary where building is still going on, where the prisoners can be employed in building their own prison. The men are kept at work; they are more contented, and the duty of keeping them in order is a simpler one although it is true they do not get any pay for the work that they do.

I quoted last year, and I do not intend to repeat it this year, various authorities on prisons and prisoners in different countries throughout the world, and they are in absolute agreement that you cannot reform a prisoner unless you keep him busy and contented. They are in agreement that it is a very bad thing to break the most tender link, if there is any tenderness and human feeling left in him, that binds the prisoner to his home. As it is, this link is ruthlessly broken. It is felt that this is the worst thing that can happen to the prisoner, his dependents and society as a whole.

There is a general feeling among social workers that it is unwise to release prisoners, whether men or women, from the responsibility of their families. In the case of men there is a tendency not to want again to assume that responsibility, and the effect on the families themselves is injurious. The wives and children are often left absolutely destitute, the children being forced out into the streets where they become criminals. This would not happen if they had enough money to keep them at home where they could be brought up by mothers who, in some cases at any rate, are very far from criminal in type.

I should think that there would be a strong tendency toward embittering the whole family by the treatment which it now receives in consequence of the breadwinner being sent to prison. The family is innocent of any offence and yet it is called upon to bear the brunt of the burden. This, I am sure, cannot inspire them with any great respect for the law or for society at large. But you may look at the matter in another light: why should hard working people be asked to pay to keep prisoners in idleness, and to support their families who have no means of helping themselves? Those of us who for the time being at least are out of prison have to bear the expense of keeping the whole family unit in two different places in a manner that is exceedingly expensive to us and quite disastrous to the family.

I believe that work would make for discipline, which possibly is one of the grave problems in the conduct of prisons at present. Work would render prison discipline much easier than it can be where the prisoners are in idleness. As a matter of fact, good behaviour where there is no work is not possible. The objection that is usually made to this reform which I am asking for is that labour is opposed to it; labour is opposed to prisoners putting the product of their toil upon even a restricted market such as might be afforded by the state. But that objection will no longer hold. In 1920 the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada at its annual convention held in Windsor between the 13th and 18th September asked for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the administration of prisons, and requested that labour be given a place on that committee. The committee was appointed and labour was included on it, Mr. Biggar being its representative on a body of three. Labour in 1924, at the annual meeting of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada held in London between September 15 and 19, endorsed not only this principle contained in the report, but the entire report, and asked parliament to pass an act to give effect to such prison reform as was recommended in the report of the special advisory committee on Prison Reform of 1921. So that labour, as such, does not object to this reform.

The cost of penitentiaries in Canada for the year 1923 was $1,441,900.93: the cost of a conviction is $1,200. Now, by giving the prisoner work you would help him to make a more harmonious adjustment to life upon his release and to some extent, at any rate, prevent a recurrence of conviction. If we can do that we shall effect a saving. If, too, the productive work is increased until such time as the prisoners earn enough to keep themselves, we shall lift from the state the burden of this sum of money which must be voted by the tax-payers from year to year, amounting to approximately a million and a half.

Before this resolution came up last year I received a letter from Brigadier General Hughes. He said:

> I note with pleasure, from parliamentary publications, that you have given notice of a motion regarding the providing of work in the penitentiaries. While the revenue from this source has been increased from $53,000 to $167,000, we are still only doing about one-tenth of what we are capable of undertaking.

In conversation with Brigadier General Hughes I judged that, with the equipment they now have, if they could get work for the prisoners to do they could accomplish nine-tenths more than they are able to perform now.

The mayors of our cities and towns and the reeves of the various municipalities often find themselves in a quandary. They have the prisoner's family on their hands. The breadwinner is in prison where possibly he ought to be, and the head of the municipality, while he does not want to interfere with justice, while he does not want the man at large if prison is the proper place for him, dislikes on the other hand having to shoulder the burden of supporting the family. In fact, too often prisoners are released, not because they are ready once more to enter society as good citizens, or because their time has expired, but simply because pressure has been brought to bear upon the authorities to have them released so that they may take up again the task of caring for their families.

This proposal of providing productive work for prisoners, with pay, has been successfully tried in Jackson penitentiary, Michigan, as well as in Minnesota. These are the two outstanding successes. The plan has also been tried in New Jersey and New York. Let me quote from my speech of last year: Mr. Vasaly, speaking for the Minnesota Penitentiary Board says:

> In the first place, our prison earns its support; it saves the state something like $360,000 a year in that respect.

Reading later reports I find that they provided a large sum, described as a revolving fund, of some $6,000,000 with which they buy the raw materials required for their work. This officer was very much pleased with the success of the plan and he writes:

> In that connection let me say that I know of no greater aid to prison discipline than wages. . . The prisoner is contented, first of all, because he is working. He is contented because he is earning something for his family. These things put together have great effect on discipline and make the prisoners more content and make them feel much more hopeful than they could otherwise be. It seems to me any system of prison labour, no matter what it may be, that does not take into account that side of things, the creation of contentment and hopefulness in the prisoner, not only with regard to himself but his family. is a mistake.

In the year ending June 30, 1917, Jackson penitentiary had made a net profit of $156,000 after paying all expenses of the institution and making proper allowances for depreciation on buildings and machinery, paying wages to the inmates and providing food, clothing and other necessities.

Mr. NEILL: What rate of wages was paid?

Miss MACPHAIL: The wages ranged from ten cents to $1.50, to which must be added cost of shelter, food, clothing, medical attendance, chemistry, and so on.

Mr. HAMILTON: What proportion of the prisoners who have received, either through parole or otherwise, treatment which can be considered kindly, have returned to the penitentiaries after release? Has the hon. member any record of that?

Miss MACPHAIL: That information can be got from any superintendent's report. But the fact is that recurrent convictions are diminishing as time goes on. I do not recall it at the moment. However, the recurrence of convictions is lessening as time goes on possibly on account of the more humane methods of treating prisoners.

I do not want to dwell on this subject any longer. I appeal to the House to pass this resolution; I do not want six o'clock to arrive with the motion still undisposed of. Personally I am not interested in the resolution because I am going to do my utmost to avoid ever being placed in such a position as to need its provisions. But I do think that I can appeal to all hon. gentlemen to support this resolution on the grounds of economy, humanity, and common sense. Everybody conversant with the subject desires to see this policy caried out, and I see no reason why those who may not be as familiar with it should object to the realization of the desired end. It seems to me that our duty in the matter is obvious, and that we have the privilege this afternoon of demonstrating that we are as wise as our constituents conceive us to be. I hope that we shall all live up to that high standard by supporting this resolution.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): The few remarks I have to make will not I think offer any obstacle to the passage of the resolution this afternoon. Some years ago it was my privilege as a member of this House in consequence of certain reports that were brought to me to ask for an investigation into the conditions at the Portsmouth penitentiary. Because of that I had an opportunity to visit that institution and to estimate for myself the conditions as they prevailed at that time and I take a great deal of satisfaction in the fact that as a result of the investigation then made, very much-needed reforms resulted which took away from the people of Canada the reproach of continuing practices which were a disgrace absolutely to any civilized people.

There is, perhaps, no person so good as to have no bad in him. On the other hand, there is no person so bad as to be absolutely devoid of good. I encountered a striking instance of that, which I recorded on the pages of Hansard some year ago. I had made an application to the then Minister of Justice for the release of a prisoner who had been sentenced to imprisonment for life, on the condition that he would immediately go overseas. The family from which this convict came was highly respected and this man was the only black sheep of that family. But after several years' confinement in the institution—during which time he had the opportunity, I believe, of saving the life of at least one of the guards who was attacked by a fellow-convict, and, perhaps the life of another—his brother having gone overseas and made a good record and come back in shattered and broken health, this convict conceived the idea of trying to wipe out his past by doing something which would be creditable to himself and to the family to which he belonged. That man was given the opportunity to go overseas, and whenever any dangerous task was to be performed he asked for the privilege of taking the risk. While overseas he gave up his life, and I received later a number of letters stating that the regiment to which he belonged gave this ex-convict all the honours they could accord him in his burial, firing a salute over his grave, and holding impressive funeral services. I cite that instance to show, Sir, that no matter how unenviable may be the light in which society regards a man, the worst individual has in him some element of good if those in charge of our penal institutions only had the tact and good judgment to bring that good to the surface.

I have had the opportunity on many occasions of going to the penitentiary at Portsmouth, which is very close to the constituency I have the honour to represent, and I have noticed this fact: Those convicts who were engaged in such work as making boots, or brooms, or clothing—in fact, any work which required some activity of the mind—had an entirely different appearance from the men who were sitting on a block of wood from day to day breaking stone. One could not help being struck at once with the difference in the appearance of the two classes of men. There was some glimmer of intelligence in the eyes of those performing work demanding some mental activity; there was a deadness in the eyes and general appearance of the men who were doing nothing but breaking stone. In the crushing or breaking of those stones the convict had a task which held no attraction for him and in which he could see no result. He was not only breaking stone but he was breaking his own health, and what was of more importance, in my judgment, he was crushing his mental and moral fibre as effectively as he was crushing into dust the limestone that he hammered.

I believe this resolution is along the right lines. As the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) has indicated, it is not a new matter; it has been under consideration both in this House and in the country on various occasions. I see no reason why these convicts should not be engaged in productive work and paid at a rate of wages on a sliding scale. I can conceive that even though the man is behind prison walls there is still a tie which unites him with the outside world—perhaps the only one that is left—namely, love for his home and family. And under our boasted civilization that family is forced to bear the burden of the convict's crime. To me that is the greatest tragedy of all. We feel that the man who is incarcerated because of his own misdeeds deserves the punishment awarded to him; but there is no one who does not feel that when that punishment reacts on the innocent wife and children there is something wrong with the conditions which make such a thing possible. Such a result may be inevitable, but it is not impossible for us to ameliorate those conditions so far as regards the wife and family. It is quite possible, within reasonable limits, to bring about that amelioration, and I submit that it is our bounden duty as civilized human beings who are desirous of doing the right thing to take the necessary steps toward that end.

It seems to me that a great many things required by the state might very well be standardized and produced by prison labour. Some good would flow from that, even if it resulted in nothing else than the taking out of the hands of officials the initiative in furnishing their own offices. For we observe that whereas some officials furnish their own offices reasonably and decently and at moderate expense to the public, others do so on a scale which would seen to indicate that they thought the public treasury was inexhaustible. I see no reason why one man sitting in an office should have a mahogany table while another man has a table made out of Canadian pine or maple. You can write just as well on the one as you can on the other. There are many things required by the state which could be produced by prison labour, and a rate of wages might be set on a sliding scale, which would be an inducement to the prisoner to conduct himself properly within the walls of the institution. A man might start, we will say, at 10 cents, 15 cents or 25 cents a day and be told that as his conduct warranted it that rate would be increased by 10 per cent, 15 per cent or 20 per cent, to the extent that he was endeavouring to make some provision for those dependent upon him. Under those conditions, I venture to say that his conduct would become very much better. Not only that, but I presume it is in the mind of every convict that while perhaps he is being justly punished for his misdeeds, there is an element of injustice in that his family are obliged to suffer; that the state in punishing him—which punishment is warranted—is doing a wrong in carrying that punishment on so that it falls upon his wife and children.

I would like to see something done along this line. I believe it is in the right direction, and I merely wish, Mr. Speaker, without taking up any further time, to give my very strong support to the resolution proposed. I daresay it can be worked out by the government and the heads of the departments in such a way as not to harm the industries of the country, but rather to result in much good to the convicts and to their dependents.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I supported a similar resolution last year, Mr. Speaker, and I am pleased to give my support again this year. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) for having brought this subject before the House; there can be no worthier subject for our consideration. There is no doubt that work must be given to the convicts in our penitentiaries; nothing could be worse than idleness, and if we give them work, I entirely agree with the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) that such work should be productive. The idea of former times, which was to force prisoners to break stones, I can only characterize as being stupid and very dangerous to the their well being. It was an idea which surely could not conduce to any reform, and after all reform should be the main idea with regard to convicts.

As my hon. friend said, the work could be done especially to meet government needs. At present, on account of the dilapidated condition of the buildings in most of the penitentiaries—with the exception of the Saskatchewan penitentiary, which is a new building—a fair portion of the inmates will be employed for some years to come in reconstructing, remodelling and repairing the buildings. For many years prior to 1919 very little work in the way of repairs was done to these buildings. As a matter of fact, only last week the warden of the Manitoba penitentiary asked that convicts be transferred to that institution on account of the large amount of work to be done in reconstruction. At the same time the warden of the Kingston penitentiary reported that he had not sufficient shop room to enable him to employ the number of inmates then confined there, and that from 75 to 100 of them might be removed to another institution. This we have done; 80 convicts have been transferred to the Manitoba penitentiary, where there is work for them.

We should have enough revenue-producing work to employ the inmates for whom employment cannot be found at reconstruction, but of course this must be done gradually.

I may say that this is the policy I intend to carry on so long as I am at the head of this department. The additional work must be taken on gradually, as shops can be remodelled and equipped with the necessary machinery. It is deemed advisable, of course, not to attempt too much until the institutions are prepared for the work. As the hon. member who moved this resolution indicated, improvements have already been made in that direction; there is a revenue of over $160,000 yearly from penitentiaries.

Until 1888 I think contract work was carried on, but this has now been abolished. Prior to 1921 organized labour as a rule was opposed to work being done in the penitentiaries which might compete with free labour, even for the use of the departments of the government, but that opinion has been changed. Only this morning the government received a delegation from the Trades and Labour Council of Canada, and one of the requests made by that delegation was that the conclusions contained in the report of 1921 should be adopted and carried out. They believe that so far as the needs of the government are concerned, the work might well be done by the prisoners. After this question was discussed here last year, the secretary of the Garment Manufacturers' Association wrote me—I think it was Mr. Sparks—objecting to the idea of having uniforms made in the penitentiaries, even for government use. I called to his attention a resolution passed by the garment manufacturers of the United States who, while opposing the prison manufacture of garments which would compete on the market with free labour, had no objection to the manufacture of uniforms for the use of officers of the various departments. I indicated last year what was being done in the penitentiaries, and what work could be done. I might perhaps state the classes of goods which might easily be made in our penitentiaries, and for which it would be very easy to have the necessary equipment:

All classes of canvas goods, such as tents, tarpaulins, flies, nose-bags, water pails, packs of all descriptions, and so on; furniture of all descriptions, in wood; all classes of galvanized iron and tin goods; clothing and the manufacture of uniforms—military, mounted police and other such; leather goods, including harness; bookbinding; boots and shoes; hickory handles of all descriptions; blacksmith shop work; machine shop work; stone cutting; broom making, and so forth.

As I said, if all the departments of the government were giving orders for such articles, it would be an easy matter to keep the population in our penitentiaries busy. In the United States there is some co-operation between some of the states by which one state will give orders to the penitentiary of another state for special work, and in Canada I believe it might be possible to come to some agreement with the provinces whereby the provinces might give orders to our penitentiaries for articles which they require for their own departments.

As to remuneration, this is a very important question. I believe a way might be found to give some reward to hard-working convicts who have a record of good behaviour in the penitentiary. There is no doubt that the lure of gain or the hope of some improvement in their situation would be an incentive to good behaviour and to work. Of course, a certain amount would have to be kept by the state, representing the expenditure to which the state was put for the upkeep of the convict, but a little might be set aside not only for the dependents of the convict but for the convict himself, because I am rather of the opinion that it is hard after having kept a man in penitentiary for six or seven or ten years to put him out on the street at the end of that time with only a suit of clothes and five dollars in his pocket, as we do at the present time. If he has reformed and wants to try to lead a good life henceforth, it is rather hard not to provide him with a little money to enable him to look around and live for a few days at least before he can find some work to do. This could be done by giving some remuneration to the well-behaved prisoners, and such a system would provide us with the best kind of punishment, I think, because when a man had done something for which he deserves punishment a fine might be imposed and deducted from the amount which he would have to his credit. This would be better than those punishments to which we have to resort at the present time. There is no need to talk of big sums at all. After the deductions are made for the cost of the convict's maintenance in the penitentiary and for any fines which may have been incurred—and also for tobacco; because the convict is allowed to smoke in some of the penitentiaries, at least in the United States, at certain times—there would not be left a very great sum, but the amount would be very useful to the convict when he comes out of the penitentiary.

There is another thing which is not made the subject of the resolution, but to which I am giving a good deal of thought, and that is the possibility of segregating the young convicts who are sentenced for the first time. Under present conditions they are mixed up with the hardened criminals, and that does not give them a chance. If we could find a way to build a special institution, or even two institutions, for the purpose of receiving and keeping these young men, rather than put them with the hardened criminals, I think that would be a good reform to undertake.

As I said at the beginning, I am strongly in favour of the principle embodied in this resolution. I shall certainly vote for it, and I hope the House will.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS OF EGGS

PROPOSED TARIFF INCREASE ON UNITED STATES PRODUCT

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay) moved:

Whereas the low duty of three cents per dozen on eggs entering Canada from the United States and the entry of Australian eggs free of duty, encourages the importation of storage eggs, thereby creating unprofitable conditions and unjust competition for Canadian poultrymen, and

Whereas the entry of Canadian eggs to the United States is prevented by reason of a tariff of eight cents per dozen, this House is of the opinion that the welfare of Canadian poultrymen will be fostered by placing a duty on United States eggs entering Canada, equal to that on Canadian eggs entering the United States.

He said: Mr. Speaker, representing a constituency which is very much concerned in advancing the poultry industry, I wish to say a word on this resolution. The basic principle of the resolution is the encouragement of the poultry industry in Canada by protection against unfair and unjust competition occasioned by the dumping of the products of foreign countries, particularly the United States, into this country by reason of the low duty of three cents a dozen, and protection also against Chinese eggs shipped into Canada, not only in shell, but in bulk, and against Australian and New Zealand eggs which now come into Canada absolutely free of duty under the Australian treaty, which went into operation in October last.

Perhaps the greatest menace in connection with this question is the vast quantity of cold storage eggs imported into Canada from the United States at the very low duty of three cents per dozen. These eggs are purchased in the southern states at the height of the season at a cost of ten, twelve and fifteen cents per dozen; they are placed in cold storage, kept there for several months, and at the time when the Canadian poultryman hopes to realize something in return for his expenditure and his efforts, he finds he is confronted with a serious problem on account of the dumping into Canada of these vast quantities of eggs from the United States. We have in Canada grading and marking regulations, in British Columbia particularly, and these may be evaded or criticized. The fact remains that the only effective measure to encourage the poultry industry is a protective duty which will give the Canadian producer the benefit of his own market.

In British Columbia we have probably advanced beyond any of the other provinces by reason of the fact that we have an eggs marking act. Neither British Columbia nor any other province can protect its poultrymen by the imposition of a duty or a tariff, but in British Columbia we went this far—and of course it was a Conservative government which took the step—back in 1916 the Conservative government of the province placed on the statute book an egg marking act, which provided that all eggs imported from a foreign country must be marked; each egg must be stamped as the product of such and such a country. The result is that we in British Columbia are not hampered by our producers being forced to enter into competition with eggs imported from China. The distribution and the use of Chinese eggs, therefore, or rather the monopoly, is confined almost entirely to the prairie provinces, to Quebec and some of the eastern provinces.

These Chinese eggs are imported not only in the shell, but in tin containers, buckets and barrels. They are frozen hard, brought into Canada, and put in storage until an opportune time arrives for placing them on the market in competition with other eggs. They are used, of course, in the different bakeries, in the extensive line of cheap restaurants, and for confectionery and colouring purposes generally. These eggs have been scrambled in China, so that my friends from Montreal, when they go into a restaurant and order an omelet, do not know whether they are getting Chinese eggs or eggs of very much older vintage than they imagine. But the marking acts do not prevent the dumping of United States eggs under a tariff of three cents per dozen, or the dumping of Australian or New Zealand eggs which are to come in duty free. I think we ought to realize fully the importance of this resolution, because it simply means that every case of eggs imported into Canada discourages to that extent the production and business of our own Canadian poultry men.

In order to show the enormity of these importations, I may point out that in the calendar year 1925 we imported 2½ million dozen eggs from the United States and 150,000 dozen from China, Japan and other countries. As my hon. colleague from Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) pointed out in his address earlier in the session, the consumption of eggs in Canada is ten foreign eggs to one Canadian egg. From that statement we can realize the extent to which the poultry industry is being jeopardized. This accumulation of United States eggs purchased in the southern states at the height of the season at ten, twelve and fifteen cents a dozen, is at an opportune time dumped upon the Canadian market. Hon. members will observe from statistics that they do not come in during the whole year, but principally during the first three months of the year. In the last nine months of 1925 there were 125,000 dozen eggs brought in from the United States, while during the first three months the total import was 2,451,860 dozen; so hon. members can see that they take the opportunity to dump them into Canada at a time when they will be in greater competition with our own producers. Then we have the bulk and the frozen eggs from China and other countries, which in 1925 amounted to 1,507,000 pounds. Those bulk and frozen eggs come into Canada by the pound, not by the dozen. During the first three months of 1926 we have imported already from the United States, at the low duty of three cents a dozen, 2,620,000 dozen eggs, and from China, 241,000 pounds or 400,000 dozen. There again we have an emphatic illustration of the injury which this dumping of low grade storage eggs is doing to the production of the Canadian poultrymen.

The government is taking measures to encourage immigration, and we are clamouring for more people to go on the land. We are urging intensive farming, and certainly poultry raising is a very important branch of farming. We look upon farming as the backbone of the country, yet by actually discouraging one of the very important branches of farming we are really breaking that backbone. In January last a meeting of the provincial poultry association was held in Victoria, at which more than a hundred members were present, and a resolution was passed and transmitted to the Minister of Agriculture, urging that the federal government be requested, as an act of justice, to do something to provide a remedy. In all these resolutions passed in western Canada we usually find the request that, as an act of justice to the poultrymen, the duty on eggs be raised sufficiently to make it equivalent to the duty on Canadian eggs going into the United States.

Then in August last, at Des Moines, Iowa, there was a meeting of the National Association of Poultrymen, which was attended by the Canadian representative, Mr. J. B. Martin. I notice that Mr. Martin, in his address to the association, made this statement:

The dumping of low grade United States eggs, on the Canadian market, brought about by the low tariff of three cents per dozen, was one difficulty the Canadian poultryman found. Producers in Canada were demanding that this be raised to eight cents and no doubt this would be done in the near future as a mere act of justice.

I regret that the hon. member for Fraser Valley, being at present under the care of a physician, is not here to-day, because this is a matter of vital interest to his district, also, and I know he would contribute much interesting information on the subject. I hope, however, for some sympathy from the other side of the House, and especially do I hope for that of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). We have his pronounced views on this matter; as reported on page 908 of Hansard he admits the principle of protection, and says:

I think it extremely unjust and one-sided that we should have to compete with an eight cents per dozen duty on eggs going into the United States from Canada, when eggs coming into Canada from the United States pay a duty of only three cents a dozen. If we have protection I want to see it provided all round and not to have it centred on a few industries in Ontario. I want to see it applied to British Columbia.

So do all of us from British Columbia want to see the principle of protection applied to all industries in that province; and that was the issue in the last election in Comox-Alberni as well as in all other parts of the province. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni admitted that, because on the same page of Hansard he made this statement—and we must remember that this is our independent member from British Columbia:

I promised my constituents. . . I would vote for an increase in the duty on eggs coming from the United States. I attached a proviso to it. . . that it should not be wrapped up with a vote of want of confidence. If the proposition is made as a clear, separate issue, I am quite prepared to vote in favour of it.

This is a clear and separate issue. It is for the purpose of encouraging the poultry industry in Canada. It is a vital factor in connection with the farm. We are spending a vast sum to bring settlers to Canada; the government are urging that the great need of this country is immigration; they want to fill up the land, and yet they are placing an obstacle in the path of the man whom they are inviting to go on that land. In view of the utterances of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and as we must have the sympathy of some hon. members on the other side—I know we have the sympathy of all members on this side, including my Progressive friends—I hope the House will give careful consideration to, and vote in favour of, this resolution.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should be surprised if a motion of this importance should pass with only one speaker from the other side of the House. My hon. friend who moves the resolution (Mr. Esling) referred to Australian eggs coming in. No Australian eggs have come in so far. As regards United States eggs coming in, the number has decreased, according to the latest official annual government returns, from six million to two million dozen per annum. The hon. member says that the only effective measure of dealing with the well known slump in the egg industry in British Columbia is by this measure of protection that he advocates. I would point out that the organization under whose auspices the meeting from which he quoted was conducted used this language in a letter which I quoted the other day:

The Board of Directors and management of this association are of the opinion, and very strongly of the opinion at that, that the Eggs Marks Act is a much better form of protection than 5 cents extra duty, at the same time we believe that if the act was a federal measure instead of a provincial one, it would have a better chance, etc.

And so on. I would suggest another measure that would also be a great benefit to the poultry industry, more possibly than even the one that the hon. member is now advocating, and that is the adjustment of freight rates on wheat. I alluded to this in the same speech from which my hon. friend quoted. I do not want to go into that issue to-day; but as I mentioned before, freight rates on wheat for export from the prairies to Vancouver have been twice reduced within the last eighteen months or two years, and on neither occasion was the domestic rate on wheat for use by poultrymen in British Columbia reduced at all. Therefore, even if the discrimination was just before then—and I do not admit it was—it cannot be now because the export rate has been reduced twice and the old domestic rate remains on wheat for chickens which is, of course, of lower quality; while the export wheat is of the highest quality. It is cheaper to buy wheat of the same grade in China than in Vancouver.

The hon. member, of course, had to give his resolution a political aspect by going back to the Eggs Marks Act of British Columbia which he said was passed during the regime of the Conservative party there, and giving his party credit therefor. I think he might have left that out, owing to this fact that while there was an act passed, presumably during that period, it was not as beneficial and as effective as the present act which was passed in 1923. The old act to which he alluded—I take his word for it that it was passed then—demanded or required principally that egg containers should have marked upon them the country of origin. While that is good so far as it goes, it was found to be of very little practical effect. For instance, a woman would go into a store and ask for a dozen eggs, and the man would go behind the counter or to the back of the store and take eggs out of a case marked Chinese or United States eggs. The customer would not see the container; the man would put the eggs in a bag and the customer would take them away. The provision was found, therefore, to be of very little use. I do not think the present act was due to Liberalism at all; I am not going to suggest any credit in that regard. It was the pressure and insistence of the poultrymen of British Columbia that led the government, which happened to be Liberal, introducing and having passed the present Eggs Marks Act, which requires each particular egg to have stamped on it the country of origin. That is a totally different thing, and poultrymen agree that it has been of tremendous advantage in British Columbia. It was that reason that led me to introduce the resolution which I brought in the other day to extend the benefits of this act to the whole of the Dominion.

My hon. friend wasted a great deal of ammunition on my humble self by quoting extracts from my speech in order to demand my sympathy and support for this resolution. He need not have worried; my sympathies are entirely with the resolution. I do not need to be reminded of former remarks I made in this House or elsewhere to be compelled to manifest that interest. I will certainly vote for the hon. member's motion, but I think his advice, his admonition and his demand for sympathy would have been better expressed to his own party friends the other night when I had before the House a resolution in regard to the Eggs Marking Act, which resolution only two hon. gentlemen opposite supported, while others opposed it. I lacked then even from himself that expression of sympathy which the hon. member now demands from me, and I was advocating on that occasion a resolution which this association in British Columbia say they regard as more important even than an increase of five cents a dozen in the duty. However, as regards its main aspects I am entirely in favour of the resolution and I earnestly hope that it will be adopted and carried into effect.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): The first part of the resolution reads:

Whereas the low duty of three cents per dozen on eggs entering Canada from the United States and the entry of Australian eggs free of duty, encourages the importation of storage eggs, thereby creating unprofitable conditions and unjust competition for Canadian poultrymen, and—

That is an allegation of fact which my hon. friend is scarcely able to prove. As a matter of fact, no eggs have come in from Australia or New Zealand since the treaty went into effect.

Mr. ESLING: Are Australian eggs not permitted to enter Canada absolutely free, whereas they have a barrier of 18 cents a dozen against us? There is nothing to prevent them from sending eggs into Canada when they are ready.

Mr. ROBB: It would not make any difference if Australia had a duty of a dollar a dozen on eggs, for the fact is that eggs will not come into Canada from that country. Nor have any eggs entered Canada from Australia and New Zealand for some years.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. ROBB: The most recent importation of eggs in any quantity from New Zealand and Australia amounted, in the year 1921, to $6,844 from New Zealand and in 1922 $13,917 from Australia. Australia has a very limited quantity of eggs to export, and what eggs it does ship out are sent to the United Kingdom, which is also Canada's market. The fact is that Australia is an importer of eggs. The figures for the past five years show that 92 per cent of the eggs imported into Australia have come from China, while the bulk of the eggs exported from Australia come from New South Wales. The 1925 Year Book of the Commonwealth of Australia reports that in the fiscal year 1923 the exports of eggs from that country totalled 1,236,000 dozen and in 1924, 655,000 dozen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What were the imports?

Mr. ROBB: I have not the imports.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Almost nothing.

Mr. ROBB: I am quoting the exports. The second half of the resolution reads:

Whereas the entry of Canadian eggs to the United States is prevented by reason of a tariff of eight cents per dozen, this House is of the opinion that the welfare of Canadian poultrymen will be fostered by placing a duty on United States eggs entering Canada, equal to that on Canadian eggs entering the United States.

My hon. friend appears to argue that because the entry of Canadian eggs into the United States is prevented by reason of a tariff of eight cents, Canada is injured in consequence. But he seems to forget that the United States is itself an egg-exporting country. There again I submit he is not on very sound ground. The development of the egg industry depends largely upon the ability of the producer to sell fresh eggs, because fresh eggs receive the highest prices. The records show that the people of Canada are the greatest consumers of eggs in the world. In 1901 our average consumption per capita was 190 eggs, while in 1924 it was 313. For that reason, when considering the condition of the egg business, we must bear in mind both the producer and the consumer. The greater part of our imports of eggs in the shell come from the United States, and these importations take place during the winter months. The following table shows our imports from the United States.

Calendar year	Dozen
1925..	2,577,400

The hon. member will observe that our exports have dropped almost two-thirds. The figures I have just quoted will bear out the statement of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) that our importations have been declining from year to year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Can the minister give us the importations for the three months of the present year?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is over-hasty. He will have the floor in a few minutes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I thought the minister could give those figures to compare with the others.

Mr. ROBB: The greater part of these importations come in during the months of December, January, February and March.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Just when our prices should be highest.

Mr. ROBB: Has my hon. friend no regard for the consumer? The total importations throughout the year from the United States I have already given, and if hon. gentlemen will place alongside those figures the importations during the winter months, they will observe that what I have stated is correct, namely, that the bulk of those eggs come in during the four months I have mentioned. The following table will show this:

Year (Calendar)	Total U.S. imports Dozen	Winter imports from U.S. Dozen
1925..	2,577,400	2,484,993

My hon. friend from South Oxford wants me to give him the recent importations. The most recent figures we have are for the nine months ending December last. The imports during those nine months were 125,540 dozen, and during the same period we exported 2,425,643 dozen mostly to the United Kingdom.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Were those exports to the United States?

Mr. ROBB: To the United Kingdom mostly.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister gave the imports from the United States into Canada for certain years. Has he the figures there to complete the statement by giving our exports to the United States during the same period?

Mr. ROBB: What difference does it make where we export our eggs—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I asked if the minister had the figures there to give. If he has not got them all he need do is to say so.

Mr. ROBB: What difference does it make where we sell our products if we sell them in the highest market and get the highest price for them? That is certainly what we are out for.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My object was to find out if the minister could give our exports of eggs to the United States for the years he mentioned. That may not be of any importance to the minister but it is of some importance to me or I would not have asked the question.

Mr. ROBB: What occurs to me is that Canada is out to sell her eggs in the market in which she can get the highest price. As I say, during that period—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister permit me to ask a question?

Mr. ROBB: In a moment. Let me repeat that in those nine months we imported 125,540 dozen eggs from the United States and we exported 2,425,643 dozen to the markets of the world. Most of those exports went to the United Kingdom.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If it does not matter where we sell our eggs why was the minister so particular to tell us where we buy them?

Mr. ROBB: Because the hon. gentleman raised that question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member raised the question but the minister would not give him the information.

Mr. ROBB: I did not have the information. My hon. friend knows very well that if I had the information I would be very glad to give it to him.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I suggest that if such is the case the minister might have said so.

Mr. ROBB: I have nothing more to say.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do not say the matter is of no importance.

Mr. ROBB: I will admit with my hon. friend (Mr. Esling) that the industry is of considerable importance in Canada. In 1924 the total production of eggs in the Dominion was 212,648,685 dozen. During that year we imported from the United States 4,920,819 dozen. In 1925 our production of eggs increased. I suppose it was owing to the good policy of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture. In that year the production of eggs amounted to 224,778,867 dozen, and the imports from the United States had dropped to the extent almost of one-half from the imports of 1924—they had dropped to 2,577,400 dozen. In other words, our imports from the United States in 1924 amounted to just about 2.3 per cent of the production of eggs in Canada. Under the circumstances I submit there is no justification for the resolution. I contend that my hon. friend has not made out a case to warrant us in following the policy of the United States. We are exporters of eggs as well as importers, and the export trade of the country is worth considering.

Mr. BOYS: Can the minister inform the House what the importation of eggs has been for the last three or four years? If my memory serves me correctly since 1921 over 30,000,000 dozen eggs have been imported into Canada.

Mr. ROBB: I have no other figures than those I gave a few moments ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are not very conclusive.

Mr. ROBB: I will admit at once that our imports are largely from the United States because it is the nearest country to us, I imagine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What conclusion can be drawn from the figures that only give the imports from one country, and the minister who assumes to answer for the government has not the figures with him to tell what other imports there are?

Mr. ROBB: I imagine this discussion is quite out of order. I have been following the lines laid down in the resolution. What my hon. friend (Mr. Esling) complains of is the United States duty, and in my remarks in reply I have adhered strictly to the terms of the resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The resolution calls for an increase in the duty all round.

Mr. W. F. GARLAND (Carleton): I am in sympathy with the resolution. It is true that there have been no importations of eggs from Australia, but that does not denote that there will not be any. The minister has stated that Australia imports eggs. That being the case there was a splendid chance to help our poultrymen when the Australian treaty was being negotiated.

Mr. ROBB: I do not like to interrupt the speech of my hon. friend but the Australian is no more ready to buy eggs that are seven weeks old under the guise of fresh eggs than the Canadian is. We do not eat that kind of egg.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Yet he is buying eggs from China. In the face of an adverse duty of 18 cents a dozen there is no possibility of the Australian buying eggs from Canada. That is one of the chief reasons why the Australian will not buy them. But there is no reason why we could not send eggs to Australia under a proper tariff arrangement. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) also stated that the increased production of eggs in Canada is probably the result of the legislation enacted by the present Minister of Agriculture. I think the former Minister of Agriculture had something to do with the regulations now in force.

Mr. ROBB: He did.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): And I feel sure that these regulations are in the interest of the poultrymen as well as in the interest of the consumer. The Minister of Finance has said that the egg forms the breakfast food of the nation. In other words, every person in Canada, according to the figures of consumption, is eating three-quarters of an egg per day. That represents from ten to eleven dozen more per year per capita than the consumption in the United States represents, and from ten to fifteen dozen more per year per capita than the consumption in Great Britain. I think one reason for the increased consumption is the high quality of the Canadian egg, and the special care taken to see that the fresh egg is properly graded. There is no reason why we should not be able to increase our sales of eggs not only to our own people but to the United States and to other countries as well. We certainly can sell more eggs to the United States although the climatic and other conditions which attend production there seem to be in their favour. If there was an equalization of duty as between the two countries we could increase our exports and it would not make one iota of difference to the consumer as far as the price of eggs is concerned. In any event there would be a better chance for the Canadian poultryman to increase the consumption in Canada from three-quarters of an egg per capita per day to one egg. If we could increase the production of every hen in Canada so that she would just lay one egg a day more it would mean, at the current price we will say of 40 cents per dozen, an additional amount between fifty and sixty thousand dollars a year. That may not seem very much to some people but it is worth aiming at and it could be done. I firmly believe that through the medium of an equalization in the tariff the poultry industry would be helped very much without the consumer suffering any harm whatever. The minister has given the figures of imports of eggs from the United States. We might just as well have had a duty of eight cents on those eggs as to permit them to come into this country at three cents. Our treasury would have been that much better off; it would not have made any difference in the price to the consumer and it would have been a stimulant to the poultry industry.

I am very much in sympathy with this resolution, and I believe it is a step in the right direction. The duty should be reversed in order to accomplish what should be done for the poultry industry in Canada. As we are aware, practically all these eggs from the United States come into Canada during the months of December, January and February, the only season of year during which the Canadian poultryman gets a good price for his eggs. That point, I believe, should also be taken into consideration.

There are other things than eggs in connection with this poultry industry, baby chicks and so on, just as important as eggs and entitled to equal consideration, but those points can come up at some other time. I really think our duty should be at least equal to if not higher than the American duty.

Mr. HOWDEN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Certainly.

Mr. HOWDEN: Assuming that a duty of 8 cents a dozen would make American eggs prohibitive during the winter months, when we need them, where would the hon. member suggest we get our winter eggs?

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): You could get them all right here in Canada, Mr. Speaker. The industry would be increased that much more; production would be that much greater, and we would be eating Canadian eggs.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I am not going to take very long, Mr. Speaker. I rise merely for the purpose of completing the statement which I endeavoured to get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) to complete. The Minister of Finance spent quite a bit of time in giving us the importations from the United States year by year, and I repeatedly asked the hon. gentleman to give our exports to the United States. He thought that did not cut any figure in regard to this resolution at all, but I propose to give him the figures. In the year 1924 we imported from the United States 6,454,000 dozen eggs and exported during the same year 141,379 dozen. I reason from that that the United States sent over 6,000,000 dozen eggs into Canada because we made it easy for them to do so, with a duty of only three cents, and that we sent only 141,000 dozen to help feed those 110,000,000 people because they made it difficult for us to do so by putting on a duty of eight cents. In other words, the United States—and other countries as well—have adopted the principle of giving to their own people encouragement in the production of those things which they themselves require. Every other government in the world except this remnant of a government has taken this course. It is a sensible course, and therefore one which we could not expect this government to follow.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): I would like to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Garland) with regard to this resolution. He is a gentleman with wide experience in the poultry business, and knows what he is talking about. With regard to the importations from Australia, if Australia is an importing country I should say that when the treaty was being negotiated, we should have applied to Australia for the privilege of entering that market with our eggs. If she is able to take eggs from China —eggs which are known largely by their odour —there is no reason why she should not learn to import good Canadian eggs which are far superior to practically any others in the world. That we consume more eggs in Canada than in some other countries is due, in my opinion, to the fact that we have regulations here which place our eggs on the market in a fresh condition. As soon as they become a little stale they lose their popularity with the consumer, who knows what a fresh egg is like. I want to say also that Australia, developing its agriculture as it has been doing, may before very long be an exporter of eggs to Canada, just as the United States is at the present time. During the opposite season of the year, when we are not producing at home, they will soon be exporting eggs to this country.

The great disadvantage under which we are labouring at present in competition with the United States, where the duty is eight cents per dozen as against our duty of only three cents, is that during January, February and probably a part of December, when our eggs are produced at the very highest peak of the cost of production, the California hen, the Carolina hen, the Florida hen and the Texas hen are basking in sunshine and enjoying spring weather. Anyone familiar with the poultry industry realizes that under spring conditions you can produce eggs at a very much lower cost than under the midwinter conditions prevailing in Canada at that time of the year. Therefore the tariff against those eggs should be at least equal to the United States tariff, to place the Canadian producer on a good sound footing.

Looking at this proposition generally, in a protectionist country such as Canada, I cannot understand why the farmer should not be protected as well as everyone else. I cannot understand the reasoning which permits the expenditure of about $6,000,000 each year in developing a splendid Department of Agriculture—and I want to say that I think it is one of the best in the world—in developing our experimental farms; in carrying on egg-laying contests; in catering to the great world's poultry congress which is to be held here in 1927; in aiming to improve our poultry in every way and in inducing our farmers to stock up better breeds and so forth, and then leaves our market open to unfair competition. This is one of the vital points; if we have no markets to sell in we will have lost our greatest inducement to produce more eggs. In this connection I think we should follow in the footsteps of Australia, and protect our farmers here; we should follow the example of the United States, who did not hesitate at all to raise their tariff on butter to twelve cents a pound, when they began to come into competition with the Australian and New Zealand product. I strongly endorse the resolution, and I think the hon. member who introduced it is to be congratulated upon bringing this matter before the House.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I would like to say a few words in this connection, Mr. Speaker. I thought two years ago, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) introduced his bill providing for a balanced ration for the Canadian hen, that we would not be troubled with any eggs coming into the country. That bill was to solve our difficulty, but apparently the balanced ration has not overcome the difficulty, and eggs are still being imported into Canada in large numbers.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) has evidently taken a great deal of trouble to look up statistics favourable to the position which the government have taken on this matter. I asked what I thought was a very reasonable question, in view of the importations which he gave for a number of years; my question was what were the importations for the three months of this year. He intimated that I would have a chance to speak on this matter, and he did not give the information asked for. For the benefit of those who do not know—because I am satisfied that the minister does know—

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The minister says "no"; I will withdraw that statement. The information has been given in the House, however, during the present session. There have been 2,620,644 dozen eggs imported, during January, February and part of March, with a value of $747,890. These figures were obtained a few days ago from the Department of Customs. That amount of Canadian money has gone out of the country to pay for eggs imported almost entirely from the United States. These figures do not include the eggs referred to as coming from Hong Kong and China, frozen eggs or broken and canned eggs, because 287,245 pounds of those eggs were imported into the country during those months, in addition to the figures I have already given. The principle on which our customs tariff is based is the thing we must consider. It is essential that we arrive at some understanding on the matter if we are going to have unity in this country and a contented people. You cannot afford to have a number of people enjoying a high degree, or a reasonable degree of protection in this country, and others having little or none at all; that is the basic

Everyone knows that climatic conditions in this country are severe during the winter months, and that difficulties are encountered by those who are engaged in producing food products. Is it fair to people who have to contend against these natural climatic handicaps, and who have spent enormous sums of money in order to enable them to do so, that the government should encourage competition from countries more favourably situated in order to put our own producers out of business? Will the Minister of Agriculture say that the agricultural experts in connection with our various experimental farms contend that eggs cannot be produced successfully in this country during the winter months? I do not think he will. On the contrary, there is every inducement for the people of this country to engage in this business, but they are becoming so discouraged owing to the restrictions which have been placed upon them during the last year or two that they are quitting the business, and the minister will soon find that the egg importations into this country will greatly increase as a result.

Some few days ago I placed some questions on the order paper with regard to the egg grading which is in effect here, and I find by the answers that there are about fifteen different grades of eggs. The minister shakes his head. I will quote from the answer that was given to my question. There are in class (1), specials, extras, pullet extras, firsts, seconds; then in class (2), storage, preserved, extras, firsts, seconds, cracked and dirty. You have all those different grades of eggs, and I venture to state that there is no one engaged in poultry raising in this country who could satisfactorily explain why all these regulations are in existence, but the dealer in eggs can explain. The pressure has been brought to bear by the packers who are grading these eggs, with the assistance of the government graders, and who are receiving the benefit of these extras and extra specials, while the producer receives little benefit from these grades. It is true that in a few instances the producer benefits, but in the main you will find that it is the packer who is reaping the benefit from the regulations provided by the minister.

With regard to some of the arguments which have been advanced, particularly by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), I remember when the Australian treaty came up it was pointed out that the government might have obtained some concessions
5 p.m. from Australia in connection with this matter, but the voice of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was not heard at that time. On the contrary, I believe he shirked his vote on that occasion, for his name does not appear in the records at all, which shows the interest manifested by him at that time. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question, and I am inclined to think that even the Minister of Finance himself, when some other question comes up, takes the view that we should protect ourselves, because I have here a clipping from the Ottawa Journal of March 5, 1925, headed "Use Tariff as Club on U.S., Mr. Robb Hints," which reads in part as follows:

> "If the Americans put up a prohibitive tariff against our agricultural products, why shouldn't we put up a tariff against some of their products?" Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Finance, asked a delegation from the Canadian Council of Agriculture, which waited upon the government this morning. "The government needs to have some club to handle these fellows," he said.

That is the statement attributed to the Minister of Finance, and that is all this resolution asks for. The tariff is very low in any event, and it is quite apparent that agriculture is suffering, and suffering seriously, for want of a reasonable degree of protection. I think the suggestion contained in the motion is one which should be adopted by this House. Until you realize that some consideration must be given to those who are engaged in agriculture in this country, you may rest assured that we will continue to experience the difficulties with which we are now confronted in trying to persuade people to stay on the land. It is true that a great many of them are there and cannot get away, but they are subject in many instances to most unfair competition that is costing this country many, many millions of dollars annually to supply our people with the food products that ought to be supplied to them by the farmers of this country. It is no wonder that a revaluation of the soldier settlers' land has had to be provided for, and that other means are being adopted by the government in order to meet the situation with which we are confronted. Why not adopt the fair and sensible measure which will encourage production, rather than attempt to deal with the resulting situation by means of bonuses, old age pensions, and things of that kind? The country is all right; the people are all right if you give them a chance. If the Minister of Agriculture will only strike out these regulations and restrictions which he has imposed upon the people, and remove the army of inspectors and graders which he has turned loose on the country, conditions, I feel sure, will be much more satisfactory. I find that last year, for instance, $79,174 was paid out to these inspectors whom the Minister of Agriculture has going around the country, chasing people who are engaged in poultry raising and the production of eggs, worrying and heckling them on every hand. Oh, yes, if we purchase eggs from the United States, China and Hong Kong, it is all right; the minister contends that the consumer must be first considered. Has he no word of sympathy for the producer? Is no consideration whatever to be extended to him? Apparently it is all right to send our good money out of this country to buy goods in the United States, in China, and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favour of this resolution, and it is high time the government took some action with regard to agriculture in order to protect those who are engaged in this industry from the unfair competition which they are meeting on every hand.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, the resolution brings up a very wide question; in fact, it has to do with the production on the farms of all the lines which we are raising at the present time and trying to find a market for.

The resolution suggests that eggs are being dumped into Canada. Now dumping at one time did mean that foods were being sold cheaper for export than for home consumption in the country of origin. We are now giving to the Minister of Customs full power in the matter of the appraisement for customs purposes of all natural products entering this country. It might be something for the consumer if he could buy foreign produce at dumping prices, but such is not the case. The distributing combines to-day are the only ones that benefit by cheap imports.

The Australian treaty has been mentioned. I might say that trade treaties are a feature of protection all by itself, but the agriculturists are only asking to-day the right that other classes enjoy, the right to buy and sell where they can to the best advantage. The fact that the United States impose a duty of eight cents a dozen on eggs does not debar Canada from exporting eggs to the United States, and does not in the least concern Canada, because the distributing combine in the United States raises the price of the product up to that level.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman say that is a fact?

Mr. EVANS: Yes; I will prove it as I go along. It is just as easy for a country that can raise its produce according to world prices to get over a high tariff wall as to get over a low tariff wall, because the price in that country is raised to the level of that tariff above the world price.

Mr. LADNER: Theoretically.

Mr. EVANS: Yes. It is unfair to the producers of all natural products in this country to place the manufacturing, and particularly the distributing combine, outside of competition. I believe the distributing combine has become in Canada during the last few years the most tyrannical of all, even surpassing the tyranny of the manufacturers in price-fixing powers. These combines are placed entirely outside of competition, and thereby raise the cost of production to a point where we cannot compete. Were it possible to-day for the producers on the farms of Canada to buy commodities at world prices, the Canadian farmer need fear no competition from any country whatsoever. The one great detriment to production in Canada of all lines is the high cost of production. That is what the mover of the resolution is feeling to-day in the production of eggs raised through the artificial or price-fixing power of the combine. There has never been in Canada yet any relation between the price of products as they leave the farm and as they fall into the hands of the consumer. There is no relation between the two to-day and never has been. The prices paid by the city man for commodities derived from the products of the farm, such as flour, rolled oats and so on, bear no relation to the price received by the primary producer. Why? Because we have placed the distributing combine entirely outside the pale of competition. He has the price-fixing power, and the importation of any quantity of eggs or butter from China or Australia, does not mean that the consumer will get these products at a cheaper price. The distributor or the middle man has the price-fixing power in regard to these things, and whether they are raised in our own country or not, the cost of living is kept to the height of the tariff.

That is the one great obstacle in the way of production, including manufacturing. Production in all lines in Canada is placed out of competition, and therefore taken out of the line of world prices. The agriculturist has to find his market outside of Canada. He has to look to the export market to find his revenue, and the export market will have to be his market for many years to come yet. The home market which our friends here bring to the front so often is simply a joke, so far as the farmer of Canada is concerned, and I defy anyone to say how we are to be protected. The price of eggs is affected by the cost of production and the placing of the middleman outside the pale of competition.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman say that the home market so far as eggs are concerned is a joke, and did he ever hear a poultryman make such an assertion?

Mr. EVANS: Taking agricultural production in general—yes, it is a joke. I say it is a fallacy to look to protection or an increase in the duty on anything to remedy the situation to-day, and I will say that the tariff is a fallacy, apply it on what you please, and that it drives the cost of production and the cost of doing anything out of line with world prices. Even if Canada wanted to become a manufacturing country, even if we hope to compete with the United States—and we can—the only thing to do here is to lower the cost of production. This is the reason our young men are leaving us to-day. This is the reason that the most enterprising, the smartest young men and women are crossing the border, or going to Europe or somewhere else looking to freedom for their own enterprise and the qualities that they inherit.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who is going back to Europe?

Mr. EVANS: Many are going back to Britain, and I might say for the information of the right hon. gentleman that a friend of mine visited England last year. He was in the city of Hull. There was a football match there and the crowd seemed to be going to it. My friend said to one of them, "How far are the football grounds from here"? And the man replied, "Come with me and I will show you. You are a stranger?" And my friend replied, "Yes I am from Canada." The man said. "What is the matter with Canada?" Well, he said, "It might be better than it is, perhaps"; and the Englishman said, "I thought so." He said that on every boat going into the port of Hull there were half a dozen stowaways all coming from Canada, that they were all lined up by the bobby every day, taken before the beak and given a month of hard labour, and they all went to their doom with a smile. This is a fact. Canada is to-day becoming a by-word.

Mr. LADNER: How long ago was this?

Mr. EVANS: This was a year ago last summer. Look at the United States, the country we are supposed to emulate, the paradise of the protectionist, what is it? The United States to-day is following the same old method of concentration of wealth and industry The States cities are being built up at the expense of the agriculturist, and I do not need to quote any better authority than Professor Macey Campbell of the Iowa University, inspector of education. He said in three blocks in Chicago he saw better homes—homes occupied by men who were earning more wages—than he had seen in an eight hundred mile drive through the two Dakotas. More than that, he said that he saw white men and white women working in the fields bare-footed trying to keep themselves above the line of want. In five states in one year 125,000 farmers were foreclosed. Does that bespeak prosperity? All it bespeaks is this, and I want the right hon. gentleman to pay attention—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am paying attention.

Mr. EVANS: It bespeaks the concentration of wealth and industry in the hands of a few and a price-fixing power which they should not have.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. member any information about stowaways going back to England from the United States?

Mr. EVANS: I am not supposed to know everything. I think it is enough to know what is going on in our own country; never mind the United States. Canada is one of the best countries in the world; we are perhaps blessed with more natural resources needed for the manufacture of goods than any other country on earth. Canada ought to be the cheapest country in the world to live in, but as a matter of fact it is the dearest country on earth to-day with perhaps the exception of the United States in some lines. The cost of living has gone up in Canada to such an extent that even the manufacturers themselves find it impossible to use our own natural resources. That is a very serious state of affairs. We find it necessary to give them free trade; in fact they are the only free traders in Canada. They claim the right to scour this world for raw material and then we give them and the middlemen as well a price-fixing power. The fact of the matter is that the cost of production is put out of line entirely with world prices. We need not look to the tariff for any benefit. Even if every farmer in this country is given protection under the tariff, the old ring will soon be completed again, the cost of living will go up and he will find it just as hard to compete as he did before. The thing is a fallacy from beginning to end and I suggest the right hon. gentleman should take this to heart.

Mr. J. J. E. GUÉRIN (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, it may seem rather anomalous for me representing one of the urban districts to take part in a debate which pertains almost exclusively to agriculturists. We have heard a great deal about protection, about the protection of agriculturists, but at the same time why should we not think a little of the protection of the consuming public whom we city members are elected to represent? I have not seen any slump in the price of eggs during many years. From my experience and from what I hear and read in the press the price of eggs throughout the winter season is always over the dollar mark per dozen, which I think is a very lucrative price for a common article of diet. I had no idea that the consumption of eggs amongst our people was as great as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) told us it was. Agriculturists might do a little better if they were to improve their grade of hens. Only recently, I had an opportunity of visiting the agricultural college at La Trappe and there I found hens called the Chanticleer, hens which laid practically every day, over 300 eggs in the year. The matter is simply one of cultivating the hen and bringing about a proper breed in order to have a more prolific crop of eggs.

What I rise particularly to dwell on is the question of public health in regard to eggs. We hear of eggs being imported from Australia and China. Anybody knows that such eggs are unfit for human consumption and if such eggs are imported, especially in bulk, it is nothing short of criminal to allow them to be put on the market for human consumption. When I was mayor of Montreal in 1911 I remember a consignment of Chinese eggs arriving in that city, which were examined and found to be practically putrid. The Board of Health endeavoured to stop their use and the importers sued the city for interfering with their business. Naturally, in all things litigious the wheels of justice grind very slowly and these eggs were sequestrated for several months whilst the learned judge was coming to a conclusion as to whether they were fit for human use or not. Finally, after several months, he concluded that, for sufficient reasons, the city had no right to confiscate the eggs, and we at once proceeded to seize the eggs more effectively in order to have them destroyed at the public dump. But what was our amazement when we found that the eggs had been taken away in some manner that I do not understand, through some of the intricacies of the law, and had been sold to confectioners and others, so that we felt that we had eaten all those eggs.

[Mr. Evans.]

If there is anything that we should do more than another it is absolutely to prohibit the importation of eggs in bulk. There is no more prolific medium for the development of micro-organisms than the albumen of eggs, and we know perfectly well that when, in these oriental countries, eggs are broken into cans which are sealed up and sent thousands of miles away for the consumption of white people, the same precaution or trouble is not taken as if the orientals were going to eat the eggs themselves. One rotten egg in a barrel of eggs is sufficient to make the whole barrelful rotten inside of a week or two.

Mr. ESLING: Does the hon. gentleman remember that the statement was made on the floor of this House, I think in January, that there were seventeen carloads of Chinese eggs in storage in Montreal?

Mr. GUERIN: I was not present at the time. It may have been said. I hope, however, they will be used for manure purposes to increase the fecundity of the ground in order that we may grow more grain to feed the hens that will lay fresh eggs. I would not advise the use for human consumption of the eggs to which the hon. gentleman refers. There is no doubt that in dealing with the question of contamination we cannot be too careful in regard to eggs, especially those imported from another country. These eggs come to us in bulk, bringing with them probably some germs of disease of which we know nothing and which we never suspect, so that we run the risk of infecting all our people. We remember that during the year 1917 we had a visitation of a disease which we called Spanish influenza or grippe. It was not grippe at all, nor was it influenza in the ordinary acceptation of that word. It was some imported disease which I firmly believe came from the Orient; it bore all the earmarks of the bubonic plague. Where did it come from? We know that mingling with our soldiers there were Chinese, Japanese and other orientals who might have carried the germs of the disease with them. I ask, therefore, is there anything more menacing than the importation of these oriental eggs in bulk? To me it is unspeakable; it is something that should not be tolerated. Not only should there be a high duty on eggs coming in bulk, but they should be absolutely prohibited.

Now, I am in favour of protection—protection for the people of my constituency. I want to protect them against the high cost of living, so that they may be able to buy reasonably eggs, of which they use large quantities. I want to protect the fathers of families of ten and fifteen children, such as we have in Montreal and in the province of Quebec generally. It is imperative that these children be given wholesome food. We should therefore put every facility in the way of their fathers to get eggs, among other things, at a reasonable price. An increase of five or eight cents a dozen on eggs would make them prohibitive to the father of a large family, and I am not in favour of that.

In the debate this afternoon some hon. gentlemen seemed to favour a tariff as a means of retaliation, while others to whom I have listened want a tariff for the purpose of protecting the farmer. I am quite sympathetic with the farmer but I am more sympathetic with the public in general. In any case I do not believe in legislating for the sake of retaliation; I do not think any good comes of such legislation. Whatever laws we pass we should enact with a view to benefiting our people in some way or other, and I do not see what benefit can accrue from legislation that is framed merely for the purpose of hitting back; nor do I believe in legislation which will result in misery to the greater number of our people. For these reasons I purpose voting against the proposition. I feel that the interests of the majority should be safeguarded and I believe that a proper system of inspection and an absolute prohibition of eggs in bulk would be a step in the right direction.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): This is an interesting resolution, the discussion of which may prove of value to the House and perhaps to the country as well. It seems to me that before parliament is asked to pass a resolution having for its object the remedying of a certain condition of affairs, we should have some evidence as to the cause of that condition. Very little has been said to-day about the causes of the alleged condition of the egg-producing industry in Canada. The hon. member who proposes the resolution (Mr. Esling) comes from British Columbia, and another hon. member who has spoken in favour of it also represents a constituency in that part of the country. I am led to believe that the poultry industry of British Columbia is an important one which is suffering from disabilities with which the people in other parts of Canada are perhaps not familiar. We find therefore, from time to time, that many resolutions are introduced in this House and discussed by members from British Columbia who are interested in the production and marketing of eggs. To me it seems but reasonable that before any action is taken, such as is proposed in this resolution, we should inquire of these members the reasons why, from a province like British Columbia where the climatic conditions are favourable and where many other conditions conduce to the successful raising of poultry, such as cheap material for buildings, the complaint comes most often that something must be done to remedy the evils existing in the egg market.

Mr. NEILL: Dear wheat.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has anticipated a question I was about to put as to the high cost of production. He says that it is due to the high price of wheat, by which I presume he means the high price of feed generally. In my opinion, if the basic conditions in this industry are as they have been stated to be, and if care is exercised in the production and sale of eggs, the results should be reasonably satisfactory. If the various conditions surrounding the poultry business are as they ought to be, including climate, distribution, and so forth, I see no reason why the industry should not succeed.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni touched briefly in his remarks on the cost of feed. He said that certain reductions had been made in the freight rate on grain going through British Columbia for export, and he contended that reductions should be conceded in the freight on grain going into that province for home consumption. When the hon. member made the first remark, to the effect that the remedy would be found in part to consist in a reduction in the rates on wheat, I applauded for the reason that I felt the statement was in line with something that should have been done many years ago. I observed that some of my Conservative friends across the way smiled when they heard me applauding, as though they thought, "Here is another of those representatives from the west insisting on a reduction in the freight rate on the things they want to sell." Now, that was not the idea I had in mind at all. I was merely thinking that a reasonable and fair rate should be fixed, for the benefit of Canadians living in British Columbia, on the grain they have to buy in order to keep one of their industries going. There should be given to them a freight rate just as fair and reasonable as that which applies to the wheat or other grain produced on the western prairie or elsewhere in Canada and consumed by the people of China, Japan or Europe. That should be adopted as a fair and reasonable principle provided it costs no more for the railroad to bring to Vancouver a carload of grain destined to be fed to poultry in British Columbia, than it does to haul a carload of grain bound for the Orient or other world markets. Given that condition, I see no good reason why grain should not be moved at the same rate. It may be that the railroad officials could defend the existing rates. I am perfectly satisfied they could; but on the basis of fairness and common sense I see no good reason why those rates should not be adjusted.

The hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Guerin) mentioned another condition that is absolutely necessary in connection with the raising of poultry or any other kind of stock, namely, that the right strains of poultry only be kept and brought up to their highest efficiency. Given these basic conditions—that is to say, the use of the best egg-producing strains of fowls, fed at the lowest prices which world market conditions permit; the favourable climatic and other conditions that are characteristic of British Columbia, and the concession of reasonable distributing and marketing facilities—there is no reason in the world why British Columbia should not produce and market eggs in competition with any other part of the continent. In considering the necessary facilities I have reference not only to climatic conditions but also to cheap material for the erection of buildings, the long season out-of-doors, and cheap electric light in the poultry houses to extend the period of laying.

Some hon. members referred to eggs produced in Florida, Georgia, and other southern states. I do not think poultrymen in British Columbia or elsewhere in Canada need fear the competition of the hen in the southern states. The great bulk of the soil of Florida, and I believe the same is true of Georgia, is impregnated with pure sand, and there has to be considerable outlay in enriching that soil before it can be made to yield the green stuffs or other foods necessary for the production of eggs. Then the cost of transportation to the northern market has to be borne in mind. Furthermore there is the disability under which the hen lives in hot weather. I am satisfied that any poultry producer in the House would probably admit it is harder to overcome the handicap of hot weather in the case of poultry than it is to overcome the disability which results from cold weather Providence seems to have provided the chicken with feathers suitable for defence against a cold climate, but I do not know of any provision of nature which gives it relief in a hot climate.

[Mr. McLean.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why not provide the hen with rubber boots and snowshoes?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Sometimes we equip the sled dogs in northern latitudes with moccasins but we have not yet reached the stage where we make such provisions for hens.

Taking the facts which I have enumerated into consideration—climatic conditions, the cost of feed, and the cost of transportation—I think it would be well for hon. members to rid their minds of the impression that competition from the southern states by reason of milder weather in the winter and hotter weather at other times of the year is going to run the Canadian hen off the market. There is of course the further fact that the time consumed in bringing the southern eggs to the northern market would make them far from "strictly fresh" eggs when they landed here. I am firmly convinced that if feed of all kinds can be provided for the British Columbia poultry raiser at reasonable prices, through a fairer freight rate, it will be of great assistance to him. In the winter he is able to raise green stuffs and to feed his poultry out-of-doors. He has that advantage over the producer on the prairie or in the east. I also think that if the poultry producers of that province adopted the principle of co-operative marketing they would find it a decided advantage.

Before passing on to another phase of the question I should like to express my appreciation of the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. Ann in that no eggs in bulk that are unfit for human consumption should be allowed into this country for that purpose. If such importations are bad for the people of this country they should be absolutely excluded; there should be no tinkering with the matter. On the other hand, if eggs in bulk are good for our people they should be allowed in as freely as possible consistent with justice. It is possible that such eggs may be needed as raw material in certain lines of industry, in which case I would allow their admission provided their use is confined entirely to the object intended.

In conclusion may I be permitted to quote a few figures from the commercial page of the Ottawa Journal of March 31:

> Western eggs are rolling to eastern points in large quantities. No price changes are reported to-day.

"Western" eggs, it will be noticed, not southern eggs or Chinese eggs.

> Toronto: Country shippers are making sales extras 34 to 35, firsts 30 to 31, seconds 24 to 26. Prices to retailers extras 38 to 39, first 34 to 35, seconds 29 to 30.

Montreal: Dealers are paying country points delivered, extras 33, firsts 30. A car was sold in Winnipeg for shipment here extras 32½, firsts 28½, seconds 26.

Winnipeg: Three pooled cars are rolling to Montreal, costing extras 33 to 34, firsts 28½ to 30, seconds 25 to 26 fob. Prices to retailers extras 35, firsts 32, seconds 27.

That is from Winnipeg, one of the points in what used to be considered as the frozen west. There has been very little agitation there for any extra duty on the few eggs coming into this country. Here is a report from Calgary:

Calgary: Dealers paying country shippers extras 24, firsts 22, seconds 17.

The report from Winnipeg of the pooled cars illustrates what I said a moment ago, that producers were getting together for their own protection and not asking favours from anyone. They are undertaking to put their products on the markets of the country in the best possible condition. The quotations go on:

Edmonton: Country dealers are making sales extras 24, firsts 22, seconds 17. Prices to retailers extras 32, firsts 30, seconds 25.

Saskatchewan: The markets are firmer and receipts during the past week have been light due to bad road conditions. A car is rolling east from Moose Jaw costing extras 31, firsts 27, seconds 23 fob.

As you get further west prices apparently get lower.

Vancouver: Dealers paying country shippers extras 24, firsts 22. Jobbing extras 28 to 30, firsts 26 to 28, seconds 22.

Mr. NEILL: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Certainly.

Mr. NEILL: Does he consider 24 cents a dozen a fair price for eggs produced in British Columbia, in view of the high price of wheat and so on?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I certainly do not, in view of ruling prices elsewhere in Canada, but I consider that the best thing to do is to reduce the cost of production and not add to the cost of selling the article. It is better to repair the foundation first before you remedy the defects at the top of the steeple. The quotations go on:

St. John: Country dealers are making sales extras 39, firsts 35, seconds 32. Prices to retailers extras 43, firsts 40, seconds 35.

Then we come to Chicago, and what do we find there?

Fresh spot 28¼, April 29-1/8, May 28¾, December 32-5/8.

Then we have New York, in the country to which, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, all the wealth of this country is flowing, and everyone is prosperous. If that be true, New York of all places should be the haven of rest for the producer of eggs, and the New York quotations are:

Extra firsts 29¾ to 30, firsts 28¾ to 29½.

As against that I notice in another quotation that in Montreal fresh extras are worth 40 to 41, and fresh firsts, 36. These are reports in the Ottawa Journal of to-day. I am not vouching for their accuracy at all, but that is as they are printed. In view of these facts I would suggest that anything that could be done by members of this House or by the government to help the producers in British Columbia, by making conditions under which they carry on their industry more natural and less artificial, would be in the interests of that province and of the Dominion as a whole.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. gentleman is very generous in his advice to the egg producers of British Columbia, and while I do not make any comment on the quality of the advice, the quantity is such as one would not expect from one who resents it very much when applied to his own class of production. The wheat farmer is ready to chide any who tell him how better to produce his grain, what he really needs, or how better to farm. While he is in that mood he does not add to the strength of his case or to his popularity by giving the advice which he declines to accept from others. We are faced with statistics just quoted to show that eggs are very cheap—22 cents, 24 cents, 26 cents, and so forth—following the speech by the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Guerin), who told us that the people of Montreal had to pay $1 a dozen in the winter time.

An hon. MEMBER: In certain seasons.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The season is not very far removed when eggs were that price. Is it not remarkable that with a condition of affairs under which the Canadian market is invaded by foreign eggs, resulting in a lower price at a time when it is essential that the price be high, the whole situation is met with the suggestion that we ought to have cheaper freight rates for carrying the grain to the egg producer; the poultryman ought to know better than to raise the kind of hens he has been raising, and should get the 300-eggs-a-year hens; he ought to get cheaper electric lights, so the hens can see to lay—everyone else ought to do something, other than affect any government policy.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Did he understand me to advise the farmers of British Columbia to get cheaper lights and cheaper material, or to say that they were already in possession of them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood my hon. friend to say they ought to get cheaper lights. I do not know what he meant, and I do not know what we can do about it.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I did not say that. I said the egg producer was already in possession of cheaper lights and cheaper building material, not that he should get them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that it makes very much difference.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Yes it does; it is not advice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think if the hon. member will look up Hansard he will be rather surprised at what he finds the reporter has taken down. All this is offered by way of explanation of the existing state of affairs and by way of advice as to what should happen through one source or another. But is not the matter rather simple so far as the policy of parliament is concerned? We must either have a protective policy in Canada or not have a protective policy, and if we have a protective policy we must apply it to all classes. Surely that is the subject raised in this resolution. As to which we should have, I despair of converting—or at least bringing to articulate conversion—hon. members from Saskatchewan. Their minds may be affected but if they are they will never admit it.

Mr. McINTOSH: Does the right hon. gentleman think he will ever get it to apply to Canada as a whole?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Apply what?

Mr. McINTOSH: The right hon. gentleman's policy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly; it is applied to-day with such force that hon. gentlemen cannot avoid it. It has applied for forty years and it applies to-day. I warn hon. members from Saskatchewan—and I might include hon. members to my left—not to be too pronounced on this subject; do not put yourselves on Hansard in too forceful a fashion; you never know when you may be called upon to vote in exactly the opposite way. Hon. members to my left did not run that risk so much in the last parliament, but they are running it now, and hon. members from Saskatchewan are running it also. Let me take their minds back. Only a few years ago the leader of the Liberal party declared strongly for free food, clear of customs duty. We have never had the reduction of a fraction of a nickel on any food since, and those who proposed the free food policy are called upon to pay as much as ever.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Make it pertinent.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The right hon. gentleman has been complaining about the reductions effected by the Australian treaty on foodstuffs and now he says there has been no reduction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There has been a reduction in duties affecting Australia, but is that a move towards free food? No, that is just a move towards a better sale of automobiles and a better sale of paper and pulp in Australia. That was not done to reduce the price of food; it was a concession made at the expense of the Canadian farmer, in order to serve other interests, and the hon. member knows it. No, at the convention you had that resolution, and how it was thundered on the stump in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and everywhere else where it was considered popular, and how much of that have we in effect to-day? Not a particle. But the members who thundered it and lauded it to the skies now come into this House and vote for the government that will not take one step in that direction.

The budget is coming this session, and I ask hon. members to be very careful; they do not know what they are going to be called on to vote for in that budget. This government is capable of anything in the way of a convolution—anything at all—and they will have to support it. This government, if it felt it could sustain its position another hour by putting the duty on eggs up to eight cents a dozen, would do it and never turn a hair, and hon. gentlemen would come up and vote for it; they would have to. Consequently, it is always wise in this House, especially under present conditions, for hon. gentlemen supporting the administration to be very careful in their commitments on Hansard. Hon. gentlemen have learned that in days gone by. Those who have come into this parliament perhaps have not had the opportunity yet; their experience has not been so bitter, but it is certain to come. We know that in this country we have either to maintain a protective policy, or permit the labour wage in Canada to fall to the level of other countries in the world.

Mr. McPHEE: Was the hon. gentleman referring a moment ago to a change of mind on his own part from his resolution and speech in 1911?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not a particle. Hon. gentlemen have been quoting that speech for ten years, and the quotation is usually the best part of the speeches they have delivered. That speech was a confirmation from beginning to end of the protective principle and its application, but the protective principle does not mean that every time you touch the tariff you must raise it. No, see that it is left conformable to the protective principle, but it must still mean protection for industry in this country. We must submit to one of two alternatives: a Canadian wage scale as low as that of any other country where the competing article is produced, either that or the protective system. Those who choose the first, let them consistently follow it through, but those who choose the second, let them follow it through with equal consistency and apply it to all classes of Canadian production.

An hon. MEMBER: It can't be done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The protective system is one that, to the utmost that it can be done, applies the protective principle to every branch of industry in the country. It cannot be done with equal application to all; that cannot be done in any country in the world. The bigger the volume of export compared to home consumption, the less can it be applied, but to every industry it can be applied to a degree, and to all vital industries it can be applied with beneficial results. But the system must be adopted, no matter whether it falls unevenly in its benefits or not, or you must submit to the condition of a wage scale in this country as low as that of any other country where the competing article is produced. If you are going to do that, are hon. members going to vote to expose the Canadian farmer in his home market to world competition, and then tell him to get light for his hens and raise a better breed, and get cheaper freight rates to carry grain to his hens? The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) should recall that his newly chosen leader, the crown prince from Saskatchewan said just a few days ago that you cannot get reduction of those freight rates. In the face of that statement, surely the members from Saskatchewan are not going to come here—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. gentleman has asked me a question. The Minister of Railways stated that there would be no general reduction, but an equalization where there was injustice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The equalization the hon. member asked for was a reduction.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Six o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman was trying to take up time and he was very shrewd in doing it, because his own speech was in an awful condition. It is nearly six o'clock, but I must finish at least the sentence. If you cannot have these things, if you cannot have them to any extent that would be appreciable at the price, what is the use of bringing that in as a smokescreen to becloud the issue? You have either to give the farmer protection or not, and if you are going to give it him, give it him on a parity with all other classes of people.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: Before I leave the chair, I wish to read the following communication which I have just received from the Governor General's secretary:

Ottawa, 31st March, 1926.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. F. A. Anglin, acting as Deputy of the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 4.15 p.m. on Wednesday the 7th of April, for the purpose of giving the royal assent to an interim supply bill.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. F. SLADEN,
Governor General's Secretary.

To The Hon. The Speaker of the House of Commons, Ottawa.

This letter follows the one I read at the opening of the sitting this afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question being put, pursuant to rule, until Tuesday April 6.

Tuesday, April 6, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 18, to change the name of the Dominion Express Company to "Canadian Pacific Express Company"—Mr. Fournier.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. KENNEDY

STATEMENT REGARDING IRREGULARITIES IN PEACE RIVER ELECTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

On April 2 there appeared in various newspapers reports of the trial of Baldy Robb at Edmonton, Alberta. He was charged with and convicted of irregularities in the performance of his duties as deputy returning officer at No. 4 poll, near Brule, in the Peace River constituency at the federal election on October 29 last. Mr. Justice Walsh presided at the trial and is reported in the Edmonton Journal of April 1 as having said when addressing the jury:

> The fraud which was alleged to have been perpetrated was one of a very serious character. In all the history of the Dominion there has never been an instance of such a glaring attempt to deprive citizens of their rights as voters. If this was true, then ninety voters had been deprived of their franchise. Mr. Collins had been deprived of his seat in the Dominion parliament, and the people of this riding had been deprived of their rights in having a man of their choice to represent them at Ottawa. . . . There was the evidence of the 111 people who had sworn that they voted for Collins on that day. This was the foundation on which the crown had built their structure. There was a possibility that these people might have committed wholesale perjury. Personally, said His Lordship, he found it hard to believe that a number of apparently respectable people like these had perjured themselves through fear of their employers.

In order to appeal to my sense of fairness the Ottawa Journal on April 3 in an editorial headed "Should Mr. Kennedy vote" strips this statement of Justice Walsh of all qualification, and makes this statement:

> The fraud which was perpetrated was one of a very serious character. In all the history of the Dominion there had never been an instance of such a glaring attempt to deprive citizens of their rights as voters. Ninety citizens had been deprived of their franchise.

The words "If this was true," and the reference to the possibility of wholesale perjury are omitted, and then the editorial is built up to convince me that I have no moral right to sit in parliament or to vote for or against government measures. I intend to do both.

The statement of Mr. Justice Walsh, even if it were as the Ottawa Journal has it, was made at a trial held in connection with one poll out of 278. I claim now and have claimed ever since the early part of November that other irregularities in Peace River cost me more votes than the alleged switching of ballots at Brule cost Collins, even assuming that none of my ballots were switched at that point. The final results of No. 4 poll were: Collins (Conservative) 22; Kennedy, 12; Rae (Liberal) 127. It would therefore appear from the evidence that 89 votes were switched to Rae. I was elected by a plurality of 17 votes over Collins and 41 votes over Rae.

Six neighbouring polls in one district had all the election machinery set up and ballot boxes mailed addressed to the deputy returning officer, but no deputy returning officers had been appointed. Three of these polls through the initiative of the people themselves were opened and the total results were: Collins, 15; Kennedy, 114; Rae, 15. The other three boxes remained in the nearest post office all day but no poll was held. At the latter three polls 225 persons had the right to vote. Many of them went to look for the polling place and of course found none. My information is that the vote there would have been divided similarly to the vote at the three polls that were opened.

The recount in Peace River was completed on December 19. A representative of the Conservative candidate asked me if, in view of the Brule situation, I would not consent to go through the first session of parliament and then resign. I told him at once that in my judgment owing to other election irregularities I had lost at least as many votes as Collins and that the proper course to follow, if they were not satisfied, was to petition under the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. gentleman tell us the name of that gentleman?

Mr. KENNEDY: Mr. Milner who was acting for Mr. Collins. Instead of this they appealed to a Supreme court judge to have the poll at Paddle River, where the vote stood Collins, 11; Kennedy, 87; Rae, 5, thrown out, and 103 voters disfranchised on the technical ground that the deputy returning officer was not properly sworn in. It appears that the commissioner was not present when the deputy signed the oath form. In any event with sixty days in which to act under the Controverted Elections Act nothing was done by the Conservatives.

However a petition against my return has been filed in the Supreme Court of Alberta under the Controverted Elections Act by J. B. Page of Coalspur, through the legal firm of the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Cross).

If the Conservatives have now any desire to act and Page fails to press his petition I am informed that they can do so.

The petition charges me with everything the election act prohibits and asks that I be completely disfranchised. In view of this fact, even if I were otherwise disposed to resign I would not do so until the matter was disposed of. If no one else does so, I fully intend to press for action in this matter as soon as this session is over.

But, Mr. Speaker, I cannot resign. Chapter 11, section 8, of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1906, reads as follows:

> No member shall tender his resignation while his election is lawfully contested, or until after the expiration of the time during which it may by law be contested on other grounds than corruption or bribery.

Until this petition is disposed of I intend to assume all the responsibilities and exercise all the privileges of a member of the House of Commons. I do not wish, however, to take shelter behind the petition or the law. I would refuse to resign even if there were no petition. I would not resign if I could and could not if I would. And let me say to that section of the press that has alternately flattered and threatened me during these last few days: I do not value their praise nor fear their threats. I defy them.

There is a bigger question involved than the Peace River seat or the government in power. Northern Alberta has come through an election that has shown the existence of elements that must be rooted out of our political contests if respect for our parliamentary institutions is to remain. The chief question is how to do this. If I can help, neither the loss of the Peace River seat nor even disfranchisement would worry me in the least degree. And let me say that if this end can be served by unseating me, I will hold no grudge against anyone taking action to do so.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): This is a matter that affects not only the privilege of the hon. member (Mr. Kennedy, Peace River) himself, but the privileges of the House as such. I do not propose to comment at any length on the subject now. The House was not apprised until this very moment of the stand which the hon. gentleman purposed taking; prior to meeting we had only a rumour upon which of course we could not decide, much less act. I should not let the occasion pass, however, without saying that I cannot agree with the reasoning advanced by the hon. member for Peace River, and I must take issue most flatly with the conclusion to which he comes.

It is true that under the House of Commons Act, while a petition stands against him in the courts the right of resignation is not the hon. member's. But the act of resignation is one thing and the act of exercising his functions here as a member and a voter is another. The hon. member now stands in this position, that the official and judicial findings as respects the election in his county show that he was not returned a member of this House.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): That was not the trial of an election petition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no charge against the hon. member himself of malpractice, nor is there any charge that there was any dishonesty on the part of anyone else on his behalf. The only fault to be found with the hon. member exercising his functions is that he was not elected. The hon. member argues that but for "other irregularities" he would have been elected, and I must pause to comment on the use of the word "irregularities" which he was benevolent enough to apply to one who has now been convicted of a gross criminal offence against the code of Canada and is in consequence under a sentence to the penitentiary. The hon. member's euphemism may have some significance, but it does not at all detract from the heinousness of the offence. He argues that but for "other irregularities", namely, the fact that certain polls were not voted at all that the government's agents failed to send boxes to those polls, he would have been elected inasmuch as he is able he believes, to read the minds of the voters well enough to know that they would have voted for him. How weak and feeble this is by way of defence is evident on its mere statement. The fact is that from the votes polled the official judicial findings are that the hon. member was not returned, but that Mr. Collins secured the largest number of votes and has therefore the right to sit in this House. Under these circumstances it is difficult indeed to understand how the hon. member can feel himself playing his right part, in relation not only to his constituents but to this House, in continuing to exercise the functions of a member; and still more difficult it is to understand his reasoning by which he throws the blame for the circumstance that he did not obtain enough votes upon irregularities by officers of this government when the fact is, as he must admit, that he owes his alleged return to frauds and crimes perpetrated by a deputy returning officer acting on behalf of the same government. The hon. member represents those frauds in this House to-day, and he represents the men who perpetrated them. He is here because of them, and I think he would have done himself more credit had he realized the position, and, pending at least the event of the action under the Controverted Elections Act, retire from membership in the meantime. The subject is one which undoubtedly will require further consideration and certainly this House has the right to pass upon it. It has that right, and at the first convenient opportunity it will be called upon to exercise it.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. McPHEE

REPORTED STATEMENT OF MR. BAKER, MEMBER FOR TORONTO NORTHEAST

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I see in one of the Ottawa journals published this morning the report of a meeting held in the city of Toronto on April 5, and before making the observations which I desire to make, I want to read from the article in question:

Toronto, April 5.—Describing Hon. Charles Dunning, Minister of Railways and Canals, as "a fresh lad" who was "trying to run federal affairs," R. L. Baker, Conservative member of parliament for Northeast Toronto, predicted at a Conservative Association smoker here to-night that Mr. Dunning "was going to get in wrong." "I think," he said, "the bringing of Dunning into the House was the best thing that has happened to us."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is referring to another member.

Mr. SPEAKER: I desire to hear the hon. member's statement.

Mr. McPHEE (reading):

Continuing, Mr. Baker said that the Quebec Liberals would rise up in protest against the government's actions, and that before the end of the session the reins of power would pass over to Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McPHEE: I presume my hon. friends will applaud the next paragraph as vigorously:

He predicted that the upset would come when the budget was brought down.

"I don't see," Mr. Baker said, "how the men from Quebec can stand a fellow like Dunning and the young cubs of farmers dictating a policy for Canada. I think they'll explode. We old ginks aren't going to listen to young cubs tell us where we get off at.

"The so-called government," he said, "is there at the mercy of these selfish grain men from the west. If King had been a man at all he'd have thrown up the sponge."

Reading this report I am reminded of the lines from Pope's Essay on Criticism:

All seems infected that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McPHEE: On behalf of the members sitting on this side of the House who come from Saskatchewan, I resent these slanders hurled against the third largest province in Canada. These insults offered to the representatives from the prairie provinces show a contemptibly mean and narrow concept of Canadianism.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The question—

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. McPHEE: We refuse—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The question of privilege must affect the individual member. Certainly the member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) is not concerned with this question.

Mr. McPHEE: I am coming to that.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question of privilege may affect one member individually or it may affect a group of members. In the present instance the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yorkton seems to affect a group of members. He says that he resents the attack made by a certain gentleman upon members from Saskatchewan by calling them "cubs."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of privilege at all because the members from Saskatchewan are attacked.

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to disagree with the right hon. gentleman. A question of privilege may affect one member individually; it may also affect a collectivity. I do not think the word "cub" is a very serious slight, but it depends upon the grounds for resentment. Let the hon. member for Yorkton state briefly the cause of his resentment. Then the question may be dealt with.

Mr. McPHEE: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that we are no cubs, and we refuse to be so stigmatized by any denizen of the city of Toronto. One further observation, Sir. I see that the Archives are receiving pictures of an age that, I presume, is now numbered with the past. I would respectfully request that the hon. gentleman who uttered these slanders against us should have his picture placed there as the representative of an antiquated age to which his language would lead one to suppose he belongs.

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE—1923

RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING SALARY SCHEDULES AND OTHER MATTERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully ask if the government is prepared to give me an answer to the question regarding the civil service that I propounded about three days before the Easter adjournment?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will give the answer to-morrow.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if any secret communications are passing between the hon. gentlemen. We cannot hear anything of what is being said.

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD—PERSONNEL

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the latest news is in regard to the tariff commission?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The latest news is that the order in council will be brought down very soon.

THE BUDGET

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask when the budget will be brought down?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is not in his seat. I would prefer that he replied to my right hon. friend's question.

ADVANCES TO SETTLERS ON CROWN LANDS

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, to authorize advances to settlers in crown lands.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we had a pretty thorough discussion upon the resolution itself, and the main objections taken were to the amount to be loaned each year and the absence of a time limit. I have amended section 9 to meet the criticisms offered by reducing the total amount of loans per annum to $1,000,000, and by restricting the operation of the act to five years.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to have the bill go into committee, but I am not prepared to let the statement made by the minister go unchallenged. Our objections are much wider than he stated. Especially I wish to raise the question here that the moneys to be applied upon these loans should be voted by parliament, and should not be statutorily taken out of the treasury without being included in the estimates.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, there are some objections to this bill which I did not express when the resolution was under discussion, thinking perhaps that when the bill was brought down in its amended form those objections would disappear; but they have not. I should like to draw the attention of the House to the definition of crown lands:

> Any land suitable and available for settlement, lying within fifteen miles of a railway—

That will prevent the operation of the act in a large portion of British Columbia where the crown lands for the most part are in those portions of the province where there is no railway at all. Seven-eighths of the district that I represent are without any railways, but are served by water and a large portion contains land very suitable for agriculture. The same remarks apply to the district of Skeena, except in the northern portion, where the old Canadian Northern line is operating. The same is true to a large extent of the district of North Vancouver, except in the extreme south. I would suggest the introduction of the words:

> —or steamer landing

After the words, "within fifteen miles of a railway." I have in mind a particular valley very suitable for settlement which has a steamer service four times a week. It is provincial crown land to a large extent, and the settlers in co-operation with the provincial authorities might take advantage of the act in that district, but if they have to wait until a railway comes there it may not be possible for them to do anything for twenty years. Then there are a number of large and fairly important islands devoted to or suitable for agriculture—for instance, those lying in the gulf of Georgia running as far north as Prince Rupert. The Queen Charlotte islands have large possibilities agriculturally. It will be a very long time before any railways are built on those islands. They contain a lot of fine land suitable for settlement under this act, but of course their sole transportation from the islands is by water.

Then I see in section 3 it is proposed to:

> Make a loan to any settler on the security of improvements made by such settler—

If the exact wording is to be adhered to the act will be nugatory, because if a man has made a thousand dollars worth of improvements he is fairly well started and does not need any loan. If, on the other hand, as we are told by word of mouth, it is the intention of the government to lend on the same system as the progress loans under the Soldier Settlement Act, it would be all right, because the Soldier Settlement Board, by their officials, first outlined the manner in which the money was to be spent. Then if the loan was for say $1,000, they would make progress payments—that is, after the settler had done $200 worth, they would pay him that sum, and so on. In that way he could live while carrying out his improvements. But this intention is not so expressed, and as the section stands it would imply that the man would have to have made a thousand dollars worth of improvements made before he would be entitled to a loan. The first thousand dollars worth of improvements is much harder to finance than the second thousand, because for the further improvements he has greater security to offer. Sub-section (a) provides that the money will be loaned:

To a settler who is a Canadian citizen.

This is the first time that we have had presented a scheme to promote land settlement which applies to those now in Canada; generally it is confined to foreigners coming in. Perhaps such a man, brought up on a farm but now living in a town, would like to get back on the land, having become tired of urban life. I believe if carried out properly this scheme will result in attracting a considerable number of people from the cities back to the land.

Section 4 deals with settlement loan committees. I cannot see much to commend in the establishment and management of these committees. It says:

A settlement loan committee shall consist of not less than two and not more than three persons—

Suppose the two do not agree with respect to an application for a loan, what is to happen? There is no provision made for this contingency. Then it says that these three persons must be in the employ of the Dominion government or of any provincial government, which apparently means that they must be already in government service in some other capacity, because in a lower section it says they shall not receive any salary or remuneration in addition to that otherwise received. Very well; we will deal with the provincial officials first. Except in the northern part there are in British Columbia no Dominion crown lands at all, and this will be largely a matter of provincial crown lands. The proposition apparently is to employ the services of three provincial officials who are paid for doing something else and whose time is no doubt fully occupied with those duties. This Dominion government—with the consent, no doubt, of the province—is to give those men instructions and orders as to what they are to do. According to the bill one man must be either the Dominion lands agent or the provincial crown lands agent; in British Columbia the term used is "government agent" and that gentleman has many duties to perform. When he is fulfilling those duties is he to be directed, by some power utterly foreign to that which employs him, to go perhaps a hundred miles away and do something else? He will not feel like hurrying to obey the orders of someone who has no authority over him and is not paying him. I think the wording is unfortunate and that a better scheme could be devised.

Then I see by subsection 7 of section 5 that all settlement loans shall be extended under the direction or control of the minister. Of what minister? I presume it is the minister under this act, the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton). That, in conjunction with what I have already said about the formation of the committees, leads me to this point: I urge the government to deal with this matter through either one department or the other, and not jumble it up between two departments. The Department of Immigration and Colonization has had practically no experience in the handling of Dominion lands or loans to farmers, while the Soldier Settlement Board has had a very extensive and somewhat dearly bought experience. They made many mistakes and profited by them, and are much more qualified to carry out the loans under this bill; they have men trained to deal with these very things. Now we are apparently going to take it away from these men—although we are told verbally that their opinions will be asked. That will mean a system of dual control, with the two departments passing the buck from one to the other.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension, if he will permit me to interrupt. The Soldier Settlement Board is now under the Department of Immigration and Colonization, and the minister mentioned in the bill is merely the minister in charge of that board. The board will act in this capacity.

Mr. NEILL: The ministerial head may be the same but nevertheless there are two distinct departments. If it is to be done by the Soldier Settlement Board why not say so and put the whole power in their hands?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Soldier Settlement Board will not be curtailed in their functions or powers; they are now under the Minister of Immigration, and the minister is merely mentioned as the head of the department.

Mr. NEILL: Then why creat these elusive committees? Why not leave it as before, under the Soldier Settlement Board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no objection in the world; that was not thought of when the act was drafted.

Mr. NEILL: It is an afterthought, then, to put it into the hands of the Soldier Settlement Board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, that was the intention all the time. My hon. friend will notice in all these acts that the minister in charge of the department is the minister mentioned. The machinery functions under the board. If my hon. friend objects to the wording there will be no objection to inserting "board" instead of "minister", but in all these departments the minister is in charge.

Mr. NEILL: If the minister is in charge it removes that technical objection, but I do not see the Soldier Settlement Board mentioned anywhere in the bill. I now go back to the constitution of these committees. I would far rather see the machinery put simply and solely under the direction of the Soldier Settlement Board, which is qualified to handle it and which has competent officials already in its employ. In regard to these committees, how are you going to get satisfactory and responsible action from three provincial officials? I would suggest that that be fully considered in committee.

Mr. WILFRID GIROUARD (Drummond and Arthabaska) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Colonization to one of the clauses of the present act.

Subsection (c) of clause 2 defines crown lands as follows: "Crown lands" means any land suitable and available for settlement, lying within fifteen miles of a railway and owned by the Dominion government or any provincial government. In my county, Sir, there are three parishes inhabited by settlers who have established themselves on crown lands. These people have settled at a greater distance than fifteen miles from the railway, and, should the present legislation be adopted, according to the definition given to the term "crown lands," these settlers would be deprived of the benefits of the present act. I might add, by the way, that in the province of Quebec, if I be not mistaken, most of the settlers are established on lands located at a greater distance than fifteen miles from the railway. It, therefore, seems to me that should this legislation in its present form and as stated in Bill No. 16, carry, the province of Quebec would be deprived of the benefits of this legislation.

I am aware that the west is ready to accept and admit that this distance of fifteen miles is sufficient; however, this limit must be further extended, if we wish this legislation to be beneficial to the settlers in the province of Quebec.

Again, I want to especially draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Colonization to this fact, and, I repeat it, if this bill is adopted in its present form, the province of Quebec will in no way benefit by it, and a number of settlers especially in my county, will be deprived of the benefits of this act.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the statement made by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Girouard). This measure would certainly be inoperative in the province of Quebec, should this fifteen miles limit be included in this act.

I had no intention of discussing the matter on the second reading of the bill. I thought that we might look into this question when we were in committee. However, I deem it more loyal to warn the government and the hon. Minister of Colonization that this provision should necessarily disappear, if the act is to be applied throughout the country.

I think it may be stated that in the province of Quebec all the colonization districts lie, to-day—not in near-by settlements, but taken as a whole—at a greater distance than fifteen miles from the railway. This is true of the northern part of the county I represent. The same may be said for the county of Wright, Hull and, I think, for part of the county of Pontiac. The greater part of the lake St. John district which is available for settlement is more than fifteen miles distance from the railway. And precisely for the reason that settlers who venture into the bush at a distance of 25, 30 or 40 miles from the railway, have greater difficulties to overcome than those who settle along railways, it seems to me that we should not say to them: "You shall get less encouragement than the others, because you have more pluck and spirit of enterprise."

On the other hand, I admit that when it is a question of colonization, in the province of Quebec or elsewhere, there has been far too much neglect, in the way of concentrating the inhabitants as was done with such good common sense 250 years ago under the French regime, and in inducing settlers to group together before thinking of spreading here and there through the bush and sometimes on lands little suited for farming. However, to establish an arbitrary ruling as the one which limits the operation of the act to 15 miles from the railway is not likely, in my opinion. to conduce to a very hearty reception of this measure, at least in the province of Quebec. I think the same may also be said for a large section of northern Ontario, where there are already centres for settlement which have been opened up at a greater distance than fifteen miles from the railway. I know nothing of the other provinces. That is to say, that I am not sufficiently acquainted with New Brunswick to know if there are settlers so located; but I would not be astonished if there were in certain sections of the interior of New Brunswick, settlers that are as much in need of assistance as the others, and whose farms are located more than fifteen miles away from the railway.

I do not intend to vote against the second reading of the bill; however, certainly if the bill is to remain as it is, I loyally warn the minister that I shall vote against the third reading.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I would like to support the observations made by the member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Girouard) and by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) regarding clause 2, which limits the benefits of this scheme to those settling on land within a radius of fifteen miles of a railway. In the province of Quebec the new settlement has been extended far beyond fifteen miles. In the Gaspe peninsula, for instance, we have settlers twenty and twenty-five miles away from a railway, and they are getting farther away every day. The whole lake St. John region is many more miles removed from a railway than fifteen miles, and the same applies to northern Ontario. If this arbitrary limit of fifteen miles stands in the bill, practically the whole province of Quebec will be debarred from benefiting under this legislation, and I hope the minister, when we are in committee, will see his way to removing this limit entirely, or at least extending it so far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

Mr. ROGERS: Has the minister made any calculation of the acreage in the three prairie provinces within the fifteen mile limit?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will find that information in Hansard. I am sorry I have not it here at the moment.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Duff in the chair.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

On section 1—short title.

Mr. ARTHURS: Before we proceed with this bill I would like to ask the minister how he reconciles clause 4 with the pronouncement he made on March 25 when the resolution preceding this bill was before the committee. At page 1887 of Hansard my hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) asked this question:

> Am I correct in supposing that you will not advance a loan until you are thoroughly satisfied that the settler has an equity in the property to amply cover your guarantee or loan?

And the answer of the minister was:

> Yes, that is why the provision is put in the bill.

If that answer is correct how is it possible to advise the minister as to the suitability of a settler before he goes on the land? Apparently the bill would suggest that the men who are afterwards to receive loans must be accepted by the minister and by his committee as suitable settlers, and that they, and they only, can receive loans.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is quite correct. The committee would have the right to accept or reject any settler; it could not be otherwise. It is the same with any loan company that is lending money; the character of the applicant for the loan would play quite an important part, I think, in whether or not he would secure the loan.

Mr. BOYS: The minister does not mean, reject the settler, but rejects the application for the loan, does he not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but my hon. friend from Parry Sound was asking whether the committee would have the right to reject the application for a loan from the settler.

Mr. ARTHURS: When the resolution was before the House, the minister also stated that a certain amount would be advanced to the settler immediately upon going upon the land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no.

Mr. ARTHURS: Excuse me. At page 1886 of Hansard the minister said that a certain amount would be advanced, and then:

> As he improves his land and buildings further advances will be made to him up to a maximum of $1,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend is mistaken, or at least I did not wish to mislead the committee at all. I tried to make it clear from the very first that improvements would have to be made before the money was paid out on the land.

Mr. ARTHURS: I will read the minister's exact words as they appear in Hansard:

This—

That is, the amount advanced:

—will enable him to provide for the necessities of life—

It does not say, to improve the property, but to provide for the necessities of life:

—and if he is fortunately situated, he can devote some portion of the advance to the purchase of machinery. As he improves his land and buildings further advances will be made to him up to a maximum of $1,000.

Then he goes on to say, on the next page that no loan will be made until the man has security equal to the amount of the loan. That seems to put the minister in rather a difficult position.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to make it very clear that there will be no payment on a loan until there is improvement at least to the extent of the loan that is made upon the land.

Mr. NEILL: Of the whole loan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of the portion that may be issued.

Mr. ARTHURS: Has the minister had any communication with the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec as to their co-operation under this legislation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. The provinces all have schemes of their own, but they are all interested in immigration. I cannot say whether the provinces will join in a scheme of this kind or not. My hon. friend knows that under the provisions of this bill the lands would have to be turned over to the federal government; at all events, the mortgage would be the first lien upon the provincial lands. The sole desire is to make this bill apply right across Canada in every province that is willing to come in under the scheme.

Mr. ARTHURS: Then would it not be proper to suggest to the minister that he should have consulted with the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec before the bill was brought down, for it is just as important that vacant lands in Ontario and in northern Quebec within the fifteen mile radius should be settled as vacant lands in any other province. The minister is himself suggesting under this scheme that no patent can be issued by the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario until the loan has been liquidated and the full amount returned to the Dominion government. This would suggest to me that the minister would have been in order if he had approached the governments of these two provinces, which, after all, are just as much interested in immigration and in the opening up of their back territories as any other province, as to what action they would take.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One of the difficulties I have always found in connection with matters of this kind is that until you are able to speak definitely, you cannot make any arrangement with any province. I have tried it before in immigration matters. This is an attempt on the part of the government to treat all the provinces of Canada fairly and equitably, not debarring any of them. They are all interested in immigration and all have crown lands with the exception, I think, of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and they can all take advantage of this scheme if they so desire, but only, of course, if they are prepared to give the federal government the first mortgage upon the lands in question. That is why there are provisions in the act for dealing with provincial officials.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister is perfectly aware there are only a few provinces in Canada that have any crown lands. The provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba have no crown lands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Ah, the situation there is quite different.

Mr. ARTHURS: Generally speaking the provinces which have crown lands are Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and, perhaps, New Brunswick. I understand the minister has made no attempt to reach the authorities in these provinces in order to find out whether they will enter into a scheme of this kind or not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For the very good reason that I have, as yet, nothing definite that I can discuss with them. But when this bill has been passed I can do so. I am not sure that every one of the provinces will agree to give the federal government a priority of claim upon their lands. I anticipate that is one difficulty that will be encountered. But at the same time, all the provinces are more or less interested in the settlement of these vacant lands, and I am trying to get the consent of parliament to this bill in order that we may bring that about. Not only that, but the chief thing I am trying to accomplish through the medium of this bill is to hold out some hope to the Canadian who finds himself in an urban centre in this country and who is desirous of going back on the land without the investment of a great deal of money, of realizing that aim. That is the primary object I have in mind. The other object is to thicken up the settlement along the existing lines of railway. In discussing any matter of this kind even if you get one province to agree you have difficulty with another. That is the chief trouble in trying to devise any scheme applicable to the provinces as a whole.

Mr. BOYS: Has there been any special demand for this legislation from any of the provinces outside of the three prairie provinces? As a matter of fact, we have in the province of Ontario, as the minister no doubt knows, what is called the Agricultural Development Board where loans are made to farmers at a low rate of interest and repaid in twenty annual instalments. Of course, in such cases they require to have the title which they do not here. At the moment I cannot conceive that there could be any demand for this legislation from the province of Ontario. If I felt the bill was going to be of any special benefit to that province I certainly would want to support it. I should therefore like to know from the minister, speaking to some extent for the province of Ontario, whether there has been any request from anybody in that province, either from the government or from individuals, calling for this legislation. Then comes the further question: Is it the purpose of this legislation to enable men to get advances of money if they have not security, or is it to enable them to secure loans when they have security? From what the minister has said, I should be inclined to think it is only when they have security that they can get such a loan. If that be the case why cannot they get money now? I can see, of course, one distinct advantage here, and that is in the rate of interest, and perhaps that is the main purpose of the legislation. If I am not putting too many questions at once, I should like the minister to give me information on that point also, because I do not suppose money can be got at five per cent in Ontario or Quebec or in the west—the interest rate in the west is probably seven or eight per cent. I think I am safe in saying that in the province of Ontario, unless you have what is called gilt-edge security, the rate of interest is 6½ per cent. Therefore, there is a distinct advantage in getting an advance of money at five per cent. I am really more interested in the first question I put as to whether there has been any demand for this legislation from any province outside of the three prairie provinces, and if so from whom that demand has come? Is this an idea of the minister or of the department, or have there been persistent demands, perhaps extending over the last year or two, which have culminated in the bill before the House?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a fairly insistent demand from people who were residing in urban localities all over Canada that some scheme be devised which will afford them an opportunity to go back upon the land. I cannot say the demand comes from any particular section of Canada.

Mr. BOYS: May I interrupt the minister at this point? Am I to understand that people in the city who are without means are seeking to go upon the land knowing they cannot get one dollar until they have made improvements to the value of $500 or $1,000 and then only to the extent of such improvements? Everybody knows that you must have money to make improvements, and you cannot get an advance under this bill until improvements have been made. I cannot really see that much good is going to result from such a scheme as that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will understand that the homesteading process is a pretty strenuous one, and the sole object in going upon a homestead is to avoid assuming a burden of debt. Otherwise no one would think of going on unimproved land. I am speaking in the light of experience. Now, there are in Canada—not altogether in the western part of the country, although there is a fairly large proportion there—people, farmers' sons for example, who have had agricultural experience. They have gone into cities and wish to return to the land but they find that the purchasing of improved land involves a heavy mortgage indebtedness. That is what they are anxious to avoid. There is always more or less opportunity for labour for such people in these localities where homestead land or crown land is available. They also have the opportunity of getting out and earning a little money in the older settled districts. You cannot hand three hundred or four hundred dollars to people and say to them "Go upon a given piece of land and earn that money." The chances are that in some cases they will be thoroughly honest about the transaction but as regards the remainder you will probably never see the money at all.

Mr. BOYS: The minister did not think I was advocating such a thing as that, did he?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I did not. I am simply pointing out the difficulties the department has to meet in trying to devise a satisfactory scheme in order to help the people referred to to go upon these lands. Some labour will be necessary before the lands become productive. The hope is to establish the settler on lands where he can put up a home out of the timber found upon the property—not sawn lumber but logs. He will also have to do some clearing. As he progresses with the construction of his buildings and his improvements, payments will be made, on progress estimates if you will, after inspection by officers of the Soldier Settlement Board. That is all that is involved in this. I could not say that there has been any demand for it in Ontario or Quebec except that there comes generally to the department the request that something be done to assist people already in Canada to get back on the land. If this bill is not valuable for that purpose and also does not provide against exploitation of the government, I had better withdraw it. I am willing to have all the criticism offered that members of the committee feel like offering to the bill, but we must try, first, to preserve as far as possible the advances made by the government and, second, to render the maximum amount of assistance to people who are desirous of taking advantage of this measure. I do not deny that I expect a much larger proportion of people in the prairie provinces than in the older provinces of Canada to take advantage of it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we may take it for granted from what the minister has just said and also from the discussion which took place when this legislation was before the House in the form of a resolution, that the advantage, if any, to be derived from this bill will be felt chiefly, if not exclusively, in the three prairie provinces, and that the other provinces will be scarcely affected at all except as regards the amount of expenditure chargeable to the Dominion treasury in connection with carrying out this measure. I would be willing to assist in any settlement scheme which is going to produce results in any part of Canada, whether in the prairie provinces or in the other provinces, and if any reasonable result follows the expenditure of this money in the three prairie provinces I will feel well satisfied. So far as I can see this legislation will have little or no application to the other provinces.

Crown land, as defined in the bill now before us, is land of the Dominion government or of a provincial government lying within fifteen miles of the railway and it must also be agricultural land. In Ontario any land which would comply with that description and with those limitations would be in the far northern part of the province where I do not think we have a great quantity of agricultural land unless it be in what is known as the clay belt. That would be the only portion of Ontario that I think would be affected by the operation of this measure. I do not know what portion of Quebec might be affected, but I would think also in that province the land would be pretty well to the north and land that would not in all probability be settled by agriculturists within the next five, ten, fifteen or twenty years. If, however, the passage of this measure and the making of these loans results in settlement of crown lands in the west under a system which affords proper safeguards to the Dominion of Canada so that the money will be eventually repaid, there may be some merit in the proposal and I for one would not like to oppose it because it may result in good.

The application of the clauses of this bill will be the all-important question. If this money is to be advanced by a suitable loan committee, by men of business experience, men who are actuated solely by a desire for the public weal apart from political considerations and the like, the matter may end well, but there is in this measure a tremendous opportunity to fall down in that very respect. Loose systems will be inaugurated; favouritism, political considerations and the like will creep in. I fear—and I express only my own fear—that in the result the money will not be repaid to the treasury of Canada. That has been our experience in a good many other instances in this country and I am afraid this $5,000,000 of expenditure which is the limit for any one year—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been reduced to $1,000,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —one million dollars will be a matter of loss to the treasury in this way, that it will not be repaid, although if it should result in securing for Canada any substantial volume of settlers I would not look upon it as actual loss to the country. I agree with the minister that the bill as drawn provides that an advance cannot be made except upon improvements actually effected and I see the difficulty which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) has pointed out. How is a man who has no money to make the initial improvements in order to get a loan? The difficulty is going to be to find the man who has the money to go on the land and make the first improvements because, if the improvements are to be such as to afford reasonable security, the settler must in the first instance have some substantial amount to put into the undertaking. Once you have the man on the land with the improvements your scheme may work well, but how you are going to get the initial improvements as security for advances out of this fund, it is hard for one to know.

Mr. FORKE: We might just as well be frank about this matter in commencing and admit that this scheme will apply more particularly to the prairie provinces than to the other provinces of the Dominion, for the simple reason that the prairie provinces have more land of the character that this legislation will be applicable to. We may take a too restricted view of the matter and the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) touched upon it when he spoke of the benefit it would be to the country at large. I am inclined to believe if you can get settlers to go on this land and improve it the country as a whole will benefit more than those settlers.

As regards want of money to begin with, strange as it may seem those of us who were acquainted with conditions that prevailed in the early settlement of the prairie provinces—and I think the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) knows something about this—know that a great number of homesteads were taken up by people who had just enough money to pay the original ten dollars. Yet when I look back over those years and I think of the people who have made good in western Canada, I find in the great majority of cases the people who made good were those very ones who, to commence with, had only a ten dollar stake in the land they took up. Therefore the fact that a man has no money should not stand in the way. There are always many opportunities for men to obtain employment in the west at good wages; for notwithstanding all that we hear about the lack of work, the demand at the present time for men on the farms cannot be filled. That demand always exists, and there is no doubt that any man who is willing to work hard and to adapt himself to his surroundings can advance his material interests by going on the land. He may not find everything precisely to his liking on the farm, but if he is prepared to put up with a little hardship he can easily make a home for himself by taking advantage of the conditions offered in this bill.

I have received letters from people of foreign birth who have some doubt as to whether they will come under the provisions of the bill. As I understand the legislation, I think they will. It is being provided that "Canadian citizen" shall be defined by the Immigration Act. It seems to me that when a man has become a Canadian citizen under that act he will automatically become eligible to take advantage of the provisions of this bill. I am not so sanguine as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) about the great work that will be accomplished. I do not think that you will see vast sums of money spent under this legislation, but it is undoubtedly worthy of a trial. I believe, further, that a great majority of the people who will take advantage of it will be either those of foreign birth or the children of foreign parentage. They are the ones who are willing to adjust themselves to the conditions of agricultural life. They are willing to endure more hardship and to make a more vigorous struggle than our own Canadians are likely to undertake. As a matter of fact I question whether the average Canadian of to-day is really an agriculturist; he looks more to business and to the professions. I am sorry that this is so, but I am afraid that we shall see the same thing take place in western Canada that occurred in the north-western states; unless there is a change the great bulk of our agricultural people—that is to say, the people who will make a success of farming—will be people of foreign birth or parentage. I sincerely hope this will not be the case. My own effort has been to elevate as far as possible the whole calling of agriculture. For that reason I am in favour of the bill inasmuch as in my opinion it will work out to the advantage of the prairie provinces.

I have no jealousy towards any of the other provinces in regard to this legislation. As a matter of fact, as I have said before, anything that will help western Canada to become settled and to make production possible must react to the benefit of the Dominion as a whole. And conditions in the west lend themselves to a bill of this kind to a greater degree than do the conditions in other parts of Canada.

In regard to the fifteen mile limit, I do not know whether anything can be done in relation to Quebec or Ontario, but certainly I am in favour of that provision for the west. At the same time it is possible that something might be done in the way of regulation to extend a further limit, if necessary, to the other provinces. On the whole I firmly believe that the bill is a wise one so far as western Canada goes, and I am prepared to vote for it.

Mr. MARCIL: I just want to amplify what I said before in regard to the province of Quebec. It would be a mistake to suppose that the inhabitants of that province are not going back to the land at all. We have been carrying on an intensive campaign through the clergy, the press, and our colonization societies and have obtained splendid results. One has only to look at the northern part of Quebec along the Transcontinental railway where the Abitibi settlement has sprung up in the last fifteen years. The district is now represented in the local legislature and in parliament, and it has full judicial machinery. There are now twenty parishes in the settlement, and the clergy look to the future of the district with great hopes. The same thing might be said of the lake St. John district. No part of Canada is at present attracting more attention that that district, which is becoming a magnet of interest to the whole world. A new city is springing up there known as Arvida, where aluminum works, water-power and pulp mills will operate. In the lake St. John district, which is many miles from any railway, a most extraordinary settlement is going on; and the same is true, although to a lesser degree, of the counties of Labelle, Wright and the northern part of Joliette, of Montcalm, and of the region beyond Three Rivers, down into the Gaspe territory. We are opening up at the present time in the Gaspe peninsula, in the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspe, a number of parishes half way between the St. Lawrence and the baie des Chaleurs anywhere from fifteen to twenty-five miles removed from old settlements. I should therefore like to see the province of Quebec take advantage of the benefits of this legislation. We should not leave the country to imagine that only the west will be opened up for settlement.

I can understand the arbitrary limit of fifteen miles being fixed for the prairies, but as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) pointed out on a former occasion, we have changed our system of settlement in the province of Quebec from what it was under the French regime. Under the French regime the original immigrants settled along the waterways, which were then practically the sole means of communication. Now, however, they have gone considerable distances inland, so that we have in the province parishes thirty, forty and fifty miles from a railway. Those parishes are fully organized and the impression prevails to-day, as it has prevailed during a number of years past, that the province through its legislature will be forced by public opinion to undertake some such scheme as this as a means of encouraging the people to return to the land.

We all know that the salvation of Canada lies in a more even distribution of its population as between city and country. If the majority of our people continue to live in cities and urban settlements, I do not know what is going to become of the country in the next generation or two. It seems to me that every possible effort should be made to induce the people to go back to the land. If the minister must of necessity fix an arbitrary limit for the west, I urge him to leave the question open, at least so far as Quebec is concerned, until negotiations can be carried on with the provincial government. I am sure that the people of the province of Quebec are anxious to take hold of this scheme because the desire there is to have settlers come in. The people of Quebec will go into parts of the country where the immigrant from Europe or from the British Isles will not go. They are typical woodsmen who are quite prepared to settle in the northern parts of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, just as the pioneers in those provinces did long ago. I do not think, therefore, that they should be debarred from the benefits of this legislation by any provision compelling them to settle within fifteen miles of communication; the localities that are thus accessible are already settled. In order to have new settlements we must go beyond that limit.

Mr. ARTHURS: I rise merely to confirm in part what the last speaker (Mr. Marcil) said. I am opposed to this bill for the reason that it is purely local in its application, being confined to western Canada, and my opinion has been confirmed by the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke), who states quite frankly that he believes that the benefits, if any, will accrue only to that part of the country. There are large territories, both in Ontario and in Quebec, where there are settlers to whom a loan of a thousand or even five hundred dollars would be a decided boon. Those settlers are anxious to remain on the land with their families, and as the hon. member (Mr. Marcil) has well said, they are the best pioneers in the world to-day. They are opening up an empire in the northern part of Ontario and Quebec, and in my opinion this bill, if it is to be effective, should be the subject of negotiation between the minister and the provincial governments who have crown lands of their own. Only on that basis should the legislation be adopted.

Mr. ESLING: The purpose of this bill is to encourage colonization through the lending of money at a low rate of interest. I think it might go further and extend to all land within the Dominion. In other words, you are building up at one end by encouraging people to come here, and you are tearing down at the other end by not recognizing those who are already on the land. In that connection I want to cite a very interesting case which was brought to my attention no later than March 20. It is contained in a letter written to me by a man who is a farmer and a member of a farmers institute, so it is evident that he takes an interest in agricultural affairs. We have in British Columbia a Land Settlement Board which is supposed to make advances to and encourage men on the land. We have also the Soldier Settlement Board, a federal institution. So this man had an opportunity to apply to the two boards. He writes:

I have tried the two local establishments, the Soldier Settlement Board and the Land Settlement Board, to raise a loan on my ranch. I thought that the Land Settlement Board were going to advance the money, but at the final stage they decided that as the money was not to be used for new improvements they would not make the advance.

In other words, you are going to lend money to a new settler as he makes his improvements; but the collateral is not considered good enough for improvements that have already been made. This man adds that he has a clear title to thirty acres, has constructed a five-roomed house, a barn, root houses, cellars, and so on. He writes:

It is my own home, the only one I have, and I want to raise $1,000. I had ten weeks with pneumonia.

Now, you are going to encourage newcomers, but here is a man who has cleared thirty acres, built a house and barn and gone through various trials and hardships. He considers that his ten weeks' illness put him back two years. Worse still, just before recovering he broke three ribs. But that is not the most serious part of his troubles. He goes on:

We had our children sick, two operations in the hospital, and what with doctors bills, and so on, I am about $850 behind.

By this legislation you are inviting men from the city to go on the land, but you are not offering any encouragement to those who are already there. This unfortunate man says:

I am in danger of losing what I have, and after four years and eight months overseas to come back and put every cent I had into a ranch, and then lose it.

You are not doing anything for this man who has put in four years and eight months overseas, but you are inviting some chap from the city or some outsider to go on the land and make improvements, for which you are quite willing to advance him money. These loans should be available to bona fide settlers, the men who by their energies have cleared their land and put up buildings; but you are not disposed to consider them at all.

Mr. SPENCER: Would not the case mentioned by the hon. member be a proper one for a rural credit scheme?

Mr. ESLING: No matter what might be the proper scheme, the fact remains that in British Columbia both the Land Settlement Board and the Soldier Settlement Board are overlooking such a case as this, and if this is not a worthy case I do not know what is. Certainly in my view no worthier case could come before any settlement board. Let me cite a similar case. Twenty miles north of Bassano which is eighty miles east of Calgary, a man purchased 160 acres. He paid $500 in cash. He and his family moved on to the land, fenced and broke 80 acres and seeded it. Unfortunately, the first year they did not get a crop. The next year that man came and asked me as a favour if I would write to the government at Edmonton to see if some arrangement could not be made to give him sufficient seed. The reply came back that nothing could be done. What was the result? The man simply abandoned his place and he and the three members of his family went over to the States. What is the good of encouraging people to come into this country if you are not going to take care of those already here?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What year was that?

Mr. ESLING: In the spring of 1924. I applied to the department at Edmonton for some relief for the man by way of seed. I submit that it is of far greater importance to take care of the people who are already here than to bring in outsiders.

Mr. MULLINS: Mr. Chairman, I want to place myself on record as being absolutely opposed to this measure. As a western representative I cannot agree to anything like this proposal—to take a man out of the city and give him $1,000 or to give a new settler $500 to go on the land. We have had those spoon-fed babies in western Canada and we know something about them. Really I cannot understand the minister bringing in such a bill. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) knows something about conditions close to where he lives. If this measure is passed I can see that the treasury will be exploited, and the security taken for the loans advanced will be practically nil. Take the log house and a few other buildings that a man puts up on his land, they look fairly well, and your inspector comes along and authorizes a loan of $1,000; but that man comes from the city, he is not a success on the land, and finally the government will own it. I cannot understand the minister sponsoring this bill knowing western Canada as he does. It may be all right for Quebec—I do not know what the conditions are there—but let Quebec be responsible for part of the commitment. Such a measure may be all right to help settlers in that province, but so far as western Canada is concerned, I would urge the government to do something to help the man on the land get his products to the markets of the world. Then we will have no trouble in getting settlers there.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. This discussion I submit is entirely out of order. We are dealing with the first section of the bill, its title, and it is a well known fact that in committee of the whole the principle of a bill cannot be discussed; that should be dealt with on the second reading. I think we will really get along much quicker if we discuss the various sections as we come to them instead of making general observations dealing with the whole bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the hon. member says is strictly true, but I never yet saw the rule enforced, and I do not know how in the world it could be.

Mr. NEILL: On the title?

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I mean is, you cannot enforce the rule of not discussing the principle of the bill.

Mr. NEILL: We are dealing with the title only.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But the principle comes into everything, and usually any attempt to enforce the rule takes up more time than would be consumed by the discussion on the bill itself. The objection I have to this bill is that it is no good. There are objections in detail to this clause and that, but what in the world the bill is here for I cannot understand. The member for Brandon says that he supports the bill. We all know that; if he did not the bill would not be here, we would never have had it introduced.

Mr. FORKE: I might remind the right hon. leader of the opposition that he assumes to know everything that I know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is another tribute to the honesty of the hon. member that he did not deny it. Take the whole of Canada into account; this bill is to be paid for and all the money has to be provided by the whole Dominion. Leave out the three prairie provinces in the meantime, and you have six provinces left. Can anyone give me any suggestion of a reason why we should plunge into the arena and offer our money by millions to these six provinces? They are not asking for it; some of them have no crown lands at all. To those who have none, it is a joke to think of their coming in under this bill; their only privilege would be to contribute to the raising of the money. That is all they will get, but in the other provinces which have crown lands, the onus and responsibility for their settlement is solely provincial. That responsibility they are discharging and they are not asking our help. Why then should we address ourselves to them and say, "You do not know how to settle your crown lands. Here is some of the overflowing treasury of Canada; take that and see if you cannot do a little better." Is that not what we are really doing under this measure? Is the treasury of Canada so flush; is the ocean so full that we have to find new channels into which to divert it?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Was not that done in 1919 and 1920, when the highways were built?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Those were equally applicable to the other provinces; there was not any difference in that regard. The whole Dominion is interested in highways, for the reason that the people of one province traverse the highways of another; the people of Quebec are interested in the highways of Ontario and the people of Ontario are interested in the highways of Quebec. Even at that, many a bill has been introduced in this House with more justification than the highways bill of that time, and while I think the grounds were a thousand times stronger than in the present case, the experience of the highways measure was such as to warn us against transgressing even in a case so favourable as this. But here Ontario is not asking for this measure; New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia are surely not asking for more burdens, and that is what this measure brings. Is the cry from the west so plaintive and so appealing that we must do injustice to all the other provinces in order to plunge there and try to get more money out on loans? I do not think it is.

Let us consider the bill as it applies to the west. It covers homestead lands at present unoccupied, crown lands within fifteen miles of a railway. In the west it would be more objectionable if it went beyond the fifteen miles—that I admit; so we need not discuss the area beyond that limit. Let us take the area within fifteen miles of a railway. It is open to homesteading now and has been open to homesteaders for, I should say, thirty years and probably longer. Not a man has gone on that land, or anyone who has gone on has abandoned it as a failure. What is the general presumption as to the character of that land? The general presumption, even on the part of those who do not know it and have not been over the territory, is that it is not good farming land or it would be occupied to-day by men who can get an entry for $10 and have only to make very, very moderate improvements for three years in order to get title to 160 acres. I know from my experience as Minister of the Interior that every quarter section of land that was farmable at all and a fit home for a settler, within fifteen miles of a railway, was continually in demand. I was called upon as the officers of the department were called upon time and again, to pass upon the claims of this man and that man. Many a time those claims were for land not worth farming. Now we are trying to bring in a high pressure policy, to force people to buy these lands as farm lands. Is it wise? We say to them, "We will give you money at 5 per cent interest; we will take it out of the treasury and make the other provinces contribute in order to see if we cannot get someone on that land, to make a farm out of it." I do not see any national object to be served. As a matter of fact you are not going to help that settler; you are going to get him into debt on a bad farm, and if there is any place in perdition worse than that I do not know where it is. Let me repeat; you are going to get the settler into debt on a poor farm.

We have any amount of good land in western Canada; a great deal of it is occupied, and what is not occupied is pretty far from the railway. The objective of parliament should be to create a market for the products of the farm, so that a man on a good farm can make it go. No man on a poor farm can make a success of it; I do not think I have ever known of an exception to that statement. This land, as a rule, is bad land. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) says, "You are going to help the country more than you will help the settler." I would like to ask this committee how we are going to help the country if we do not help the settler. If by lending a settler public money you do not help him, in what imaginable way can you help the country? You cannot do it. You will only get the country into more debt and the settlers in debt, in turn, to the country—a debt which I venture to say at this distance of time will, in the great majority of cases, never be repaid.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) argues against this bill in the province of Quebec. By the way, how is it that when the hon. member is criticizing this government he always speaks in French, and when he is supporting it he always speaks in English? I would like very much if he would reverse the process. In so doing we would have a great many more French speeches by him and the educational effect of his speeches in this House would be much greater. I think, really, that that is the best effect his speeches have, at any rate those made in support of the government. The hon. member criticizes this bill on the ground that it will not apply to the province of Quebec because of the fifteen mile limit. For the very same reason it cannot apply to the western provinces, because within the fifteen mile limit the amount of land which men ought to try to farm is so limited that there is no call for the bill at all.

I suggest to the minister that he simplify the whole problem by giving the bill up. Let him add it to the long list of rejected statutory misfits which this government has introduced; add it to the Platinum bill; the Petersen contract; the single transferable vote, and I do not know how many others; add it to the long, long array of abandoned, deserted children of the administration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, to see my right hon. friend so facetious this afternoon, and I am also glad to see that he has such a wide knowledge of western homestead conditions. I take issue, however, with my hon. friend on a few points which he mentioned. I am willing to grant my hon. friend the wide realm of knowledge which he has exposed to the committee this afternoon; I am ready to admit that this government, as well as my hon. friend's government, have introduced legislation which has received severe criticism at the hands of members of this House; it might well he said that a very great deal of the legislation introduced by my hon. friend could be subjected to very severe criticism. But when he makes the statement that in western Canada there is no good agricultural land within fifteen miles of the existing railways, my hon. friend is very wide of the mark indeed. He might again visit western Canada and thereby increase his knowledge of conditions as they actually exist.

What is the outstanding difficulty, in western Canada and elsewhere? Is it not that we are entirely over-built with railways? Who is responsible for that, may I ask my hon. friend? I do not name any particular government, but he will have to take his share of the responsibility, as will everyone else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not guilty.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend need not say that; the government of which he was a member is just as guilty as any other government, and to just as great a degree. We have this situation on our hands, and when my hon. friend says that these lands would have been taken up long ago if they had been of any value, he is again very wide of the mark. These lands have been passed up primarily for the reason that they are difficult to clear, and my hon. friend is quite right when he says that he as well as myself has been appealed to time and again for the purpose of easing up on the provisions so as to allow a man to earn a patent on these lands. For what purpose—for the purpose of getting a loan in order to let that man get on the land. That is the history of homesteading as I know it and as my hon. friend knows it, if he will only cast his mind back over his administration. Invariably when these loans are put on the land, they carry a rate of eight per cent interest, and sometimes more. The sole object of this legislation is to assist the settler who has the courage and the endurance to tackle this kind of land. May I say to my hon. friend that there is a very considerable area of lands within the fifteen mile radius in western Canada that are just as good as any land in western Canada that is now under agricultural development, and it was with the thought of assisting in their development that this bill has been brought down. If it is of no use to meet a situation of that kind, if it is wise to leave these lands that are within a reasonable distance of existing railways vacant and to put a badge of inferiority on them, just let them remain as they are and haul the tonnage past these lands, all right; we need do nothing about it. But my thought was otherwise. My object has always been to create intensive settlement, not to scatter it. I have frequently said in Alberta that if someone had put a fence across the province at the city of Edmonton and prevented people from going into northern Alberta our problems in that province would have been reduced a thousandfold, and probably that applies to every western province.

My hon. friend says that in the discussion of this bill we connot confine ourselves to the sections under discussion. Neither can I confine settlement. Wherever there is open land available for settlement, whether it is ten or twenty or fifty or one hundred miles from a railway, invariably you will find settlers flocking into that locality. Then we have demands for the building of roads and railways, and all that is incidental thereto.

These lands have been inspected by the Soldier Settlement Board—I am speaking now entirely of the three western provinces—and the board informs me that there is a very considerable area of these lands within fifteen miles of existing railways which have been inspected by them and which will warrant settlement, and warrant advances as settlement proceeds. Rather than have the settler struggle along for two or three years and become, in many cases, discouraged and leave his land, the hope was that with this meagre assistance—it is meagre, and at a low rate of interest as pointed out by the hon. member for North Simcoe—settlement would be encouraged. But if this assistance will be of no help to the settler, then we had better abandon the whole project, and leave the lands, as my hon. friend has designated them, as lands that are unfit for settlement. But I do not agree with him. Profiting from the experience the Soldier Settlement Board have gained in recent years in settling lands that were improved, I think we shall not have the large number of mistakes that were made in the past, perhaps in consequence of more immature knowledge with respect to settlement, and I think the bill will serve a very useful purpose.

With respect to the older provinces, there is no desire to interfere with their settlement. The claim has been frequently made in eastern Canada that this government does nothing, as previous governments did nothing, to assist in the settlement of the older provinces or to keep people there. As a matter of fact, there is a general demand from the older provinces that the federal government assist them to get more settlement; in Nova Scotia, for instance. I notice my hon. friends in the back benches appear to applaud those who opposed this bill. In the province of Nova Scotia there is an active demand that we procure settlers for them. For what purpose? Primarily to settle upon abandoned lands. There does not seem to be any particular demand for labour in those provinces, and that is the demand we get from them, and we have arranged with the government of Nova Scotia to bring in boys, whom they undertake to settle. The governments in the older provinces I am well aware are trying to settle their crown lands, and are making loans upon them. It is true that very few provincial governments are making loans on improved lands in western Canada, with the exception of Saskatchewan, but in British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec, they are all doing something to try and settle their crown lands. In all probability the fifteen mile limit would be a bar in the case of the older provinces, but I am convinced, as is the leader of the opposition, that we should not go beyond the fifteen mile limit in western Canada.

Mr. HANNESSON: When this matter came up by way of resolution in committee, I mentioned some phases of this bill in regard to which I have not as yet received any satisfactory explanation. If Manitoba can be benefitted by this legislation, the constituency I represent may also be benefitted by it. Whenever immigration or settlement is discussed in this House it seems to be taken for granted that the expenditure will be made for western Canada alone. I would like to remind the committee that in 1924, of the 90,000 odd immigrants who came to Canada, 40,000 stayed in Ontario, and 15,000 in Quebec, so I do not see why it should be taken for granted that only western Canada will necessarily benefit from a colonization scheme, though people of discretion will probably go to the west. Moreover, the government has probably a greater responsibility in connection with western lands, because they still have control of the crown lands.

The suggestion has been made that this legislation could not benefit the settler because he must first make his improvements before he could get a loan. I disagree wholly with that view. If a man who is fitted to go on the land and settle knows he can get a loan when improvements have been made he will be able to find means of staying on the land, and if the land is adequate security for the loan, I would not oppose it on that ground at all. I can conceive of substantial good being done if it is possible for people to get loans as part of a colonization scheme, but the making of loans to individuals is not the government's responsibility, because they should not encourage people to go on the lands who cannot, under the conditions I am going to detail, make a success of farming, either for lack of money or because of certain mental and physical characteristics. The reason lands within fifteen miles of a railway in Manitoba have not been settled in the past is this: By virtue of their not having obtained patents municipal organization has been impossible and without it the settlers cannot do the very things that are essential to make settlement a success. This is the fundamental mistake the government has always made in colonization. They put on these lands people with nothing, or next to nothing, and they have no capacity by municipal organization to raise the money that is absolutely necessary to provide adequate roads and the drainage that is necessary. A man can work as hard as he likes and then come back to his farm, but that land is going to remain unproductive and he cannot make any headway if there is no municipal organization to provide the essential things the settlement needs. Settlements were made twenty years ago between the lakes. They tried or organize municipalities, and they are now disorganized. The settlers have not been able to make a success, not because they were unwilling to hew down the timber and clear the land, but because, having no municipal organization, they could get no drainage and no roads. Many have abandoned these lands, and unless the government realizes its responsibility in this respect, settlement on these heavy timbered lands, which are generally wet too, will not be a success, and so in connection with any assistance of the kind detailed in this bill the government should provide, as was done away back in the seventies and eighties, for a certain amount of drainage and road building to make settlement possible. Then, I maintain, these people will not need loans, or they will be able to get loans from private sources. That is why I asked the minister whether he was going to make any provision for a priority of municipal taxation, or whether he was prepared to give any undertaking that the taxes would be paid by the settler concurrently with the interest on the loan, and in the event of failure by that settler and the government having to take back the land, whether they would recognize the lien for taxes when they did so. I think these two provisions ought to be inserted in the bill because if you do not make municipal machinery and municipal work possible you are going to create an added difficulty for struggling municipalities so many of which have become disorganized in the last few years and in which the settlers have abandoned their lands. There is one other question I should like to ask and it is this: If the bill carries, would the settler who is now on crown land for which he has not received a patent be entitled to come under the act, and will the taxes created in respect to such lands have priority over the government loan that is now proposed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the settler is earning his patent he undoubtedly will have the right to make application. If taxes have accrued against the lands they are not collectable anyway, and they could not have priority over a mortgage.

Mr. HANNESSON: They would in the case of an ordinary mortgage.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking now of unpatented lands.

Mr. HANNESSON: Yes, unpatented lands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend must remember there is no mortgage on unpatented lands.

Mr. HANNESSON: What I want to know is this: When the government propose to make a loan to the settlers, in such cases will they provide for the payment of the accrued taxes in case the settler now on unpatented land should receive a loan? A mortgage company would have to do that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They would be in the same position.

Mr. HANNESSON: That should be included in the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You cannot in such a bill as this cover all possible cases that may arise. I think it is safe to take it as an axiom that the federal government will not become responsible for taxes on crown lands. We have that difficulty at the moment, as my hon. friend knows in the matter of soldier settlement. Very strong pressure has been brought to bear on the government to assume responsibility for these taxes, but having given the matter very serious consideration, I do not see how it can be done. The only thing for the Soldier Settlement Board to do is to resettle these lands as fast as they can and make them subject to taxation.

Mr. HANNESSON: Will the government give the same assurance with respect to this bill, if it goes into effect, as they have given to the municipalities in the case of soldier settlement lands, that the taxes will be paid each year while the settler is on the land, and in case he is put off that they will be paid when the land is resold?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would want to take taxation matters into very serious consideration before venturing to pronounce any opinion with respect to them.

Mr. HANNESSON: Will the minister say that he will give as assistance towards the colonization aid to improvement schemes that will be necessary if settlers are put on these lands?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Such a thing is not contemplated in the bill at all. As a matter of fact my hon. friend knows that it is a good many years since the federal government gave assistance to drainage schemes. Of late years we have repeatedly pointed out to the provinces that when they desired to go into drainage schemes involving crown lands we would turn the lands over to them at the price of one dollar an acre. That is the arrangement that was made between the prairie provinces and my right hon. friend who leads the opposition.

Mr. HANNESSON: The minister does not quite understand the situation. What I referred to was wet lands that had been homesteaded already, where conditions rendered it impossible for the settler to remain on them. I ask, is it worth while to put men on more lands of such a character under conditions that will not enable municipalities to finance the necessary improvements?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think I can say at once to my hon. friend that lands of that character will not come within the category of lands on which loans can be made because it would lead to trouble at once. Why should men be encouraged to go on lands of that character unless some provision is made for drainage?

Mr. BOYS: We will assume that the settler has gone on the land, remained there for the required period, put on certain improvements, obtained his patent, and then wants his loan. As I read the bill when the land is once patented it does not apply at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. HAY: Coming from one of the large rural constituencies in the province of Manitoba, I wish to place myself on record with respect to this bill. In my opinion the measure will not help very materially to settle vacant lands within fifteen miles of a railway in Manitoba for the reasons pointed out by previous speakers. Those who wish to take advantage of the provisions of the bill first have to establish themselves on the land at their own expense, and afterwards make application to the government for a loan. I agree with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) that the security for such loans granted to the settlers will be practically worthless. We know that from experience. Those of us who have had experience in pioneering conditions, in Ontario and Quebec as well as in western Canada, know that the men who make good on the land are those who go there on their own initiative. I do not think the present scheme is practicable. I have heard the claim made during this discussion that the western provinces will benefit from the proposed legislation to a greater degree than the other provinces of the Dominion. Speaking for the province of Manitoba, if I may be allowed to do so, I do not think it has made any demand for such legislation at the present time. That is my opinion. At any rate I have not heard any such demand from my people in Manitoba. I believe the bill will involve an added liability to the Dominion, and at the same time will not help this country to any material extent. Consequently I join in the opinion which has been expressed by other speakers that the bill might very well be dropped for the present.

Mr. WARD: I may say that I am in favour of the bill. I was somewhat disappointed to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hay) and also the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins). I am not surprised at the remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition. I think he has been so long detached from western Canada, and from the conditions there, that he has lost touch with questions of this kind. I stand squarely behind this legislation. A number of hon. members who have spoken have failed to appreciate the difference between the possibilities of settling on a homestead or a new location to-day and those which existed twenty years ago. I venture to say there is not a member in this House from western Canada who homesteaded, say twenty or twenty-five years ago, who will stand up here and say that he would not regard with some fear the possible success he might experience in attempting to homestead under the conditions which prevail at this time. It is impossible for anyone without any money to homestead at this time such lands as are available in western Canada and that is the reason why our people are not homesteading. It is easy for hon. members to stand up in their places in this House and talk about what they did twenty-five years ago. I homesteaded twenty-five, twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago and I know many others who homesteaded about that time and were successful, but I would not attempt to homestead to-day without any money and in the belief that I would be successful. It "can't be did"—that is all. The standards of twenty-five years ago are not the standards of to-day. When I homesteaded, if I had a good suit of overalls I thought I was pretty lucky. That is not the case to-day. In those days you could purchase lumber for ten dollars a thousand; to-day it costs about sixty or sixty-five dollars a thousand, and other things cost in proportion. It is unfair to expect a new settler to go back to the standards of thirty or forty years ago.

This legislation is the first approach to anything tangible in the direction of a real settlement scheme. Australia is spending money by the hundreds of millions on settlement. It has been my privilege to discuss the question of land settlement in Australia with members of the Australian government and they tell me it is the finest scheme that has ever been introduced into that country. They have almost to build fences around Australia to keep the people out. We must spend money if we are going to get settlers on the land. I hope this bill passes because it will be a real boon not only to the western provinces but to many other parts of Canada. I am sure any hon. member who has travelled through western Canada and has seen the millions of acres of good land lying along our railways with no settlers on it must be impressed with the necessity of putting people on that land in order to furnish traffic for the railways running through those areas. In fact, I would have favoured a more extensive scheme and I am sorry the amount has been reduced to $1,000,000. I think $5,000,000 was little enough; I had hoped the $5,000,000 would all be spent this year and $5,000,000 a year would be expended for a number of years, because I am sure this would be advantageous to Canada from not only a railway but a commercial point of view.

Mr. MANION: I am sure the minister after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) must feel like the man in the desert who has not seen water for a long time, because most of the discussion in this House this afternoon from all sides has been condemnatory of this legislation. The hon. member for Dauphin followed the habit that is becoming rather prevalent in certain sections of this House, of taking the attitude that when the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) opposes anything, he therefore is doing so simply for political reasons. I listened very carefully to the speech of the leader of the opposition and he put up arguments that were unanswerable and that have not yet been answered. Furthermore, when the hon. member for Dauphin states that the leader of the opposition has been detached from the prairie provinces, I might point out to him that he is not half as much detached from the prairie provinces as some forty or forty-five Progressive members were detached on October 29 last. He is still attached to Portage la Prairie, and besides that he is a farmer on rather a large scale, probably on a much larger scale than the hon. member for Dauphin. That is by the way.

I have been listening to the discussion this afternoon, and while I do not pretend to be any authority, even of the slightest kind, on settling lands in the prairie provinces, I have noticed that most of the legislation coming in this year is apparently brought in entirely for a sectional reason. Nearly everything that is brought in deals largely with the prairie provinces. Nobody wishes the prairie provinces better success than I do; I want to see them progress with the rest of Canada; but I notice whatever government immigration scheme is brought in it is for the prairie provinces. The tariff is going to be reduced because the prairie provinces desire that; the Hudson Bay railway is going to be completed because that is the desire of the prairie provinces; this land settlement scheme applies practically entirely to the prairie provinces, and coal is to be brought from Alberta because the prairie provinces will be benefited thereby.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to any of the assistance which we give them, but I think this government is the government of the Dominion of Canada and not just the government of the prairie provinces. Furthermore, I consider this legislation has been brought down in an unprepared condition. The very fact that the minister to-day cuts down the allowance which he is going to spend on this scheme from $5,000,000 to $1,000,000 shows that the legislation was not prepared. To bring in a bill for the purpose of spending $5,000,000 upon a scheme of this kind and then to cut the amount himself at one slash from $5,000,000 to $1,000,000, does not speak very highly of the preparation given to the bill.

As regards immigration, I listened as carefully as I always do for educational reasons at least, as my leader said, to the speech of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), because he speaks his beautiful language in such a manner that most of us, even those who are tyros at it, can follow his remarks. I say that with no disrespect to those who do not speak it as slowly and carefully as my hon. friend. He brought out the point that Quebec would not benefit very much by this legislation. There is a great section of this country which should be given more attention by this and any succeeding government than it has been given in the past for the purpose of settling the land, and that is the great section of northern Ontario, that gap between North Bay and the Manitoba boundary, which has an area as great as the countries of Germany and France combined and yet which has a population of, perhaps, a couple of hundred thousand people. It contains hundreds of thousands of acres of good agricultural land when it is cleared. It is bush land, land which the good French-Canadian people love to settle upon and which many people in Europe would be glad to settle upon. It is an immense gap extending for some 700 miles between North Bay and the Manitoba boundary where the railways do not get the traffic they should, across which three railways run, and which should be built up if at all possible to provide traffic for those railways in that section where railway traffic is most scarce. That applies also to the northern sections of Quebec. I believe in such questions as this we should bring in bills more applicable to the whole of the Dominion than just, as the minister pointed out himself, to the prairie provinces. He mentioned earlier in his remarks this afternoon that he had not consulted with Ontario or Quebec or the other provinces. He said that he wanted to get this legislation through, to have this bill pass the House, and then he would consult with the other provinces. Might I ask this honourable House if that is the time to consult with Ontario, Quebec, the Maritimes and British Columbia as to bringing about settlement which will apply to them as well? I would suggest to the minister that the time to consult with Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces, outside of the prairie provinces which are directly affected by this legislation, is before the bill becomes law and not after, and I make the suggestion, with the best of intentions and with no politics back of it, that this bill should be held up; that the minister should consult with Ontario, Quebec, the Maritimes and British Columbia as well as the prairie provinces, of course, and get their ideas upon some form of a bill which, when brought in, will help to settle those vast lands of northern Ontario and Quebec, which will help to bring back settlers into those lands in the Maritimes and in British Columbia as well as in the prairie provinces. I do not think it is fair to the rest of this country that on nearly all occasions the other provinces should be asked simply to foot bills the effect of which is to settle people only in the prairie provinces. I suggest in all sincerity to the minister that he should hold up this bill, consult with the other provinces affected, and endeavour to bring in a bill which will be satisfactory to all sections of this country instead of merely to the prairie provinces, and apparently the present legislation is not very satisfactory to them if we are to judge by the speeches which we have heard from all parts of this House to-day.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I want to say a word on two phases of the question before the House. First I desire to support what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Manion). Listening to the discussions in this House, one would fancy that there were no agricultural lands left in any part of Canada except the prairies; but anyone who knows anything about Quebec and Ontario knows exactly what my hon. friend has pointed out, namely, that there are hundreds of thousands of acres of the very best agricultural land waiting for settlement in the northern parts of those two provinces. At this point let me say that if in working out schemes of this character something were done for the lands referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Mullins), similar to what has been done in northern Ontario and northern Quebec, where the governments, by means of the construction of highways and through drainage on a large scale, before the settler goes on the land, have spent their money to open up the country and make it accessible to men desiring to settle, people would much more readily take up agriculture. I make that general observation in passing.

Coming to the principle of the legislation—I understand we are discussing the preamble to the bill—I want to ask the government how many of these schemes are going to be presented to parliament. When the estimates were brought down some time ago considerable noise was made about the saving that was being effected this year in comparison with last year. Have all these schemes, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, been taken into consideration in the preparation of those estimates? This is just one bill; there are several others to be dealt with, one with regard to old age pensions, which will entail an expenditure of twenty or twenty-five million dollars, another with relation to rural credits, others in regard to railways, and so forth. These various proposals are to be submitted to parliament, and the haphazard manner in which they are being introduced, as my hon. friend from Fort William has suggested, is evidenced in this very discussion to-day. The minister, after preparing this bill himself, does not know apparently how much money he really requires. On a former occasion he informed the House that he wanted $5,000,000 to carry out the proposals of the bill, but to-day he finds that he requires only $1,000,000. How did the minister arrive at that estimate of $5,000,000, when he can be persuaded to reduce it now to $1,000,000? Does not this very fact suggest that we should pause to consider the direction in which we are travelling in the matter of these expenditures? The purpose for which the last parliament was dissolved and an election held, if the Prime Minister's words mean anything, was that the peoples' representatives might deal with such outstanding problems as railway transportation, taxation and questions of equal importance. And this is the way in which we are dealing with those great problems: we are solving them by bringing in slipshod measures to which mature consideration has not been given,—measures that will mean an addition to the burden of debt under which the people of the Dominion are now suffering.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me say in reply to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) that what has been said in regard to the efforts of the government in the past to secure settlers for western Canada is undoubtedly true, for the reason that the desire then was to fill up the western plains. That that settlement has been profitable to the rest of Canada no one will deny. But the same thing is not true to-day. You cannot have now a colonization policy that does not apply to the whole Dominion. Considerable sums have been spent to move settlers from Quebec into northern Ontario, and if my hon. friend will consult the representatives of that part of the country, he will find that a large migration has taken place in that direction.

Mr. MANION: Has the money been spent by this government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To some extent.

Mr. ARTHURS: Voted in what way?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This government has spent some money although not to any great extent.

Mr. ARTHURS: Under what vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Under the immigration vote. No one can travel through northern Ontario, as one must do to go to western Canada, without realizing that there is a vast area of agricultural land in that section of the province. That land we have tried to advertise just as well as other lands in the Dominion available for agricultural purposes, and it is not true that people from the Old Country are all going to western Canada; many of them are going into the northern parts of Ontario and Quebec It was to assist generally in such settlement that this bill was prepared. My hon. friend (Mr. Nicholson) is critical because of a reduction in the amount asked for. I was asked a pointed question the other night by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), whether in my opinion we required $5,000,000. It is apparent, I think, that we shall not require and cannot spend any considerable amount during the present year. It was therefore with a desire to secure the support of the committee in something that did not appear extravagant, but which nevertheless would be effective, that I reduced the amount. I assure the committee that this government does not desire to spend a great deal of money; one of the things that we seek to avoid every day is unnecessary expenditures. It is however our wish to assist in the development of the country in order to increase our population, particularly on agricultural lands, and our expenditures are all aimed at that object. If development can take place on the land, then the whole fabric of industry is bound to feel the beneficial effects. Having that in mind I reduced the amount. I rather resent being criticized for having tried to meet the wishes of parliament. Of course, I have no objection to make if hon. gentlemen are of the opinion that the bill is no good and will not serve the purpose for which it was introduced, although I take issue with that suggestion.

Mr. ARTHURS: We did not say that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Some hon. gentlemen have been saying it.

Mr. ARTHURS: The purpose for which it was introduced might be a different matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I leave that to my hon. friend. If he has an idea that any ulterior motive is behind the bill, he is welcome to say so. But I wish to assure the committee once more that it was my sincere hope in introducing the bill that it would meet a situation which we have not met previously. I repeat what I have pointed out on several occasions, that my information is that the lands which will be benefited by this scheme and which have been inspected by the Soldier Settlement Board lie within fifteen miles of existing railways, are good agricultural lands, perfectly suitable for settlement, and lands which men can develop if they are given an opportunity. If the bill does not meet the requirements I shall be surprised, but I think it will. That is my opinion, based even upon my own knowledge of the situation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Both the minister's former speech and the present one are intended to convince the committee that there is a field for the application of the bill in what are known as the scrub lands of the west, lands that are hard to cultivate and hard and very expensive to bring into a state in which cultivation is possible. I am afraid the minister has not convinced me. I do not think there are lands in quantity within 15 miles of a railway which are not either so heavily scrubbed as to be valueless for homesteading or for some other reason are not security for $500 or $1,000. In the first place, neither $500 nor even $1,000 will go very far towards clearing these lands. The minister may get his man on the land and leave him to put the $500 of his mortgage to this purpose or that. But when he goes back next year he will find the scrub there still and the mortgage on it, too, and it will be a pretty scrubby mortgage. The minister will find that he will lose this money. I speak rather feelingly on the subject because I have had some experience myself. You cannot get those lands cultivated by a system of government subvention. I will put the case in a nut shell this way: Do not try to help the settler by helping him into debt; help him to get out of it. If you get more people into the district, then it will be far better to sell the land at $1 an acre or anything you can get for it at auction; for the man who buys it will have to see that is cultivated pretty soon or his taxes will eat him out of house and home. If you get people into the district, then the economic conditions will invite cultivation of land like that; but to try to force cultivation in advance by government loans means loss of money, and it does not get settlement. The minister knows as well as I do that in western Canada, in Ontario even—I doubt not in Quebec, although that is likely there; certainly in the Maritime provinces—there are large acreages of abandoned land now, and a lot of it is pretty good land. I have seen in Prince Edward Island just about as nice a farm as one would want to live on, abandoned, the farmer gone. There are doubtless several reasons for it; but in the face of that situation, with land privately owned that can be bought for almost nothing, how can you justify taxing those people in order to force a premature cultivation of heavily scrubbed land in the west? And especially how can you justify taxing the owners of land in western Canada—of fairly good land which cannot be made to pay even to-day; at least you cannot get people on it—how can you justify taxing those people in order to force new land under cultivation?

Now, I know Saskatchewan and Alberta have not been invaded by the modern weed quite to the degree that Manitoba has, but it is moving in that direction, and instead of seeking to force virgin land under the plough by this piece of legislation and that, by this subvention and that, it would be far better to intensify work on the land already under cultivation—and there is far more of it under cultivation today than we are getting results from—I say, it would be far better to intensify cultivation on that land and by assistance restrict the inroads of these weed pests. The more land you bring under cultivation the harder that problem is.

I do not believe in trying to anticipate the future, in trying to get more and more land here, there and everywhere under the plough. As a matter of fact what good is it going to do the farmer to get more farmers there? Get people to use the farmer's products, and you help him. How is it we are exerting ourselves so much to get somebody else to produce more grain? Everybody seems to agree—some on this side of the House—that we ought to concentrate on getting more people on the land. Well, I never had any sympathy with that view at all. I want to get more people of all occupations into this country. From the standpoint of the farmer, the more people you get in other occupations and the fewer in his the better for him. You are not helping the farmer by adding to his competition, while at the same time those who consume his products are dwindling. I do not believe in this special legislation to coax, cajole, bribe people to go on the land. They will go on the land if you make conditions such that it will pay them. We will make the land pay by our policies, which would add to the population of the country. Now, there may be other policies aside from those which we habitually press upon this House; doubtless there are. But one of our policies is not to take hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the treasury to force into premature cultivation lands that are not needed to be under cultivation at all, because of the great excess of lands that are already under cultivation. Scores of thousands of acres of land, even in our western country, have already been rescued from the scrub; millions of dollars have been spent to bring the land into that condition, yet to-day it is not half cultivated. This is still more true, let me repeat, of the older provinces. Under these circumstances it surely is not a wise policy, it certainly is not an economic policy, to be making provision at this time of day in our legislation for millions of dollars of public money to be loaned in these ventures on very hazardous security.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the House has already twice committed itself to the principle of this bill, first when the resolution was before the House and to-day when the bill was given second reading. Yet the discussion is along the line of the whole principle of the bill. Now that we are in committee of the Whole there are a number of details in the bill that I think I could agree to change myself. So why hold up the bill at this stage when we can now discuss it section by section and see if it can be improved in any respect? As I say, the principle of the bill has been endorsed twice by the House, yet the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) would apparently now like to see the bill thrown in the waste paper basket.

Mr. MANION: We endorsed the principle of the Petersen contract, too, and kicked it out afterwards.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are not discussing that just now. The gentleman concerned in the contract, for obvious reasons, could not proceed with it any further.

Mr. MANION: After it was kicked out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The right hon. leader of the opposition says that by no system of subvention are you going to succeed in settling these lands. Is this a subvention, Mr. Chairman? Is it not a loan? My understanding of the meaning of "subvention" is something given as a grant or bonus or subsidy. This is a loan, and it might just as well have been said of the system adopted by the United Kingdom over a hundred years ago—of assisting men by loans to settle in Ontario—that it could not possibly succeed. But it did succeed. And the same system is just as applicable in these days. At no period in the history of this country during the last hundred years has there not been some assistance given to men to go on the land. During the last forty years on many occasions the government of the Dominion has granted seed grain loans to homesteaders to a larger extent individually than the extent of the loans provided for in this bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister state what money was loaned by the British government for land settlement in Ontario?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The assistance was given to individual settlers before there was representative government here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Assistance was given to the Empire Loyalists by the Canada Company, but the Canada Company was not the British government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Immediately after the Napoleonic wars ex-service men were assisted to come out to Canada. And my right hon. friend opposed assistance to ex-service men the other day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is another bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All of a sudden it has become an offence to assist land settlement. My right hon. friend seems to be filled with suspicions to-day. Everything is construed to have some sinister purpose. We are to gather political support by means of these loans, it is said. As a matter of fact we are carrying out in a different way the same kind of assistance that has been given as long as I can remember. I know as far back as 1870 seed loans were granted to the farmers of the west, and similar loans have been made a dozen different times since then. Now that it is given in the form of a settlement loan we are told it cannot succeed.

Mr. MULLINS: How much money of his own would the minister put in a proposition of this kind, knowing the west as he does?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not a money-lender at all, but I know that assistance to men at the stage of their experience contemplated by this bill, if given wisely, is productive of magnificent results. But to oppose indiscriminately the whole principle of assistance astonishes me. I do not know my right hon. friend's genealogical tree, but I venture the guess that his progenitors were assisted in some way to come to Canada. I know mine were, and I think very few of the old timers in Ontario did not receive some form of assistance. You see some of the old logging apparatus lying around the farms yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My people were not assisted, and I will put the results of that policy against the results of the other.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Look at what Canada would have lost if the forefathers of my right hon. friend had not come to this country. I do not know what has happened to my right hon. friend to-day, but he has taken a different course from any he has ever taken before. I do not want to attribute any particular motive, but now he does not want this bill after it has twice been endorsed by the House. I am not much on order or orthodoxy, but I think this is a most promiscuous way of dealing with the question. Why not start at section one and see where we agree and where we differ?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have heard many charges against the British government in days gone by, but until to-day I never heard that they were responsible for the family of the hon. Minister of Agriculture coming to Canada. I have wondered for some days what this system of British government loans on farm lands in Canada was, to which the hon. minister referred. I cannot speak with the authority of antiquity which my hon. friend can command, but I never heard of it before. I know there was assistance given on the principle of a reward to the soldiers, especially those who came to this country during the war of 1812 and who wished to stay, but we are now told that there was a system of loans on lands for the purpose of settlement, made by the British government. If there was such I must frankly admit that I have never heard of it. In the district from which I come, which is some distance from the district of the minister, there was a system of loans by the Canada Company—I think that was the title of the company—but I do not know of any relationship between that company and the British government. From that company the settlers of western Ontario obtained loans; it was a loan company only, and I think if my hon. friend will go back and trace the family Bible of the Motherwells he will find that there was no assistance of any other kind in eastern Ontario or in the county of Lanark.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, there was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Unless it was given to soldiers, and that is another matter. There is just one other question on which I would like to touch, and that is the argument that this measure has been endorsed twice by the House. The minister will remember that when the bill was before the House, so many suggestions were made going to the root of the matter which the minister promised to take into account, that we let the bill have first reading. It was then thought better to go to the second reading in order that these proposals could be discussed. The minister handed me the only proposal, so far as I know, which he intends to incorporate in the measure. I would give this word of advice to the minister—that he withdraw this bill. I do not think he is in much danger, but I do say that if he is minister five years from now he will rue the day he ever urged this measure upon parliament.

Mr. EVANS: While not enthusiastic for the bill I do think there is need for this class of legislation. Apparently it is opposed to-day by a number of hon. members because it is thought to be a measure for western Canada, and anything of that nature is opposed as a matter of course. It is taken that this measure is for western Canada entirely, and some hon. members have already expressed themselves as being tired of supporting the west by legislation of this kind. The people of the west have not particularly asked for it, but I do think that if a man wants to get on the land he should be assisted to do so. There are many such men to-day in the cities; they would be glad to go on a piece of land they could call their own if they could only be sure of having sufficient provisions until some improvements are made. That is a most worthy ambition, and I think it should be supported.

So far as I can see by the bill the loans will be given in instalments, as improvements are made. I really think this measure is needed; any scheme that will put the people back on the land should receive support. Why such a scheme is needed is, of course, another question. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) admits that if the industry paid its way there would be no need of such assistance. I only wish the right hon. gentleman would apply that principle to all industries in Canada. If an industry can pay its way, surely plenty of people will go in for that industry. The fact is that with the exception of agriculture all our industries have been built up by subventions, if my right hon. friend cares to use that word. I quite agree that you cannot build industries on subventions, as the right hon. gentleman has stated in this House many times during this session, and just now the industries so built are tumbling down on every side. This is a different scheme, simply a loan which is to be paid back within ten years, I think, of the time the settler makes entry.

I would like to answer an accusation which was made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) when discussing this bill the other day. The hon. member seems to think that the more settlers there are in western Canada, the more the east will be called on to pay for the hauling of their wheat to the seaboard. He said that $6,000,000 was lost last year in that way—a statement made in utter ignorance of the facts. He also said that the east has borne the burdens of the west long enough, but such is not the case. Anything that has ever been done in western Canada to further the settlement of great tracts of land has been to the benefit of the east, and surely there can be no particular opposition to this bill, which is so small in its scope. It will not be generally taken advantage of. In my estimation $1,000,000 would pay the first year's instalments, and I do not think more than that amount would be required in any single year. I do not think this country can do better than encourage our own people to go on the land and stay there. Other governments have been accused of being more willing to help foreigners than to help real Canadians, but here is a scheme which will put real Canadians on the land, and it certainly puzzles me to hear it opposed. I hope the minister will not see fit to withdraw the bill, and I trust that it will receive the support of the House.

Mr. McGIBBON: I hope the minister will be good enough to withdraw this bill. Charming as is his personality, and able as he is to get legislation through this House, I can assure him that this is a measure which does not appeal to the House or the country. The great thing the people of this country are desiring to-day from the government is economy. People are burdened and sick of taxation; it bears down upon them, ruining industry and diminishing the employment of labour. Yet this government does not seem capable of realizing in the least the necessities of the hour.

Some hon. members have said they can see no virtue at all in this bill. Looking at it from the standpoint of the Minister of the Interior and the political necessities of the hour, I can see considerable virtue in it. In the first place, the settler has to be approved by the minister or by his agent. Secondly, the improvements he makes on the land have also to be approved by the minister or by his agent. Thirdly, after he gets his loan sanctioned by the minister, the minister and his agents are going to step in and tell him how he is going to dispose of the money. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no self-respecting man is going to bow the knee to any government or even accept a gift from them of one hundred or one hundred and sixty acres of land, with five hundred or one thousand dollars thrown in, and have himself tied up to the government in that manner that this bill would tie him up. It is an infringement on his liberties as a citizen of this country, and it is something the average man will not stand for.

This bill is lacking in two essentials to any successful settlement scheme. The first essential is to get the proper individual; that I think is the greatest asset in any undertaking.

The minister says in effect: I am going out into the highways and byways to gather up men and put them on these lands. I am going to give them a hundred or an hundred and sixty acres of land and five hundred or one thousand dollars in money. Hon. gentlemen opposite are indeed living up to the name of their party and trying to prove themselves liberal. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this scheme was condemned as a failure when the minister informed us where he was going to get these settlers. Farming to-day, as everyone knows who has had anything to do with it—and I have spent some years on a farm myself—is not an occupation that anybody can make a success of, yet the minister says he is going to pick up, in the cities and towns and villages, people who have been failures, more or less, or they would not be leaving; transplant them on farms which he himself admits are second or third class farms and where the settler will have no earning power for the first three or four years. And he expects these people to make a success. The thing to my mind is utterly false in its conception, and in its operation will work to the detriment of this country. I am not a prophet, but if this scheme goes through I venture to say that it will have the soldier settlement scheme beaten by miles in the losses heaped upon this country, having regard to the capital invested. What has the settler to do? He goes out and locates a bit of land; he does a bit of work on it. The next thing he has to do is simply to get an inspector to pass on the land, and that is not very difficult. Then he gets his loan, and once he gets the money, what will he do? If he is sick of the farm, he will put the money in his pocket and walk off, and this government will be loaded with the loss.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the minister ought to withdraw his bill. There has been no demand for it from any of the provinces, unless probably the province from which the minister comes. It is unworkable. It is unfair relatively to the different provinces. I submit that it is also unfair to any man to put him on land where his earning capacity is going to be at a minimum for three or four years, load him with debt, and expect him to make good. I say here in the House of Commons, as I have said before, that the greatest curse that can be put on a young man is debt. I do not care whether he is in a profession, in business, or on the farm; the greater the debt you heap upon him, the greater injury you are doing him. Invariably you destroy his manhood, more or less, and destroy his power of developing, mentally at least. You are doing that man one of the greatest injuries that you can possibly do to any man. I submit that in a country like this, with the millions and millions of acres of land that we have, schemes of this kind are absolutely irrational and useless.

Mr. LETELLIER: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to inform the Minister of Immigration of the great advantage I derived in attending last fall a farmers' convention in the city of Montreal, under the auspices of the Catholic Agricultural Association of the province of Quebec. I am proud to say that this question was brought up at the convention by some of the real farmers of the province of Quebec. Fathers of large families had been asking whether it would not be possible for the association to pass a resolution urging the government to pass legislation with a view to helping those farmers who were anxious to establish their sons on farms in areas where the timber had been cut by the industrial companies and where the land was really first-class for farming. Many of them claimed that if they could obtain the least help from the government they could keep their sons at home, and I know of many families in that situation, Mr. Chairman, in my constituency, especially in Martinville, Compton, and Marsboro. I really believe that if this legislation is passed and well administered, if the settlers are chosen in good faith, if farmers or the sons of farmers who have been brought up on the farm and have learned the most practical way of farming are put on these lands, the government will obtain the very best results.

Some hon. gentlemen have referred to mistakes that have been made in the past in connection with legislation similar to this. As an illustration I would mention the case of a number of returned soldiers who were established on farms. Many of them were without any real qualifications for farming and were lacking entirely in experience. A number of cases, illustrating their utter lack of experience, came to my own notice where the soldier settler paid as much as $125 or $150 for cattle that were not worth $60. In the case of the present legislation it would seem that the mistakes of the past have been guarded against. I would ask the minister, therefore, to insist upon the bill going through, and would urge hon. members to support the measure. I am sure that if the settlers chosen are men of experience in farming and the legislation bill is well administered, it will be productive of the happiest results.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There has been a good deal of discussion of this proposition both in the resolution stage and on the bill as it is now before the committee. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that our discussion in the resolution stage was not more full and complete than it was. I propose to discuss in a general way the object which this bill has in view. It appears to me to be one of those schemes that look very well on paper, but when we come to apply it to actual conditions and to see just how it will work out, we find many defects and weaknesses in it. The minister has given the House and the committee a great deal of information, but I do not recall that he cited any schemes like this that had ever been tried out and had proven to be successful. We would be more ready to receive the proposal favourably if we had not recently been called upon to consider the revaluation of soldier settlers' land, in connection with a scheme which was originally well conceived, which was surrounded with all the precautions that could possibly be taken and which had the very worthy and desirable object of settling our returned soldiers on the land. We are now called upon to make a revaluation of those lands, and there is no doubt whatever that we are facing a very large reduction in the indebtedness due to the Dominion in that connection.

What is the scheme that is now before us? It is a plan to settle people upon lands that have been found undesirable, lands that have been passed over, lands that are inferior to other lands in the same locality. I cannot think of any greater handicap that could be placed upon a settler than to induce him to go upon land that is not likely in the near future to yield him a reasonable return, land that will be difficult to develop, difficult to cultivate and difficult to make productive. A second handicap is placed upon him by setting an indebtedness against that land. If a farmer is to succeed, the first essential is that he be placed upon land that is good in quality, that is easily developed and that will speedily bring him a return.

There does not appear to be any real general demand for this legislation. So far as I have been able to ascertain, no province has made any special request for it, and there have been no petitions or anything in the nature of a volume of public opinion asserting itself in favour of it. The further we go the more lukewarm we become in our attitude toward this proposition. There is another objection which I think is pretty generally admitted by all parties in this House, namely, that several of the provinces will derive no benefit at all from the proposal because of the conditions prevailing in those provinces. I think that if any money is appropriated for the purposes set forth in this bill it should be divided among the provinces on the basis of population, and there should not be available for any one province any more than its fair share on that basis. The amount first suggested, $5,000,000, has been reduced to $1,000,000. That sum, if apportioned in this way, is so small as to produce practically no desirable results.

The scheme is full of complications and of difficulties, and in a way is in conflict with provincial jurisdiction. Priorities of claims and all sorts of liens for taxes and other equities and rights arise, all of which will be difficult of settlement. It does appear to me however, that the greatest, the most serious objection of all is that we are undertaking to place settlers on undesirable lands, thus handicapping them: we are inducing them to undertake a venture in which they are not likely to succeed. And more than that, we are placing them under an obligation from which it will be difficult for them to free themselves. For that reason I do not feel inclined to support the scheme just now.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I do not intend to speak at any great length in opposition to the measure, but I do feel that it is not one that will serve the purpose of securing settlers to take up land. I do not think that $1,000 in the way of loan to the average Canadian citizen is going to assist in getting the right sort of man to go on the land. I do not know anything about the nature of the soil in western Canada, where this scheme proposes to place settlers, but I do know that the average man who wants to go on a farm and cultivate it will not be induced to do so by the prospect of getting a loan of $1,000 from the Dominion government, even at the low rate of interest of five per cent. And so far as getting immigrants from outside is concerned, immigrants from the continent of Europe, I hardly think that a loan of $500 will be the means of bringing into this country the kind of agriculturists we desire. I believe, of course, that we should make every effort to secure more immigrants, for undoubtedly we need an increased population. At the same time, we want the right kind of people to come in and not merely those who are to be assisted in this particular way. Any man coming from the Old Land who has not sufficient money to start farming on his own account will certainly not be assisted by a loan of $500. Such an advance will not place him in a position to cultivate land in the Canadian west, or, for that matter, in any other province of Canada. It seems to me therefore that, as a means of colonizing the country, this measure will prove utterly futile.

I would stress another point which I have mentioned before. It is this: The farming community is about the only section of our population that desires competition and more competition in its particular business. That is something that is being discussed in this House. Members of the Progressive group, when they first came into this House in 1921, frequently referred to the necessity of getting more people to take up land in Canada, but I am interested to observe of late that there is a tendency on the part of these hon. gentlemen to ignore that aspect of the question. They are not talking the same way now. I suspect that they are coming to the conclusion that there are other spheres of activity in Canada in which immigrants would be of more use to the country, especially when we are producing from the land more than the people can consume.

In my opinion the government will only be adding to the debt of the country by putting this measure into force. It will be absolutely of no avail in building up a sound yeomanry that could be of value to the rest of Canada. I am therefore disposed to vote against the bill. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) seems to be satisfied that this legislation will advance the interests of the west. He probably knows more about that than I do and I should take his word, to some extent at all events. I think, however, that it is possible for even a minister of the crown to be mistaken.

Mr. FISH: The object of this bill is to secure settlers for just two or three of the provinces, for I cannot see how it will get settlers to go on the land in other parts of the Dominion. In the older provinces the conditions are to-day, as they have always been, such as would readily lend themselves to legislation of this kind to encourage immigration. I can speak, of course, only for the province from which I come. In that province the settler can obtain land merely by applying for it, and the conditions under which he gets his title are very simple. Practically all he has to do is to make a home for himself; he builds a house on the land, clears a few acres, and that gives him his title. I do not see how that province can be assisted by means of this bill in the matter of securing immigrants.

We had in our province some years ago an act which I presume is still on the statute books, but which has fallen into disrepute. At any rate it is no longer invoked. That act provides that the government shall advance money to settlers to enable them to clear their land for cultivation. Let me show how it has worked out—and my opinion is that the legislation now before us will have the same effect. In passing, I may observe that I have not yet acquired that confidence in my fellowmen which, judging from the debate that has taken place in this House this afternoon, seems to prevail among certain members of parliament. The individual is apt to be unreliable when it comes to collateral security, and in addition to that he is well endowed with ingenuity. Now, if under this bill money is advanced on the basis of weak collateral, what will happen? The government will be saddled with lands that are of no use. We already have an illustration of that in the case of the rural credits system. Why is it that so much of the money lent out under that system has not come back to the provinces? Simply because the collateral is weak, and you cannot force payment. That is just what is going to happen here if I can read the bill aright. We are to advance money on land to a farmer or a person of any other occupation, and he will use that money just as he likes. The government probably will not have any control over the money, but he will. Whether he ever returns it or not will depend a good deal on how matters go with him; if easy, he will return the money, otherwise he is not likely to do so. In the case of our provincial government, as I mentioned a few moments ago, this happened—and it will happen in this case I guess—numbers of settlers had been on the land for several years and had cleared up five acres or more, but they had never done enough work to get their deeds. When the rural credits scheme came into force some ingenious men saw a chance to make money, and they gave those settlers a hundred dollars or less, and they soon got title to their lands. Then what happened? Why, it was no trouble to go to the board and get anywhere from $500 up to $3,000 and more, with the result that to-day the province has got those farms. There is another phase which I may bring to the attention of the committee. The province was granting land to practically any man that would ask for it provided he complied with the requirements, the most important of which were that he must be a resident of the province and be twenty-one years of age. Such a man could get land virtually for nothing. Subsequently he got his title to the land and borrowed money on his holding. The government soon found they had better get out of the business; they did so, but not without a good deal of scandal. To-day the province is out of pocket and somebody else has got the money. That to my mind is just what is going to happen under this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will my hon. friend tell me what province he refers to—New Brunswick?

Mr. FISH: You did not know I came from there! I would not say anything about the prairie provinces or the Maritime provinces generally, or for that matter the older provinces, Quebec and Ontario, that I am saying about my own province. I do not think Quebec will benefit very much by this measure, for it has already a splendid act of its own. In New Brunswick we hope to get similar legislation at this session of the legislature. The gist of the Quebec act is that when you accept a man's application for a homestead you allow him ten dollars an acre to clear it, and I am sure that is better encouragement than lending him money. If he works and clears his land he gets ten dollars an acre, which helps him to live while he is preparing his farm for cultivation; afterwards he can provide for himself.

Now, with regard to the fifteen mile limit, it would not be of any use in my province, nor for that matter in any of the older provinces, because there is no good land anywhere near the railways but what is owned now. When you talk of having miles to travel in the prairies, I do not think you really know anything about distance. Many of our farmers are fifty miles away from a railway, but they rarely buy automobiles to get backwards and forwards.

Mr. CAMPBELL: How do they bring their wheat to market?

Mr. FISH: They bring their produce to market by water. So I think that so far as my province is concerned this bill will be practically of no use whatever. After all, what is it going to amount to? At one time the amount to be advanced was placed at $5,000,000. Well, if I can judge aright, I do not think that would be too big a sum, for everybody will go after easy money. We will all take a hand in it, we will be there at the beginning while the money is available, not at the end when it is about exhausted. But what then, who is going to take the burden of debt that will be left on our shoulders? I think it would be well to confine the operation of this measure to the two or three provinces that are going to specially benefit by it.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, I have provided an amendment to meet the objection raised by the older provinces. I propose to insert in subsection (c) after the words "Dominion government" the following:

—or any provincial crown lands within reasonable distance of transportation facilities.

Mr. BURY: Who is to settle what is a reasonable distance? That will rest with the minister, I presume?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The board.

Mr. STEVENS: May we have the amendment read, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Section 2 as amended will read:

In this act, and in any regulation made under the provisions of this act, unless the context otherwise requires,

(a) "Minister" means the Minister of Immigration and Colonization.

(b) "Settlement loan" means a loan made to a settler under the authority of this act.

(c) "Crown lands" means any land suitable and available for settlement lying within fifteen miles of a railway and owned by the Dominion government or any provincial crown lands within a reasonable distance of transportation facilities.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the minister, I do not think that the mere addition of the words "within a reasonable distance" will put it within the power of the board to settle what a reasonable distance is. I think it will be only in the power of the court to decide.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I had to draft this amendment hurriedly, and I might ask that clause (c) stand until I have had an opportunity of examining it carefully, to see just how it will work out.

Mr. ROGERS: I would like to suggest to the minister that he keep away from the courts as much as he can.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I intend to.

The CHAIRMAN: Subsection (c) of clause 2 stands.

On section 3—Loans to settlers.

Mr. BURY: Before clause 3 is carried may I say that although I have no confidence in the bill, I suppose it is our duty to do what we can in order to make the legislation of as little harm as possible. Under the wording of clause 3 it is quite possible that the powers of the board will be exhausted when they have made one loan to one settler. When the resolution was being discussed in committee I understood that it was intended to allow the settlers to get new loans as soon as they had paid off the old ones, or to increase their loans as soon as the improvements had increased in value. The section now reads that the minister may make a loan to any settler, and when he has made one loan his powers in respect of that particular settler, under the bill, will, in my opinion, be exhausted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand what my hon. friend's point is; that is all we intend, that a settler shall receive one loan from the board. What has my hon. friend in mind?

Mr. BURY: When the resolution was being discussed the minister explained that a settler, when he had made say $100 or $200 worth of improvements, might get a loan to the amount of the first improvements. When he had made further improvements, to a total of say $500, he might apply for and receive a loan of $300 in addition; he might secure a series of loans, to a total of $1,000. Under the bill as it is now drafted, the minister can make a loan to any settler, and when he has done that I suggest that it is at least questionable whether his powers in respect of that particular settler will not be exhausted under the act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a rather fine point of law. The bill was drafted by the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Mr. ARTHURS: That happened under the other act more than once.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I quite admit that. The idea is that loans will be made according to progress.

Mr. BURY: It does not say so here, but of course it is the government's bill and the government's funeral.

Mr. ROGERS: As clause (c) of section 2 is standing, perhaps the minister will allow this clause to stand also, to see whether an amendment can be made.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to ask the minister on the basis of what proportion of the value of the work done he proposes to lend money. Is it proposed to lend to the extent of 100 per cent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, in the initial stages. That is, his first loan would be practically to 100 per cent of the value of the work done, but not the subsequent loans or advances. If his first loan amounted to $200 it would be practically for the amount of his improvements, in order to encourage him to keep on improving. But that would not be so if he borrowed the full amount; the ratio would then be reduced.

Mr. McGIBBON: Just a further question. In subsection 7 of clause 5 the minister is taking authority to state how these loans are going to be expended.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: How does he reconcile these two clauses? If we are going to lend a man money on work already done, it must be for the work he has accomplished.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He will have to make application for his loan. This is very similar to the practice pursued by the insurance companies, and is in fact the practice of the Soldier Settlement Board now. The supervisor will visit a given farm and an agreement is made—

Mr. McGIBBON: I am afraid the minister does not understand my question. You are giving a man a loan on the strength of the work he has done, and you are then reserving the authority to tell him how he is going to expend the money so borrowed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend mean that he should be permitted to expend his money as he sees fit? With that I agree very largely, but I want to point out that when the application is made, discussion naturally takes place as to what improvements the settler will make in order to earn, let us say, the first instalment. When that is completed the instalment is advanced to him and undoubtedly, if he is progressive, he will make provision for the next instalment. The money he earns on the first will naturally carry him over the second period.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the minister is reserving the authority to tell this man how he is to expend the money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would my hon. friend not agree that you have a certain amount of risk in the moral character of the man? I will admit that it looks somewhat drastic, but I must also admit that the security is meagre, and supervision counts for a very great deal. The Soldier Settlement Board have learned that by rather costly experience. I know a great deal of criticism was offered to the suggestion that you should interfere with the money a man has earned by his own labour, but at the same time the man is still a risk so far as the government is concerned. I think my hon. friend will agree that some reasonable—I do not say unreasonable—supervision should be exercised.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not catch the idea of the minister yet. Let us say a man does a certain amount of work and on the strength of that he is loaned a certain sum of money. That money is loaned for the work already done. At the same time you are telling this man how he is to spend that money. Is that not correct?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not just catch the last part of my hon. friend's remark.

Mr. McGIBBON: Let us say a man has done a certain amount of work and on the strength of that work already accomplished he is loaned $300 or $400. The minister then steps in and says, "Although you have earned this money by the improvements you have made, I am going to dictate how you are to spend it."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would it not be fair to say that if, as was suggested by two or three hon. members this afternoon, the soldier settler could pocket the first instalment of the loan, and leave the land? As a reasonable precaution it is surely not unfair to say that the settler should give some undertaking that he means to continue on the land. There should be some reasonable supervision over the expenditure of the money. I do not mean to say that someone is going to sit there and watch the settler spend that money, but after all that is part of the security held by the government for the loan.

Mr. McGIBBON: Suppose a man is hard up and owes a lot of money, after he completes a certain amount of work. Is the minister going to deprive him of the right of taking that money and paying his debts? Is he to be told that he must put that money into further improvements? Are the hands of the settler to be absolutely tied at the will of the minister or some of his agents?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no; that has not been the case at all. If, as my hon. friend supposes, the settler incurs some liability in earning the first instalment, naturally that would be taken care of. But to make it possible for him to take the whole of the advance, as I pointed out before, and simply walk away with it, is not sensible, and it follows reasonably that there should be some supervision.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister be good enough to read subsection 7 of clause 5, and explain it to me?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be very glad to do so when we come to it.

Mr. McGIBBON: It has a direct bearing on the question now before us.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Subsection 7 provides:

> All settlement loans shall be expended under the direction or control of the minister.

The minister simply means the board, which is making the loan. The whole operation of the act, every particle of it, will be under the control of the board. If my hon. friend will look at section 7, he will see that provision is made there for making various regulations; he will find the same provisions in the Soldier Settlement Act. While nominally the minister is the head of the Soldier Settlement Board, he seldom interferes with its operations; in fact, the only occasion on which I have had to interfere is when a soldier settler has appealed to me direct that he is not receiving decent treatment.

Mr. McGIBBON: The point is this: This takes away from the settler his initiative to do what he thinks is in his own best interest, and hands control over to the board, or to the minister, whichever you call it. The settler is deprived of all initiative to spend that money in the manner which he thinks will best advance his financial welfare, and it is handed over to the board. To be quite frank with the minister—I do not accuse the government, or the minister in particular; that is the last thing I would do—this scheme to my mind might lend itself to becoming one of the greatest political organizations imaginable.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If that is the case, the Soldier Settlement Board could have been used for identically the same purpose. But I hope no one will accuse me of using the board for political purposes, because I have never changed an officer of the board. They were all appointees of the government that preceded this, and the same is true of every supervisor, so far as I know. I am proposing that the Soldier Settlement Board shall operate under this act because that board operates all over Canada. Its officers have received training at the expense of the government and have now considerable experience in settlement work. So far as a political organization is concerned, I want to assure my hon. friend that is the last thing I have in my mind.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not want the minister to misunderstand me; that is the last thing I would suggest, because, as I said this afternoon, he is one of the charming personalities of this House. But we must judge this legislation on its merits, and it does deprive the settler of his initiative to plan his own future welfare in the manner he thinks best. That is all turned over to the board, which is going to dictate to him how he shall pursue his business. It is an impossible situation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That might be all right if the government was taking no risk, but I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the government is taking a very substantial risk. I admit that at once myself; I do not for one moment intend to argue otherwise. If I did not believe that this legislation would facilitate settlement of these particular lands, I would not be in favour of this bill, but I believe it will. I am not going to suggest that there may not be some losses, but I do think, inasmuch as we have the Soldier Settlement Board, with its five or six years' experience in settlement work and the loaning of money—it has been costly to the government of this country, and is going to be more so—surely we can use the board in settling these lands. I have been bombarded by boards of trade and public bodies claiming to be interested in immigration from one end of Canada to the other, saying that this government has never provided any facilities to get men on the land, and it was in response to that universal request that I had this bill drafted. I thought I was providing only proper safeguards in the bill, which was brought in to meet what in my opinion was a universal request.

As to the objection that if we make an advance to a settler we are precluded from advancing him any more money, my hon. friend is a lawyer, and it was a lawyer who drafted this bill, and if he made that mistake it is the mistake of the legal draftsman.

Mr. McQUARRIE: He is a doctor. You should not be so complimentary.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was speaking at the moment of the hon. member for East Edmonton. Any body, public or private, which is lending money, looks to two things, and I think the greatest stress is placed on the moral character of the individual who is receiving the loan. My hon. friend will agree that the moral character must be satisfactory before the applicant can get a loan.

Mr. BURY: Not in Alberta, after you took away the personal covenant.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Do not let us get drawn away to side issues. I am sure my hon. friend will agree that the moral standing of the individual is perhaps the best security on which a loan can be made, and secondly comes the material security. In this case, we shall have to depend very greatly on the moral security, because there is no asset other than what the crown own themselves. The crown already own the land, and surely it is only reasonable to go one step further and exercise some degree of control over the expenditure of the money until the maximum amount is loaned to the individual, because that is all the security you have for repayment of the loan.

Mr. ARTHURS: Then the minister admits that these loans are solely upon lands owned by the government themselves?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Absolutely, owned by the Dominion or provincial governments.

Mr. CLARK: Then why does not the minister substitute the words "moral security" for the words "security of improvements"?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The improvements have to be placed on the land; there is no question about that. Otherwise there would be no loan.

Mr. CLARK: What security can possibly be offered by the improvements?

Mr. STEWART ,(Edmonton): My hon. friend will agree that as soon as a piece of property is improved it becomes of greater value.

Mr. CLARK: But the land belongs to the government anyway, and however much you improve it, no matter what you put on it, it still belongs to the government. It does not form any security for the government, so the words are meaningless.

Mr. BOYS: I rise to supplement what has been said by my hon. friend from East Edmonton (Mr. Bury). The minister although not a lawyer, will only have to read clause 3 himself with care and he will see at once, I think, that if it is the purpose to make a series of loans, not exceeding in all

$1,000 in the one case and $500 in the other, the language of the section must be changed. It provides, it seems to me, quite clearly for one loan. As I understand it, the purpose is, as the improvements are made, to issue—I think the minister himself used the word—a sort of "progress certificate," so to speak, whereby the settler might get $100, then another $100 after that, and so on. This provides for one loan, that loan is in the one case to be as high as $1,000, and in the other case to be as high as $500. It seems to me if that is the intention of the bill the minister should change the second line by striking out "a" and making the word "loan" read "loans."

An hon. MEMBER: "A loan or loans."

Mr. BOYS: That perhaps is a good suggestion to make, "a loan or loans." Then, when you come to subsection (a), "an amount not exceeding $1,000" and in subsection (b), "an amount not exceeding $500." A building is not a separate thing from the land. As soon as a building is placed upon land it becomes land, and the title to the land being in the department it remains in the department. The settler has nothing whatever to give security upon. If he had the title when he made his own improvements on the land he might give a mortgage upon that and secure the department. But the land belongs to the department, and when he puts a building upon it the building is part of the land and he cannot give any security thereon. I suppose you could specify that in addition to the duties and obligations which belong to him, the settler shall, before receiving a patent, pay off any indebtedness that he may owe to the department in connection with any advances that might be made to him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He cannot get his advances.

Mr. BOYS: An hon. member suggests that that is in the act regarding provincial lands. But in the case of the province, as I understand it, the department—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They cannot get a patent.

Mr. BOYS: No, the province has to get a patent and when it does the loan is then made by the department on the security of the land for which there is a title. But I am not for the moment directing myself at all to lands on which loans are made to the province. I am dealing with this other question.

Mr. DUNNING: Take subsection 6 of section 5.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. BOYS: I do not think that helps us in the slightest degree. Subsection 6 of section 5 reads as follows:

> When a settlement loan has been made upon improvements on Dominion crown land, the patent shall not issue until the loan and all interest charges thereon have been paid in full.

I am quite aware of that provision, but I am not dealing with that. I am dealing with section 3, which reads:

> For purposes connected with settlement, the minister may make a loan to any settler on the security of improvements made by such settler—

And so on. I am asking the minister how he is going to take security in the form in which it has to be given. It cannot be a chattel mortgage, because the building is not a chattel. It cannot be a land mortgage because the settler does not own the land and there is no question that the building forms part of the land. It seems to me that the method which the draftsman had in mind of providing the security is all wrong. However, I will go this far and say that, with some changes, the idea that was in the draftsman's mind when he drafted subsection 6 of section 5 might be worked out. I do not see how you are going to take security under subsection 3. However, I think the other feature is more important. I do not think you can take security, yet I realize you have a certain protection because you do not give the settler his patent as long as there is anything against the land, and you have your protection there. It seems to me that if you want to make a series of loans you must change the wording of subsection 3.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then I understand my hon. friend to say that by striking out "a" and making the wording read "loans," the objection will be met.

Mr. BOYS: The minister will appreciate that naturally I just glanced at the bill while sitting here. At the moment it would appear to me that those changes would meet the intention of the minister. Anyone who has been devoting his attention to this bill and is quite familiar with the subject could make the bill a great deal better than it is, so long as he has caught the idea. But at the moment, in the absence of anything better, I think the suggestions advanced might meet the case

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it is well understood that the security is in the ownership of the crown, but the underlying principle is that the advances shall be made on improvements to the crown property. The settler would have no security to offer, because every improvement he puts upon the land—and there I agree with my hon. friend —the erection of buildings, the construction of fences, or the clearing of the land, would be the property of the crown. The advances, therefore, could only be made on the improvements made by the settler to the property of the crown.

Mr. BOYS: How are you going to take security? When you take security you take it by virtue of some document; it may be a mortgage, it may be a chattel mortgage, or something of that kind. That is the ordinary meaning of the word. If that is not the intention, why put it in? If the intention is merely to provide that these advances may be made but that the patent shall not issue until these advances with interest are repaid, there is no question of security about it. He does not give security in that case. He has nothing to give security upon.

Mr. CLARK: If it is true that these improvements form no security, then the whole wording of the section is misleading. It does not mean anything, and the word "security" should not be in the section at all. The section should read "for purposes connected with settlement the minister may make loans to any settler without security", or "may make loans to any settler on the moral security"—because there is no security whatever, on the minister's own admission.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I think my hon. friend is slightly misconstruing the section. The settler is the individual who enhances the value of the crown's property. I quite admit that the settler could have no claim on the crown property upon which he could give security.

Mr. CLARK: That is all very clear; we agree there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Now, from the simple fact that he is the entrant he has at least this security, if it can be called such: he has a prior claim on that land, provided he carries out his agreement to settle on it and earn the patent. That is all the security he would have. However, I am not going to enter into any legal argument with my hon. friends. Perhaps the draftsman has made a mistake in inserting the word "security". But what we have very clearly in mind is that if the settler improves the land, if he goes on and carries out his agreement with the crown, he will earn the patent and own that land, which will be subject, of course, to the claim of the crown for loans made to him. That would be the interest he would have. The advances are not altogether on security, but rather on the improvements he makes to the property. I do not think we would be improving the matter by suggesting that he give his moral security.

Mr. CLARK: I think the whole thing is ridiculous.

Mr. BURY: I agree with the minister that the man has an interest in the land. It is a kind of inchoate interest, an equity to become possessed of the land under the Dominion statute when he has fulfilled certain conditions. It is contingent. Still, he does possess an interest in the land the moment he becomes an entrant. It is a defeasible interest which may be ended by his neglect to perform the conditions of homesteading, but if he does not neglect, if he fulfils the conditions of homesteading, that defeasible interest becomes an indefeasible interest and he gets a patent. The minister would get out of the difficulty if he would say "on the security of his interest in the land," whatever that is, instead of "on the security of improvements", for the reason that you cannot distinguish and separate the improvements from the land. We recognize that. What you want to put the loan on is all the interest the man has in the land, whether in the soil or in the improvements, and if the minister will change the wording of his bill to make the security the interest the man has in the land, I think he will cover the whole point.

Mr. HANNESSON: Referring to the same clause, the minister will remember I asked him to-day whether those who were now on unpatented lands could take advantage of this legislation. The first words in the clause, "for purposes connected with settlement," seem to presuppose that the entrant is a new one. That ought to be made clear by defining the word "settler" in clause 2 when it is redrafted, so as to make sure that the term "settler" would include the man who is now on unpatented land and who had not fulfilled his duties; because to enable him to effect his improvements would be of great value and I understood from the minister that he was to be included. I also suggest that the term "crown land" in that paragraph is improper, because under clause 6 the minister provides for the purchase of lands that are not crown lands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a separate clause altogether.

Mr. HANNESSON: But clause 3 is the only lending clause in the bill and when the minister provides that loans can be made only on crown land, he is defeating the purpose of clause 6.

Mr. CANTLEY: As regards the second line of clause 3 I understand the minister has in contemplation a loan or loans. If he deletes the five words "a loan to any settler" and replaces them by the three words "loans to settlers", will that not simplify the matter and better enable the minister to carry out his intention? With regard to the security referred to, would the case not be met by deleting the words on the security of improvements" and substituting therefor the words "not exceeding the value of the improvements"?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): While suggestions are important and very useful, my experience is that it is never safe to trust to suggestions for amendments to a bill without carefully considering them. Now that we have had a pretty full discussion of clause 3, I would ask that the clause stand, and I will have it redrafted in accordance with the objections raised.

Mr. BURY: Will the minister keep in mind the suggestion I made about the wording of that part of the section which deals with the security?

Mr STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I have that in mind.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If I have been able to catch the minister's intention it is that loans will be made after the improvements have been carried out. The minister assents to that. That brings back the question raised by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) with relation to the provision of subclause 7 of clause 5. If a man goes on the land, spends his own time and money making certain improvements, and increases the value of the crown domain to a point that justifies the minister in advancing a loan to him, is the minister going to send somebody to say to that man: You can do just this and that with the money we are giving you now for the work you have already performed? The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario raised the question and it bears out what was said by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) this afternoon, namely, that you could not get men to go on some of those lands unless you gave them some inducement. If the prospect of this loan is an inducement, the probabilities are that the man who goes on the land will incur liabilities to someone else. He will effect loans; he will secure supplies from merchants to enable him to carry on until he makes those improvements. After the improvements are made the minister comes along under another provision in the bill and says to the man: We are going to direct you as to just how you are to spend the money; you may pay this indebtedness and leave the other one unpaid, and so on; or you may not pay any of them but you must go on and make some more improvements. There is the confusion in connection with this matter. The difference between this legislation and the plan under which the soldier land settlement was carried out is that under the latter the money was advanced for the purpose of making improvements, to buy stock and so on. In this case the man goes on the land the crown assigns to him, spends his time and money and improves it up to a certain point that causes the board or the minister to feel safe in making him a loan on the strength of the improvements already made. Surely if he was capable in the first instance of directing his own affairs and making improvements to the point where he could secure a loan, he should be given a free hand to go ahead and spend the money advanced. If he runs away with the money, the government have already the improvements on the land. I can readily understand the minister does not expect anything of that sort; nevertheless he is imposing that unfair hardship on a free man, and so long as you undertake to keep these men in a state of vassalage—that is exactly what their position will be—they are not going to be free men. If you find the man who is a sufficiently good moral risk to justify a loan, surely you have the Canadian citizen whom you can trust to spend the money you lend to him in the same way that he has spent his own money in making such improvements as justified the making of the loan in the first instance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): While the minister is taking that into consideration, he might also consider the case of a man who was in the habit of playing poker and had incurred debts of honour in that regard.

Mr. BOURASSA: Would the minister consider the clearing of bush land, say in Quebec —work which is of course of a valuable character—as an improvement coming under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. I thought I made the position fairly clear before to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. I know there is considerable aversion to supervision of the activities of any man. Most of us like to be free agents to do what we please, but I have yet to know any man who borrowed money—I do not care how he borrowed it—who was a free agent. I think any hon. member will agree with that. My hon. friend may be able to go into a bank and obtain a loan without difficulty; probably he is endowed with sufficient of the world's goods to persuade the banker to let him have it. But I can tell him that in my own case I had to submit to a good deal of cross-questioning before I could get a loan, and the bank had to be assured that it could repose confidence in me. It wanted to know that I was going to spend the money in the way I proposed; otherwise I could not get the help I required. I am prepared to admit that governments and government officials can be autocratic and unreasonable, and while I have had reports of such action on the part of field supervisors in the administration of the Soldier Settlement Act I would remind hon. members that, if it were not for a firm stand in our dealings with the settlers, the losses of the government would be much heavier.

I have tried to make it clear that while there should be no unreasonable interference, at the same time it is impossible to eliminate the element of supervision from the provisions of the act. We might simply say to the man, "You have earned $200 and we will therefore advance you a like sum". If the individual had incurred debts in the earning of that $200 there would, of course, be no question in the world about his being authorized at once to pay those debts with the proceeds of the loan. But let us suppose, as has been suggested, that he has incurred some other debts of a questionable character: would my hon. friend question the right of the government in that case to see that its interest was protected? We must remember that the government has a very vital interest in the man. I do not argue that the supervision should be carried to any undue extent, but I do urge that we should have some rights in that direction.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would it not be better to have some equity reserved in the land? The minister is paying the man practically 100 per cent of the value of his improvements, and I suggest that both the government and the country would be safeguarded if the act reserved some equity in the land. So long as you pay the man 100 per cent of the value of the land, it does not matter—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I suggested that only as the initial payment.

Mr. McGIBBON: Well, suppose we do consider it an initial payment: what will keep that man on the land if he chooses to walk off? I repeat, it would be far better to reverse the procedure and pay him probably two-thirds or three-quarters of the value of the improvements as a start, increasing it as time went on. The settler then would have an increasing equity in the land and a greater desire to remain on it. If, on the other hand, you pay him 100 per cent on his improvements, he may pocket the money and walk off.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister has said that one of the grounds upon which the loan will be made is the moral character of the settler. Possibly the characteristics indicated by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) would suggest pretty clearly the moral fibre of the man upon which one might base one's justification for making the loan; but I do not believe the minister takes that view. If I have been able to interpret what he has said, he intends to make these loans on the strength of the improvements that have been made. Judging from the experience which he says he has had with banks, perhaps the minister has noticed just what I myself have observed. At any rate, I know what the bank requires. If you have created a certain amount of wealth as a result of clearing land and carrying out other improvements you may obtain a loan from the bank on the strength of that security that then exists, and they do not ask you any further questions. But when you are applying for a loan from a bank for the purpose of carrying on some business in order to create new wealth, they naturally want to know what you intend to do with the money. Now, if the minister says that these loans are to enable the man to clear his land and make improvements, well and good. In that case I should say that supervision was justified. But if the loan is being made on the basis of something which the man has already done, the situation is different. The man, I take it, must originally have had some money or he could not undertake to cultivate the farm. If therefore he has spent his time and money in effecting improvements upon the government's property, surely he can be trusted to go ahead and use the loan for the purposes he has in view. If that is the type of man the minister has in mind, he would have something to go upon and something by means of which to apply his initiative if he were given $1,000 in a lump sum and allowed to go ahead. Obviously you cannot have a pauper and a virile Canadian walking around in the same suit of clothes. And the way to make virile Canadian citizens is to show them that you have confidence in them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What my hon. friend says has been amply borne out in the experience with soldier settlers. Perhaps it would help the discussion if we followed through from start to finish the process of securing the loan. The settler first of all enters upon the land and after clearing it makes application for a loan, having the property investigated by a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board who passes both upon the character of the applicant and upon the nature of the land itself. It follows as a natural consequence—

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is that the plan proposed in this bill?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; I am trying to describe the process in detail.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Then I suggest that the wording should be amended, because that is not what the bill says.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The regulations will of course make the necessary provisions. Naturally the applicant gives some indication of what he intends to do. He may build a house or erect a stable or put up a fence upon the land; or he may decide to improve five or six acres. When the work is done he asks for an inspection and he is visited by the soldier supervisor, who passes upon what has been done and recommends to the board the advance to be made. Of course, he is going to earn more money; he is not going to stop with the first hundred or two. The supervision is nothing more or less than an agreement between the two as to what the nature of the improvements shall be, and the seeing that those improvements are carried out; the money being advanced from time to time. I can conceive that the settler will incur certain debts and responsibilities while he is doing this work. These will have to be paid, but the supervision is to ensure as far as possible repayment of the money.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If that is the case I have nothing further to say. But that is not the position the minister has taken throughout the discussion of this clause. If where a man makes application for a loan, the supervisors say to him, "When you do thus and so we will give you a loan," that is a different case altogether. If that is the method, then I say this clause certainly requires to be redrafted, because it provides that the loan is to be made on the strength of work already done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think the section needs redrafting. I simply described in a concrete way how it works out. No money could be paid over until completion of the improvement, whatever it was.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister does not say that every man who applies with the intention of settling on land has first to get the board to inspect his land, lay out the prospective improvements, and tell him just what has to be done before he can expect a loan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not necessarily. He may make all the suggestions himself. All he does is make application, when he will be visited on his land by a representative of the board.

Mr. McGIBBON: After the improvements may have been done?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. In that case the board's representative would pass upon them. I do not want my hon. friends to get it into their minds that this is any autocratic or Mussolini method of doing business. Please bear in mind that the other party to the agreement and the most important party, is the government. Some precaution must be taken to protect the government's loan.

Mr. BURY: I understand from the minister that there are to be a number of regulations, which are referred to later on in the bill—that the idea is that the full value of the improvements will be advanced on the first loan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I merely say that to help the settler over the rough spots when he is starting—

Mr. BURY: I am not concerned with the reasons in the minister's mind; I merely want to get the facts. I understand the intention of the bill is that the applicant shall at the outset get one hundred per cent of the value of his first improvements.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; he may get it. I would not want my hon. friend to say that the government were under compulsion to lend one hundred per cent of the value.

Mr. BURY: What I am getting at is this. Apparently there are a number of regulations in which are to be embodied the really important parts of the bill. For instance, what a settler will get on the first improvements on his first application, and the suggestion of the minister that on the second application on later improvements he will not get as much. Then other matters have been referred to as being embodied in the regulations. It seems to me that we ought to know what the regulations are. From what I can gather from the minister the regulations are the chief part of the bill.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I believe the minister knows that any settler coming under this act will have to earn a good deal more money than the $1,000 that he is to get by way of loan. That sum is never going to carry him through until he obtains his patent; and the government will get a great deal more security than the amount of the loan if he ever does get his patent.

Mr. McGIBBON: Suppose he never gets it?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think there is very much difference of opinion as to the wording of the act. Anyone could have sat down and said just what is intended by the bill, but I really do not know what is the exact meaning of its wording after all this discussion has taken place. I think the intention of the minister is very much along the lines of the amendment offered by the opposition. But I repeat, any settler who takes advantage of this legislation will have to find some other way of earning money in addition to his loan before he obtains his patent. He will have to go out and work. Any farmer who knows anything about spending money knows exactly what $200 will do towards equipping a farm. It is a mere fleabite in comparison with what he has to spend before he gets his farm in such a condition that he can make a living on it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Mr. Chairman, I take it the minister only intends to lend money where the department is satisfied that the loans are going to be repaid. Of course, it is impossible to be absolutely sure you will get repayment of any loan, but I assume the minister does not intend to make a present of the loan to the person who takes up land, but that it is a business proposition and that the government are going to have what they consider to be security for the amount advanced. I take it that two elements will have to be taken into consideration; one, as to the man's standing in the community and his suitability for this kind of work. That is really not a security at all, for the man may die the day after he borrows the money. The other element is as to the suitability of the land itself. Well, I take it that most of these loans will be made on lands which would not otherwise be considered good security. Consequently it comes down pretty much as stated in the bill, the making of loans on the security of the improvements.

Something has been said about the views of lawyers in the House. I wonder if the minister knows that our big loan companies at the present time are absolutely refusing to make loans on farm properties. I know that is the case out in British Columbia; they will lend on city property, but not on farms. The reason, I presume, is that farming, unfortunately, owing to the policies of this government to a large extent, I think, has reached such a condition that farm property is an unsafe security. Now, if the government really wish to help men to get on the land, I suggest that they should go at it in a different way altogether, that they should do something to help the man who is on the land now. Let them help our farmers out in British Columbia so that they will be able to make a decent living for themselves, and their farms will be considered good securities for loans.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the difficulties of the Minister in trying to satisfy the committee in framing this bill. On the one hand fear is expressed that the security will not be sufficient and that the government will lose a lot of money; on the other hand, the minister is exhorted to use all means to enable settlers to secure money with the greatest facility. If the minister tries to harmonize these two views I do not know where he is going to end. I am in favour of the principle of this bill, but I am distinctly opposed to the policy of its application. I expressed that view on a previous occasion, and the minister will pardon me if I express it again. At the outset, however, I may congratulate the minister on the fact that this is the first attempt ever made in this House, it appears to me, to bring forward any policy to assist settlers in getting on the land. I can at least congratulate the minister on that, and for the very reason that I sympathize with the proposal, I am most anxious to see it on a sounder basis than it is at present.

I agree with a good many of the criticisms that land which is not suitable for cultivation, land not suitable to be taken up at all, is the kind of land that will be homesteaded under this scheme. A settler who will not take up homestead land at present, looking on this loan as a bonus, will take up some of this land and endeavour to make some improvements on it, and it appears to me that the homestead land available for settlement in western Canada to-day is not of a very good quality. There is very little of it except in some districts that have recently been opened up by branch lines, in which cases I believe there is some good land. I believe I can speak with some authority on this question, because a large part of my constituency borders on the bush land, and I know something about the settlement in those districts. There is no doubt that a great many men under the stimulus of these loans will take up some of this homestead land but I venture to predict now that within five years at least 50 per cent of those men will have abandoned the land. I think there is no question about that. If the minister occupies his present position five years from now, I feel perfectly safe in predicting that he will come back to this House and admit that this scheme is a failure, from two standpoints. It will be a failure from the standpoint of assisting settlers, and from the financial point of view as well. But because I am anxious to see something done to assist settlers I would plead with the minister as I pleaded with him on a previous occasion, to make this act apply to purchased land, where facilities are already provided; land close to the railways, where we have schools, roads, elevators, stores and everything already there. We have millions of acres of that kind of land in western Canada, where everything is already provided.

The minister stated in introducing this resolution that the main object was to thicken up the settlements. That is the very thing this bill is not going to do; it will spread the settlements out into the hinterland a little further than they are to-day. I believe if this were made to apply to purchased land, and if assistance were given settlers in buying land, not only would ample security be provided, but something would be done in a substantial way to assist settlement.

I know the question will be asked as to how we can make a loan on land purchased with very little, and in some cases perhaps nothing, paid on it. Land can be secured in western Canada to-day by very small cash payments, and if those selling the land are prepared to assist in the operation of this plan, they will be prepared to permit the government to take a first mortgage on the land for $1,000 or whatever amount is advanced, and take security themselves by a second mortgage. In every case of that kind the land will be worth a great deal more than the money advanced by the government, and the security will be better than the security at present held by most of the loan companies.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would the hon. gentleman be willing to do that himself if he were selling land?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, I would. I may tell my hon. friend that a great deal of land is being sold in my district to-day without the payment of a dollar in cash; the vendor has confidence in the ability of the purchaser to pay for the land on a crop basis. But if the government offered to advance $1,000 on a first mortgage it would be of great assistance to the settler. The loan would be spread over a long period of years at a low rate of interest, which would assist the settler in a very material way. In thousands of these cases the vendor would be prefectly willing to follow that course.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would it assist the vendor?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I believe it would. In this case the government would have the first mortgage and the vendor the second mortgage. The government would be perfectly safe.

An hon. MEMBER: And the vendor would get the money.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The vendor would get the money, but the government would have a first mortgage and you would thicken up the settlement in the districts where settlements have already been started.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I interrupt to ask a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Certainly.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the vendor got the money, what would the settler get?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The settler would be in a better position than he is in to-day. I assume, of course, that the settler would pay a small amount, also.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend forgets that these settlers have no money. Furthermore, may I just ask another question? I know my hon. friend is a practical farmer, but I think I am safe in saying that no man will buy property on a crop basis without having a fairly substantial amount invested in equipment and stock, which is a very important factor before he can farm at all. We have that problem on our hands to-day, and are trying to meet it by bringing into Canada from the Old Land 3,000 families, to whom the British government give $1,500 in order to start them on these farms. The plan of my hon. friend would soon run into a very large amount of money, if it was undertaken.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It would be very much better to have a small scheme worked out in that way successfully than to have a large scheme like this result in utter failure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend forgets one thing. He says there is practically no good land to be settled. That may be true in his own locality; it may be true in the province of Manitoba, but my information—and it is from the Soldier Settlement Board—is that there is a very large area of land within fifteen miles of the railways. It is good land, brushy perhaps, but really first class agricultural land when it is cleared. It is upon that class of security and that class of land that the loans will be made, not upon these third or fourth rate agricultural lands that are sandy in character when cleared. If these precautions were not taken I may tell the committee that I would not be sponsoring this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The land in my constituency to which I referred is as good a class of homestead land as is available in any part of Canada. The proof of that statement is in the fact that men who have travelled all over western Canada looking for homesteads have settled and are now settling in my constituency. The statement of the minister in regard to the necessity of having a certain amount of money before settling on land of the character I referred to is perfectly true, but it is just as true of the homestead. If you expect a man to go into the wilderness fifteen miles from town, on a brush homestead, without a dollar in the world, it is only another evidence that this scheme is doomed to failure. I quite agree that no man can go on a homestead without a small equipment of farm machinery, horses and so on; he must be able to provide food for himself for a certain length of time; he must be able to put up buildings; he must be able to go to the necessary expense of breaking some land, buying cattle and fencing his land. He must have a little money, and unless he has some money there is no use sending him out on a homestead.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my hon. friend admit, then, that seventy-five per cent of the homesteaders in western Canada had little or no money when they commenced operations? That was my experience, and I think I am settled in a locality equal to any in Alberta. Those settlers made good, but the first thing they did after securing their patent was to borrow money on it. Why? Because they had incurred liabilities during the three year period when they were earning their patents, and it was to pay off the liabilities incurred by the purchase of the odd cow, the horses and the machinery that they had accumulated in that time that they required the loan. All I have in mind here is to avoid the necessity of doing that. The man will be starting on land where he does not require a large number of horses or a large outfit of machinery, but can start in a very moderate way. That is all I had in mind, but please remember that it is not contemplated to lend money on poor land.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why should the government lend $1,000 to a Canadian citizen and only $500 to a man who is not a Canadian citizen? How does the difference affect the security?

Mr. CAMPBELL: What the minister says is perfectly correct, that the bulk of the homestead land in western Canada was taken up by people who had very little money. But I want to point out this, that this homesteading was done at a period when we were building thousands of miles of railway in western Canada, and a great majority of these homesteaders simply filed on their land and then went out and worked on the railway or with a building gang, building elevators or stores in the little towns that were growing up all over the prairie. In that way they were able to earn enough money to give them a start on their homestead. There are very few men who have made a success in western Canada who ever went on their homestead without any money to start with, unless they were able to stay with it by going out in the summer time and working elsewhere. I have been twenty years in western Canada, and I have pioneered in many new districts, and I know very few men to-day who when they first came in and homesteaded were able to establish themselves on the land without going out and earning money in the summer time. But those conditions do not obtain in western Canada to-day. We are not building any more railways now, and instead of there being a shortage of labour, there is a surplus. Very little new building is being done in the towns, and there are very few opportunities for a man to get work of that nature; so different conditions altogether obtain. If a man has a little money and is located on land within a reasonable distance from town he can get land that is partly broken up and have a crop the first year, and get something to go along with, but if he takes up land ten or fifteen miles away from a railway, it will be years before he can make that farm pay at all.

Mr. BOURASSA: Before the minister redrafts the clause, may I ask him with regard to provincial crown lands for which temporary titles are given by the government which do not carry the full ownership which letters patent do. Then if the settler does not comply with the requirements of the departmennt, his title is forfeited. He may have made some improvements on the land, but all that is lost to him. Now suppose a new settler comes in and is prepared to take up that land; would he be entitled under this law to a loan on the improvements made by his predecessor which have advanced the value of the property, but which of course were not made by the present settler on the land when occupied by him? I think the present wording of the clause would prevent the loaning of money to any new settler who would take over a partly improved crown land farm that had been abandoned, because the improvements would not have been made by him when occupying the land. If he received the encouragement of a loan he might go on with the improvements and finally make of this land a real homestead; in fact, we have many homesteads in the province of Quebec of that nature. It is said, in fact, in many regions that the first settler is never the permanent occupant of the land. Very often the letters patent are taken out by the new settler who comes in and inherits the improvements made by his predecessor, but, after all, he continues to improve the land, and implants there a family, and finally the whole community benefits by it. I know of many lands in my own constituency, as well as in other parts, that are presently crown lands because the letters patent have never been issued; the lands were taken up by settlers some years ago, and abandoned. Those lands could be reoccupied and a loan made, but not if the wording of the clause remains exactly as it is now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has raised the same point as was raised by the hon. member for Selkirk. Under the provisions of the Dominion Crown Lands Act, where a settler makes improvements to a homestead or crown land while he is in occupancy, these improvements are always valued if he surrenders the homestead or abandons the land, and the next settler is charged for the improvements. The provincial crown lands would be in the same position where the settler had received a loan and had abandoned the land. That is why we say we are making advances on the improvements. If the provincial government were prepared to give the federal government first claim upon the property, as they would have to do under the provisions of the bill, an advance could be made to that settler upon provincial crown lands.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think the words "by such settler" should be dropped, so that the benefits of this legislation would be applicable to the present settler.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am going to satisfy myself on that point, in view of the contention raised by my hon. friend from Labelle and by my hon. friend from Selkirk.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I draw attention to the two classes of loans contemplated under this legislation? One is for an amount not exceeding $1,000 to a man who is a Canadian citizen, and secondly, an amount not exceeding $500 to a settler other than a Canadian citizen. Surely we have gone far enough when we have made loans to men who are Canadian citizens. If settlers on land are not willing to incur the obligations of citizenship I do not think we should advance them any money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): True, it applies to the foreigner, but what we have chiefly in mind here is that we shall be able to make arrangements with the Overseas Settlement Board for an additional $500 for the British settler. I do not think British settlers will take advantage of this legislation to any considerable degree until we have completed the three thousand family scheme. We expect this year to settle with British settlers twelve hundred soldier settlement farms, under the three thousand family scheme; last year we settled five hundred. My hon. friend knows that under this three thousand family scheme the government of Canada provides the land and the British government lends the settler $1,500 to establish him on the land, and that money is expended under the supervision of the Soldier Settlement Board. If this scheme proves a success, and British settlers take advantage of it, we hope to get an additional $500 for the British settler by arrangement with the Overseas Settlement Board. My hon. friend's contention is that we should not lend money to anybody but a Canadian citizen. Is that his idea?

Mr. CANTLEY: I thank the minister for the explanation. No. That is not exactly my point. What I thought was contemplated was that loans up to $500 could be made to settlers who were neither Canadian nor British. I have no objection at all to extending the full amount to settlers of British nationality, but I am opposed to making loans to settlers who are neither Canadian nor British. That is my point.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course the settler cannot get a patent unless he is a Canadian citizen. My hon. friend will realize that he could not come into full possession of the land unless he is a Canadian citizen and naturalized.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister referred to the British settler as a "foreigner."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I never did. I hope my hon. friend is not trying to leave an inference that I did not intend to convey in the slightest.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I asked the minister a question a little while ago and he did not answer. I thought perhaps he would answer this one. I understood him to say something a few moments ago about "a foreigner" and "loans to foreigners." Do I understand now that loans will not be made to foreigners at all?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, loans will be made up to $500, but I was pointing out that the man could not earn the patent and come into title until he became a Canadian citizen.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister not think this is discrimination against the British subjects whom we are trying to get into this country?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How does my hon. friend get that notion?

Mr. McQUARRIE: When you lend $1,000 to a Canadian citizen and only $500 to a British subject who is not a Canadian citizen. Is that not discrimination?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why is it not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For the simple reason that we hope to be able to make an arrangement with the Overseas Settlement Board for three thousand settlers, and they will participate in this scheme as settlers coming from the British Isles.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There may be a man, a British subject, who does not come under this scheme at all, yet he may be a most desirable person to have in Canada because of his qualifications.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is not likely that many such cases would occur.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Such a man has come over without any assistance at all. Surely he would be a more desirable man to have in this country than somebody who has been assisted by the British government to leave Great Britain?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If he happens to become a Canadian citizen within five years he comes within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. McQUARRIE: If he chooses to wait twelve months. He will have to wait twelve months before he can take up land anyway.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend thought he had discovered a mare's nest, did he not? The man would have to go through the process of taking up a homestead and making improvements upon it, and if during that period he became a British subject he would be eligible for the loan.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have no doubt there will be mares' nests in this matter before we get through with it.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the minister whether I understand him correctly that the intention of the government is to change the bill so as to enable a settler to get a loan on a preceding settler's improvements?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They would not be the improvements of the preceding settler.

Mr. BURY: If they be purchased.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no purchase. I think my hon. friend must have misunderstood me. The question asked by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) had reference to abandonment of the property and its reversion to the crown, the subsequent settlers thereon applying for a loan on the improvements.

Mr. BURY: That is, on the preceding settler's improvements.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The improvements on the land. These improvements may not be made by the actual settler himself, but they are improvements made while he is in occupancy and the only applicant on the register for the patent for that particular land.

Mr. BURY: I did not quite catch what is the government's intention. Suppose a man goes on land, proposing to get a patent, makes improvements upon them worth $500 or $600; they go back to the government and later a second entrant comes into occupation. Can that second entrant get a loan on the first man's improvements? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, they would undoubtedly be the first man's improvements, but the first man has gone.

Mr. BURY: Certainly, and the lands have become the property of the crown.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): And the property of the later occupant.

Mr. BURY: They are not the property of the occupant until he gets his patent; they are the property of the crown.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite true. I think I follow my hon. friend. He wants to know whether in the event of these improvements not being the actual improvements performed by the settler himself, he can get consideration?

Mr. BURY: Precisely, because that is the wording of your bill, "by such settler". Does the government propose to go back on the wording of this bill? Because if so, it is going to introduce a totally new principle.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I told my hon. friends that so far as I am concerned I thought such a case would come within the category of the bill. I also promised both the hon. gentlemen in question that I would look into the matter and see whether the wording of section 3 provided for it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With respect to the point taken by the hon. member for East Edmonton, is it not true that in the event of a homestead being improved, the person who had originally applied for homestead having abandoned the land, anyone else could secure the property by paying an amount in lieu of the improvements already made? It would be most unlikely, therefore, that any incoming immigrants would be in a position to take advantage of the bill in such a case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is true so far as Dominion crown lands are concerned, but I am not sure about the provincial regulations.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister is not going to open the door wider than it is at present. If he does that he is going to give any other man who wants to settle on the land the benefit of improvements previously made. That would open the door to frauds of all kinds. Surely the minister will not seriously consider such a suggestion.

Mr. BOURASSA: If the improvements are there and the government advances loans up to a certain amount, it is not going to consider whether John or Thomas has made those improvements. If the provincial government reports that the land is clear so far as title is concerned, even though those improvements have been made by a party who has not fulfilled his obligations to the government, I do not see what difference it makes. It is just the same as any other property that has been mortgaged.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister has said over and over again to-day that the greatest asset is in the man himself. Now, there are hundreds or thousands of claims in northern Ontario where improvements of a certain kind have been made. There are buildings on them, the lands have been cleared, fences have been erected, and then the people settled on those lands have gone away. Does the minister tell me he is going to let anybody go in there, settle on those lands and claim $500 or $1,000, as the case may be, for clearing and other improvements that have been carried out by other people? If the government lends money on the strength of such cases as that, the door will be opened to frauds of all kinds.

Mr. GEARY: Am I right in my recollection that this loan of $500 would be by way of encouragement to immigration, the hope being entertained that the Imperial government would advance an equal sum? That is the case, I think.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. GEARY: How is the immigrant to get $500? Because he must make the improvements himself, and the loan can be made only on such improvements. The immigrant is in England and can by no possibility have made any improvements.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He could not be in England. He would have to be here, an occupant of the land.

Mr. GEARY: Then he is a Canadian citizen.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He is after five years.

Mr. GEARY: Then he gets $1,000, so that the minister is not helping the British immigrant to the tune of $500; he is putting him in a position to get $1,000. I do not see where the differentiation comes in.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is practically no differentiation, but we are hopeful that the British government will join us in this scheme, as they have in all other schemes of this character.

Mr. GEARY: I am still curious to know how he is to get the $500 when he is not here.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But he will have to be here.

Mr. GEARY: He will have to be here within the year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows a good deal of recruiting is done in the Old Country for placing people upon the land. I speak particularly of soldier settlers. The initial stages are all taken in the Old Country. The same thing would apply in this case. If the settler comes here entirely unhampered, as a matter of course he becomes a Canadian citizen in five years.

Mr. GEARY: An immigrant cannot get a loan under this bill, and no immigrant is going to come here and borrow $500 within a year if he can stay one week over the year and get $1,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister, in answer to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who, I am sorry, has gone out for the moment, has taken a position that, as the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) says, throws the door open very much wider than I think he contemplates. What the hon. member for Labelle said is, I think very largely true, namely, that the original entrant or settler on crown lands in a large part of northern Ontario and northern Quebec is not the final settler and the man who gets the patent for the land. There is a very definite reason for that. I will speak more particularly of northern Ontario, because I have lived there for almost forty-five years. Men go on the land there not for the purpose of settling on it at all, but in order to take off during this period the most valuable crop that the land will ever have on it, and that is the timber. A settler on crown lands in Ontario and Quebec is entitled to all the timber on the land, spruce, maple and so on, excepting white and red pine. These men go on the land; they make a certain amount of improvements; they build a house or put up a camp to live in while they are there, and they cultivate a certain quantity of the land; but instead of their work constituting an improvement they have very much depreciated the original value of the land by removing the timber. If the minister is going to lend money to the second entrant in a case of that kind, he is not lending money because the value of the land has been improved. The land is not as valuable as it was before. As I said a moment ago, the most valuable crop the land can have on it in any one period of time is the original crop of timber. There are thousands of such cases where the timber has been removed according to an enumeration which was taken across all northern Ontario; and my information is that the same condition prevails very largely in northern Quebec as to the timber on the land and as to the type of settler who goes in there. The timber exploiter in many cases takes off the timber, and instead of the crown having an added security, it will never again get on that land anything as valuable as what the man has taken off. If the minister is going to give somebody else a loan on the strength of that, he is not getting any security at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think a very much wider construction than is intended is being put upon the bill, judging from the questions that have been asked with respect to the second entrant upon crown land. What I had in mind was simply a case where a homesteader, as we call him in the west, goes upon land and abandons it. That happens in a considerable number of cases. If there are upon the land improvements which are always of a meagre character, we charge the second entrant with those improvements. I can conceive of a situation all through the older provinces where, just as my hon. friend has said, the most valuable crop the land will ever produce has gone and the lands are abandoned. I can say at once that no loan of any character would be made upon land of that description. The land itself must be good land.

Mr. NICHOLSON: This is the best of land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know the circumstances, but if they are the best of lands it is a strange thing that they should be lying idle with no one in possession of them. The lands must be good lands before they come under the provisions of this legislation. It is likely that there will not be many cases in which consideration will be given for a loan to a second entrant, because as the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has pointed out, the intention of this measure is to get new settlers on new lands. I can conceive of cases where 160 or 100 acres of land have been taken up and abandoned, and if it is good land someone else will immediately apply. Improvements of some value may have been effected that the present applicant will have to improve further before he will be given consideration for a loan. As regards widespread applications, hon. members will please forget that, because that is not the intention of the government under this legislation.

Mr. BOYS: The minister himself seems to be in some doubt as to the construction to place upon the matter we are now dealing with, namely, the words "on the security of improvements made by such settler." One would think, from a reading of the section that the intention was that nobody could make application other than the settler who himself, or by his agents at all events, had made the improvements. I am aware that if this legislation has to be construed in the future any declarations or statements that we make in this House will make no difference. But if there is any doubt about the matter—and from what the minister says there seems to be some doubt about it—it should be placed beyond peradventure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Since this discussion has arisen—and I see the possibility of its spreading out into wide dimensions—as that is not the purpose at all I may have to come back to the House and confine the provisions of the bill strictly to first settlers and crown lands.

Mr. BOYS: I would not say that it should be made applicable to first settlers only. It seems to me that the only person entitled to a loan is the settler who makes the improvements, whether he be the first or the second entrant. But I would certainly be opposed to the legislation if it was to entitle the second entrant, who has done nothing whatever upon the land but who gets possession because of an abandonment, to get a loan of $500 or $1,000 on the strength of what somebody else has done. That would be absurd. As I read the bill it does not mean that, but I am making this criticism because of the more or less indefinite attitude the minister has taken upon it. He seemed to think that the door was open to that construction. I certainly do not think it is, but if there is any doubt about the matter and if the clause is to be redrafted, as I understand it is, it ought, I think, to be made perfectly clear that it is to relate to the improvements made by the applicant and by nobody else.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The act clearly was to apply to the first entrant upon a given piece of crown land. I can see where we might make it apply to the second—

Mr. BOYS: Why not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The intention was of course to settle unoccupied crown lands.

Mr. BOYS: Very well; and if the land is abandoned it is unoccupied.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is true. The difficulty is that in giving way in one particular, pressure is brought to bear upon you to give way further. I am thoroughly in accord with the suggestion that the idea was to confine it absolutely to the original applicant, and to unoccupied crown lands.

Mr. BURY: It does not necessarily follow that it should be confined to the original occupant, so long as it is confined to the improvements that have been made by the present applicant whether he be the first, second, third or fourth person to occupy the land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows of course that wherever a homesteader has settled on land he has made some improvements.

Mr. BOYS: There might be misrepresentation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not always. The applicant, generally speaking, makes improvements for which usually he gets no credit.

Mr. BOYS: The minister misunderstands me. There might be some misrepresentation by the second or the third entrant in regard to improvements he alleges to have been made by himself. He might suggest that he had made some improvements while in reality he had made none.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When you confine it definitely to the improvements effected by the applicant himself and by no one else, you are apt to have trouble. Clearly, as I see it, the intention of the bill as drafted is that the provision shall apply to unimproved crown lands, and to the first applicant.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Subsection (b) of section 3 provides for a loan:

To a settler, other than a Canadian citizen, an amount not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Is it the intention to make a loan to a foreigner coming here to settle on land before he has taken out his papers and become a naturalized British subject?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must answer that question rather carefully. I think I am correct in saying yes, but I may add that the settler cannot obtain his patent until he is a British subject. That safeguard is provided.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister, I think, said that before, and I understand that part of it. My objection would be to making the loan to such an applicant at all. I do not think that any man coming to Canada should come within the provisions of this bill until he has become a naturalized British subject.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall look into that point carefully. Before making application, however, the settler is required to declare his intention of becoming a British subject.

Mr. ESLING: How would this provision affect orientals and Doukhobors? Usually the Doukhobor is interested mainly in getting the timber off the land, which he then abandons.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The oriental does not come under the bill.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Marine and Fisheries—Ocean and river service: maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and ice-breakers, $1,500,000.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This vote is the same as last year's; in fact, the same vote has appeared in the estimates in previous years. It provides for the maintenance and operation of vessels employed in the icebreaking service in the St. Lawrence and the gulf, in construction work as required, and in the supply and maintenance of lighthouses, fog alarms, buoys, beacons and similar aids to navigation.

Mr. ROGERS: What expenditures have been made in connection with icebreaking at Port Arthur and Fort William?

Mr. CARDIN: There is a contract for $30,000.

Mr. ROGERS: All expended?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount of the contract has been paid.

Mr. BURY: Is there any provision for ice-breaking in Hudson bay?

Mr. CARDIN: Not yet.

Mr. ROGERS: What is the nature of this contract for $30,000? Is the money paid whether they break any ice or not?

Mr. CARDIN: That $30,000 comes under another item No. 231 for the breaking of ice in Thunder bay, lake Superior and other points deemed advisable in the interests of navigation.

Mr. BOYS: What was the amount expended last year in connection with this item?

Mr. CARDIN: Up to February 28th., there was expended $1,403,000 for the maintenance of all these boats.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many of these steamers and ice breakers are owned by the Dominion?

Mr. CARDIN: There are 27 vessels engaged in ice-breaking and looking after the maintenance of buoys, lighthouses, and so on.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Are the captains and crews employees of the government?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If that is so, what was the reason for paying $30,000 on a contract for ice breaking at Port Arthur?

Mr. CARDIN: These vessels are operated particularly in the gulf of St. Lawrence and on the Pacific coast. There are also some on the lakes, but I am informed we have no vessel on lake Superior capable of breaking ice.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How much money has been spent for ice-breaking by steamers and ice-breakers other than those owned by the government?

Mr. CARDIN: That is the only amount, $30,000, which is covered by another vote, as I have just mentioned.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Outside the million and a half?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: What was the expenditure under this item in 1924-25?

Mr. CARDIN: $1,390,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: What work was the Thiepval engaged in at the time she was wrecked on the west coast of Vancouver island?

Mr. CARDIN: She was engaged in work for the Department of National Defence.

Mr. TOLMIE: Was she engaged in protecting the fisheries at that time?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I have not that information at hand.

Mr. TOLMIE: What department paid for the repairs?

Mr. CARDIN: The Department of National Defence.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many months of the year are these ice breakers in operation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The winter months.

Item agreed to.

Examination of masters and mates, $20,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is this examination conducted by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. CARDIN: No, the examinations are conducted by captains appointed by the department.

Mr. ROGERS: How much does each examination cost?

Mr. CARDIN: I could not say. In Halifax we are paying Captain Mitchell, Supervising Examiner, a salary of $2,580, and his stenographer $1,260. He held twenty examinations for masters, thirty-one for mates, and thirteen for second mates. We have an office in Halifax that looks after these examinations.

Mr. SHORT: Are examinations held at any other place in Nova Scotia besides Halifax?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, at Yarmouth and North Sydney.

Mr. SHORT: Who is the examiner at Yarmouth?

Mr. CARDIN: The position is vacant, the examiner having died last year.

Mr. SHORT: Is it intended to appoint a successor?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. Of course the appointment will be made by the Civil Service Commission.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How frequently are these examinations held?

Mr. CARDIN: Whenever there is a sufficient number of candidates.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This particular examiner examined sixty all told, if my addition is correct, and received for his services $2,500, his stenographer being paid $1,200. In addition, I suppose, there was office rent as well as other expenses. I presume he would examine five or six candidates at a time, so that would be a little over one examination a week. What did he do to earn his money in the meantime? And what did his stenographer do?

Mr. CARDIN: The figures I have given represent those who passed the examinations Of course a greater number of candidates failed to pass. As to the rent, these officers are occupying a public building in Halifax, and we are not paying any additional rent.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many tried the examinations? With this information we will be able to estimate his work.

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that information.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is any examination fee charged?

Mr. CARDIN: No, but a small fee is charged for issuing the certificate.

Mr. BOYS: Are no other duties performed throughout the year by this official? If so, here is a wonderful chance for the minister to practise a little economy.

Mr. CARDIN: The amount is so small that you cannot cut it very much.

Mr. BOYS: I am not suggesting the minister is responsible. I suppose this position has been in existence for a number of years, but if someone is getting $2,500 a year for simply presiding over a few examinations two or three times a year altogether too much money is being paid, there is no doubt about that, and I think the minister might well look into it.

Mr. CARDIN: Although this man possibly has not to work ten or fifteen hours a day, he has to be at hand to examine candidates whenever they make application. Of course, as my hon. friend suggests, this office has been in existence for a very long time. I may add that the Civil Service Commission fixes the salary and classification. It is very important to continue this work in order that we may have men properly qualified for navigation. It is classified by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BOYS: I was under a misapprehension; I gathered from what I had heard that these men presided at examinations. Evidently, that is not so. Is it that they are in an office and that at any time a person may present himself for examination, and they must be there all the time?

Mr. CARDIN: All the time.

Mr. ROGERS: How many men have you?

Mr. CARDIN: At Halifax we have Captain Mitchell, who is presiding examiner, and there is a stenographer. That is all we have there.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the minister if these officers could not do other work? I know that the officers of the merchant marine in the Old Country who conduct the examinations in mercantile marine are working captains, who are carrying on their profession. They do not sit on a stool waiting for officers to present themselves for examination; they are working captains, getting paid for their regular duties. Then there is another question: is the salary fixed or are the examiners paid so much for every examination?

Mr. CARDIN: These salaries are fixed, and I must say to my hon. friend that he is wrong in his contention that these examinations are held in England by regular captains. The examinations are held by officers of the board of trade, and not by captains.

Mr. BURY: They are held by officers representing the board of trade, who are themselves operating captains.

Mr. CARDIN: That is not my information.

Mr. BURY: They used to be, at all events.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the minister uses the term "presiding examiner" does he mean that there are other examiners?

Mr. CARDIN: That is the title, and this man at Halifax supervises the work at Yarmouth and North Sydney as well. Probably that is the reason why he has been classified as a supervising examiner, but of course this title has been given him by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Do I understand that this supervising examiner devotes the whole of his time to this work?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Do the other examiners not so classed devote all their time to the work? What salary do they receive?

Mr. CARDIN: Not in North Sydney; in North Sydney Captain Sutherland works eight months as examiner. He has a regular office, as in Halifax, but receives a salary of only $600. In Yarmouth the examiner receives a salary of only $1,440, and there is no other employee under him.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What do they do, in North Sydney and Yarmouth, in the other four months? My hon. friend says it is necessary to have a man in Halifax all the time, to be ready in case anyone comes in and wants an examination, but in Yarmouth and North Sydney it is only necessary to have a man during eight months. It strikes me that a certain time might be set for this examiner to hold his examinations in Halifax, say once a month or once every two weeks, and he could go to North Sydney and conduct an examination there; to Yarmouth, and conduct an examination there, and so on. It seems to me, from what has already been stated by the minister, that there is not enough work to occupy even a small part of the time of this gentleman and his stenographer, who between them cost about $3,500 or $4,000 a year. This is an excellent opportunity to cut down expenses. The situation is not answered at all by saying that these men are appointed by the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission makes an appointment when they are requested to do so by the department, so the blame comes back to the department for recommending the appointment of more men than are really necessary to carry on the work properly. I quite agree with the minister that it is very necessary to have competent examiners; this is important work and these men should be qualified before receiving their certificates. That is all very true, but for a good part of the time these officials cannot possibly have anything to do.

Mr. SHORT: Will the minister tell us how many examinations were held in Yarmouth last year by the examiner there, who received a salary of $1,400?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the position has been vacant during this last year.

Mr. SHORT: No examinations were held there?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. SHORT: To whom was the $1,400 paid?

Mr. CARDIN: It has not been paid.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell me what the balance of this $20,000 is for, besides this officer and his stenographer?

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister an examining board at the Pacific coast?

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like an answer to my question.

Mr. CARDIN: There are establishments of the same character in other parts of the country. We have spoken so far only of Halifax, Yarmouth and North Sydney, but there is an officer at Quebec, although he receives only $720 a year. There is another establishment at St. John, New Brunswick; another in Montreal; another in Prince Edward Island, and one in Toronto. There is a supervising examiner at Toronto, receiving the same salary as the officer at Halifax; he also has a stenographer. Then there is another establishment at Collingwood; one at Port Arthur and one at Selkirk, Manitoba. This last office is vacant at the present time.

Mr. ROGERS: What about Goderich; have you none there?

Mr. CARDIN: No. In regard to the western division there is an establishment at Vancouver; another at Victoria and there was one at Nelson, which is vacant at present. At Vancouver the salary is about the same, $2,340; at Victoria the salary is $1,500.

Mr. FRASER: Is there just one official at each place?

Mr. CARDIN: There is a stenographer at Vancouver as well as the examiner.

Mr. McGIBBON: Could not some of these offices be closed. Is it necessary to have two or three offices in Ontario to examine a few mates?

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that these establishments have been provided because of requests made by people interested in navigation matters; they are for the convenience of those people.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the minister has the responsibility. I am asking if he cannot cut them down. It does not matter what his predecessors have done; we are here to enforce economy as much as possible, and it appears to me to be absurd to have two or three officers in this province with practically nothing to do.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. SHORT: The minister stated that there has been no examiner at Yarmouth for a whole year. Could not that $1,400 be very well dispensed with? That is a small item, perhaps, but if these other men could do the work that amount would be saved.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Maritime rights!

Mr. CARDIN: In answer to my hon. friend I am informed that the examiner at Halifax has been requested several times to go to Yarmouth. I would hesitate to close this office, because I am informed that the people in that vicinity are anxious to keep the office, and it has been profitable and advantageous to those interested in such matters. At all events, I am ready to take into consideration the very friendly representations made by my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. FRASER: What does the minister think about the position at Nelson?

Mr. CARDIN: That position is vacant at the present time.

Mr. FRASER: Has it been vacant during the whole year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Then the same thing which applies to Yarmouth would apply also to Nelson.

Mr. BURY: If the $1,400 was not paid at Yarmouth this year, how comes it there is no difference between the $20,000 of the previous year and the $20,000 of last year?

Mr. CARDIN: We are asking for the same amount as last year, but this does not represent the expenditure.

Mr. ROGERS: What amount was expended last year?

Mr. CARDIN: We spent $15,952, up to February 28th last.

Mr. CLARK: How many vacant positions were there?

Mr. CARDIN: Three, one at Yarmouth, one at Selkirk, Manitoba, and one at Nelson, British Columbia. The salary at Nelson and Selkirk is small, only $600. At Yarmouth it is $1,440.

Mr. SHORT: What does the examiner at Yarmouth do to earn $1,400? The place has been closed a year. How many examinations did he have to make?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not the number of examinations which he made last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I observe from the Auditor General's report that the amount spent last year was $19,994.

Mr. CARDIN: That is for 1924-25.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Would the minister state what the duties of the supervising examiner are? I understand that candidates for the positions of mate and captain come before examiners, and are examined by them. What is the work of the supervising examiner, who does not see the candidates at all?

Mr. CARDIN: The supervising examiner checks the papers of the examiners at the other places. The examination papers at Yarmouth, for example, are forwarded to the supervising examiner at Halifax, who checks them up. He supervises the work of the officers in the smaller ports, like Yarmouth and North Sydney.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Are the certificates that are granted issued by the supervising examiner?

Mr. CARDIN:: The examiner at Yarmouth, for example, sends in his report to the supervising examiner at Halifax, who checks the papers and forwards them to Ottawa, and the certificate is issued at the department here after all the documents have been passed on and approved by the supervising examiner at Halifax.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Could there not be some competent officer in the department here to do the supervising, instead of the supervising officer who does not see the candidates at all?

Mr. CARDIN: We have officers in the department checking even the reports of the supervising examiner.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): If the supervising examiner does not see the candidates at all, it would seem to me that some of this work must be superfluous, because the report he makes to the minister has to be examined by officials in the department.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If the work of the supervising examiner at Halifax, for instance, is that of checking the reports of the men who actually examine the candidates, then forwarding them to Ottawa for rechecking, surely instead of having one supervising examiner at Halifax with an office and an office staff and another at Toronto with an office and an office staff—not actually examining candidates but simply scrutinizing fifty or sixty examination papers annually, sent in to him by the men who actually make the examination—the minister could save a little money by having only one supervising examiner stationed at Ottawa, to whom all these reports could be sent in the first place. Why send the papers from Yarmouth to Halifax, and from Port Arthur or Collingwood to Toronto, to be checked, and then send them to Ottawa to be rechecked? Set the examinations, if you will, and then at Toronto, Collingwood, Owen Sound, and other places where you have scores of captains doing nothing when their ships are laid up, and who would be glad to act as examiners, have these local men do the work and send in their reports to one supervising examiner at Ottawa for the whole country. The minister could save a little money here, at least, and the virtue of saving is a very good virtue to begin to practise at some point.

Mr. CARDIN: Even if we could find somebody in Toronto and elsewhere to take charge of the examinations, they would not work for nothing; we should have to pay them. I might point out that these supervising officers not only supervise the reports of other officers, but they also act as examiners themselves; in fact their most important work is taking charge of the examinations in the more important ports. They supervise, in addition, the work done in the less important places, but their main duty is to carry on a very much greater number of examinations themselves.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is there a greater number of applicants for certificates as masters and mates in Toronto than in Port Arthur, Fort William, Sault Ste. Marie, Collingwood, or any of these ports out of which boats on the Great Lakes run? Why should it be necessary to have a supervising examiner conduct the examinations at one port, and an ordinary captain—for that is what they are, practical men who know their business—make the examinations at some other port? The class of work done in both cases is just the same, so why should one man get $2,500 a year and be given a stenographer and an office, and another man somewhere else be paid only half that amount—because the minister has stated that the salary ranges from $600 to $1,450 and so on? Why make this variation? If you want a supervising examiner, why not have one at Ottawa for the whole country?

Mr. CARDIN: The supervising examiners have much more work to do. The supervising examiner at Toronto, for instance, has recommended the issuing of certificates for 43 masters, although he has examined a greater number than that, and 25 mates. In Kingston, for example, eleven masters and fourteen mates passed their examination compared with forty-three masters and twenty-five mates, at Toronto. At Port Arthur only two masters passed the examination and only one mate. So the work the examiners have to do at these smaller places is not so heavy as the work which has to be performed in a large city like Toronto.

Mr. McGIBBON: I should like to ask the minister for the third time if it is not possible to cut out some of these places? There is an examination held in Kingston, one in Toronto, one in Collingwood, one at the Soo, and one at Port Arthur.

Mr. CARDIN: The supervising examiner for the Great Lakes division not only conducts the examination at Toronto but also visits other places in the province. At Collingwood we have Captain Coles, but he receives a salary of only $600. Outside of conducting examinations he gives lectures on navigation.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister does not seriously contend that all these officers are kept busy examining students during the twelve months when there are only forty candidates at one place, twenty at another and thirty at another. Why, there is not enough work combined to keep one man busy two months. I should like the minister to take this matter a little more seriously. It is a small matter, it is true, but there is a duplication of offices and salaries in Ontario at least that is absolutely unwarranted. The minister simply receives the suggestion with a shake of his head, as though it were of no importance whatever. If he has an examiner in Toronto who goes to Collingwood, a distance of only three hours by train, why is it necessary to have another examiner in the latter port? What is the sense of this duplication at every little port around the lakes? After all it only represents about one man's job for a year.

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid I could not venture to close the office at Toronto without incurring very serious criticism from the navigation companies. They are desirous of maintaining the office so that they may obtain properly qualified masters and mates. The Toronto office is really doing a very important work.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not asking you to close the office at Toronto, I am asking what is the sense of maintaining seven or eight of these offices in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CARDIN: There is really only one office having jurisdiction over the Great Lakes, and that is the Toronto office. But the supervising examiner holds examinations at smaller places.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did you not tell us that you had an official at Collingwood?

Mr. CARDIN: There is one there.

Mr. McGIBBON: And at the Soo and at Port Arthur?

Mr. CARDIN: There is only one at Collingwood. That official receives a small salary and, as I have just stated, delivers lectures on navigation outside his other duties.

Mr. GEARY: Is it not a fact that the minister has not increased his staff since 1924-5? You still have a man with a stenographer in Toronto, and you have a man in Collingwood?

Mr. CARDIN: Absolutely.

Mr. GEARY: And the chief examiner conducts examinations at other points in the province?

Mr. CARDIN: The examiner at Toronto does.

Mr. GEARY: The provision made does not seem excessive.

Mr. McGIBBON: If there are only two men, why the need of estimates to the amount of $20,000?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That $20,000 is for the whole country.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, $20,000 for the whole work.

Mr. McGIBBON: You have been telling us that two men only are doing the work.

Mr. CARDIN: No, that was the work of the Great Lakes division of Toronto.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have to defend the interests of Ontario against my hon. friend.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): What is the cost of the Port Arthur office?

Mr. GEARY: What class of stenographer have you in Toronto? The salary you pay is $600. That does not seem enough for a stenographer in that city.

Mr. CARDIN: The salary is $780, the salary of a regular stenographer.

Mr. GEARY: That is not as much as other stenographers get in government departments.

Mr. CARDIN: This amount has been fixed by the Civil Service Commission for the work performed there.

Mr. GEARY: Is the stenographer employed all the time, or just temporarily?

Mr. CARDIN: All the time.

Mr. GEARY: It is a very low salary.

Mr. CANTLEY: I rather sympathize with the minister in his efforts to enlighten my agricultural friends behind me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CANTLEY: There would be no objection in the Maritime provinces if the minister closed up all these offices on the lakes. They are only fresh-water sailors up there, and perhaps seldom out of sight of land. For the enlightenment of my hon. friends behind me, and of others, I may say that the offices in the Maritime provinces are necessary. Let me illustrate why. A young man goes to sea. After he has been at sea for a year or two years he goes up for examination as second mate. He takes a month, two months, or three months as the case may be to attend a navigation school, and then he goes up for his second mate's ticket. If he passes the examination he gets his ticket. He goes to sea again and after having served a certain length of time and obtained a certificate that he has served for that period as second mate, he again goes to the navigation school for whatever time may be necessary. Then he goes up for examination for his first mate's certificate. Having succeeded in obtaining his certificate he goes again to sea and passes a certain specified time as first mate. He comes back with the required certificate and attends the navigation school for a further period. Then he presents himself for examination and in the event of his being successful is given his ticket as a master. These offices in the Maritime provinces are absolutely necessary. A man may have been at sea on a foreign voyage for six or nine months and then his ship goes into Sydney or into some other port in the Cape Breton district. It is not reasonable that he should be required to go to Halifax to undergo examination. It is for that reason that examining offices have been established at the outports of Sydney and Yarmouth. The only objection I have in the matter is this: If the office of examiner at Yarmouth was vacant during the whole of last year it is something which should not have happened —it is a positive hardship. I object to any reduction in the vote for the Maritime provinces, but I am not concerned to any extent whatever as to the fate of the Ontario examining offices.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I asked the minister previously what the cost of the Port Arthur office was.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no office at Port Arthur. The supervising examiner goes there and conducts the examination himself.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister sends a man there to examine two or three people, I understand, two masters and one mate?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: Who is the supervising examiner at Vancouver?

Mr. CARDIN: Captain L. H. Lindsay.

Mr. CLARK: How long has he held the office?

Mr. CARDIN: Two years.

Mr. CLARK: Who was the former officer?

Mr. CARDIN: Captain Eddie.

Mr. CLARK: What is the salary paid?

Mr. CARDIN: $2,340.

Mr. CLARK: Does he hold any other position under the government?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. CLARK: Does he give his whole time to the work?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: He is not allowed to do any other work?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Item agreed to.

Investigation into wrecks, $6,000.

Mr. BOYS: Will the minister explain this item? The reason I want to know is because I have been trying to have a little wreck removed at the mouth of the Nottawasaga river, and I want to make sure that has been provided for this year.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed it has been removed.

Mr. BOYS: I am glad to be able to congratulate the government on accomplishing one thing at all events.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Wednesday, April 7, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): I move that the report of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) for the year 1925 be referred to the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion should be preceded by notice and it may be adopted only by unanimous consent of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD—PERSONNEL

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table copy of an order in council in which I know my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), will be particularly interested. I refer to the order in council in relation to the board on tariff taxation and other related matters, in other words, the Tariff Advisory Board. The order in council in question sets forth the personnel and powers of the board. I may mention that Mr. Hector Brown McKinnon of Toronto has been appointed secretary to the board, although his name is not mentioned in the order in council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who are the board?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Right Hon. George P. Graham, chairman, Mr. Alfred Lambert of Montreal and Mr. Donald Gordon McKenzie of Brandon.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What happened to Mr. Daoust?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He asked that he be not considered.

MARITIME RIGHTS COMMISSION—PERSONNEL

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to lay on the table of the House a copy of the order in council appointing the royal commission to inquire into certain matters respecting the Maritime provinces. The personnel of this commission is Sir Andrew Duncan, chairman, Hon. W. B. Wallace and Professor Cyrus Macmillan of McGill University.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SHIPMENTS OF CANADIAN CATTLE

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw):

1. On what conditions are cattle admitted to Great Britain for grazing and feeding purposes?
2. What has been the cost to the government of the inspection and supervision in transit of these cattle year by year?
3. How many store cattle have been shipped to the United Kingdom year by year since the lifting of the embargo?
4. How many cattle of all kinds have been shipped to the United Kingdom in the same periods?
5. Have any cases of contagious disease been discovered by officers of the Department in shipments of store cattle going forward to the United Kingdom since the embargo was lifted?
6. What percentage of Great Britain's live stock consumption is supplied by Canada?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Synopsis of "Order of the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries" (dated 9th March, 1923.)

"Importation of Canadian Cattle Order of 1923".

Canadian store cattle are cattle born and reared in the Dominion of Canada, consisting only of castrated males and spayed females, and intended for feeding purposes, and not for immediate slaughter.

Landed at a port and landing place approved by the minister under supervision of an inspector.

Certificate signed by a duly authorized officer of the Dominion of Canada.

Cattle have been kept separate for three clear days immediately before shipment and examined from time to time by an authorized veterinary officer of the Dominion of Canada and no cattle plague, pleuro pneumonia, foot and mouth disease or mange found.

If steamer conveying cattle had within 28 days preceding carried cattle coastwise from any port other than in Great Britain and Canada or has entered such port must be cleansed and disinfected.

Cattle are eartagged and branded with letter C on right cheek.

A declaration by the master of the vessel that the cattle were shipped from a port in Canada and vessel has not entered any port or place outside Great Britain.

A certificate signed by an authorized veterinary officer of the Dominion of Canada that the cattle have been kept separate from other animals and examined daily by him during the voyage and no cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia or foot and mouth disease has been found also stating whether any cattle have died on the voyage and giving the cause of death.

After landing the cattle are subject to regulations concerning movement of such cattle in Great Britain.

SEIZURE OF VESSEL PESCAWHA

Mr. LADNER:

1. Has the government any information relative to the seizure of the vessel Pescawha, and the arrest of Captain Robert Pamphlet and crew off the mouth of the Columbia river by United States revenue officers, and the subsequent conviction of the said Captain Pamphlet and his crew by United States courts?

2. In view of the provisions of the boundary line treaty of 1846, whereby the Columbia river was made an open waterway for British traders and their goods, is it the intention of the government to take any action to protect the treaty rights of the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. While no communication in regard to this occurrence has reached the government from or on behalf of the owners, master, crew or anyone interested in this vessel, press reports regarding the case were noted at the time of her seizure and His Majesty's ambassador at Washington was requested to make inquiries into the matter.

Sir Esme Howard has forwarded reports from His Majesty's consul at Portland in which it is stated that the vessel, with a cargo of liquor aboard bound for Mexican ports, was seized by the United States Revenue Cutter Algonquin on the 4th February, 1925, at a point some twenty miles off the coast of the State of Washington, between Willapa and Grays Harbour. The captain and crew were brought to Portland and lodged in gaol, but no appeal was made for diplomatic intervention, nor any attempt made by the prisoners to communicate with His Majesty's consul. They were subsequently released on bond, and were ultimately brought to trial before a jury at Portland on the 26th February of the present year. A verdict of guilty was returned against them and the case was immediately appealed, and the appeal is now pending.

2. As the reported locality of the seizure was in the open sea, at a considerable distance from the mouth of the Columbia river, it is not understood how the rights of navigation in that river secured to British subjects could have been infringed, but if evidence is received of their infraction, suitable steps will be taken to protect them.

RADIO SETS FOR LIGHTHOUSES

Mr. LADNER:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to equip Canadian lighthouses with radio receiving sets?

2. Is the government aware that in the case of the big bank robbery at Nanaimo a short time ago that the bandits were hiding in their launch close to the Porlier Pass lighthouse that the lighthouse keeper saw said bandits' launch and also police boat passing near by and not knowing of the said robbery failed to notify the police boat of the hiding place, and the bandits escaped, thereby involving thousands of dollars of public money in further search throughout Canada and the United States?

3. Is it the intention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to install in certain of the more exposed lighthouses radio broadcasting equipment of sufficient range to communicate in case of emergency with larger centres of population?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN:

1. It is not the intention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to equip all Canadian lighthouses with radio receiving sets.

2. No.

3. The following isolated lightstations have means of communication which were primarily established as aids to navigation.

British Columbia—Dead Tree Pt. Q.C.I., radio; Cape Beale, radio phone; Pachena, radio phone; Carmanah, radio phone; Estevan, radio phone; Merry Island, radio phone; Lennard Island, cable to Tofino.

Quebec—Magdalen Islands, radio.

Nova Scotia—Seal Island, radio; Sable Island, radio; St. Paul's, radio.

Newfoundland—Cape Race, radio; Cape Ray, radio; Belle Isle, radio.

MR. M. O. DURANT

Mr. DOUCET:

1. Has Mr. M. O. Durant of the Legal branch, Department of Public Works, been given a promotion recently by the Civil Service Commission? If so, to what grade and at what salary?

2. Is that increase of salary included in the estimates of the said department for the year 1926-27?

3. What position did Mr. Durant occupy in the said department before being transferred to the Legal branch?

4. Have promotions been given to other members of the said branch of the department? If so, to whom and at what increase in salary?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes. To clerk, grade 4, $1,500 to $1,800.

2. Yes.

3. Stores clerk, Engineer's branch.

4. J. A. Chasse, by revision, 1st April, 1919, from division 1B to junior departmental solicitor, $2,800-$3,060. Increase $260.

Miss Y. Parent, by revision 1 April, 1919, from clerk 3B to law clerk stenographer, $1,000-$1,080. Increase $80.

WALLACEBURG CUSTOMS AND POST OFFICES

Mr. CHAPLIN (Kent):

1. Was a site for a post office and customs office purchased by the Dominion government in the town of Wallaceburg?

2. If so, in what year was the purchase made, what was the size of the lot, what was the price paid for it?

3. What rental is being paid for the premises used for customs purposes in Wallaceburg?

4. What rental is being paid for the premises used for post office in Wallaceburg?

5. How much money has been spent, other than rentals, by the government, on the buildings used for customs and post office, since the above site was purchased?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) 1910; (b) 60 feet on Nelson street, by 100 feet on James street, of which 10 feet is reserved for right of way; (c) $3,000.

3. Nil.

4. Postmaster provides the space for postal purposes for which he receives a rent allowance based on the revenue. This allowance for the fiscal year ended 31st March, 1925, was $700.

5. Nil.

[Mr. Cardin.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EARNINGS AND OPERATING EXPENSES

Mr. SENN:

1. What were the gross earnings of the Canadian National Railways for the year 1925 on, (a) central region; (b) Atlantic region; (c) western region?

2. What were the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways for the year 1925 on, (a) the central region; (b) Atlantic region; (c) western region?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING:

1. (a) $119,390,408.96; (b) $20,287,613.05; (c) $73,445,226.05.

2. (a) $98,452,039.53; (b) $23,463,862.70; (c) $67,052,478.24.

ASBESTOS

Mr. SIMPSON:

1. What quantity of asbestos was mined or produced in Canada during 1925 or the last twelve-month period of which the government has a record?

2. What amount of this asbestos was manufactured in Canada during the same period?

3. What amount was exported in the natural or unmanufactured state?

4. What was the value of the amount exported?

5. What was the value of articles manufactured from asbestos, or of which asbestos formed the principal part, and imported into Canada during the same period?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Sales of asbestos from Canadian mines in 1925 totalled 290,121 tons valued at $8,995,854 as compared with shipments of 225,744 tons valued at $6,710,830 in 1924.

2. Complete data as to the amount of Canadian asbestos manufactured into products such as brake-linings, etc., are not available as the companies engaged in this industry use some crude, and some yarns and cloth part of which is imported in that form, although it may have been made from Canadian crude. In 1924, the asbestos products industry in Canada used:

Asbestos, cloth and yarn—105,152 yards.. ..	$46,632
Asbestos, crude and fibre—75,967 lb..	24,753
Asbestos, paper, corrugated and plain—253,300 sq. ft..	5,369

Another large factory for the manufacture of asbestos products in Canada was opened in June, 1924. Data as to the consumption of crude by this plant are not available for publication but the following figures, showing the differences between sales from the mines and tonnages exported in each of the past three years, indicate the growing consumption of asbestos in Canadian plants:

	Calendar Years
	1923	1924	1925
	Tons	Tons	Tons
Shipments from the mines...	231,482	225,744	290,121
Exports, as per customs' records...	215,502	204,749	258,017
Apparently used in Canada..	15,980	20,995	32,104

Asbestos paper and mill board are manufactured on a large scale; asbestos roofing of all kinds; asbestos rigid shingles; asbestos building materials; asbestos cellular, and sponge felted pipe insulations; insulating sheets and blocks; asbestos brake linings and clutch facings are woven on special looms, necessary for making asbestos textiles; asbestos packings for steam, oil and hydraulic operations.

BUTTER AND CHEESE GRADING

Mr. BOTHWELL:

1. What have been the records of grading dairy produce for export from Canada (a) in percentage of improvement in (1) butter, (2) cheese; and (b) in percentage of both butter and cheese, grading (1) special, (2) No. 1, and (3) No. 2?

2. How many dairy produce graders were employed in 1925 and where?

3. What was the total cost of grading butter and cheese in 1925?

4. What quantities of butter and cheese were graded in 1923, 1924 and 1925, respectively?

5. What was the cost of grading (a) 100 pounds of butter, (b) 100 pounds of cheese?

6. Are the grades, as marked by Canadian graders, accepted in the United Kingdom?

7. Is the total cost of this grading service borne by the government, and if so, is it the intention to so continue this service?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. (a) 1. Pasteurized butter, 1924—increase in special and first grades over 1923—6.6 per cent. Unpasteurized butter, 1924—increase in first grade over 1923—6.2 per cent.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN PATENTS

Mr. SIMPSON:

1. How many Canadian patents were issued during the year 1925?

2. How many were issued to (a) Canadian citizens, (b) citizens of the United States; and (c) citizens of other countries?

3. How many patents were cancelled during 1925?

4. How many patents were cancelled during 1925 because the patentee failed to have the article so patented manufactured in Canada?

5. Has the government any system of investigation or check to ascertain if articles so patented are actually being manufactured in Canada to meet the reasonable Canadian demand?

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

Mr. SIMPSON:

1. What was the cost of newspapers and periodicals subscribed for by each department of government during the year 1925, not including those for use in the general reading room of House of Commons or Senate?

2. What are the names of publications, the number of each subscribed for and the place of publication?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY CARS

Mr. LADNER:

1. How much lumber was used in the construction of the Canadian National Railway cars during the years 1922 to 1925, inclusive ?

2. How much of the total lumber used was purchased outside of the Dominion of Canada?

3. How many million feet, board measure, of southern pine were used for such purpose during the years 1922 to 1925, inclusive?

4. What percentage of lumber used was of Canadian origin?

5. What percentage of douglas fir or other British Columbia woods was used in the manufacture of cars for the Canadian National Railways?

6. How many cars for the Canadian National Railways, during 1922 to 1925, inclusive, were manufactured in United States; (a) How many are under construction in the United States at the present time; (b) How many are on order in United States at the present time?

7. What are the values of: (a) The cars manufactured in the United States for the Canadian National Railways, if any, during the years 1922 to 1925, inclusive; (b) cars now under construction in the United States for the Canadian National Railways (c) cars now on order in United States for the Canadian National Railways?

8. Have any United States built cars been brought into Canada for use on the Canadian National Railways? If so, was duty paid upon them?

9. What is the value of cars constructed in Canada for the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING: It will require two weeks to answer this question. Perhaps the hon. member will let it stand as an order for return.

POWER SHORTAGE IN ONTARIO

MOTION BY MR. CHURCH TO EXTEND HYDRO-ELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario should be given leave forthwith to develop and generate power on the St. Lawrence river at what is known as the Morrisburg dam, and should also be given power to use an increased flow of water from the Niagara river and so relieve the acute shortage of power in Ontario, and that this House will support the government in taking such immediate action as herein proposed without further delays in accordance with the application of the Ontario government and Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario filed in 1923, 1924 and 1925 with the government of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my motion is designed primarily to relieve the very acute shortage of power that now threatens the province of Ontario. Repeated efforts have been made by the provincial government under the Navigable Waters Act to secure fresh sources of power, but the application for a permit to develop power at Morrisburg although made in 1912, is still pending, it having been impossible to get the Dominion authorities to come to a decision. To-day Ontario depends absolutely on cheap light and power, and the total capital investment in the undertaking amounts to $241,000,000. The Privy Council has decided that, subject to rights of navigation, the surplus waters of our rivers and international streams, the beds of the rivers, the banks and the rapids belong to the provinces but there has been nothing but delay by the Dominion government in dealing with the application of the government of Ontario to develop further power. The only available hydro sources are in the Niagara river, where a slight additional diversion of water may be possible by arrangement with the United States, the St. Lawrence river and the Ottawa river.

I raised this question last session on June 24, and in the course of a somewhat extended debate the then Minister of Railways, Mr. Graham, admitted that the application of the province had been on and off before the Public Works department since 1913. He said there was a difference of opinion between the engineers regarding the site for the Morrisburg dam, one opinion favouring a site below the rapids opposite Barnhart island and the other a site above, at Morrisburg. But the engineers agreed that the plans filed by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario were practical from the engineering standpoint, the financial standpoint and the power standpoint. Why is it that no action has been taken by the Dominion authorities to deal with this application? As I have said, the capital investment in the Hydro Electric development of the province of Ontario represents $241,000,000. This all belongs to the taxpayers of the province and is earning interest and sinking fund. By means of this development cheap light and power is available to the people and to industry. As a result of cheap light and power we find there has been a wonderful development in the Niagara district, various big industrial concerns pulp and paper and chemical and various other by-product industries having been attracted there by reason of those facilities. As a result of this system the cost of electric light is very low; the average household bill amounts to only about 86 cents. We should utilize the public resources of this country for the benefit of our own people. If any municipalities are suffering from the lack of cheap light and power, it is the eastern municipalities of Ontario. They did not see fit to co-operate with this movement in 1911, and have only recently decided to come into it at all, with the result that they are now getting the benefits which the rest of Ontario has had for years. The towns on the St. Lawrence found it very difficult to get industries because of this lack of cheap light and power. While not wishing to take up the question of politics, it was very fortunate for the province that when the Chippawa power development was under way the present government was not in office, because if they had been that work would not have been proceeded with. It was the Conservatives who sanctioned that work, under a very similar application to that which is now before the House.

We are told that this scheme cannot be undertaken because it will interfere with navigation. It does not interfere with navigation; it is all in the province of Ontario. The leases and proposed works are in the province of Ontario; the surplus waters, the bed, banks and rapids of the St. Lawrence river, subject to navigation, belong to the province of Ontario. The very able Premier of Quebec, Mr. Taschereau, has taken a strong stand on this question; he says that the bed of the St. Lawrence and the rapids and the banks of these international streams belong to the provinces, and there is a recent decision of the courts supporting that contention. He is big enough to protect the rights of Quebec, and we hope that this government will do something to protect the rights of the people in this magnificent territory. I am glad to see that this privilege is to be extended to the other provinces, because the principle should be applied to all provinces, not merely to one or two.

How does it come about that this present government is holding up the work? It is not a question of navigation; I raised the matter in the House on June 24 of last year, when the then Minister of Railways, Mr. Graham, was here. None knew better than he the conditions in the towns on the St. Lawrence, but he also raised the question of navigation. With what result?—to hold up this work. All the reports received, reports of engineers, reports of the Hydro Electric Power Commission and others, said that this dam would not interfere with navigation. The very engineers who constructed the Chippawa development, which cost $65,000,000 and which is now generating 600,000 horse-power, reported that this Morrisburg dam would not interfere with navigation. Then the Minister of Railways got out from under the proposition by saying that the question should be referred to the joint engineering board investigating the St. Lawrence waterway. That, however, is a separate proposition entirely. Cheap light and power for our province is more important than the waterway feature. The most important thing to the people of Ontario is to stop the exodus, get industries, create work and solve the unemployment question, and this is a good way to do it. The former minister, at page 4820 of Hansard, 1925, stated that this application had been referred to the joint engineering board, but nothing has been done. The government has made a political football of this great question of additional power facilities for Ontario.

This is not a question of politics at all. It is very fortunate that politics were kept out of the hydro-electric movement by Sir Adam Beck in Ontario. I wish I could say the same for the Canadian National Railways, but that is not so. Sir Adam Beck showed how politics could be kept out of a great public project of this kind. The words I uttered last year were prophetic:

> I want to say to the farmers in and out of this House that the farmers gave to Sir Adam Beck—who may not be here with us much longer and whose illness we all regret—

Since I said that Sir Adam Beck has passed away. Canada is a country which always seems to get the right men in the wrong places, and when we do get the right man in the right place the Lord calls him to his own. The government of the day now here have the onus and responsibility for the failure to permit this work to proceed. The province should be allowed to go ahead with this development; the question of jurisdiction over surplus waters is entirely a provincial matter, separate altogether from the question of navigation. That was brought out very clearly in the debate of June 24 of last year, as well as in the debates which took place in 1924. It was shown then that every drop of water taken for this dam will flow back to the St. Lawrence river, thus improving rather than retarding navigation.

How is it that this same question is not raised in connection with the Chicago drainage canal? Under the Boundary Waterways treaty authorizing the Niagara river development, Canada is given 32,000 second feet, and the United States 20,000 second feet. But you have to deduct from Canada's allotment 14,000 second feet exported by Canada to the United States, with the result that the United States actually receives net 34,000 second feet, and Canada but 18,000 second feet. I will not refer again to the success of the hydro-electric movement in Ontario, but now the people of eastern Ontario are asking for direct current from the St. Lawrence, and the farmers are asking for it. The late Sir James Whitney did not intend cheap light and power only for the people of the cities and towns. He wanted to extend the privilege of cheap light and power to the farmers so that almost every appliance on the farm could be run by electricity instead of by manual labour as had been the case before, and in this way, with good roads and hydro radials, bring the joy of living to the farmers of Ontario. I cannot understand why this proposition has been held up. If the matter were one affecting navigation, it would be different, but the word "navigation" has been used as an excuse to hold this proposition up. The people of Ontario are watching this parliament and this government to see why this project, on which the most eminent hydro engineers have reported favourably, is being held up because of some technicality. The Navigable Waters' Protection Act is not compulsory; it says:

> The local authority, company or person proposing to construct any work in navigable waters, for which no sufficient sanction otherwise exists, may deposit the plans thereof and a description of the proposed site with the Minister of Public Works, and a duplicate of each in the office of the registrar of deeds for the district, county or province in which such work is proposed to be constructed, and may apply to the Governor in Council for approval thereof.
> Such local authority, company or person shall give one month's notice of the said deposit of plans and application by advertisement in the Canada Gazette, and in two newspapers published in or near the locality where such work is to be constructed;
> Any local authority, company or person may proceed in like manner to obtain the approval by the Governor in Council of the site and plans of any work constructed prior to the first day of March, 1899.

That does not apply to this proposition. It is purely a provincial work, wholly within the province, affecting property and rights within the province. The government of this country might just as well have stopped the Chippawa development on the same line of argument. I refer hon. members to the annual report of the Dominion Waterpower and Reclamation Service Branch showing the great necessity of this project to the people of Ontario and to the scarcity of power. In this report there is a section devoted to the utilization of water-power. On page 39 there is another article showing water-power manufacture and development. The article reads:

> Water-power and Manufacturing Development
> The great bulk of Canadian manufacturing takes place in the acute fuel area, Ontario and Quebec. As before pointed out the marked development achieved in manufacturing in recent years could not have taken place with the handicap of entire reliance on imported coal and this development in manufacturing bears striking evidence to the value of water-power to the country.
> Population and manufactures.—During the past decade, while the population of the Dominion increased 22 per cent, the use of water-power in industry increased 245 per cent and the capital invested in manufacturing 175 per cent.
> Dependence of industries on water-power.—Of the total output of central electric stations 97 per cent is furnished by water-power. Of all the primary power in the Dominion, for all purposes except steam railroads, 70 per cent is furnished by water-power.

The Real National Value of Water-power

The value of water-power lies in its cheapness, not in a high selling value. For instance with wheat, lumber, pulp, etc., the higher the price the greater the "value of the product" and the greater the value to the country on account of the large export trade, but with water-power the lower the price the greater is the assistance to a low cost of production in all other lines of manufacture, for both home consumption and export, and therefore the greater the benefit to the country.

A reasonable estimate of the national value of water-power is that it is at least the cost of coal to produce the same amount of power if the water-power had not been developed.

This, as before shown, is $290,000,000 per annum, practically all of which would have to be sent abroad annually if we had no water-power; pro rata for 1930 it will be nearly $500,000,000.

The report at page 35 gives the water-powers of Canada developed and undeveloped. The table shows that Canada has available undeveloped water-powers aggregating 18,000,000 horse-power. It has developed only about one-sixth of that or 3,000,000 horse-power.

My leader (Mr. Meighen) who has been endeavouring to be a good friend of hydro-electric development criticized the administration last year for not going on with the plan. I will read two or three sentences of his remarks as reported in Hansard of June 24, 1925. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I would think that if the project ever works its way through this maze of machinery it will be past 1926, before it emerges at the other end.

According to the late Minister of Railways it would be April, 1926, before the report regarding international water-ways would be received. Why that report should affect this project, I do not know. This water would not interfere with navigation. All the water used in the dam will be returned to the river just as the water used in the hydro-electrice development at Niagara Falls is returned to the Niagara river. In the case of Chicago every foot of water they take from the Great Lakes never goes back to the Great Lakes, but goes on down through the sewage pipes into the Mississippi river. My honoured leader said on that occasion:

Mr. Chairman, I would think that if the project ever works its way through this maze of machinery it will be past 1926, before it emerges at the other end. We have first of all the International Joint Commission, which of course has the superintendence of the matter by treaty, and whose approval must be procured before any project can go through. Then, if I followed the intricacies of the organization, there is a joint engineering board, the duty of which, I presume, would be to advise as to method. Then there is another advisory committee, and so far as I got an idea of its functions it is to tell the engineering board what subjects they must investigate and report upon.

Mr. Graham: No.

Mr. Meighen: Well, what matters they must make subjects of reference to the engineering board.

Mr. Graham: The technical officers selected by both countries are members of the joint engineering board. Two were taken from each section to act together and make recommendations as to what should be referred.

There are ten or twelve different boards to whom this application must go although it is not a question of navigation. By what stretch of the imagination can this be regarded as a navigation work? It is a purely provincial undertaking the same as the Hydro-Electric development at Niagara, Chippawa and elsewhere. Now let me continue the quotation:

Mr. Meighen: That is what I said. That is number three. Then there is a national advisory committee, which the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) described as looking very much like a Liberal campaign committee; however, the names are certainly distinguished. Apparently it has met twice and approved what some other committee did.

The hon. member for Bow River described this committee as pretty much like a Liberal campaign committee. It consists of a lot of gentlemen with high-sounding names who do not know any more about a kilowatt hour than they do about betting on a horse race. I continue to quote:

This is number four. Then there is an interdepartmental committee gathered from all the departments under the chairmanship of Colonel Biggar, and this is number five. If the purpose was to keep the matter constantly between heaven and earth I think the proper devices have been adopted.

Mr. Bancroft: Would "between wind and water" not be a better expression there?

Mr. Meighen: I fancy that in the real prosecution of the enterprise there has been a lot more wind than water. I have no particular objection to any of the men who have been named on any of these committees, but really I would not have thought anything quite so complicated was necessary. Under the late government we had a board, one single committee, which had arrived at very definite conclusions as to the general lines of the venture, as to where the dam should be, the nature of its construction and so on, and had compiled data which seemed very amply to support its view. I refer to the Dominion power board. Nominally it sat under my chairmanship, although I never was there; actually it was under the chairmanship of Mr. Challies, who now is on this interdepartmental committee.

This is a question that the government has not attacked de novo at all. It has been under review departmentally for years. When the government came into office the Railway department had a most pronounced view on the subject. They had an engineer there by the name of Mr. Bowden, who is since deceased. Mr. Bowden was a member of the Dominion power board. He was most persevering in his own opinion. He never could be got to agree with the other members of the board; he had his plan which differed from the rest. Aside from that, however, there was no difference. Why we should have a committee of great political dignity and a galaxy of others, all filling the heavens at the same time, debating this matter year in and year out, I really do not know. I would not like to see any mistake made as to the development, but with the plans which the Dominion power board had worked out the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario were in accord, and the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario, from the practical standpoint, with the experience they have behind them, would appear to me to be the body best entitled to speak as to how the whole thing should be managed. Of course I am aware that the responsibility of the Dominion is primarily from the standpoint of navigation. The navigation feature of this enterprise is a big feature, but I do not think I could ever be persuaded that it is the major feature. The major feature is the power development, however we may cover it up under the lee of better navigation and so forth. Great advantage will come from better navigation of the St. Lawrence in the territory affected by the development, but it is comparatively meagre when compared with the commercial harvest that is expected to be reaped from the great potential power. I feel that the utmost consideration should be given to the views of the Hydro Electric Commission in this matter. They have undoubtedly made a success of the pioneering in power enterprises in this province. What they have done is to-day the outstanding example to the whole world of what can be achieved in the matter of great power development. I would be very sorry to see, in the first place, any plan adopted which is not in full harmony with the experience and matured opinions of that body, but I would be equally disappointed to find that by the interposition of a hopeless complex or endless devolution of machinery the aspirations of the people of Ontario for power from this enterprise are indefinitely postponed.

This question has been indefinitely postponed. It was taken up in 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925 and now we have reached the year 1926. I suppose we shall reach 1927 or 1928 before there is any report from the gentlemen who have been appointed to settle this question.

I cannot speak too strongly of the power shortage in the province of Ontario. So acute is this shortage that the city of Toronto, through the Hydro Electric Power Commission, will be forced in a very few months to spend $10,000,000 in the installation of a steam plant to generate from 75,000 to 100,000 horse power, to take care of the peak load and extra power requirements of that city alone. If the proposed dam were going to cost ten million to fifteen million dollars, as some of the harbour improvements schemes of Canada have done, it might be a different thing. But this proposition is surely an Ontario government scheme to be carried out under the Hydro Electric Power Commission, and it is not going to cost the people of Canada one cent. Speaking on this phase of the question in 1925, I said, as reported by Hansard:

> Let me emphasize that no citizen of Ontario has been taxed for this great undertaking. They pay no direct tax for this great public boon. You have never seen a cent on your tax bill for this development. The money for capital interest and sinking fund is paid by the direct consumers of power. In Toronto alone it has saved the people during the past twelve or fourteen years $31,000,000. If this movement had been under private ownership that $31,000,000 would have gone in dividends to shareholders. There are no dividends in the hydro-electric movement. Power is supplied at cost to the people, and this great boon of cheap electric light and power, which was brought about under the policy of the late Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck, with the co-operation of the municipalities of the province, has been a revelation; it is without a peer in the world to-day. With the exception of the provincial grants towards the construction of rural distribution systems —and such grants, like those for good roads, agricultural schools, etc., are made in order to promote agriculture—every portion of the cost is fully met in the bills paid by the consumers of the electrical energy, and by them alone. Those who receive the service are the only ones who pay for it, and such payment is made in conformity with a system of charging that permits an annual adjustment with consumers on the basis of power at cost. Electrical energy, once a luxury, has, in Ontario, been so reduced in cost that it has become a common commodity for the service of all. It is the power of the people made usable for the people by the people.

The most important problem before the people of Canada to-day is the problem of cheap light and power. This great boon is not intended solely for the benefit of the urban centres, but for the benefit also of the rural districts. The province of Ontario has shown the other provinces what can be done for the benefit of the people by the development of water-powers. Starting in 1910 with the distribution of 1,000 horse-power supplied to a few municipalities, by 1915 the movement had increased to such an extent that 100,000 horse-power was required to meet the demands of the many municipalities that were taking advantage of cheap light and power. Five years later the Hydro Electric Power Commission was generating 350,00 horse-power, and to-day it is maintaining a connected load of 760,000 horse-power.

The commission arranged for an additional power supply from the Canadian Niagara Power Company of 50,000 horse-power and from the Toronto Power Company of over 25,000 horse-power. Subsequently, in August, 1917, it purchased outright the Ontario Power Company with its plant capacity of 160,000 horse-power, which was increased to 180,000 horse-power in 1919, and, in December, 1920, acquired the Toronto Power Company, with its plant of over 125,000 horse-power capacity. In 1920 the load was 356,000 horse-power. The new Queenston-Chippawa development provides for an ultimate development of 600,000 horse-power. There is possible to-day a development of 700,000 horse-power under the plans of the Hydro Electric Commission. At the present time the commission is operating twenty separate developments which have a potentiality of over a million horse-power.

The people of the province of Ontario are watching what is taking place. They are watching the federal government and the provincial government to see what the outcome of their policy is going to be in connection with the development of hydro-electric power. They want to see who it is that has been retarding the development of power not only in eastern Ontario but in the western part of the province as well. Nothing is more calculated to carry out that most desired movement to keep the farmer on the farm than the provision of cheap light, heat and power. In many parts of the province of Ontario the farmer is to-day getting these conveniences owing to the policy which was inaugurated by the late Sir James P. Whitney. This policy is being carried out in the face of considerable opposition. I do not know anybody who did more to retard the growth of this movement in the province of Ontario than did the Hon. E. C. Drury during the four years of his administration, and in this he was aided and abetted by the commission appointed to inquire into the work of the Hydro Electric Commission and in effect to destroy the whole movement. The people got rid of this anti-hydro government.

In conclusion may I state that I move this resolution with the object of getting something done. It is all very fine to have seven or eight bodies of men drawing their salaries, because that is about all they ever do. They never provide any power supply so far as I can find out, and never do anything practical. The only commission that has accomplished anything worth while in Ontario is the Hydro Electric Power Commission, they have $240,000,000 invested, every dollar of which is earning money and they are paying their fixed charges and interest on the sinking fund.

Premier Ferguson of the province of Ontario made an address in Toronto recently, on the power shortage and the Toronto Globe gives the following report of his remarks:

In a graphic illustration of the savings effected by the network of provincial hydro lines, he said that last year the hydro distributed 781,000 horsepower, which equalled the energy of 7,800,000 tons of coal. Calculating coal at $5.50 per ton, Ontario had kept in the province $43,000,000 that otherwise would have gone across the border, and made a net saving in fuel expenditure of $23,000,000 last year. Ontario occupied her supreme position as an industrial province by reason of its progress in hydro development.

"The future of Ontario," Mr. Ferguson said, "is wrapped up in this hydro-electric enterprise as in no other phase of our provincial life. . . . We have reached a position in our hydro development where we have got to give some serious thought to the future. The situation is rather a critical one. We have exhausted the water available at Niagara. We have exhausted many of our internal waterfalls and power developments, and we find we are going to have a shortage of power supply. Away down in the east, tumbling to the sea unused, is tremendous unharnessed energy on the St. Lawrence. The province of Ontario has insisted, and is still insisting, upon our right to secure the advantage that will come from development on the St. Lawrence. And I promise you this: that if you will forgive me many other things and keep me in power a while I think we will secure the right to that development."

The people of Ontario want action to relieve the power shortage, not politics. It has been fortunate that politics have been kept out of the hydro administration. The Toronto Globe in a series of editorials urges the government to carry out the Morrisburg undertaking. An editorial in the Globe of December 14, 1925, reads as follows:

The right way to deal with the situation is the Beck way—the way that has been tried, and tested, and proved. Let Ontario continue to develop her own water-power, on the St. Lawrence river as elsewhere, wholly for the benefit of the public.

But if the Beck Morrisburg plan is to be followed successfully it is high time that Premier Ferguson and Mr. Magrath bestir themselves as well.

I agree that it is high time that they did something.

The threatened general shortage of power—and particularly the situation in Ontario—cannot be solved except by prompt resolute, effective action.

That is what my right hon. leader stated last June when the present government was making a football of this question. The Globe says:

The course seems clear. The greatest undeveloped water powers of Ontario flow by her shores in the St. Lawrence river. The courts have decided that the provinces control the situation. Why does not the government of Ontario at once notify Ottawa of its intention to proceed to develop power at the banks of the St. Lawrence and call upon the federal government to give consent as a matter of form?

The government of the province have gone ahead with the undertaking. The Navigable Waters Protection Act requires that before any work is undertaken plans and profiles be filed with the department. But in this case the government owns the banks, the rapids and the bed of the river to the centre of the river and they have the power to go ahead. The St. Catharines Standard, it will be remembered, was published up to the time of his death by Mr. W. B. Burgoyne, a prominent public-spirited citizen of that town. Recently the Standard printed the following editorial on the subject of power shortage:

4 p.m.

Action Required

The Toronto Globe this morning, calling attention to the inevitable shortage of power in Ontario, sounds a clarion call for action on the part of the Ontario government at once. In effect, our Toronto contemporary says that, the courts having decided that the provinces control the situation as to water-powers, Premier Ferguson and Chairman Magrath of the Hydro Commission should notify the Dominion government that Ontario proposes to proceed with the development of the St. Lawrence. The advice is sensible and the project is urgent.

The Standard last week scouted the idea that this province should contract with Sir Herbert Holt's interests in Quebec for a supply of power to Ontario. It had been reported in an interview that the Montreal interests were prepared to provide Ontario with 200,000 horse-power from Cedar Rapids, presumably on a long-term contract, which would most surely hold back any development scheme of the St. Lawrence which has been proposed in this province. Premier Taschereau of Quebec, by an announcement following the interview, at once quashed the suggestion that Ontario should buy power from Quebec private interests when he declared that that province had no notion of abolishing the 50-cent horse-power tax on power exported from that province. With the sources of power at our own door, Ontario public sentiment would never endorse paying tribute to Quebec for power required.

The Globe takes exactly the same position as this paper. The Beck plan is best; let it be adopted and carried out. This province can hardly trust to the altruism of Sir Herbert Holt in such an important matter, nor can this province, with its great Hydro system, afford to show hesitation about further development required for power, by contracting with private interests for an increased supply of electric energy. All these suggestions as to securing more power come from enthusiasts who never lined up with Sir Adam Beck, but were always opposed. That in itself is sufficient to cause suspicion as to the merits of the proposed purchase from Sir Herbert Holt. The people of Ontario will watch with the closest interest the future action of the Ontario government in this most important matter. Valuable time is being wasted in preventing the threatened shortage of power, and yet the government has every legal right to go ahead. It it time for action.

Then a meeting composed of representatives of 278 hydro municipalities of the province passed a resolution calling the attention of both governments to this matter. The mayors, reeves and clerks of the different municipalities concurred in the resolution passed by the rural municipalities on the power shortage. I do not see the United Farmers of Canada represented in this House to any great extent. The number in this chamber have been reduced to two or three. In the last House they did not take much interest in this programme and are not likely to now. We have in the Old Country an example of what can be done in the development of electrical power. According to a press despatch which I have here I see that Premier Stanley Baldwin intends to have a national policy and to electrify the whole of Great Britain. I quote the heading of this article:

Electrical Britain now is Objective of Premier Baldwin.

Outlines Planned whereby special Control Board will be established.

The following paragraph is of interest:

The necessity of providing electrical energy in greater quantities and at a cheaper rate has been the preoccupation of every government and party since the war. The existing energy is provided in part by the municipalities and partly by private enterprise, which has resulted in the employment of differing systems and voltages and widely divergent prices for current.

So far as Canada is concerned I think the time has come for definite action in this regard. This question should no longer be made a political football, and notwithstanding any law, usage, custom or statute that may be cited to the contrary, there is no reason why the Ferguson government should not be allowed to go ahead and develop their own property for the benefit of the people of Ontario. Not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can it be argued for a moment that the use for electrical purposes of water at the Morrisburg dam can interfere with navigation. The people of the United States are waking up to the importance of electrical development and at the present time the state of New York is considering a proposition to generate power. Nor are they waiting for the federal government to take the initiative. Private concerns in the state of New York are anxious to develop power there, but the legislature has taken a firm stand that it will preserve the waters of the state for the use of the municipalities and of the people generally. They are following the example of Ontario in this regard and are developing their water power for the benefit of industry. They are of the opinion that such development can have no injurious effect on navigation, and there is no reason in the world why the development of power on the Morrisburg dam should interfere with navigation on this side.

Shortly before his death, Sir Adam Beck, who had a great admiration for my leader (Mr. Meighen), expressed his appreciation of the attitude which that right hon. gentleman had taken on June 24 last in support of this Morrisburg proposition. If the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) were familiar enough with the hydro-electric situation in Ontario I am sure that he would see the force of the argument I am making to-day. The trouble is that there are too many boards and commissions looking into this power matter. The Conservative party when in power had one board, but to-day there are so many commissions that they are crowding out one another. I may say there are so many boards and officials they are like Virgil's army, so crowded that they had not room to use their spears. It is pretty much the same in this regard, with the multitudinous boards investigating the matter. I do not know what they are doing apart from drawing their salaries.

I was not aware that this matter would come up to-day. I should have liked the Minister of Railways to have a little more time to look into it fully, for I realize that having been at the head of his department for so short a time he cannot possibly be posted on the whole subject. I know that he has been in the province of Ontario where he has seen the benefits that are enjoyed by the people from a system of cheap power and light. Let me assure him that there is no politics whatever in this hydro-electric movement; nor has there been any political interference with the administration of the hydro-electric of Ontario since its inception. That explains its gigantic success. A terminal warehouse in which there will be, when completed, an investment of some $8,000,000 is about to begin operations on the harbour front of Toronto and it will depend entirely upon electrical power. Where that power will come from I do not know, because by the end of this year there will be no supply left. As the premier of the province has said, the only place to which they can look for water-power is the St. Lawrence, where millions of tons of white coal are annually going to waste. Is Ontario simply to mark time? Is that province to stand still while the states of Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and New York forging rapidly ahead with cheap power? The system of hydro radials in the province was throttled by the late Drury government, who would have done the same thing with the hydro-electric if the people had not got rid of them. It was a blessing to the province the day it turned out of power that farmer government in Ontario. That administration appointed commission after commission to investigate the hydro and they were appointed solely to act as the hangman and the undertaker of the whole hydro projet and their efforts only tended to jeopardize and destroy the $241,000,000 which the people had invested in the enterprise. I trust that the Minister of Railways will look into the whole subject between now and the time the estimates are under consideration, and that the government will withdraw its opposition to the issuing of a permit authorizing the government of Ontario to go ahead with the proposed development. I am sure that the provincial government would give a guarantee that no development that might take place at Morrisburg would interfere with navigation. All the water used there would return to the river, so that navigation could not possibly be impaired but would be much improved.

Some of the most eminent engineers on the American continent, Messrs Acres and Gaby, both Canadians, made a complete success of the Chippawa power enterprise, which was ten times as difficult as the Morrisburg undertaking, and if the government of Canada did not raise any objections to that development on the navigation score I do not see why they should put obstacles in the way of development on the Morrisburg dam. For the reasons I have stated I move, seconded by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I desire to comment briefly on the motion which my hon. friend (Mr. Church) has moved with regard to wider development of water-power on the St. Lawrence. I think I may claim to know a good deal about public ownership and the benefits that have accrued therefrom, not only in this country but in other parts of the world, and I venture to say that nowhere has there been so outstanding a success in public ownership as is to be seen in the hydro-electrical development in the province of Ontario. Sir Adam Beck was called in his lifetime the apostle of the public ownership of hydro-electric development in Ontario, and within a few weeks of his death he was canonized: he has now attained to sainthood in the realm of public ownership. Associated with him in that work was Sir James Whitney, then Premier of Ontario, who gave him every encouragement. When Sir Adam went to Sir James for the money, the latter said, "All right, Adam. How much do you want?" The amount having been named, Sir James added, "The money is yours; go ahead." Now Sir Adam has performed his work, and it is the greatest example we have of public ownership undertaken as such at the start. Not only is public ownership in regard to the development of electric energy an unqualified success in Ontario, but it has set the pace for other electric power companies in Canada, and they are all trying to distribute power at as cheap rates as are enjoyed by the people of Ontario. It ought to be an encouragement to my friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) that in making a great success of the National railways, as I am sure he will try to do, he will have the satisfaction of making transportation cheaper in Canada than it is in any other country.

While some reasons may be advanced for the delay that has taken place in dealing with the application of the province of Ontario to develop power at Morrisburg, I do not think they are at all convincing, and I am going to tell the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways that something is being done now which will compel them to take action in this matter. Within the past few weeks announcements have appeared in the press of a great navigation proposition in connection with the Georgian bay ship canal, and the government are being urged to approve the plans of the scheme, which also includes power development. Therefore I say the government have got to take these two proposals together, and they ought to announce forthwith, even if there is a navigation reason with respect to delaying the St. Lawrence development—which I do not altogether accept—that they will issue the two orders at once; for they cannot grant the Georgian bay ship canal application without granting the application of the province of Ontario for the Morrisburg development. I do not know of any sufficient reason for further delay in connection with the latter scheme, for if there are great water-powers adjacent to Ontario at Morrisburg, there are still greater water-powers on the Ottawa river here, and these will go with the Georgian bay ship canal project. The leading promoter of the Georgian bay ship canal is a constituent of mine, Sir Clifford Sifton. Of course, I only know what I have read in the newspapers, but according to the press announcements he and his associates are urging the government to approve their plans. I believe the government are going to grant approval, and if they do they will have to grant the application of the government of Ontario for its St. Lawrence development. We want the power that can be generated there. I am sure the erection of the necessary works would not interfere with navigation. Therefore, a settlement ought to be effected immediately by negotiating with the United States, as undoubtedly there is urgent need for more power in Ontario, and our nearest source of further supply is at Morrisburg. What we want in this country is more industries. Indeed, I would say that we do not want the tariff so much as we want industries, and the way to get them is to give them cheap power. At present there is a power shortage in Ontario, but with the development on the St. Lawrence and near Ottawa there will be enough power to drive all our factories and light all our houses, with perhaps a surplus that can be delivered elsewhere. What I am putting up to the government is their duty, in view of the urgency, to make early provision to overcome this shortage of power.

My hon. friend who preceded me (Mr. Church) spoke about what Mr. Stanley Baldwin is doing in Great Britain. He has introduced legislation to develop power from steam plants at pit head. This is to be a national undertaking, but the electrical energy is to be distributed through private companies. Well, he may start with public control of those distribution companies, but I am satisfied that eventually he will have to resort to public ownership. I think that before long we in Canada may have to generate power from steam plants at our collieries. In fact, they are already doing this in the United States. I want to tell my friends from Nova Scotia that the other day I put a proposal to them that I think they ought to take up. The province of Nova Scotia has enormous quantities of coal and ranks second to Alberta in this respect. Now, the provincial authorities of Nova Scotia ought to begin right away to generate electric energy near their coal mines and distribute it. At present long distance transmission is not feasible beyond about 600 miles, but science is devoting attention to this phase and in a short time I am convinced that you will be able to convert your coal into electric energy and send it a thousand miles. That is another development of science that will be available before long, and if we do not take advantage of these discoveries we will be blocking progress.

To-day Ontario is suffering from a scarcity of power, and if she has to generate electricity from coal I do not know how she will be able to stand the coal bill. We cannot bring our coal from Alberta, although great quantities are available there. The people of Alberta, too, may have to find a market for their coal by turning it into electricity and distributing it.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is my hon. friend aware that electrical power has been developed for years in the way he suggests at two points in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The Premier of Nova Scotia told me the other day that he was prepared to take up the question of developing electrical energy from coal. Already the Americans are utilizing some of their coal in this way, and the great competitor of Canadian hydro-electric energy may come from the United States, because electricity generated from low priced coal is almost as cheap as hydro-electric power. That is another reason why the government should act in this matter.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate,

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1927.

POWER SHORTAGE IN ONTARIO

The House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Church with respect to power shortage and the extension of hydro-electric development in Ontario.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I rather regret, Mr. Speaker, that while I had a light house when I began, it is still lighter now. I hope the House will fill up, because this is the most important issue in Canada to-day. The question of waterways is of supreme importance both here and in the United States, and all the world is watching to see what will happen. I hope the government are watching as well, and that they will do their part in the Morrisburg development.

Let me tell you why we want the Morrisburg project developed right away. When it is completed it will give a thirty foot channel to lake Ontario, and make the good city of Toronto an ocean port. When Toronto becomes an ocean port our friends in Montreal will have to look out. Not only will Toronto become an ocean port but Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit and other lake cities will follow. When the Georgian bay canal is finished, ports on lake Huron and the Georgian bay will also become ocean ports. The late John Haggart, when Minister of Railways, told me in this House that it would not be long before the engineers dealing with navigation found a way to canalize the western plains through to the Rocky mountains. That is all in connection with this question; it may be a pipe dream, but the development of the St. Lawrence waterway is coming fast. That development, however, may be put in the background by the Georgian bay ship canal, because the plans provide for a channel at least 25 feet in depth, and for the development of over 800,000 horse-power. Other than the development at Niagara Falls, that will be the greatest horse-power development in the world, according to recent statements which have not been contradicted.

I should like the minister or the Prime Minister to tell the House now whether it is his intention to approve the plans of the Georgian bay ship canal and not to approve the Morrisburg dam and the development of power at Morrisburg for the benefit of the people of the whole of Ontario. We want not only the Morrisburg development, but the development further up the Ottawa river where 800,000 horse-power are available. This is one of the prime questions in this country and the government must deal with it. They may say that they are proceeding as fast as their predecessors did in the matter; but that is not enough. The world is moving faster now, and nothing proves that so much as the development of public opinion in the United States in favour of the improvement of the St. Lawrence waterways so as to allow ocean steamers to go right up to lake Superior. That being the case, I am trying to support as well as I can the position taken by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) who has had this matter up before. The people of Toronto, the whole legislature of Ontario, are behind it, and every other province in the Dominion ought to be behind Ontario because, as I said before on the Address, Ontario is leading the world in connection with the production of electrical energy at cost and with the element of profiteering eliminated. The sin of the war was not so much the war itself as the profiteering that was done during it. Up to the present, every public service has been associated with profiteering, but we in Ontario have set the example of taking profiteering out of the development of electrical energy and we have succeeded in doing so. We have set an example to the people of England, to the people of the United States who are now going into this new idea of public ownership. It was once said that it was to the disgrace of the people of Ontario that they favoured public ownership, but it is the great principle of the world to-day and Ontario is showing mankind how to develop and carry on public services without profiteering.

The farmers of Ontario have been given electric light, but they want more. They want power; they want heat, and minor heating for small rooms at certain seasons of the year can be got out of electrical development. We have large stores of power. We have the power at Morrisburg; we have 800,000 horse-power on the Ottawa river, and I am going to insist in this House that when the Georgian bay canal is developed with all this horse-power, the people of Canada shall have the first call and it shall not be exported. I will also insist that Ontario, as a border province associated with Quebec, will get her full share of that power.

I wanted the Georgian bay canal to be carried out as a public ownership proposition, but I understand those who owned it sold it to certain people who are going to develop it. I will tell whoever undertakes the development of electrical horse-power on the Ottawa river that it must not be exported, but must be used in this country divided between Ontario and Quebec. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) who is to answer on this question, is the best informed man in this House on the condition of the negotiations now going on between the government of the United States and the government of Canada regarding the St. Lawrence waterways. I had hoped to see him file papers on this question, but they have not come down yet, and I shall wait with interest his announcement in regard to the waterway development and the power that will come from it. I do not know where the Prime Minister is; he is probably engaged somewhere else just at present, but I hope we shall get a declaration to-day from the government on this supreme issue which concerns the development of the St. Lawrence waterways, associated with which is the development of hydro-electric energy in connection with those waterways both on the St. Lawrence river at the front and on the Ottawa river north of here. What goes to the Georgian bay canal in the way of development will also go to the development at Morrisburg for power at the waterfront there. The two things cannot be separated; they ought to go together.

Before this session is over I intend to expand my argument along the lines I have indicated in the House to-day. It is with great pleasure that I rise to support the resolution of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest in connection with the Morrisburg development, and I hope we shall get not only the dam put there for the development of power, but associated with it the construction of the St. Lawrence canal so that steamers of at least twenty-five foot draught can go into lake Ontario. By that time or very soon after we shall have the Welland canal deepened to thirty feet so that we shall have inland seaports, power at cost, and we shall have taken the profiteering out of the development of power. As I said before Ontario has led the world in connection with this great principle, and the two names associated with it are Sir Adam Beck and Sir James Whitney who had the courage to show all the world how profiteering could be taken out of great public services, and how great public services could be given not to one or many, but to all the people of this continent because it applies to the whole continent. It is the greatest example of political advancement in the history of the world and I hope we shall get a satisfactory answer from the Minister of the Interior when he makes his reply.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I am replying on behalf of the government simply because I have been associated with the Right Hon. Mr. Graham who was delegated by the government to conduct negotiations in connection with the solution of the waterways' problem on the St. Lawrence reaches. Power development is a matter which the government have delegated to the Department of the Interior and with that I am very familiar. It will be sufficient for me to say that I agree with everything that has been said with respect to hydro-electric development in Ontario. What both hon. gentlemen have said about it is undoubtedly true, and there is certainly a demand for increased development, particularly in the eastern part of Ontario. I have discussed this matter very frequently with the engineers, not with Mr. Gaby, but with Mr. Acres, whom I know very well and later with Mr. Magrath, and I have had a good deal of correspondence with Premier Ferguson with respect to it. I have made no move at any moment without the full knowledge of the Ontario government and the hydro-electric officials. That is the only way in which a real understanding of the matter and real progress can be made. It is correct that an application has been made on behalf of the Hydro-Electric Commission. May I say that there is no dispute so far as this government is concerned with respect to the ownership of the water-powers, or no dispute as to the ownership of the bed of the streams out to the point where the international boundary intervenes. So far as I know this government have never raised any question as to ownership. Nor does this government raise any question as to the right of Ontario to develop that particular power or any power along that reach. The situation in that respect is identical with the situation at Niagara which the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr Church) has mentioned. The only difficulty, then, is a difference of opinion between the engineers who prepared the plans for the Morrisburg development as to whether there should be one or two developments on the international reach there. So far as I am aware that is the only difference that exists Mr. Bowden, who recently died, took very strong ground in that particular. He was very thoroughly convinced as to the correctness of his position, and we must all admit that the late Mr. Bowden was an engineer of national repute whose views carried considerable weight. In saying that I do not wish to express any criticism of the engineers who planned the great hydro development at Niagara and carried it to so successful a conclusion. I think any decision at which those engineers may arrive merits attention. Nevertheless that is the situation in which the federal government found themselves, and they took immediate steps to create a board that would settle the question definitely and finally. That board is now at work.

My hon. friend (Mr. Church) is complaining about the multiplicity of boards here in Ottawa. They have little or nothing to do with the real settlement of the question That will be done by a board of engineers three appointed by this government and three by the government of the United States, who will come to a definite conclusion on the matter, and we have the promise that their report will be in the hands of the two governments by June at the latest. I may say on behalf of this government that the moment that report is received there will be no hesitancy in dealing at once with the application of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission.

Mr. EULER: Between which parties of engineers does the difference of opinion exist?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is with respect to whether there should be one development on the international reach or two.

Mr. EULER: Yes, but between which two parties of engineers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Between the engineers of the federal government and those of the Hydro-Electric Commission. Not being an expert I do not wish to place myself on record on the subject, but I honestly think that to make two developments will be the proper course to pursue. However, the engineers to whom this task has been entrusted will bring in a report and that will decide the matter. Personally I am rather in favour of the smaller development at the start which would meet the necessities of the case at once.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Will there be a joint report from the two commissions, or will each commission make its own report?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will be a joint report for both governments. When I was in Washington recently Mr. Jadwin, who heads the American engineering body, assured me that the report would not be later than at least the middle of June.

Mr. BRISTOL: Are these engineers investigating the further effect of the building of a canal, or are they just going into the power question?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, they will deal with navigation and power.

Mr. BRISTOL: The whole question?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The whole question on that reach, and I hope their report will definitely settle this question. The moment that report has been received this government will be prepared to take action. My hon. friends will understand, of course, that this development is on the international reach. It has been pointed out that the state of New York is exceedingly anxious for power development. That is true.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the government also appointed an inner committee of engineers to scrutinize this report when it comes in?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. There are engineers or technical men on that committee representative of four or five departments of the government. The report will simply be scrutinized by that body and that will not involve any delay. The important thing to my mind as a layman is to settle once and for all a definite policy, agreed to by both governments, for the development of this reach. Then we go on without let or hindrance. If that can be accomplished by June or the first of July I think every hon. member will agree that any delay that has occurred has been useful. With all due respect to what my hon. friend (Mr. Church) has said, the question at issue has never been definitely settled. The hope is entertained that the report of the engineers now engaged on the work will settle the issue, and from that point on progress will not be retarded. I want to make it very clear that this government are just as anxious as the government of Ontario, or any individual, that there should be no unreasonable delay. We are anxious that when the work is undertaken all features of the whole programme shall dovetail into each other, and that no mistakes shall be made by the starting of works which, while they may not be detrimental, will interfere with the scheme in its entirety.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What recourse would the government have if the report of the joint board should be against both countries?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hardly follow my hon. friend's question.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The joint board could make a report that would hold up the whole development of that portion of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One should not be drawn into strong language with respect to matters of this kind, but Canada has certain rights and will not fail to exercise them. I cannot conceive that the board would bring in a report of that kind. After all, with the information now before both countries it is largely to my mind a question whether there should be two developments or one.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): And neither objects to the other's development.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no.

Mr. BRISTOL: Is this report going to cover the canalization of the whole of the St. Lawrence or merely this particular portion?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it will apply to all, but I am not sure. I should not like to speak with authority without having the order in council before me, but I think I am safe in saying yes.

Mr. BRISTOL: This is very interesting when one sees what is going on in the United States. There is, for example, the idea of a canal through the state of New York. Would that canal, like the Chicago drainage canal, take our water from the Great Lakes?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have taken the water so far apparently without let or hindrance, but perhaps there would be some difficulty about taking more. That of course is a matter quite apart from what the committee are doing. They are working on the St. Lawrence having in mind what is necessary to make the river navigable to a depth of 25 or 30 feet, what canals there should be, where they should be constructed, what power development can be secured on both sides of the boundary, and the best method by which to proceed. That is what the report will contain. I wish again to emphasize the fact that we are in entire agreement with the Ontario government. There is no dispute about their ownership of the power or the land to the international boundary. If they want to develop there would be no holdup, so far as the federal government is concerned. I should like to see the hydro development on the Ottawa river; it seems to me there is a great opportunity for such development there. However, they have set their hearts on the development of the St. Lawrence, and it is the business of this government to do everything they can to facilitate that development.

Mr. ROGERS: This does not apply to the Georgian bay?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; and I confess frankly I have very little knowledge of the Georgian bay.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): It is almost impossible to understand the position or attitude of the government in regard to this matter. For some years there has been an International Joint Commission; but at this time I think their opinion of the situation is almost entirely ignored, because the government has now appointed representatives on a second commission which consists of officers from the United States service and prominent engineers in the Dominion of Canada. The course of this government has been somewhat different from that of the United States, in that the United States appointed their permanent engineers, who would be close to the government, to give an opinion on the subject. Our government appointed three permanent engineers, whose reputation I do not think anyone in this House will dispute; but my understanding of the situation is that they have also appointed an inner body of engineers who will advise them. Why these permanent officials should not have been made part of the commission from the beginning I cannot understand; we would then have had one report upon which the government could act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I make an explanation? The advisory board to which the hon. member refers, consisting purely of technical officers, legal and otherwise, in the department, was created to make a study of the whole matter and to advise as to what questions should be submitted for the consideration of the joint engineering board, that is all. They do not in any sense interfere with the work of the board; they were appointed rather to make sure that a thorough investigation of the matter should be made.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister has not denied that this same body will review the report when it comes back, and no doubt advise as to what they would do. In other words, if the government had deliberately attempted to tie up the question for eternity and complicate it so that no action could be taken, I do not think they could have done it more effectively. Their course has been one of inactivity all through the whole water question. There is nothing more important in connection with this whole scheme than the Chicago steal, yet the minister informed this House that he did not know of a commission or body meeting in Detroit, because he said they were composed of representatives of certain large interests concerned in this matter. Well, if the interests of shipping are not the interests of the government, what interests have the government in the country's affairs? Now, representatives of that body went to Washington. The minister knew nothing about it and has not been in touch with them in any way in regard to it. We already had a commission which could have dealt with it but the government have tied to that commission two additional bodies, one of them to advise the other what questions should be submitted, or whether or not this matter would be of interest to them.

To come back to the question before the House, there is no necessity for discussion as to the subject of the resolution. The resolution says:

That this House will support the government in taking such immediate action as herein proposed without further delays in accordance with the application of the Ontario government, and Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario file in 1923, 1924 and 1925 with the government of Canada.

So far as eastern Ontario is concerned, we will be in a worse position if a report is presented stating that canalization of the St. Lawrence is necessary. My hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) injected this phase of the subject into the debate, apparently unaware of the fact that if the power development on the St. Lawrence should have to depend on the canalization of the St. Lawrence, then no part of Ontario would have any power development for another thirty or thirty-five years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hope I did not get into the same quagmire as my hon. friend. I wish it distinctly understood that such a proposition is not in the mind of this government. After the report is made Ontario can go ahead and develop the power.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If canalization is what they suggest, the result will be that the power development will not proceed; they will go ahead with the canalization and it will be thirty-five years before the development of hydro-electric power will be available in the St. Lawrence. The province of Ontario make a simple request to this government; and I contend that the plain question should have been put first: would the building of a dam at Morrisburg or the Long Sault interfere with navigation? That could have been answered long ago, and Ontario would have known whether she would be in a position to proceed with the building of the dam, or whether she must simply lie back and wait for canalization of the St. Lawrence. There is no dispute in regard to the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where does my hon. friend get that idea? It is an entirely new one to me, I have never heard it put forward in my life, and I have made a fairly close study of what has happened. I would be interested to know why there is any necessity for waiting for the development of the canal.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I made the supposition, if the report is in favour of canalization.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is just supposing?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All right.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What I am contending is that the question Ontario put to this government should have been dealt with separately, in the light of the necessity and urgency of the matter which was before the people of Ontario. The province made a proposal that if the development of power were left to the Hydro-Electric the federal government would not be charged one cent; the province would proceed to pay the whole cost. The development of power cannot wait upon the canalization of the St. Lawrence if it means further long delay.

I am going to propose to the government that they should take some action in this matter. The development of power on the St. Lawrence is a Canadian project. If Quebec obtains the right to develop power at once, I think this government should become the mediator and step in and say that Ontario should be considered a favoured customer in respect of the development in Quebec. That would solve the immediate difficulty of the situation. Someone must take that step, and I think that this government should.

5 p.m.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not follow my hon. friend. Does he mean, if the development further down the river were undertaken first?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is being undertaken now. Development is going on at the present time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): At Cedar Rapids?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): At Cedar Rapids and elsewhere. If the province of Ontario is blocked on the lower St. Lawrence the government of the Dominion should, in my opinion, act as mediator between Ontario and Quebec, and declare that Ontario should at least get the benefit due to a favoured customer of the other province. Let me say why that should be done. Every bit of development in eastern Ontario, every increase in population, every additional industrial activity in that section of the province is so much grist to the mill of Montreal. Probably more business goes to Montreal from eastern Ontario than to Toronto, and it is in Montreal's interests to see that eastern Ontario is fully developed. In proportion to such development will Montreal be advantaged. I would urge this consideration upon the government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think my hon. friend need labour the question at all. This government is perfectly willing to issue the necessary permit for the construction of works for the development of Ontario hydro, the moment the report comes in. And this development, be it remembered, is on the Ontario reach.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Suppose the report provides that only canalization shall be proceeded with.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will consult the instructions issued to the board of engineers he will see that such an eventuality could not occur. All that is required is to provide for the location, and the power is developed at once.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is something that will receive a good deal of consideration. I am afraid that there will be considerable delay before eastern Ontario gets what it needs, and needs at once. I am therefore suggesting to the government that it take some action by way of mediation in this matter, in the event of an undue delay taking place in the development of power. I am trying to point out that it is in the interests of Montreal to see that this development is made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There did not seem to be any dispute about the necessity of a dam at the head of lake Ontario or in that vicinity. I think that our Canadian engineers are all agreed on that point. My hon. friend need not worry about delays because of the canalization of the river holding up Ontario's development.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Had the minister been associated with this activity as long as I have been, and had he had the same experience as I have had of delays and attempts to defeat the ends of the province of Ontario in this matter, he would agree that there was reason to suspect and to doubt the ability of the government to secure some results. I do not altogether blame the government, but perhaps I might point out briefly just what has been done since 1912. The Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario has seen several of its propositions blocked and defeated by interests of one kind or another. They first entertained the idea of developing on the United States border at Waddington, N.Y., and purchasing power there, That was blocked and defeated. They then proposed the Morrisburg development, and that is being blocked by the present government through the duplication of commissions. It is a wonder, therefore, that eastern Ontario is somewhat sceptical of the intention of this government to afford the people there some relief, when they consider the inactivity that has characterized the government in connection with the Chicago steal, which is destroying all our harbours and which will necessitate far greater work than hon. gentlemen opposite have ever anticipated. The minister is evidently optimistic this afternoon, but I confess that I do not share his optimism. However, I am placing before him an alternative in the event of the proposed development being delayed, and that is that, taking the interests of Montreal into account, this government should step in and see that Ontario is given the treatment that should be accorded a favoured customer of Quebec in the matter of hydro power.

Mr. EULER: What does the hon. member mean by a "favoured" customer? Does he refer to priority in the obtaining of power, or to the question of price?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What I mean is that the province should be put in a better position than the United States.

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I am not prepared to say very much on this question, but any member who comes from Ontario, and especially from the western part of the province, is naturally very much interested in the development of electrical power, chiefly for the reason, I should say, that it has been made a very great success under public ownership in western Ontario. Speaking for my own constituency, I think that I may claim for some of the men who have lived in the town of Kitchener, or Berlin as it was at the time, if not an equal prominence with Sir Adam Beck in the development of power in the province, at any rate credit for being the originators, in that town, of the scheme of developing power at Niagara. The enterprise has proved such a great success in western Ontario that we would view with alarm any likelihood of the same privilege of developing power not being extended to the people of eastern Ontario. A shortage of electrical power does exist in the province, and I think the government should do everything possible to hasten the development of such additional power as is needed in Ontario For my part I can see no very great reason for finding fault with the suggestion that we should wait until the report is submitted, which the minister has promised by June. If that report is well thought out, perhaps, a short delay will have been justified.

I may refer to what has been said by the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross). If that report recommends something by reason of which the development of electrical power will be further held up, in consequence of the development of a larger scheme of waterways, then I think the government would be doing wrong to allow anything of that nature to stand in the way. I am not yet convinced that the waterways scheme can be made a success, and I would not want to add my endorsation to any such large undertaking for the development of an ocean waterway to the head of the lakes by way of the St. Lawrence river. I say this for several reasons. I am a layman and necessarily do not understand much about the engineering difficulties of such a scheme; besides, I am somewhat alarmed at the very high estimates which have been made of the cost. I should like the government to consider making speed in the development of hydro-electric power entirely apart from the waterways proposition, and my purpose in rising this afternoon was to give expression to that view. I hope the minister is right. Certainly I have no doubt that he is sincere in saying that when the report is submitted in June there will be no further delay in the granting of a permit for the development of power at Morrisburg.

Hon. EDMUND BRISTOL (Toronto East Centre): We are all, I am sure, very much pleased with the position taken by the minister (Mr. Stewart) to-day, that as soon as the report is brought down action will be taken by this government and that this matter will be placed in the hands of the Hydro-Electric Commission and of the government of Ontario. That is a statement of great importance to that province. I am sorry the minister is not able to report as to what has taken place with reference to Niagara falls. I have on the order paper a motion which I have refrained from introducing, believing that some action would have been taken in this direction by the government of the United States and the government of Great Britain, acting on behalf of Canada. I had hoped that something would be done, before the discussion of this motion, in relation to preserving the scenic beauty of Niagara falls along with the use of power there. I have reasons to doubt whether the development at Niagara falls has been the success we had all hoped for so far as Canada and the state of New York are concerned. This is one matter in which this country and New York state are equally interested. It is a most important question and one that calls for an early settlement. I understand that engineering reports already submitted show that within a period of three years some 3,000,000 horse-power could be produced for distribution between that state and the province of Ontario. Just what is going to happen in that regard I understand is not to be discussed at the moment, but no doubt it will be later on. Certainly I think it is a matter in which the government, and I am sure the minister, feel we should take every possible protective measure, because when all is said and done 3,000,000 horse-power, representing 35,000,000 tons of coal a year, is something that both the state of New York and the province of Ontario ought to have. The people ought to have it, for it means so much in cheapening the cost of living and of industry and of those things which make the world more comfortable and pleasant to live in. It is a matter of vital public importance.

As to the canalization of the St. Lawrence, I again call the attention of the minister to the fact—which always bites me—as to what our friends at Chicago are doing to us now they admit that at all events they have reduced the level of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence river at least six inches. If you figure the millions of dollars that you have to spend to deepen the St. Lawrence from Kingston downwards that extra six inches, you will realize the enormous cost and the great injury they are continuing to do to that great scheme, which seems very popular in twenty-one of the states and very unpopular with those states in the south that want to take our Great Lakes water down the Mississippi river. The problem is one to which the government must give very serious consideration. The future prospects of Canada and our relations with the United States are very much at stake at the present time with respect to the Great Lakes and the waters thereof and to what is going on in the United States with the idea apparently that they will run a canal system through the state of New York if we do not agree to a canal system down the St. Lawrence river. Their attitude is not of that friendly character which we as Canadians would like to see, because we have lived side by side with our neighbours as good friends for the past hundred years, and we want to continue to do so. I do hope that no complications will arise because of the peculiar desire of the Chicago element to take something that does not belong to them, and the desire that has arisen in the southern states to divert the Great Lakes water to deepen a canal system by way of the Mississippi river, in effect taking away from this country and the northwestern states something which belongs to us. I am sure that as far as this party is concerned, although I am not its leader, we are all anxious to help the minister in the work he has to do, which is of such vital importance to this country at the present time.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before the debate is closed I would remind the House that the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has the right to reply.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to say very much on this subject, except to comment on the investigating character of this government. I think they are the prize investigators of all time. They have been investigating this St. Lawrence project ever since getting into office, and they are investigating it still. A board of engineers has had the matter in hand, and has had so many other boards advising it that I have never yet heard the minister or any other member of the government able to give a clear account of what is being done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think my right hon. friend should make that statement. They are not advising the engineering board. I do not think by any process of reasoning he could construe it that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are at least four or five boards, and the relationship between them nobody can define. Who they are advising, whether each other or somebody else, I have never yet heard any minister define.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I be permitted to tell my right hon. friend in a concrete way all that board is doing about which complaint is being made?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Which board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The technical board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are far more than one.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, not that I am aware of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That board was appointed simply to go into the matter from the legal and every other standpoint and advise the government what questions should be submitted for consideration. Surely my right hon. friend will not complain about that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When were the questions submitted?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They made a study of the matter before the notes passed between this government and the United States government as to the character of the investigation to be made. That was submitted to the joint engineering board. Beyond that the board has not functioned recently.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That board may have ceased to function, but I will guarantee that if the minister looks into it he will find there are other boards connected with different departments, all having to do in some indescribable way with this question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only in so far as they are officers of that particular department. Take Mr. Johnston of the Dominion Water Power branch; he is a member of that board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Which board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of the committee at least, not the board. Mr. Biggar is another member.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of the technical board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, of the committee that went into the matter of what questions should be submitted for consideration.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says "is a member of the committee." Surely the committee is not now existing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think they are functioning.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think so. The tense is wrong. That is only one; if the minister makes inquiries he will find there are committees connected with other departments that have to do with this yet, and they will all have to come together before there will be any end to it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my right hon. friend tell me who they are?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he looks at Hansard of last June he will find some of them attempted to be described by the then Minister of Railways, Mr. Graham. The minister now says there will be a report from this engineering board in June, and after that the government will not delay. Will he permit me now to make a statement of what I think will happen? There may be a report from the committee in June, but there will be no government policy announced. Either there will be delay in filing the report or there will be more consideration necessary, but we will not get any government policy on this question this session.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say for the information of my right hon. friend that he may be correct,—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —but I think the greatest incentive will come this year from the fact that both the government of the United States and the government of Canada have a very serious problem before them with respect to the lowering of the levels of the Great Lakes, and that more than any other matter will make it very urgent that this report be filed and dealt with.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I am aware of that. I certainly see its importance and how it must be taken into account before the government comes to a decision on this matter. But what I should like to call attention to is this. The House was going to be asked to pass out of this debate in a peaceful dream, believing that in only a few short weeks we would know the solution of the question and the government would have a policy to submit to parliament. It will not have any declaration to make this session, and I question very much if it will have next session. I venture to say when a debate on this question comes on next session, if this government is in office, it will partake very much of the same character as the debate this afternoon; we will be told about this committee and that committee, about the bearing of this question and that, and about everything except the policy of the government. It is sometimes hazardous to prophesy in this House, but if there is one sure foundation you can get—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend seems to be very critical. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission filed their plans in 1923 with this government. This resolution says so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In 1924 steps were taken with the United States government to see if we could not get this matter settled. The board of engineers has been working on it for twelve months.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Hydro filed their application in 1923, and steps were taken to appoint a new board in 1924. My first comment is: Why the year's delay to commence when before this government came into office the International Joint Commission had this question before it and had instructions to utilize its engineers to make a report to the government as to the character of the St. Lawrence canalization and water-power development. The subject has undoubtedly been in review for years, and the government have shifted the responsibility. Years after the International Joint Commission had this as part of their responsibility this new board was created, and to this new board all these attachments were made. So the matter has been carried successfully up to now. I simply rose to say that the same character of success will attend the whole subject while this government is in office, that being the success of drift and indecision. There will not be any announcement of policy this session, and if by means of opiates and the like the government is in office next session, we will not then have any announcement of policy on this subject.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is speaking for himself; the government have made their announcement.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister be good enough to tell me when he expects the report of the Dominion advisory committee? He has said that in June we will have the report of the board of engineers, but how about the Dominion advisory committee? They also have to take up this question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Dominion advisory committee has not taken this question up in the way my hon. friend says.

Mr. GEARY: The former Minister of Railways on June 24 of last year, is reported at page 4822 of Hansard as having said:

> To consider generally whether or not the project would, if completed, be beneficial to Canada, the government has appointed a national advisory committee for the Dominion—

What has happened to that committee? Apparently its work was to be superimposed upon the work of the board of engineers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is quite correct. This committee was undoubtedly of very great value in suggesting what the full nature of the investigation should be, having in mind exactly what took place before the International Joint Commission, and the investigation there carried on.

I repeat that it was only for the purpose of settling definitely, once and for all, with the government of the United States, what steps should be taken for this development on both sides of the river, and what should be the final plan. My hon. friend knows, of course, that there were some differences of opinion even between our own engineers, with respect to this matter.

Mr. GEARY: Then will the minister tell me what the former minister meant, in speaking of this national advisory committee, when he said:

> Our national advisory committee has had two meetings. Its chief work to date has been the consideration and approval of the terms of reference submitted to the joint engineering board. This committee will also study the recommendations and suggestions of the interdepartmental committee, and when their work is completed I believe they will present a report to the government that will be of very material assistance--

I am asking the minister, what about that report? That committee, as I understand it, is charged with this function as well as that of considering the report of the board of engineers. Whether the recommendations of the board of engineers will commend themselves to the people of Canada is also a question left to this national advisory committee. Therefore I suggest to the minister that its functions are superimposed upon those of the engineering board. If so, can the minister hope on the completion of the report of the board of engineers to give this House any information at all, until his national advisory committee has considered that report? Further, when will that be?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Even if the national advisory committee does report it will only be in the nature of departmental advice, which is being given every day. Surely my hon. friend would not expect me to take the responsibility, without consulting officers of my department, of making a statement in parliament about any matter, and particularly a technical matter. I would of course have to have first the advice of those very officers. I do not think any minister would be warranted in proceeding without such advice. I cannot conceive how any body of men could interfere with the report of the joint board of engineers, which is representative of both governments, selected and deputed to prepare a finding of an engineering character purely technical in every respect. I for one do not see any difficulties in the way of dealing immediately with the report of the joint board of engineers.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. GEARY: If the minister will forgive me, do I understand that he would find it impossible to make any pronouncement as to the date upon which he might expect the report of the national advisory committee?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would not say that, because the membership of the national advisory committee is composed of technical officers of the department. They are all here in Ottawa.

Mr. GEARY: That is not the committee at all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If that is the function of these officials, why name them as a committee? If that is their ordinary work, and the minister has to consult his advisers in the department, why name them as a committee and put on Hansard such a statement as I referred to this afternoon?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They were named as a committee, as I have repeatedly stated to the House, for the purpose of assisting as officers of the various departments. The Department of Public Works is interested in this project; the Department of Railways and Canals is interested in it, and the Water Powers branch is interested in it. They all have their separate interests and all have been represented simply to bring these officers together for the purposes of consultation.

Mr. GEARY: But that committee is already provided for; that is an interdepartmental committee; that is a committee which, according to the former Minister of Railways, has done splendid work "quietly and silently". I am not concerned so much about its functions, but the minister has not yet told me when he expects the report of the national advisory committee. That is all I want.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I expect this report when the report of the engineering board is received.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then I would like to ask the minister again if there has not been one commission or committee more than was needed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not that I am aware of.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The procedure is so intricate that no one can understand it.

Mr. CHURCH: I understand the minister has no objection to this resolution being adopted to-day. The reply of the minister has been substantially the same as that made by his predecessor in this House on June 24 last, but no matter how many replies we have that will not build the Morrisburg dam. The government of the United States, as I see it, have nothing to do with this question; we are not abstracting water from the river to injure navigation. As a province we have the right to use the surplus waters of that stream for the development of water power, and I do urge that the government issue this permit to the province of Ontario. The minister has said that this report will be received next June, but as I understand it that is the report on the St. Lawrence waterway. The International Joint Commission in 1921 made a report on the St. Lawrence problem, both from the engineering and commercial standpoints, and that report advised that a further report be made on the engineering features of the project. But that has nothing to do with this question, and I would be very much surprised if the report which we are to expect next summer will touch this phase of the question at all. This matter has been a political football for the last ten or twelve years. Is this report to be brought this year and then another report and still another? I hope the government during the next few months will bestir themselves and see if something cannot be done towards going ahead with this project.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is asking that his motion pass in its entirety, but as it stands the wording would make it impossible for the government to accept it, because it would be a clear commitment, without the consent of the United States government, both to the Niagara and the St. Lawrence projects. We are negotiating in connection with both these matters. If my hon. friend will amend his motion reasonably—

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What would the minister suggest?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is difficult to amend this resolution as it stands, but if my hon. friend will amend it so that—

Mr. CHURCH: I think the government should either favour the resolution or vote it down.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The government is not opposing the resolution nor the spirit of it, but my hon. friends will see how impossible it is for the government to accept a resolution that calls at once for the issuance of a permit to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to develop power at Morrisburg when we are under obligation to await the report of the board of engineers and are in negotiation with the United States government on this very matter. Moreover, if he will look at the second clause of the resolution referring to development at Niagara he will see that exactly the same difficulty is encountered.

Mr. EULER: Might I suggest that perhaps the hon. member would consent to amend his resolution by leaving out the word "forthwith" in the third line? The principle would be affirmed.

Mr. CHURCH: I agree to having the resolution amended by leaving out the word "forthwith."

Mr. FLEMMING: I would suggest that it be amended by leaving out the word "forthwith" and substituting therefor the words "at the earliest possible date."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is agreeable.

Motion as amended agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION

On the motion of Mr. ROSS (Kingston):

That in the opinion of this House our industries here have to have safeguarding with respect to competition from other parts of the world, competition from the country to the south, competition from conditions as they are in Europe.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am prepared to go on, but not at a quarter to six on an important resolution.

Motion stands.

CUSTOMS ADMINISTRATION

On the motions of Mr. Stevens, Nos 23, 24 and 25:

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know any reason why these should not carry.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have just sent for the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Boivin) who asked that they be moved for purpose of discussion. I will ask the House to wait until he comes in because I know he wants to deal with some of them. When the other resolutions are dealt with we might return to these.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is, these three are held pending the arrival of the minister.

Motions stand.

On the motions of Mr. Stevens, Nos. 29, 30 and 31:

Mr. CLARK: Surely no discussion is possible about number 31. I should think it should be passed as a matter of course.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition asked that the motions of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) stand for the moment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I meant those that were asked to stand at the request of the Minister of Customs. I am not asking it; it is the Minister of the Interior who asked it. I assented to it, but number 31 is not in that category.

Mr. CLARK: I will move that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have sent for the minister. I do not know just what is involved in this motion, whether it has anything to do with the investigation or not. If my hon. friend would let it stand until the minister comes in, we shall deal with them all at once.

Motions stand.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DETROIT FRANCHISE

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, agreements, contracts, letters and all other correspondence between the Honourable Alesander Groesbeck, Governor of Michigan, or any other person or persons, and Sir Henry Thornton and the Canadian National Railways, or any officials thereof, relating to the giving up of valuable charter considerations and rights of way to the state of Michigan by the Canadian National Railways and the Detroit G. H. & M. Railway, a subsidiary—and the agreement to pay $225,000 taxes a year to the state of Michigan. The surrender of valuable franchise owned in perpetuity in the centre of Detroit by the Canadian National and the Detroit & G. R. M. Railway, and also relating to the use of the Brush street (C.N.R.) terminal in Detroit.

He said: This resolution, I might say to the Minister of Railways, was placed under Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers nearly a month ago, and it was transferred without my consent to debatable notices of motion. I appeal to the Minister of Railways. In this case a number of valuable franchises have been given up by the Canadian National Railways, who have closed their shops at Belleville and Stratford and spent I forget how many million dollars to open new shops at Port Huron. What are they doing in the city of Detroit? They are giving away the most important right-of-way the National Railway has on Woodward Ave. Sir Henry Thornton has agreed to this and a contract has been signed, sealed and delivered over the head of the party of the first part, the Dominion government. How did the party of the second part, the state of Michigan, act? Governor Groesbeck of the state of Michigan summoned the state legislature at a special session to take up the agreement clause by clause. Is Sir Henry Thornton above this parliament? Has this parliament no say in these matters in connection with a very important franchise involving many millions of dollars of real estate of potential value which has been given up by Sir Henry Thornton over the head of this parliament? I am asking simply for the production of papers. I want the cards to be laid on the table of the House. Let us see the agreement. The state legislature of Michigan took up the agreement clause by clause at a special session. Is there one kind of responsible government in the state of Michigan, and another in the Dominion of Canada? I have no wish to labour the point. I simply ask to see the agreement. Surely there is no objection to this. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) said he had no objection to the resolution; he was quite willing to bring down all the information there was. Let all the cards be laid on the table so that we may see whether there has been a good deal or whether there has been a handout. I am afraid the country has been hoodwinked by the National Railways, and I want to see to what extent that fear is justified. There is no reason why the resolution should not be passed.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways): There is not the slightest objection to the motion for a return passing.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

MOTION FOR THE PRODUCTION OF INSPECTOR DUNCAN'S REPORT

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The House will revert to motion No. 23, by Mr. Stevens, reading as follows:

For a copy of report of Walter Duncan on the administration of the customs service at the port of Montreal, made during the month of December, 1925, together with a copy of all testimony and documents in evidence received by the said Mr. Duncan, also interim report covering eleven definite charges of irregularities including perjury, forgery, theft and other offences committed by one Bisaillon, and also charges implicating other officers of the crown in serious offences, inefficiency and dereliction of duty.

Shall the resolution be adopted?

Hon. G. H. BOIVIN (Minister of Customs and Excise): When this resolution was submitted to the House on March 15 last I asked that it be transferred from the order

"Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers" to the order 'Notices of Motions,' not because I desired to debate it at any length but because I felt it my duty to explain to the House why, in my humble opinion, this report should not be laid upon the table at the present time. If the motion carries, the government will be requested to lay upon the table a copy of the report made by Inspector Walter Duncan concerning the administration of the customs service at the port of Montreal, during the month of December, 1925, together with evidence and other documents. It is absolutely impossible for the government to comply with that order if it is made, because the government has not in its possession the original report. The original report has already been produced by the Minister of Customs and Excise, to whom it was made, before the committee which is now investigating the administration of the Department of Customs. The report is no longer in the possession of the government. It has already been handed over to a committee of the House. The members of that committee have had access not only to the interim report but to the complete report prepared when the investigation at Montreal was completed. They have also had access to all the evidence taken by Inspector Duncan in the course of his investigation into the affairs of the port of Montreal. The report made to the minister was a confidential report made by one of the employees of the government who was sent to Montreal on a confidential mission to ascertain how the officers of the department were conducting its affairs, and whether or not any of them were guilty of graft, corruption, dishonesty, or irregularity of any kind.

Now, may I explain to the House how the investigation in question was held? Inspector Duncan made an ex parte inquiry. He caused to be brought before him, either at the customs office at Montreal or in a room at the Windsor hotel, not only the officers of the Department of Customs—and I say at once that if any of those officers were proved dishonest I do not want to shield them—but also several other persons who had had dealings with the departmental officers at the port. All these people, whether they were accused or not came before Inspector Duncan and were examined. They were examined without being represented by counsel, they were not allowed to offer any defence in their own behalf. I respectfully represent to hon. gentlemen that it would be unfair to these persons to have this report tabled with the evidence upon which it was based, in view of the fact that they had no opportunity of defending themselves or of summoning witnesses in their own behalf.

If these reasons are not sufficient to justify the House in refusing to order the production of a confidential report there is the added reason that this document has already been produced. It has been before a committee of this House for at least six weeks, and every member of that committee has had access to it. I am sure that there are members of the committee now in the House who will bear me out in the statement that there are certain conclusions in that report which have not been taken up by the committee and which the committee has decided not to publish at the present time. By unanimous consent the report was produced and not filed before the committee.

Let me give another reason why a copy of the report should not be tabled. The House has appointed a committee to judge these same customs officers and officials upon the evidence now being adduced before the committee. It was appointed to make a report to this House, to give the House the names of the different officers who were unworthy of retaining their positions, the names of the different officers, who perhaps should be prosecuted for illegalities or irregularities in the performance of their duty. The committee must also establish responsibility, determine to what extent the officers themselves are responsible for these irregularities, and to what extent these irregularities were condoned or approved by the minister and by the higher officers in the department in Ottawa.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the House, are we going to be prejudiced, is the public of Canada going to be prejudiced by reading and by having produced as official, the conclusions drawn by Inspector Duncan? I have nothing to say against Inspector Duncan. I chose Inspector Duncan to make the investigation because he was highly recommended by the Minister of Finance and because he had the reputation of being an honest and efficient official of the Department of Finance. I was glad to send him to Montreal. He did his duty. In so far as he had time to do it, I think he did it well. Without saying a word against Inspector Duncan, I contend that the House does not desire to be influenced by his personal opinion but would prefer to rely upon the judgment of the committee appointed to investigate these matters, to pass upon them and to make a report. What advantage can there be, except possibly some petty political advantage in making public the contents of this report while the same matters are under investigation? If hon. members who take part in this debate when it is resumed, are in a position to explain any advantage to the House in having the report tabled at present, if the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) or any other hon. member can explain how the government can prepare a copy of the report and comply with the order of the House, when the report is not in the possession of the government, I should like them to do so. An order was made by the committee calling upon the Minister of Customs to submit the confidential report received from Inspector Duncan to the committee and make it available to the members of the committee. I was glad to comply with that request. I no longer have the report.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question being put, pursuant to rule.

Thursday, April 8, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter:

City Clerks' Department, City Hall
Ottawa, Canada, 7th April, 1926.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX,
Speaker of the House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—I beg to advise you that the city council of Ottawa has authorized His Worship the Mayor to proclaim that daylight saving will be observed in this city during the current year from midnight of Saturday, the 1st May, until midnight of Saturday, the 25th of September.

Your obedient servant,
NORMAN H. H. LETT,
City Clerk.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That the name of Mr. Chabot be added to the select standing committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines; that the name of Mr. Dunning be substituted for that of Mr. Vallance on the select standing committee an Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines; that the name of Mr. Macdonald (Antigonish-Guysborough) be substituted for that of Mr. Meighen on the select standing committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

[Mr Boivin]

HON. G. N. GORDON

Mr. SENN:

1. Is Hon. G. N. Gordon in the employ of the government?
2. If so, in what capacity, and what salary does he receive?
3. Is the said hon. G. N. Gordon in the employ of the Canadian National Railways?
4. If so, in what capacity, and what salary does he receive?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No.
2, 3, and 4. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL PURCHASED

Mr. MacDOUGALL:

What are the respective tonnage quantities of coal purchased by the Canadian National Railways in each of the calendar years 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925, (a) mined in Nova Scotia; (b) mined in the United States, and (c) mined in Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. DUNNING:

1.

		Net Tons
(a) Mined in Nova Scotia	1921	1,285,946
	1922	1,435,882
	1923	1,573,456
	1924	1,251,539
	1925	*718,826

* Output curtailed by Besco strike.

(b) Mined in the United States..	1921	3,711,280
	1922	3,170,798
	1923	5,292,556
	1924	3,012,401
	1925	2,971,706
(c) Mined in Great Britain	1921	—
	1922	56,570
	1923	13,000
	1924	20,117
	1925	21,430

NOTE.—In addition the Canadian National Railways, in the same years, purchased the following tonnages of coal mined in western Canada:—

	Net Tons
1921..	1,357,945
1922..	1,334,044
1923..	1,622,266
1924..	818,358
1925..	1,146,667

NATHAN W. EATON

Mr. FOSTER:

1. What sum of money, if any, was paid to Nathan W. Eaton, Canning, Nova Scotia, during the years 1922 to 1925, inclusive?

2. For what purpose was the money paid?
3. On whose recommendation?
4. Was the amount determined by the Exchequer Court of Canada?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. $1,494.83.

2. Damages due to expropriation of property.

3 and 4. By judgment of the Exchequer court.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Was a commission issued to J. P. Smith, K.C., of Vancouver to enquire into alleged improper and illegal handling of drugs by members of the R.C.M.P.?
2. Has the Minister of Justice received a report from J. P. Smith, and has such report been made public?
3. What names were submitted to the minister for appointment for commissioner?
4. Upon whose recommendation, or who was responsible for selecting J. P. Smith as commissioner?
5. Why was J. P. Smith selected in preference to the others?
6. Was not, in fact, J. P. Smith's appointment recommended by M. A. Macdonald, in Vancouver, and W. W. B. McInnes?
7. What official or other connection had J. P. Smith with the mounted police in the Yukon?
8. When did such official or other connection cease?
9. Was the minister aware of such official or other connection with the mounted police at the time of such appointment as commissioner?
10. What remuneration has been paid to J. P. Smith for his service as commissioner; also what amount for expenses?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Speaker, I should like this and the succeeding questions up to number 26 inclusive to stand. Most of them were answered last year or the year before.

Mr. SPEAKER: Questions, 6 to 26, inclusive, stand.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE—1923

RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING SALARY SCHEDULES AND OTHER MATTERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question put by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) as to the action taken by the Civil Service Commission in connection with salary revision, I am informed by the Civil Service Commissioners that the recommendation in respect to this matter is practically ready for submission to the Governor-in-Council and will be forwarded very shortly.

FRANCE AND BELGIUM

DEPRECIATED CURRENCY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) with respect to a recent order or memorandum regarding depreciated currency affecting France and Belgium, whether or not this order is in breach of the treaties recently made, whether or not representations have been made to the government for the withdrawal of that order, and whether or not the government is now considering its withdrawal?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any order in council referring to the matter. There is some regulation, I understand, with respect to which certain representations have been made, and these representations are being considered at the present time.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

EXEMPTION OF OFFICIALS FROM INCOME TAX

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the government to a return designated as:

Sessional paper number 138 for a return to an order of the House of Commons dated 15th March 1926 for a copy of all correspondence and papers in relation to exemption from income tax of sums paid by the government to any official or officials in the employ of the Department of the Interior for 1923 and 1924.

The return consists of a letter signed by the Acting Deputy Minister of the Interior, saying that, "as far as the Department of the Interior is concerned there is nothing on record respecting this matter." Naturally there is nothing on record in that department respecting income tax. It would be just as reasonable to have a similar statement from any other department, for instance, the Department of Railways or the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The Department of the Interior is not the department that deals with such matters. I should like to know whether the government will make a return to the order or not.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am going to look into this matter and call the attention of the various departments to it if they have not furnished the requisite information.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Agriculture—Cold storage warehouses, $30,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): On what basis are the grants given by the government for the establishment of cold storage warehouses?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): The act under which these grants are made was passed in 1907, and the money is paid on the basis of thirty per cent of the cost of construction. That sum is given by way of subsidy, conditional upon supervision of plans, construction and so on. The grant extends over four or five payments. The provisions of the act were pretty generally taken advantage of for a number of years although during the war activities were suspended to some extent owing to the fact that the act was made applicable only to municipal cold storages. Since this government came into power, however, it has again been made applicable to cold storages generally. The demand for subsidies has somewhat fallen off recently, the feeling being that Canada is fairly well supplied with facilities in this direction. For that reason the vote has been reduced.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The vote covers only the grants?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and the money is all for contracts already entered into. The contract which will take most of the grant is located in Sydney, Cape Breton.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How many of these plants have been subsidized and what total has been spent to date?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: These plants extend over the whole Dominion, from Prince Rupert to Halifax. The number of plants and the total expended in the various provinces are, in round numbers:

Province	Total expenditure
Prince Edward Island, 2..	$ 20,000
Nova Scotia, 4..	142,000
New Brunswick, 2..	57,000
Quebec, 4.. .. ..(approximately)	85,000
Ontario, 16..	183,000
Manitoba, 1..	9,000
Saskatchewan, 4..	80,000
Alberta, 2..	72,000
British Columbia, 3..	137,000

The total number of plants receiving assistance is thirty-eight, and the total subsidy paid, $795,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How many of the plants which have been in operation are now out of business?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are all operating.

Mr. HANSON: Where are the two plants in New Brunswick located, and when were the grants given them?

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: While my deputy is looking up that information I may anticipate a question which will likely be asked in reference to Halifax. I have had a number of communications from hon. members from Nova Scotia and I may point out here that this vote is not sufficient to take care of the project which they have in view for Halifax. From what I can gather from the correspondence I have had with hon. members, including my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Black), I think that what they have in mind is something substantial, not perhaps as large as the establishment at Montreal, but a plant which will be handled by the harbour board, if there is such an institution in Halifax. Obviously this vote could not meet the requirements of a large port enterprise such as the one we have at Montreal.

Mr. SHORT: At what point in Nova Scotia are the plants operating?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certain large enterprises do not come under this vote, and I referred to Halifax merely to point out that any considerable project which might be anticipated there could not be taken care of by such a vote as this.

Mr. ROGERS: Harbour proposals do not come under this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): How much was spent of last year's estimate of $70,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: About $30,000 in round figures, to meet payments on contracts already entered into.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): What explains the decrease?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We usually have certain votes in the supplementaries. After the House has met and spring comes and we have a fair idea of the prospect of the fruit crop we generally include a vote in the supplementary estimates for fruit-cooling establishments which have been receiving assistance in British Columbia. The extra $40,000 was in the supplementaries last year.

Replying to the hon. member for York-Sunbury, the cold storage plants in New Brunswick are located as follows: the New Brunswick Cold Storage Company, at St. John, total subsidy granted, $50,100; Imperial Products Company, Limited, Woodstock, subsidy granted, $7,673.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Do I understand the minister to say that none of this supplementary estimate was spent?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Practically none.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister admits that he brought down a supplementary estimate at the end of the session and did not spend any of it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. It was thought that a number of the fruit districts would be able to enter into this co-operative plan, but on account of the bad fruit season they were unable to do so. In British Columbia—I have particular reference to the vicinity of Nelson—the fruit men there expected to be able to raise their part of the expenditure, because it must be remembered that this amount represents only thirty per cent of the expenditure, the fruit growers putting up the other seventy per cent, but after the estimates were passed it was found that the fruit growers at Nelson and elsewhere were not able to take advantage of it because of the poor fruit crop of last year, due to the previous bad winter season, which affected the trees very adversely. In the town of Vernon we could have expended some money, but their fruit crop was also away off in quantity, and there was also some difference of opinion between the town of Vernon and Kelowna as to which should get assistance. Strong representations were made to us from Kelowna that we should supplement what we had already given them the year before, which was $20,000, for an addition to their packing plant and pre-cooling facilities, but there was a difference of opinion between them and the fruit men who had made the representations in the first instance, and the result was that the money was not expended in either place. I have been in correspondence with the member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) who has taken an active interest in this matter, and I have assured him that after the spring season has opened and we have a fair idea of what the fruit prospects will be, it is quite possible that we may have to add to this a little in the supplementaries to take care of a possible expenditure in either Kelowna or Vernon.

Mr. GEARY: Did the minister say the federal government paid 30 or 15 per cent?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thirty per cent.

Mr. GEARY: Did it not use to be 15 per cent?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it was always 30 per cent.

Mr. GEARY: The Auditor General's report speaks as though in 1924-1925 it was 15 per cent.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is spread out in instalments, the first payment being 15 per cent, and then so much more as the work proceeds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I notice that these estimates were always under the title "Arts and Agriculture" up until the regime of the present minister. May I ask him how he succeeded in getting rid of the "Arts"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We tried to preserve the art of getting the estimates through. I really do not know the story, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHORT: Will the minister say where these plants are situated in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Lockeport Cold Storage, total subsidy, in round figures, $17,000; Halifax Cold Storage Company, at Port Hawkesbury, $9,000; St. Leonard Fisheries, Limited, formerly called the North Atlantic Fisheries, $60,000. Then there is one in Cape Breton, at North Sydney, where the amount was $36,000.

Mr. SHORT: When was that $60,000 spent in connection with the St. Leonard Fisheries, Limited?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not got the date, but it was before my time. Even the North Sydney contract, the latest one in Nova Scotia, was entered into before I took charge of the department.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to ask what representations have been made to the minister in recent months on behalf of the fruit growers in the Maritime provinces, particularly in the Annapolis valley, for cold storage facilities. The minister will recall that the former member for Hants used to bring this matter to his attention annually, without very much success. I wonder if the department has looked into that, and whether it has made any provision for assistance?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend has not got just the slant on this matter which the former member for Hants had. He was not in favour of a regular cold storage plant; in fact, I recollect discussing the matter with him, and he was opposed to it. The weather is pretty cool in the fall in the Maritime provinces, and there has never been any strong request for pre-cooling facilities for their fruit. We did do a little bit in the way of ice storage, fixing up an old warehouse in the Annapolis valley in the fall of 1922, but the nights are so cold down there that the fruit will chill off in the barrels very nicely before going into storage. That is what these pre-cooling plants are required for, and we have had no demand from the Annapolis valley for a regular cold storage plant, probably on account of their climatic conditions. I do not just recall what the former member for Hants had in mind; perhaps the hon. member for York-Sunbury would refresh my mind. I know he was very much opposed to the project that we brought up at the first session with regard to co-operative cold storage. He had no use for that at all.

Mr. CHURCH: When this matter was before the House last year, the minister said that during the parliamentary recess he would reconsider the whole question of cold storage facilities. Agriculture is our great basic industry, and there is concurrent jurisdiction over it by the Dominion and the provinces. The provinces take the view that cold storage warehouses is a matter, under the British North America Act, for the federal government. The function of cold storage warehouses to-day is entirely different from what it was twenty-five years ago. Just the day before yesterday the first sod was turned of a new terminal warehouse in Toronto that is to cost $8,000,000. For twenty-five years we have looked to the federal government to do something in this matter, but nothing has been done, and the result is that the farmers have no place in which to store their butter and eggs and cheese and other products, and at the present time a large portion of these products goes to Montreal to be kept in cold storage in private warehouses. I think the minister has no conception of what this warehouse problem means to the producer and the consumer. The retailer to-day has to buy in advance of the market and has to keep in storage butter, eggs, cheese, apples and many other products, and he has to pay bank interest of course on his investment because of the lack of cold storage facilities. The farmer has to supply the credit, whereas if the government provided up-to-date warehouses at central points it would lessen the cost of production and also very largely reduce the cost to the consumer. One cannot fail to be impressed by the large number of officials attached to the Department of Agriculture, the heavy overhead and red tape of officialdom, and the consequent large expenditure in the way of salaries and other items which is involved. At a previous session we were promised some information about what other countries are doing in the way of providing modern terminal warehouses and other methods of assisting the farmers to market their products and to help in removing some of the peak load from the consumer. Go into a grocery store to-day and you cannot get an apple for less than five cents, and the cost of such commodities as butter, cheese and eggs is in proportion. These prices are absolutely prohibitive to the working classes. A luncheon was held in Toronto the other day after the turning of the sod of the new terminal warehouse, a function which was attended by farmers from different points extending from Windsor east to Belleville, with the object of trying to see what could be done through the medium of private ownership to meet the problems pressing upon agriculturists. But problems of this kind should be worked out by the federal authorities. We have a Department of Agriculture here which is costing this country hundreds of thousands of dollars, and is staffed with officials from top to bottom. The department sends out every day loads of literature which is not read because it is too complicated. We want the federal government to take up this question, and carry out the promise made that some relief will be forthcoming to the agriculturists, the retailers, and the consumers. We ought in Canada to follow the plan with respect to terminal warehouses which has been adopted in every large city in the United States. Why is it necessary to bring in American capital to the extent of $8,000,000 to establish a terminal warehouse in Toronto to give relief to farmers in some 22 counties when the Dominion government has large resources and almost unlimited methods of taxation upon which it can draw in order to help the agricultural industry? Modern terminal warehouses are a modern economic necessity, both in the interest of producers and consumers and to lessen transportation costs and overhead. In the case of the former they would help to lessen the cost of production and of marketing, and there would be little or no waste. The retailer could buy to the best advantage when he needed supplies and those supplies would be in first-class condition. The consumer would benefit by being able to purchase commodities at a greatly reduced price. The problem has existed in an acute form since 1897 but notwithstanding the need for action no progress has been made. The federal and provincial governments have made a football of the question and whenever the provinces were urged to take action they have referred the applicants to the federal Minister of Agriculture. In central Ontario to-day the farmer is getting the worst of it. Many market gardeners are abandoning their occupation, and the dairy industry is in a very precarious state. The railways do not provide proper accommodation; there is nothing in the shape of proper storage facilities, there is not even a terminal elevator for grain in central Ontario, let alone a modern warehouse. There are practically no warehouses, except a few small ones that are operated on a very minor scale. The state of New York has dozens of these terminal warehouses. Every large city has them and the aid given by the federal authority is supplemented by grants from the state legislatures. We are making treaties all the time with outside countries, but we are doing little or nothing to help the farmers and the producers and also the consumers who are suffering so much from existing conditions. I think where private interests do this modern work a subsidy should be given to facilitate the construction of these terminal warehouses. They are not a luxury; they are a necessity. These warehouses should be either under the jurisdiction of the federal government, or else the federal authorities should grant money for the purpose to the provinces and let them work out a scheme. The Dominion government would get some revenue indirectly, and there would be an immense advantage to the farmer, the dairyman, the retailer and the consumer.

Mr. FOSTER: Allusion has been made to the action taken by the member for Hants last year on the question of cold storage. I would remind the minister that the counties of Hants and Kings are now united. While it is true that the former member for Hants may not have voted for cold storage I suspect very strongly that one of the reasons why he is not sitting in this House to-day is because he did not understand the situation as clearly as was necessary and did not support cold storage for the Annapolis and Kings valley as strongly as he might have done. With reference to conditions in the two counties, we have been running to specialization in the matter of fruit for the last few years, but unfortunately we had three bad years in the fruit industry. May I say to the minister and to hon. members that the conditions in that regard were never worse in those two counties than they are to-day; and one special reason why I am here as a representative of these counties is because the federal government for the last four or five years, in fact for many years back, have not heeded the demands that have been made in the past and are still being pressed. I understand that several delegations composed of very substantial Liberals, from the two counties, have waited upon the government and impressed upon them the necessity of doing something to help the fruit industry of the Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys and of granting aid in other directions. The government instead of paying heed to these representations have appointed a commission to examine into conditions in the Maritime provinces. I venture to suggest that that commission was in no sense necessary. The members in this House supporting the government and members supporting the opposition are a unit on certain fundamental things which must be done in the Maritime provinces. A commission will not accomplish what is required. You cannot get these things done by appointing a royal commission and spending $25,000 or $50,000—probably this commission will cost $100,000 before it is concluded.

Now with regard to the things which are required to be done, it is generally understood that we will have to get away from specialization in fruit growing in that section of the country if we are to make progress in creating greater wealth. The government will have to provide similiar facilities to those established elsewhere in Canada to assist the people to get back into the business of producing eggs, butter and cheese, meat, and so on; creameries will have to be established, and all those things are dependent upon cold storage facilities. We have before us to-day a propostion for a large cold storage warehouse for the city of Halifax. I understand it is to be undertaken by the Norcross Company, but the question who is to build it is of no particular interest, except in this way, that when representatives come from this section of the country and ask for assistance for cold storage institutions they ought to receive substantial consideration and support. I for one cannot vote millions of dollars to be spent in other sections of Canada, without drawing the attention of the minister and the government to the very important matter of voting at least some of this money to the re-creation of trade in the Maritime provinces to the end that there shall be an upbuilding of trade down there, in order to make two blades of grass, or two dollars, if you like, grow where one or none is growing or being earned at the present time.

On some of the items I will refer to particular industries, by which we will be able to produce millions of dollars worth of wealth in those counties if the government will give the matter some further attention. I am glad the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is giving some attention to certain matters in that district, and I do not propose to find fault with him as to that. But I desire very forcibly to direct his attention to the fact that we must have new avenues for the production of wealth in those two counties of Hants-Kings and in that section of Nova Scotia in order to satisfy our people. If the Minister of Agriculture or even the Prime Minister were on the proposed Maritime commission, they would find conditions obtaining there pretty much as we have stated them during this session.

I hope it is not assumed that this item of $30,000 will be sufficient to take care of the situation in Halifax. I understand some further provision is to be made in the supplementary estimates. Even if the amount were $40,000 it would not take care of the situation or do much to revive the interest of the province in these matters. Of course this is only one of the things which can be done; other matters, such as freight rates, will come up in due course. I hope the minister will give instructions that when delegations of his own party from Nova Scotia come to him, they shall be treated better than we would be if we approached him. It is not a question of being magnanimous to any particular part of the country; but it is a matter of seeing that the money which is spent will be productive of new wealth and of prosperity which does not now exist.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wish my hon. friend would refresh my memory with regard to requests for the establishment of a cold storage plant in Nova Scotia, outside of the city of Halifax. The understanding was that Halifax could not be taken care of in this vote. I have no recollection of refusing any cold storage plant in Nova Scotia. We have been doing something in reference to the establishment of cold storage in the Annapolis valley, but outside of that we have not established any plants. We are not promoting these things ourselves, but we are putting 30 per cent into the enterprise to help those who help themselves. I believe the hon. member (Mr. Spence) is pretty well posted on this question, and I do not think he will take the ground that we need a lot more cold storage plants.

I do not think I heard all that the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) said a few minuts ago, but he spoke gaily in terms of eight or more millions. I am afraid I would shock the House if I brought down a measure which would pretend to take care of an enterprise of that nature. Neither this vote nor any previous vote was intended to take care entirely of port situations. The enterprise at Montreal is one of the finest on the continent, and I would like to give my predecessors full credit for that. It is very much required. I think it has been capable of taking care of the cold storage business that has been offering at that port ever since. But the proposition of cold storage immediately after the war was a very doubtful one, for the simple reason that the people were not patronizing these warehouses. They were not storing their produce; they were retrenching and using the facilities around home, buying a small plant and putting it in their kitchen or basement, and storing their dairy produce there instead of keeping it in a public cold storage where they had to pay for it; consequently there was not a demand for storage. There is not one single new contract for this year. Yet we have not been refusing them, outside of Halifax, and it was not really a refusal. I drew the attention of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) to the fact that this vote was never intended to take care of cold storage at the port of Halifax, because that would run into a large sum. If I understand the hon. member for Toronto Northwest rightly, there is the prospect of a great enterprise, running into millions, being established in Toronto. That is not a pure cold storage proposition. A cold storage warehouse, like an elevator, seldom can pay its way when it relies merely on the charges for storing produce. Whoever owns such a warehouse must be a large produce dealer, must trade in this produce and must obtain profits largely in that way. These things seldom take care of the cost of operation and of storing the produce when the crops come in.

I should like to assure hon. members opposite, and all hon. members in the House generally, that this vote will take care of all the projects now under way, and the first one is at North Sydney, in the province of the hon. member for Hants. It is a general cold storage for all kinds of commodities. Later on in the session it will be taken up and considered.

I may say, from a cursory examination of the Maritimes, which I had the honour of making two years ago, one of the first impressions I got was that the plan for the development of the fishing industry at Halifax was lamentably short in cold storage facilities. Furthermore, if the trade with the West Indies develops as we expect it will under the new treaty, we will require more accommodation for perishable goods arriving at Halifax dock from the West Indies, in order that they may be taken care of, until distribution is made by the various railways and through other avenues. Therefore, I feel somewhat sympathetic with the Halifax project. But this was never intended to include port cold storage. It is too large a proposition to be included in this vote.

Mr. MILLAR: After trying to hear what is going on in the House, I have been wondering if there is any good reason why the business of this Dominion should be carried on in such a manner that one part of the House is not able to follow the discussion intelligently.

Mr. SHORT: I was asking the minister a few minutes ago where the cold storage plants in Nova Scotia were situated. He stated one was St. Leonard Fisheries Limited at Port Hawkesbury and that $60,000 was appropriated for that. That is purely a fish cold storage plant. I do not object to the vote, but why does it come under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Fish is one of the natural resources of the country. These things interlock sometimes. Does my hon. friend want to put in a claim to have it refunded?

Mr. SHORT: No, but why should fish come under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was before my time and I had nothing to do with it. I have not the year in which it was initiated, but I happen to know that fisheries are included in this vote because I know in other parts of Canada agriculture was interpreted to apply to fisheries as well as to agriculture, not of course to apply exclusively to fish because it is not advisable to have perishable commodities like dairy produce in the same warehouse as fish. We try to avoid that but the old interpretation in regard to agriculture included fish. Those who come from the Pacific coast and are familiar with conditions at Prince Rupert will know that a considerable sum was given in years past to a fish cold storage plant at that point. My deputy informs me that the plant was intended to be for everything, but as a matter of fact it has developed largely in connection with the cold storage of fish.

Mr. SHORT: Are we to understand that all cold storage plants in Canada are under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. SHORT: Then why is this plant at Port Hawkesbury, where no agricultural products are stored, under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is away back in days gone by. It is hard to learn how we got into it. I have pointed out that port plants, such as the one at Montreal, are not under our department but under harbour boards. That is the exception.

Mr. FOSTER: Are all these plants in Nova Scotia used chiefly for fish cold storage or are some of them used for agricultural purposes?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The one at North Sydney, for instance, is used for agricultural purposes and fish as well, but we have to take special precautions in connection with insulating the plant and dividing it off into rooms to ensure that no offensive odours from the fish contaminate other commodities that are stored there.

Mr. HANSON: Of course the minister does not contend that the cold storage plant at North Sydney is in aid of agriculture. If he does, he had better revise his ideas regarding that part of the country. Is the cold storage proposition at Montreal assisted out of this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. HANSON: Is that done through the harbour commission?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, entirely.

Mr. HANSON: Does the government or any department of the government obtain a report from the harbour commission as to the business done in its cold storage branch? Is the minister able to tell us whether that is a money making proposition or not?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would imagine there would be a report each year to the Department of Marine and Fisheries under which I understand it comes. Our officers are almost constantly employed in the plant grading butter and cheese; we are fairly familiar with the kind of service that is given and it is satisfactory.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Are butter and cheese products of the sea, as the cold storage plant at Montreal appears to be under the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not understand the point.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What action, if any, has the minister taken to improve cold storage facilities in connection with fruit products going from Grimsby district to the west and from western Ontario by boat to the west? I would also ask, what has been done in the direction of improving transportation on cars and boats taking our perishable products to the market on the other side of the Atlantic?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The next vote is exclusively for fruit and it would be better not to mix the two. With regard to Grimsby they have been extending cold storage facilities there from time to time under the assistance that we have been able to give. The concern is a co-operative one with Colonel Roberts as president. They have also an artificial ice-manufacturing plant, through the medium of which they provide icing facilities for all shipments of fruit marketed there and sent out west in the beginning of the season. The plant is doing exceedingly good work. Just how it has been panning out financially of recent years I am not aware, but as in all new institutions the overhead was a little out of proportion to the turnover during the first year or two. I understand that in recent years a tremendous quantity of early fruits particularly and perishable fruits get not only cold storage at Grimsby, but pre-cooling and icing on both railways for the western trade.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Will the minister be willing to assist the cold storage transportation of the products of western Ontario? I come from a district which ships enormous quantities of fruit by boat. What assistance, if any, would the minister be prepared to give in that direction?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have no provision for that. I often was surprised that the fruit men of the Niagara peninsula did not take more advantage of this provision for cold storage facilities. On more occasions than one I have had opportunities of talking to them and also to fruit men in the Kelowna valley. On my first visit to Kelowna I saw a number of exceedingly fine fruit packing plants, not one of which had a single cubic foot of cold storage space. I pointed out to them that they were missing a lot in not prolonging their marketing season through lack of pre-cooling or cold storage facilities. The same may be said with regard to the Niagara peninsula; outside of Grimsby nothing has been done by the fruit growers to provide such facilities. Probably it is a difficult thing to finance; at any rate, it has proved so in the past. The Grimsby plant is giving exceedingly good service.

[Mr. J. E. Armstrong.]

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I am asking more particularly with regard to transportation by boat, for instance, from Sarnia to Port Arthur and Fort William. Would that come under legislation such as the minister refers to?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we have never had any call for it. I do not know whether there are any cold storage facilities on the boat my hon. friend refers to, but if the owners are undertaking to carry perishable commodities they would no doubt provide proper facilities.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): The minister has no doubt had requests with regard to the overseas carriage of perishable products. What improvements has he made in that direction during the last few years?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee will recall that the only attempt made was under the provisions of the Petersen contract, which would have provided 60,000 cubic feet on each boat. My hon. friend knows what happened to that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What happened?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well—

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I do not think the minister fully appreciates my request. At one time, as I understand, we did assist in the transportation of perishable products on vessels plying between Canada and the Motherland; we had thermograph records and other information carefully compiled. What improvements have been made along those lines?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think assistance in keeping track of temperature and in cargo inspection is given on both sides, but no assistance was ever given to provide cold storage facilities.

Mr. MORAND: Is a cold storage warehouse being built at Kingsville or Leamington?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That will come under the fruit item.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. TOLMIE: What are the cold storage facilities for fruit alone in British Columbia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We assisted Kelowna to the extent of $20,000. They have a very urgent application in for another $20,000 that they claim would double their accommodation. That is under consideration for another occasion. At Salmon Arm we have assisted to the extent of $10,000, and we have also helped two smaller plants near Chilliwack.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are there no plants at Vernon?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a good plant at Vernon, but there is no installation yet.

Mr. TOLMIE: What progress has been made with your experiments in regard to cold storage shipment of fruit in cars?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That comes under the fruit vote. I understand from my deputy that we are experimenting with different kinds of cars.

Mr. SMITH: I understood the minister to say that no portion of this $30,000 would apply to the proposed cold storage plants at Halifax. If that is so, will any government assistance be rendered to this plant under a supplementary or other vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Nothing will come from this vote, for obviously it is too small for the purpose. I would not be a bit surprised if this should be one of the subjects to be discussed before the royal commission which has just been appointed. I expect my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Smith) heard me intimate that if the fish exports to the West Indies and the return traffic to our Atlantic ports develop as we hope they will, we will certainly require some cold storage accommodation at Halifax. It should be under the harbour board, but I understand that the Halifax harbour port is not administered in the same way as the ports of Vancouver, Quebec and Montreal.

Mr. HANSON: The minister has made some reference to the proposed royal commission on maritime rights. Does not he honestly think that this is the proper place to discuss that sort of thing, and that the members here who have first-hand information are in a better position to bring to the attention of himself and the other members of the government the needs of the various parts of the Maritime provinces? That is the feeling on this side of the House, as has been shown on more than one occasion. There is need of cold storage in a terminal city such as Halifax. It certainly does not require a commissioner from the old country or an economist from McGill University to tell us whether we want such a facility in Halifax or not. All of which shows how futile is this proposed Maritime rights commission.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Smith) asked me a question about it. I would be prepared, Mr. Chairman, to swap off the elevator there for a good cold storage plant.

Mr. HANSON: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You could not very well convert the one into the other now, but no doubt both will be required.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Has the minister no influence whatever with the government?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister does not undertake to run all the departments. He does well if he manages his own.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister, replying to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), indicated that the only attempt the government had made to have cold storage in connection with vessels was in the Petersen contract, and that failed. We heard a few months ago that that contract was to be revived, or at least that something of the kind would be provided. We were going to have a renewal of the war against monopoly by land and sea, and we had only an armistice caused by the unfortunate—I emphasize the word "unfortunate"—death of Sir William Petersen. Will the minister now give us warning when we may expect the second Petersen contract?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The transportation problem is still unsolved, both on sea and in the matter of cold and other storage. It is generally felt, however, that the programme is an extensive one which will require considerable time to complete; and rather than introduce at this late stage something that might prove controversial, it was thought that we might leave the question for solution until a subsequent session. We cannot expect to remedy all the evils of the earth at this particular session. I think my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) will agree with me that we are doing pretty well, and that the matter might stand in the meantime. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) is very much interested in this subject, especially as regards the cattle rate question. So am I; indeed we are all interested in the matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Shall we have another Petersen contract next session?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know that we shall ever have another Petersen contract; we may possibly have learned something in the meantime. But what the Petersen contract aimed at doing may be accomplished in some other way, equally effective, and I trust not quite so controversial. And when such an arrangement comes up for consideration I sincerely hope that we shall be able to elicit the assistance of my right hon. friend and those behind him, from whom, let me say, we received not a vestige of help on the former occasion.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): You got our assistance in getting rid of it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend surely does not assume responsibility for getting rid of Sir William?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Not at all; only for disposing of the arrangement which the government made with him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I beg your pardon.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Don't mention it.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Providing we develop a great trade with the West Indies as we hope, or at least as the government hopes, the minister is discussing the building of a cold storage plant at Halifax. I suggest that it would be wiser to construct a great heating plant there. How does the minister propose to protect vessels that come into Halifax with fruits of all kinds during winter? You cannot put them in cold storage in winter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is the hon. member referring to the famous pier which is almost impossible of access?

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I am in earnest. It will be necessary to make provision for a heating service as well as for cooling facilities at Halifax.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do you mean in regard to the shipping of apples and potatoes?

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): No, I mean for the reception of vessels coming in from the West Indies in winter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We thought of converting that pier into something of the kind into which the cars could be run and protected overnight.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I am emphasizing the necessity for a heating plant for receiving bananas, pineapples and other fruits coming into Halifax in winter from the West Indies. You have no heated dock anywhere in Canada.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that the idea has been abandoned, of providing heating accommodations for the cars after they are loaded. The railways supply heated cars and the difficulty of shipping perishable goods in winter has already been met, so that it is not necessary to provide heating accommodation at the ports.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): The minister does not get my point. You will have to provide space to take care of the vessels coming into the port of Halifax in winter. The railways will heat their cars but they will not put up a heated shed such as there ought to be at that port.

Mr. QUINN: The minister has referred to a pier at Halifax which cannot be got into. If that is the case, as he believes, why did he allow the government of which he was a minister to spend a million dollars in connection with the grain elevator in front of that pier?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know where—

Mr. QUINN: The minister should know; he is a member of the government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon friend prefer the old location?

Mr. QUINN: Very much.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that the hon. gentleman's party tore up the old facilities.

Mr. QUINN: Does that justify the minister's government in spending another million dollars there for facilities if the vessels cannot get into the pier?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Evidently we need a Maritime commission after all.

Item agreed to.

Fruit, including grant of $8,000 to the Canadian Horticultural Council, $200,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the value of the apples shipped from Canada to Australia in the past year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no idea. We are not shipping a great many.

Mr. TOLMIE: Do you ship to Australia at all?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think so.

Mr. TOLMIE: Why?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think our fruit is prohibited.

Mr. TOLMIE: On what ground?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because of the codling moth.

Mr. TOLMIE: I think the minister will find it is the fire blight.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Both, I think.

Mr. TOLMIE: Was any provision made for the shipment of Canadian apples to Australia when the treaty was being negotiated?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not there.

Mr. TOLMIE: I presume some other member of the government of which the minister formed a part was there. Was anything done?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister gets from under.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That Australian treaty has a habit of bobbing up every now and then.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Like the Petersen contract.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, we are not ashamed of either; but there is a time to discuss these things and a time to leave them alone, surely. I presume my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie) wants to know why some agreement was not reached to have the embargo lifted. I do not think that the Australian government would remove that embargo any more readily than we would under similar circumstances, if we thought that fruit coming in from outside would injuriously affect our own product. Apparently the Australians are convinced that our apples at present are a menace. Is my hon. friend suggesting that Australia, in taking this stand, is only putting up a bluff? The codling moth is a real menace to fruit, as is fire blight, and if they think that these diseases will endanger their own fruit I think it is their duty to close down on our export. At the same time it is our duty to get rid of the trouble as speedily as possible and so merit entry into the sister dominion.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is the minister sure that it is more than fire blight that they object to?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are objecting to both.

Mr. TOLMIE: What progress is being made in the export of Canadian fruit to Great Britain, and what have been the increases in the past year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There has been a marked improvement in quality in the shipments from British Columbia. That province has been foremost in the Dominion in taking advantage of the shipping point inspection service. As a matter of fact, it was they who initiated that service by volunteering to pay $5 a car if the government would provide the inspection and give a certificate covering the car. Their quality, as I say, has improved to a marked degree, but British Columbia is about the only part of Canada of which that can be said without qualification. We have no information as to the quantity shipped from British Columbia.

Mr. TOLMIE: I should like to know what has been the rate of increase from year to year in the shipments from Canada to the Old Land.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will take a note of that question.

Mr. TOLMIE: I notice that first Delicious apples grown in British Columbia are selling at seventy-five cents per dozen in Ottawa in the retail stores. What proportion of that amount, if any, goes to the producer?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I can imagine it would not be half, nor a quarter possibly. At a rough guess I would say about one-eighth.

Mr. TOLMIE: I do not want a guess; I can guess myself; I am from British Columbia. I wanted to know how the spread between what the British Columbia producer and the vendor in Ottawa receives for those apples was divided.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have been endeavouring to reduce that spread in every way possible by giving inspectional facilities, so that the goods could go forward with the government certificate as to quality, and we have also been encouraging dehydrating plants, pre-cooling plants, and so forth. One of the first activities we engaged in was trying to put the Okanagan fruit industry on a better footing, and it has responded splendidly, as is shown by the improved quality of their produce. I imagine there is a tremendous spread between what the British Columbia producer and the Ottawa vendor get, but my hon. friend would not expect me to be able to follow every step, or make me wholly responsible for that spread.

Mr. TOLMIE: What I wanted was general information of interest to the producer in British Columbia and to the consumer here. It has already been mentioned by an hon. member from Toronto that the poor man cannot buy apples at the present prices, and I wanted a little light on the subject. I would ask the minister to be good enough to have the experts of the Fruit branch bring us that information before the agricultural estimates are through.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right.

Mr. TOLMIE: I notice that the Washington Winesap grown in the Yakima valley, Washington, is now taking hold of the market, and selling at 60 cents a dozen for the best quality. Is there no variety of Canadian apple that could supply the wants of this market at the present time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That again, I presume, involves the question of the customs tariff. I would say there are lots of Canadian apples that could take its place, but there is nothing so extraordinary as the buying tastes of our own people. In British Columbia in the middle of the cherry season you will find Washington cherries on the British Columbia market. We have these apparent anomolies all over Canada. There are plenty of Canadian apples to take the place of the Winesap, but apparently it is being advertised, and people are in the habit of trying something new, and they buy it regardless of the country of origin.

While I am on my feet I might point out something that we have done to reduce the spread referred to by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie), and that is the recent prosecution of a selling agency for violating the Combines Act, which resulted in the infliction of $200,000 in fines on four different companies and four individuals, whose activities had resulted in increasing that spread between the British Columbia producer and the Ottawa consumer. I am hopeful that similar exactions will be reduced as a result of that penalty.

Mr. TOLMIE: Can we grow the Winesap in British Columbia to the same perfection that they can in the Yakima valley? The dry belt, east of the Cascade mountains extends south as far as Mexico, and throughout its length soil and climatic conditions are very similar. Is there no apple we can produce at that particular season of the year to compete with the Winesap grown in Washington state? Is the Winesap a success in British Columbia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand so.

Mr. MILLAR: Would the minister give a general explanation how this $200,000 is expended? Is any part of it expended for experimental work, or is that provided for elsewhere?

[Mr Tomlie.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The experimental work, especially with regard to diseases, is conducted by the Fruit branch of the experimental farms. This vote is not for that class of work, but largely for inspectional service.

Mr. HANSON: The minister explained a few moments ago what his department was doing to extend the market for Canadian fruit, and especially to put British Columbia apples on the map. I did not hear him say anything with respect to the cost of transportation. In my humble judgment, the one great reason for the spread that has been mentioned between what is paid the British Columbia producer and what the Ottawa consumer has to pay is the extremely high express rates. Let me illustrate: There is no better apple grown in Canada than the Ontario Northern Spy. For some years I have been in the habit of getting some from my friend the member for Durham, and let me tell the minister and the committee that the express rate on a box or barrel of apples from Durham county to Fredericton, New Brunswick, is exactly 100 per cent of the first cost. That is a condition that should not obtain, and if the minister wants to do something of real service both to the producer and the consumer of Canadian apples, let him get busy on these outrageous express rates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): What amount of this vote was expended last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Practically all of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): What portion of it is for salaries of officials, bonuses and travelling expenses?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The greater part of it is for inspection.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Would the minister also be good enough to give the number of inspectors?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is largely for inspectional service, but I have a page of details here that I can read for my hon. friend. I think I gave my hon. friend the information in a return, but I will give this too:

Inspection Service	Estimates 1926-27
Salaries 5 district inspectors..	$11,850
Salaries 17 permanent inspectors..	32,400
Salary 1 additional permanent inspector (Fruit and vegetables) promoted from seasonal, additional five months.
Salaries 45 seasonal inspectors (average 7 mos., plus statutory increases)..	43,200
Salaries 5 temporary inspectors (average 7 mos. at $125 each per month)..	3,750

To provide for recommended reclassification district inspectors..		150
Travelling expenses 73 inspectors..		46,900
5 district inspectors..	$ 9,600
17 permanent inspectors..	13,400
45 seasonal inspectors..	20,300
5 temporary inspectors..	3,300
1 additional permanent inspector..	300
	46,900
Salaries for stenographers, Middleton $320, Montreal $960, Toronto $780, Winnipeg $960, and Vancouver $810..		3,830

For rent of Halifax office..		270
For rent of office Winnipeg..		480
For rent of office Middleton $180, St. John $180..		360
		$143,190

There are two more pages containing very much the same information. Now, as to fruit packing, I will give my hon. friend the headings.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I asked for the totals not the details.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are these headings: Fruit transportation, fruit packing and orchard specialization, office expenses, grade and market reports, inspection of markets. As to the shipping point inspection service the explanation would be of interest to the committee. This service, as I indicated, was first taken advantage of by British Columbia. It is now being taken advantage of in the Niagara peninsula, and I would be delighted to see the Maritime provinces, especially the Annapolis valley, follow suit. They need the service there. When the Fruit Marks Act was introduced many years ago, it was a great step forward, and it had the very beneficial effect of improving the quality of our export. But the time has come when we must no longer rely simply on inspection by the owner or packer of the fruit. I believe the time has come when we should have compulsory inspection of all exports of fruit to any market outside of Canada, especially of apples, just the same as we do in the case of butter and cheese.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Why not in Canada also?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that in the case of a great deal of shipping point inspected apples the fruit in consumed in Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I think, Mr. Chairman, one reason why so many British Columbia or Washington apples come into this market is the lack of inspection of the fruits used by our own people.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are getting there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Probably that accounts for the quality of the apples which are served for dessert in this city, particularly in this building. I think it is most remarkable, bearing in mind that Ottawa is the headquarters of the inspection service and the centre of government that you cannot obtain what one might term decent, or at least third-rate quality of fruit in a building such as we have here. The same might be said with regard to cheese. The minister's statement that great care is exercised in inspecting everything for export but not commodities for home consumption possibly is the explanation. Grading certainly should be applied to articles intended for home consumption as well as articles intended for exportation abroad, because there is no question but that a great deal of very inferior stuff is palmed off on the people of this country, and instead of the consumption of our own fruits and other food products being encouraged the very reverse happens. Consequently our people are to-day buying fruits imported from foreign countries, whereas they might very well be consuming Canadian fruits if they could get that quality which is insured by inspection in the case of fruit shipped abroad.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend may have misunderstood me. Those who apply for shipping-point inspection sell their fruit wherever they like. Of course if that fruit is sold at home they get the benefit; if it is sold abroad they enjoy a still greater benefit. In my estimation apples for export should be compulsorily graded the same as is done in the case of butter and cheese.

Mr. MILLAR: How many inspectors are located in Saskatchewan and when do they carry out their inspection? Do they inspect fruit so far as they possibly can, or only when called upon to do so?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The principal duty of the inspectors on the prairies is to see that people get the goods they pay for. When a consignment of fruit is sent from British Columbia, we will say, under our shipping-point inspection system it is graded so-and-so. The vendor sends the shipping bill, with the necessary documents attached, and if the purchaser on the prairie is not satisfied with the goods he purchased he calls in the inspector.

Mr. MILLAR: The inspector only inspects when there is a complaint?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. Do I understand that my hon. friend asked for a list of the inspectors, or did he simply require an explanation of their duties?

Mr. MILLAR: The number of inspectors in the prairie provinces, or in Saskatchewan alone, would be satisfactory.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: These are the inspectors: Regina, Mr. R. P. Andrews; Saskatoon, Mr. F. Metcalf; Edmonton, Mr. Goodale; Winnipeg, Messrs. Steele, C. Brooks and Fred Gow; Calgary, W. B. Gornall.

Mr. GEARY: I might ask the minister a question about apples. I suppose there is nobody in the House who knows less about apples than I do. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) has spoken of the Winesap, and the minister I understand says that that apple is produced in just as good quality in British Columbia as it is in the state of Washington, and then in Ottawa we have the Washington product occupying the market. It has occurred to me that there is a good deal of food for thought in the situation. Whether it is the lack of proper marketing, or proper packing, or high freight rates, there is something which permits the Washington product, which is carried no farther than the British Columbia product, to pay duty and come in here and usurp the market. I ask the minister if it is not a matter which should interest him and his department.

Mr. STIRLING: May I point out that it is chiefly a question of quantity. The Winesap apple is one which has been grown for some years in the valleys in British Columbia but not in any great quantity. It is becoming more and more popular, and in those parts of the Okanagan valley and neighbouring valleys where it is grown—that is to say suitably—it is coming forward in popularity but at the present time the quantity is not enough to supply the demands of the market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think we should do anything to discourage interprovincial trade. If there is a better apple grown elsewhere than is produced in Ontario and the people find it out they will send for it.

Mr. GEARY: I do not blame the minister for not wanting to answer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I presume it is the tariff question again. It is something which applies to eggs and many other commodities.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps the minister will take into consideration the spread between the price the producer receives and the price which the consumer in Ottawa pays.

Mr. TOLMIE: The minister having slipped through the tariff hole again I should like to know if there is any other apple produced in Canada that would take the place of this Washington Winesap at this particular period?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Northern Spy.

Mr. TOLMIE: And the Delicious of British Columbia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. TOLMIE: No others?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am getting very delightful apples every morning for my breakfast. I do not know exactly where they come from, but I understand they are Canadian apples.

Mr. TOLMIE: If they are very good apples, I have a strong suspicion as to the point of origin. What are the total exports of fruit from Canada to the United States and the total imports in value from that country to Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand we have no figures on the exports. We will get that.

Mr. TOLMIE: Would the minister get those figures before the agricultural estimates are all passed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. TOLMIE: We are trying to develop this great market in Great Britain for all our agricultural products. In what way does the Britisher like to receive his apples from Canada, in the box or in the barrel?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The modern way is in boxes, and it is becoming more popular all the time. The barrels come largely from the Maritimes. They still stick to the barrel down there, and they are not doing good packing, with the result that the boxed apples of British Columbia and elsewhere are becoming more and more popular, largely because of the quality of the fruit, but partly because the public like that kind of package. It is handier; they have to struggle and fight with a barrel too much. If you have ever taken a barrel of apples into your basement you know how awkward it is, and you know how easily a box is handled. I expect the barrel will go off the market.

Mr. SHORT: Is the department doing anything to try to educate the people to adopt the box instead of the barrel and to convince them that they could get more money for their product in that way? Does the minister not think it is the function of his department to try to educate the fruit raiser to raise the class of fruit that will sell best? If the Winesap can be raised in British Columbia, can it not be raised in Nova Scotia? If not, could they not raise one equally as good? Is it not up to the Agriculture department to try to educate the fruit grower to raise the fruit that will sell the best and obtain the best price? Is the minister doing anything in that line?

Mr MOTHERWELL: It is a somewhat delicate matter to undertake to educate the people. An hon. member from New Brunswick told me a moment ago that the Maritime people knew what they wanted and did not require a commission. We have some fifteen inspectors in the Annapolis valley; part of their work is to educate the people, and I think we are getting some results. In regard to the question of inspection particularly they seem to be managing their own affairs. Although the early grading was taken advantage of twenty years ago by the people of the Annapolis valley, they are most reluctant in the Maritimes to take advantage of shipping point inspection. I like my hon. friend's suggestion, but you have to go somewhat gently with the Maritime people when you have education in your mind. They will simply tell you that they know more about it than you do, and possibly they may be right. Not only in regard to their apples, but in regard to their vegetables and potatoes they do not seem to adopt the right method. They are losing their market for potatoes every year because of the bad packing and grading; they put goods on the market that are a discredit to them, although they have better goods if they will handle them judiciously. We have had barrels of those potatoes sent up here for personal inspection, so that we know exactly how they are getting along. When these barrels are handled roughly the potatoes are sent forward in bad condition, but if they were well handled and properly graded that could be avoided.

Mr. FOSTER: I do not want the impression to go abroad that it is difficult to educate the Maritime provinces, because I have brought to the attention of the House the fact that in no place in the United States or in Canada are more universities supported than in the Maritime provinces. Is anything being done on the experimental farms in the Maritime provinces to produce an apple which would take the place in the markets of Canada of just such fruit as we are discussing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I had no idea of referring to the university type of education. I do not pretend to be an authority on that point, but our farm at Kentville is devoted almost exclusively to apple development. It was located in the Annapolis district, to pay particular attention to the new varieties of apples that would be adaptable to that particular valley.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Is the inspection of apples for export compulsory?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The grading?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You mean the present inspection?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): And grading for export.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Does the same apply to apples used for home consumption?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): A great deal of improvement in the inspection is required. The money spent is wasted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend was listening to what I was endeavouring to say, this is the old method, adopted first—

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Well, get a new method.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The new method is here.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Do not spend so much money.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It consists of inspection at the shipping point, at the request of the shipper, for which he pays $5 a car. The next step will be the compulsory grading of fruit for export. That is the procedure we took in regard to dairy products and many other products, and we hope to take the same procedure with reference to fruit. You have to get the people familiarized with these changes; they will not adopt them all at once. You cannot change the methods which have been in use by people for fifty years. You must do it gradually.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): You are starting at the wrong end. We had better inspect the products for home use. The present method shows the reason why hon. members cannot get good cheese in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I hope my hon. friend holds the same views with regard to the grading of eggs.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Does the minister refer to the Chinese variety?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are all out now.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How many inspectors are there in Ontario, and what are they paid in the way of expenses and salaries?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are twenty-six inspectors for the whole of Ontario, most of them, I understand, west of Toronto. The average salary is $1,600.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): With an average of about $1,000 for expenses.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very often the expenses come to more than the salary in giving an inspection service. We have in our employ officers whose expenses come to more than their salaries.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think the minister contradicted himself. In answer to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) he said that inspection was compulsory. A few minutes afterwards he said that it was optional or done on request.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would seem to be contradictory. Grading by the packer, as he himself puts up his apples in the box or barrel or whatever it is, is compulsory and has been for many years, but my hon. friend will realize that it is not a very good method. That is the method that has been practised for the last twenty years and while it is better than no method at all, inasmuch as the owner is partial to his own product, he is apt to overgrade it. We have adopted a new plan of giving governmental shipping-point inspection on application by the shipper. That is optional. It started in British Columbia and it has extended to the Niagara peninsula. It has not yet extended to the Maritime provinces as they have not asked for it. Very soon it should be made compulsory as the other method is not satisfactory.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not compulsory for export trade?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. Very general use is being made of it in British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER: I am delighted to find that the minister is paying some attention to inspection. Does he not think an inspector of apples, once he has demonstrated over a period of years his usefulness in the field of inspection, ought to be left there from year to year provided that nothing happens in his career that is in violation of the law, or does he think he should be removed simply because in the performance of his duty he finds it necessary to take somebody into court and have a fine imposed upon him? If we are going to have inspectors removed from year to year for political reasons, or if because he brings into court somebody who has been favourable to the government in power, a political supporter or something of that sort, the inspector's scalp must be had forthwith and somebody else put in his place, I am sure the minister will agree that his inspection, however much he may desire it to be effective, will suffer very materially. I am asking if the minister does not concur in the general view that an inspector ought to remain if he has demonstrated his usefulness in that field.

Apropos of that I have in my hand the Auditor General's report for 1921, which is the last year the old government was in power, and I notice the names of a number of men whom I knew personally as being very effective in the matter of inspection of fruit in the Maritime provinces. I find that shortly after this government came into power those men were removed from their positions as inspectors and new men put into their place who had practically no knowledge of the act and certainly no qualifications that were superior to those of the men whom they superseded except that they were supporters of the incoming government. In connection with the inspection of fruit inspectors are placed in a district remaining there for a number of years and learning the routine. I may tell the minister that these men were appointed in the years preceding 1921—not from a political standpoint, because we wished to have on the force men of both shades of politics. It was our view to get men who were familiar with the fruit industry and who had some common sense in the administration of the act and the regulations of the department. Those are exceedingly important qualifications, and we had men of that character, some of them returned soldiers. Some of these men have been let out of their positions and others brought in who certainly, so far as I am aware, have no greater qualifications in the matter of the inspection of fruit. I draw this to the attention of the minister because he should have an eye single to the proper inspection of fruit. Fruit growing is an important industry in the province from which I come; on an average more than 1,500,000 barrels go to the Old Country annually from that part of the country. Whether or not the minister applies this terminal inspection he speaks about to the Maritimes later on is a subject for consideration and study; but while he is utilizing the system that he has now I feel sure that he ought to welcome some suggestions before changes are being made in the officers who are to be employed for that purpose.

Is it the policy of the Department of Agriculture to grant special brands to certain apple growers in the Maritime provinces or any other part of Canada, and can the minister tell us to whom these special brands have been given?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In any grading system we permit those who have built up a trade under a certain brand to use their brand, but they must put the government grade on the container, whatever it may be.

With regard to allocation of inspectors, when I took charge of this branch I found out that these inspectors were religiously allocated to the actual constituencies in Nova Scotia, each constituency's boundary being as religiously observed as if it were a provincial boundary. What had been in the past had to continue to be. An estimate was made of the total number of barrels of production in each county and on that basis inspectors were appointed. For instance Lunenburg got one inspector, Digby-Annapolis got four or five. Kings, which was separate then, got the most, because I think it was the largest producer. Hants got fewer, because its production was smaller. We observed that with religious regard, because we felt it was the practice. My recollection is that over all the constituencies there was an average reduction of two men. That is, a constituency that had seven in the old days would have the number reduced to five, and the numbers in the other constituencies would be reduced proportionately.

As regards moving the inspectors, there are always, of course, some chief inspectors whose duty it is to go about in an inspectional and educational way to see that the other inspectors are performing their duties properly. But my hon. friend knows that these inspectors, like all the others, are appointed by the Civil Service Commission, and the commission also classifies them and sets their salaries. If my hon. friend will let me know how to get past the commission I shall be obliged, because sometimes I should like to have another way of making the appointments; but we have to regard the law. I believe the commission is doing its duty under the Civil Service Act, and if anyone has any complaint it must be against the act itself. We can and did make reductions in the number of inspectors in each of these ridings three or four years ago, but any new appointments were made by the commission. If some of these new appointees happen to be Liberals they never so reported to me; on the contrary, we have been constantly told that there are too many Tories in the service.

Mr. FOSTER: I can tell the minister that he has been misinformed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am delighted to find that it is not true.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, the minister referred just now to the fact that optional inspection at point of shipment has made considerable strides in British Columbia. I should like him to emphasize, if he will, that the cost falls on the grower. I think I am right in saying that the government is entirely recouped for the cost of inspection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right, $5 a car.

Mr. STIRLING: I think his deputy will be ready to admit that the result to the public in the more perfect grading of the British Columbia fruit is extremely satisfactory—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. STIRLING: —and that it is living up to the grade more truly year by year. The member for York-Sunbury a short time ago referred to the cost of shipping by express. That is a very sore point with the fruit shippers of British Columbia. The Board of Railway Commissioners held an inquiry two or three years ago, and we are still without their finding. I know the minister cannot answer for the doings of the railway commission, but could he assure us that his department has taken or will take steps to ascertain what is holding up the board's decision and when we are likely to receive it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that our officers have been working on the freight and express rates for some time, and that we are supporting by every effort at our disposal the wishes and the interests of the fruit growers in British Columbia. There is no question that both freight rates and express rates are very urgent matters with the British Columbia growers. I do not know whether or not my hon. friend was in his seat when I gave all credit to British Columbia for taking the initiative in shipping point inspection. I hope all the rest of Canada will follow suit. My hon. friend probably noticed my reply to a series of questions put by another hon. member, that it is the policy of the government, as soon as any grading service is recognized to be of sufficient value to those getting the service, to make a charge for it. That is the general practice in Australia and New Zealand and it is very satisfactory. We find the growers in British Columbia are voluntarily coming forward and asking for this service. It is high time that it was applied to other fruits.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): How many inspectors are there in Nova Scotia, and what salaries do they receive?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I gave this information before, but possibly my hon. friend was not in his seat. There are fifteen inspectors, including the chief district inspector, Mr. Vroom. And by the way, for the benefit of the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Foster), here is one man who has been in that position as long as I can recall. I wish we had had the appointment of him, as my hon. friend intimates. The chief inspector gets $2,400, and the salaries of the other inspectors range from $1,600 to $1,980, depending upon their salary range; they start low and go up year by year.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): What inspection do those inspectors attend to during June and July, for instance?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Three are yearly and the others are seasonal, extending over six or seven months, depending on whether the season opens early or late.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Those are paid only for the six or seven months they work?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The salaries run from $135 to $155 a month. They are all paid by the month. Three are on for the entire year, the others are engaged from six to seven months, depending on the season.

Mr. MILLAR: Is any record kept of the number of inspections made by each of the inspectors?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): What is the process of inspection at the point of shipment?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The people interested make application before the harvest, and we in turn make application to the Civil Service Commission so we will have the inspectors ready for the inspection of apples or whatever other fruit is being handled. Your fruit growers in the Annapolis valley would have to make known their wishes to the department well ahead of time.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): What is the process of inspecting a carload of apples at the point of shipment?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I saw some apples being inspected at Halifax. The inspector knocked off the top and then loosened the staves, sometimes removing a stave, and inspected the apples by a sectional view that he thus obtained of the entire barrel. If the mark placed on the barrel by the grower is not accurate, the inspector marks the grade correctly. At the first inspection he examines about one barrel in every ten to get an idea of the quality of the carload. If the inspection discloses a poor grade he will examine more barrels. I suppose if he finds the apples sufficiently below grade, he does not mark the barrel at all. It depends upon how badly the apples are packed.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): If that is the process, I am not surprised that our apples arrive in the British market in very, very bad condition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Maritime apples are good apples, but they are not handled as well as are the products of orchards in other parts of Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): By the inspectors?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I hope the inspectors there are just as good as they are in any other part of the country.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I endorse what my hon. friend from Lincoln has said. It is extremely difficult to obtain a barrel of No. 1 apples in Halifax at any time of year. I do not know what the reason is, whether the inspectors are at fault or not. All I know is that we have to buy foreign fruit for quality.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This department is not growing fruit.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understood the minister to say that the top of the barrel was taken off, that the hoops were removed or loosened, and a stave taken out. I am puzzled to know how you get the stave back.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If you spring the staves enough you can see into the barrel without taking it apart entirely. When you are opening a gate you do not need to push it the whole way. The staves of the barrel are loosened when some of the hoops are removed.

Mr. CANTLEY: But if you do not take out any of the staves how can you examine the fruit, as the minister said the inspector did?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From the bottom you can look into the barrel.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would it not be better to inspect the fruit at the place of packing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what is done now.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister said before that the inspection was done on the pier at Halifax before shipment. Which statement is correct.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The optional inspection is done at the point of shipment, but the compulsory inspection by the owner which has long been in force takes place at the orchard. And as we are all more or less partial to our own there is a temptation to grade the fruit too high.

Mr. CANTLEY: But the minister told us that there was no compulsory inspection at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I merely used the wrong word; instead of inspection I should have said grading. The compulsory grading is done now, as it has been done for twenty years, right at the orchard, and it has not proved satisfactory. We have taken a step forward now, following British Columbia. They asked for shipping point inspection by the government and offered to pay for the service.

Mr. FOSTER: The minister surely did not mean to say that in the process of inspecting a barrel of apples they would take a stave out, because that is an utter impossibility. They take the top hoops off and the head out and turn the barrel upside down, letting the fruit roll out, but it is impossible to take a stave out and put it back after they have inspected the contents.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Possibly I did not make myself heard. If you take some of the hoops off can you not spring the staves, and so see nearly to the bottom of the barrel?

Mr. FOSTER: I refer to this matter for the minister's own sake. If any of the people who know anything about apples should happen to read in Hansard what the minister has said, they would have a poorer opinion of this discussion than they would otherwise form. I merely want to save the minister embarrassment. However, the point I want to bring to the minister's attention is this: I asked him a moment ago a question to which he replied rather cursorily regarding the use of brands. There are certain growers who apply to some department or branch of the government in Ottawa and obtain the privilege of using a particular brand on their barrels. I have in mind the case of a grower who uses the Mayflower brand, and not only on barrels in which are packed apples grown in the grower's own orchard, but on barrels containing apples produced in other parts of the country that brand appears. The growers farm out the privilege of using that particular brand, allowing various producers throughout the country to make use of it at five, seven or ten cents per barrel. Why cannot each grower apply to the proper authorities in Ottawa for permission to use a brand of his own? If the grading 1, 2, 3, or (a), (b) and so on, whatever the nomenclature employed, is to be supplemented by a particular brand called the Mayflower or anything else you like, why should the privilege be restricted to one or two people who happen to be supporters of this administration and who farm the brand out at so much per barrel?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have already explained that when we introduced the grading system we allowed private growers who had built up a trade under a certain brand to continue the use of that brand, with which their customers had become familiar. And it would be a hardship to prevent them from so distinguishing their apples or other fruit. It does no one any harm and does them good. They may have the brand patented, but with that we have nothing to do. We merely give the grower permission to stamp the grade on the barrel. As to the barrel itself, the suggestion is made that it would do merely to take the top off. That is not sufficient, for it would reveal only the top layer. You must do more than that. I do not dispute my hon. friend's knowledge of barrels in general and their contents, but I persist that, if you take the hoops off, the staves will come out.

Mr. FOSTER: The minister does not appreciate the point I am making, and I shall have to be specific. A certain grower is using the Mayflower brand, and that brand appears on barrels in which are packed not only the apples grown in his own orchard, but apples produced by other growers in various places, the packing of which he does not see, and the inspection of which he knows nothing about. The use of that brand undoubtedly enhances the price of all such apples; otherwise these various growers would not pay for the privilege of using it. I want to know why the same privilege should not be extended to every grower in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The use of the brand is something over which we have no authority. We simply give permission to the growers to specify the grading provided under the act, and if they want to supplement that by the use of a particular brand they are at liberty to do so.

Mr. FOSTER: Does the department grant to some growers the privilege of using a brand, and withhold it from others?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; we would not do anything like that.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What are the names of the inspectors in the Niagara peninsula? While that information is being looked up I want to know what action has been taken in assisting fruit growers in that section of the country in the marketing of small fruits to distant points in summer. Growers in that part of the country have no refrigerator accommodation for the shipment of small fruit to Montreal or northern Ontario, so that they find it almost impossible to place their produce on those markets in good condition. They have not been able to get that accommodation from the railways.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Grimsby plant does a very extensive icing business, manufacturing their own ice for the preservation of perishable fruit. Possibly there is not sufficient ice available for the entire service, however. This is a matter that does not come under my department; it pertains to the railway service and might be taken up in the consideration of the express problem. The question might be looked into of providing adequate refrigerator service to meet the requirements of early harvest shipments when there is a rush. By putting it in storage at that Grimsby plant, the marketing season is strung out, and that glut of the market of which my hon. friend complains is avoided.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I was concerned more particularly with the fruit growers in my own constituency who are not near Grimsby, and who ship their small fruits to Toronto, Montreal and northern Ontario. They have no facilities whatever for chilling their fruit before it is shipped, and they have made application to the railways. I was wondering if the minister could not assist them in making some provision for refrigerator cars to take their fruit to the cities. They are not near Grimsby at all, and have no facilities for chilling.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a certain service being supplied to take the place of that. Tests are being continued in the value of using fans to accelerate circulation, in loaded refrigerators, of berries, an alternative to pre-cooling where facilities are not available. The results depend greatly on the shippers' readiness to adapt their deliveries and loading practices.

The blower ventilated express cars for fruit developed by the Canadian National Railways with our co-operation in 1924 were again in service in the past season with minor improvements. This is perhaps the greatest advance in equipment of recent years, affecting as it does a heavy volume in carlots over the Canadian National railway throughout Ontario as far east as Halifax and west to Port Arthur and Winnipeg. These cars were introduced into British Columbia also this past season, and proved popular with tender fruit shippers in the Fraser valley to Edmonton and beyond. An indirect benefit is that the Dominion Express Company are developinw a new car along the same lines for their blower ventilated services in the west.

Apparently the requirements of the trade have gone far beyond the icing facilities, and this method has been adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Has the minister any description of this car?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, and I have not seen it at work, but it is giving pretty satisfactory results, and they are continuing to use it.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I would like to have the names of the inspectors in that section of Wentworth and Halton between Hamilton and Toronto.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The three inspectors for that district are J. F. Carpenter, Fruitland, Ontario; J. E. Jarvis, Burlington, Ontario, and H. C. Sheppard, Queenston, Ontario.

Mr. MORAND: How much is being spent at Leamington for the establishment of this warehouse for the storage of onions? When was the warehouse started, or has it been started yet?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that $19,000 has been spent on it, but I have not the information with me as that comes under Public Works. I understand that a similar expenditure is being made at Erie. The warehouse at Leamington is now finished, but the season for using it is past, so far as this year is concerned, but it will be ready for use in the coming season.

Mr. MORAND: At whose request was it built?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At the request of the co-operative association—I forget its exact name—of the onion growers of that district. A deputation came here and interviewed us with regard to the building of an onion storage warehouse.

Mr. MORAND: When did it become necessary to have onion storage?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it has been necessary all along. The same thing has been adopted just recently in the United States, with very beneficial results. The onion is far more difficult to store and preserve than possibly any other vegetable. It has to be well dried and kept in a cool place, with the temperature as low as possible so long as it does not freeze. The onions have to be kept in crates or racks, where they will be cool and dry. In Massachusetts and other states where they grow onions they have established onion warehouses for taking care of the onions during the rush period, rather than putting the whole crop on the market at once.

Mr. MORAND: Will the growers of the onions be charged for storage of their onions?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would think so Perhaps there will be a small storage fee, as there is in connection with our grain storage elevators. That point has not been taken up with the growers' association yet, but that is the intention.

Mr. MORAND: What was the value of the onions we imported last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I cannot say what the importations were from all countries but we imported over 6,000 cases, or about four or five carloads, from Bermuda.

Mr. MORAND: That is in 1925?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MORAND: Have the imports been growing from year to year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Our imports from Bermuda have been falling as our own production has increased.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What success have the dehydrating plants had?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have a special vote for dehydrating, which we shall come to later. There was some criticism in some quarters of the House last year as to continuing that vote indefinitely, but now that a commercial plant has been started in the Annapolis valley this year, somewhere beyond Kentville, the vote is slightly reduced. The plant I understand is succeeding very well, particularly for the first year. There are also one or two smaller plants in the Okanagan valley. We are continuing the dehydrating experiments.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I take it that under this vote provision is made for the salaries of fruit inspectors. Would the minister tell us whether these inspectors have fixed localities within which they do their work, or do they travel from county to county, or from province to province?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The chief inspector travels from place to place supervising the work done by the other inspectors. He has his headquarters, and operates in the territory tributary to it. The other inspectors travel within their respective districts. In the Maritimes, as I mentioned a while ago, all but the chief inspector stay within the limits of their several districts. I do not think the inspectors are quite as strictly circumscribed in Ontario, because there the orchards are more scattered and consequently the activities of the inspector extend over a greater area. Speaking generally they work within a certain radius. The chief inspector, of course, travels about a great deal more.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How are these inspectors paid? Upon what basis is their remuneration fixed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Civil Service Commission sets the scale, which ranges from $135 to $150 a month. When they are employed by the year the salary is on a graduated scale, providing for a certain increase until they attain the maximum.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Does the Civil Service Commission fix the rate allowed for expenses also, or must the inspectors pay their own expenses?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Civil Service Commission, thank God, have only to do with the making of appointments and the classification, which involves, of course, the salary. They do not pretend to go so far as to fix the expenses.

Mr. NICHOLSON: My reason for asking the question is because I find that in very many cases the expense account of these fruit inspectors is practically equal to the salary which they receive.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know cases where the expenses are more.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is the point. If the inspector is appointed for a specific location and does not have to pay for a great deal of railway transportation, how is the expense account made up?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He can spend a great deal in motor car service.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, of course, we all can do that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We keep a pretty close check of their expenses.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Do they provide luncheons for people?

Mr. CANTLEY: I understood the minister to say that the forms of inspection were carried out religiously. Will he inform the committee who officiates on those occasions?

Mr. HARRIS: Will the minister be good enough to tell us what the functions of the Canadian Horticultural Council are? A grant to this body has been appearing in the estimates for several years. Will the minister also tell us something about the activities of the National Dairy Council? If the Chairman holds that I am wandering from the subject, let me remind him that an understanding was reached that we could discuss other items in connection with this particular vote.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Horticultural council is an organization consisting of provincial representatives whose duty it is to look after the interests of the fruit and vegetable growers of Canada. The names of those representatives are as follows:

President, E. B. Luke.
New Brunswick, W. W. Hubbard.
Nova Scotia, F. W. Bishop.
Quebec, J. H. Lavoie.
Ontario, Colonel Roberts, C. W. Baxter.
Manitoba, Professor Broderick.
Alberta, H. C. Stockton.
Saskatchewan, Dr. Patterson.
British Columbia, J. T. Mutrie, L. E. Taylor.
Secretary, Mr. Burrows.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

The organization makes representations when questions arise with respect to the interests of the fruit and vegetable growers on the British market. This sometimes happens. For instance it occurred in connection with the sittings of the Imperial Marketing Committee. On such occasions the organization make representations to the federal government, or whatever government may be concerned, on behalf of those whom they represent, whether it be touching freight rates, express rates, or marketing on the other side; or it may be questions affecting grading or inspection in this country. The council has adopted a system for registering new vegetables, or new plants or fruit, that may be developed by any specialist. This is the first time such a system has been adopted in this country, or for that matter on this continent. If we have a Burbank in Canada, and we have such an authority, his discoveries are recorded and registered just as carefully as the pedigrees of live stock. Take the case of the McIntosh apple, for example. That discovery was a great find not only for Ontario but for Canada as a whole. Such developments as that are registered by this organization. We have made a start in a very important work, the tendency of which is to encourage investigations in the field of scientific research in connection with new varieties of fruits and vegetables.

Mr. HARRIS: The minister spoke about the secretary of this organization. Where is his office?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In Ottawa. Mr. Burrows used to be a member of the Fruit branch but he resigned that office and now has charge of this work.

Mr. HARRIS: I wish to make one or two observations in connection with this vote. First of all I should like to allude to the many branches which are springing into existence in the Department of Agriculture. Any hon. gentleman who examines the estimates will find grants of various kinds for many different institutions. Now, I think the committee will support me in the statement that some of these merely serve the purpose of establishing some secretary in an office, either here in Ottawa or elsewhere, and about all he does is to draw his salary, draw his breath, and make sure that the government will place a sufficient amount in the estimates each year to maintain the organization alive. In the next place I wish the minister to give us some additional information in regard to the National Dairy Council. In that connection he will perhaps explain why the department have seen fit to raise the grant to this organization from $3,000 to $5,000. Who comprise the National Dairy Council; where do they get their funds, where is their office, if they have one; who is the secretary; why does his name not appear in the telephone directory of this city, seeing that he is supposed to be located in Ottawa; and what functions does the organization perform of such general advantage to Canada that the department thinks an increase of $2,000 is necessary?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee will recall that I gave a specific assurance to the hon. member for Victoria and the right hon. leader of the opposition that opportunity would be given to review the dairy vote fully in connection with the live stock vote. I do not think we should mix up other matters with the present vote.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): That was not the understanding. The understanding was that we could refer to this matter again on any particular vote that would come up.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right, but I wished the hon. member for Victoria to recall the understanding. It is quite possible that some hon. members are not present who wanted to hear the remainder of the discussion in question, and that they are under the impression it will take place in connection with the live stock vote.

With regard to the Horticultural council, if my hon. friend (Mr. Harris) will look up the estimates of three or four years ago, or any year prior to last year, he will find that a lot of these special votes were included under the heading "Miscellaneous" at the end of the estimates. I think last year was the first year in which it was incorporated in the general vote. Instead of there being more of this class of vote than there was three or four years ago, there is very much less. There was almost an interminable list of all kinds of grants and votes at the end of the estimates that went through in the early hours of the morning with no discussion at all. That was sometimes very convenient; perhaps it would be better if we had them there at present. Some of them are eliminated altogether, while others are included in the vote that was nearest to the objective of the special vote. For instance, the Dairy council vote was hooked up with the dairy vote. The Horticultural council vote was hooked up with the fruit vote, as being allied to it. Now, instead of being an extra expense, it can be seen that that expense is taken out of the general vote, and not added to it by a supplemental amount at the end of the estimates. It is more apt to cause some discussion where it is, and if that is desired then it is better where it is. If you want no discussion, put it back where it was; it will cost the country that much more, and it will not be noticed, because there is very seldom any discussion of it. Both these organizations are doing very useful work. It is not at all as if the purpose were to provide salaries for this man, that man or the other. Mr. Burrows could have remained where he was if he desired, but he preferred to go to the other organization, and they are laying a foundation for work of the nature I have described, which has never before been initiated, certainly not in Canada, and very seldom in the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister says that if you look back in the estimates you will find certain things; you will find that one vote takes in a whole lot of others. I have my hands on the estimates of 1924-25. I find that each individual item in the agricultural vote, beginning with the item No. 40 and running down to 54, is identically the same, and I cannot find the item he refers to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the fruit vote include the Horticultural council?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): No, the fruit vote is there.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Horticultural council vote is in the back of the estimates, under Miscellaneous.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): What page is that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not the page before me. I shall be glad to supply the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The vote for 1924-25 is $5,850,000, without the supplementaries he speaks of; so that the amount is there anyway. If there is anything extra the minister is not telling us exactly the truth.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend should not say that until he assures himself what the estimates are. I have not all the estimates before me, but I have a faint recollection—

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I have under my hand the estimates of 1924-25. The total amounts to $5,850,000 and the year before, $17,119,000, without the item to which the minister refers. Now he says if you add the other items you will have far more.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. member mean to say that a small item like that would determine the total?

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister told us a few minutes ago that all these items added together would amount to a considerable sum.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The fact that my hon. friend cannot find that item there is evidence that what I said is correct. Neither the Canadian Horticultural Council nor the National Dairy Council vote was hooked up with the main agricultural vote. Neither of these votes was included in the main estimates prior to last year. Look under Miscellaneous and see if it is not there. I do not carry these matters in my mind for years. I say those votes were there and I do not know how long they have been there. They were there long before I had anything to do with them, but I am not excusing myself on that account; I have been pleased to continue them. I think these organizations are doing good work.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I do not find them under Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, under Miscellaneous.

Mr. HARRIS: The vote for this Canadian Horticultural Council, true enough, is in the 1925-26 estimates under Agriculture, and the minister tells us it was not under that item in 1924-25, that it was under Miscellaneous. But we also note that the total vote asked for under the agricultural estimates for last year was increased by $18,000, the $8,000, I presume, being accounted for by the transfer of that estimate to general Agricultural vote. It was not absorbed, as the minister was wont to let this committee understand, by the general vote.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes.

Mr. HARRIS: Well, there is the record in the 1925-26 estimates.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What about the reduction this year of over $90,000?

Mr. HARRIS: There is an increase of $18,000 on that particular vote, and for the minister to tell the committee that he is absorbing all this grant in his general estimates, or the one that is next of kin to the grant, is all humbug.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know how these estimates were got up; I know we are absorbing these items and I know it is questionable whether we should absorb them It is just making the vote for horticulture and fruit that much less. We had our vote exclusive of these two items prior to last year; so that by eliminating a lot of the miscellaneous grants my hon. friend refers to and hooking them up with the main vote, we do economize to that extent—not in service, but in the amount of money expended under that vote.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like to make an observation with regard to the minister's economy. The vote in 1924-25 for this very item was $182,000, and for 1925-26 it was $200,000, an increase of $18,000. The vote we are asked to pass in this committee at this stage is also $200,000. If the minister could tell us how he is economizing by increasing this vote from $182,000 to $200,000, and also substantiate the statement he made a moment ago that his policy is to absorb as much as possible these grants in the general estimates, he will be doing a service to the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is absorbed.

Mr. TOLMIE: I understand that the manufacturers of grape wine receive a rebate on their importations of sugar from outside points when the sugar is used in the manufacture of wine. Out in British Columbia we have created a very important industry known as the loganberry industry. The longanberry grows very well in that country, yields heavily to the acre and is a good revenue producer to the farmer. In view of the fact that there is a large and developing market for wine made from loganberries we are shipping wine across the Pacific to China and Japan, where a taste is being created for it in addition to the good work it is doing in British Columbia and other parts of Canada, has the rebate which has been enjoyed by the grape wine producers been extended to the loganberry producers on these shipments?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure I do not know. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is not present. I will inquire.

Mr. TOLMIE: In regard to the marks that are placed on cars of fruit inspected for export, is any government mark placed on those particular shipments to indicate that they have passed inspection?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon friend mean on the car itself?

Mr. TOLMIE: No, on the packages.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will be marked on the shipping bill, and the cars themselves are sealed like most other cars. I understand there is a special stamp for the packages in addition to the mark on the shipping bill.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the legend?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is it the usual one used on bacon?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will not be "Canada approved" I suppose, but it will be much the same, indicative of government inspection.

Mr. TOLMIE: I would suggest to the minister—and I have recommended this on one or two previous occasions—that just as quickly as we can standardize these products of ours for export we should adopt a standard stamp for all of them, indicating their quality and that they are Canadian products.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the two recent conferences we have had regarding butter and cheese boxes it has been decided that the word "Canada" shall be conspiciously displayed on all containers.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister what grades of apples are most popular in the British market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Replying to a question put by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) before dinner, I am informed that the total export of apples has remained almost stationary at about two million barrels per annum. There was a five per cent decrease this year, due largely, I think, to the very early frost of last October that rendered a lot of Ontario apples useless for export. As to the most popular grade in the British market, as a rule the people in the Old Country prefer the high grade apples of British Columbia. But I do not want to be misunderstood with regard to Nova Scotia apples; if they were as well taken care of in the process of packing as those of British Columbia and received shipping point inspection, I think they would regain their past reputation. Unfortunately, there is a little carelessness in packing practised by some exporters with the hope of "getting away" with it. In fact, whether it be wheat, apples, or any other commodity, there is a disposition to try to get past the official grader with something that is not quite up to grade. Therefore, all grading has to be done very carefully. To the extent that exporters are careless in maintaining their grades they tend to destroy whatever reputation their commodity may have on the British market.

Mr. TOLMIE: Does the minister include boxes among the barrels he quoted?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, the total export is reduced to terms of barrels.

Mr. TOLMIE: I understand the minister to say that No. 1 apples are in greater demand than No. 2.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is my information.

Mr. TOLMIE: Do the higher priced No. 1 apples meet the demand of the poorer class of consumers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would not think so, for very frequently they buy the cheaper article. That is the reason why sometimes they prefer a mixed lot, for it enables the parents of large families to distribute a small apple to each child.

Mr. TOLMIE: I understand that in Scotch families, which are usually large, they prefer the No. 2 grade because the smaller size gives them a greater number of apples, which enables the parents to distribute an apple apiece among their children. What measures are being taken by the government to advertise our agricultural products in reat Britain? With the high tariff in the United States, the Old Country affords us our principal opportunity to sell our surplus, and I think it is very necessary to bring to the attention of the British people the fine quality of our bacon, ham, fruit, dairy products, and so forth, the better to enable us to compete with our sister dominions and with Denmark, Holland and other countries. What is being done in this direction, or is it left entirely to private enterprise?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have various ways of advertising our products. The Canadian Fruit Show that has been held in England annually for the last four years has helped to advertise our apples, and we advertise in two or three British publications. But I think we got the best advertising results with the least expenditure of money at a dinner in the Hotel Cecil, held under the auspices of our agricultural representative in Great Britain. All the courses consisted of Canadian-grown products, and as the two or three hundred guests were leaving—

Mr. DUNNING: What about the wine?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I remember rightly it was Ontario wine, but I do not know whether that would satisfy the British taste. Anyway, they smoked our Canadian cigars. As the guests were leaving, each was given a hamper with samples of all those Canadian-grown products. These hampers they took home to their wives, sisters or sweethearts, as the case might be, and the advertising effect was excellent. As a matter of fact we got a number of unsolicited compliments on its effectiveness. During the Wembley exhibition we had our products placed on the menu cards of the restaurants within the exhibition grounds, and of those throughout London operated by the Lyons Company.

Mr. McGIBBON: What brands of liquid refreshments did they dispense?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It has been suggested that the native wines of Ontario were given the place of honour.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad to hear that the minister has adopted this method of bringing our Canadian products before the people of Great Britain. He has said something about sweethearts. I do not know of any better way of winning sweethearts in England than by tempting them with a few Okanagan apples. What periodicals or newspapers does the department advertise in, and to what extent?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have some small advertisements in Canada, The Canadian Export Pioneer, and we also advertise in the Canadian Gazette. Of course, advertising in newspapers cannot compare with the advertising that our producers get by delivering the goods, and in any case it is rather an expensive business carrying advertisements on any large scale in magazines and periodicals. Our cheese was exceedingly well advertised at Wembley through the menu cards of the restaurants, and especially through the Lyons Company, for almost a year. Its reputation has been so enhanced as to be almost at its pre-war eminence.

Mr. TOLMIE: Now that the Wembley exhibition is over, does the department intend to exhibit at the Royal Show in Great Britain?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That, I understand, is a perambulating affair.

Mr. DUNNING: The show is held in a different place each year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: While it is important that we should be advertised at these fairs, we must at the same time be governed by the amount of money at our disposal. We exhibit at the London dairy show, which embraces not only dairy products proper but bacon, eggs and so on.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad that the minister intends to continue advertising in this way. There is this point to be emphasized however: if we are going to exhibit our products in Great Britain we should see to it that they are equal to or, preferably, better than those shown by the other dominions. On one occasion when I was in the Old Country I noticed at the Royal Show that while Canada's exhibit did not convey anything like an adequate idea of what this country could produce, South Africa had a wonderful display which attracted considerable attention and which was crowded all the time. Such an exhibit as ours in competition with the magnificent exhibits of South Africa and Australia can only do us harm rather than good. If we are going to exhibit at all we should do it fairly well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right. Our Toronto packers, I am pleased to say, for the last two years in succession have taken the highest award in bacon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): I understand that year before last representations were made to the minister regarding the necessity for standardizing turnips. This is an important product in my section. I believe that a number of inspections were made with the idea of arriving at some standard rules to govern the grading of this vegetable. Has anything been done in that direction?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no recollection of the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Perhaps the minister will recall it if I read a brief paragraph from his report ending March 31, 1925:

A service along the above lines, but for educational purposes, by our regular staff, was provided as an experiment on request of the Ontario Turnip Shippers' Association to cover some forty-two loading stations in western Ontario. Five inspectors were detailed for this work making inspections of some 460 cars. The inspections were made on the basis of tentative grades, approved by the Ontario Turnip Growers' Association and the department, and may provide a basis for recommending legislation in the near future as the industry feels the necessity for standardization in order to compete successfully with graded stock, particularly on the United States market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember now. It was not an official grading, the arrangement having been made between the vegetable growers themselves. There is no official grading of turnips, but it frequently happens that a practice initiated by producers themselves in a small way like this leads up to official action. The same process is taking place in connection with the exporting of honey. No recognized grades of honey have been established, but the beekeepers have decided upon certain grades of their own and the system is assuming such importance as will probably warrant our taking cognizance of it and providing for a grade under which this commodity may be placed on a foreign market.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Oxford): Nothing has been done yet?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. STIRLING: What progress has been made by the British Economic Committee in the matter of fruit?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A voluminous report has been submitted on the subject. Mr. Forsythe Smith, with the assistance of one or two others, has prepared some 200 odd pages which he expects to have ready for the public at any moment. We have some confidential advance information with reference to the subject but I think that possibly it would be better not to give it at present.

Mr. STIRLING: Does the minister understand that the British government has made no progress in relation to the grant which was supposed to be given towards marketing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Incidentally I may say, from a cablegram I have seen, that the personnel of the committee has been increased by one. The amount voted for this year is £500,000 which will be increased subsequently to one million.

Mr. STIRLING: That is not for fruit only.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is intended to include dairy products. We shall have a representative over there assisting Mr. Forsythe Smith and working in conjunction with the others as Mr. McOuat did in connection with the meat report.

Mr. CHURCH: I have read a good deal of the debates that have taken place on this item in the past three or four years and I have come to the conclusion that the minister has lost track of the main thing in giving the fruit growers adequate protection. Representing a constituency in the Toronto district which is near the Niagara peninsula, I have been amazed to see how little has been done to safeguard the fruit industry and to stimulate the production of our own fruits and vegetables. I do not know of any country in the world where Providence has done so much and man so little to develop this industry. Our lack of a national policy herein is deplorable. What does the minister propose to do to protect this industry? Nothing. A return that was brought down last year, and which will be found in Hansard, shows the tremendous amount of fruit and vegetables that is imported into this country and the extent to which there is dumping of American fruits. The amount is perfectly staggering; it has ruined our own fruit farms. This industry up to a few years ago used to provide work for a good many people in this country; it used to be one of our basic agricultural industries in Ontario, but to-day it is withering away. In two or three seasons throughout the year we have large importations of tropical fruits, which works to the disadvantage of our own producers. In all the large departmental stores in the large cities and towns of this country you will find piles of American fruit which has been imported into Canada at a great loss to our own fruit growers. Many of the fruit farms in the district from which I come have been sold. The industry has decayed, and you cannot put it on its feet unless the government provides proper cold storage facilities and adequate safeguarding legislation. Saskatchewan may have become the Washington of the north, the centre of gravity as it were, temporarily for Canada; but what does the minister propose to do during the next twelve months to protect this industry, which is now dying away so far as the province of Ontario is concerned? It is not like it was twenty-five years ago, simply because of the absence of a definite national policy on the part of this government; there is no vision. Years ago boats plied on all the Great Lakes carrying for a very few cents per one hundred pounds fruit that had been grown in the Toronto-Niagara district, but to-day there is a steamship monopoly on the Great Lakes, and it is going to interfere seriously with the fruit growing industry in the Niagara district. A combine and monopoly exists.

Now, what about the consumer? It is proposed to spend a few hundred thousand dollars again this year the same as last, to pay the salaries of a large number of officials, but what does the government propose to do to protect this industry in all the provinces? Take the apple industry, for instance. Where is that industry to-day? Years ago you could go into a store and buy apples by the peck or by the bag for a very low price, but to-day they are charging the working classes in my district five and seven cents for just one apple, while we appoint paper commissions on the tariff to kill time; the government is spending in this vote too much money on overhead. Look what Ohio, New York, Indiana and Michigan are doing to protect the fruit industry there. Ohio is a state with 10,000,000 of people, about the size of Canada, and the state legislature has put this industry on its feet, with the result that all through the summer on lakes Erie and Ontario steamers are plying across the lake loaded with American fruit and vegetables from that state, and landed at Port Stanley and other points on lake Ontario. What sort of national policy is this government going to evolve to protect the fruit industry in this country, to prevent the invasion of Canada by American products, to prevent this country from becoming the happy hunting ground for all the Yankee fruit growers on the North American continent while the policy of drift continues? It is the Americans who are getting the cream of the Canadian business in fruit and vegetables. What does the government propose to do in the next twelve months to safeguard the fruit industry in Canada from coast to coast, and this industry in particular?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I would be usurping the functions of the new advisory tariff board if I were to take this matter up. I would, therefore, suggest that we leave it to the board which has been constituted, and which will possibly be functioning within a few days. It is not within my province to announce a national policy with respect to the tariff. We will be advised on the tariff by the board that has recently been appointed, and I cannot predict what they will or will not do, but doubtless all these arguments that are being advanced by my hon. friend will be taken into consideration by the board.

Mr. CHURCH: As a result of the lack of a policy on the part of the government on this question, the mass production of the United States in fruit and vegetables is being brought across the border in motor trucks from Buffalo and the Yankees are getting the cream of the business and using Canada as a dumping yard. That is what happens under the absence of any sensible policy of this government, and it is no wonder the Americans are finding Canada a happy hunting ground and are grabbing everything so far as this industry is concerned while all we do is talk about useless tariff commissions.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): The minister a moment ago hid behind what he called the new advisory tariff board. I wish to make just one remark, Mr. Chairman, and it is that the order in council appointing this new board never said one word about "advisory". No such word is used in it at all, but we have heard the word used by the Prime Minister and now by the Minister of Agriculture. This board is not advisory at all; it is simply under the dictation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend is wrong. He will find that the regulations indicate the advisory character of the board.

Mr. McGIBBON: It would be appropriate if the minister at this time would tell us what he and his department have been doing to facilitate the marketing of the products of the farms of Canada. There is no question that that is the great problem before this country. There has been plenty of evidence this afternoon to show that the spread between the producer and the consumer is enormous, and it is the duty of this department and of the government to reduce that spread so that the producer will get a larger share of the ultimate price paid for his product. If there is one thing which this government ought to do but which they are not doing, it is to help the farmers of this country market their products in such a way that they will get greater remuneration for their products. I would ask the minister what his department is doing along that line.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have been on that very question all day. Was my hon. friend not in? Anything that will help to improve the quality of an article will help to market it. It is clearly understood that anything that is well bought is half sold; anything of high quality will help to sell itself. If we see that the product is properly graded and put on the market in the proper way, especially the article for export, which determines our reputation abroad, that naturally assists in the marketing of the product. I do not know what my hon. friend had particularly in mind. Was it transportation?

Mr. McGIBBON: I have in mind the fact that the ultimate price paid for the article should go into the pockets of the producer, not into the pockets of the middleman, as it is going to-day, and I think the minister and his department are asleep in that respect. The profits are going to the middleman, not to the man who is producing the article. The minister has been asleep for the last five years, and has not yet wakened up to that fact.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister says "Oh, oh." I leave it to the producer of agricultural products to say whether or not I am right. Why, we have had this very day proof of the enormous prices that have been paid for commodities—apples, for instance—by the consumer. Those profits are not going into the pockets of the producer. Yet this government is unconscious of the duty it owes to the producers of this country, and of the necessity of enunciating a policy which will ensure to the producer a greater share of the profits which are now being enjoyed by the middleman.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I presume that what my hon. friend has now in mind is the co-operative marketing of farm products?

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, it is one of the things.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, if my hon. friend knew the history of that movement he would know that no province has done so much in that respect as Saskatchewan. That is essentially a provincial matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am talking about the responsibility of this government, not about the responsibilities of the provinces.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are talking about the government that has to do with co-operative marketing, and that is essentially a provincial matter. That may not have been drawn to my hon. friend's attention. During the time I had the honour to act in a provincial capacity the foundation was laid for those co-operative activities that are to-day the largest of their kind, not only on this continent but in the entire world. My hon. friends think I should follow the provincial activities into the federal field. I am afraid that in some respects we are doing that now. We have been trying to draw the line of demarcation between provincial and federal activities, leaving the production and the educational branches, if you can call them so, to the provinces, while the federal authority takes care of the grading, the marketing, the care of the health of animals and like matters. It is not an easy thing to draw the line, because these various activities overlap in spite of us. We have been working harmoniously, I think, with every province in that respect. In no part of Canada do we do as much work that is really provincial as we do in the maritime provinces. In Ontario I have been in communication with the Hon. John Martin, by correspondence and otherwise, about some work we have been doing in connection with the testing of cattle for butter fat, there being a general disposition as between the federal department and the provincial government to keep the line of demarcation between the respective jurisdictions. It is admitted that as the work of co-operative marketing develops we shall derive very beneficial results. But what would my hon. friends have the federal government do in the matter? Open wholesale or retail houses, and cut out all the middlemen? How would my hon. friend himself proceed?

Mr. McGIBBON: I would not hide behind the provinces and get rid of responsibility in that way. I would take hold of my department and run it so that the consumer would get the benefit of the policies which I inaugurated.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, well, that is a little bit of grandstand play.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is an adept at that himself; if there is anyone in the House who surpasses all others in grandstand play it is the minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When I was in the Saskatchewan legislature, for the first time in the history of any province estimates were introduced for the purchase of cream, provision being made that the treasury should be recouped.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): That is not fruit.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am talking about co-operative marketing. I am not averse to learning from any source. I am prepared to accept information from my hon. friend or anyone else; that is the way I learn. But I would remind my hon. friend that he cannot tack such a thing on to the federal department because we would be exceeding our prerogative if we undertook work of that nature.

An hon. MEMBER: Did you do that when you established the wheat board?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have the market prices broadcast to the farmers by radio. We have a regular marketing branch to give the farmers information as to the condition of the markets so that they will know when they go to those markets that they are getting full value for their products.

Mr. McGIBBON: They could get it through the daily newspapers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let me be quite candid: I am not at all averse to getting all the information I can as to how to improve my department. I would be delighted to get information from any source whereby we would be able to narrow that spread my hon. friend speaks of. I can recall that before my hon. friend entered this House I brought down a bill with respect to the establishment of cold storage plants, expressly for the purpose of developing the spirit of co-operation and encouraging co-operative salesmanship among our farmers. What kind of reception did that bill get from the associates of my hon. friend? What kind of reception did it get in the Senate after hon. members had hammered the life out of it here? The bill got through here but it did not get through the Senate. It was so badly mutilated there that it was no good and I had to abandon it. So my hon. friend should know a little bit about the history of these matters before he gets up and proclaims from the housetop how the federal department should exercise provincial prerogatives without at the same time invading the provincial field. If my hon. friend has any suggestions to make as to work that will come within my jurisdiction I shall be delighted to welcome them, because there is no doubt there is a spread. But my hon. friend wants to narrow the spread by increasing the duties. He says that by making products dearer you are going to narrow the spread.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I want to narrow the spread by cutting out the profits of the middleman and giving them to the consumer. The minister and the government during the last five years have been asleep to the necessity of doing that, and they are still in a comatose condition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I suggest to my hon. friend that he should apply to the provincial government; and there is a good Department of Agriculture in this province.

Mr. McGIBBON: Have they any control over the export of food products?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, well, we will attend to the exports.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): In support of the position taken by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, let me read just a few lines from the report of the Department of Agriculture which, I think, will convince even the minister that the hon. member was justified in taking the position he did. On page 40 of that report I find the following:

> Additional illustrations could be given indicative of the weak points in our live stock industry as having reference to its development as a national business. The fact that Great Britain imports $168,000,000 of bacon and pork products per annum, Canada at present supplying only 15 per cent of this amount, confirms the above statement both with reference to our problem and to our national opportunity.

Surely that is a national question which the minister should take up. When we are only supplying 15 per cent to a market which consumes $168,000,000 a year there is surely ground for the minister's bringing about improvements in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is the situation better or worse than it was three or four years ago? My hon. friend has heard it stated that the quality of our product is improving, that the spread between Canadian and Danish bacon is narrowing every year. Three years ago there was a spread of from twenty to twenty-five cents between Canadian and Danish bacon. To-day both products quite frequently are on a parity, with probably a difference of five shillings per hundred, or from that to two or three shillings at other times, showing an improvement not only in quantity but in quality. Now that is the national part that comes under the prerogative of the federal department, as I understand it. But notwithstanding that fact we are, in a measure, working with the provincial government. That responsibility is always imposed upon us because associated with grading there must always be efforts to improve quality. It is just a question where we should stop the one and commence the other. But my hon. friend thinks that because Great Britain does not buy all this bacon from Canada somebody is derelict in his duty.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I am not asking that they buy all of it from Canada, but when Great Britain is buying $168,000,000 of the very products the minister has been talking about, and we are only able to furnish 15 per cent of them, I think it is about time the minister woke up and took a more active interest in the department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you. I will just tell the result of the waking up. For a great many years during the administration of the friends of my hon. friend there was an embargo on Canadian cattle going to the Old Country.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is an old story. Who helped to get the embargo off?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was a total embargo; you could not ship store cattle into Great Britain. What did you do? Was it not an international enterprise we went into? I am always willing to give credit to hon. gentlemen opposite for anything they did. The hon. member for South Winnipeg deserves credit for the work he did in connection with it, but the fact remains that this is the government which succeeded in having the embargo removed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes. You will have to get up earlier in the morning before you can spring anything like that on me. It was suggested this afternoon that I should educate the Maritime people with regard to certain matters. Well, I am willing to sit at the feet of my hon. friend across the way, but they must not be threshing old straw and making allegations in which there is absolutely nothing with respect to dereliction of duty on the part of this government in regard to our live stock market. We have succeeded in inducing the British government to open a market which has been closed for thirty years. Is that a fact or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It does not matter what my hon. friends may think of the method or of the enterprise, but last year when we endeavoured to meet that situation and prepare Canada for the inevitable time when we had to compete with the Argentine in live cattle, what did my hon. friends do? They opposed it to a man.

Mr. MANION: What did the committee of the minister's own government do but throw out the contract?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What did my hon. friend do?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend does not like the truth.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee was a committee of parliament and got its cue from my hon. friends.

Mr. MANION: It was a committee of this government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It does not matter whether it was the best method or not; it was the best in sight. My hon. friend was not in the House, but his party is on record, both then and previously, and did nothing.

The CHAIRMAN: I call attention to the fact that we are discussing item 42.

Mr. TOLMIE: With reference to the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in regard to the embargo and to certain inaccuracies in connection therewith, I should like the privilege of saying four or five words in that connection. Looking back through the history of the cattle embargo, we know that it was in existence for thirty years. On that point the minister is quite correct. I should like to point out that the first break or the first change in the situation in connection with the cattle embargo was a promise to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, who was then Prime Minister of the country. That right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for South Winnipeg held a conference with the representatives of the British government including the then Minister of Agriculture, and it was on that occasion that the British government promised to lift the embargo at the conclusion of the war. After that an embargo commission was created by the British government and the case for Canada was presented to that commission by the Conservative government of the day. At that particular time a promise was secured from the then Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the government of Great Britain would be guided by the finding of that embargo commission. That commission found in our favour. The legislation was then introduced into the British House of Commons, and all the present government had to do with it, so far as I am aware, was in helping to make some regulations, or to come to some agreement with regard to regulations, as to how those Canadian cattle could enter Great Britain.

The CHAIRMAN: Will the committee proceed to the item under discussion?

Mr. MULLINS: Did the minister make the statement that the present government was responsible for the removal of the embargo?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the hon. member for Marquette claimed that distinction. He lifted the embargo.

Mr. MULLINS: I never made that statement. If the minister says I did he is incorrect. It is not the fact. I think I had something to do with it. I think the minister had some correspondence with me in regard to it. I do not think the minister has the right to make the claim which he has made in regard to the removal of the embargo, and I will tell him that he only left the job half finished. If Canada had obtained justice she would have the Canadian cow in on the open market, instead of having her where she is. There would be no trouble at all if there was some effort to induce the British authorities now to consent to the admission of the Canadian cow on the British market. True, we got the males in, but that was not the result of the efforts of the present government. An hon. member sitting over here, who is not making any statement at all, is the gentleman responsible for having the embargo removed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I referred to the hon. member.

Mr. MULLINS: They exacted promises and that is what accomplished the result. Public men in Great Britain stated on the platform that while they did not want to admit our cattle, still they were going to keep the promise they made to Sir Robert Borden and the hon. gentleman from South Winnipeg. I do not think it is fair for hon. members on the other side of the House to claim credit for the removal of the embargo.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The item is a fairly large one, $200,000, and the question asked by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario was a very pertinent one. He asked what the government was doing in regard to the marketing of fruit, particularly apples. Apples are grown in many places in Ontario. The trees grow quite naturally and bear a certain kind of fruit, which indicates that the province is by nature adapted to the growing of apples, and I believe there are millions of bushels annually going to waste in Ontario; orchards are being neglected and the people are not taking full advantage of their opportunities. The minister endeavoured to say that this was a matter for the provinces to deal with, not the federal government. He indicated the strides which had been made by the province of Saskatchewan in this respect. Perhaps he would inform the House what Saskatchewan has really done in regard to the marketing of apples.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not grow any apples of any account.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I quite understand that, and I did not think the minister's reference to Saskatchewan, in view of the question asked by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, was an answer at all. There are great difficulties in the way of marketing fruit, particularly apples, and I notice by the returns of the trade of Canada that our apples are exported to about twenty-five different countries. The minister states that their responsibility ends when they see that the fruit is put on the market in the proper way. But apparently no effort is being made by the department to assist in the marketing of fruit. There must be something done along that line in the matter of co-operative marketing if we are going to reap the advantages which we should, and I think the federal department is the proper one to take steps in the matter. When the present government came into office there was an annual grant of about one million dollars a year under what was known as the Agricultural Instruction Act, which was being divided up amongst the seven provinces and which could be used with great benefit along this line. I should like to ask the minister if one of the first steps he took when he came into office was not to have an analysis made as to the value received for the money voted under the Agricultural Instruction Act. A report was made to the minister by the party whom he appointed for this purpose favouring the continuance of the Agricultural Instruction Act and pointing out the advantages which were derived from the money voted for it. If the minister was consistent in what he stated when this matter was brought up in the House, namely, that this commissioner, as he termed him—although he never was a commissioner—was appointed for that purpose, why did he not act on the recommendation which the commisioner made, which the minister has and in which the commissioner pointed out the advantages of continuing this aid to agriculture under the Agricultural Instruction Act? The minister in that way could co-operate with the provinces and do something along this line. Co-operative marketing is something that must be put into operation in this country and assisted if we are to obtain the advantages to which we are naturally entitled.

Cold storage facilities and all the means of transport are under the control of the federal government, and surely the minister does not mean to say that this matter rests entirely with the provinces. It is the duty of the federal government to assist the provinces and to get them to co-operate and to coordinate in this matter. I do not believe there is anything of greater importance to those engaged in fruit growing in Canada than to enable them to co-operate so as to place their produce on the market with a good deal of unnecessary expense eliminated. It is a downright shame to see the hundreds of thousands of barrels of first class fruit that annually goes to waste in Ontario and something should be done to prevent it. The minister says that some of the provinces have already taken over the work which was done by the federal government in the past. That may be true as regards some provinces, but the federal government does not and never has assisted in any way the fruit growing industry in Ontario; it has left the matter entirely to the provincial government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The cold storage plant at Grimsby is a very useful institution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I am speaking about the experimental stations, because these are being contributed to by Ontario and other provinces. Nevertheless, nothing is being done in this province and the minister says: The matter must rest entirely with the province; we are not going to do anything in the matter of marketing fruit, so we shall vote just $200,000, appoint an army of inspectors to go around the country, and our responsibility will end there. Surely the minister does not mean to leave on the members of this House the impression that the responsibility of the government ends with the appointment of an army of officials. By the way, the minister has put forth great efforts to see that a change is made in the complexion of the inspectors whom he found in office when he came in. I have in mind two seasonal inspectors in the county from which I come, both appointed about the same time and both thoroughly competent men, who received notices from the department asking them for their resignations shortly after the minister took office. One of them sent in his resignation and the other did not. The one who sent in his resignation received a gratuity or bonus of a little over or a little less than $1,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would my hon. friend mind giving me the particulars? I do not know about the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I brought the matter to the attention of the minister about two years ago and I did not intend to bring it to his attention to-day. The inspector who refused to send in his resignation was dismissed without any gratuity or bonus, whereas, the other, who complied with the minister's request, received a retiring allowance of about $1,000. The minister has endeavoured to leave on the minds of hon. members the impression that everything in connection with the inspectors rests entirely with the Civil Service Commission; that he has no control over them whatever.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I think the minister has control over these officials who are operating throughout the provinces and his responsibility cannot end there. The government should continue to lend the assistance which was given before under the Agricultural Instruction Act to bring about a better system of marketing in this country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I hope I have not left that impression on my hon. friend in regard to these officials. We have the power to dismiss them, although we have not exercised it very frequently. I am afraid my hon. friend has got mixed up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Not at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would like to get that information because I have no recollection of it. As regards the Agricultural Instruction Act, I regret quite as much as my hon. friend does the necessity of dealing with that question as we dealt with a number of other cases in which the Dominion government was giving grants to provincial activities. The committee will recall the large sum, $20,000,000, that was voted for road construction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): That was not under the Agricultural Instruction Act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just wait a minute. I am pointing out that four federal policies bearing on this point were introduced during the war. One of them was the federal policy of road construction that prior to that time had been looked upon entirely as a provincial matter. Another was the house building scheme under which large sums of money were lent to the provinces for the purpose of taking care of the acute situation immediately following the war with regard to housing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I will admit the government have solved the housing problem.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just a moment. The next one was the matter of technical education. I am not criticizing any of these adversely, but these four methods of federal aid to the provinces were not on all fours inasmuch as the one to agriculture had started sooner than the other three. That, however, was the only difference. The government was under the necessity of cutting down our expenditure wherever possible, trying to make our budget balance. We have cut down that expenditure since we came into power by over $100,000,000 and this is one of the four ways that I have cited. Does my hon. friend not appreciate the difficulty that I would have in retaining one of these things when it had been decided by my colleagues and myself that the other three, the road expenditure, the building programme that had been entered into and the assistance to technical education, should be discontinued? How are you going to justify cutting those three out and retaining the other? In my experience a good deal of useful work was done under the Agricultural Instruction Act, but we were induced by the exigencies of the situation to decide to cut down wherever possible and we treated them all alike.

9 p.m.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does the minister mean to say to this committee that the grant for technical education has been cut out by the government?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it will be shortly. It was for a five year period and I think it expires this year. These were all for periods of five and ten years and with that limitation my remarks hold good.

With regard to the fruit situation—because after all that is the vote under discussion—the hon. member for South Oxford I think was in this afternoon when I drew attention to the prosecution as a result of the Duncan report in connection with the investigation under the Combines Act. Just as soon as the government received the Duncan report, and before it was made public, I, through my deputy and the Fruit Commissioner, called a conference of all the fruit growers organizations from the Atlantic to the Pacific for the purpose of organizing a national selling agency. The government paid the expenses, amounting to about $1,500, of the twenty or twenty-five delegates who met here for two days and organized a national co-operative marketing agency to counteract the abuses practised by the distributing combines. Now that was something to our credit. I do not know whether we gave the delegates a dinner or not, I do not think so, but at all events I have been criticized severely by my hon. friends opposite for calling such conferences at the expense of the country. The fruit growers from the Okanagan Valley right down to the Maritimes were very appreciative of our efforts in their behalf.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the minister seriously ask this committee to consider that he has discharged his duty to the people of this country with regard to the co-operative marketing of farm products by spending $1,500 to give a banquet to a number of people whom he invited here to discuss co-operative marketing? Surely the minister takes his duties a little more seriously than that. This is one of the greatest agricultural countries in the world, and yet to-day our farmers, if they are suffering from anything, are surely suffering from their inability to market their products at a fair price. The minister's explanation is really childish and is an affront to the people and to this parliament.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, that is really refreshing. I think possibly what I am going to say now will do more good than the $1,500 that we expended. The trouble with the apples of Ontario is that no system of marketing will make them acceptable on the market because they are not properly graded and packed. You cannot market cull apples to advantage anywhere.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not the duty of the minister to remedy that condition?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are doing our best. I am trying to knock in to my hon. friend's head what should be done, but I have great difficulty in imparting to him the requisite information. You must first grow a high quality product to meet the fruit of your competitiors, and then you must put it on the market in accordance with the grade that it purports to be. We called those people together for that purpose. Is it my hon. friend's serious proposal that we should go out into the country and organize co-operative associations for the marketing of fruit? That is already being done in many of our provinces. We believe, Mr. Chairman, in the policy of assisting our fruit growers to help themselves, and as an earnest of that we called them together on the occasion I have referred to. They then formulated a policy, and some of them have since inaugurated it. If my hon. friend has anything further to suggest that is explicit, not merely a little curtain lecture—which I am always delighted to receive at his hands—I shall be glad to listen to him. Will he please specify what further in the way of co-operation he thinks the federal government should undertake? I can assure him that I will deal with his suggestion seriously in an effort to add something more to our already long list of achievements in this respect.

Mr. McGIBBON: With all due respect to the minister, I think his department has been something like Rip Van Winkle—it has been asleep to the needs of the country. When it wakes up to the fact that it is its duty to help the farmers of this country to cut out the profits of the middleman in marketing their products, something will be accomplished for our farming interests. At present, practically nothing is being done in this direction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is not convinced yet.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I am not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I presume my hon. friend reads the Farmers' Advocate?

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I never do.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is quite evident. I may tell my hon. friend that the Farmers' Advocate in a recent editorial drew attention to the fact that more has been done in Canada in the last four years to grade and put our exportable farm products on the markets of the world in the most favourable condition than had been done in the previous twenty-five years. Well now, if my hon. friend wants me to assume the functions of a superman, I am afraid I cannot fill the bill; but I do claim that we have done something in comparison with what has been done in the past, although I may add that I do not claim any great credit for that either.

Mr. McGIBBON: I hope the hon. minister does not take his policy from the editor of the Farmers' Advocate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Farmers' Advocate dates back beyond either my hon. friend's birth or my own, and is one of the outstanding agricultural papers of Canada. I do not think that what it says is the last word, but at the same time its opinions are worthy of consideration—as put alongside of those of my good friend.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, apropos of the question of marketing fruit, the minister was good enough to say that he would be glad to consider any constructive suggestion that might be made to him. Speaking this afternoon, I indirectly made a suggestion to him to which I think he ought to give very careful consideration, that is, the cost of transportation, especially of perishable fruit. Down in the Maritime provinces we import, annually, a good many carloads of grapes, peaches, and other fruit from the Niagara peninsula. I gave a concrete illustration of the cost of transportation. Now I ask the minister: Has he or his department at any time during the past four years done anything to cut down the cost of transporting that fruit? If he has, and has been able to accomplish anything, then he has done more real service not only to the producers but also to the consumers of this country than I had thought him capable of. If he has not attempted to do anything, then I say he has been derelict in his duty both to the consumer and to the producer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend knows that the whole question of freight rates is now before the railway commission?

Mr. HANSON: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For some years we have had a man working on rate schedules in anticipation of getting the reduction that my hon. friend speaks about. At the conference of fruit growers last spring I remember we discussed with the Maritime fruit growers the Atlantic combine. I think they have done more outstanding work in the Maritimes in connection with ocean freight rates than any other body of men. Shortly after the war the ocean rate on apples was two or three dollars a barrel. This same organization that we have been assisting, last spring by the coordination of their activities and by negotiation with the combine, were able to cut down that rate to ninety cents or a dollar a barrel. That shows what the cooperative activities of these fruit growers organizations are capable of, although we have been criticized for aiding them. We are working with them on the question of both freight and express rates on all lines of fruit in anticipation of accomplishing something as soon as the new rate schedules are announced by the railway commission. I do not know when that will be.

Mr. LADNER: Does the work which is being done with respect to this schedule take into consideration the transportation of fruit from British Columbia eastward?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is where it is needed.

Mr. FOSTER: Some time ago there appeared in Ottawa a delegation that waited on the minister, and later on the Prime Minister, with regard to an increase in the marketing facilities for the fruit of the Maritime provinces and of British Columbia. This delegation, I understand, united with a body known as the Canadian Horticultural Council and these two organizations jointly presented their grievances to the minister and his leader, embodying the gist of their demands in a memorandum which was placed before these hon. gentlemen. That memorandum directed the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to such important action as, in the opinion of the delagation, the government should take to secure an increase in marketing facilities for the fruit of the Maritime provinces and British Columbia. It was pointed out that whereas the British government had set aside about £1,000000, or approximately $5,000,000, for the purpose of educating public opinion in Great Britain to the purchase of empire-grown fruit, the delegation disapproved of that course on the ground that it was not at all likely to assist to the proper extent in the marketing of Canadian fruit. They suggested, rather, that the government of the day, if it continued to function, should impress upon the British government an alternative proposal aiming at an increase in the imperial preference on Canadian fruit grown both in the Maritime provinces and in British Columbia.

The delegation, I believe, were at considerable pains and spent a great deal of time and effort in preparing the memorandum which they submitted to the government. They may not have to covered the whole subject, but at any rate the memorandum, which had been carefully prepared, set forth the reasons why it was necessary for the government to take steps immediately to assist the fruit growing industry of Nova Scotia as well as of British Columbia. It was indicated among other things that our greatest competitor in the shipping of fruit to Great Britain was the United States. It was pointed out further—as the minister and his colleagues know—that there has been a really great awakening in public opinion in Great Britain looking to preference on a great many products. They may not have stated the matter in these words, but that is what they had in mind. The British people realize to-day that they cannot have imperial preference on all commodities, and as a matter of fact they do not look forward to anything of the kind, because they appreciate the fact that the manufacturing industries of the dominions and the colonies cannot be allowed to be destroyed by imperial preferences. Nevertheless there is a decided growth in public opinion overseas, as represented by the many leagues and clubs that are springing up in the British Isles, looking to an increase in the preference on fruit. Can the minister give me any information as to what steps, if any have already been taken to bring this matter to the attention of the British government, and to ascertain what they have in mind over there as to what should be done by this government and the governments of other dominions in return for an extension of preference on the part of the Mother Country? We should like to know the feeling in this respect—whether they want anything done or whether they are willing to give a preference merely for the asking.

Early in the session, before the delegation arrived here from my province, I touched upon this very important matter, covering the ground reasonably well, as I thought. In view of all the circumstances, and considering the condition of the fruit industry in Nova Scotia particularly, I think that some action should be taken by the government immediately to secure if possible an increase in marketing facilities so that our fruit growers may be in a position to take advantage of them before the crop is gathered next fall. Will the minister enlighten me on the subject?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As indicated, recommendations were made by the Horticultural council and other fruit men of Canada who interviewed the Prime Minister and myself about six or seven weeks ago. The whole question was fully discussed and I have no doubt the Prime Minister will have something to say later on. He was present at the Imperial conference when this and other subjects of a similar nature were under consideration. As to asking the British government to give us a preference on Canadian products by taxing foreign goods, I am bound to say that we have always hesitated about doing anything of the kind by appealing directly to the government of Great Britain as such. Our policy was established away back in 1897 in what has been called the British preference, which has been amplified from time to time since. We have always been reluctant to take the course suggested and we have been criticized in consequence. I know the doctrine is sometimes preached of preference for preference. But when it comes to seeking by preference entry into a market which is absolutely free in relation to practically all our exportable farm products, it would seem to me to call for some nerve on our part to ask the British government so to adjust their fiscal policy as to tax foreign goods, and thereby tax their own consumers, for the benefit of us in Canada. I repeat, we have hesitated to take that step; I do not think we have ever done so in respect of any product. There may be some other way of accomplishing the same result, although I do not know what it is. Let me assure the hon. member that we are not at all unsympathetic in this matter. We had a pleasant interview with these gentlemen representing the fruit interests of the country, and some suggestions were made that seemed acceptable to them. Probably the Prime Minister may supplement what I have said.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Did not this government put a duty on raisins for the benefit of Australia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We tax them for the benefit of our own revenue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes. There are no raisins in Canada to protect, are there? My hon. friend from Lincoln comes from a grape growing country, I know—

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): I am asking the minister if we did not put a tax on raisins for the benefit of Australia.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we are not legislating for Australia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I would ask if the fruit pulp of Australia was put on the free list for the benefit of Australia or Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We discussed that with the deputation—Mr. Taylor, one of the British Columbia members, raised the question—when they were here, and they presented the very question my hon. friend has just raised, as well as others. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how far you are going to let us meander around on this vote.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In view of the government's policy to give the people free food, how does the minister justify a tax on raisins?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We wanted some revenue.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): In western Ontario there is a great deal of trouble in connection with hog cholera. The deputy minister this morning made a statement to the effect that practically every bit of hog cholera that has broken out in this Dominion was due to the importation of pork from the United States. I would like to ask the minister what steps he has taken to prohibit the importation of that pork into Canada. Surely we can produce sufficient pork in this country for our own needs. Why should we be forced to have this pork coming into this country, affecting our swine, and injuring this industry in Canada?

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out that we are dealing with item No. 42, which has to do with fruit.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The minister was discussing raisins a few minutes ago, which I presume properly comes under this item. He intimated that the duty was placed on raisins to raise revenue. Yet Australia was given a considerable preference over other countries under that trade treaty, and so far as fruit pulp is concerned, the duty was entirely removed, bringing our fruit growers into competition with Australia. Evidently these concessions were asked for by Australia. I do not imagine the minister would voluntarily offer inducements of this kind. It is well known that the Minister of Finance admitted that so far as agriculture was concerned, that industry was not receiving any advantage, but the country was he said, receiving an advantage through the removal of the duty of £3 per ton on newsprint. The government made similar concessions to New Zealand on the 26th of September last, just a few weeks before the general election, and apparently without any request having been made by New Zealand. I placed a question on the order paper and a return was brought down which indicated that there had not been one particle of communication, either direct or indirect, between the government of Canada and the government of New Zealand, yet they were granted all the concessions that had been granted to Australia. The minister, when his estimates were up the other night said they were afraid that possibly New Zealand would place a similar tax on newsprint to that imposed by Australia, and in order to forestall that action they had granted New Zealand similar concessions. I think the minister has something in the back of his head to which he has not referred here to-day at all, and in order to give the House an idea as to the line of thought that passes through his mind I might refer to Hansard of May 7, 1924, when the minister stated:

> We are beginning to do slowly what we had endeavoured to do rapidly on three historic occasions, and failed—in 1878 and in 1891, unrestricted reciprocity, and in 1911, reciprocity in natural products. We endeavoured to go rapidly, but we were told we were going too quickly, and we were defeated in each instance. Now we have been reaching out to the same objective by easy stages.

Apparently agriculture has been singled out by the minister, who has put himself on record as in opposition to the views expressed by the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding when he was Minister of Finance. It was well known that Mr. Fielding was not of the same view as the Minister of Agriculture with regard to that matter, and Mr. Fielding reproved him in the House on several occasions. But apparently that is the thought that is uppermost in the mind of the minister, and so far as agriculture in this country is concerned, it has suffered in every instance where a trade treaty has been made by this government. In every instance the interests of agriculture have been sacrificed in order to meet the demands of such people as the newsprint people, for instance, who were penalized by Australia for exacting the enormous profits they exacted during the war, when as much as £100 per ton was paid by the people of Australia for newsprint. As they pointed out, the Americans who had come over into Canada and acquired control of our pulpwood limits had taken an unfair advantage of them. Now the Minister of Agriculture permits fruit pulp from Australia to come into this country free, bringing Australia into competition with those in our own country who are already suffering under great disabilities. The minister tried a short while ago to make it appear that this was a provincial matter with which the federal government had nothing to do. I say that the federal government are doing more harm to those who are struggling to put their business on a sound footing than anything else they have to contend with.

The minister pointed out a few minutes ago that it was necessary for the government to economize, and one of the first steps he took was to cut out the grant under the Agricultural Instruction Act. He said that that was not necessary. Let me remind him that this was a measure that was adopted before the war began; it was not a war measure at all; it was a very necessary thing. The act granting aid in highway construction was also passed some years ago, when highways of that nature were not anything like as important and as essential as they are to-day. The cost of transportation so far as fruit is concerned is one of the most important things we have to contend against, and better highways by which the fruit can be conveyed by motor trucks are really the only hope for the country. It costs almost as much to ship fruit a short distance and have it placed on the market as it does to purchase fruit in the open market. I cannot understand how the minister can attempt to justify the reductions that have been made so far as they affect agriculture. Highways are absolutely essential in order to further the fruit industry of this country. The Agricultural Instruction Act was an act by which great assistance could be rendered, and was rendered, and the man who was appointed by the minister to make an investigation and report to him recommended that this grant should be continued, yet the minister states that they have found it necessary, for the sake of economy, to cut out this grant.

The minister also referred to the grant to further the building of houses. It is well known that there are empty houses to burn all over this country to-day. They have been insured in many instances; that is the verdict of the insurance companies. Housing is not a question to-day that demands the granting of assistance from this government, but the attention of the government should be directed to the cause of all these troubles.

It is necessary in order to assist the soldiers who have gone on the land to have a revaluation of that land. The government admits that there has been a tremendous depreciation in land values, and all the time the minister is doing something not to assist agriculture but to hamper and restrict it, turning loose on this country an army of meddlesome, vexatious inspectors who are doing everything in their power to discourage rather than to encourage those engaged in agriculture. And as regards the food products of the Dominion the consumer has to pay any price at all that may be demanded for very inferior articles. As to this the minister has made the case much worse than it was by the explanation he has endeavoured to give. Why has he absolutely ignored the report of the commission appointed to investigate the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act? Surely if agriculture is languishing, and the government admits it is, and farm lands are depreciating, a revaluation must be made in the interest of the soldier settlers or they are going to be all forced off the land. This is a serious matter and one which should cause the government to take some action. Furthermore the reduction of the tariff on everything the farmer produces is making the situation worse instead of better. From the circumstances one would almost come to the conclusion that the government are deliberately putting into effect a policy which is going to strangle the agricultural industry in this country. It seems hard to realize that any body of men placed in such a responsible position would dare to put into effect the legislation inaugurated by this government, legislation which has made it so difficult for those engaged in agriculture to carry on.

Now we hear of another scheme advocated. We are going to build more railways. We are going to establish a steamship line to carry our products to the markets of the world and thus come into competition with our own existing Canadian line. This matter must be settled right now in this House; the responsibility cannot be delegated to the provincial government. The responsibility must be placed where it properly belongs, and I do not believe any member of the government has a greater load of responsibility by reason of the restrictions and discouragement from which agriculture is now suffering that the minister who is now endeavouring to put his estimates through the House.

Mr. FOSTER: I have a word or two to say on the subject before the committee, and then I should like to hear from the Prime Minister, who I observe is seated near the Minister of Agriculture. The minister says we cannot ask Great Britain to-day to do anything in the desired direction because by so doing we shall be asking the British people to tax themselves on goods coming in from foreign countries. On the surface there might appear to be something in that argument, but when it is analysed it really has no foundation. In the first place we are entitled to ask Great Britain for some concessions if we are going to remain a part of the empire. At least we are entitled to sit down and talk over our difficulties with them. We have already done that, I apprehend, in the case of immigrants because a contract has been entered into which requires Canada to guarantee five years' employment to English immigrants coming to this country. In other words we undertake to take care of these immigrants if they cannot find employment in the various channels to which they might be directed on first coming to this country. It seems to me that the Canadian government, for one thing, might point out to the British authorities, in the discussion of this question, that in Nova Scotia there are thousands of acres of lands upon which fruit can be grown of a quality that will compare with any fruit grown elsewhere, and that here there is an opportunity for thousands of immigrants of a certain kind from Great Britain to settle and establish themselves in the fruit-growing industry. But first a stable fruit market must be established, and I ask what sense there is in our remaining as part of the British Empire, if fruit and other products from the United States are allowed to find a market in Great Britain to the exclusion of fruit and other products from this and other dominions interested in building up that empire, and at the same time we have to tax ourselves for the upkeep of immigrants for whom we have now no work.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Is that the measure of your loyalty to the empire?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): It is a case of loyalty to Canada.

Mr. FOSTER: My loyalty to the empire will stand comparison with that of my hon. friend at any time. The hon. gentleman need have no fears on that account. It is not a question of loyalty; it is a question of common, ordinary business sense.

An hon. MEMBER: Horse sense.

Mr. FOSTER: Yes, horse sense.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER: Let my hon. friend laugh. That laugh sounds like a horse laugh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER: Now that my hon. friends have got that off their minds we can get back to the main question at issue, which is this: we should provide openings for certain of these British immigrants, whereby they can go on the land and make a living at more places convenient to present markets instead of carrying them all the way across this continent and shunting them into the hinterland in the northwest, locating them on brush land, and starting them out there in an endeavour to make a living. Attempts to settle such districts have failed, and will continue to fail. This is illustrated by a letter written by one man the other day. I should like to place this letter on Hansard, but it would not be exactly pertinent to the discussion and I shall do it on a more appropriate occasion.

The main point in considering such questions as this is that we are faced with the development of the whole of Canada and not one particular portion of it. In this development the British people themselves are just as vitally interested, or they would not be willing to vote one million pounds, or $5,000,000, for this particular purpose. If we have a million and a half barrels of apples in Nova Scotia the imperial preference suggested of two shillings and sixpence, or a little better than 50 cents, would have a very important effect of stabilizing our market. If the British government paid $750,000 out of the treasury by way of subvention it would be cheaper than spending $5,000,000 in the campaign of education on which they are at present embarked. These questions need only be brought to the attention of the British government in a practical way in order to get some progress along the lines which have been pointed out.

Mr. TOLMIE: There is a question I wish to ask but I do not know whether it would be pertinent to this vote. I have noticed that since 1921 the Department of Agriculture has done considerable advertising in the public press of the country. Could the minister tell me what the whole amount was, and how much money was expended with each newspaper? I do not suppose he has the information at hand and if he has not I would be glad to receive it before the consideration of his estimates is concluded.

Item agreed to.

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grants to seed fairs, etc., $305,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The seed fairs are given subventions by the various provinces. This vote is divided into three parts. Under the seed branch we have six zones with a seed laboratory in each—at Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa, Quebec city, and we have one in the Maritime provinces. The testing, analysis and grading are handled in these respective centres. Under the Fertilizers Act they have to do many things, in connection with legislation passed here recently. The Fertilizers Act has to do of course with the analysis of fertilizers, to see that the farmers are not sold spurious fertilizers, which have not the manurial value that they profess to have.

We have a great variety of seed fairs, and the amount of subvention depends upon the size of the fair and the character of the work. The grants to seed fairs are made on a basis we often work on, conditionally, and of course some of them get a small grant. These grants are made according to the prize list and the support given by the respective provinces On that account the grants will naturally vary, but that is the policy that has been in force for ten or twelve years. There has been a great deal of improvement in our seed supply, particularly in the development of the work of the Seed Growers' Association through the medium of this system.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many fertilizing plants are there in Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am afraid we have not got that information. There is quite a number in the Maritime provinces and Ontario.

Mr. McGIBBON: You can surely tell us some of them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not keep a list of them, but I think we can get that information. My information is that before the manufacturers can become eligible for the business they have to take out a license and have to get a certificate for the particular brand of fertilizer that they issue, subject to analysis before it is sold. My deputy will take a note of that.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell us what amount of fertilizers are imported?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not got that either.

Mr. ROGERS: Surely the minister will have some information in respect of the seed, feed and fertilizers, when he is asking the House to vote $305,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That amount is for the whole thing. I will give the allocation of the respective divisions and that will bring it down to something definite.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What is the reason for the $10,000 increase?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certain additional work has been allocated to this branch, the administration of the act with respect to hay and hides, thus involving additional clerical assistance and travelling expenses. It is to take care of that. These matters were formerly under the Department of Trade and Commerce but have been transferred to my department. I understand that for the purpose of economy some inspectors do the work of the seed branch and the administration of the Fertilizers Act; consequently they are not kept separate. At first I thought they were. The whole inspectional staff takes care of the work. The details are as follows:

To provide inspection service for the administration of the Seeds Act, Feeding Stuffs Act, Fertilizers Act, and Inspection and Sale Act; to establish and maintain analytical laboratories for the testing of seeds, feeding stuffs, and fertilizers; to encourage the production of superior seeds for domestic requirements and export; to encourage the manufacture and intelligent use of good quality fertilizers; to further develop export markets for seeds and feeding stuffs; to establish and maintain a markets intelligence service for seeds, feeding stuffs, and fertilizers.

General Administration—	1925-1926	1926-1927
1. Staff—inside service.
2. Office supplies..	$ 6,000	$ 6,000
3. Publications and stationery..	5,000	15,000
	$11,000	$21,000
Production and Markets.—
4. Subventions for seed crop competitions, seed exhibitions and seed centres.. ..	$60,000	$50,000
5. Market reporting service..	6,000	4,000
6. Development of domestic and export markets for seeds and feeding stuffs..	5,000	2,000
	$71,000	$56,000
Inspection and Sale Act.—
7. Organization hay and straw standardization..	$ 2,500	$ 2,000
8. Supervision binder twine, oil products, hides, etc.. ..	.....	2,000
	$ 2,500	$ 4,000

And then it goes on with the various laboratories to which I have referred, from the Maritimes to the Pacific, as follows:

Laboratory and Inspection Services—1925-1926	1926-1927
9. District No. 1—The Maritime provinces..	$17,680	$18,145
10. District No. 2—Quebec.. ..	37,880	38,750
11. District No. 3—Eastern Ontario..	17,660	19,210
12. District No. 4—Western Ontario..	44,040	48,900
13. District No. 5—Manitoba and Saskatchewan..	40,975	45,695
14. District No. 6—Alberta and British Columbia..	38,265	41,800

These services are to a large extent carried by the fees which are charged at certain times of the year. When there is no rush on the laboratory the work is done free. In the early part of the year, in order to ensure samples coming in, especially for testing purposes, analysis is done free. Later on it is charged for.

Mr. ROGERS: Is the minister really sure these items he is quoting come under this estimate?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think the cost of laboratories comes under this item.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is administration. They have all been established for some time, except one in Toronto, which was constructed by the Public Works department in the usual way.

Mr. ROGERS: Does it take $48,000 to administer the laboratory in Toronto?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The whole inspection staff for the province of Ontario radiates out from the city of Toronto, and I may say that is the centre of a large proportion of the seed business of this province and includes all the activities of the various subdivisions, both feed and seed, and fertilizer and hay inspection as well.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As the minister has all these inspectors and is following up the fertilizer production very closely, I would like to ask what has been the effect upon the price to the Canadian consumer of the reduction of duty or the putting of fertilizers on the free list? Has there been any reduction in the price?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know that I could prove to the satisfaction of my hon. friend that the reduction in price that has taken place is directly attributable to the reduction in the duty, but the fact remains that the price to the consumer has gone down since the reduction in the duty. It may have been a coincidence or a result of the reduction in the duty.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Has the price not gone up again?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think not. Like anything else, it will fluctuate in price in any case.

Mr. McGIBBON: What percentage of nitrogen does the department demand in fertilizers? How does that percentage compare with the percentage in fertilizers imported say from Chili and what is the relative value of the two?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That involves a very long answer and a great deal of information.

Mr. McGIBBON: If my conception of the chemical composition of this product is correct, you cannot give a relative value unless you know the relative quantity of nitrogen in the different fertilizers. Surely the minister has some idea of the percentages.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Each of these fertilizers calls for a certain analysis, and when samples are put on the market it is the duty of the inspector to see that they comply with the analysis. I cannot carry that in mind all the time.

Mr. McGIBBON: I quite agree with the minister that his mind cannot be an encyclopedia, but there must be some definite regulation in vogue in his department. Does he demand in the imported as well as the domestic product a similar standard of nitrogen in order to protect the consuming public?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: On the sack or whatever other container these fertilizers are placed on the market in there must be marked a description of the quantity of, say, the nitrogen content and the fertilizer is held responsible to be what it purports to be. For instance, if it purports to contain 25 per cent of nitrogen, it must live up to that percentage. The Fertilizer Act of 1922, referring to fertilizing substances in their commercially pure state, says that they must contain not less than the following percentages:

Nitrate of soda, 15 per cent nitrogen.
Sulphate of ammonia, 20 per cent nitrogen.
Superphosphate (acid phosphate) 16 per cent available phosphoric acid.
Basic Slag, (Thomas phosphate), 10 per cent total phosphoric acid and 80 per cent fineness.
Natural rock phosphate of stated origin, 25 per cent total phosphoric acid and 80 per cent fineness.
Sulphate of potash, 48 per cent potash soluble in water.
Muriate of potash, 48 per cent potash soluble in water.

The basic slag is the by-product from the steel mills, wherever they may be. I saw them in Sydney.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister does not understand the purport of my question. In order to protect the public who do not know the chemical analysis and who practically think one bag of fertilizer is equal to another, has the minister any definite standard to which he makes not only the importer but the domestic manufacturer conform?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps I failed to make the matter plain. If they purport to put a fertilizer of this description on the market it must comply with those percentages of nitrogen, or whatever it is. If they desire to put a mixed fertilizer on the market or a different one from the description, they must put the percentages on the bag and live up to those percentages.

Mr. McGIBBON: I quite understand that. The point is this: Are these regulations made by the department, or do they allow the manufacturer to make any strength of fertilizer they wish if they put the percentage on the bag?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, but he must live up to those percentages.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think that is fair to the consumer because, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he is not capable of differentiating between the value of the two percentages. He thinks one bag of fertilizer is as good as another, whereas it may not be half as good. It is the duty of the department to protect the consumer by establishing a standard and making the domestic manufacturer as well as the consumer conform to that standard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: These artificial fertilizers are so innumerable that I am afraid my hon. friend's system of classifying and standardizing them would be much involved. There is no such thing as a "best" fertilizer any more than there is a "best" wheat or a "best" medicine. It depends on what you want the fertilizer for or how needful the land is for a particular fertilizer or what crop you are going to grow on it.

10 p.m.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister will agree with me that the main constituent of these fertilizers is nitrogen.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is one of them.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Has the hon. member any reason for saying that nitrogen is the main constituent?

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not a disputable point.

Mr. BOUCHARD: It is.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister not issue a pamphlet on fertilizers recommending certain ones as being superior to others? There is a pamphlet issued by the department giving the composition of these fertilizers and stating which is the better one. That would cover all this.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think we could recommend a fertilizer unless we knew what it was required for, any more than a doctor could prescribe a medicine without knowing what was wrong with the patient.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the department not make recommendations in this pamphlet on fertilizers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have tried to make that plain. If land is sick for nitrogen, we prescribe nitrogen, just as if a man is sick for something or another the doctor would prescribe it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the minister would let the deputy stand up he would explain what my question refers to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What does my hon. friend want? Is that not plain?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is not an answer to my question at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What does my hon. friend want? Let me repeat, Mr. Chairman, there is no such thing as "best" fertilizer. It depends on the crop to be grown and the land you are dealing with.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the minister said that every domestic manufacturer had to take out a license. How many Canadian manufacturers have done so in the last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Approximately fifty. I have had correspondence with a good many myself, but I cannot recollect them all. Most of them were in the Maritime provinces, some in Ontario.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Surely the minister does not intend to convey the idea that our experimental farms are not in a position to recommend the kinds of fertilizers which should be used in certain districts and soils? I think that is the information the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) desires.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I tried to make that plain. The best way I think to illustrate that is to ask: Could any medical man prescribe a flat dose for my hon. friend, no matter what was the matter with him?

Mr. McGIBBON: He might for the hon. minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That might be.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): After a little rest, Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the minister that his department issues a bulletin on fertilizers which contains certain recommendations. Now, does he not know that that pamphlet is being issued? If one is not sent to him I will hand him my copy.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are issuing those bulletins continually. Supposing we are dealing with the Maritime provinces, where they grow potatoes largely and use certain fertilizers, we would always have an eye single to what the fertilizer was to be used for; we would not issue the same instructions for that part of the country as we would to some other part where a different crop was being grown and where an entirely different fertilizer would be required. Would my hon. friend from Kingston, as a medical man, issue the same kind of prescription for everybody?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If I were administering the department I would be willing to answer any questions. The bulletin does not say that the fertilizer is for Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, or Ontario; it gives the composition and recommends it. I was trying to get the minister out of a difficulty by my question, but it is impossible.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Every fertilizer contains three essential ingredients: nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid. The proportions of these ingredients vary according to the particular crop you intend to grow and the deficiency of the soil in any of these chemical elements.

Mr. FLEMMING: In some parts, particularly in the east, the farmers use what they call home-mixed fertilizers. They purchase the chemicals and do the mixing themselves. The results are very successful and they save considerable money in this way. Is any effort being made by the department to determine the purity of these chemicals? It is very important that the imported ingredients shall be exactly what they are represented to be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, the chief work of the branch is to see that the imported stuff is what it is supposed to be, and worth the money for manurial purposes. Their inspection discloses any spurious contents.

Mr. FOSTER: Mr. Chairman, on page 6 of the bulletin to which the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) has drawn attention I find that prices of Belgian basic slag of sixteen per cent analysis are quoted for the Maritime provinces and elsewhere. Will the minister tell us why the price of Nova Scotia slag is not quoted?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember we discussed the question two or three years ago. Basic slag is the by-product of the Sydney smelter?

Mr. FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that it is all exported; there is none placed on the home market.

Mr. FOSTER: Mr. Chairman, for the information of the minister I may tell him that it is not being exported. It is not on the home market, as he says, but for a very different reason—because that plant has been forced to close down by the importation of Belgian and other slag, which importation has been stimulated by lowering the duty. That industry in the Maritime provinces is entirely wiped out. I took some interest, naturally because it was a matter of great importance to our people, to find out whether or not the farmers were getting their fertilizer any cheaper by virtue of the fact that this industry was put out of business. I find that after they succeeded in closing down our industry the price of fertilizer in the Maritime provinces advanced three dollars a ton, and there is intimation of another two dollar raise, which seems to be the old story repeating itself, that directly the local manufacturer is put out of business the foreign monopolists put up the prices to whatever limit they see fit. I am forced to the conclusion that it is no use trying to impress upon this government that industry is of value in the Maritime provinces, or in any other part of Canada, because a moment ago I tried to get from the Prime Minister before he left the House an expression of opinion on a very important item that was promised by the Minister of Agriculture, but before he got around to it he was shut off by the Chairman, who called the item and it was passed. So I despair of getting any assistance at all from the minister so far as this item is concerned, and I merely rise to tell him that the government succeeded in putting the local industry out of business.

The CHAIRMAN: I must direct the hon. member's attention to the fact that I did not shut off discussion and I call upon him to withdraw his statement.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I think I can throw some light on this subject, although not from personal knowledge. It was brought up last year or the year before, and a statement similar to that repeated now by my hon. friend opposite was then made, that owing to the reduction of the duty on fertilizers the plant at some particular place in Nova Scotia had been ruined. A few weeks later an hon. member on this side of the House, whose constituency was immediately adjoining that in which the plant is located, said he would give the real explanation of why the plant was closed down—in the first place he said, it had not closed down since the change in the duty, it had been closed down two years and a half before the reduction was made. In the second place he explained the reason for the closing down of the plant. This basic slag, which is a by-product of steel, they had been selling to the farmers as an article which analysis and experience had proved to be good. In the course of time the particular works from which this by-product was made changed their system of making steel from the open hearth to the Bessemer method, or vice versa —I do not know which. At any rate they changed the system with the result that the basic slag, while it would still give a chemical analysis, had lost its value as a fertilizer by reason of the fact that it was no longer soluble in water. And this notwithstanding they continued, either in ignorance or deliberately, to sell this non-fertilizing basic slag to the farmers of the neighbourhood until by bitter experience the farmers discovered the difference and ceased to buy it, the consequence being that the fertilizer plant went out of existence. That was the charge which was made on the other side of the House and which was answered on this side, as will be seen by reference to Hansard. Just before I close let me reply to an hon. member opposite who made the statement that there were no fertilizer plants in Canada now. There are three in British Columbia at the present time, all doing an increasing business.

Mr. FOSTER: I rise in order to restate what I said before. I had no desire, Mr. Chairman, to intimate that the shutting off of the discussion was deliberate on your part. I merely suggested that the Prime Minister was unable to speak, as had been suggested by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in answer to my inquiry regarding the government's position in the matter of an imperial preference for our apples.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think it is fair for the hon. member to put it even in that way. I have been very generous to hon. members who have taken part in the discussion of the various items which have been considered in the course of the day, having allowed a great deal of latitude. It is therefore unfair of the hon. member, both to the Chair and to the committee, to put his explanation in that form.

Mr. FOSTER: I shall be happy to put it in any form you suggest, Mr. Chairman. I am only too delighted to come within the four corners of the rules both in the House and in committee, and if I assure you now that I retract the statement wholly I trust that this assurance will bring back that pleasant smile which we all like to see, and that we shall proceed as agreeably as before. Just a word in reply to the hon. member (Mr. Neill). I do not know who made the explanation to which he has referred, but certainly the department has facilities for examining basic slag produced in Nova Scotia, and this is the first time I have heard it suggested that anyone had claimed that their analysis was not up to standard or that the effectiveness of the fertilizer had been questioned. It has been tried not only in one locality but in thousands of places, and the explanation which the hon. member says was given is certainly no explanation at all. It is absolutely not in accord with the facts as given to me by the people who used the material.

Mr. NEILL: It is in accord with Hansard of last year or the year before.

Mr. McMILLAN: I can offer some information, derived at first hand, in regard to this subject. I was a representative of that company under Mr. C. L. Walker in our section of the country for years. Indeed, Mr. Walker has slept in my house a good many times. He stopped sending the fertilizer into our section for the reason that it was no good, as we knew from experience. There is no use taking half an hour to answer the point; it has already been answered.

Mr. HARRIS: If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) will look into the question he will discover how wide of the mark he is. The duty of the Department of Agriculture, in view of this very vote we are now discussing, should be to see to it, by means of a registration system and a method of inspection throughout the whole of Canada, that the goods sold to the farmers of the country are up to the mark and in accordance with the analyses which should appear either on the bag itself containing the article, or on the tag appended to that bag. The information which the Department of Agriculture issues throughout the country should be supplemented by the efforts of men such as my hon. friend representing firms trading in Canada, and more particularly outside Canada, in order to make sure that purchasers shall know exactly what they are buying. And if an article is not up to specification the fact should be reported to the department which is to-night asking for this vote for the purpose of continuing this work.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is on solid ground when he tells the House that the fertilizer industry in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, was imperilled by the action of the government in taking off the duty of ten per cent which had been in force on this commodity. The reason for the damage to the fertilizer industry in Canada was perhaps not so much the fact that the manufacturers wanted a protection of ten per cent, as the fact that our manufacturing plants being in a large number of cases considerable distances away from the agricultural communities requiring the fertilizer, the cost of transportation made competition impossible with manufacturers nearer at hand. Let me give a concrete illustration. The city of Montreal is a considerable distance away from the Maritime provinces, who are large consumers of fertilizers; the New England states are comparatively close to those provinces. The records show that immediately this ten per cent duty was taken off, the United States product came in. Previous to that time that protection had enabled manufacturers in Canada as far west as Hamilton and Toronto to sell their product to the Maritime provinces, in spite of the freight rate; but as soon as the reduction was made the producers in Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal found themselves unable to compete with the New England states, so that one by one they went out of business. After they had ceased operations the price of fertilizer to consumers in the Maritime provinces, in Ontario and throughout Canada was raised dollar by dollar, until to-day the farmers are paying more per ton for the American product than they had to pay for the Canadian article before the protection was removed.

Another concrete illustration may be drawn from the city of Hamilton. That city is reasonably close to the Niagara peninsula; so is the city of Buffalo. And in the city of Buffalo such tremendous plants as the Crocker, the Millsom and the Buffalo Fertilizer works, and some four or five other large enterprises find it advantageous to dump their surplus manufactures into Canada after first supplying the home trade. When that ten per cent duty was in force it was sufficient to prevent this dumping, especially in that very large consuming area in the Niagara peninsula. With a slight protection of ten per cent the manufacturers in Hamilton, Toronto and other centres of production in Ontario were in a position to supply the Niagara peninsula, but to-day we find lying idle in Hamilton a plant capable of manufacturing 10,000 tons of fertilizer per annum and which is waiting for any bidder who wants to acquire any portion of it. It went out of business immediately upon the removal of the ten per cent duty. Take the Swift Canadian Company, which is a large manufacturing concern in Toronto. Originally they were engaged in the city of Toronto in the manufacture of fertilizers from the by-products produced in that city, but they have found it not to their advantage to continue the manufacture of fertilizers there, and to-day, although they are selling the same brands from Toronto, where are those brands being manufactured? They are made in their plants across the line, and then shipped into the Niagara peninsula. They go through the same avenues of sale as they did previously, but the point of origin is no longer the city of Toronto, but rather the factories which they control and operate in the United States of America.

One hon. gentleman to-night raised a point which is worthy of note, namely, that the most expensive constituent in the fertilizers which are necessary to recuperate the soils of Canada is nitrogen. It will be interesting for this committee to know that according to the report on fertilizers issued by the department, and to which the hon. member for Kingston referred a moment ago, nitrogenous products, which are the base, and the expensive base, used in the manufacture of complete fertilizers in Canada, have been exported from this country since the duty was taken off—mark you, they were exported previously, but not to quite the same extent—to the amount of 29,500,000 pounds last year. That 29,500,000 pounds of nitrogenous product is sufficient base, and expensive base, to manufacture complete fertilizers to the amount of 90,000,000 pounds. That 29,500,000 pounds of raw product was exported from this country largely to that great fertilizer centre in the United States, Baltimore, to be made up there into complete fertilizers, and to a degree shipped back to the consumers in Canada. That represents $500,000 that the manufacturer of this nitrogenous product received for his product from the Baltimore broker or buyer. If that base instead of being shipped in a raw, coarse state largely to Baltimore had been worked up into complete fertilizers in this country—and everybody in this House knows that this country does need in a great many parts complete fertilizers to carry on intensified farming operations—it would have brought to the manufacturers of that product, to the labourers and all who were engaged in its production, the sum of $900,000.

Mr. NEILL: Did the hon. member say that Canada exported the amount he stated of nitrogen?

Mr. HARRIS: Of nitrogenous products.

Mr. NEILL: In what shape?

Mr. HARRIS: In the shape of a tankage which would analyse on the average 6 per cent of nitrogen and 20 per cent of bone phosphate of lime. One ton of that tankage, containing 6 per cent of nitrogen, 20 per cent of bone phosphate of lime, together with sufficient potash added to make up a grade such as 2.82 fertilizer, would make up three tons of complete fertilizer which our farmers would buy.

Mr. NEILL: Will the hon. member not admit that the main source of nitrogen is obtained from nitrate of soda, which is produced in Chili and brought up here—imported, not exported?

Mr. HARRIS: That is one source, but not the main source. If the hon. member will allow me to go one step further, I say that we exported last year 29,500,000 pounds of nitrogenous products, products indigenous to this country and gathered in this country. Would it not be better, instead of allowing those by-products to go to waste by the abattoirs in this country, to manufacture them into complete fertilizers, rather than to continue this extravagant importation and the displacement of that business in this country by that extravagant importation? If that industry is going to be put out of business in this country, it is time that we replaced that little 10 per cent duty which was on previously, and which permitted us to overcome the handicap of the freight rates which are so hard on us, due to the fact that the point of origin is far from the point of consumption. Let us again get back to the position where we shall manufacture sufficient complete fertilizers to meet the demands of this country in order that we may not only do business among ourselves, but save as well these by-products which are going to waste by the hundreds of tons in all the large centres of population, and which could be turned into a product which our farmers would be glad to buy from us. If the duty were replaced, it would revive this industry, which is indigenous to this country, being so closely allied to agriculture, which everyone knows is our basic industry.

Mr. McMILLAN: My hon. friend from Toronto-Scarborough has taken us into the question of soil fertility and soil cultivation. When he begins to tell us that the tankage from slaughter houses is the great basis for nitrogen, I would like him to realize that in any successful system of agriculture it is not to that source that farmers look for nitrogen, but to the atmosphere, where we find a composition containing 80 per cent free nitrogen. Those who have been trying to operate their farms to the best advantage realize that the best encouragement we can give agriculture is to grow such crops that we are able to get that nitrogen from the air upon terms which are actually better than getting it for nothing, and that is through the growing of alfalfa, sweet clover, peas, beans and that sort of crop. It is all right for my hon. friend, from his point of view, to talk in the manner he does, but we have found as a result of many years' experience, so far as our immediate section is concerned, that so long as we can get the potash and the phosphoric acid, and along with it so much lime, we can get nitrogen very much cheaper than we can buy it in the shape of artificial fertilizer purchased from the factory at a high price.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): My hon. friend will agree that it is much easier to get that nitrogen from the air if the soil is in good condition, and that the soil can be brought into that condition much more quickly by the application of commercial fertilizers. The argument advanced by the hon. member (Mr. Harris) is borne out by the trade returns of Canada for the year 1925. These show that the year before the duty was removed from commercial fertilizers not a pound of nitrate of soda was imported from Chili, whereas last year the importations amounted to 17,270,274 pounds. It is quite apparent to everyone who uses commercial fertilizers on their farms that the price did go down for a few months until it served the purpose of those who secured control, but the price to-day is higher than it was before. Having put the industries almost completely out of business in this country to-day the prices are fixed at Baltimore for the factories which are still operating in Canada. There are still a few of them in operation here but the prices are fixed for them by those who are in the business at Baltimore. The Baltimore people realize it will not be to their advantage to have every one of these fertilizer factories closed, because that would very probably induce the government of Canada to reimpose the tariff against American fertilizers. They still allow a number of factories therefore, to do business in Canada, provided they are allowed to fix the prices, and the Canadian factories do not enter into competition with those engaged in the industry on the other side. I think this is one of the clearest examples of the folly of the course which is being pursued by the present government. Those people who had invested money in this industry in Canada have seen their business in the main destroyed and transferred across the line, and Canadians are at the mercy of a bigger combine than they ever dreamed of. In addition they are paying much more for fertilizers. If the minister will look at the trade returns he will find that the arguments advanced by my hon. friend (Mr. Harris) are borne out to the very letter.

Mr. EVANS: In my opinion the duty on fertilizers did not do either the manufacturer or the agriculturist any good. According to the admission of the two last speakers to my right, the industries for whose benefit the duty was intended have gone to pieces. Before that stage had been reached their product had become too dear for the Canadian agriculturist to use in the manner he desired. One of the largest users of fertilizers in the Maritime provinces, as well as one of the largest potato growers, was the gentleman who sat in the last parliament for Carleton-Victoria, Mr. Caldwell. When this subject was under discussion in 1922, Mr. Caldwell pointed out, as will be found by reference to page 3140 of revised Hansard, June 17, that while we collected a little over $50,000 during the last six years from the duty on fertilizers, the manufacturers charged the Canadian consumer some $3,800,000 extra on account of the duty. Mr. Caldwell was complaining at the time that the cost of raising potatoes was too high. He went on to say that with the exception of acid phosphates the materials entering into the manufacture of fertilizers were free. He said he wanted the duty reduced to five per cent, and added:

> There would be little loss of revenue on this account either; we collected less than $90,000 a year during the last six years, but we have paid to the manufacturers or mixers over half a million dollars per year on the material they brought in free. They are able to charge us this year $9 more than is paid by the farmers in Maine for the same product. Last year the difference was $15.

So we see that while we have kept that spoon-fed industry going for some years in our midst the other industries that were dependent on it have been killed. The tariff on fertilizers has proved a failure, and has been detrimental to the general good of the nation.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the price to-day?

Mr. FOSTER: Just a word or two in reply to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) that hon. gentleman seemed to think he had absolutely closed the entire case by saying that the reason this basic slag company had gone out of business was because their product was of no use, and he stated that he himself knew that because he had handled the product. I merely wish to point out that not merely is the hon. gentleman misinformed, but that if he were to repeat the statement elsewhere it would be characterised in language far from parliamentary. The fact remains that the price to the Canadian consumer of fertilizer has risen from $3 to $5 more than it was, in fact the price has become so high that these manufacturers are able to compete, and are coming back into the market with their product. This conclusively shows that the reduction of the duty put them out of business and produced conditions with which they were unable to compete. However, since the price is returning to the original figure they are opening up their manufacturing establishments again. An hon. gentleman near me disputes this statement, but I am informed that the facts are as I have stated.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER: Some of my hon. friends are rather amused. Let me tell them that if they investigate the subject they will find that undoubtedly prices have been raised to the consumers and a number of factories have gone out of business.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Please give us some figures showing those prices.

Mr. FOSTER: I should be very glad to do so, but I did not realize that this question was coming up to-night and therefore did not have the necessary figures available. I promise my hon. friend, however, that I shall be prepared to accommodate him on the first occasion that offers.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I challenge you to prove it.

Mr. FOSTER: Why does not my hon friend, if he is so anxious to get figures, ask the minister to give the desired information? Surely this is information to which the House is entitled.

Mr. HARRIS: If the minister does not want to give the information let me tell the committee that in the little town of Fergus, situated 70 or 80 miles north of Toronto, at the time the duty was taken off acid phosphate, 80,000 pounds of fertilizer a year were bought through a co-operative society. At that time they paid as low as $16 a ton but the best price they could get this year was $20.80 per ton.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Surely the minister in charge of this matter ought to be able to give some information as to the prices for feritilizer in Canada this year compared with last year and previous years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was going to make the suggestion that we might be able to get from the Seed branch the prices of these fertilizers for some years before the duty was taken off—I think that occurred in 1924—as compared with the relative prices at the present time. We do not happen to have that information, and I admit it would be interesting. Up to the present we have not had any necessity for using this fertilizer on the plains of the west. For that reason, I suppose, our western friends, including myself, have not made the same study of the subject that eastern members have. But it certainly is news to us all that the way to get cheap fertilizers is to tax them.

Mr. CAHAN: You are propounding a truth nevertheless.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am always ready to sit at the feet of any eastern Gamaliel on this or on any other question and learn, but I often read of this matter before I had the privilege of being in parliament. There has been an agitation for fertilizers for certain crops, and there has been an agitation by farmers for certain classes of fertilizers. My hon. friends opposite take the ground now that the way to develop eastern agriculture—it is not yet applicable to the plains; it may be some day, possibly—is to tax the fertilizer which the farmer purchases for his land. If that is true, I have to throw up my hands and say I do not know anything about this subject.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS: Perhaps the minister would refer it to the tariff advisory board.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was going to suggest that we might refer it to them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the minister allow me a question in regard to binder twine? Perhaps he knows about that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): How does that compare with the price before the duty was removed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am afraid I will have to assume charge of another department as well as Agriculture before I deal with all these problems. But the best I can suggest is that this be dealt with before the advisory board, and I think that it will be all right. I am not joking about this.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is a question of price as compared with the duty.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has those prices; he publishes them every week over his own signature and sends them to me, yet he says he does not know anything about it because he lives on the plains where they do not know anything about fertilizers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not this kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not this kind, but the kind the minister distributes all over the west. I am pointing out that the minister every week publishes the prices of fertilizers, so that he knows them quite well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Excuse me, I do not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I followed his pamphlets week after week, and only a few short weeks after the duty was taken off, in his own pamphlet he showed that to the Canadian consumer it was higher all the time. But the result was that put the Canadian competitor out of business and put the American competitor in control. He had his Saskatchewan friends laughing because he said he was removing the tax on fertilizer. Of course if the minister is able to arouse enthusiasm in Saskatchewan by saying that every time you tax you raise the price, it is no tribute to his Saskatchewan followers. But how can you reconcile that with the fact that throughout the country Canadian competition is eliminated and the Canadian consumer pays the price dictated by the American manufacturer? The minister looks helplessly on and says he knows nothing about the subject.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is another matter. I did not say I did not know anything about it, but if the way to promote eastern agriculture is to tax fertilizers, then I said I knew nothing about it, and I admit that right now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then why do you tax fertilizers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a different matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not matter what you call it. You cannot change it by giving it a different name. You cannot deceive a clear brain by a phrase or a delusion. We know that the taking off of the tax affected the price in Canada because it eliminated competition. You cannot get around that fact. You may get a laugh from those who know nothing about fertilizers, but you cannot ignore the solid facts. They never collide; they are always in harmony. Here we are in this country, with at least hundreds of our workmen gone, producing our goods in the United States, and the Canadian consumer is paying out of his own pocket for the folly of the minister.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Does the right hon. member, contend that by taking off the tariff you raise the prices of goods?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We do not have to contend; we simply have to show the facts as they exist. If the hon. member cannot see the facts, there is no hope of his understanding the argument.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You admit that is a fact?

Mr. MEIGHEN: What?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You contend that if the tariff is taken off the prices immediately rise?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We contend it and we know it, because we see the facts.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Was that the only factor entering into the raise? There might be another factor operating.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If you will read the quotations from Baltimore as given by the hon. member for East York last session you will see that while the prices of goods rose in Canada the prices in the world market fell. In Baltimore, the centre of the fertilizer industry, prices were dropping, while in Canada they were rising.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What would prevent a Canadian from bringing in these goods free of duty and selling them at the lower price?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He could bring them in if he paid the price dictated by the American manufacturer.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The right hon. member stated that the prices had fallen in Baltimore and in the world market.

Mr. MANION: There have been many such cases all through the history of tariffs—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Is the hon. member going to answer my question?

Mr. MANION: There have been many cases where the raising of the tariff has lowered the price. In the United States after they raised the tariff in 1861 they lowered the price on every line of goods manufactured in that country. The prices came down. Not only that, but since the war, when the British government put a tariff on a number of goods on which they had no tariff before, the prices of those goods came down in England, according to statements of Stanley Baldwin, the Prime Minister. They have established industries which never existed before, but they have lowered the prices by putting up the tariff. It has been explained by hon. members on this side of the House that they have thus given a market to their own producers, and by producing on a large scale they have lowered the prices.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. member contend that the manufacturers in England did not take advantage of the tariff protection given to them?

Mr. MANION: No, I contend they took advantage of the protection given to them to keep the market to themselves, and lowered the prices to the people of England.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I do not think the hon. member understood my question. I want to know if the manufacturer reduced his price below the level the tariff protection would have given him?

Mr. MANION: Absolutely. As soon as they got the market to themselves, so that they could purchase on a large scale—just as large production all over the world gives lower costs—they sold goods cheaper to the people. That is the statement of Mr. Stanley Baldwin. I can quote it, and I will do so later.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. member will admit that the manufacturers of England are different from those in Canada.

Mr. MANION: No, I will not admit that. I say the protective policy of Canada gives the manufacturers in Canada, and the farmers for that matter, an opportunity to hold the market for themselves; and they sell the goods cheaper when they can hold the market for themselves. That is what protection does. That is the mistake my hon. friends from the west make. If you take off the tariff you raise the prices of goods.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Get back to the argument.

Mr. MANION: The minister has been wandering from the argument. The minister dragged in the Petersen contract and gave that as a proof of his endeavour to better conditions in Canada, when we know that the only effect of the contract was to kill Sir William Petersen.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am trying to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. MANION: I was going to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean), over there—he is a farmer—is it not true—

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. RINFRET: Let us come back to the item.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend had better discuss it in the House rather than go to Montreal and cast a lot of insults on members of this House as he did recently in a speech there. My hon. friend has a good deal more courage among his friends in the city of Montreal than he has in the House of Commons.

Mr. RINFRET: Will the hon. member mention one of the insults?

Mr. MANION: I can mention many of them; I saw them in the Montreal papers. I was going to ask my hon. friend a question if I am permitted. Supposing a farmer sells, for example, 1,000 bushels of potatoes, can he not afford to sell 1,000 bushels cheaper than if he sells only 500 bushels and lets the other 500 bushels go to waste?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Not necessarily.

Mr. MANION: He certainly can, and he can make money by doing so. The manufacturer does the same thing. By keeping the market to himself he cuts down the price to the consumer and gives work to Canadians.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Will the hon. member tell us then, or will the small town lawyer to his right tell us—

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the committee to come back to the item under discussion.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): I want to ask a question.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I think I have the floor.

Mr. TOBIN (Wetaskiwin): How is it that during the war the government led by the present leader of the opposition (Mr Meighen) reduced the tariff on tractors for the purpose of lowering the price in the interest of production?

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the committee to come back to the item under discussion. The senior member for Halifax has the floor.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I do not know whether the minister understands the situation with regard to the manufacture of fertilizers in the constituency which I represent. Prior to the time that the duty was removed from fertilizers we had in the harbour of Halifax a fertilizer factory which gave employment to a large number of men, as well as to stevedores and others in connection with handling the raw material that was brought there to be manufactured. The duty was removed from fertilizers and the result was that the factory was closed. Those employed in the factory have been scattered, I cannot tell where; probably with many hundreds, many thousands of others, they have crossed the line and are now earning their living in the United States. Instead of this factory being in operation and a considerable sum of money being distributed in wages and in various other ways in my constituency, the factory is boarded up, and as we pick up our daily papers we find columns of advertising matter offering to farmers and other users of fertilizers in our country, Belgian and German fertilizers no cheaper than the home product.

Mr. BOUCHARD: They are better.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I am not prepared to say anything about that.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I am.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Probably they are no better. At any rate the production of that material in my constituency has been stopped, and instead of labour being employed there and money circulating in various ways in connection with that factory, it is closed up and we are importing from Europe Belgian and German fertilizers manufactured by cheap labour while our own people are deprived of employment in that connection. That is the situation as regards the one factory that I know about, and it is an example of many others throughout our province. They are not so large as many of the western factories and do not give as much employment or pay out as much money, but one after another is being closed up. This is a very serious matter to the people of Nova Scotia and it is one of the grievances we have in that end of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The item before the committee is a rather involved one:

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grants to seed fairs, etc.

You might say it consists of four subjects in one and I suppose that has something to do with the wide range the discussion has taken. What proportion of this appropriation of $305,000 will go for salaries and expenses of officials? I notice from the last Auditor General's report an amount of $166,344 was spent for that purpose. Perhaps the minister can give the committee some idea as to the amount for salaries and expenses in connection with the control of the distribution of seed, feed and fertilizers under this item.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same staff handles the three services.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): In view of the fact that the fertilizer business has been practically put out of business in this country I would imagine that instead of an increase in the estimate a reduction would follow.

Mr. MCTHERWELL: It is largely to keep tab on importations that the inspection staff is required.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I am afraid the minister is keeping a little too much tab on things and not doing enough to encourage industry in this country. Only on Saturday I went into a place of business in the town where I live and complaint was made as to the number of government officials coming in, forcing them to make returns to the government that are absolutely useless, worrying people into making statements. Some of these people have to keep an extra staff in order to make out statements to the government. They have inspectors coming in, one looking after one particular business, coming in one day and on the following day another one looking after something else, when they might very well be combined. I notice from the Civil Service Commission report a few days ago that about twenty new officials are being taken into the department. There has been a tremendous increase in the staff of the Department of Agriculture since the minister took office. He certainly has not reduced expenses in that respect, and instead of combining four different subjects into one item the minister ought to give us an idea of how much of this vote is being devoted to each of them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend never misses an opportunity of discussing the number of inspectors we require and the grievance that he holds against the Department of Agriculture because of their number. I took advantage of the opportunity of making a week-end visit to my hon. friend's district a few days ago. As we went through the town of Ingersoll I looked out to see if there was anything exceptional with respect to imported cheese.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Of course the minister noticed along the river three factories, every one of which was closed down?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We went on into Middlesex and spent the week-end there. I did not hear in that district any of these complaints, not one. They were in the middle of the sugar-making season, and maybe that was the reason they felt pleasant and did not retail any of the perennial grievances of my hon. friend; but I was looking for them. The people did not seem to show by their vote the other day that they were aggrieved. Did the Minister of Justice hear any complaints while he was up there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, not a word.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I ask the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Tobin), did he hear any grievances of this kind?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice was investigating those complaints when his train pulled out and left him!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not heard one whisper of these grievances.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You have no time to listen to them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Maybe not. But what about the vote registered there the other day?

Mr. MANION: What about the vote registered on the 29th of October in every section of Ontario?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, what about it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was there any Peace River agent there?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Did any officer that the government is responsible for go wrong in any respect in Peace River? The returning officer did not go wrong; it was a deputy.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, I see.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Now, I have really forgotten what the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) wanted to know. But I can make a pretty straight guess at it—something about inspectors. This work unavoidably and inevitably is largely inspectional. In order to keep down the very expense that my hon. friend is complaining about, the same staff administers seed, feed, and fertilizers; consequently the particulars are not kept separately.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Do any of these inspectors go across the line and inspect the fertilizer plants?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The tariff was referred to as a tax. Now surely the minister will not contend that commercial fertilizers are not higher in price to-day than they were before the tariff was removed? I think he had better let this item stand until he obtains for the House the exact prices of fertilizers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am able now to give the information asked for by some hon. members with respect to the number of fertilizer firms that were established and operating last year in Canada. We were nine below the number. We estimated the total at fifty; we have fifty-nine in operation. There were two hundred and eighty-nine registrations of fertilizers.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the capacity of those plants?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): The minister will realize that these firms are not manufacturing fertilizers, they are merely mixing the ingredients, and the prices are fixed at Baltimore in every instance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A great many farmers are doing the mixing for themselves

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I suppose among the fifty-nine are included some farmers who are mixing their fertilizers on the barn floor.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. McGIBBON: A few years ago during the war Professor McLennan of Toronto University reported that there were millions and millions of dollars worth of pure nitrogen gas escaping daily into the air. I think he was referring to the Okanagan Valley. That potential wealth is pretty hard to estimate. Has the minister's department, in view of the fact that this country is likely to use a large amount of fertilizer in the future, ever considered doing anything towards utilizing that vast potential wealth?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have done nothing in connection with it because we do not know where it is located.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I recall to the minister's mind that the report was made by Professor McLennan, professor of physics in the University of Toronto, who rendered distinguished service during the war? I think he devised the plan that enabled the British Admiralty to close the straits of Dover to German submarines; and he discovered helium gas. In fact, he is one of the greatest scientists on this continent. People thought the gas was of no use because it would not burn. Surely the minister is alive to the immense potential wealth of this gas?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely.

Mr. McGIBBON: Has his department considered taking any steps to utilize the gas?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will do so if my hon. friend will tell me where it is located.

Mr. McGIBBON: I refer the minister to Professor McLennan, who discovered it.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. DAVIS: Mr. Chairman, it was understood that this item should stand until the minister obtained the prices of fertilizers.

Item agreed to.

For experiments in dehydration of fruits and vegetables, $10,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Chairman, we have had rather a busy day with agriculture ever since three o'clock, and as it is now after eleven I think we might stop at this point. We have made fairly good progress and have had a very interesting and delightful discussion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend knows my weakness—I always capitulate to such a request. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

Friday, April 9, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization—Mr. Kay.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would like to inquire of the government when I may expect a return to an order of the House made on March 15 for the production of correspondence, orders in council, etc., with reference to the administration of imperial pensions in Canada by this government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As soon as the return is prepared I will be pleased to lay it on the table.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should be able to answer better than that. Has he no information about it? This is a simple question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The order has been sent to the department which it concerns and I have not as yet received the return. I have been in this House for over twenty years and I do not think a delay of one month is enough to complain about. I have seen longer delays than that.

ACTING MINISTERS

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MANION: Might I ask who is the Acting Minister of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment in the House of Commons? Is it my hon. friend?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no acting minister, because the minister is in office.

Mr. MANION: Then to whom should we apply in this House for information, if we wish it?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do give that information occasionally, but I understand that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald, Antigonish) would answer questions.

Mr. HANSON: May I ask who represents the Postmaster General in this House?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have that honour and pleasure.

TEST VOYAGE—LINER REGINA

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. PRICE: I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to an announcement appearing in the Halifax Herald under date of April 3, which is as follows:

White Star liner Regina that is having a test in making Halifax her terminus for this voyage, sails from Liverpool to-day, April 3, with passengers and cargo for Halifax. The liner is expected April 10 and will sail on her return trip April 14. Strenuous efforts are being made to fill the ship with return cargo.

In view of the fact that the Regina is making Halifax her terminus as a test case for this voyage, I would like to ask the Minister of Railways what effort is being made by the Canadian National Railways to furnish this ship with a return cargo.

Mr. DUNNING: I will be pleased to get that information for my hon. friend.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume the motion is printed or the second reading would not be moved?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We announced last night that we would take it up.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am aware of that. I rise only to say that I am not aware of the contents of the bill with reference to the special feature that was under debate, and in so far as that special feature relates to the principle of the bill, I do not wish the fact that we agree to the motion for the second reading to be taken as an acceptance of that feature of the principle.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Revaluation of land sold to settlers.

Mr. HANNESSON: May I ask the minister whether he is prepared to include those who may technically not be on the land, but who have done a certain amount of improvement work, and have resided on the land for, say, a minimum of five years? Is he prepared to put them on the same basis as those who come in under the empire settlement scheme and take up land?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. I may say that there is a considerable number of changes in the bill, though no changes in the first page of the bill. Probably I had better read the clause proposed with respect to revaluation.

Mr. HANNESSON: Can we not have a copy of the changes?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was hoping to have a reprint of the changes ready. I have not got them at the moment, but they may be here a little later. The proposed new clause (c) of section 68 reads as follows:

> The difference or depreciation in value to be determined shall be the diminution, not due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, in the present market value of the land as compared with the price at which the settler agreed to purchase the said land from the board provided that in any case where the actual sale price is greater than the maximum amount which under section 16 of this act may be advanced by the board in the purchase of land on behalf of any settler, such maximum amount shall be deemed the sale price for the purposes of this section.

There are several cases where the board was willing to pay, say for example, $4,000, but where the settler himself was so anxious to secure the land that he paid, say, $1,000 more. That $1,000 will not be taken into consideration in any revaluation, but simply the maximum amount paid for the land by the board.

Mr. HANNESSON: I am afraid the minister did not get my question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was coming to that, but first I wanted to review briefly the provisions of this section.

With respect to the man who is now off the land and the man who is paid up on his land, their contracts are closed out, and they will receive no consideration.

Then there is another case, that of the man who purchased for, say, $3,000. He purchased at that price and paid nothing further himself. He has paid off all his indebtedness, we will say, except for the sum of $800. If in the revaluation he was entitled to a reduction of $1,000, there would be coming to him $200, but under the provisions of this section he will be credited only with $800; he will not be credited with anything further than the amount of his indebtedness to the board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the way it was before; it is that way still?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. HANNESSON: The case I had in mind was that of a man who has put in four or five years in occupancy and development and who is technically off the land, but has no desire whatsoever to abandon it, and whose contract has not been closed out in the sense of his land having been disposed of to someone else. Will he be put on the same basis as the new purchaser of the land? I am asking particularly with regard to the man who has put in, say, five years on the land, and has done from, say, one to two thousand dollars' worth of improvements. If he now desires to get the benefit of revaluation and resume possession and continue on the farm, will he be considered under this act, or is the man who comes in under the empire settlement scheme going to get the preference over the returned soldier who has put in five or six years on the farm and actually done work showing that he is a capable farmer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid section 68 (a) would cut him out, because he has to be actually residing on the land. I have not made any change in clause (a).

Mr. HANNESSON: There are some men who for the purpose of making a little money, and with no desire to abandon their land, have gone away, and technically they may be off the land, but if they now desire to continue under this revaluation, will the government consider their case?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I could not go outside the limitations of the act, and section 68 (a) says very plainly:

Application for revaluation can be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the said land.

Mr. HANNESSON: I understand the minister to mean there the man who has definitely abandoned his land, but I am drawing his attention to the case of the man who did not wish to abandon his land, but found it impossible to stay on it for the time being, and I am asking if a preference is going to be given to the man who is coming out to Canada under the empire settlement scheme. Is the new settler to be given the right to buy at a lower price, but not the returned man who has put in many years on the land. and who now desires to purchase at the reduced valuation?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Perhaps we can get at it in a different way. Is it not possible that the man to whom the hon. member for Selkirk refers could go back on the land and then make application for revaluation? Would not that meet the case?

Mr. HANNESSON: That would be satisfactory.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In that case of course he would come within the provisions of the act as he would be actually residing on the land at the date he made his application.

Mr. HANNESSON: The minister does not quite understand my point. If a man has been technically off the land for years, having actually determined that unless there was a revaluation it would be hopeless for him to continue, but now under a revaluation he would like to continue, is he not to be given a chance?

Mr. STEWART (West Edmonton): That is, his contract is not cancelled, it is still in existence. If he moves back to his farm and takes up actual residence, he comes within the provisions of the act.

Mr. HANNESSON: Would the minister undertake to say that the application of any settler who wants to continue on his land will be considered within two months of the passing of this measure?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would say most emphatically that if he is on the land at the date he files his application, then he comes within the provisions of the act, and whether it is within two months or up to the date it must terminate, his application will be received.

Mr. HANNESSON: But the minister will remember that when this matter was first under discussion both the member for Neepawa (Mr. Murphy) and I drew attention to the men whom the board had tried to put off their lands. It is those men who are not now actually physically off the land that I am dealing with. If within two months of the passage of this bill they come back and say they want to continue on their land and come within the class who have been five years or more on the land and have done improvements to the extent of $1,500, will they be allowed to come in under the revaluation scheme?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. I think I would go further than that. I propose to amend the act by giving six months from the date of the passage of the act for the final filing of applications, so if the men were actually in residence four months after this measure becomes law they would come within its provisions.

Mr. HANNESSON: And in the meantime those lands will not be disposed of under the allotment to the Empire Settlement Board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have been discussing the matter with the chairman of the Soldier Settlement Board, and he is extremely anxious that urgency be used in clearing this matter up, for the very reason that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) has mentioned, that a large number of men are waiting to see what is going to happen in the revaluation before they come to a final decision as to whether they will continue on their land or not. That is why we first thought of giving a year from the passage of the act for the filing of claims, but I have suggested that we reduce that time to six months in order that we might facilitate the operation of the act.

Mr. HANNESSON: In the meantime the minister will not—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg your pardon. No action would be taken to dispossess any man until he had had an opportunity to make a final decision.

Mr. HANNESSON: I understand that under the empire settlement agreement a certain number of units have been promised, and that some work has already been done on them. Will the minister give the House an assurance that so far as the soldier settlement lands are concerned none of the units that pertain to any of those men who have not been absent more than a year will be allotted under the empire settlement scheme, so as to afford those boys an opportunity to come back?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Unless the land was going to be left idle I think I would be safe in promising my hon. friend that no action would be taken on the part of the Soldier Settlement Board. But in the event of a farm being unoccupied and unseeded, it might be necessary to take some action, as would also be the case where the men had voluntarily abandoned their holdings. But proceedings to dispossess them will not be taken.

Mr. HANNESSON: That is hardly wide enough, Mr. Chairman. If a man by reason of not having the money to seed his land last year, for instance, has gone out to work and wants to continue his farm, it would not be fair to him to say, "You were not on the land last year and you are not on it this spring," when practically the board had told him that he was not going to be allowed to come back. I am asking that the board reserve to those men who have done a substantial amount of improvements and resided on their land for four or five years—fix it at the minimum of five years—the right to continue. In other words, I ask that their land should be reserved and not allotted to the Empire Settlement Board during the time within which those men should have the option of returning to their farms.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know whether I follow my hon. friend correctly. I do not want to make any promises that would embarrass the board in their operations, but so far as I have been able to learn there is no disposition on the part of the board to dispossess men who evince any reasonable desire to remain on the land and have some chance of making good. But to say that no action of any kind would be taken, might in some cases tie up the operations of the board. Take the case my hon. friend has just cited, if the land was not cultivated last year, and there was not much prospect of its being cultivated this year, it would be a rather serious consideration so far as that farm is concerned. On the other hand, I would be willing to go the limit in giving the soldier every chance, for I would much prefer to have him remain on the land than give it to a newcomer if the soldier has any chance at all to make good. I could not absolutely promise a cessation of operations altogether.

Mr. HANNESSON: It is merely the principle that I want accepted.

[Mr. Hannesson.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the minister can possibly meet the request of the hon. member for Selkirk under this bill. It seems to me the point raised by him is so important, and the minister is going to be confronted with so many cases of the kind in the administration of the act, that it might be well to reserve the clause affecting it and pass on. As it appeals to me, the minister is going to run across cases of the most striking discrimination; he cannot possibly avoid it. There are going to be two or three classes. The class that the hon. member for Selkirk has in mind is this: Men have struggled manfully on the land against an inflated valuation, and consequently an inflated obligation, and after three or four years their hearts have grown sick with hope deferred and they have quit. They have used good judgment in doing so. They are not guilty even of bad judgment, to say nothing of bad faith. They simply saw that the land could not be paid for under the price it had to be bought at in 1919. Now that agreement is cancelled. The number of cases where the men are off the land and the agreement would be cancelled is large. It is the duty of the board when the man is off the premises to cancel the agreement and therefore the agreements would be cancelled in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. What the hon. member for Selkirk says is this: Are you going to take that man who left the land simply because of the very state of affairs which is sought to be remedied by this bill, left it not because of bad judgment but of good judgment, left it not because of bad faith but of good faith to give the board the best chance to go ahead—are you going to say to that man, "You are in the cold forever, but we will invite people from England and the rest of Europe and loan them $500 to buy this land at a low valuation." The minister sees that he will not be able to maintain that attitude, but if he leaves the bill as it is he will be in an embarrassing position.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is not suggesting that if a soldier wishes to be reinstated that be done?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It cannot be done under this act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not understand my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the point; the minister is going to be confronted with those cases by the score.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought I had made that clear when I said that where there was a cancellation of the agreement there would be no consideration.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I agree wholly with the minister's interpretation of the act as it is. But leaving the act as it is, the minister in its administration will be confronted with a class of cases where the discrimination, the unfairness is so brutal that he will never be able to hold his position, he will have to come back to parliament and get an amendment. The class of cases presented by the member for Selkirk is a large class, and it is a class whose appeal the minister will have to answer. There is another class where discrimination will come in, but I do not want to confuse the issue by dealing with it at the moment. I suggest to the minister that he leave this clause and take it up with the board again to see if he cannot so recast it that the board will have a discretion; or, better still, that the board will be entitled and asked to give some preference to the soldier who has worked on that land and left it solely because he saw that the obligation was too large for him to surmount.

Mr. CLARK: The point I want to make is exactly the point made by my right hon. leader in clearer language than I could make it. I understood the hon. member for Selkirk perfectly. The class of case he desires to protect is that of the man whose agreement has been cancelled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Frankly, I did not get that.

Mr. CLARK: That is the man who is on the land and is in arrears and needs a revaluation. There are scores of cases to-day where men have found it impossible to carry the burden at the price at which the land was valued when they took it over in 1919. In fact, I drew the minister's attention on the orders of the day at the opening of the session to fifty cases in the Fraser valley, where fifty families had been brought from the Old Country, to take up land that had been abandoned by soldier settlers who could not carry the load. The point is this: we consider that before one of the empire settlers is brought in to take over soldier settler land, the man who was forced to abandon that land should be given an opportunity to come in again and take over the land at a revaluation; otherwise there would be discrimination and unfairness to the whole class of soldier settlers who are to-day suffering from the need of revaluation. Under the act as it is drafted, those men will not be attended to. There is no obligation on the Soldier Settlement Board to attend to them. The minister may desire that they be considered—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no, I quite admit that that is not in the act.

Mr. CLARK: The point made by the hon. member for Selkirk, by my leader and by myself is that those are the men for whom there is need of protection. We all know that the Soldier Settlement Board will not put a man off his land merely because he is in arrears. We know that if a revaluation is made, and that man is making good on the land, he will not be put off. We quite understand that. But I think the man who has been forced to abandon his land because of the burden of over-valuation should be given the opportunity to come back. The Soldier Settlement Board should be bound by legislation to reconsider the case of that man, and therefore this legislation is defective. Furthermore, I understand that the bill which is before the House is not yet printed and in our hands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The amendments are not there; that is the difficulty.

Mr. CLARK: This is a very vital act, one for which we have been pressing for several years past, and it involves millions of money. In my opinion it should be given the most serious consideration. I submit that we are not in a position this afternoon to consider the bill when we have not actually got it before us. We are asked to deal with a bill which the minister has read to us. I confess personally that I could not hear his explanation, and I am sure many other members could not hear and appreciate what he said.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should be very glad to have the particular phase which has been brought up by the right hon. leader of the opposition, the member for Selkirk and the member for Vancouver-Burrard, discussed now at a little more length, because I have made it very clear that we are not considering the man who is off the land. If you deal with a man whose contract is cancelled, what are you going to do with the man who has paid in full? Quite a considerable number have paid up.

Mr. HANNESSON: They did not get a bad bargain.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not agree with you. A great many of these men have come into money; money has been left them by their friends, and notwithstanding the fact that they had a contract based on a price which undoubtedly would be reduced on revaluation, they have paid in full. How can we discriminate against a man of that class and in favour of the man who has left the land and has had his contract cancelled? I want to be generous to the soldier, but I want the House to understand that it is going to cost the country a great deal of money if we are going to take into consideration every phase of the act.

Mr. HANNESSON: Are you figuring on selling these lands that have been repossessed by the Soldier Settlement Board? If it is necessary to revalue the land and reduce the price to get settlers why can Canada better afford to take a loss for the newcomer than for the soldier who has spent years upon it and wants to get it back?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know that argument is very appealing. I think my hon. friend wants to be fair.

Mr. HANNESSON: Absolutely.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If you want to be fair, I doubt if you can draft an act for the purpose for which this act is designed and be fair to everybody. I will admit that at once, but I point out that as you begin to take into consideration various aspects of the soldier settlement scheme you take a mighty big contract on your hands. If you are going to be absolutely fair to every man who went on the land, you will find it is a most difficult proposition. I do not see how you are going to discriminate against the man who is on his land, who has made good, and paid the government every dollar. A considerable number have done so. He has made good, because undoubtedly he did not earn that money on the land, but got it from some other source and paid the government. Now, he is to be shut out, and you are going to deal with the man who has a cancelled contract. I do not see for the life of me how you can discriminate in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister is absolutely right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I welcome discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The bill, as it is seems to me, is founded upon a principle upon which the minister is never going to be able consistently to stand. Unless you get something that is defensible all around you cannot work it out. You will be driven from one post to another and will not know where you stand. You are quite right that if you come in with this class you are going to be met with another class, against whom you are discriminating. Under the bill as it stands the minister is trying to be fair only to one class of soldier—the men still on the land. That is the principle of the bill. It is an attempt to help those soldiers who still, after five years are on the land, to the extent of reducing their indebtedness by the loss in land values. I do not believe the minister is ever going to be able to stand on that principle. But if he had said, "Here, we have done all we can in general for the soldiers; the man on the land has been treated at least as well as the man off the land; now we are going to pass a piece of legislation to assist in settlement, in order to do for the settler what the vendor would do under the same circumstances; that is to say, where we have lands that are not paid for against which there is a heavier indebtedness than the value of the land itself, we intend to revalue those lands and reduce the debt to what the land is worth, because we know we cannot get any more anyway"—if he had said that he would have stated a principle upon which he could stand. I admit it would not be as generous to some as the principle of the bill, but better to others and more consistent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not quite follow that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I suggested was that the minister might have framed his bill in such a way as to say to all purchasers of soldier settler lands that wherever there is more money owed us than the land is worth, we are going to reduce the debt to the amount the land is worth. We do it not because we think you owe us more; but because we cannot discriminate against the soldiers. We have done the best we can for the soldiers all over, but we know we cannot collect any more than the land is worth, just as a vendor would say to a purchaser: we would rather you got the land than somebody else outside. We would rather have you than an empire settler to whom we would have to sell the land at a lower price than that at which we are ready to sell it to you. We will reduce the price to you to a really fair basis and you can have it if you want it. If you do not want it, you do not need to take it. I fancy if the minister had framed his bill on that principle he never could have been jilted around from one point to another.

But how in the world he is going to stand in this position, I do not know. He cannot answer the class of cases presented by the hon. member for Selkirk. Those men will say to him: We are far more deserving than the other fellows who are hanging on to the land and who have done nothing. I have sold land to men who are quite content to sleep in a shack, stay there year in and year out, get enough to live on, never pay a cent, never pay a cent of taxes, and do almost nothing. That is the extent of their ambition. But others in a similar condition would simply say: Well, we owe more than the land is worth; we will get out and make a living; we will try to get on in the world. That is the class of cases presented by the hon. member for Selkirk. Will the minister say to the man who hung around and did nothing and who really owes far more than the land is worth: We will help you, and at the same time say to the worker, the fellow who has realized his position and, like a man of business, has got out and tried to make a living elsewhere, a more deserving man in every way: We will not help you at all; you can go and shift for yourself, and we will sell the land you had to an empire settler for perhaps half the amount that stands against it? The minister never in the world will stay in that position. I will tell him right now, he will be back next year, if not this session, asking for legislation to enable him to deal with that latter class of cases. After he has done this, the case he has in mind, that is of those who have paid up, will be back on him too.

Supposing you have two farms, both bought at the same price and both of equal value, one sold to "A," an excellent settler, and the other sold to "B," a laggard. "B" lets his debt accumulate. "A" goes ahead; he and his family labour and they pay off the debt. The minister says to the laggard: We will help you out; we will cut your debt down to a third; and he says to the man who has had ambition and who has paid off the debt on his farm: We have got your money and we do not care what becomes of you. That case will be hard to meet, although not as hard as those presented by the hon. member for Selkirk.

In a word, if the minister is going to stand only on the principle of helping the settler, he cannot keep this bill in its present shape; he must deal with all settlers alike. But if he stands on the principle of protecting the public treasury and of handling government property to the best advantage of the Dominion, simply giving the soldiers the preference, he has a sound answer to all comers.

Mr. NEILL: The matter complained of by the hon. member for Selkirk, with whom I entirely agree, is somewhat different and was not brought about by the bill now under consideration. The grievance was in existence before this bill was contemplated, because it is caused by the government taking salvaged farms of soldier settlers and selling them at a reduced price to British Empire settlers and to them only. That condition existed before and it will still exist even though this measure is proceeded with on the basis suggested by the leader of the opposition, namely, that of making the best of a bad bargain, which, I take it, is practically the attitude he assumes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is it.

Mr. NEILL: I suggest that we might still deal with this measure and then deal with the other not so much by legislation as by government administration. In the past without any legislation they perpetrated the injustice complained of by the hon. member for Selkirk. That is, they took these salvaged farms and sold them at a reduced price, but they reserved them for men across the sea. The Canadian citizen, whether he was on the land or not, should have had the preference, but the government or the board made some kind of deal for British Empire settlement by which they agreed to provide so many thousand farms and they are apparently adhering to that agreement and reserving those salvaged farms for that purpose. They will not sell them to any Canadian at all; they will give the preference to a Britisher who may never have been a soldier.

The past cannot be undone; they cannot take back such of these lands as have been already resold under this settlement scheme; but they should at least, merely as a matter of administration, declare that the land—I am talking about the salvaged farms—at its reduced price will be offered first to Canadian soldiers and second possibly to Canadian citizens before it goes into the British Empire scheme. That is the weakness of that scheme. The grievance is not caused by the introduction of this bill. I would suggest that to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that, but the bill creates this discrimination that never can remain. I have been in governments long enough to know that if you have not an answer for a delegation who can show a gross discrimination against themselves, you will yield to that delegation.

Mr. NEILL: But the discrimination was there before this bill was introduced.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No discrimination.

Mr. HANNESSON: May I suggest also that only 500 farms have been actually given to British Empire settlers? It is proposed to settle 1,300 this year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Twelve hundred.

Mr. HANNESSON: I am asking that that be not done in the meantime while this bill is going through.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I would like to make a suggestion for the consideration of the minister which it appears to me might remedy the situation. To make my point clear, let me give this illustration. Supposing I was a returned soldier who took up a farm under the board. I remained on it for four years and then I came to the conclusion that I had purchased it at such a price that I never could make good. I left it. I am now off the farm. The government decide in this bill to make a revaluation in such cases. Assuming that I come to the minister and put my case to him, saying: I left the farm because it was valued at $7,000; your board to-day will value it at only $5,000; I spent four years of my life on it and I would like to get the first chance to go back. In dealing with an individual case the minister will say to me: Yes, you did considerable work on that farm and you will get the first chance as it is now vacant. I think that is what he will tell me. If I understand the point of the hon. member for Selkirk, he is asking the minister to extend that same principle not to one individual but to all of the class.

Mr. STEVENS: Opportunity.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): In that way men who have made certain improvements on those farms but who, as my leader said, using their best judgment, left them, so that the farms are now vacant, can come to the government after this legislation goes through and say: Under your revaluation scheme we want to go back on our land. Who are their competitors? Their competitors are British Empire settlers, and so we ask that the government reserve those farms for some period to the former occupants. The minister suggested a period of six months, and I think that would be very fair.

I come now to the suggestion that these abandoned farms be not turned over to empire settlers or any other class of settlers coming in for a period of say four or six months, or whatever time the minister determines in his legislation, and that those soldier settlers who have abandoned them be notified that they are now available under this revaluation scheme, the time being fixed within which they must elect. If that period is fixed at six months, that puts me, for example, in the position that within six months I can come and get my farm back. That gives the man who has done work on that farm a preference over all others.

Mr. MANION: I have been thinking of offering a suggestion that might be considered to advantage by the minister. It seems to me that any soldier who desired to obtain land which he had himself previously occupied, or which perhaps some other soldier had farmed, should be given the preference over a stranger, coming within our gates. The object of this scheme was no doubt originally to settle people on the land, but it was secondarily—I am not sure that it was not primarily—the intention to assist soldiers to go upon the land if they wanted to do so. I am sure the minister is anxious to further that end. Now, in view of the discussion which has so far taken place to-day, and in view of the suggestions which have been made, of a very sound and sane character, on behalf of those soldier settlers who may be deprived of their land if this bill goes through in its present form, I would advise the minister, with the most sincere desire to have the legislation improved, to hold up the bill temporarily in order that he may be able to consider it further with the Soldier Settlement Board to see whether some arrangement looking to the end I suggest might not be submitted by way of amendment. I have had no legal training, but I venture to think that I could frame an amendment that would meet the suggestion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There would be no difficulty in regard to the amendment. It is a question of principle.

Mr. MANION: There would be no difficulty in framing an amendment to cover the point that has been raised but there might be some difficulty in meeting some other objection that might be involved. It would be better, I think, for the minister to take the matter up with the Soldier Settlement Board and have the bill re-drafted. If there are several branches that might be affected by the amendment, they could also be taken into consideration. I really think that the minister would do well to hold up the bill for the time being and, after discussing it with the board, bring it back next week when the House would be in a better position to consider it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There would be no difficulty about amending the bill to meet the contingency raised, but we must bear in mind all the facts. Speaking from memory I think there are 500 farms that have been sold to British settlers, and in addition to these a considerable number have been sold to Canadian civilians. My hon. friends must not forget that in attempting to widen the scope of the legislation we are apt to open the door to unlimited difficulties.

Mr. MANION: I understand that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I speak subject to correction, but I do not think there was very much depreciation in the particular farms I have mentioned.

Mr. HANNESSON: There are many farms in which there is depreciation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There may be some in my hon. friend's locality. But as a matter of fact the salvaged farms to date show a profit.

Mr. HANNESSON: Not those sold under the empire settlement scheme.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am now referring to the whole lot of them.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister is speaking only of farms that have been sold.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but they are a factor in the discussion. If we say to the man whose agreement has been cancelled, "Seeing that your farm is not sold we will give you an opportunity to purchase," what shall we say to the other fellow from whom some civilian had bought land for less money than is paid to-day? That man would come back and tell us that had he been treated fairly he would have taken up his farm again.

4 p.m.

Mr. MANION: Merely because a wrong has been done to some in the past is no reason for doing a wrong to others to-day. Certain things that were wrong were done under the act in the past, and they cannot be undone, but that is no reason why we should go on injuring other soldiers whom we might treat more fairly. That is my argument for holding up the bill for the present.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not objecting to that argument, but I want the committee to appreciate the difficulty of securing an equitable adjustment. If I could have conceived any equitable way of meeting the difficulty a year ago I would have been ready to recommend revaluation then, but the whole problem is hedged around with difficulties of all sorts. There are difficulties no matter from what angle you view it. I have no doubt that every individual member can get up and point to some case of discrimination, and there is no lawyer in this House who in my opinion could devise a means of meeting all those cases.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is referring to individual cases. I would remind him that there is a large class of cases of returned soldiers who on coming back, because of red tape or for some other reason, found it necessary to borrow money on their lands at inflated rates of interest. What will the minister do with such men? These are not isolated cases; they constitute a large class.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. BROWN: There will no doubt be difficulties in the application of the act but probably they will not be so great in actual practice as they appear to be in this discussion. In my judgment, the greater number of those who left the land through discouragement will not want to come back. In most cases they have had enough of hard experience to make them disinclined to return; and their equipment, too, has been sold. I doubt therefore whether there will be any applications from such men to be reinstated. At the same time, however, the bill should be so framed as to allow any such who might care to take advantage of it to do so. I felt from the outset that there would be considerable difficulty in framing a satisfactory bill if we intended to apply the principle of absolute justice to all. That simply cannot be done. A reference to Hansard will show that as far back as 1922 the hon. member for Red Deer and myself proposed that we should consider the whole question as a new colonization scheme. Whether the principle of dealing fairly as between soldier and soldier was uppermost in the mind of the government of the day when the bill was first passed is immaterial. Whatever objection has been taken to a revaluation has been based upon the fact that we were dealing unfairly with the country. But our answer to that objection has always been that the country stands to suffer a great loss anyway and we might just as well face the situation. Bearing that in mind, may we not adopt the principle of a salvage scheme in framing this legislation? We want to make the best of what, in spite of all good intentions, has turned out to be a bad job, and I fancy that it would be just as well for us to put aside the idea of absolute justice in every case and simply consider the matter as a colonization scheme. I was severely criticized by my opponent in the last election for so describing it on one occasion, but it seems to me to be the only practical way of dealing with the problem. Let us regard it as a colonization scheme and make the best we can of what has proved to be a bad job. If there are any men who are anxious to go back on the land under a revaluation, let us make it possible for them to do so. In any case, the number in my opinion will be small; but even if it is small let us draw up the legislation in such a way as to take care of them.

Mr. HANNESSON: In view of the fact that some amendments have already been proposed, would it be possible between now and next Monday for the minister to appoint a small committee to revamp the bill so as to meet the views held on all sides of the House? I am sure that we all want to see the scheme made workable so as to render justice to all concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am perfectly willing to have the bill revamped, but I assumed the general opinion was that we were going to deal only with the men who were actually in residence on the land. But I have been mistaken; that does not seem to have been entirely the consensus of opinion in the House. If I get the opinion of the House there is no difficulty about preparing legislation; the difficulty is to know exactly how far everyone wants to go. I want to say very frankly that when you have thought of all the different people you want to help, you will still have a whole army which you cannot help. I ask my hon. friend again, what right has anyone to prepare legislation that will help the man who has paid up—we have all his money and he is a success—or to help the man who made a failure; through no fault of his own he is penniless; he will have difficulty in buying implements again in order to return to the land. There are two classes; if you help one you must help the other, but then are you to say to the man who has been cleaned out altogether and who has had his land sold, that you cannot do anything for him?

As you go on you will find innumerable cases which cannot be covered by legislation. I want the committee to understand clearly that I started out with the best intentions in the world of helping the men. I do not agree with the statement of my hon. friend that many of these men have just stuck there without doing anything, because most of those chaps are gone; they have been wiped out. The man we want to help is the one who has struggled and stuck and hoped that something would happen, living in penury and still wanting to stick. We might very well help that man now; this legislation was drafted for the sole purpose of helping him, because he is still in possession of his contract and he still feels that if he can get reasonable treatment he will continue. If we are to widen the scope I want to know how far we are to widen it, because there is no use in my spending three or four hours working away and then bringing the bill back, to find that some other member has found something else to object to. That is what I am anxious about this afternoon; I want to know how far parliament thinks I should go with this revaluation.

Mr. HANNESSON: We all realize there is going to be injustice done to some. The man who has paid in full can be considered later; what we are primarily interested in now is land settlement, and fair treatment to the settler. I gave this House a number of instances of men who had been put off the land only last year, or who had been told to get off. Those men have struggled for seven or eight years, and those are the men I want to protect. To-day I mailed to the minister copies of letters from men who have either been driven off their land or have been threatened with eviction. All I am asking is that consideration be given these cases where men are either living on the farm or want to stay there, having done a certain amount of improvement work. Fix a value, if you like, of $1,000 or $1,500 for the improvements; say that he must have been on the land for five years; limit it in any way, so long as the men fitted for land settlement are kept on the farms. There is an idea prevalent among the soldier settlers that other people, empire settlers and civilians, are shown a preference over these men, after they have struggled on the land for years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is now giving me something on which I can draft legislation. If it would satisfy my hon. friend to say definitely that a man must have been in residence for five years and that he must have created improvements to the value of $1,000, we know what to do. But even so, some other hon. member will immediately present another difficulty.

Mr. MULLINS: I received to-day a petition signed by fifteen soldier settlers of my constituency, and it might help the situation if I read it:

Seeing that an increasing number of soldier settlers are finding it impossible to meet payments due The Soldier Settlement Board and live in a manner becoming free born British subjects, and furthermore as it appears that settlers coming from Great Britain are being given land, stock, etcetera belonging to soldier settlers at a reduction of at least 50 per cent on the first cost to soldier settlers, these soldier settlers having been forced off the land through excess valuation at time of purchase.

It is resolved that the time has come for the government of Canada to make an immediate re-valuation, said re-valuation to be at least a 50 per cent reduction on purchase price.

It is further resolved that no soldier settlers be asked to sign a quit claim deed until the case is investigated by a party of three: first, one party appointed by the Soldier Settlement Board; second, one party appointed by the soldier settlers; third, one party appointed by The Soldier Settlement Board and soldier settler representatives. If after investigation it is shown that the inability of the soldier settler to make the payment due the Soldier Settlement Board is through no fault of the settler, he should be entited to continue on the farm.

Here is a clause which I do not quite understand.

If after investigation the settler is still forced to leave the land, he should be paid $25 for each month he has been on government land.

After the 50 per cent cut on the loan has been approved by the government all arrears should be advanced and placed over the remaining period of the original twenty-five years.

This meeting is on record demanding that these recommendations be carried out before the next Soldier Settlement Board payment is due, otherwise the majority of soldier settlers will be forced to leave the farms.

That petition is signed by fifteen of the boys who have been overseas, giving their regimental numbers. I think we should be as liberal as possible to these men who have been struggling on the land out west. In my opinion it is far better to do that than to proceed with the present scheme of giving $500 to some stranger coming to Canada, and $1,000 to another man who has been here perhaps a year or two and has become naturalized. In these latter cases the lumber merchants in the small towns trust the man with lumber for his buildings; the storekeeper trusts him until he gets his loan; the man has not had very much experience in western Canada, and becomes a failure. I think we should help our soldier settlers first, and so keep on the land the men who have had some experience and who are acquainted with conditions in western Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I do not wish to go beyond the actual point being discussed. At the risk of repeating a little, let me say that I think the minister recognizes the fact that suggestions coming from this side of the House are not captious and are not intended to place difficulties in the way of the bill. As far as the soldier settlers are concerned, those acquainted with the facts know that they all regard this as a reform, if I may call it such, which is long overdue, and they are very appreciative of the efforts being made by the minister to give them something in the way of relief. While it may not make any difference to the minister, I may say that personally the principle of this measure commends itself very strongly to me, and I think he is endeavouring to work out some real redress for men whom everyone in this country wants to help.

With that preface let me say that anyone who has studied this problem realizes that it is encompassed with difficulties. You cannot possibly remove the injustice in every case. The case of a man who has paid up fully becomes a very difficult proposition. Take this case for which we are trying to provide a remedy, that of men who have put in time on farms and then left. What galls them is this: if I have put in four or five years on a farm and because the valuation was inflated I have had to leave, you now bring in a principle of revaluation and I see an empire settler or a civilian come in on my farm, under the revaluation.

It naturally galls them, and I feel there is an injustice. I feel that appeals to the average man. So all we say is this, give the man who has put in time on the farm a chance. I do not think it would be difficult to bring him under the act. It would not be remedying all injustices, but it would be providing a remedy for that class of cases, and I think the minister if he is so disposed can easily draft a clause that will give that class the first chance of farms that have not been disposed of. I would like to see such a clause inserted in the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am intensely in sympathy with the proposal of the hon. member for Selkirk, and I would strongly suggest to the minister the advisability of considering favourably some such amendment to the bill. But there does appear to me to be a difficulty; it may not be an insuperable one; I hope it will not be, and that is the class of farm which has been abandoned by the soldier one or two years ago and has already been sold or is in the possession of somebody else. If we could get over that difficulty, I see no opposition in this House to the amendment proposed.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): The bill as introduced is designed to help only one class of men, those who are still on the land and are fortunate enough to be still in debt. It does not apply to those who are unfortunate enough to have paid up. The minister said that he would like an indication from the House as to how far this bill should go. For my part, I would go the whole way. If you are going to have a revaluation, then to be fair you must revalue all the lands, and it must apply to all classes. The man who has paid up is the easiest class of all to deal with. All you need to do in regard to him is to make a refund. His case presents no complications at all. It is simply a matter of money, and he is just as much entitled to be considered as the man who has not yet paid up. The only difference is that you have got his money, and you have not got the other fellow's. You are not going to demand full payment from the man who has not paid up, so I think you should make a refund to the man who has paid up. The only fair legislation that can be enacted is legislation that will deal with all classes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You cannot reach all classes. There are 6,000 men now who have abandoned their farms, and a fair proportion of those farms have already been sold, some of them at a reduced valuation.

Mr. BOYS: How many of the 6,000 have paid up?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are 1,000 who have paid up, and 6,000 who have abandoned their farms altogether.

Mr. DUNNING: The 1,000 has no relation to the 6,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. Now one of those 6,000 may come to you and say: John Jones, a civilian, got my farm; I have no complaint if you create a reduction, but if you do so, you should give me the opportunity to get my farm back at that reduced value. What are you going to do in that case? It is true there will probably be only a few such cases, but undoubtedly there will be cases of that kind, and I merely mention these things to show how absolutely impossible it is to be fair all round.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me that the case raised by the hon. member for Selkirk could be dealt with in a very simple manner by following the same course we take with regard to homestead entries. Under the present regulations any land thrown open for homesteading is eligible for entry by soldier settlers forty-eight hours in advance of the time at which civilians can file entry. It appears to me that this is not a case for legislation at all; it is simply a matter of administration, and if the minister would intimate to the committee that he would make a departmental regulation to cover the case, I think it would meet the situation fairly well. Put all these soldier lands on the market again, advertise them for a certain length of time, and let all soldiers who have previously held land be given an opportunity to make application, and their applications be considered before further action is taken. It seems to me that is the only fair way to deal with it. The soldier who has abandoned his land or has been evicted by the board is usually not the very best man to make a new contract with, and I am rather of the opinion that in the great majority of these cases the board would not sell to him. There are cases where they would, but I think, after all, we are making a mountain out of a molehill, because I think very few of these men will be in a position or will want to go back on the land at the present time. To meet the wishes of the committee, I think the minister might promise that some such regulations will be made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend mean that he be given a second chance in the event of his exercising his homestead right? He now has a preference if he has not exercised his homestead right.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would give him the opportunity to make application for available Soldier Settlement Board lands.

Mr. MILLAR: In such a case what adjustment would you make regarding the payments the soldier had made? I hold in my hand a letter from a soldier who in addition to the grant he got from the Soldier Settlement Board paid $1,000 in cash for his land and $964 for equipment. This man claims that he is almost being driven off the land, that he is just hanging on. Suppose he is forced to leave the land, and seizes the opportunity suggested by the hon. member for Mackenzie, what adjustment would be made with regard to the money he had paid?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I cannot see that this should be taken into consideration at all. His equity has all disappeared. He has thrown up the land, he finds his money has gone, and the best thing the board can do is not to sell him that particular farm, for perhaps it is the very last farm he would want, but the board will have these lands written down to their actual value, and I assume the man would have to pay the actual value of the land.

Mr. ARTHURS: There seems to be about as much diversity of opinion in regard to this bill as there was when this question was before the committee some years ago. When the bill was up here before, I asked for certain information regarding the number of men in each province in certain categories. I also pointed out that no bill could be successful unless some provision was made for those settlers who had paid up in full, who had perhaps borrowed the money from their friends or outside sources. They should have, in my humble opinion, exactly the same treatment as the man who is hanging on to his land by an eyelash. The minister has also failed to state to the House exactly what he means regarding whose property shall be available for revaluation. I understand him to mean anyone who owes anything to the department, anyone who has any indebtedness. Suppose a man owes ten or twenty dollars to the department, and the revaluation brings his farm down one or two or three thousand dollars, what is to be done in the meantime? Is this man to be handed a cheque for the difference?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why not? And if so, why should not the man who has paid up be entitled to the same consideration as the man who owes money to the department? Is the revaluation to be only to the extent of the indebtedness presently before the government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is most absurd and unfair. If a man owes $3,000 he gets $3,000 taken off the value of his land; if he owes merely $30 he gets only $30 allowed under exactly similar circumstances. These anomalies must be considered before the bill is passed by this House. I am firmly of the opinion that any revaluation should take cognizance of conditions all the way through; that is, the man who has paid up, the man who has not paid up, and the man who has been forced off his farm either by the excessive cost of the land or by circumstances over which he had no control.

Mr. BOYS: Mr. Chairman, I have not very many men in my county affected by the provisions of this bill, but there are some. It seems to me that there are three classes affected: Those who have paid in full and abandoned; those who have partly paid and abandoned, and those who are still upon the land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are no abandonments where they have paid in full.

Mr. BOYS: I understood some of them had left after completing their payments.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BOYS: That is immaterial, then. As far as I can gather there seems to be a desire on the part of those who have spoken to make the provisions of this bill applicable to all men who at one time or another have settled on the land. Now, why should not preference be given to every man, whether he is now on the land or not so long as he was once on the land, whether he has paid in full or in part? And why should not a period of say six months be given every soldier to apply for any lands which are vacant? I would not go any further than that, for naturally he could only expect to get lands which are vacant. If that was done, you would take care of all soldiers who have still a desire to go on the land. I appreciate the other difficulties respecting the seeming injustice to those who have paid in full. I do not know whether the minister has made any effort to ascertain how much money would be required to carry out a law which would be fair to everyone. It would lead, as has been said by the member for Yukon, to a refund to those who had paid in full. Has the minister any idea how much money that would involve?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It would be very difficult to say. We estimate that under the provisions of the present act readjustment would not cost more than $10,000,000. If you were to take in all the classes mentioned it might cost $30,000,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister says there are only a thousand paid up in full.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But my hon. friend has mentioned a much wider category. There are 6,000 abandonments. You would at least have to take into consideration every one of those men who made application for readjustment. I said 6,000 abandonments; there are 6,000 salvaged claims at the moment.

Mr. HANNESSON: There was a profit of several hundred thousand dollars on part of those.

Mr. FLEMMING: The minister speaks of some farms having been abandoned. What number would be in the possession of the board now, and what number have been already sold?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am told there are about 2,000 purchased farms on hand at the moment, and about a thousand farms that were crown lands and of course were not purchased. Perhaps it might be well to put on Hansard the information that my hon. friend from Parry Sound asked for.

In British Columbia the number of settlers still actually on the land is 2,283; the number who have met their due payments in full is 852; the number in arrears is 1,431.

In Alberta the number of settlers still actually on the land is 4,985; the number who have met their payments in full is 2,136; the number in arrears is 2,849.

Mr. NEILL: Has the minister the number of farms salvaged in British Columbia and Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BROWN: The minister uses the expression "met their payments in full." Does that mean payments that have been met as they became due?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The first list I have given is of men who have made all their payments; they are not in arrears.

In Saskatchewan there are 4,564 who are not in arrears; there are 2,690 who have met their payments in full.

Mr. HANNESSON: Who have paid up in full?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg your pardon. In Saskatchewan there are 4,564 still on the land; there are 2,690 who have met their payments in full; there are 1,874 in arrears.

Mr. BOYS: There is confusion there, Mr. Chairman. When the minister says that certain of the men have met their payments in full, does he mean that they have made all their payments on their land, or have merely retired all the payments which have matured?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The annual payments. In Manitoba 2,171 are still on the land; 617 have met their payments in full, that is, their annual payments up to date; 1,554 are in arrears.

In Ontario there are 1,349 still upon the land; 795 have met their payments in full up to date; 554 are in arrears.

In Quebec, 253 are still on the land; 113 have met their payments in full up to date; 140 are in arrears.

In the Maritime provinces 1,023 are still on the land; 441 have met their annual payments in full; 582 are in arrears.

For the whole Dominion there are 16,628 settlers still on the land; 7,644 have met their annual payments in full; 8,984 are in arrears.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. MANION: There is one more figure: How many have paid completely for their land?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I gave that approximately—about a thousand.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I say to the minister that in the interests of the country as well as of parliament he might well take the suggestion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and redraft his bill on a different basis? The more we discuss this bill the more difficulties we see we are going to be involved in, and the more unfairness will be inflicted upon certain classes of soldiers. To my mind there was never any justification for the title of this bill. It might have been brought in as a colonization scheme or something of that sort, but it should never have been called a soldier settlement act, for you are automatically disfranchising from three-fourths to nine-tenths of our soldier settlers. Now we are going one step further and excluding from the operation of this measure those soldier settlers who have paid up in full—those who have borrowed money from their friends and put it into their land—some of whom have lost and some of whom have made good. The government have already taken ten per cent of the value of these lands out of the soldier settlers; now they are going back to take the land itself and keep the ten per cent. How are we going to justify this and then revalue a certain number of the farms, writing down the settlers' obligations and starting them all over again? The unfairness is brought out more strikingly every way you look at this bill. I think the minister would be well advised to redraft the bill and at least remove some of these injustices that result from playing off one class of soldiers against another class, and the bill should be re-introduced under the title of a land settlement scheme. I think the minister will find that both he and the government will be in very great difficulties if the measure passes in its present form.

Mr. BOYS: Has the minister given the House the number of those who have paid for the land in full, apart from the question of arrears? For instance, a man buys a farm for $5,000, with the payments spread over a number of years, has the minister the number of those who have paid the money? I would have thought all the lands were sold on a similar plan, and that the payments would not have matured in full.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They did not mature, but the soldier paid it.

Mr. BOYS: Did he get a discount?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BOYS: Just to save interest?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know the incentive. They were all sold on twenty-five year contracts. There may have been some cases where the settler made that amount off the land. I do not believe there would be many. The settler must have got his money from some other source and applied it on the land.

Mr. BOYS: I wanted to find out the number of men who have absolutely paid one hundred cents on the dollar.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is around a thousand.

Mr. ARTHURS: That brings up the point I raised that these men who have paid in full should have the same consideration as the other men. The minister says he does not believe the man earned the money off the land, but must have acquired it from some other source; therefore I think he is entitled to the same treatment. The hon. member from Muskoka-Ontario has raised the question of the ten per cent initial payment on the land. If the hon. member from Marquette is right and the revaluation should be made on the basis of a fifty per cent reduction, it is to be remembered that a certain percentage had been paid by these men before they went on the land in the first place. Serious consideration, therefore, should be given to the cases of those who made payments for a term of years at least and then abandoned the land.

Mr. CHURCH: I hope the administration of the act will be carried out in an equitable manner and that the soldier settlers will be given full justic. About seventeen thousand of these men went on the land and I am sorry that in a country like Canada they have not received more equitable treatment. Probably one hundred thousand of our returned men went to the United States, but seventeen thousand of these returned men were brave enough to settle on the land. It was a very arduous task to undertake to settle on the land, a task calling for perseverance, courage, cheerfulness, and many other estimable qualities. These men went on the land in good faith, and surely the legislation which we are now considering should be framed in such a way as to deal fairly and equitably with them. It is most desirable that there should be no red tape in the administration of this act, as there has been in the administration of other similar acts. After all is said and done, Canada has not dealt very generously with the returned men. These men are not going to live forever. They went on the land in 1919 and 1920, when conditions were not as good as they are to-day. Some of them were not farmers and could not cultivate the land, or raise any kind of crops. They had to put up with many privations, while the returned soldiers in Australia and New Zealand fared very much better; they received much better treatment from their respective governments.

I have in my hand a book published by Major Belford on Migration within the Empire, showing how the settlements were made in Australia, where they have not as much red tape as we have in Canada. There is just about as much red tape about the application and administration of this measure as there is in a case in the Supreme court. We have had enough legislation with regard to the soldiers, and I think it is time that they got their dues. Legislation has been passed, a pension board was created, but there is so much red tape that it is almost impossible for the returned soldiers to obtain justice.

The government dealt with the men who constructed the railways out west in a very different manner from that which they have adopted in connection with the soldiers who have built the empire. The railway men were given land of all sorts and cash grants. They obtained from the government the Crowsnest pass agreement; they were given gold-bearing lands and mines simply for the asking, but here we have seventeen thousand returned men who are not treated quite so well. The government deserves great credit for what they did for the men in 1920.

Some of these men who went on the land had no experience whatever, and of course the undertaking required perseverance and courage and demanded men who were one hundred per cent efficient. Do not forget that these men fought the battles of the empire. Some of them are not farmers, and these men should be placed in the preferred class. They are not like the settlers who come from continental Europe, who are receiving better treatment from the government. The government should cut out the red tape and treat these men properly. They are just as much entitled to vested rights out west as the railway corporations who are given grants of land and money.

It looks to me as if this bill would lead to a great deal of difficulty. It calls for valuations and revaluations. Now, who is going to pay the costs incurred by the soldiers when they have to produce witnesses and prove their claims? New Zealand and Australia led the way in showing this country how to deal with returned men. It was hard enough before the war to get the men to go on the land, and the great difficulty now is in getting men to come out here from England, Ireland and Scotland. I read in the Toronto Star a statement that the government of Canada were going to cut off further immigration of farm workers or something to that effect.

The government should not conduct this act as a mortgage company would a foreclosure. They should be free, easy and elastic in their dealings and the administration should be a little easier than it has been in the past. As these men are not going to live forever, the government should give them additional cash. They are spending money to bring in immigrants from continental Europe. They should go a little further than they are going now. Under this bill the returned men must go to the district superintendent, who will consider their application and the material in support of it and make report and recommendation to the board. Application to revaluation must be made to the district superintendent of the Soldier Settlement Board. They must go to him, and the application must be supported by affidavit, setting out the original purchase price of the land and the value of improvement effected since the establishment of the settler thereon, by written statement of the settler setting forth his belief as to present value of the land, his reasons therefor, and so on. With all those provisos, who is going to present the case of the returned soldier? As in the case of the act regarding pensions, there should be some other way of allowing soldiers to deal adequately with their claims. There are too many technicalities in connection with this matter, and by the time we have got to the end of it many returned men will have given up their land as a bad job and will think they are well rid of it. They have been frozen out of the land in many cases through no fault of their own. I hope the minister will see to it that those who are appointed to administer this legislation will be free from political bias, and that they will endeavour, as regards these 17,000 men who fought for Canada in continental Europe, to re-establish them on the land under a better and more reasonable agreement by which they will have some opportunity to make good.

Mr. HAY: I am in sympathy with the principle of this bill. I know it is difficult for the minister to draft a bill that will meet all phases of the question, but I wish to impress upon him the desirability of giving men who have, from whatever cause it may be, temporarily abandoned their land, an opportunity of again taking possession of it under the revaluation scheme proposed in the bill. The feeling seems to be general amongst returned men on the land that they are being discriminated against in favour of men coming in under the empire land settlement scheme; we have all received letters to that effect. I think the purpose of the bill is to help returned men who are still on the land, and I would like to see it extended to help those who, as I said before, are not now upon the land but have temporarily abandoned it because they found it necessary to make a living for themselves and their families in some other profession. They have no doubt spent a large portion of their lives in an effort to make good on the land, and because conditions have been against them and made it impossible for them to succeed, they have been forced to leave the land for a time. I would ask the minister to see that the bill is amended in some way to give these men a chance to come back and settle on the land under the present revaluation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member for Toronto Northwest said that he had read in the press that immigration was being stopped. The only difficulty we are facing at the moment arises out of the arrangement that was made a year ago when we had a great number of these farms throughout Canada salvaged, some of them unoccupied, but held by the crown and therefore non-taxable. I am being bombarded daily for the payment of taxes on these lands, and I have written the municipalities and municipal officials saying that we were going to make a special effort this year to clean this up in order that the lands might go back into the taxable category. Having that in mind, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), when he was in charge of the Department of Immigration, entered into an arrangement with the British Overseas Settlement Board whereby the latter provide $1,500 of British money to each settler for the purpose of buying stock and equipment. These things were done with the best intention in the world. These lands have been inspected. It is not fair to say that civilians were denied the right to purchase them if they wanted to do so, but they were not purchasing them and an effort was made to colonize them by people from Great Britain. An agreement was entered into to bring out 3,000 families. Five hundred families arrived last year and we hope to establish 1,200 more this year. Arrangements have been made to bring out at least 1,000 families. They have passed inspection and I am told 300 of them have already arrived here. Hon. members opposite are asking me to hold up 2,000 farms until this matter is settled. I am mentioning these things merely to show them the difficulties we are facing in the matter.

Mr. HANNESSON: The government has other land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have no lands we own, and as under this scheme we have to provide the land, we would have to go out and buy it.

Mr. HANNESSON: The government has brought in a bill to provide new land for settlers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a different scheme. These are all improved lands on which these families expect to go and the government of Canada is under agreement to provide the land. I am not criticizing the suggestions of hon. gentlemen opposite, nor am I putting this forward as a reason why the soldier should not have the first opportunity to purchase. I am simply telling hon. gentlemen some of the difficulties I am faced with as minister.

Mr. BOYS: That scheme would not be in conflict with the suggestion made, because—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If we adopt the suggestion made by hon. members opposite, it means that no settlement of salvaged land can take place until we have revalued them and the soldier who has abandoned them or has been put off has an opportunity to re-purchase.

Mr. HANNESSON: The minister has made his revaluation on turning the land over to the Soldier Settlement Board. All these lands were revalued by the board before the allotment was made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to get the suggestion clearly in mind because it is important that we should understand one another. I understand it means this: Take the 1,200 farms, for example, that are now practically under agreement for settlement. We say: We have reduced this farm by $500 or $1,000, if you wish, and we write to the man who abandoned it or whoever owned it previously, if he had been on it for five years and had been a reasonable settler, and we say to him: Do you want this farm? If he refuses, then the farm goes into the category for settlement by someone else.

Mr. HANNESSON: That is right.

Mr. BOYS: If no allotment has been made, these lands will be available to soldiers who have been on the land and abandoned it. That gives the man a preference only for a period of time so far as available lands are concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The man has only an opportunity of going on the land which he formerly occupied?

Mr. BOYS: No. The suggestion made from many quarters of this House is that it should be opened wider than that and that any soldier who has been on the land and has abandoned it for any reason should be given a preference for a period of time to settle on any lands which are still available with the revaluation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Our difficulties would be widened by doing that. We would have to advertise the land. We are left open to criticism if we do not advertise it for a month or six weeks. We do not know what man may apply. It is quite easy to deal with the man who formerly occupied the land if we know where he is.

Mr. BOYS: That would not be any good, because in many cases the land he was on has been allotted under this scheme and resold to somebody else. There would be discrimination in that way. As regards advertising, one or two insertions in the leading papers of Canada, merely giving some information regarding the provisions of the bill and telling the soldiers that if they so desire they may still get land at the revaluation, would be sufficient.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the committee can readily understand the number will be reduced almost to the minimum for this very reason: No one will suggest that the government should again provide loans for the individual with which to buy stock and equipment. He would have to provide for himself in that respect and it would be a tremendous handicap. Formerly he was established with both stock and equipment. I should like my hon. friends to confine it to the individual who owned the land, because in that event the difficulties would be reduced very appreciably. If you make it wider than that we shall have to keep the lands unoccupied for a considerable time.

Mr. BOYS: There is where the minister misunderstands me; I did not suggest that. You would advertise and get an application for certain property, and if that property had since been sold or allotted to someone else it would of course be no longer available. But you could inform the applicant to that effect and tell him that you had a number of other lots to offer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a serious difficulty.

Mr. ARTHURS: Where the revaluation has been made and the man has been continuously on the land for a number of years, having made certain payments, I think that some compensation commensurate with the revaluation should be given him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is going too far.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would suggest that the minister, in order to meet the difficulty, might strike out of paragraph 68—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the committee will give me a clear idea of what it would like me to do I think my hon. friend might leave the drafting of the bill to me.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am not making an amendment but only offering a suggestion. I would suggest that the following words be omitted:

—whose agreement with the board has not been terminated or rescinded and who has not repaid his indebtedness to the board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would absolutely refuse to accept that. I am going to deal with the matter on definite principles; I will not be left in the air with a bill that might mean anything or nothing. I want to know precisely what classes are to be dealt with, and if I can get the consensus of opinion of the committee I shall be in a better position to go ahead.

Mr. ARTHURS: Only the soldier who has taken land under the act is being dealt with.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will find that he is doing a great deal more than that. First we deal with the men who are on the land and in ownership, and now my hon. friend wants me to extend that to the men whose lands have been salvaged. If I understand the views of the committee, we are first of all to notify the former occupant, the soldier who formerly had the land, and no one else, that if he so desires he can within two months get the land back at the revaluation, provided he can re-establish himself. There are 500 men who have paid in full and 500 whose lands will be revalued, and if the board should find that these have paid an excessive price for their land they would be reimbursed accordingly.

5 p.m.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know whether the minister contemplates doing that or not, but really I should not care to make myself popular by advocating that. I do not think the minister can do that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have discussed the discrimination that would arise, as against others, from dealing with the man whose contract had been cancelled and whom I have described. If we gave him consideration how could we avoid dealing with the man who had paid an excessive price for his land? If we did not deal with that man, would there not be a discrimination against him?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister proceeds on the principle of helping a certain class of soldiers to get their land back, then he will continue in the dilemma in which he finds himself now. He will be driven from that class to another and from the second to a third class, and so on, on the ground that if he did a favour to class A he must treat class B equally. The minister need not think that he will ever escape without getting to the last soldier who bought land even to the 500 to whom he has referred They will have a claim in equity which he will never be able to answer. The minister, before pressing the bill further, ought to review in his mind the suggestion I made previously. He cannot maintain this present position, and I have no doubt he will later on get into further complications and a tremendous liability if he continues extending the principle on which the bill is based in this form. Suppose he says to the soldier: "We are not proceeding with any new scheme of largesse or of assistance but we recognize that in the disposition of government property you ought always to have first choice, and we will prefer you to another. But we do not propose to launch on a new scheme of more help out of the treasury. Here we are, however, with a mass of lands on a great proportion of which there is more money owing than we can possibly collect, inasmuch as the lands are not worth it. Now, we are going to do what any other reasonable vendor looking after his own interest would do; we are going to reduce the value of the land to what the man can get out of it. And we are going to do so in order to protect the interests of Canada and conserve public property."

If the minister does this he will never have to answer the man who otherwise might take this view: "Here I owe only $1,000 on this land. The valuation shows that it is worth $2,000, but I paid $1,000 more for it than

I should have paid. You must therefore cancel that debt." Should the minister cancel that debt of $1,000 he never in the world could answer the fellow who had paid in full. The minister would not have cancelled that $1,000 in the interests of the people in the country; he would, in cancelling it, merely have given another grant to that soldier. But if he gives such treatment to that particular man, he will have to extend it to all the rest. With the man whose indebtedness is no more, is indeed less, than the worth of the land, the minister need not deal at all. If however he says that only in cases where he cannot collect that debt, for the reason that it is greater than the value of the land, shall it be his policy to treat with the soldier, in the interests of the country and not on any pretence of distributing a grant to certain classes of men, his position will be sound. I hope the minister follows me. I think he does, and I repeat that he can never frame a bill to meet this complicated situation unless he abandons the principle he is now pursuing—in good faith, I am sure—and adopts the other one which I have suggested and which can be defended to anyone. The principle at present being followed cannot in this limited application be defended and it will merely carry the minister from one post to another, until finally he will find himself under the necessity of extending the same treatment to everbody, right down through the list. To every one of them, their heirs at law, even to those who do not need it, he will have to give an equal measure of benevolence out of the treasury of the Dominion.

Mr. MILLAR: How would the amount of relief under the scheme proposed by my hon. friend compare with the amount under this bill?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be less in one direction for this reason: all these cases where the amount owing is equal to or less than the value of the land would be eliminated. Under the present scheme the minister has to go into every one of these cases, and if the man paid an excess value equal to or greater than the amount owing, the debt is cancelled although the government could have collected. That class will be eliminated, saving the treasury many millions of dollars, but the class mentioned by the hon. member for Selkirk will be taken care of on the principle that we have this plan and we will give the men who had it before, the preference. I would be willing to trust the minister with that. Some regulation might be devised generally defining his duty, but not in the form of an injunction over which he cannot step. The principle could be laid down and preference given to those who had the land before.

Mr. NEILL: Supposing the farm had been sold to somebody else?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then you could not do anything but you are still in a strong fortress; you could never be attacked because you do not pretend to be doing this as a new scheme for the soldier; you are preserving government property—giving him the preference on sale.

Mr. CAMPBELL: In that way, would you not create another discrimination? There are two classes, one whose land has been sold and the other whose abandoned land has not been sold. There would be a distinct discrimination against the man whose land has been sold.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but that has already been created; we are not doing that by this bill. Wherever there is land to be sold we will give the soldier the preference, and the minister should not be tied by very definite restrictions. We will give the soldier the preference as long as we can, without injury to the public interest, but beyound that we do not pretend to go. The whole principle is to properly administer the property of the people of Canada.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Do I understand that he would reduce the price to the present value of the land utterly regardless of what the soldier has already paid?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would only deal with those cases where there is more owing on the agreement than the land is worth.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): If a man bought a farm for $5,000 and paid $1,000, and the farm was to-day worth only $3,000, in his case you would have to wipe out $1,000. In the case of another man who bought a similar farm for the same price and paid nothing, you would wipe out $2,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, just as my hon. friend would do if he were the vendor instead of the government, because it would be the best thing in his own interest and he would not pretend to do anything else.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not quite clear about one point raised by my hon. friend. The soldier, of course, owes for land, stock and equipment. Does my hon. friend mean to include the indebtedness for stock and equipment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then the only cases we would touch would be those where the soldier settler owes more for the land than the land is worth?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Confining it to that one class?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. You would have to make each property stand by itself.

Mr. HANNESSON: In the reconsideration of the bill would the minister assure the House that no further lands will be allotted to the Empire Settlement Board until the details of this plan are worked out?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am in this difficulty, that people are being placed at the present time on some of the 1,200 farms mentioned.

Mr. HANNESSON: There are only 300 on the farms now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are coming all the time, you see.

Mr. HANNESSON: I do not desire to embarrass the minister at all, but it is going to cause a great deal of dissatisfaction and trouble if, during the time this bill is under consideration, men lose the farms they are now occupying.

Mr: STEWART (Edmonton): But if we follow the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the opposition we will confine this to one class only, men who owe more money on their land than the land is worth. I am perfectly willing to do that; I can save the treasury of Canada a great deal of money in that way, but I have very grave doubts whether that will satisfy the soldiers.

Mr. MURPHY: The minister has said that the object of this bill is to help the returned soldier who is still on the land. If the bill is changed to only affect one class, the object of the bill is changed altogether.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, quite.

Mr. MURPHY: If the minister still adheres to his resolution to help the returned soldier still on the land I would like to point out a phase of the situation which has not been mentioned this afternoon. Certain returned soldiers are in arrear in their payments and cannot at present meet their indebtedness. They are being asked by the board to assign what they have left of last year's crop, and to also assign all of this year's crop. That is a very discouraging situation and it will certainly force more men to abandon their farms this spring, because if a man is going to be forced to assign all his crop to the board, how is he to live during the summer months, or until the next year? It will increase the abandonments by men who have stayed five or six years on the land. I would like to add my voice to the expressions of those who have already spoken in favour of the man who desires to go back on his farm, but I think the House is anticipating greater difficulties in that connection than will arise. If I understand human nature at all, a man who has spent five or six years on a farm without making a success of it is not going to be very anxious to go back on the land again. Only the man who has still an interest in the land, who possibly left his family there, or who only temporarily abandoned it, will go back, but he should certainly be given an opportunity of re-possessing that land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hope the committee quite appreciates the idea of the right hon. leader of the opposition, because it does reduce the difficulties tremendously. I was trying to cover a much wider field, and I do not deny for a moment all the difficulties with which this proposition is bristling. The proposition of the right hon. leader of the opposition, however, confines it to men who to-day, at the present moment, owe more to the government or to the Soldier Settlement Board than the land is actually worth, and that is the only class to be dealt with. I want the committee to understand exactly what that means; it cuts out the man who has paid in full; it cuts out the man who has reduced his indebtedness below the value of the land to-day even by only $200 or any small amount; it cuts out these parties altogether. They would get no consideration under this measure suggested, which would only deal with the man who is not a good, solvent risk for the government. That, in effect, is what it means.

Mr. MILLAR: I would like to ask the minister a question which I should have asked the leader of the opposition, had he been in the House. In a case where a soldier owed, say, $500 on land, but $1,000 on chattels, and was in straitened circumstances and in danger of losing his farm, following the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, he would be given consideration for the $500 only. He would still owe the $1,000 on his chattels and would stand a good chance of being driven off the land. In that case it seems to me the government would still run a considerable risk of losing the settler, and losing as well the $1,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I asked that question myself because I wanted to be clear about it. If I followed the leader of the opposition carefully his answer was no, simply the land—and the land, of course, includes the buildings; stock is not to be taken into consideration. In that case the soldier would have to abandon his farm, I presume. I confess that the suggestion of the leader of the opposition appeals to me very much, because it will save the country a great deal of money.

Mr. NEILL: The bill will be of very little use in that case.

Mr. LOVIE: Mr. Chairman, I have here a petition signed by 469 residents in the constituency of Macdonald. The object sought is explained in the heading of the petition, which reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, do hereby place ourselves on record as being in favour of the consolidation of the soldier settlers' debt to date, including tax arrears, and that a reduction of not less than fifty per cen be made of the amount of the total consolidation thus computed, and we will support the efforts of the soldier settlers to obtain his redress.

The petition is accompanied by a letter which I shall read to the committee, because the petition has been very largely circulated over the whole district. The letter reads:

Sir,

In re Soldier Settlers' Lands

On the 25th of February, 1926, there met in Carman, at a largely attended meeting, a number of the soldier settlers of the district, who had purchased lands through the soldier settlers' board.

This meeting was the outcome of the increasingly arduous position in which the majority of the settlers now find themselves; the situation is beyond doubt well known to you, and may briefly be described as follows:

Owing to the inflated price of land which existed at the time when the majority purchased, followed immediately by an almost unprecedented slump in the selling power of farm produce, followed at a later date by a sharp decrease in land values, which is continuing to-day, the average soldier settler finds that he has now accumulated against him such a volume of arrears, which coupled with the amount still owing by the purchaser as the purchase price of his land, makes his position untenable, and it is felt that the position of the average settler is hopeless, unless some alleviation is forthcoming.

The meeting above mentioned was addressed by several civilians, i.e. other than settlers, amongst them being Reeve Armstrong of Dufferin municipality and Councillors Provo, Murray and Metcalfe, and the meeting passed the following resolution.

"We the undersigned do hereby place ourselves on record as being in favour of the consolidation of the soldier settlers debt to date, including tax arrears, and that a reduction of not less than 50 per cent be made of the amount of the total consolidation thus computed, and we will support the efforts of the soldier settlers to obtain this redress."

A committee was formed, and the above was circulated in the form of a petition in the districts of Carman, Roseisle, Haywood, St. Claude, Somerset and Treherne, meetings being held at a number of these points, and it has been the experience of those circulating the petition that the entire community, with less than 1 per cent of those approached, is in favour of the redress asked being granted.

At the risk, Sir, of wearying you with facts which doubtless are well known to you, this branch of the Soldiers Settlers' Association desires to emphasize to you that unless this redress is forthcoming, the large majority of our soldier settlers will be forced to give up the struggle, and, instead of being settled on the land, will drop to the status of men without homes and without those ties which it is believed are essential to the building up of the west.

Another point which we would with respect draw to your attention is that as each soldier settler is forced to bandon his farm or is evicted by the board, a revaluation takes place, and the land, with the permanent improvements added and charged against the settler, thus revalued, is sold to an incoming settler, at a price which in many cases is 50 per cent and in some cases, more than 50 per cent, less than the amount which was owing by the settler with the improvements added; if the loss has to come, and from the policy of the board and the current price of land, it would appear inevitable that a loss will accrue, it is felt and urged that the soldier settler should in all fairness receive the benefit in the reduction of land values.

As you, Sir, are without doubt aware, a bare reduction in the amount of the purchase price now outstanding will not in itself save a large number of our settlers; they owe such an accumulation of arrears, which, if left in status quo, even if the future debt be reduced, will so clog and hamper the efforts of the settler, that he cannot hope to meet his obligations, or if meeting them, will prevent the necessary development of his farm owing to shortage of working capital.

The legislature of Manitoba and that of Alberta have expressed themselves in favour of some redress being granted; Mr. J. R. Love, U.F.A. member in the House at Edmonton, on March 16th drawing attention to the condition of the soldier settlers in the Wainwright district, stated that of 37 settlers, 19 had been forced to quit.

Meetings in support of the movement have been held at Deloraine, Carman, Swan River, Somerset, Treherne, and Deepdale in Manitoba, and in many points as far as Dewdney, B.C. and from Deepdale, Manitoba, there is going a petition to the right hon. the Prime Minister and Mr. W. J. Ward, M.P. The petition from Deloraine has for some time been in the hands of Mr. J. Steadman, M.P., for Souris, and to you, Sir, we beg to submit a petition signed by 469 persons in this district, supporting the legislation asked for by the soldier settlers.

It is felt that all money expended by or on behalf of a settler by the board, i.e. such as the cost of breaking advanced on charge to the settler, and paid by the board should be added to the purchase price of the land in computing the amount of the settlers total outstanding liability on the land; the tax arrears should, it is submitted, be also taken into consideration in arriving at the total debt, and added thereto; if the soldier leaves the land or is ejected therefrom, the land on being re-vested in the board ceases to be liable for taxes until re-sold, and if the assistance is not directed towards the reduction of tax arrears, these arrears will be sufficient to act as a dead weight borne by the settler and a severe handicap; it is indeed felt by very many settlers that it is most vital that in computing the total debt, there should be added to the outstanding capital debt, the arrears both of taxes and past due payments. The revaluation granted in 1925 on settlers' live stock will afford an illustration on this point that revaluation averaged about $150, but taken from the capital debt only; this reduction of $150, divided over a period of say, 25 years, is of little material assistance, whereas had this been deducted directly from arrears, the assistance would have been most beneficial.

The petitions forwarded to you, Sir, are sent in the fervent hope that you may do what is in your power to assist in the passing at the present legislature, such legislation as will, in common justice, alleviate the present situation, and will assist in keeping on the land a type of citizen which Canada can ill afford to lose from her agricultural community;

We feel that in approaching you as the sitting member for Macdonald, we are taking the right step, knowing full well that you with your personal knowledge of farming conditions are in close touch with the situation as it exists to-day, and are conversant with the whole matter, and we trust that our movement will receive your support.

I would ask the minister what he thinks about consolidating all the soldier settlers' debts, including tax arrears and the expense of breaking, and spreading the payment over a period of years. Will the bill make provision for any assistance of that kind?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Any contributions of the settler that enhance the value of the land would be taken into consideration.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): That could not be taken into consideration if you adopt the suggestion of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was speaking of the bill.

Mr. MANION: I was not listening to the leader of the opposition when he made his suggestion, and I should like the minister to explain what he intends to do. The leader of the opposition was speaking for himself—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: He was speaking for himself just as we all are. I have my own ideas on this question and I am not necessarily controlled by the leader of the opposition, by the minister or anybody else. I am speaking for the good of the soldiers. I might remind you, Mr. Chairman, that nine years ago to-day was a very important day for the Canadian soldiers, and I think we might commemorate it in this House by seeing that they get a fair deal in this bill. This is not a political question, and I do not suppose the minister is controlled any more than any of the rest of us absolutely by the leader of the opposition. What I wanted to find out before he sends this bill back to the board was what he intends to do with this bill to treat the soldiers fairly.

[Mr. Lovie.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To put the matter clearly to my hon. friend, because I was intensely interested in the suggestion of the leader of the opposition, he said in effect that the only cases to be dealt with were those where the men now on the land owed more than it was worth to-day. Now, this reduces it to the minimum in that respect. If a man owes more on his farm to-day than it is worth, then a revaluation takes place and he is given consideration. The leader of the opposition argued that it was in the interests of the government to do that because it was a case in which the government were liable to lose some money in any event, to treat it only from that standpoint, not from the standpoint that the man was a soldier; but that all other cases where danger of loss to the government was obliterated would not be so dealt with. That concretely is what the leader of the opposition suggested. Of course that suggestion is confined to land only; it does not cover stock and equipment.

Mr. MANION: Of course, that is the intention of the bill anyhow.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. Now, the bill as drafted provides for what the leader of the opposition has suggested; but he confines it absolutely to the men on the land, to those in possession; those are the only cases to be dealt with, all the others are to be shut out. I am quite prepared to deal with the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk that where a soldier has occupied a farm, and that farm has been salvaged and a reduction in value made either by the board or by the committee that will function later, the soldier should be given an opportunity to go back on his farm at the reduced price. But I would confine it to him alone, not spread it indiscriminately among the soldiers. The man who was on the land would be given the opportunity to return to that particular piece of land.

Mr. MILLAR: In that case would he be given full credit for the amount he had paid? That is, would the agreement be treated as though it had not been cancelled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has raised another difficulty. I would not care to give an answer to his question offhand. After all, I am trying to meet the objection raised by the soldiers themselves, "Had you done this for me I could have continued." There is something in what my hon. friend says, but I shall have to consider it carefully before giving him an answer. May I say that that contingency could easily be arranged for in the present bill?

Now, the difference between the proposal contained in this bill and that suggested by the leader of the opposition is that the bill would give consideration to every man who is still on the land, whether his indebtedness is more than the value of the land or whether it is less. The restriction we put on is that if he gets a reduction of $1,000, and he owes the board only $700, we would not pay that $300 to him. He would simply pay out his $700 and get his title deed. The bill is wider in that respect inasmuch as we deal with all the soldier settlers instead of confining its operation simply to the class who owe more than the amount I have referred to. Speaking casually, I cannot believe that it would entail a great deal more money than the scheme proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition, but I admit at once that the difference between the two plans does put the government in a much stronger position with respect to claims that might come from every quarter, such as have been raised so prolifically this afternoon, because under the plan suggested by the leader of the opposition we could confine ourselves simply to the protection of the government's interests, not the soldiers' at all. That is the main point of difference. Under our plan we are taking into consideration to some extent soldier settlement. Outside of that I am bound to say at the moment—I may change my mind on further deliberation—that our bill will better meet the situation than any other suggestion we have yet had this afternoon. Of course, I may be prejudiced in favour of this bill. Certainly I am not going to argue for a moment that it will remove all discrimination, I doubt if any bill could accomplish that, but in being fair to the government and fair to the soldiers I think the provisions of this measure pretty well meet the situation. I am speaking of course particularly with respect to the classes that will be considered under the bill.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, as I told the minister, I did not hear the remarks of the leader of the opposition to which he has referred, but I do know that all the members on this side of the House—and they are largely returned soldiers—all took the same attitude, and I am quite sure still adhere to it, as that which the minister describes as the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk. In other words—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to make it clear that the hon. member for Selkirk went much further than I suggested.

Mr. MANION: In other words, there was a consensus of opinion on this side of the House with what I heard the leader of the opposition say early in the afternoon, that those soldiers who have been deprived of their land because they were unable to pay should be given an opportunity to resume possession before it is given to some other settler under the British Empire or some other scheme. I think everybody on this side of the House was unanimous on that. Certainly the leader of the opposition earlier in the afternoon agreed that that was advisable.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think he still agrees.

Mr. MANION: I am glad the minister suggests that, because I am quite sure of it. I am not suggesting that the minister did it from any political motive, but it seemed to me that he was rather pointing out that the leader of the opposition favoured restricting the scope of the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I say so still.

Mr. MANION: All right. As a returned soldier, I do not want to see the scope of the bill restricted. I am sure that that is the opinion of every returned soldier on this side of the House, and there are at least twenty. We would like to go as far at least as allowing those returned soldiers who have left the land an opportunity to go back to their farms, which they had to give up through circumstances over which they had no control. I am sure the minister will be carrying out the wishes of the House generally if he goes that far at least. Other amendments may be suggested later, but at the present time I think he would be well advised to amend his bill to that extent.

Mr. BROWN: Would the hon. member for Fort William confine the privilege of the soldier under such circumstances to the land which he formerly held?

Mr. MANION: Early in the afternoon I went further than that and suggested allowing the soldier to apply for any piece of land that another soldier had held. The minister later on came forward with a statement as to which most of us knew nothing—at any rate I knew nothing—regarding the empire settlement scheme, and he said some land had been taken, and he said "we cannot carry out the provisions of this bill without doing injustice to some people". I want to see the scheme carried out, and to see as much justice done to as great a number of soldiers as we can possibly manage, without costing the country too much money. That is the position I wish to take. I would go as far as the hon. member for Lisgar, and provide that a soldier might apply for any piece of land.

Mr. BROWN: I would not suggest that.

Mr. MANION: I suggest it. But the minister points out that some of that land has been taken up already and that cannot be done; but I would be perfectly willing to go as far as possible in that direction.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): On behalf of the government, I have stated on many occasions, that I hoped that, in dealing with the returned soldier, either through the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment department or the Soldier Land Settlement Board, we should not make the question a political issue. Such a course would be regrettable. I am anxious to do anything in reason, and I would like to get the consensus of opinion in the House as to the best method of doing it. Then I will do my best to draft the legislation; and may I forecast what I will probably bring down, namely, the provisions of the present bill, including the suggestion of the hon. member for the right of the soldier to make application for his land, providing the land is available for him.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We will take care that we do not tie up this land to an unlimited degree. I still think the provision of the bill goes as far as the government is warranted in going, and I want the committee to clearly understand that that will cut out the man who has paid in full, and the man who has been salvaged, but not the man who can get back on his own land. That man will be given an opportunity to get back on his land and the provision will be widened to that extent.

Mr. BROWN: He will have to find his own equipment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, we cannot advance him money. The land will be there available for him. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle has raised some difficulty to which I give consideration. There is some merit in what he suggested, but I want to have time to think of it. I am indicating the direction in which I will proceed to re-draft the provisions of the bill, and bring it back for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. CASSELMAN: It is not the intention of any scheme, either the one proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition or the one proposed by the minister, to take into consideration those who have already paid in full. I think in some of those cases you will find that, although the government has received full pay for the land, the soldier still owes the full amount. The payment was brought about through a desire on the part of the soldiers to get the land in their own name, and in many cases—one within my own knowledge—a relative of the settler advanced the money in order that the land might be in the soldier's name. It is very unfair that this class of case should not be revalued, when these other classes are revalued

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may assure my hon. friend that they will not be considered, as I gather from the discussion this afternoon. Those who have paid will not be considered under the provisions of the bill. I desire to say again that it is very difficult to treat every case with absolute equity, and we have not made provisions for consideration to cases of that kind.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Marine Department—Navigation schools, $8,500.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This item is to provide instruction for seafaring men desiring to qualify as masters and mates of ships, in pursuance of section 84 of the Canada Shipping Act. The proposed increase of $1,500 over last year is to provide for a grant of $500 to the Charlottetown Navigation School, and for instruction to deep sea fishermen at Prince Rupert, B.C.

Mr. ROGERS: Carried.

Item agreed to.

To provide for temporary relief to distressed seamen, $5,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This is to provide for relief to distressed Canadian seamen abroad and for the temporary relief of seamen at Canadian ports. It is done in accordance with the provisions of the act. It is not altogether an expenditure, because on some occasions we request the navigation companies to reimburse the department for the expenditure. When we can arrange to be reimbursed we do so.

Mr. ROGERS: What does the minister mean by seamen abroad?

Mr. CARDIN: In foreign countries.

Mr. FRASER: What was the expenditure of last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Up to the 28th of February, 1926, the expenditure for relief to distressed seaman was $217. Of course the amount expended is never the same. It depends on the number of accidents.

Item agreed to.

Registration of shipping, $3,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This is for the purpose of defraying the cost of registration of Canadian shipping. According to the law all ships before trading in Canadian waters have to be registered.

Mr. ROGERS: How much was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Up to the 28th of February, $1,936.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the name of the company registered?

Mr. CARDIN: The name of the proprietor of the ship.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the minister taken into consideration the difference in regard to boards of directors as between Canadian and United States steamship lines?

Mr. CARDIN: No foreign company can be registered as being the proprietor of a ship.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Everyone on the board of directors of a United States shipping company must be a United States citizen. There cannot be a Canadian on it. I want to bring the other side of the question to the attention of the minister. We allow United States citizens on boards of directors of Canadian steamship companies, and the result is that a United States company can register in Canada and take business away from our Canadian steamship lines by having one Canadian director on the board. That is called a Canadian board of directors, and it is most unfair. United States ships can bring grain down to Buffalo; then they organize another steamship line on this side by putting one Canadian director on it, and in this way they carry the grain further on, whereas on United States steamship lines no Canadian can be a director. We ought to have the same custom in Canada; no United States citizen should be a director of a Canadian steamship company.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that any company which is legally organized in Canada can be registered as the proprietor of a ship.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am pointing out the unfairness. If a Canadian cannot be a director in a United States company then our Canadian steamship lines should be organized under the same regulations.

Mr. QUINN: I am not quite clear as to what this item of $3,000 is for. Is it to defray the cost of registration of shipping in addition to the fees that are paid?

Mr. CARDIN There are no fees for the mere registration of a ship. Fees are paid to the officers taking the measurements of the boats.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister take into consideration the point I have raised, which is very important to our really Canadian steamship lines?

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be only too glad to look into the matter.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What was spent last year out of the $3,000?

Mr. CARDIN: $1,936.

Mr. McQUARRIE: This year the minister has estimated for more than $1,936. Does he anticipate he will spend more this year?

Mr. CARDIN: It is very hard to say in advance what the expenditure will be.

Mr. ROGERS: The vote is the same as that of last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. In fact the vote has been reduced since 1921-22 from $6,000 to $3,000. In 1920-21 the appropriation was $10,000 and the expenditure $1,769. In 1921-22 the appropriation was $6,000 and the expenditure $2,790. In 1922-23 the appropriation was $5,000 and the expenditure $1,500. In 1923-24 the appropriation was $5,000 and the expenditure a little over $2,000. In 1924-25 the appropriation was reduced to $3,000 and the expenditure was $1,865. This year we are asking for the same amount, $3,000. It is not a very large amount over the expected expenditure.

Mr. ROGERS: I do not think there will be much objection to the amount, but I would like to point out to the minister that the question raised by the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) is a very serious one. On our grain passing via United States bottoms and rails to the markets of the world, they get from fifteen to eighteen cents per hundred pounds, or per bushel, I do not know which, and everything should be done to keep our grain within our own channels and on our own rails. Years ago when the National Transcontinental was built under the direction of a government such as that of hon. gentlemen opposite, great care was taken to provide, for the benefit of the people of this country, that our grain would be carried on our railways at rates similar to those which would be charged if the grain went by United States routes and in United States bottoms. That was the pledge made by the Liberal government of that day. Now we have the opportunity, we have the railways in good shape, and surely we ought to be able to take advantage of the promise then made. By continuing this practice, whereby the mere fact of one Canadian being on the directorate enables an American company to evade the spirit of our law, we are placing Canadian shipping at a distinct disadvantage. The Americans do not allow their regulations to be violated in this way, and the competition which Canadian concerns have to put up with is therefore altogether unjust. I hope the minister will take steps to provide some relief in this matter and to see that traffic in this country is directed over our own railways iinstead of being taken by American vessels for transportation over American rails to the markets of the world.

Mr. CARDIN: I fully appreciate the importance of the question raised by my hon. friend, but he understands of course that the subject cannot be considered under this item. It will, however, no doubt come up during the discussion of the vote in connection with the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. ROGERS: I know it has nothing to do with this item. I was merely bringing it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What companies, if any, registered on the Great Lakes in 1924-25?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that information.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I wish the minister would bring it down. There is an American shipping concern now operating on the lakes carrying grain to Buffalo. I have forgotten the name of the company but although there is one Canadian director on the board it is a purely American concern.

Mr. CARDIN: Is it the Eastern Shipping Company?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think that is the name, and if the minister will verify this information he will find that the company is purely American and is taking advantage of our law on the strength of having one Canadian on the directorate.

DOMINION EXPRESS COMPANY

Mr. C. A. FOURNIER (Bellechasse) moved the second reading of Bill No. 18, to change the name of the Dominion Express Company to Canadian Pacific Express Company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no doubt this bill is correct, if for no other reason than the hon. member who stands sponsor for it. I do not think, however, we should allow the second reading without having an explanation.

Mr. FOURNIER: I hardly think any explanation is necessary. All rights are safeguarded; any legal proceedings already undertaken will not be affected at all.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon. Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Name changed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. member explain why it is desired to change the name? I have always wondered why the company was not always called the Canadian Pacific Express Company, and I would like the hon. member to explain how it was that the name Dominion Express Company was taken, and why it is now being changed.

Mr. FOURNIER: The Canadian Pacific Railway Company owns the Dominion Express Company, and it was thought better that the express company should bear the same name as the railway.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member know why they took the other name? It is simply a matter of curiosity; I always wondered at it.

Mr. FOURNIER: The operations of the Dominion Express Company extend all over the world, and it was thought by the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities that in order to prevent any misunderstanding the name should be identical with that of the railway.

Mr. MULLINS: I was wondering if this bill would have anything to do with express rates, any tendency to raise the rates?

Mr. FOURNIER: No, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think I have been given the explanation; the Grand Trunk Railway took the name Canadian Express for its express company. Is that name still used?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it is now called the Canadian National Express Company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That makes it all quite clear.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Marine and Fisheries—removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $5,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister give details?

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is for the purpose of defraying the cost that may be incurred in the removal of obstructions in navigable waters. I desire at this juncture to make a rectification. The other day when we were discussing another item the hon. member for Simcoe asked me if we had made provision for a certain wreck in a certain river in his constituency. Having in mind the request that he had made last year, I answered, that it had already been removed, because last year he had asked that a sunken vessel at the wharf at Big Bay be removed. This particular wreck has been removed, but the one he had in mind the other night has not as yet been removed. Request for its removal has been made to the department only in the last few months, and it has been impossible to have the wreck removed so far, but we are going to remove it as soon as circumstances will permit.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What waters are included in this item?

Mr. CARDIN: All navigable waters all over Canada.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How much was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Up to the 28th of February last we spent $2,954.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does this item take care of all work of this kind?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It does not take care of the operation of snag boats, and that kind of thing?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The Department of Public Works does similar work? In the Fraser river for instance, the Department of Public Works has a snag boat operating all the time. The Department of Marine and Fisheries does not take care of any work of that kind on the Pacific coast, does it?

Mr. CARDIN: We are only taking care of occasional obstructions, for example, vessels that have sunk in rivers, but the whole work of opening water for navigation is under the control of the Public Works department.

Mr. HANSON: How is there any obligation on the government to remove wrecks that may be obstructing navigable waters? In most cases these wrecks are insured, and when they are abandoned to the underwriters it seems to me the obligation is on the underwriters to remove them.

Mr. CARDIN: We can collect from the owners when they are financially responsible, but in order that there may be no delay in the removal we have to provide a certain amount of money so that we may proceed with the work ourselves, and afterwards we try to collect from the owners of the vessel if they are financially responsible. But in cases where they are not, it would not be safe. of course, for that reason, to leave obstructions in navigable waters, and we proceed to remove them at our own charge.

Mr. HANSON: I suppose a vessel sunk in navigable waters would be abandoned by the owners to the underwriters. Do you ever collect from the underwriters? They own the hull if the vessel is abandoned and becomes a total loss.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, we do sometimes collect from the underwriters.

Mr. HANSON: Have you made any collections in the last three years, and if so, from whom, and for what amount?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that there was no insurance on the boats that were removed from navigable waters in 1925-1926. I might say, however, that the barge Nash has been removed at Barachois de Malbaie by the Fidelity Insurance Company of Canada. In cases where the vessel owner or the insurance company can be forced to remove the wreck, it has always been the policy of the department to act accordingly.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): While this item refers to obstructions that interfere with navigation, what is the procedure with regard to derelicts which, while they may not directly interfere with navigation, become a nuisance and a danger when left lying around docks? A company, for instance, will bring some old boat into a dock; it gradually goes to pieces, and is left there, and it is very difficult to get them to take it away. What are the regulations governing the removal of these derelicts?

Mr. CARDIN: The section of the statute on which we have always acted reads as follows:

The minister may, if, in his opinion the navigation of any navigable water is obstructed, impeded or rendered more difficult or dangerous by reason of the wreck, sinking, partially sinking, or lying ashore or grounding of any vessel, or any part thereof, or of any other thing, or by reason of the situation of any such,. . . cause such. . . to be removed or destroyed.

That is the power we have.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Suppose the company refuses to remove it; will the government remove it?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, and afterwards we try to collect, if the company is financially responsible.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But in the case of these old derelicts, deserted bottoms, and so on, the government will remove them if the company refuses to do so?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, if they are an obstruction to navigation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston).: Suppose they interfere with anchorage, which is a part of navigation?

Mr. CARDIN: That is included in the meaning of the words "interfere with navigation."

Mr. McQUARRIE: What wrecks did you remove last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The list is as follows:

Obstuction and Location—
Steamer Lillie, Shippigan Harbour.
Steamer Birchbay, St. Lawrence River, near Portneuf.
Logs, Alberni Harbour.
Logs, St. Andrews Harbour.
Schooner Clarence Trahan, Meteghan Harbour.
Barge Badger, St. Clair river, near Russell Sound.
Tug Andre Dupre, St. Lawrence river, between Sorel and Lanoraie.
Tug Macsin, near Three Rivers.
Tug Edward G., Seven Islands, near wharf.
Logs, Maitland Harbour.
Steamer Wm. H. Wolfe, near Sombra, St. Clair river.
Scow, Burlington channel.
Logs, Weymouth Harbour.
Barge, Netley Cut, Manitoba.
Tug Seymour, Windsor, Ont.
Barge Nash, Barachois de Malbaie.

Mr. HANSON: Very frequently we see notices in the newspapers of ships becoming derelicts, and these are a grave menace to shipping, especially to liners. What is the policy of the government in this respect? And if any contribution is made to the sinking of such derelicts is it paid out of this vote?

Mr. CARDIN: We are contributing two or three thousand dollars a year towards the holding of a convention for the preservation of life at sea, but the money is not taken out of this vote.

Mr. HANSON: I have a suggestion to make to the minister. We have a very valuable navy, consisting of a few trawlers and torpedo boats, which most of the time, I understand, are lodged in a boathouse down in Halifax. Indeed the member for Northwest Toronto (Mr. Church) suggested they were stored in a garage. Why should not these boats be used for this service? It seems to me that it would be the best purpose to which they could be put. The minister might pass on my suggestion to his colleague, the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is this work done by contract, or how?

Mr. CARDIN: It is usually done by our own divers, but in very important cases we have it done by contract.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Do you keep the divers all the time?

Mr .CARDIN: One diver. He does this work.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Did you let any contracts last year?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The work was all done by this one diver?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: So the amount expended was all paid to him?

Mr. CARDIN: Not only to him; he has to get other men to help him.

Mr. HANSON: What about the removal of obstructions in navigable rivers? I am interested in the river St. John, which is navigable for some 84 miles from its mouth. Very frequently navigation is obstructed by sunken logs. Is the removal of such obstructions paid out of this vote?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: How much work was done on the St. John river last year?

Mr. CARDIN: None at all.

Mr. HANSON: Why not? There is never a season when it is not necessary to remove snags from that river. I have heard complaints from St. John river captains that the work has not been done recently. Under the old government the work was let every year to one of the tug-boats companies. I asked about the item a few years ago and was told the service was done very efficiently by a certain company, but I was never able to find out the name of that concern. I should like to know what work has been done since the navigation season of 1921.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no information that any work has been done on the river St. John. We have no record of any complaints having been made of the nature mentioned by my hon. friend. Possibly the work to which he refers has been done in years gone by by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. HANSON: That is what I was going to suggest.

Mr. BELL (St. John): The owner of the steamer that plies between St. John and Fredericton writes me that his boat has grounded two or three times during the past season. Would the work of keeping the river safe for navigation come under the Public Works department?

Mr. CARDIN: If my hon. friend will be kind enough to send me the letter I will make the necessary investigation, and if the work does come under our jurisdiction, I shall be quite ready to have it attended to.

Mr. HANSON: I think dredging comes under the Public Works department. I hope the minister will give the matter attention.

Mr. CARDIN: Most decidedly.

Mr. HANSON: If this is the item under which the department in previous years has paid for removing snags from the St. John river, I hope something will be done this season along the same lines.

Mr. CARDIN: We have never performed any work of this kind; this work is under the jurisdiction of the Public Works department.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): This item also applies to the Great Lakes?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Does the same amount each year, $5,000, take care of the removal of snags everywhere, or is this item simply for salaries?

Mr. CARDIN: This applies really to the removal of sunken vessels which have become obstacles to navigation. It does not apply to the dredging of navigable waters, which is attended to by the Public Works department. We only look after exceptional cases.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): It would be interesting to know whether any obstructions along the Great Lakes were removed during 1923-24, for I notice the vote is the same for each year.

Mr. CARDIN: The only case I have is the removal of an obstacle in the St. Clair river last year.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I would have thought that if the vote was for the removal of snags from navigable waters it would vary from year to year. Why is the same amount asked for every year?

Mr. CARDIN: We never know how much will be required for this work, so we follow the practice of asking for $5,000, which for a number of years has been found sufficient to meet any requisitions for the removal of obstructions. We have nothing definite upon which we can base our estimate.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): That amount is expended every year?

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is not entirely expended every year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Can the minister tell me what amount was expended in removing the sand and gravel at the point where the waters from lake Huron enter into the St. Clair river, and the number of yards that were removed?

Mr. CARDIN: My information is that this is not under our jurisdiction.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Does the minister tell me that the obstructions to navigation at the point where the waters of lake Huron enter the St. Clair river are not under the control of this government?

Mr. CARDIN: They might be under the control of the department of Public Works.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What obstructions did the department remove from the river St. Clair?

Mr. CARDIN: We removed a steamer, the Wm. H. Wolfe, which was wrecked and abandoned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): What did it cost to remove the steamer?

Mr. CARDIN: The cost was $1,654.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Could the minister tell me what dredging, if any, was done, or what obstructions the department removed from the river Thames between Wallaceburg and Chatham?

Mr. CARDIN: We performed no such work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): No dredging was done by the department?

Mr. CARDIN: No, not by our department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I suppose it would be the Public Works department that removes obstructions in those rivers.

Mr. CARDIN: The dredging is done by the Public Works department. My department is looking after the dredging of the St. Lawrence ship channel only.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): And the removal of snags?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): In what year was that removal made?

Mr. CARDIN: Last year.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why is it that the minister's department has charge of the dredging of the St. Lawrence and not of the other rivers?

Mr. CARDIN: Prior to fifteen or twenty years ago the St. Lawrence ship channel was under the control of the Department of Public Works, but there was a change; the St. Lawrence channel was transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If I remember correctly it was during the time that Hon. Mr. Prefontaine was minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What were the reasons?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know what the reasons were at that time.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister does not know the reasons now.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know why they did it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why is it not retransferred to the Public Works department, to make it uniform?

Mr. CARDIN: That might be a subject of consideration in the remodelling of the department.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. HANSON: Is it not a fact that the transfer of the dredging of the channel of the St. Lawrence from the Public Works to the Marine department has been the cause of great expense to the public, on account of the overhead involved? The Department of Public Works has a complete outfit of dredgers, superintendents, and so on, and the transfer of this dredging from the Marine department to the Public Works has necessitated a duplicate system of overhead which is very costly to the country. If the minister wants to make a name for himself he will retransfer this dredging to the department of Public Works. The reason why it has been retained in the Marine department, I imagine, is that the St. Lawrence channel is under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and of course having charge of this dredging magnifies the importance of the department and gives them more money to spend in Quebec, from which province for many years the minister of Marine and Fisheries has come. I suggest that if the minister wants to save the country a considerable amount of money he will do away with this duplication of overhead in the dredging service, and vest all that service either in his department or in the Public Works department. Let us save a little money on the dredging.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the work on the St. Lawrence ship channel come under the engineer of the Public Works department, or is there an engineering department in the Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. CARDIN: We have an engineering department looking after the work we are performing. There is a vote regarding that which will be considered later.

Mr. LANGWORTHY: Does this item apply wholly to the obstruction of navigable waters?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. LANGWORTHY: I have in mind the state of affairs in Port Arthur, where we have plenty of derelicts which poke their noses above water. We call it the graveyard. It is an eyesore to the community. Has the Marine department any control over that?

Mr. CARDIN: That would come under the jurisdiction of the Public Works department. We have the same thing in the Richelieu river, in the constituency I represent.

Mr. LANGWORTHY: I wish the minister would see that the other department looks after this graveyard in Port Arthur and gets the obstruction cleared up. It is an unsightly place.

Item agreed to.

Inspection of live stock shipments, $4,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This proposed appropriation is to provide for the inspection of ships carrying live stock to European ports, to see that they are properly fitted up and equipped in accordance with the provisions of the live stock act. The act provides that ships carrying live stock cannot clear from any port without a government certificate.

Mr. TOLMIE: How many cubic feet do you allow per animal?

Mr. CARDIN: I must admit that the regulations are rather complicated and rather long. I see, for example, that cattle carried on third deck must in all cases have a space of two feet eight inches in width and eight feet in length. For fat cattle carried on the upper deck there must be a space provided of two feet six inches clear in width by eight feet in length, and not less than six feet three inches in height.

Mr. TOLMIE: Can you say whether there is any marked superiority in those new cattle shipping boats—I think it is the Jensen line—which have been put into commission recently, compared with the old system?

Mr. CARDIN: We have no exact information as to the advantages of the new system. The only information we have is that it provides for carrying cattle on five decks instead of three. The results are satisfactory, but we cannot say whether there has been any improvement over the other system.

Mr. TOLMIE: What are the general provisions for ventilation and at what temperature are the cattle kept?

Mr. CARDIN: This is part of the report that has been made:

The system of ventilation arranged is ample for the requirements as set out by the British Ministry of Agriculture.

In the compartments where the change per hour is slightly under ten, the loss in efficiency can be attributed to:

1. The zero conditions prevailing at the time the tests were made, one of the fans being frozen.
2. Lack of steam pressure at intervals, and
3. The storage of fodder by the stevedores in every available space, irrespective of the location of the air supply and exhaust ducts, the free circulation of air in certain compartments being badly obstructed.

With higher temperatures at sea, steadier steam pressures, and consumption of the fodder during the voyage, conditions would be improved.

A survey of the four lower compartments aft during Sunday afternoon after the cattle had been two days on board showed the atmospheric conditions to be excellent.

Hon. gentlemen will understand that the matter is complicated.

Mr. MULLINS: What are the regulations in regard to shipping store cattle—that is cattle under 1,000 pounds—on these vessels? Are five being put in "four" space and if so what is the size of the space—two feet eight, or two feet six?

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid my hon. friend is asking about a matter with which he is more conversant than I am. Probably he is asking for something that he already knows. It is rather hard for me to find it in the long list of regulations which I have before me.

Mr. MULLINS: I am asking for information. It is overcrowding cattle to put them in a space two feet six inches wide. It is not fair to put five cattle in space for four, giving each only two feet six.

Mr. CARDIN: We have two inspectors in Montreal, one in St. John and one in Quebec.

Mr. HANSON: I have been wondering why this appropriation comes under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Logically speaking I think it should come under the purview of our friend the Minister of Agriculture, who has taken a great interest in this matter. It pertains to the safe passage of cattle and their arrival in a proper condition in the Old Country. Has this always been under the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Why?

Mr. CARDIN: Probably the idea is that the Department of Marine and Fisheries is dealing more directly with steamboat inspection.

Mr. DAVIS: Has the minister seen the results of any inspection that has taken place of the shipment of cattle from Canadian ports?

Mr. CARDIN: We are not making an inspection of the cattle. We inspect only the fittings which are placed on the ship.

Mr. DAVIS: Has the result of the work of those inspectors been to bring about changes for the better in regard to the shipment of cattle?

Mr. CARDIN: The idea was to bring about better results but the inspectors we have are not interested at all in the cattle. They inspect only the fittings upon the vessels in order to ascertain whether or not they comply with the regulations.

Mr. DAVIS: During the inspection has any change in the fittings ever been made upon the recommendation of the inspectors?

Mr. CARDIN: Numerous changes have been made.

Mr. MULLINS: To whom do the inspectors report? If five cattle are put in space for four, do they get the standard two feet eight inch space they should have?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps I could supply the information. If animals are under 1,000 pounds, five are put in a stall; if over 1,000 pounds, four are put in a stall. With respect to the first report we have had from our inspectors who accompanied the first consignment by this specially equipped boat, the results have been quite satisfactory as regards the cattle. Of course the first shipment was made under very difficult circumstances owing to the storm, about which my hon. friend knows; but notwithstanding the arduous voyage the animals had they came through with less shrinkage than any cattle on any other boat that was on the Atlantic at the same time. This was due to the better facilities for taking care of the animals during the storm through which they were passing, and their increased comfort during the voyage; although there was not complete satisfaction because it was the first shipment and certain difficulties were experienced which they had not anticipated. They had a shortage of coal and they had to slow up the boat to six knots an hour, so that the voyage took several days longer. But in spite of all those difficulties this cattle shipment came through better than any other boat that carried cattle during the same period. We have no report as to the second boatload, except a wireless as to its arrival on the other side. Everything seems to indicate that the five-deck boat has come to stay. Some changes have been made in regard to ventilation after the experiences of the first trip. The facilities as regards cleaning the animals have been improved. They provide for taking them out every day. According to the report that has been submitted to us, the facilities will have to be considerably enlarged to provide for the proper cleaning of the quarters. Otherwise the necessary sanitation will have to wait until the arrival of the ship on the other side. The first attempt at improving the facilities has been successful and the second trial promises an equally satisfactory result.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the sense of inspecting the hygienic surroundings of the animals when the animals themselves are not examined for disease?

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The vessels are equipped to comply with the regulations of the British Board of Trade, and our cattle are not allowed to land unless those regulations are observed.

Mr. McGIBBON: The health of the animals is infinitely more important than the surroundings in which they are shipped. It was simply because of an alleged outbreak of disease among some of the cattle shipped from this country twenty-five or thirty years ago that our Canadian animals were kept out of the Old Country for so long a period.

Mr. CARDIN: The animals are inspected by the officers of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MULLINS: It is important to know definitely whether the animals are given adequate accommodation. To whom do the officials report in this regard? Does the inspector report to the minister?

Mr. CARDIN: This officer reports to the Department of Marine and Fisheries if the fittings, and so forth, are in accordance with the regulations.

Mr. MULLINS: He measures the space?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Who is the inspector at St. John, and what is the salary?

Mr. CARDIN: The inspector, Mr. J. M. Martin, receives a salary of $300, working part time.

Mr. FOSTER: Who is the inspector at Halifax?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no inspector there.

Mr. FOSTER: If we succeed in re-establishing the industry in Nova Scotia, will the minister give us an assurance that he will appoint an inspector at Halifax and that the department will lend every assistance in building up the trade again?

9 p.m.

Mr. CARDIN: Most certainly.

Item agreed to.

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. HANSON: This subsidy applies to the St. Lawrence and to the west coast. There are two plants in the Maritime provinces, the St. John Shipbuilding Company in New Brunswick, and Beasley Brothers in Halifax. Why does the item discriminate against these firms? Why is this all allotted to one firm on the Pacific coast and one on the Atlantic, without any allotment to the salvage companies of Halifax and St. John?

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HANSON: I would like to have an answer, with all due respect to the hon. member for North Winnipeg.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that in years past we gave a subsidy to a salvage company on the Atlantic coast, but it has been discontinued on account of representations made by other companies interested in salvage work. They preferred to have the competition open to all companies, instead of giving a preference to any one firm. That is the reason.

Mr. HANSON: I quite understand that they wished to get the work on a purely salvage basis; they make or break, as the case may be. If they win they win big; if they lose, they do not get anything. It seems to me that if there is enough work that scheme should be followed out by the government and the vote should be abolished. I suggest to the minister that he consider the advisability of cuting his vote out here and now. It will save the country $35,000. It has been demonstrated by the minister himself—and I am sure that he was backed up by his deputy, from whom no doubt he got the information—that so far as the Atlantic coast is concerned they do not want a subsidy; they prefer to have it in a go-as-you-please way, taking a chance on the work. There is a well-equipped plant in the city of St. John and another, I believe, in Halifax; they are private firms and do work at a profit. They take their chance on getting the work, and on being paid if they are successful. Usually they take work on this basis: if they do not complete the job they get no money at all. It seems to me this principle could well be applied on the St. Lawrence, and there is no necessity for this subsidy to the Davie Shipbuilding Company at Quebec. I invite the minister to delete this item from his estimates this year and thus save the country $35,000.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I would like to ask the minister if these subsidies were granted by tender or by competition, or how they were granted.

Mr. CARDIN: The reason for giving this subsidy to the Quebec plant is that first of all it is the only plant on the St. Lawrence river. This plant was not prosperous; it was about to close on account of poor business, and it was represented to the department by the shipping interests that we should give it assistance in order to keep it in operation. The Canadian Pacific Railway has taken over the plant and apparatus and formed a subsidiary company, so in reality they are operating this salvage plant on the St. Lawrence in order to have at least one such plant on that river. It was thought that this establishment, which is very useful to the steamship companies on the St. Lawrence, was about to be closed; the plant is absolutely necessary, and we extended the subsidy, as I desire to insist, upon recommendations made to the department by the shipping interests.

Mr. HANSON: I think the minister has given an additional first class reason why this vote should be eliminated. In other words the government are giving a subsidy to a great company like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which operates an immense line of shipping on the St. Lawrence and to whom $35,000, or—how much is allotted to the St. Lawrence?

Mr. CARDIN: Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HANSON: That is a mere bagatelle to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If that plant is necessary to the company they will take its cost out of the travelling public, and that amount should be saved to the public. A subsidy is not necessary on the Pacific coast, and I suggest that if a great casualty should happen some ship the salvage facilities of St. John and Halifax could very well be brought up to where they were needed. I again invite the minister to cut out this vote. It is there because it has been there for a good many years. It is like a great many other votes; once they get in the estimates—and I think the minister will be the first to recognize this truism—it takes a team of oxen to get them out again. A great corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway can get along without this subsidy.

Mr. CARDIN: This subsidy is not granted merely to meet the requests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; this plant is absolutely necessary to all navigation companies having boats plying the St. Lawrence. The situation there might be different from that which prevails in the Maritime provinces. There is probably not sufficient work to develop the St. Lawrence plant and have it maintained by a private company. If we do not give a subsidy to this company which now exists, this plant may be done away with and we would be placed in a very embarrassing position. I would not care to take upon myself the responsibility of stopping its operations and thus exposing the government to the very severe and well founded criticism of all the companies drawing benefits from this plant. Navigation on the St. Lawrence is a very important matter, as is navigation everywhere, and the government should take and is trying to take every precaution and every care in order to protect navigation. We have been informed that if we do not pay this subsidy the plant will be closed, and what then will be the position of the government? We will be exposed to the criticism of the companies and probably to the criticism of the members, voicing the public interest of this country. I would not care to take the responsibility of dropping this vote, because I am convinced that it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. ROGERS: If it is necessary at Quebec why is it not necessary at Halifax?

Mr. CARDIN: Because there are several other companies at Halifax, and they have informed the department that they want to be free in competition; they do not want any company subsidized by the government. There is no such thing at Quebec; there is no such thing on the St. Lawrence at all, because there is only one company, which, unassisted, is not capable of making both ends meet.

Mr. ROGERS: What about the $10,000 which is given to British Columbia? You have a number of private companies there; why should this company at Quebec be favoured above other companies?

Mr. CARDIN: Probably the representations which have been made in regard to British Columbia were similar to those made regarding the St. Lawrence. The situation might be very different from that of the Atlantic coast.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TOLMIE: I think the minister would take a great responsibility in eliminating this particular vote with regard to British Columbia and the Pacific coast.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And Quebec also.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am not so familiar with Quebec, but I want to say that the salvage companies keep excellent boats on hand, fully equipped for service. One company recently paid a high price in England for a very powerful tug, one of the most powerful on the Pacific coast, for the purposes of salvage. These boats are kept under steam, and their crews are maintained on their regular wages, ready at all times to proceed to sea on the shortest possible notice, with the result that when a wreck takes place they are able to render immediate assistance and save very often a large amount of money, in many cases perhaps many lives. They are rendering a very excellent service. If this subsidy were wiped out and this work were split up it would probably not be nearly as efficient as it is at present, and the minister would be assuming a very grave risk if he did anything of the kind without first making a very thorough investigation of the situation. The more he investigates it the greater reason I am sure he will find for maintaining this subsidy.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): By this subsidy the government is creating unfair competition with the Atlantic coast. Wreckage occurs, and tenders are asked for salvage of that wreckage. The Atlantic coast companies are handicapped to the extent of the $25,000 which is given to Quebec, to the salvage association there. So far as the Atlantic coast is concerned, we do not want any subsidy for that kind of work, and we do not think—I do not think—that any subsidy should be paid to any company for work of that nature. It is unnecessary. The wrecks are numerous enough, and the work in connection with the salvage of these wrecks is profitable enough, to permit these companies to work without any government assistance at all. I quite agree with my hon. friend from York-Sunbury that there is no occasion for a vote of this kind, and I endorse his suggestion that the minister drop the item from the estimates. It is money that can be well saved. I repeat that the expenditure is unnecessary; it creates unfair competition, and the wrecking companies are doing quite well enough without any government assistance.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely my hon. friend does not suggest that the Atlantic coast companies would come up into the St. Lawrence river to do salvage work there; they would arrive much too long after the accident happened to be of any use. This salvage plant is just as necessary for the equipment of the St. Lawrence route as are the lights and buoys and other aids to navigation which are provided. The salvage plant which was operated by the Davie Company—I happen to know something about it—was operated at a loss.

It could not continue, and the shipping companies got together and came to the government, and finally the Canadian Pacific railway agreed to take over the plant and operate it with any losses that might occur in operation, provided that the Department of Marine and Fisheries, acting in the interests of the navigation of the St. Lawrence route, as well as for the benefit of all the shipping companies, would pay the subsidy. This salvage plant is needed for the St. Lawrence route, and I am surprised to hear my friend from Halifax suggest that it comes in competition with the Atlantic coast companies. I thought we were friends. I thought Halifax and St. John were interested in the navigation of the St. Lawrence river, using Quebec in the summer and Halifax and St. John in the winter, and I am surprised to see him working against the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. ROGERS: My friend from Quebec East is apparently very anxious that Quebec should get the whole vote. Neither St. John nor Halifax gets any of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They do not need it.

Mr. ROGERS: Why do they need it in Quebec?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Because the company was operating at a loss, and it could not go on.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Was it not efficient?

Mr. ROGERS: There is no reason why the company should not be efficient and make money at Quebec the same as at any other place.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It could not be done. There is less business than on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. ROGERS: The Canadian Pacific will not go broke on that work. You are just wasting $35,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries when this government came into power in 1921, and this condition existed then. This subsidy was paid by the government, I was going to say of which the hon. member for South Winnipeg was a supporter, but at all events it was paid by the government which most hon. gentlemen immediately opposite were supporting at that time. It was done because it was necessary, and we have to continue this arrangement because it is necessary.

Mr. ROGERS: Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is two rights.

Mr. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): In reference to what the Minister of Justice has just said, I wish to call his attention to the Estimates for 1920-21, in which this vote for $35,000 appears, and this is how it read:

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants in Quebec, Maritime provinces and British Columbia.

So since that time the vote has been changed.

Mr. HEAPS: I feel inclined to agree with those who are opposed to this subsidy. I have heard no good reason given yet why it should be continued. If every concern in Canada that is losing money can come to this government and get a subsidy, there will be no end of applications for subsidies. What I really wish to ask the minister in charge of the department is this: What is the actual amount of work that was done in the St. Lawrence by the company that has received this subsidy for the last few years? What service have they performed for the subsidy of $25,000?

Mr. CARDIN: It might be of interest to the committee to know what are the earnings and the expenses of this wrecking plant. Their expenses are $81,000, and their earnings, including the subsidy, are only $56,000. They are receiving from their private work only $31,555.79. They have a loss every year, and the loss last year was $25,136.95.

Mr. HANSON: Surely the minister is not so guileless as not to know how easy it is to show a bookkeeping deficit to suit the circumstances and get a subsidy. It would not be the first time that has been done, and he would not be the first minister. While I am on my feet, let me say that the Minister of Justice cannot get away with any such story as he has told us to-night. Everybody knows that there are more wrecks in the St. Lawrence than on the Atlantic coast around St. John and Halifax, and if the salvage operators at St. John and Halifax are willing to take their chances on this class of work without a subsidy, surely there is some concern on the St. Lawrence that can take the same chance. The way this works out is just this: The shipping companies which have losses on the St. Lawrence are probably getting their work done at a very great deal less than the tramp steamers and liners which have to have work of this kind done on the Atlantic coast, because they have to pay on a true salvage basis, and if the salvage operators make a successful job of it they get a large sum in compensation. That is how they make money if they make any money at all. There is no longer any real justification for this vote, especially in the light of the circumstances and the information that the minister has given to the committee since this item came before it.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): The Minister of Justice seems to have come to the relief of his colleague in a very heated manner; he seems to have lost some of his patience. I want to say to him that I am not attacking the St. Lawrence route. If this subsidy is withdrawn, and if the company which is enoying the subsidy ceases to do the work, I am perfectly satisfied that the combined steamship companies operating on the Atlantic, together with the underwriters, will very soon provide themselves with an efficient salvage plant to take care of any wrecks that may occur. Probably under those conditions they would confine themselves to the St. Lawrence and not get beyond its mouth. I repeat the subsidy is unwarranted, and I would again suggest to the minister that it be withdrawn.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the callous indifference with which hon. gentlemen from the Maritime provinces, after advancing what they think to be good reasons why the Atlantic vote should be reduced or withdrawn, cheerfully propose to throw British Columbia into the discard by simply sweeping away the whole vote without advancing one particle of reason why that province should be discriminated against. I must support the attitude taken by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie). The company that got this subsidy are, I believe, very good friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I have no doubt they support the ex-Minister of Agriculture. But that is by the way. Their services are absolutely needed on the Pacific coast. We have not got any other private companies there interested in the wrecking business that amount to very much. I think my hon. friend from Victoria will confirm my statement that this wrecking company brought their latest boat out from England last year at enormous expense, it being fitted not only for wrecking purposes but for life-saving, and the subsidy covers the dual services. As my hon. friend said, the steamer is kept at Esquimalt harbour with steam up all the time. What the conditions may be in the east, I do not propose to discuss, but I do not think hon. gentlemen from the Maritimes should try to interfere in regard to this matter with which they are not acquainted. Conditions in British Columbia are totally different to those in the east. Not only that, but if there is to be any change I would say that the subsidy for British Columbia should be increased. It is well known that the government have gone to some expense, and I give them credit for it, in improving the life-saving appliances on the west coast. It is essential during four months of the year to have a boat of the same character stationed at a place called Bamfield, where it would be more readily accessible to respond to calls from ships in distress on the west coast than at Esquimalt, which is too far away. I have always tried to get this boat stationed at Bamfield for the winter months, but they say the subsidy is not sufficient, as they would have to keep another boat at Victoria, and the extra expense would not be justified. For the last three or four years the government has put one of its naval boats, the Thiepval, and one of their trawlers, the Givenchy, on this service. Those boats are very well in their way and are better than nothing, but they are quite unsuited, for they have neither the requisite speed nor power. If a boat is disabled on the west coast you need a craft powerful enough, such as that subsidized by the government, to go and pull her offshore before it is too late. The naval boats utilized by the government are not fit for this work for, as I say, they have not sufficient weight and power. But they are better than nothing and have rendered very good service, as the committee will appreciate from a letter which I am about to quote:

> The Thiepval did very good service during the winter, Lieut. Godfrey in command. Recently he got out of here and got a line aboard the Mexican sailing ship disabled off Garmanah, beating the fast U.S. Snohomish by a few lengths, although she had only a 24-mile run from Flattery.

He concludes his letter in this way:

> We are glad that sensible people are running these affairs of the navy and would like them to know of our appreciation.

Nevertheless those boats are not suited for the work. Some time or other they will be called upon to go out and save a lot of passengers or a valuable cargo, but they will be unable to do so for lack of power. I call on my hon. friend from Victoria to support me that if any change is made in this vote it ought to be by way of increased subsidy to enable that wrecker to be placed on the west coast during the winter months.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Will the minister tell us how many wrecks have occurred along the Atlantic coast, in the St. Lawrence river, and on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CARDIN: I have no record at hand of wrecks on the Atlantic coast because these estimates do not deal with that part of the work. I had a record of wrecks on the St. Lawrence route where the Quebec Salvage Company is operating. Last year from June to December they rendered assistance to sixteen ships in distress.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Was that for the navigation season of 1925?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Has the minister any records of wrecks on the Pacific coast for the same period?

Mr. CARDIN: There were fifteen on the Pacific coast.

Mr. STEVENS: Were they all assisted by this salvage company?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): As practically every member from the eastern provinces is opposed to the part of this subsidy relating to the Atlantic, representing $10,000, and as the minister himself has expressed his agreement with them, I am at a loss to know why he does not reduce the item by that amount.

Mr. CARDIN: The subsidy for the Atlantic ports was dropped three or four years ago. The work is now done under contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): I understood the minister to say that he was paying $10,000 of this subsidy towards the Atlantic service.

Mr. CARDIN: No; $10,000 is for the Pacific coast.

Mr. BOYS: Of course if it is under contract we have simply got to pay it until the contract expires. How long does the contract run?

Mr. CARDIN: The contract with the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company was renewed May 1, 1922.

Mr. BOYS: For how long?

Mr. CARDIN: Five years.

Mr. ROGERS: You have to pay it anyway for five years.

Mr. BOYS: Can the minister give us any further information in regard to this contract?

Mr. CARDIN: It was renewed last year. It was for a period of ten years from the 2nd of July, 1925.

Mr. BOYS: If the committe had that information a little while ago the discussion would have terminated, because we could not get out of it if we wanted to.

Mr. HANSON: In previous years, I know in 1919 and 1920—a subsidy was given to salvage companies operating on the Atlantic coast. Why was that cut out? Was it at their own request?

Mr. CARDIN: It is important to note that on the Atlantic coast several companies are doing the same work. They are not in the same position as we are on the St. Lawrence route. We have only one company there. There are several companies on the Atlantic coast and they have made representations to the department that they preferred to be free to compete for the work to be done on the Atlantic coast, and we have stopped giving subsidies to the Atlantic companies.

Mr. BOYS: When was that done?

Mr. CARDIN: About 1922.

Mr. BOYS: Was that done absolutely on the request of the wrecking companies?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, on account of the representations made by the companies that no assistance be given to any company; that they preferred to be free to compete for the work.

Mr. HANSON: In other words, one company which has a monopoly of the traffic on the St. Lawrence is not able to make both ends meet, while several companies in St. John, Halifax, Sydney and elsewhere are competing against each other and desire to wipe out all government assistance and go ahead on their own account. But they cannot do that in the city of Quebec. I always understood that Quebec was a pap-fed province, and now I know it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Those words will be taken down.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister give us an explanation why a bonus should be given to companies from Montreal down the St. Lawrence when it is not given to companies from Montreal up? There is the Donnelly wrecking company of Kingston; they get no assistance. They do all the work in the upper part of the river.

Mr. CARDIN: No representation along those lines has ever been made for assistance to any other port, anywhere.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the hon. member not think it a peculiar thing that this company above Montreal can carry on, make money and maintain a big plant, while the companies below Montreal must get assistance?

Mr. CARDIN: The figures speak for themselves. This company has expenses of $81,000, and its return, without including the subsidy, is only $31,000. Even with the subsidy of $25,000 that we are giving them, they are making a loss every year of $25,000. Is there any chance of their keeping their plant in operation if we do away with the subsidy? They would certainly close, and the minister of Marine and Fisheries, whoever he might be—it might be my hon. friend opposite—would be criticized if anything happened.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is peculiar that one company from Montreal must get a grant, while above Montreal no company asks for a grant.

Mr. CARDIN: Possibly the reason is that there is no necessity for assistance.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I think the minister stated that they gave $10,000 for fifteen wrecks on the Pacific coast.

Mr. CARDIN: That was not all for wrecks. Assistance was given to them.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): On the St. Lawrence there were sixteen cases, and the minister states that $25,000 was given for salvaging those cases, why is there such a difference in the figures?

Mr. CARDIN: It is comparable to the case of a man who insures his house. We have to insure and protect the navigation company, and we have to be prepared to proceed to the wrecks and give assistance. We do not know what will happen. A man may pay a premium for many years and his house will never burn, but he is fully justified in paying that premium. We do not know what position we may be placed in, but we are taking the precautions indicated to us as necessary by those who are supposed to know. We are doing this in the same manner as we are giving all the other assistance to navigation in this country. The Minister of Justice has referred to lighthouses, buoys, and so on; we are doing all this to help navigation and to have our waters as safe as possible, to protect the trade of the country. If we should stop such aid now we would have to bear the responsibility.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. ROGERS: I suppose you have more wrecks on the St. Lawrence than you have on the coast?

Mr. CARDIN: Judging from the earnings there seem to be less, because they have not enough to meet their obligations.

Mr. ROGERS: That would not follow.

Mr. CARDIN: On the Atlantic they do not want the subsidy, and say "Let us compete."

Mr. ROGERS: What would be the earnings of the wrecking plant in British Columbia?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not a statement of the earnings and expenses of the British Columbia company.

Mr. QUINN: The minister has frequently stated that owing to the competition among the wrecking firms in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick there is no need for a subsidy being given to any of them. It seems to me that the granting of this subsidy of $25,000 to one concern on the St. Lawrence tends to prevent competition, because it is only natural that a wrecking company which anticipated going into that business would not think of establishing a plant where there was already a plant subsidized to the extent of $25,000. I suggest that the minister withdraw this subsidy, to encourage competition and obtain the results which we are enjoying in the Maritime provinces. He stated a few moments ago that the St. Lawrence was too far away from the wrecking plants in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I might draw his attention to the fact that we have had successful operation of wrecking plants from Halifax as far east as the straits of Belle Isle, and only two years ago the Beasley firm, well known to members on the other side of the House, successfully salvaged a number of guns from the H.M.S. Renown. If they can do that I submit they can go as far as the St. Lawrence river. The government might well withdraw this subsidy of $25,000—I say nothing about the British Columbia subsidy—and let the companies proceed as they do in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Has the minister had any request from wrecking companies on the Great Lakes? The minister has some idea of the enormous traffic on those lakes. He has already had a vote passed for the removal of one wreck in the river St. Clair. During the busy season of the year a boat passes that place every seven minutes going down or up the river. I cannot understand why these subsidies should be granted to wrecking companies in the lower part of the St. Lawrence and other parts of Canada and not extended to the Great Lakes if the scheme is considered a feasible one.

Mr. CARDIN: No request has been made to the department to subsidize any companies in the territory mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. CHURCH: This is the fifth session of parliament that I have brought up this question in connection with this $35,000 item, and I wish to protest on behalf of the ports on the Great Lakes regarding all these maritime votes not covering the Great Lakes as well as the ocean and river. I want to find out from the minister whether this is just a vote for the ocean. Where do the Great Lakes come in on this particular proposition? Are the people of the Great Lakes just to be hewers of wood and drawers of water to the ocean and its traffic and to pay the cost thereof? Is this department going to continue to be a political department?—because it has never been anything but a political department for both parties since confederation. It assists certain sections at the expense of the rest of the country. We have passed four or five items to-night but I was not here when two or three of them were being discussed.

The other day I introduced to the minister a delegation representative of all the shipping interests, captains and Canadian lake navigators on the Great Lakes, and he received them very courteously. They were asking for certain reforms in regard to this particular department. The people of the Great Lakes are getting sick and tired of paying taxes and getting nothing at all in return. As I pointed out two or three years ago, these votes should be cancelled altogether at the end of the five year contract period.

This particular item of $35,000 for wrecking plants in Quebec and British Columbia, is mixed up in politics and it should never have been granted by parliament. If you have a vote like this for one or two plants in Quebec and British Columbia, why not have grants for wrecking plants throughout the whole of Canada? Why is there not equality of treatment? The Railway Act provides for equality of treatment in regard to transportation and wrecking plants on land; why is there not equality of treatment on water? Are we to continue as in the days of John and Sebastian Cabot and Christopher Columbus, who never heard of the Great Lakes? The department has always been a political department and will always continue to be as long as the ports on the Great Lakes fall for it. I am sorry to say that when this vote has been up in this House during the last three or four sessions the members from Ontario have been afraid to get up in their places and speak about it.

In front of the Niagara there is a large sand shoal where there a wreck may occur to any of the wonderful boats which carry a million and a half passengers a year, yet the government will do nothing. We have pointed this out to the government. I do not blame the present government at all in regard to this matter because the late government was just as bad. The quicker the Department of Marine and Fisheries gets out of politics the better.

I received a letter from Commodore George H. Gooderham, of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, Toronto, asking that certain shoals in the bay of Quinté and the Murray and Trent canals be removed, but four or five years passed and nothing was done. They had a wreck in Toronto off the exhibition on the Modgeska and a very fine officer, Captain Henderson, lost his certificate. Why? Because the wreck commissioner was an ocean-going officer who did not understand lake waters, and he cut off the certificate of a man who knew more than the wreck commissioner did. I am pointing this out just because you, Mr. Chairman, have been a good friend of the Great Lakes. The day is coming when the general policy of the government regarding Dominion services such as aids to navigation, wrecking plants, life-saving, navigation schools, examinations of masters and mates and all these other items we have passed to-night, should extend not only to the St. Lawrence and the gulf but right to the head of the lakes.

On lake Superior and lake Huron wrecks occur in bad weather, and if you look around for a wrecking plant you cannot get one. On lake Ontario conditions are so bad that you have to get a private wrecking plant at Kingston, and it may have to go two or three hundred miles to reach the scene of the accident. A Dominion government dredge, the Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was wrecked off Newcastle in a storm involving a cost of $700,000, and it took seven years to find it. They had to import wrecking plants from Germany and other parts of the world to find where that dredge was, and they discovered it in about sixty feet of water off Newcastle.

I do not oppose this vote at all. It may be necessary. I pointed out, as reported in Hansard of 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925, that if you are to apply a general policy of subsidizing private wrecking plants in Quebec and British Columbia, and other aid from this department, that general policy should apply to the Great Lakes as well as the ocean and the gulf. If you read the returns of the Department of Marine and Fisheries you will realize what a great tonnage there is on the Great Lakes without any wrecking plant or aids to navigation, and yet sectional interests are allowed to interfere with the work of this department. There is a good deputy at the head of this department. The present minister, whom I met with a delegation of people on both sides of politics, received us courteously, and we were pleased with the reception we got. This policy should be extended to the Great Lakes, in view of the memorandum which has been laid before the government by the shipping interests on the Great Lakes and by the captains and mates who have to sail boats on those waters in season and out of season, in all kinds of weather, and who have to put up with the intolerable state of affairs on the lakes, such as lack of aids to navigation, lack of proper lighthouses, lack of proper wrecking plants and proper life-saving equipment.

We in the city of Toronto have to be a sort of Department of Marine and Fisheries for lake Ontario, the Niagara river, lake Erie, the Muskoka lakes and Georgian bay when our citizens go there in the summer time. If the government are to vote $2,500,000 along these lines there should be reciprocal treatment between the ports on the ocean and ports on the Great Lakes. I would support liberal expenditure for ocean shipping. We hear talk about Maritime rights and British Columbia rights, and nothing should be too good for these distant provinces; but when the port of Toronto, which contributes large sums to the Dominion treasury, has to spend its own money on aids to navigation, the Marine and Fisheries department should see that traffic on the Great Lakes gets a fair share of this vote. We ought to know what these wrecking plants do, what they cost, what dividends they pay, what insurance they have—in a word, what justification there is for this expenditure. I should think that in the course of five years the government would have been able to devise a policy of its own in this matter. I certainly must protest against the discrimination against the Great Lakes while maritime ports are being taken care of. The lake ports are becoming an important factor in transportation to-day and when we consider what the United States government is doing at Cleveland, Buffalo, Toledo, Detroit and elsewhere, we are astounded at the way in which navigation on the lakes on this side is being neglected. The United States government is doing everything it possibly can to aid navigation, in the provision of buoys, beacon lights, lighthouses and all other necessary equipment. It is small wonder that there has taken place in this country one of the biggest mergers we have ever seen.

I appeal to the minister to make a thorough survey of the situation on the Great Lakes. The matter was brought clearly to his attention in an elaborate memorandum submitted to him by the delegation which I had the honour to introduce, comprising representatives from various lake ports, who asked that the vote be extended to include provision for aid to navigation on the Great Lakes. I trust that the matter will receive the serious attention of the government.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What do the contracts call for?

Mr. CARDIN: Under the contract with the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company the steamer Lord Strathcona must be maintained in service, together with such plant as may be required, to the satisfaction of the department. The service extends from May 1 to December 1.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Just what has the steamer to do?

Mr. CARDIN: It is required to assist vessels in distress in any accident that occurs in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Mr. BOYS: Upon what basis is the subsidy granted? Does it depend upon the value of the plant or the number of wrecks?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount is arbitrary, and if the company is able to show a surplus it is supposed to divide it with the department.

Mr. BOYS: I notice that in one case the grant is $25,000 and in the other $10,000. Is the smaller amount given to British Columbia because they could get along with $10,000, while owing to disasters Quebec found it necessary to ask for $25,000?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I cannot give the details of the transaction. I was not in the department when it was entered into.

Mr. BOYS: I do not suppose the British Columbia company would refuse $25,000?

Mr. CARDIN: I am sure not, but they were satisfied with $10,000.

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps that was all they could get. But viewing the matter from a business standpoint there is palpably some reason for giving one concern $25,000 and the other $10,000. Possibly the distribution is based upon the number of wrecks, the amount of capital involved, or some other consideration. The minister has not explained this point.

10 p.m.

Mr. CARDIN: In British Columbia the company is free to operate the whole year round, and in that way is in a position to earn money in addition to the grant. In Quebec, on the other hand, they operate only during part of the year. This explains it in part. The investment is the same in both cases, but there is the difference in duration of earning capacity.

Mr. BOYS: What amount did British Columbia require—just the $10,000?

Mr. CARDIN: Ten thousand was satisfactory to them. They requested a renewal of the contract.

Mr. BOYS: Is it the same as the contract of last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The contract has been the same for ten years.

Mr. FOSTER: Has any other salvage company in Quebec applied to the government for a similar subsidy?

Mr. CARDIN: No, this is the only one.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): How many wrecks have been removed on the lower St. Lawrence during the past two years?

Mr. CARDIN: This vote is not exactly to provide for the removal of wrecks; it is for assistance to be given to ships in distress.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton): Has the minister a statement of such aid given?

Mr. CARDIN: We have a statement, yes, although I have not given it in detail. The company has been called upon to render assistance in sixteen instances.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 10.03 p.m.

Monday, April 12, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER'S REPORT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to table, at the request of the Chief Electoral Officer, the statutory report on the fifteenth general election, this having been printed pursuant to the provisions of section 72, subsection 6, of the Dominion Elections Act.

MINISTER OF LABOUR

ELECTION CERTIFICATE

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer a certificate of the election and return of the Hon. John Campbell Elliott for the electoral district of Middlesex West.

INTRODUCTION

Hon. John Campbell Elliott, Minister of Labour, member for the electoral district of Middlesex West, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That all papers laid on the table do stand referred to the joint committee on Printing for consideration for the purpose of reporting as to whether they are to be printed or not.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answering a question put to me sotto voce by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), who inquired what was the purpose of the motion that has just been moved by the right hon. the Prime Minister, I might explain that in the old days all the papers tabled were printed, and in consequence the volumes were very bulky and contained much useless printed matter. A committee of the House, when we were sitting in the Victoria Museum, decided that the committee on Printing should make a selection of the papers to be printed and determine what should and what should not be printed. That has been the practice now for the last six or seven years, and that is the purpose of the motion which has just been presented.

Motion agreed to.

CORNWALL POST OFFICE—PRIVATE BOXES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. C. J. HAMILTON (Stormont): I would ask the Acting Postmaster General why the price of the private boxes in the Cornwall post office has been increased one hundred per cent without any notice being given to the boxholders?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Acting Postmaster General): I really do not know. I would advise my hon. friend to put that question on the order paper, because it is certainly not of a nature which makes it proper to be asked on the orders of the day.

THE BUDGET

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Could the Minister of Finance give us the date for the announcement of the budget?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I am glad my right hon. friend has asked that question, because I was going to say that on Thursday of this week I shall ask the unanimous consent of the House for the motion necessary to present the budget.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will be presented Thursday?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

TEST VOYAGE—LINER REGINA

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): On Friday last the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Price) addressed a question to me, on the orders of the day, with regard to the test voyage to Halifax of the liner Regina. I have caused inquiry to be made in regard to the matter by calling the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways to the remarks of my hon. friend and the statement of the management is:

That instructions had previously been given to all concerned with the solicitation of export traffic to pay special attention to the test voyage of the Regina in order to secure all possible traffic for the return trip.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—DRUG TRAFFIC

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Was a commission issued to J. P. Smith, K.C., of Vancouver, to inquire into alleged improper and illegal handling of drugs by members of the R.C.M.P.?
2. Has the Minister of Justice received a report from J. P. Smith, and has such report been made public?
3. What names were submitted to the minister for appointment for commissioner?
4. Upon whose recommendation, or who was responsible for selecting J. P. Smith as commissioner?
5. Why was J. P. Smith selected in preference to the others?
6. Was not, in fact, J. P. Smith's appointment recommended by Mr. M. A. Macdonald, in Vancouver, and Mr. W. W. B. McInnes?
7. What official or other connection had J. P. Smith with the mounted police in the Yukon?
8. When did such official or other connection cease?
9. Was the minister aware of such official or other connection with the mounted police at the time of such appointment as commissioner?
10. What remuneration has been paid to J. P. Smith for his services as commissioner; also what amount for expenses?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.
2. Yes, the findings of the report have been made public.
3. Messrs. Craig, K.C., H. S. Wood, and J. P. Smith, K.C.
4. Mr. Smith was one of the three above named who were recommended by the Attorney General of British Columbia.
5. No particular reason.
6. No information.
7. None known.
8. Answered by No. 7.
9. Answered by No. 7.
10. As commissioner, $1,700, expenses $46.50, total, $1,746.50.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. In what capacity was M. A. MacDonald acting in connection with Victoria proceedings against Eccles, Smith and Fernandez of the mounted police.
2. Was M. A. MacDonald instructed by the minister to demand a case stated from the presiding magistrate for appeal from the conviction against Eccles, Smith and Fernandez?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. To watch the proceedings and take such action as might be necessary or advisable in the interests of justice.
2. Not specially; but he acted within the scope of his general instructions.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. What fees have been paid to M. A. MacDonald for services in connection with the Victoria proceedings against the mounted police, or for services in any other connection, either as agent for the Minister of Justice, or acting for the Attorney General of Canada, in connection with proceedings against members of the mounted police, and what amount for expenses?
2. What are the names of counsel employed by the Department of Justice to defend the mounted police against charges, both in connection with Victoria proceedings and commission proceedings?
3. What fees have been paid to each of these counsel; also what amounts for expenses?
4. Has any counsel fee been paid to F. A. McDairmid, counsel for Sergeant Munday, and if so, what amount; and what amount for expenses?
5. Has any counsel fee been paid to J. B. Pattullo, of Vancouver, and if so, what amount, and what amount for expenses?
6. In what capacity was J. B. Pattullo acting, and by whom retained?
7. Will the minister state in just what capacity Mr. E. P. Davis was acting?
8. Have counsel fees been paid to J. A. Russell, of Vancouver, counsel for Eccles and other members of the Mounted Police, and if so, what amount, and what amount (if any) for expenses?
9. Has a pardon been granted by the Governor General, from a conviction of Eccles, Fernandez and W. L. Smith, of the Mounted Police, in Victoria, and if so, when was it applied for, by whom, and upon whose recommendation was it granted?
10. When such pardon, as aforesaid, was granted, was there an appeal pending before the Supreme Court of British Columbia by way of stated case, at the request of the Attorney General of Canada?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Victoria proceedings, fees $630.00; Expenses $76.45, total $706.45. Victoria proceedings Appeal Case, fees $617.00; expenses $45.00, total $662.00.
2. E. P. Davis, K.C., J. B. Pattullo, K.C. and M. A. Macdonald, K.C.,—the latter brought in temporarily owing to Mr. Pattullo's illness—were instructed to represent the Department of Justice generally to see that all relevant evidence was produced and to advocate the justice of the case, but they were not otherwise instructed to defend the mounted police.
3. Victoria proceedings:—

J. B. Pattullo—Fees $2,500; expenses and incidentals $265.14, total $2,765.14.

J. B. Pattullo (Victoria Agents) Fees $583.80, expenses $64.35, total $648.15.

M. A. Macdonald, fees $630.00; expenses $76.45, total $706.45.

M. A. Macdonald—Appeal Case—fees $617.00; expenses $45.00, total $662.00.

Commission proceedings:—

E. P. Davis, fees $2,748.62; expenses $61.00, total $2,809.62.

J. B. Pattullo—fees $1,500.00; expenses $39.67, total $1,539.67.

Note: In addition to the above, the following were employed by the defendants to protect their personal interest, namely: J. A. Russell, Vancouver, by Constable Smith; J. A. Russell and J. W. de B. Farris by Agent Eccles and Informant Fernandez; F. A. McDiarmid, Vancouver, by Staff Sergeant Mundy; John A. W. O'Neill, Vancouver, by Constable L. J. Black, and in view of the fact that the defendants were exonerated by the Commission of Inquiry, the accounts for such counsel were paid from public funds. (See answers to questions Nos. 4 below and 8).

4. Yes, fees $875.00; expenses $30.00, total $905.00.

5. Yes, see answer to No. 3 above.

6. At the Victoria proceedings, counsel for Department of Justice retained by Department of Health in the first instance, approved by Department of Justice. At the commission proceedings, for Department of Justice.

7. Leading Counsel for Department of Justice at the commission proceedings.

8. Yes, Victoria preceedings and stated case —fees $482.20; expenses $117.50; commission proceedings, fees $2,025.00; expenses $2.00; Eccles perjury case, fees, $952.03; expenses $37.20; Fernandez perjury case, fees, $904.69; expenses $57.05, total $4,577.67.

9. A free pardon was granted to each, Eccles, Fernandez and Smith. No application for pardon was made in any case. The pardons were granted upon the recommendation of the Minister of Justice.

10. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

Was bail provided for Eccles, Smith and Fernandez in connection with any prosecutions at Victoria by the Department of Justice, or was any person directed to provide bail, and if so, who, and under what circumstances or assurances?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

Bail was not provided by the Department of Justice, neither was any person directed to provide bail when the defendants were arrested in the first instance. The men concerned arranged the bonds required between themselves and members of the force. During the hearing of the commission proceedings, however, Agent Eccles was arrested on a charge of perjury during the Victoria proceedings and bail set at $3,000. Eccles had difficulty in procuring bonds on that occasion, and the officer commanding in Vancouver considered Eccles should be protected and the Department of Justice instructed that so long as Eccles enjoyed the confidence of his superiors, the government should protect him to the extent of furnishing the necessary bail. The officer commanding the mounted police in Vancouver, therefore, instructed Inspector Shoebotham to arrange bail for Eccles in this particular case only. Sureties of $1,500 each were accepted from Inspector Shoebotham and Mr. M. C. Hill, of Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Did the Minister of Justice and Prime Minister receive resolutions of protest from Vancouver and Victoria, as to the manner of conducting a commission of inquiry by J. P. Smith?

2. After the conviction of Eccles and W. L. Smith in Victoria, and during the time the Commission of Inquiry was sitting, were Eccles and Smith retained on the Force of the R. C. M. Police and receiving full pay?

3. If not, when did such salaries to Eccles and Smith cease?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

2. Eccles and Smith's services were retained, but they did not receive full pay during the period mentioned.

3. Their pay was suspended on 3rd November, 1923, in both cases, and was not released until granted a free pardon. In the case of Smith, however, who was a married man with one child and had no other means of support except his pay, it was necessary to grant him a month's pay in arrears, at different times, on the recommendation of the officer commanding.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Are Eccles, J. P. (Doc.) Smith, W. L. Smith, Sergeant Brown and Sergeant Munday still in the pay of the mounted police?

2. In view of the serious charges against the above named persons, and which it is complained have not been properly investigated, does the Department of Justice intend to retain these individuals on the strength of the R.C.M.P.?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No, with the exception of Sergeant Brown.

2. There were no charges preferred against Sergeant Brown. Sergeant Brown's services are being retained.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

Does the government of Canada still believe there is any necessity for maintaining the R.C.M.P. in British Columbia, having regard to the fact that the Customs Service are able to deal with the narcotic problem on the water front; also having regard that this work is also covered by the drug squads of the Vancouver and Victoria city police; also by municipal police throughout the province, as well as the provincial police, which covers the whole province and has offices and large staffs in the principal cities of the province?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

Yes.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Has the minister received a petition on behalf of C. W. Monk convicted in Vancouver, 1923, for passing a sample of cocaine of 25 grains to one J. J. Schmit, a stool pigeon of Doc. Smith's of the mounted police, and if so, what action has been taken?

2. Is the minister aware that the said J. J. Smith has been twice convicted in British Columbia, for having in his possession a large quantity of liquor, illegally; also convicted for another offence in December 1923; also that the said Schmit was arrested by the mounted police with 30 ounces cocaine in his possession, and has not yet been prosecuted.

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.

2. No to the first two parts of the question. Yes to the last part. (He was not prosecuted for the reason that he assisted the police in endeavouring to locate the source of supply.)

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

Has the Department of Justice ever extended a free pardon to any person convicted under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act whilst an appeal was pending; if so, give particulars?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

A pardon was granted by the Governor General in the case of Wallace Layne Smith, Francis William Eccles and Frank Williams alias Fernandez. Following conviction by a police magistrate for a breach of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, an appeal was lodged on their behalf. The pardon was granted as subsequently an inquiry under due authority had disclosed that these three persons had not committed the offence of which they had been convicted.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. One, Chei Sang, charged on the 17th July, 1923, in Vancouver city police court, with unlawfully having drugs in possession; witnesses for the prosecution being Constable Black and Sergeant Fripps of the Mounted Police. Case has been remanded from week to week up until February 1, 1924, and has not yet been proceeded with. Will the minister ascertain why this case was not prosecuted, and if it is a fact that the accused charged he had been supplied with drugs by Doc Smith and Black of the mounted police, in order to secure a conviction against Joe Qun?

2. Was J. A. Russell acting for the accused, Chei Sang, and did not J. A. Russell spirit this accused away, because the accused charged illegal handling of drugs by the mounted police?

3. Is it a fact that at some of these adjournments Sergeant Fripps asked for adjournments on behalf of Mr. J. A. Russell?

4. Is it a fact that Chei Sang left for China that middle of February, and has not been prosecuted, after his case having been adjourned for eight mnoths?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. This question is believed to refer to one Chui Sang, alias Chong Wong, Vancouver.

The case against this man was not proceeded with after a conference with the Department of Health, when it was decided to withdraw the charges. The accused was a boy of 19 years of age, and was returned to China on the S.S. "Philoctetes" on the 21st February, 1924. He was not a regular drug runner, but because the drugs found in his possession had been obtained from one Joe Qun, an effort was made by the Police to use this boy to return some of them to Joe Qun, in order to locate Qun, who was wanted for a former offence against the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, and who could not be found.

2. J. A. Russell was acting for the accused, but the accused was not spirited away.

3. Mr. Russell was in attendance at the commission of inquiry during some of the hearing of this case, and adjournments were necessary on that account. (There is no information that Sergeant Fripps asked for these adjournments.)

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

Has the Minister of Justice received original Statutory Declarations (annexed to the petition of C. W. Monk), sworn to before Stipendiary Magistrate Alexander in Vancouver wherein it is charged that Frank Fernandez (alias Frank Williams), smuggled $20,000 of opium and narcotics into Vancouver (under the nose of C.R.P. Police) in the summer of 1920?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Has the minister seen a report from Colonel Wroughton, Officer Commanding the R.C.M.P., in Vancouver, addressed to Ottawa, under date of January 4, 1922, wherein it is alleged that Frank Williams (Fernandez) and Frank Fernandazy (Frank Fernandez) are "the two biggest smugglers of drugs on the coast" and that Norman DeGraves of the Vancouver customs, and other customs officers are protecting Frank Williams (Fernandez) and if so, what action was taken by the department in regard to the charges against the customs officers?

2. Will the minister explain how it comes about that two months after it is reported by Colonel Wroughton that Frank Williams (Fernandez) was one of the biggest smugglers on the coast, that Williams (Fernandez) is already in the employ of the mounted police?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. There is no report of the date mentioned written by ex-Assistant Commissioner Wroughton, in which the words mentioned occur, but a report containing such information was received from a secret source at Vancouver and was forwarded by Col. Wroughton to headquarters, which information was transmitted to the preventive service of the Department of Customs.

2. Fernandez was never in the actual employ of the R.C.M. Police. He was an informer only.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

Will the minister place on the table all reports received from the officer commanding the R.C.M.P. in Vancouver, addressed to Ottawa, re Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, from 1920 to 1924.

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: No, It would not be in the public interest to do so.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. If Sergeant Jones has not been discharged, has Colonel Wroughton notified Jones that he will not be re-engaged, and, if so, for what reason?
2. How long has Sergeant Jones served in the R.C.M.P. force?
3. What is Sergeant Jones' record with the R.C.M.P.?
4. What other members of the R.C.M.P. (Victoria Detachment) have left the service, or been removed, or discharged. Give names, and reasons for discontinuance?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Sergeant Jones was not discharged, but was refused re-engagement on account of (a) Disloyalty in the Rex vs Eccles et al case and Commission of Inquiry proceedings at Victoria and Vancouver. (b) For breaches of discipline.

2. Sixteen years, eighty-five days.

3. Although up to the arrest of Constable Smith, Agent Eccles and Informer Fernandez, the conduct of Staff Sergeant Jones was good, his conduct in connection with the proceedings against these men was such as to demonstrate his unsuitability for further employment in the force.

4. (a) Corporal H. F. Small.—This non-commissioned officer was transferred to Vancouver for duty, owing to the necessity of reducing the strength at Victoria and the need of economy. At the expiration of his period of service he took his discharge "time expired" at Vancouver.

(b) Corporal R. Harvey.—This non-commissioned officer was transferred to Vancouver for the same reason as Small. He was invalided from the force on 5th August 1924.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. On what date and for what offence was J. J. Schmit arrested by the mounted police in Vancouver?
2. Was such arrest made by J. P. (Doc) Smith?
3. Was J. J. Schmit prosecuted, and if not, why not?
4. Was thirty ounces of cocaine, or any other amount, found in the possession of Schmit?
5. What disposition was made of this thirty ounces of cocaine?
6. Was J. J. Schmit afterwards used as an informer by the mounted police?
7. What remuneration did Schmit receive, and in what cases, and for how long a period was he employed by the mounted police?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. 10th September, 1922. For possession of drugs, and taken to the R.C.M.P. barracks there at Vancouver.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

2. Yes.

3. No, because the police decided to use him in locating a large cache of drugs which was believed to be in existence in Vancouver, and also to locate the men "higher up" who were supplying Schmit.

4. Yes, 30 ounces.

5. They were handed in to the court at Vancouver in connection with the prosecution of one W. C. Monk, who supplied the drugs to Schmit. The clerk of the court eventually advised Staff Sergeant Mundy that they had been forwarded to the Department of Health, Ottawa, direct.

6. Yes.

7. None to the first part of the question. It is not in the public interest to answer the second part.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Is the government aware that in his evidence before a commission, Doc Smith swore that he made a purchase of cocaine in the premises of J. J. Wing, on Broadway East, Vancouver, what disposition, or return was made of this cocaine?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

"Doc" Smith did not state he purchased said drugs. The words used by Smith were:—"We purchased one ounce of cocaine." The purchase was actually made by ex-Corporal McDowell and properly disposed of, and receipt obtained.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

According to press report in Vancouver and Victoria, J. P. (Doc) Smith is to be removed to some other point, where "this excellent" officer's methods of enforcing the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act are not known? Is the minister aware that one of the methods used by Doc Smith, as a law enforcement officer, is to supply drugs to young people, with instructions to plant these drugs some place, so that Doc Smith can effect arrest?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

Answer to first part of the question:—J. P. (Doc) Smith is no longer in the employ of the R.C.M. Police.

Answer to second part of the question:—No.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Is the Minister of Justice aware that F. W. Eccles used to operate a high powered canoe in Vancouver harbour, and was suspended from the service for operating such canoe, because of a charge that he was using said canoe for illegal smuggling of drugs?
2. Is the minister aware that in connection with said canoe, Eccles is now facing a charge of perjury at the Victoria spring assizes?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No. Such a charge against Eccles was made and investigated both by ex-Assistant Commissioner Wroughton and the commission of inquiry, when Eccles was found to have acted in good faith. He was suspended because he had committed a fault in discipline in not having disclosed his plans, in advance, to his superiors to approach a ship in a small boat to obtain drugs to catch and arrest a Chinese dealer in drugs, and as a disciplinary measure Eccles was released from employment for a time.

2. No. Eccles was tried for perjury in connection with the said canoe at Nanaimo on 20th of May, 1924, before Mr. Justice W. A. MacDonald and Jury, and found "not guilty."

STRENGTH AND DUTIES OF MOUNTED POLICE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. How many members of the R. C. M. P. are there in British Columbia, what are their names?
2. At what places are they stationed, and how many at each station?
3. What are their duties?
4. Are they supplied with horses?
5. What members of the force have motor cars?
6. Is any allowance provided in respect of motor cars, and what are particulars?
7. Are any members of the force provided with both horses and motor cars, or is any allowance made for the use of horses and motor cars? If so, what members and what are the particulars?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1, 2 and 3. There are 94 members of the force in British Columbia, their names, distribution and duties being set forth below:

COLONEL WROUGHTON—APPLICATION FOR PENSION

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE:

1. Has an application been received by the Department of Justice from Colonel Wroughton, Officer Commanding the R.C.M.P. in Vancouver, for a pension; or has an application been received by the department or does the department contemplate giving a pension to Colonel Wroughton, and if so, upon whose recommendation, and what is the date of application?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

Yes. Ex-Assistant Commissioner Wroughton applied by letter of March 17, 1924, to be retired to pension, which was granted (granted six months' leave from May 1, 1924, and retired to pension 1st November, 1924, by order in council 5th of May, 1924).

LIGHTKEEPER AT TORBAY POINT, N.S.

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. Was George Schrader, lightkeeper at Torbay Point, Guysborough County, N.S., dismissed from his position? If so, when, and for what cause?

2. Was any investigation made as to George Shrader's conduct or capacity as lightkeeper prior to his dismissal, and by whom?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

IMPORTATIONS OF COAL—REBATE

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

1. What amount of rebate was paid by the federal government during 1925, on coal imported by proprietors of by-products coke ovens: (a) in Montreal, (b) in Hamilton?

2. What amount was rebated by the federal government during 1925, on coal imported for use in connection with iron and steel industry in Canada: (a) in Hamilton, (b) in Sudbury, (c) in Montreal?

3. What amount of coal was imported during the year 1925 for use in the iron and steel industry of Canada?

Hon. Mr. BOIVIN:

1. (a) Nil; (b) $66,595.44.

2. (a) $149,697; (b) Sault Ste. Marie—$183,566.95. (Sudbury—Nil); (c) Nil.

3. Information not available.

REPARATION CLAIMS

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. On what date was Germany notified by or on behalf of Canada that the provisions of article 296 and the annex thereto should apply as between Germany on the one hand and Canada on the other providing that there should be settled through the intervention of clearing offices, to be established within three months of such notification, the various classes of pecuniary obligations?

2. How much money has been paid out to residents of Canada by the Department of the Secretary of State as the result of claims made under those categories?

3. How much of said total amount was paid out as the result of: (a) Admissions by the Debtor Clearing office; (b) Judgments of the Anglo-German Mixed Arbitral Tribunal, sitting in London, England?

4. How much money has been paid out to residents of Canada by the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada as the result of claims made under Article 297 (e), and as the result of claims made under paragraph 4 of said annex?

5. How much of said total amount was paid out as the result of: (a) Admissions by the Debtor Clearing Office; (b) Judgments and Awards of the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal and Arbitrator?

6. Out of what fund has the first description of claims been paid, namely, those under Part X of the Treaty, Economic Clauses, Section III, Debts, Article 296?

7. Out of what fund has the second description of claims been paid, namely, those under Part X of the Treaty, Economic Clauses, Section IV, Property, Rights and Interests, Article 297?

8. Who is the Custodian of the fund?

9. Who is the Deputy-Custodian of the fund?

10. How much money has been paid out to residents of Canada by the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada as the result of claims made under Part VIII of the Treaty, Reparation, Section I, Article 232, and Annex I?

11. Is it the duty of the Canadian Reparation Commissioner to investigate and report upon all claims which may be submitted to him for the purpose of determining whether they are within the ten categories above mentioned, and the fair amount of such claims?

12. To whom is the said report required to be made?

13. On what date will it be completed?

14. Has Canada been paying only the two first classes of claims?

15. How much remains of the fund out of which these two classes of claims have been paid?

16. What is the total of claims outstanding in these first two classes?

17. After all these claims in the first two classes, namely, those under Part X, Economic Clauses, Section III, Debts, and Section IV, Property, Rights and Interests, have been settled, is Canada entitled to hold and credit to Germany on account of the third class of claims, Part VIII, Reparation, Section I, and Annex I, the balance of the fund out of which she has been paying the first two classes of claims?

18. How much money has Canada received directly on account of Reparation, under the "Dawes Plan"?

19. How much is Canada entitled to receive under the "Dawes Plan"?

20. Over what period and in how many instalments will Canada's share of the "Dawes money" be received?

21. Will Canada waive any national claim she has, as the United States has done, and pay the money received on account of reparation, to all of her citizens who have presented their claims under Part VIII, Reparation, Section I, Article 232, and Annex I thereto, and had them assessed by the Canadian Reparation Commissioner?

22. Will the balance of the "Enemy Property Fund," as well as the "Dawes money," be used to compensate the civilian population of Canada whose claims are held by the Canadian Reparation Commissioner to be within the ten categories of Annex I, to Section I, of Part VIII, Reparation?

23. Or will the balance of the "Enemy Property Fund" be held, as the United States "Enemy Property Fund" is being held, as security for the receipt of payment of reparation under the "Dawes Plan"?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. A clearing office between Germany and Canada was not set up under the provisions of Article 296 and the Annex thereto; but a local clearing office as provided by paragraph 1 of the said Annex was arranged for, the clearing with Germany being carried on through the Central Clearing Office established in London under the provisions of the treaty. No notice under paragraph 1 of the aforesaid Annex was given by Canada.

2. $5,459,495.00.

3. (a) $5,420,321.28.
(b) $39,173.72.

4. $3,089,131.27.

5. (a) $1,467,680.82.
(b) $1,621,450.45.

6. A fund created out of the proceeds of the liquidation of German property, rights and interests in Canada and the collection of debts owing by Canadian debtors.

7. See answer to question 6.

8. Under the treaty of Peace (Germany) Order

" 'The Custodian' means, in respect of the time prior to the date of this order, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, and from the date of this order means the Secretary of State of Canada, who shall be the successor as Custodian of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, and to whom all property, rights and interests heretofore vested in the Custodian are hereby transferred."

9. The Under-Secretary of State.

10. No payment has been made.

11. The investigations and reports to be made by the late the Hon. Dr. Pugsley and Mr. Friel, K.C., are set out in the orders in council appointing them under the provisions of the Inquiries Act as follows:—

Order in Council 165 of the 13th March, 1923.

"To investigate and report upon all claims submitted for the purpose of determining whether they are within the categories above referred to, in the First Annex to Section 1 of Part VIII of the said Treaty, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof."

Order in Council 938 of the 19th June, 1925.

"That a considerable number of investigations with respect to outstanding claims still remain to be made and it appears desirable that a commissioner should be appointed to continue and complete the investigations made by the late commissioner."

[Mr. W. A. Black.]

12. To the Governor General in Council.

13. It is hoped that the report will be completed in the fall of this year.

14. Yes.

15. $10,030,239.91.

16. (a) $629,380.00 plus interest at 5 per cent per annum as set out in the treaty. (b) $166,767.14 plus any compensation awarded by the mixed Arbitral Tribunal. Total, $796,147.14.

17. The method of applying the proceeds of the liquidation of German property is set out in paragraph 4 of the Annex to Part X, Section IV of the treaty of Versailles, (Property, Rights and Interests), as follows:

"All property, rights and interests of German nationals within the territory of any allied or associated power and the net proceeds of their sale, liquidation or other dealing therewith may be shared by that allied or associated power in the first place with payment of amounts due in respect of claims by the nationals of that allied or associated power with regard to their property, rights and interests, including companies and associations in which they are interested, in German territory, or debts owing to them by German nationals, and with payment of claims growing out of acts committed by the German government or by any German authorities since July 31, 1914, and before that allied or associated power entered into the war. The amount of such claims may be assessed by an arbitrator appointed by Mr. Gustav Ador, if he is willing, or if no such appointment is made by him, by an arbitrator appointed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal provided for in Section VI. 'They may be charged in the second place with payment of the amounts due in respect of claims by the nationals of such allied or associated power with regard to their property rights, and interests in the territory of other enemy powers, in so far as those claims are otherwise unsatisfied.' " and Article 243, as follows:

"The following shall be reckoned as credits to Germany in respect of her reparation obligations:—
(a) Any final balance in favour of Germany under Section V (Alsace-Lorraine) of Part III (Political Clauses for Europe) and Sections III and IV of Part X (Economic Clauses) of the present Treaty."

18. £482,906.13.0.

19. At the Imperial conference of 1921, it was arranged that Canada should receive 4.35 per cent of the amount received by the United Kingdom by way of reparation under the various treaties of Peace. The amount payable for reparation by Germany was fixed at the Spa Conference of Allied representatives at 132 millard gold marks, and of this amount 22 per cent was apportioned to the United Kingdom.

20. The Dawes report does not provide what amount has to be paid neither does it provide the length of time over which payments have to be made.

21. Any moneys received by Canada on account of reparation under the Dawes plan have been paid into the consolidated revenue fund, and future payments must so be paid, unless otherwise directed. No claim can be made by Canadian nationals under the provisions of the various treaties with respect to the losses within the provisions of Annex I following Article 244. The claims referred to in Part VIII, Section I of the Treaty of Versailles and the annex thereto relate to the claim which Canada has against Germany, and the claims therein referred to provide the measure of such compensation. If Canadian nationals are paid with respect to their losses aforesaid such payments must be made as the parliament of Canada may direct.

22. The balance on hand from the proceeds of liquidation of enemy property, if it is decided that Canada should retain and liquidate former enemy private property, as well as payments received under the Dawes Plan, must be paid into the consolidated revenue, and may be used as parliament directs.

23. Answered by question No. 22.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PURCHASE OF MOTOR CARS BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. FOURNIER:

1. What number of motor cars were purchased by the government from January 1, 1912, to January 1, 1922, and subsequently used by members of the government?

2. How many cars were in the Mechanical Transport branch on January 1, 1922, and being used by members of the government?

3. What was the date of purchase of each car, and its purchase price?

4. What was the cost of maintenance of the said cars during the year 1921 in (a) wages of employees; (b) cost of repairs and (c) quantity of gasoline used by each?

5. How many of these cars were of American manufacture?

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONS

Mr. HANSON:

1. How many commissions have been appointed by the government since January, 1922?

2. What subjects were investigated by such commissions?

3. What was the respective cost of each commission: (a) in salaries or emolument, (b) in expenses?

4. Who composed each commission?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

WAR CLAIMS

Mr. NICHOLSON:

For a copy of all Orders in Council, letters, telegrams or other documents between the government of Canada or any department official or appointee thereof, and parties presenting claims of any character whatsoever incurred or presumed to have been incurred during and as a result of the Great war, 1914 to 1918, or the clearing offices in Germany and Austria, and falling under any of the articles of the treaty of Peace and more particularly under Articles, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303 and the annexes or general provisions relating thereto.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Dropped.

CHANGE OF POSTMISTRESS AT KEY JUNCTION ONT.

Mr. ANDERSON, Halton (for Mr. Arthurs):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports or communications regarding a recent change of postmistress at Key Junction, Ontario.

WEIR LICENSE AT CASTALIA, N.B.

Mr. GRIMMER:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of Marine and Fisheries or any official thereof and any person or persons, respecting the refusal to grant a weir license to Hartford Boynton of Castalia, Grand Manan, New Brunswick, and of any and all reports relating thereto.

MARITIME RIGHTS

AGREEMENTS AND UNDERSTANDINGS RESPECTING FREIGHT TRAFFIC AND RATES

Mr. W. A. BLACK (Halifax):

That, in the opinion of this House, good faith should be kept with the Maritime provinces and other interested parts of the Dominion in regard to the recorded assurances and undertakings of governments and parliament and the agreements set out in the statutes of the Dominion respecting the routing of Canadian trade over Canadian territory and through Canadian ports, and, that freight rates over the Intercolonial railway be adjusted in accordance with the understanding of confederation.

He said: In moving this resolution I do not desire to weary the House by repeating what I have said in former sessions. At the same time there are a large number of new members in this parliament who are not familiar, perhaps, with the history of confederation as established in 1867, with the statements of leading public men before and since confederation, or with the agreements and enactments of parliament dealing with the Maritime provinces. This resolution takes us back to the representations of the Fathers of Confederation made to the Maritime provinces, also to the assurances and pledges of representative men, and to parliamentary enactments and agreements extending back for the past fifty years or more. In confirmation of that statement let me quote first from the speeches of Fathers of Confederation. The following are the words of the Hon. Geo. Brown, spoken at Halifax on September 12, 1864:

But far in advance of all other advantages would be this: That union of all the provinces would break down all trade barriers between us and throw open at once to all a combined market of four millions of people. You in the east would send us your fish and your coals and your West India produce, while we would send you in return the flour and the grain and the meats you now buy in Boston and New York.

Sir George Etienne Cartier said at a banquet at Halifax on the same date, September 12, 1864:

Canada has population and territory sufficient to make a great nation in course of time. But she wants what the lower provinces possess, an outlet to the sea. As the lower provinces now stand they are comparatively weak and powerless, and the wealth, labour and industry which Canada possesses go in a great measure to enrich such cities as New York, Boston and Portland. This must continue to be the case until the Intercolonial railway, of which we have ever been an advocate, shall be built, and as soon as the colonies are confederated the construction of that work will undoubtedly commence.

Again at a later date in Montreal, October 28, he is reported as saying:

I must repeat to you what I stated while in the lower provinces, that while we possessed the personal and the territorial elements which go to constitute a nation, we were wanting in the maritime element. During six months of the year we had to knock at the door of our neighbour in order to carry on our trade. This cannot be tolerated. This confederation must be carried out. With our prosperity we are enriching the American states, whereas we ought to be enriching our own states. We ought to be enriching such harbours as St. John and Halifax.

Sir John A. Macdonald was not silent. On the same occasion he said:

I don't hesitate to say that with respect to the Intercolonial railway it is understood by the people of Canada—

That is Ontario and Quebec; they were called Canada at that time, I believe.

—that it can only be built as a means of political union for the colonies. It cannot be denied that the railway, as a commercial enterprise, would be of comparatively little commercial advantage to the people of Canada. Whilst we have the St. Lawrence in summer and the America ports in time of peace, we have all that is requisite for our purposes. We recognize, however, the fact that peace may not always exist and that we must have some other means of outlet if we do not wish to be cut off from the ocean for some months in the year. We wish to feel greater security—to know that we can have assistance readily in the hour of danger. In the case of a union this railway must be a national work, and Canada will cheerfully contribute.

These leaders of thought in the political arena must have realized that the trade of the Maritimes, then closely identified with the markets of New York, other large American cities and the New England states, would be transferred almost wholly to the markets of western Canada, and with this in view they provided the means of transportation, namely the Intercolonial railway.

My first visit to the west was by steamer from Halifax to Portland; thence by the Grand Trunk railway to Montreal. The building of the Intercolonial was intended to change this. It may be said that the Intercolonial was built and the intended terms of confederation fulfilled. My answer to that is: The line was built and its rightful terminus should be the city of Montreal. It has been chopped off at Riviere du Loup. It is maimed and a profitable section is thrown into the region known as the central. The Intercolonial railway has lost its identity in the National Railway system, and is subjected to prohibitive freight rates, and has therefore ceased to be a developer of trade from the Maritimes to the central provinces. The Intercolonial railway was to be a national highway westwardly for the Maritime provinces. It is prevented from performing its national mission. The way is blocked by prohibitive freight rates. The building of the Intercolonial is in vain, if its primary and vital purposes be defeated. They are defeated as I have stated. Would there be anything unreasonable in asking that the Intercolonial be operated on the same basis as the canals of Ontario and Quebec.

Now, Mr. Speaker, passing over the utterances of many other public men, I come to the time when the building by the government of the day of a transcontinental railway was before parliament. The Maritimes were even then not forgotten. They were promised direct benefit from this proposal. What was that advantage to be? Listen to what the Hon. W. S. Fielding said in this House in 1903. That gentleman was a representative of the province of Nova Scotia in the government of that day. He said:

With this road built, instead of being dependent on the Canadian Pacific railway only, St. John will have two strings to its bow. Not a pound of traffic that goes to St. John now will be taken away, and St. John will stand its chance of getting a fair share of the new traffic to be created by this road. Halifax with its peerless harbour will have advantages which it has not hitherto enjoyed. Surely, Sir, the time has come after years of deception, humbugging and trickery about the lines to the Maritime provinces, that faith should be kept with these people, and they should have a through line running on Canadian territory from ocean to ocean.

On the same occasion, July 30, 1903, what did Sir Wilfrid Laurier say? The then leader of the government used these words:

Now, Sir, we lay it down as a principle, on which we are to be judged by friend and foe, that we are to have a transcontinental railway, and that its terminus must be in Canadian waters, and that the whole line, every inch of it, must be in Canadian territory. We say further, that such a line is a necessity to our commercial independence.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said further:

Now, there is another feature of this contract to which I shall call the attention of the House. If we have gone into this contract, our intention has been, as stated in the preamble to force traffic in Canadian channels and through Canadian waters. We have made it a special condition of the contract and this condition is expressed in section 42, as follows:

"It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railways, or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada be carried entirely on Canadian territory or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ports."

This principle is further emphasized by the paragraph following, No. 43, which says:

The company further agrees that it shall not, in any matter within its power, directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those provided above, but shall in all respects, in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely the development of trade through Canadian ocean ports and Canadian channels.

What has been done by governments during the past twenty-two years to carry out these enactments of parliament, or to keep faith in regard to the contracts entered into by government and ratified by parliament? The situation in the Maritimes gives the answer.

The foregoing contracts were made in 1903. We come to the year 1911. What happened then? The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, which was part of the Mackenzie and Mann project, sought assistance from the government, and this aid was given under the following condition—I quote from a clause in the agreement:

It is hereby declared that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government for the express purpose of encouraging the transportation of goods through Canadian channels.

In the year 1914 further aid to the extent of $45,000,000 was granted and the principle laid down in the contracts of 1903 and 1911 was reaffirmed in most unmistakable and emphatic language.

There can be no question about the meaning of the clauses in the contracts which I have quoted, nor does any other clause throw doubt on their meaning. What has been done to carry out its terms? The late Senator Fowler, in 1904, while he was a member of the House of Commons, moved an amendment to strengthen the contract of 1903 in the interest of the Maritimes. This amendment Mr. Fielding on behalf of the government refused to accept and in refusing, he used these words:

The government said that they would put in words that would serve the purpose better, and they would put them, not in the charter, but in the contract, and that would bind the company to these terms. So we put in the contract the section which has been printed in the press, declaring in explicit terms that the company accepts the aid given them by the government on the condition that it is the object and purpose to promote trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ports.

What further did the Hon. Mr. Fielding say? His words were that the government of the day intended to build the Transcontinental railway so that the products of western Canada would without fail flow uninterruptedly over an all-Canadian line to the ports of Halifax and St. John. Has this materialized? Has anything been done to carry out these pledges? The Hon. R. W. Scott, leader of the government in the Senate, when speaking on the question on October 12, 1903, used these words:

Therefore, it is to our interest if we are going to develop our Maritime ports, if we are going to have that grain go east through Halifax and ports along the St. Lawrence, to do something in order to induce it to go there.

This is a clipping from, I think, the Montreal Gazette, or at least one of the Montreal papers of the other day. Premier Taschereau said:

I believe every Canadian, whether he be in British Columbia, or Quebec, or Ontario, should join with the Maritime provinces to give them what is necessary for them to live and thrive. They need cheap transportation. That perhaps was not the letter of the confederation pact, but it certainly was the spirit when the Intercolonial railway was built. Speaking as a Canadian, as a citizen of the province of Quebec, I have no hesitation in saying that it is the duty of those who govern Canada to-day to see that this important part of Canada (the Maritimes) is looked after and is satisfied.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House discussing the figures showing Nova Scotia's contribution to national railways and canals, nor do I touch upon the burden borne by Nova Scotia in providing railways and canals, none of which touches Nova Scotia. These are the pledges of the government confirmed and enacted by parliament, providing a national policy which was to have been carried out, but which, unfortunately for the Maritimes, has not been put into force. The national railway policy is defined, the government has its instructions from parliament, and not only should know what to do, but should do it. It should put the policy, so unmistakably defined, into operation and not attempt to side-track the issue by reference of the Maritime situation to a royal commission, as is suggested in the Speech from the Throne. We of the Maritimes protest most strongly and emphatically against any action by this government, such as reference to a royal commission or otherwise, that will have a tendency to delay the full consideration and equitable readjustment of the Martimes' just claims beyond the present session of parliament. We shall be ready at all times to co-operate in any investigation that may be held with the bona fide intention of discovering or elaborating these injustices, but we insist that prompt and definite action must be taken at the present session and that a declaration of policy in regard to these matters be made by the government indicating that the government is prepared to give belated justice to the Maritime provinces. It is the duty of the government to assume the responsibility and to deal with the problem themselves at this session of parliament. Only a few days ago a minister of the crown said:

I have always considered that the people's wishes could best be expressed by the voice of their representatives in parliament.

Those are the words of the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Boivin) in March last as reported on page 1600 of Hansard. The representatives of the Maritime provinces are expressing the wishes of our people and we unanimously demand that they be carried out.

I have some interesting statements to reveal to the House in connection with the Martime situation as it relates to the Intercolonial railway. In 1921 the Halifax Herald, one of the most enterprising papers in the Dominion of Canada, asked this question of all candidates nominated for election in December of that year:

Realizing importance of campaign which our newspaper has consistently supported for restoration of Maritime rights with C.N.R. by establishment of eastern unit, with headquarters at Moncton in charge of Maritime trained men, we would apprecite if you would favour us with a brief, definite statement of your attitude on the question.

This is the answer of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald): I quote only his answer and that of the representative of Prince county, P.E.I. (Mr. MacLean), they being members of this House representing Maritime province constituencies. The Minister of National Defence replied:

For the past year and a half I have consistently urged that the only method to enable the industries of the Maritime provinces to be carried on with any degree of success would be by detaching the Intercolonial altogether from the C.N.R. and G.T.R. connections, and running and operating it as it was operated for forty years under the terms of confederation. We would thus be freed from the taxation which is now imposed upon the patrons of the road for the purpose of paying the interest upon the enormous debts contracted by the C.N.R. in its construction in western Canada. The control of the Intercolonial must be taken from Toronto and vested in Moncton, where it always was, and the railway should be officered by men in sympathy with Maritime interests and Maritime rights.

The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) said:

I have advocated on every platform during the campaign that the Maritime provinces should, under the terms of confederation, have special consideration and special treatment; that the railroad was given, not as a dividend earning road but that our products should be transported to the markets of the world at a reasonable rate, and any deficits on the road should be cheerfully born by the federal government. I have made strong plea for the establishment of an eastern unit with office at Moncton, with a practical man in charge who understands conditions, and that freights should not favour western Canada as at present, as we pay the same rate to St. John and Sydney as Montreal pays. They call it the people's railroad but over here we are taxed for it.

What, may I ask, has the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Macdonald) done to carry out his ideas as expressed in his message to the Halifax Herald? Surely he did not hesitate for lack of support, backed as he was by every member from Nova Scotia, sixteen in number. He has not had to wait for demands from that province that good faith be kept. Has he made representation to the government of the requirements of his province, and been over-ruled by his colleagues? What has he, the representative in the government of Nova Scotia, done?

His utterances and his promises have fallen to the winds. He could not go back to his own native constituency, but sought another where he was not so well known.

Our Maritime members are not here to sit silent and inactive as regards our provinces, as was the case during the last parliament; we are making our demands and will press them to the utmost.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to set forth some of the matters to which we call the earnest attention of this government. I ask them to drop commissions and, so to speak, get down to business. Parliament has given them instructions; we ask the government to obey the instructions. I might summarize some of the matters which I feel sure are in the minds of the people of the Maritime provinces, in respect to which they believe they have grievances and for the redress of which grievances they feel that there should be practical action on the part of the government and parliament. Before doing so I may say that underlying the slumbering dissatisfaction which has existed in those provinces for a long time, and which was marked by the ballot box demonstrations of the people in June and October of last year, there is the growing conviction that the Maritimes have been treated by governments and parliaments as minor and unimportant partners in confederation, whom it was safe to neglect, whose interests might be sidetracked, and whose requests for fair play might be postponed.

The election results to which I referred a moment ago clearly show that the patience of the Maritime people is exhausted; that they are now standing for their rights within the Dominion as full partners of the confederation, and that they will not be turned aside nor satisfied by empty promises, even of a royal commission. They ask government and parliament to deal, as they are in duty bound to deal, with Maritime interests, and to give those provinces a like measure of consideration as it meted out to the other provinces without the intervention of royal commissions.

The summary I have in mind, and which I do not say wholly covers the ground, might be briefly stated as follows:

(a) That the integrity of the Intercolonial railway be restored with its western terminus at Montreal;

(b) That the service of that railway be what it was built for and intended to be when confederation was consummated—the connecting business link of the Maritimes with the central and other provinces;

(c) That freight rates on the Intercolonial and other government lines east of Montreal be adjusted to carry out these purposes in good faith; to enable products to flow from the Maritime provinces to those other provinces, and thus contribute to the development of industry in the Maritimes;

(d) That good faith be kept by the observance of agreements, statutes and publicly given pledges in respect to the National Transcontinental railway which was to develop Canadian business, and force it, if necessary, through Canadian channels and Canadian ports;

(e) That Maritime ports be satisfactorily equipped for export and import business, and particularly that ample cold storage accommodation be provided at the port of Halifax, as a part of the equipment of the National Railways;

(f) That the agricultural, manufacturing and coal mining industries of the provinces, in common with the rest of Canada, be given tariff protection sufficient to safeguard enterprises of the people against unfair competition from mass production, cheap labour and depressed currency in other parts of the world, and preserve home markets for home producers;

(g) That the Maritimes be put on a level with other provinces in the matter of the immigration and colonization enterprises of the government. In this matter the Maritimes have been ignored for many years;

(h) That in the readjustment of terms with other provinces in relation to public lands, and other natural resources restored or added to those other provinces as the case may be, the rights of the Maritimes be recognized, and justice be done.

I have outlined somewhat fully the basis of the claims for the Maritimes, which I hope will be taken up and discussed more extensively by other hon. members.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Has he any figures as to what reduction would have to be made in freight rates in order to induce western grain to flow through the Maritime ports?

Mr. HANSON: I may tell the hon. member that the rates to St. John and Halifax are exactly the same as the rates to Portland and Boston.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I was just asking what reduction the hon. member considered necessary.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolution which has just been so admirably presented by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black). I wish, first of all, to state a principle. An essential principle to the life of the Dominion is that trade in Canada should be across the Dominion from east to west and from west to east, over Canadian rails and through Canadian ports. That is a principle which was affirmed at the time of confederation. It has been repeatedly stated in this House every year since confederation, but I feel that notwithstanding this repetition it is more necessary than ever that I should assert that principle in this House to-day. So much has been said, so much has been done and so little accomplished that I may well emphasize this principle of our Canadian Federation. The need of carrying it out is now more apparent and much greater than it ever was in years gone by. Therefore let me ask hon. members to keep in mind that vital principle lying at the basis of our dominion life as I have endeavored to express it.

Now, what has been done towards giving effect to this great principle? Much has been done. The Intercolonial has been built in accordance with the British North America Act, and later the Transcontinental and the Canadian Northern were constructed. These two railways have cost the country hundreds of millions of dollars. Why were they built, and why did the country go to such enormous expense to assist in their construction? The reasons are set out in the acts that my colleague from Halifax (Mr. Black) has already brought to the attention of the house. They were the acts of 1903 and 1914—one passed by a Liberal government, the other by a Conservative government. Surely, under these circumstances this government can rise to the occasion and accomplish what our predecessors undertook to do in the most solemn way. These acts would never have been passed by parliament had they not contained the principles which I am trying to advocate at the present moment, for they laid down the reasons for granting assistance and exacted from the two railways certain undertakings in return for that assistance. I need not set those undertakings out in detail, they have been brought to the attention of the House many times; briefly, these railways bound themselves to do all they could to further Canadian trade and as little as they could to assist competing trade.

I should like to supplement the statement in just two particulars. In reference to tonnage, in the act of 1903 there is embodied an agreement that the Grand Trunk Pacific will furnish, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, all necessary tonnage to meet the demands of the country. Further, in the act of 1914 there is a very stringent provision with regard to the routing of freight by the Canadian Northern Railway. It is not a matter of choice with shippers or with the railroad but it is laid down that all freight for overseas, carried by the Canadian Northern, shall proceed over Canadian rails and through Canadian ports.

Of course, we all know that these railways have been taken over by the government and now form part of our Canadian National railway system. Consequently the board of directors has become responsible as successor for the obligations and agreements contained in the legislation of 1903 and 1914 on the part of those who then represented the Transcontinental and Canadian Northern railways Can we imagine anything otherwise? Is it to be suggested for a moment that the government or parliament would not proceed to honor the undertakings that they demanded and obtained from the railway managements of those days in return for the financial assistance then granted? We know that the legislation embodying those undertakings would never have passed parliament if it had been considered that they were worthless. Therefore I submit that as successors to the companies that entered into those agreements, the board of directors of the Canadian National railways is legally responsible to honour them. Whether the House agrees with me on that point or not, surely it will be admitted that the good faith of parliament is at stake to see that the provisions embodied in those acts are duly observed.

Now, what has happened? Let me bring to the attention of the House what Sir Henry Thornton, the chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian National railways, stated in public. Dealing with rates and the encouragement of Canadian trade, he said: This high policy must be with the government and with parliament. He and his directors regard the Canadian National railway system as separate and distinct from the rest of our national organizations, and as such they are operating it. But that system is not to be so treated, for it is an integral portion of the life of this country and indeed of its very existence. Surely neither the House nor the country would wish the Canadian National railway system to be managed without due regard to the interests of the nation as a whole. Our national railways form an essential portion of our national fabric and as such must be managed; that is, with due regard to the interests of the whole country, whether the system is apparently paying or not. Far greater questions than railway deficits or surpluses arise in this connection. I believe that greater financial success would result to the Dominion generally from operating our national railways from a truly national standpoint than in an endeavour to secure an operating surplus railroading—as is now being done—two thirds of our grain to foreign ports, and forty per cent of our total export traffic overseas over American rails and through American ports.

A few days ago, when this matter of rates was being considered by the railway commission, especially in relation to the Transcontinental, a reduction of freight rates was vigorously opposed—by whom do you think? By the Canadian National railway management. That does not look as if the board of directors of our national system was trying to carry out the principles embodied in the legislation to which I have referred. Those principles are not being observed in our transportation, and one can come to no other conclusion than that we cannot depend on the Canadian National railway board to give effect to those principles. I do not altogether blame the management for their action. I think they are trying to do their best to operate the system as they think it should be operated, but while they entertain their present views of what is essential in railway operation, there seems to be no prospect whatever of the principles laid down in the acts of 1903 and 1914 being translated into practice.

Now what remains? I submit that only one thing remains under these circumstances, and that is for the government of the country to step in and deal with this matter, which is essentially a governmental matter. It is a matter of high policy; it is a matter on which the welfare of this country depends, and one which is causing a great deal of unrest at the present time. I trust the government will not allow these troubles to seethe and grow, but will exercise that great responsibility which is placed in the hands of a government, and that is to formulate policies and carry them out. But the government have formulated no policy. I have heard and seen nothing they have enunciated as to this problem. What have they done? They say that they are placing these questions in the hands of a royal commission to make a finding, and in that way they hope to meet the situation. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with that view. On no occasion, in the history of this parliament has the Maritime situation been so frequently presented to the House as during this session, and I am not aware of any member of this House having asked for such a commission. It is true that the government does not require to consult the members as such, but, on the other hand, when there is here a large number of men who are deeply interested in this question, men who have been sent here by the people to present their views, surely it would be in order to look for some other way of meeting this situation in the beginning.

I do not say, Mr. Speaker, that a royal commission can be of no use in such a matter. I can conceive that it could be useful if necessary in determining points at issue, once the principle and policy have been determined by the government, but I do not see how it is possible for a commission to deal with the various questions that certainly will be presented to them if they now proceed to function. I and many others have been sent to this parliament to press this subject as forcibly as we can. There is only one body that I can look to, and that is this parliament and this government, and I would urge the government, and I feel fully warranted in doing so, to announce its policy on this matter, so that if we are going to have the royal commission it will have a chance to perform a useful function. Surely it is the function of a government to express its policy in broad terms, especially on such a question as this, which is a broad Canadian national question. That surely is the function of a government, and we look to the government to exercise that function. It will not do to pass the question along to a commission, however highly the government may regard it, when it is a question that should be determined by the representatives of the people in this House, namely, by the government of the country. We wish, especially those of us coming from the section of the country that is particularly concerned in this resolution, that an early announcement be made by the government—now, not in the future. Is a prompt decision not warranted by the history of this question, which has been before parliament after parliament, and has been pressed particularly before the present parliament? Is there anything new about it? Surely the government has had sufficient time to ponder deeply this matter and to be in a position to state what their views are.

Mr. Speaker, the trade that is passing from our country, going past our doors, so much to the loss of many parts of the country, some parts suffering more than others but all bearing the loss, is producing a very deep discontent in the country, and the people are not prepared to submit to any such policy as that from which we are now suffering. Surely it must be for the welfare of the country, and for the happiness and contentment of its people who are interested in the honourable carrying out of the country's commitments that we shall during this session hear from the Prime Minister as to what line he proposes to follow. May I, in conclusion, say to all the members of this House, who have heard this question stated and restated so many times, that I trust it will be possible to-day on this subject, which is no new subject at all, to be able to come to a vote endorsing the terms of the resolution as proposed by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black).

Mr. ROBERT K. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House at any length in the few remarks I have to make on the resolution as proposed by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black). I do wish to say, however, at the outset, that the hon. member for Halifax is to be heartily congratulated on having brought this matter to the attention of this House on various occasions. It is regrettable that in the past the House has not seen fit to deal with this very important question as it should have been dealt with, and I do feel that had any measure of consideration been given in the past to the subject matter of this very important resolution, we would not be struggling as hard as we are to-day in the Maritime provinces under the burdens which are pressing so heavily on our shoulders.

The resolution I think can be very briefly considered under a few headings, and the first heading that I would like to suggest for the consideration of the House is the non-political aspect of this question. We lay no blame at the door of any political party in particular for the non-fulfilment of the pledges of confederation, of pre-confederation, and of parliamentary commitments after confederation, but we do lay blame on all political parties in Canada for the non-fulfilment of these pledges. Bearing in mind that both political parties in this country are committed to the subject embodied in this important resolution, I think we can very happily approach the question in the spirit of a non-political atmosphere. In that way I feel I am perfectly within bounds in appealing to every hon. member and to every party represented in this House to consider this resolution purely from the non-political aspect and not from the attitude of political partisanship.

The second heading to which I would like to allude is the national character of the features embodied in the resolution. It is quite true that the Maritime provinces are specifically mentioned, but a broader aspect is also embodied in the resolution, and that has reference to the east and west trade in this Dominion. We cannot hope to develop trade in Canada by adhering strictly, as we have done in the past, to a policy of trade routing north and south. That has been to the detriment of certain portions of this Dominion. If that policy continues in force the billions of dollars that have been expended by the people of Canada to develop our railway system, to develop terminal ports and, in a transportation sense, to feed every portion of the Dominion will have gone for naught, will have been virtually lost. Unless we go back to the policy for which these railroads were constructed, go back to the pre-confederation promises, go back to the promises of the Fathers of Confederation and the parliamentary commitments of the past, then these colossal expenditures will not accomplish the object for which they were intended. So that we can very properly appeal for support for this movement on the ground of the large national question which is involved, divorced from any sectional feature.

[Mr. Smith.]

The movement is national in its scope. Unless we develop east and west trade in Canada then the benefits will not accrue to the country which have been anticipated, promised and expected.

The third aspect of this question to which I wish to devote my attention is the financial one. It may be stated, no doubt it will be, that if the terms of the resolution are carried out in their entirety it will involve a burden that will weigh somewhat heavily upon the taxpayers of this country. Admitting for the sake of argument that some financial sacrifice to the rest of the Dominion will be involved if this policy is carried out, will it not in the end prove a benefit to the whole of the Dominion in the development of a larger volume of trade, in directing the railways to the project and to the development of the business for which they were inaugurated? If we create the anticipated volume of trade, if we bring shipping and tonnage to our terminal ports, and all our railway lines are fed with traffic from the east and west instead of following the north and south policy, it seems to me that will more than compensate us for any little sacrifice entailed by whatever contribution Canada makes for this undertaking. If we have to consider national questions purely from the standpoint of dollars and cents it seems to me that we cannot possibly hope to build up a united and satisfied country. Let me illustrate what I mean by this. Suppose we send our children to the schools of the United States to be educated because those schools happened to be cheaper than our own schools. If we did that we would not be following the policy inaugurated by our forefathers neither would we be observing British or Canadian traditions. We might get our children educated more cheaply, but they would be taught the Yankeeism of the schools across the border, they would be robbed of the privilege of being educated in British institutions—in a word such a thing would be opposed to the best British and Canadian traditions. It might be cheaper to do such a thing, but we do not pursue such a course and we are not going to do so for any such reason. The same can be said with respect to products and goods produced in Canada. We might buy all our goods in the United States or in some other foreign country because it might be cheaper to do so; but I do not think the Canadian people will ever support a policy of that kind because it would not tend to build up this country of which we are so proud, it would not develop Canada as a nation within the British Empire, but would have the very reverse effect. So it seems to me that if we are ever to build up Canada we must not approach such questions as this purely from the standpoint of dollars and cents; we must study and follow the national aspect of a question like this with a clear vision which will enable us to look into the future.

Another heading upon which I intended to speak, but which has been dealt with ably by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) was the question of the promises of pre-confederation and confederation times with respect to the building of the Intercolonial railway. The hon. member has already quoted to you the remarks made in 1864 by some of the Fathers of Confederation. He has read to you some of the parliamentary commitments embodied in the statutes. He has cited remarks made by leaders of both political parties in this country. It seems to me that it would be fruitless to pursue that argument further because it is acknowledged by all that the real intention of the building of the Intercolonial primarily has not been carried out. The real purpose of the Intercolonial was to connect the markets of the Maritime provinces with the markets of central Canada but this purpose has never been fulfilled. In this connection I may be permitted to quote from a speech made in 1922 by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), and I may say that I am in hearty accord with the expressions to which he gave utterance on that occasion. He brought the subject up for the purpose of showing the difficulties under which we in the eastern portion of the Dominion laboured with respect to our freight rates, and he gave utterance to certain remarks which will be found at page 3570 of revised Hansard of 1922. The hon. minister said:

> Let me give you some illustrations of the increases that were put into effect in the eastern part of Canada as pointed out by the representatives of these provincial governments before the committee. The rate on lumber was increased 90 per cent. The rate on pulpwood was increased 95 per cent, and on fruit 65 per cent. The rate on potatoes was increased from 75 to 100 per cent, varying according to the distances which they were carried. Coal rates were increased from 80 to 138 per cent.

Then the minister gave the case of Springhill mines, 188 miles from Bathurst:

> Industries in Bathurst,—

He stated.

> —find it possible to buy coal in Norfolk, West Virginia, and have it carried through the north Atlantic and gulf of St. Lawrence to Bathurst and discharged at less cost for transportation than would be the case if they obtained it from Springhill.

The minister went on to say:

> Then, the increase in the rates on wire nails was from 80 to 111 per cent. The rates on sugar, which the Maritime provinces are specially qualified to handle on account of their proximity to the West Indies, were increased nearly 300 per cent.

Turning to cotton duck products he said:

> In the constituency of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Hatfield) the cotton duck industry has been carried on for many years; the increase in the freight rates on the products of that industry has been 280 per cent. The result is that it has been practically impossible to carry on their business in other parts of Canada.

It will be seen that we have been loaded down with an increase of freight rates, and it is no wonder that there is commercial stagnation in the Maritime provinces to-day. The situation must be met and dealt with by this parliament. There is no other authority in the land, that I know of, that can deal with this very important matter. I say this particularly on account of what transpired at a recent hearing by the railway commission at Moncton. An application was made for a reduction in the freight rates on products of the Maritime provinces, and what do we find? In the first instance, the counsel of the Canadian National Railways came before the railway commission contending that the Intercolonial railway was not built for the purpose of conveying the products of the Maritime provinces to the markets of central and western Canada, but contending, in opposition to the views expressed by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), who has quoted the expressions of the Fathers of Confederation and others, that the road was built for the purpose of conveying the products of central Canada and other portions of the Dominion to the Maritime provinces. The argument of counsel for the Canadian National before the railway commission was that we were to provide markets in the Maritime provinces for the central and western portions of Canada by the construction of the Intercolonal which is absolutely absurd and opposed to all statements bearing upon confederation both before and after the event. Not only that, but at this same meeting of the commission in Moncton, one of the traffic agents of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways argued that no reduction could be made in freight rates in the Atlantic region of the Canadian National because there was a deficit in that region. Now, Mr. Speaker, we expected a deficit on that portion of the road. After they cut off the old Intercolonial at Riviere du Loup, instead of extending it to Montreal, we expected there would be a deficit, for the very sane and logical reason that they cut off the paying and largest producing portion, and gave us the section that was not so productive. So that it is not at all surprising to us in the Maritime provinces that we have a deficit on the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways.

These were the reasons given by them why we should not be granted lower freight rates.

I desire to repeat what I said at the outset that I think this matter should be approached in a national way and from a non-political standpoint, and I think if it is considered in that manner it will be treated as an all-Canadian subject worthy of the consideration of all hon. members in this House.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): My only excuse, Mr. Speaker, for trespassing on the time of the House for the purpose of discussing this question is that I was born and bred in the Maritime provinces, and I have always maintained a personal and intimate association with the province in which I was born. I do not intend to review the pre-confederation compact, because that is well known. I do not intend to praise or blame either of the successive administrations, because in my personal opinion they have each and all failed in originating and carrying into action an effective policy for the preservation of the industrial and commercial interests of the Maritime provinces and consolidating the political union which was framed in 1867.

I passed through one secession campaign in Nova Scotia, and I hope we will never see another. It is utterly unnecessary that there should be such a conflict of opinion and interest between any one of the Maritime provinces and the other provinces of the Dominion as to form any reasonable basis for a repeal campaign such as the one we went through in 1886 and 1887. But it does seem to me that the reference of a number of these matters to the commission recently appointed cannot result in any effective and satisfactory solution of these problems, unless the principles upon which that commission is to proceed are clearly determined and announced by the government of the day. I know that the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) must have as earnest a desire as any hon. member in this House to secure a fair and reasonable solution of these problems. Time and time again he has gone to the Maritime provinces and announced openly, and I believe sincerely, that he had a deep interest in the solution of the problems which confront these provinces. I give him credit for that, and I believe he has the same sincere and earnest desire to-day. Admitting that I would suggest to him, how can this commission recently appointed proceed without having a pre-determination of the problems which are presented to them? Are we going to have a kindergarten entertainment and take six or eight months in order to present the problems to the gentleman who will probably be chairman of that commission, and who is, I think, a very estimable man? But it will be a kindergarten entertainment before he can become thoroughly acquainted with the conditions, economic, transportation, commercial, industrial and otherwise, which confront these provinces, and especially Nova Scotia. Before that commission can proceed earnestly and efficiently to do its work, we must have a declaration on the part of the government in regard to the problems to be dealt with, and when I say the government I mean parliament as well, because any declaration of the government must be upheld by parliament to prove effective. Therefore we must have a clear declaration by the government and parliament upon the great industrial problem of conserving the iron and coal interests of those provinces. That is a tariff question, and it seems to me utterly useless to relegate that question to a commission, until the policy of the government and parliament is clearly enunciated in respect thereto.

Every hon. member who has lived through the history of confederation and taken part in it, as many in this House have, knows that it has been the policy of both parties to develop our commerce east and west, and on each and every occasion that the question of developing eastern and western traffic has arisen we have had pronouncements by the leaders of the Liberal party as well as by the Conservative leaders that they regarded it as the bounden duty and obligation of parliament to encourage by every means, the transfer of Canadian freight and Canadian products through Canadian ports. No clearer enunciation of that policy could possibly be given than that contained in the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement dealing with the traffic over the Transcontinental railway, laid before this House in the session of 1903. I would desire to refer to section 42 and other relevant sections which were incorporated in that agreement. They were so highly approved by the Right Hon. W. S. Fielding who then held an eminent position in the government of that day, so heartily endorsed by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the leader of the government of that day, that a tremendous impression was made upon the people of the Maritime provinces and they felt that whatever lapses might have occurred in the past, from that time forward the government and parliament of Canada would, in the exercise of their wisdom, inaugurate such measures, industrial, commercial, traffic, trade, transportation, as to ensure that the traffic of the west would be carried through Maritime province ports. Section 42 of that agreement, which is found as an addenda or an appendix to chapter 71 of the acts of parliament of 1903, states:

> 42. It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid under these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railway, or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada, be carried entirely on Canadian territory, or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

There are a number of other sections of that agreement which carry out exactly the same intention. Before this question of freight rates can even be examined effectively by the Board of Railway Commissioners, we must have a clear declaration binding on them by the government and parliament of this country as to the policy of parliament with respect to the freight rate which may be inaugurated. First, is there to be one freight rate structure for the whole of Canada and binding the whole of the Canadian National Railways, or is there to be, as there was prior to a few years ago, a distinctive and independent freight rate structure over the lines from Montreal east, which prior to that date were fixed and from time to time changed and modified for the express purpose of building up provincial trade between the ports of St. John, Halifax, Sydney and Montreal? That issue is one that cannot be settled under present conditions by the Board of Railway Commissioners, nor is it a question that can be effectively investigated and reported upon by the new commission recently appointed, until it is predetermined what is the policy of this government and parliament with respect thereto. That is one point upon which there must be a clear understanding.

We have the further question which is very interesting to the Maritime provinces, and that is as to the conditions under which the Transcontinental line will be operated from Prince Rupert to the port of Quebec and from the port of Quebec to Moncton, its terminus in the Martime provinces. That line, built at such a great expense, upon which the hopes of all the people of Canada rested at the time, a project that was received with enthusiasm from one end of Canada to the other, an enthusiasm due largely to the earnest and, I believe, sincere advocacy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier—that line, built across the continent on the lowest grade of any transcontinental line in North America, is lying practically idle because the government and parliament of the day have never determined the conditions under which it shall be operated, what will be the rate structure for freights over it, or whether it will be used to carry grain to the port of Quebec and to build up a second ocean port there. The traffic of this country in a few years will be quite sufficient for Quebec as well as for Montreal. Shall it be operated across the bridge and down through New Brunswick for the purpose of building up Canadian ports during the winter? Is it possible for the government to announce its policy with respect to that? That policy must be clearly determined before we can hope to secure any satisfactory results either from the Board of Railway Commissioners or from the new commission which has been recently appointed to inquire into conditions which prevail in the Maritime provinces.

There are other questions. I do not wish to go beyond the purport of this resolution, but if I might be allowed I should like to make a criticism and an altogether friendly one because this question is one that commands the most earnest attention, the most patriotic endeavour of both sides of this House. It is not a question which should be put forward for any mere partisan purpose. It is a question as regards which, even if the government should fail to propound a solution entirely satisfactory to me, I am free to say I would approve, help and assist in every possible way to carry out their policy when clearly announced so far as it is possible to carry it out. I do not therefore, approach this question in a partisan manner, but I cannot agree that the appointment of this new commission is adequate to the needs under present conditions. I know some people suggest that this is simply to postpone consideration of these vital questions, to relieve the government at the moment of its obligations in laying down a policy. But I do not wish to approach it on that basis, and therefore I say that on a number of these problems which have been referred to this commission, it is very necessary that the government and parliament of the day should pronounce before this question is submitted to a commission for further investigation and report. For instance, the order in council deals with certain complaints:

> That the interests of the Maritime provinces have suffered as a result of certain legislative and administrative measures adopted from time to time by successive parliaments and governments of Canada.

That undoubtedly is true; I think both parties are responsible for the past. Then again:

Such representations relate more particularly to the alleged failure to use Canadian ports for Canadian trade to the extent to which they might be utilized.

I have already made some comments with regard to that. Then with regard to the schedules of rates chargeable for the carriage of goods on the railways, I have already commented upon that question. Then reference is made to:

The manner of administering that part of the Canadian National Railway system which was formerly known as the Intercolonial railway.

That has been discussed by hon. members who preceded me, to which I have added a few comments. But each and all of these issues, which are placed before the commission recently appointed for their consideration cannot, it seems to me, be thoroughly and satisfactorily investigated, and certainly no report reasonably effective and helpful can be made until the government and parliament of this country, who have the supreme power and authority in all domestic matters, have enunciated the policy of the government and parliament with respect thereto.

Then further representations are referred to which have been made with respect to the effects of the customs, immigration and other economic policies adopted by successive governments. That clearly involves an investigation into the tariff policy of this country. With regard to that point, my personal opinion is that the composition of that board is not what it should be, if it is the intention of the government that there should be a thoroughly effective investigation into the matter of tariff policies as they affect the Maritime provinces.

I know something of the history of the chairman of the board, and I know something of his views; he was brought up under conditions entirely different from those obtaining in the Maritime provinces. One of the other members is a judge of the county court, a college friend of mine and also of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald); a man whose integrity, honesty and honour cannot be impugned, but who I think is entirely deficient in that knowledge and experience in practical matters which would enable him to render the most effective assistance to the government as a member of that commission. With regard to the other gentleman, who came originally from Prince Edward Island, he is also somewhat lacking in practical knowledge and experience. I, at least, would have wished very much to see one thoroughly practical business man from the Maritime provinces on that commission.

[Mr. Cahan.]

I do not desire to trespass on the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to gain a clear view of this Maritime question, in order that no further discussion may be necessary on my part. Another matter referred to the commission is that of certain financial measures, and the disposition or allotment to the provinces of public lands. The right hon. Prime Minister is well aware that in the representations made to previous governments and to this government, the contention on the part of the Maritime provinces has been that if the lands of the northwest, which have been administered as part of the Northwest Territories, were re-conveyed and re-transferred to the provinces which have now been created out of a part of those territories, some compensation should be given to the provinces on the Atlantic seabord, because of their interest in those lands. That contention was originally based upon the fact that in 1869 when the government of Canada purchased Prince Rupert's Land from the Hudson's Bay Company, and paid £300,000 sterling for it, which became a charge on the federal treasury, and it has been the contention of those provinces by the sea that they had an interest in and should receive some consideration from the sale of those lands, because it was impossible to annex a part of that territory to any of the Maritime provinces, as a large part was annexed to Quebec and a very considerable portion to Ontario. It now seems inconceivable to me that that issue could properly be inquired into or any reasonable, effective and efficient report made upon it until the government and parliament—and when I speak of the government I am simply speaking of them as the leaders in this House, and those to whom we look for initiative—have announced clearly as to what is their policy. That is a purely political question, and I think we will probably be able to discuss it at greater length when the Alberta bill comes up. Before it can be relegated for investigation to this commission, that commission must be guided and directed by the announced policy of the government and parliament with respect thereto.

Then we deal with the whole economic policy, in a further part of this reference. I presume some facts may be elicited, but I doubt whether very many additional facts will be brought out by the inquiry before the commission, beyond what is generally known by members on both sides of this House. Then certain representations or memorials which have been presented in times past by the government of Nova Scotia, and others which I understand, in the contemplation of the order in council, are now in course of preparation for presentation to this government, are to be relegated to this commission of inquiry. With respect to those representations I have always contended—although perhaps I am not in accord with hon. members from the Maritime provinces—that provincial governments should restrict their operations to their own spheres of legislation and administration, within the terms of the British North America Act. We all know that members of the local legislatures are not elected on tariff questions, and have no duties or responsibilities with respect thereto. We know that they are not elected because they are deemed qualified to deal with those subjects, and it seems to me that it is far better that in this inquiry there should be a clear distinction and separation between those matters in which the provincial governments, in acting within their own administrative spheres, may properly be represented, and those other matters dealing with fiscal policies and economic questions coming within the purview of this parliament. With respect to these other matters I do not think any member of this parliament should abrogate his rights and duties and responsibilities; I think parliament must decide. I do not wish to say this in any unpleasant way, nor do I wish to be considered dictatorial, but I believe in a crisis for the Maritime provinces such as this, one should express his clear opinion. I think that with respect to these issues which are within the purview and the legislative and administrative authority of this parliament and this government, members of this House must press the government for a clear and distinct decision upon such issues of national policy, before a complete reference is made to this commission for investigation and report thereon.

Take the question of the northwest lands, I can understand that if parliament so declares those lands should be transferred to the respective provinces. To-day we have Alberta applying for such a transfer, and we know that there is a similar desire on the part of Saskatchewan if proper conditions can be agreed upon. If parliament decides to transfer those lands to the three provinces of the middle west—and I am not at present criticizing such transfer, I am not at present opposing it in any way—then parliament must decide whether compensation shall be given to the three Maritime provinces and the basis on which that compensation shall be computed. Once the policy of parliament is declared, in my opinion the amount of compensation is a proper matter to refer to a board of arbitrators or a commission or some other independent tribunal where all the evidence may be given in detail. But what I object to is that before there is any announcement of policy on the part of the government and of parliament all these issues should be placed before a commission of three men, who in my opinion are no more competent to deal with them than almost any three men who might be selected haphazard from one side of this House or the other. But if there is a clear declaration as to the policy of the government, if we can agree upon these terms, then it may be very effective and satisfactory to relegate any questions of detail to such a commission for inquiry and report. All I can say to the right hon. leader of the government and his colleagues is that, born and bred as I was in that province, having spoken in times past I am sure on every village platform from one end of Nova Scotia to the other in the secession campaign, and knowing something of the feeling of the people—I kept my summer home there until five years ago, when I had to give it up—it is in my opinion a question that we should not approach in any partisan spirit whatever, and so far as I am concerned and from what I have gathered in talking with a number of members on this side of the House, we are all willing and anxious to meet the government more than half way, we are anxious to take the question out of partisan politics if possible, and we are anxious to reach a fair and reasonable understanding with those provinces, and so, if possible, conserve their present commercial and industrial interests and place them heartily in accord, politically and patriotically, with the other provinces of this Dominion.

5 p.m.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Before the hon. member sits down I should like to ask him if he is prepared to advocate a reduction of the Transcontinental rates to the city of Quebec, to which he has referred.

Mr. CAHAN: If any concrete problem is placed before me I usually form an opinion about it; but I have been engaged as a lawyer sometimes in the consideration of rate structures, and I regard myself personally as incompetent to deal with any specific rate. My own feeling is, after having had some experience simply as counsel in the courts and before the railway commission, that our present rate structure is equally as important to the industry and commerce of this country as the protective tariff—and every one knows I regard that as very essential—but on the other hand I think it has grown up somewhat haphazard. I think the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) the other day pointed out some of the difficulties under which that great industry at New Glasgow is labouring and that these rates have grown up haphazard, because sometimes one large industry had a special pull with respect to one district, and another a special pull with regard to some other district. During one of the war years a very prominent Halifax merchant came to me to know if I could do anything to secure a change in the freight rates on the Intercolonial railway. He alleged—I did not investigate his statement and therefore cannot vouch for its truth—that having brought molasses from the West Indies, and not having a suitable place for storing it at Halifax, he desired to tranship it to Truro, some 63 miles from Halifax, yet he found that it was cheaper for him to send the whole cargo to Montreal and back to Truro than direct from Halifax to Truro for distribution there. Naturally he was anxious to make Truro, which as you all know is a railway centre, his point of distribution. Such glaring discrepancies no longer exist, I believe; but when the hon. member for Pictou announced the other day, as I understood him, that fifty years ago he could carry the products of his great industry from New Glasgow to Halifax much cheaper by ox-teams than he can to-day by rail, I think this is a matter that deserves most careful consideration.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have enjoyed the hon. gentleman's address very much and should like to ask him a question. He made what to me was a very interesting statement, that our Maritime provinces policy should be enunciated by parliament and referred to the royal commission. May I ask: Would not parliament be in a better position to formulate a policy to relieve the situation there after studying the recommendations of a commission that had made a thorough investigation?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think so. I believe the right hon. leader of this government has a clearer mind to-day than he will have after the report of the commission as to what he believes to be the proper lines of policy to be adopted by the government and by parliament. I do not think one single fact can be brought out by this commission which is not already well known by the Minister of Defence (Mr. Macdonald) at his left, and certainly by at least ten or twelve gentlemen who sit on this side of the House.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this discussion has taken a very wide range, and I think the House is to be congratulated upon the manner in which hon. gentlemen who have spoken, have addressed themselves to the subject. As a Maritime province man, deeply interested in their advance and progress, I feel that in order to obtain the best results it is the duty of parliament to approach the consideration of this question as far as possible free from any partisan feeling.

As I say, this discussion has taken a very wide range, and we have wandered some distance from the proposal contained in the resolution of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Black). I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that his resolution proposes merely two things, first:

> That, in the opinion of this House, good faith should be kept with the Maritime provinces and other interested parts of the Dominion in regard to the recorded assurances and undertakings of governments and parliament and the agreements set out in the statutes of the Dominion respecting the routing of Canadian trade over Canadian territory and through Canadian ports,—

That is a definite declaration to which the House is asked to give adhesion—that good faith should be kept with the Maritime provinces and other interested parts in regard to these assurances which have been embodied in our statutes and in various agreements with railways in the past. To that proposal it seems to me no one can take any very great exception, but I would like to call the attention of the House for a moment to exactly what is contained in the statutes in regard to these assurances. I turn to chapter 71 of the acts of 1903, where the act incorporating the National Transcontinental Railway is to be found, and in section 42 I find the following:

> It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of railway, or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada, be carried entirely on Canadian territory, or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

A similar provision was made in 1914 with regard to the Canadian Northern railway, when an agreement was made attaching certain conditions to its operation.

Mr. MacLAREN: There was a stronger provision in 1914.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): There is another provision here which I might read:

The company further agrees that it shall not, in any matter within its power, directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall, in all respects, in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely,—the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

May I say that that is the policy of this government to-day; that is the policy we would like to see carried out in this country. The question is whether or not it is being carried out. Let me call to your attention the problem, for instance, of the carriage of grain. With all deference to a great many of my friends in the Maritime provinces, let me say that there is a mistaken impression that the carriage of grain and the trade in grain is something that is wholly under the control of the railways. Now the facts are that the wheat pool in the west or the Winnipeg Grain Exchange sell their wheat in China or elsewhere in the east, or in Great Britain, at Liverpool, and they sell it delivered to the purchasers across the ocean. When they come to ship that grain they not only go to the Canadian National Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway and find out the rate at which these roads will carry the grain down to the seaboard, but they ascertain what is the lowest possible rate at which that grain can be carried across the Atlantic. For that purpose the shipping interests of New York, Boston and other ports in the United States maintain their agents and brokers in Winnipeg, to whom these shippers can go; in fact they do not need to go to the brokers, because the rates are supplied to them by the active agents of these shipping interests in American ports. When a man wishes to get space for 50,000 bushels of grain he has to take into consideration what is the cheapest rate he can get for carrying that grain across the Atlantic, and I want to say to my hon. friends from Halifax and St. John; and I say it with no unkindness, that I think the people who are interested in shipping at those two Maritime ports might well in the past have displayed some of the alacrity in getting business that the shipping interests operating from American ports have shown. If they did so, they would be in a position to go to the shipper in Winnipeg and quote him a rate lower than he could get from American ports, because the distance across the ocean from Halifax or St. John is much less than the distance from American ports.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that the only obligation imposed on that railway of which we are the inheritors is that products which are not specially routed by the shipper must be carried to Canadian ports.

Mr. CAHAN: Would my hon. friend look at section 45?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): That involves the establishment of shipping facilities by the National Transcontinental; that is another phase of the subject with which I may deal. At the moment I am dealing entirely with this question of rates, the subject of this resolution and the question that has been largely discussed this afternoon. I am pointing out that the obligation which rests upon the National Transcontinental Railway to-day in regard to rates is that where traffic is not specially routed, it must be carried to Canadian ports. Now what has occurred in regard to that? The Canadian Northern Railway was taken over by the government of the day in 1918. I opposed the taking over of the Canadian Northern railway when I was in parliament, both in 1914 and in 1917. I think this country should not have been saddled with that enormous railway obligation, but if possible the railway should have gone into the hands of a receiver. However, all that is past history; we did take over the road and it became incorporated with the National Transcontinental, and later, in 1919, with the Grand Trunk. That was the situation in 1919 when the Intercolonial Railway first came under the control of the same governing forces as controlled the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk.

In order that the record may be clear, I may point out that when the government of the day in 1919 came to take over the Grand Trunk Railway there was no provision made there by which these pledges, these statutory arrangements, would be confirmed and carried out. My hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Parent) at that time, on the third reading of the bill to take over the Grand Trunk railway, moved:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that the House do come to the following resolution:

That the Grand Trunk Railway System which the government proposes to acquire, comprises many miles of railway lines on American soil;

That the Grand Trunk Railway Company has diverted most of its traffic from Canadian ports to its United States terminals;

That a continuance of such policy by the Canadian government would be injurious to Canadian trade and detrimental to our national welfare;

That the ownership by the Canadian government of the American section of the Grand Trunk railway would involve this country in international troubles respecting labour administration and public policy;

That for the above-mentioned reasons, the acquisition of these lines means a serious danger of the annexation of Canada by the United States;

That the House is of opinion that before taking action towards the acquisition of the railway referred to the government should give an immediate assurance to this House that it does not intend to divert Canadian trade from Canadian ports by taking over that portion of the Grand Trunk railway situated and operated in the United States.

Well, the Grand Trunk was taken over, and the great complaint in the Maritime provinces has been that the trade from the west has gone to Portland, the American terminus of the line. Now that is a question of fact. There is no doubt about the obligations contained in the statute. This government freely and unreservedly assumes the obligations and regards them as binding on the Canadian National Railway Company. It is a question of fact as to how far these obligations are not being carried out. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that the freight is not going as it should. This House naturally wants to have some definite and clear finding on the question whether or not this obligation is being discharged.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I ask whether the Canadian National Railway Board have been informed of the policy which the minister states is now held by the government?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): The Canadian National Railway Board must know what is in the statutes. Personally I do not propose to be responsible for newspaper reports as to what Sir Henry Thornton is alleged to have said here or there. I know how unreliable those reports are upon such questions. I am going by the record. The position of affairs is as I have stated, and if the obligations which appear to exist have not been carried out, this government wants to ascertain that fact.

Mr. HANSON: You do not need to have a commission to find that out.

Mr. MacLAREN: I do not wish to interrupt the minister to a greater extent than is necessary, but may I ask whether he will state that the government will draw the attention of the Canadian National Railways to the existence of these enactments with a view to having them observed?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): If anything further is needed than the statement which as a responsible minister I am now making with regard to the policy of the government, I am quite sure my hon. friend the Minister of Railways will see that it is done.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think it should be done.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Then in the second part of the resolution we are asked to say "that freight rates over the Intercolonial railway be adjusted in accordance with the understanding of confederation." Now, there has been a great deal of indefinite discussion upon this question of what the understanding was at confederation. It will not do for hon. gentlemen to say that you must have low freight rates for our products going west from the Maritime provinces unless you are to have a correspondingly low rate on products coming east from the west.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): I think my hon. friend would find that the House would agree that the rates from west to east must be considered. Quotations have been made from the speeches of Sir George Etienne Cartier and Hon. George Brown in which these gentlemen spoke of Upper Canada sending its farm and manufactured products to the Maritime provinces while the latter in return shipped its coal and fish westward. I assume that was the intention so far as those gentlemen were concerned. On referring to the statute, section 145 of the British North America Act, which provided for the construction of the Intercolonial railway, I find the following:

Intercolonial Railway

Inasmuch as the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have joined in a declaration that the construction of the Intercolonial railway is essential to the consolidation of the union of British North America, and to the assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and have consequently agreed that provision should be made for its immediate construction by the government of Canada: Therefore, in order to give effect to that agreement, it shall be the duty of the government and parliament of Canada to provide for the commencement, within six months after the union, of a railway connecting the river St. Lawrence with the city of Halifax in Nova Scotia, and for the construction thereof without intermission, and the completion thereof with all practicable speed.

Now let us see what the history of that project was. The railway was constructed by the government of Canada under that statute, utilizing the existing portions of railway in the Maritime provinces, to Riviere du Loup, the original terminus of the Intercolonial. I well remember attending a meeting at Halifax which was addressed by Sir Charles Tupper and the Hon. A. G. Jones, when the subject of discussion was the probability of Halifax becoming the winter port of the Dominion, although the Intercolonial at that time went only to Riviere du Loup. Later on the government extended the line to Levis, and in 1898, when the late Mr. Blair was Minister of Railways, owing to the acquisition of the Drummond county railway, a further extension took place to Montreal.

There is nothing in the statute from which I have quoted which makes any reference one way or the other to railway rates; but from the time of the completion of the railway down to 1912, when the first increase of railway rates took place, the Intercolonial was operated in accordance with what hon. gentlemen opposite assert to have been the intent of the Fathers of Confederation: we had rates that enabled our products to find access to central Canada, and an interprovincial trade existed which was highly satisfactory. In addition to through rates that were not high, very satisfactory local rates were granted which permitted of an exchange of products between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. At that time New Brunswick had no coal and we had an abundant supply; and there were other conditions which permitted of an interchange of products and enabled our people to prosper to a fairly satisfactory degree. I think it was in 1912, when the late Mr. Cochrane was Minister of Railways, that the first increase in rates came; it was largely an increase in local rates. In 1918 or 1919 a new classification of rates was imposed on all parts of the Intercolonial, and there is no manner of doubt that since that time the rates imposed have had an injurious effect on our industries down there and have rendered it practically impossible for us to ship to central Canada those natural products which we can supply. But at no time have we ever had any record of these rights as being definitely and certainly determined. When hon. gentlemen speak about pre-confederation understandings in regard to rates they are not talking about railway rates, because those had not been determined; they are talking about interchange of trade and the maintenance of such rates as should be necessary to develop interprovincial trade. But for over forty years every consecutive government, whether Liberal or Conservative, recognized the rights of the people of the Maritime provinces to have the Intercolonial railway operated under the conditions which existed at the time referred to.

Now it is most essential that the people of Canada should know definitely, through some responsible authority, what those confederation understandings were and how they were interpreted by successive governments. There is only one way in which that could be done. My hon. friends opposite say they do not think the Maritime rights commission will result in any good. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) thought the commission would take a long time to acquaint itself with the economic situation. I do not know Sir Andrew Duncan; I never had the pleasure of meeting him, but I do know, from the manner in which he dealt with the problems that were presented to him by the government of Nova Scotia, that he won the confidence of the people in our part of Canada and the admiration of the people generally in central Canada.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister permit me, before he leaves that phase of the question, to ask him this: Will he tell the House and the country whether he stands by the declaration he made over his own signature in the Halifax Herald in 1921 with respect to the integrity of the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): I have already made a statement to the House. If my hon. friend wishes to introduce the political phase of this subject—

Mr. HANSON: I do not wish to do so.

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): —let me say this: my hon. friend and those around him are the people who destroyed the Intercolonial railway. I was opposed to the acquisition of the Canadian Northern railway and of the Grand Trunk. I still think that acquisition was unwise, and I would like to see the Intercolonial back to its old status.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister in giving his answer recall that his letter in 1921 was written after both were acquired—

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): Yes, that is so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —and were Dominion property?

Mr. MACDONALD (Antigonish): I entertain the same views now that I did then. But I am dealing with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who contended that this commission would take too long a time to get under way. Well, let me say that Sir Andrew Duncan, as chairman of the commission, will deal with these problems with a full and complete knowledge of everything connected with the coal industry, and practically also with the steel industry in Nova Scotia. He comes surcharged, as it were, with information. We are most fortunate in having been able to obtain that gentleman's services to deal with this matter; so that I think there need be no delay. This government is referring the question to the commission not for the purpose of getting rid of responsibility, but with a sincere desire that we may have from some authoritative body a determination of the allegations which come from different sources as to the conditions in those provinces and as to what should be the remedy therefor. That is our view and purpose in regard to the matter; we have no other end to serve.

I shall not read the whole of the order appointing the Maritime Rights commission, but I should like to draw the attention of the House to a reference it makes to the matter specifically dealt with by the present resolution. After reciting the representations made by the provinces the order states:

> Such representations relate more particularly to the alleged failure to use Canadian ports for Canadian trade to the extent to which they might be utilized—

There is a subject upon which this commission can report—whether or not the good faith of the country, pledged by these statutes in 1903, is being violated, and if so in what respect. This House can then adopt such means as are within its power to provide a remedy. The order proceeds:

> —and to the handicaps said to result from the operation of the schedules of rates chargeable for the carriage of goods on the railways uniting the Maritime provinces with the other provinces of Canada and to the manner of administering that part of the Canadian National Railways system which was formerly known as the Intercolonial Railway by methods and conditions alleged to be inconsistent with the pledges given at the time of confederation in regard thereto, and with the practice followed from the time of the construction of the railway until December, 1918.

In other words, with regard to both branches of this resolution a commission has been constituted for the purpose of reporting to parliament whether, in the one case, the good faith of Canada has not been kept, and in the other, pre-confederation pledges have been disregarded in the conduct of the administration of the railway subsequent to confederation. I submit that the method we have adopted is the right and proper one, from the standpoint of those of us who live in the Maritime provinces and who want to secure the application of substantial and intelligent remedial measures in regard to our grievances. We do not want any jumping in the dark. We want our position in confederation clearly and definitely understood by parliament, so that hon. members coming from all parts of Canada may be able, when that report comes before them, to deal intelligently with the matter, and to assist in providing a suitable remedy.

I am glad to observe that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George refers to the personnel of the commission in complimentary terms. Nothing can be said derogatory to any of the gentlemen composing the commission; their recognized status and ability will command the confidence of the House and the country. No journal in this country has been more vigorous and aggressive in demanding a recognition of what have been called Maritime rights than the Halifax Herald, and when the announcement of the appointment of the commission was made the other day, that paper published in large headlines:

> Victory for Maritime rights. Federal Probe is Ordered.

Then on the following day they published an editorial which dealt in this way with the objections which had been mooted by hon. gentlemen here:

> Now there is to be a federal royal commission to investigate all phases of Maritime rights. This is indeed a great victory for the earnest, devoted men and women of the Maritimes who persisted in their fight against indifference and discrimination abroad and discouraging propaganda at home. The leaders of the movement are now able to read in the order in council appointing a commission a recitation of the claims they have been pressing for years; and they know that this action by the federal government comes as the certain result of the work that has been carried on with such splendid courage and determination by those who were not daunted by indifference and discrimination on the one hand, nor discouraged by partisan propaganda on the other.
> These representations contained in the Nova Scotia resolution are made to apply, in the federal order in council, to the three Maritime provinces, an application with which the people of this province will agree.
>
> We realize that there are many in the Maritimes who doubt the efficacy at this late date of a royal commission, such as has been appointed at Ottawa.
> Be that as it may, it is the opinion of the Halifax Herald that the Duncan commission, now it is formed and instructed to proceed with its investigation, should receive every co-operation and support from the Maritime people.

And I bespeak from hon. gentlemen who are my colleagues from the Maritime provinces in this House that co-operation and support in order that the commission may be a proper fact-finding commission, and that the report may be such as will command the confidence of the House and the country. The editorial continues:

> The salvation of the Maritimes lies in co-operation—one million people speaking with one voice—and we trust that the people of the Maritimes will do everything in their power to further the work of the commission and bring to its deliberations such a volume and character of evidence and information as will establish beyond doubt the justice of Maritime claims. We feel it to be the duty of the governments of the three Maritime provinces to provide for representation before the commission; and a similar duty devolves upon other public bodies in the Maritimes, as well as upon all private citizens who may be able to contribute to the success of the inquiry.
> It is not a question of individual views, nor of party politics; it is a question of Maritime betterment. And no matter what may be the opinions of our people upon the many economic and political questions involved, it is a duty of Maritime citizenship to cooperate in this, as in all other features of the Maritime movement. For this is one feature of the Maritime movement—a part of the whole—the direct and certain result of the campaign that has been carried on. The governments of the three Maritime provinces are moving to press Maritime claims at Ottawa; our members at Ottawa are pressing these claims; the Maritime transportation case is now being heard; boards of trade and other public bodies are active in Maritime interests; and to all this investigation and representations is being added the work of a federal royal commission.

Let the people of the Maritimes forget politics in this, as in all other phases of the Maritime rights campaign. Let them assume that there is sincerity and earnestness behind the appointment of this commission. And let them speak and act in a manner that will destroy all possibility of the criticism that they are not prepared to co-operate in any and all movements in Maritime interests. Let them feel that this is another stride forward along the road to a realization of their aims and hopes—a prosperous people, citizens of a province that should and must be an equal and contented partner in confederation.

I do not think it is necessary to argue with my learned friends opposite, in view of the positive commendation by this well known conservative organ of the action of the government appointing this commission. That we were right in so acting is self-evident.

Referring to this particular resolution, the assertion is made that the good faith of the Canadian government should be kept. We are prepared to keep faith. We want to carry out the terms of the confederation pledges, once the facts are ascertained. If the commission finds that there has been infraction of duty on the part of governments, on the one hand, or an error in railway management on the other, this government will proceed to act and will deal with the matter as soon as the report is submitted to us.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): After listening to some of the arguments that have been presented this afternoon, and particularly to the agreement which was read by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), there appeared to me to be strong argument and good reason why a thorough investigation should take place before there is any tinkering with railway rates, in order to ensure that grain shall pass through Canadian channels. I refer to the clause which says that Canadian grain shall not be carried to American ports at a rate less than that at which it is carried to Canadian ports. If I caught it aright, that is the statement. We will suppose that that applies to Montreal. How will it affect the shipper? I do not know whether this came into effect after the railways were carrying grain to Portland, Maine, and to St. John and Halifax at different rates, but the effect in any case would be the same. Let us suppose a shipper has a cargo of grain at Fort William. Ordinarily, he would send it to Montreal, we will say, in the latter part of the season—this would not apply in the summer—and then he would get it to Portland for a cheap rate, because the distance is not great. This order is put into effect that grain must not be carried to a United States port at a rate less than that at which it is carried to a Canadian port. If any of those gentlemen who are discussing this were railway officials, had the management of the railways affected, what would they do? I would just like to ask them. Would they not raise the rate to Portland and lower it to St. John and Halifax? The reasonable supposition is that they would cut the difference in two. That is, grain that would ordinarily be carried from Montreal to Portland for, say three cents—in order to illustrate my point—would probably cost five or six cents after this order goes into effect. I understood that it was at one time an order; I understand now it is a part of the contract. The man who has the cargo of grain says: I cannot get it out to Portland, St. John or Halifax as cheaply as I used to or as I could if this clause was not in the agreement; what shall I do with it? I will send it out by Buffalo. That is, by putting that clause in your contract, by trying to keep grain in Canadian channels, you effect just the opposite; the clause defeats its purpose and drives the grain into the United States channels at Buffalo. It may be that I did not hear the statement exactly aright, but I believe I did and I have reason to fear that that will be the effect.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the hon. gentleman not admit that the discriminatory rates over the Transcontinental have had the effect of diverting grain to United States ports?

Mr. MILLAR: That is an entirely different matter. I was coming to that later on. This will have and has the effect of driving grain into the United States at Buffalo rather than of keeping it in Canada as far as Montreal. I am speaking of the latter part of the season when the St. Lawrence is frozen and ships cannot leave that port. If you try to drive the grain to Halifax or St. John, several hundred miles further, by saying to the railways, not that it must be carried at the Portland rate or the Halifax or St. John rate, but that it must be carried at the same rate, you will drive the grain out of Canada at Buffalo. I believe if hon. gentlemen look into the matter they will find that is the effect of it.

The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) presented a strong case tinged less with party politics than we are usually unfortunate enough to have to listen to in connection with this matter. He made the remark that it might be well for parts of Canada to make sacrifices in order that traffic might be sent to Halifax and St. John in order to build up the eastern provinces. I quite agree with him in that, provided that the sacrifice is not too great. If our railways are carrying Canadian traffic even at cost we should not forget that while the railway itself is not making money it is employing many men who are drawing full pay and if, as is suggested, some sacrifice is made even by those who grow the grain, if they pay a little more to have the grain kept in Canadian channels, the benefits they would get in an indirect way would offset the heavier overhead in freight. But when you ask the grain grower to pay perhaps four or five cents or three cents more per bushel, you are asking something that he will not grant. He cannot concede that much.

Why does Canadian grain go through United States channels? Recently I had pointed out to me some evidence taken by the Great Lakes commission and I noted questions asked of a representative of the shipping board. His answers showed that the rate on grain from Duluth to Buffalo was at that time about 3½ cents a bushel while the rate over a much shorter route, from Fort William to Buffalo or Port Colborne, was 5 cents. There you have a difference of 1½ cents a bushel. How are you going to say to the shipper: You must pay the higher rate? The government will have to take a high hand, become quite arbitrary, to force the shipper to send his grain by a certain route. He is going to take the cheaper route; the question is an economic one.

It has been contended in this House, I believe, that rates from New York to Liverpool and from Montreal to Liverpool are the same. I must take issue with that statement; the rate is usually less from New York than from Montreal. The rate on Canadian grain from Fort William to Liverpool by the United States route is practically always less than by the Canadian route. It is not an easy matter to overcome that. I would like to see Canadian grain go through Canadian channels, but I cannot think that is all the question in connection with the Maritime provinces. I listened to the case presented by three hundred representatives from there a year ago and I would get the impression from what they stated that there was nothing there except St. John and Halifax. I expect to hear something about the country, about the industries, about agriculture, but I heard nothing about that; all I heard was about freight through Halifax and St. John. I cannot think the fact of grain travelling down past their doors, going through their province, being shipped from their harbours of Halifax and St. John, even if it all went there, is going to remedy their troubles, is going to put them on a sound economic basis. There must be other difficulties. I do not wish to say this as a matter of criticism, but I have listened too frequently to statements made as though contractual obligations were entered into at the time confederation was being negotiated, when to me they were simply pious hopes of what would or might take place if the Intercolonial railway were built. I think about ninety per cent of what have been spoken of as contractual obligations were simply pious hopes. I know two men who traded horses, and one of them slapped the other on the shoulder—he knew him very well—and said: "Jack, if you get that horse he will surprise you." They were both horse traders. Jack got the horse and he certainly did surprise him because when he got out into the field he would kick himself clear of the harness. I think the Maritime righters are in the same predicament; they heard a great deal at that time of what should, and what they believed and hoped would, take place, and apparently they swallowed it all. But that is quite different from a contractual obligation.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) asked a question about the National Transcontinental Railway. I would have liked the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) to tell us that he was so anxious for a solution of this question that he would even favour cutting the rate on the Canaidan National from Armstrong, which is north of Fort William, so that it would be on a parity with the rate on grain in western Canada. That would bring it to about 11 cents or a trifle more; it is now 20.7 cents. However, the hon. member rather sidestepped that question I thought. If that rate were reduced it would be a great help, and I do not see any reason why that should not be done. That was the intention when the Transcontinental was built, with very good grades, heavy rails and well-built bridges fitted to carry heavy loads, yet with the exception of a very short period—I think some six months—the rate always has been prohibitive, so that no grain goes there and the grass is growing around the rails. If the rate were reduced to eleven cents I think the port of Quebec would be used very much more, and the two million bushel capacity there would be made some use of.

This is a very difficult question, and it is well that it should be discussed in this House I for one am willing to listen to any arguments presented. The Maritime provinces are a part of Canada and we want to see them prosper. Any assistance we can give in the solving of the problem will, I believe, receive the support of all members of the House; it will receive my support, at any rate. But we must approach the matter in a business-like way, and we must face the facts. The amount of traffic over which the railway has control is small, I believe, in comparison to that over which the shipping interests have control, and so long as grain can be carried for a few cents less by the United States railways I am afraid they will get the business. I would like to see the traffic kept in Canada, however, if that can be done.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, in supporting the resolution of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) I would like first to deal with the position taken by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) who on February 16 last paid me the compliment of referring to some remarks I had made a short time previously in regard to the share assumed by the Maritime provinces in the purchase of the Northwest Territories. I then asserted that we had paid our share of the £300,000 which the Hudson's Bay Company received for Prince Rupert's Land. The hon. member considered that we had good reasons for complaint in regard to railway rates, and in that matter his sympathy was with us, but when I came to discuss the question of what the Maritime provinces had done in connection with the purchase of these lands, I lost his sympathy.

At that time, of course, I was building up a case leading to a claim for compensation in regard to the allocation of those lands to the other provinces of the west. The hon. member intimated at that time that he had made some inquiries in the matter and had found the facts to be that the purchase price of the Northwest Territories was included in a note given about 1874 which ran for thirty years and was paid off in 1904, and that that note had been met out of the consolidated funds of Canada, or words to that effect. I am afraid my hon. friend was a little astray in that statement. The fact is that the loan to which he refers was paid in cash from the proceeds of the sinking fund of one per cent as provided for in the act authorizing the loan.

As to the manner of the payment to the Hudson's Bay Company, I may say that payment was made by a warrant issued by the then Governor General of Canada, Baron Lisgar, to Glyn Mills & Company for $730,000, and another for the same amount to Baring Brothers, London, these being payments on account of the Northwest Territories purchase, and were included in the accounts for the year ending June 30, 1870. My hon. friend assumed, I believe, that these two sums of $730,000 were part of one of the items making up the loan to which he refers, which was paid off as indicated above in 1904. There were various items making up that loan; there was an Intercolonial Railway loan for $2,433,334.34; a further loan of $7,300,000; also a temporary loan of $3,893,333.33, and another loan at four per cent for $1,337,400, together with odds and ends of previous votes. As I said, no bonds were issued from the proceeds of which these amounts, namely, the sums paid out by Glyn Mills & Company and Baring Brothers, could be taken, and the only possible conclusion in regard to the original purchase price, which was paid by warrant as I have suggested, is that the young Dominion at that time had a credit balance in the hands of their bankers in London upon whom they drew through Governor General's warrants. Four years later, in 1874, authority was given by parliament for a loan which embraced several different items. One was an amount in connection with the Pacific railway; another amount was for improvements to Canadian canals. There was also a vote in 1870 of £1,100,000 for Canadian defence, and other votes, to one of which I will refer. I think this is the vote which has probably misled my hon. friend. That vote reads as follows:

For opening communication with, establishing government in, and providing for settlement of such territories, including expedition to Red River. (This vote to be in lieu of that for same amount granted on credit of unguaranteed loan by Act 32, Vic. c.1 and hereby cancelled, and to cover the amounts already expended; and the unexpended balance on 30th June to be applicable to service of 1870-71) $1,460,000.

I do not think there is any evidence whatever as to the point taken by my hon. friend from Lisgar. I still hold that as the amount was paid in cash in London prior to June 30, 1870, by the two warrants which I have referred to, the four original provinces did pay the cost. My friend shakes his head, but I think the position I take is correct and that he is in error. At any rate, I have adduced some documentary proof in support of my position, and I submit he has not done so in regard to his.

When confederation was first suggested the dream of its promoters was a federated Canada wherein the several members would have a unity of interest; in other words, a harmonious whole in to which the four provinces as partners could enter, neither profiting unduly at the expense of another. The union was designed also to link up and strengthen these outlying portions of the empire. The one thing then recognized as essential to the success of this union was railway transportation; hence the stipulation for the construction of the Intercolonial railway. Now, whether we were hoodwinked or not—and perhaps we were—I assert, Mr. Speaker, and I think you will agree with me, that we in the Maritime provinces were made very definite promises by the Fathers of Confederation, and it ill becomes any member of this House now to taunt us with having been taken in. I hold that what this parliament ought to do is to rectify wrong. It is not creditable to any hon. member to cast up to us that we were fooled and taken advantage of at that time, even if we were.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I had been referring to the necessity for an intercolonial railway if the several eastern provinces were to be brought into the confederation. All of us who are informed as to what was done at that time are thoroughly aware of what was promised in connection with the building and the subsequent operation and management of that Intercolonial railway. I shall not refer to that matter further.

I shall now deal with what the Maritime provinces have contributed towards the Canadian Pacific Railway and what benefit we in the east have derived from that great enterprise. The eastern provinces paid their share of the cost of the road, and, unfortunately for us in Nova Scotia, it ended at St. John. So far as Nova Soctia is concerned, this great transcontinental railway, so far as transportation and the advantages accruing from competition are concerned, might as well have been non-existent. Over a considerable period of years we in Nova Scotia, particularly the iron and steel plants of that country, and more particularly the Scotia Steel Company of New Glasgow were able to sell to the Canadian Pacific Railway very large quantities of railway material. As a matter of fact the Canadian Pacific Railway was by far our largest and most important customer. In the early days that railway took delivery of all material sold by the Scotia company to them at St. John, on equal terms with material delivered to them by other parties at Montreal or at Hamilton, as the case might be. But some time ago, due to a change of policy, the St. John Canadian Pacific Railway gateway was closed, and we were then unable to make delivery to the Canadian Pacific Railway at that point, the Canadian Government Railway insisting on getting the long haul. We therefore had to pay the freight, not to St. John, a distance of 255 miles, but to Montreal, some 800 miles. The Canadian Pacific Railway then naturally said to us: Inasmuch as you cannot now give us any traffic, we see no good reason why we should now give business to you, more particularly in view of the fact that the other manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec who can give us freight, and who do give us freight, are clamouring for the business which you are asking us to give you. The result of this was that we were practically pushed out of the Canadian Pacific Railway business, due to unfair discrimination on the part of a railwty which was built to give us facilities for doing business in the central and western provinces.

Now the only effective cure for that condition that I know of would be to give, as at one time was contemplated, running rights to the Canadian Pacific Railway from St. John to Halifax and through New Glasgow eastward to the Sydneys. This is necessary if we in Nova Scotia are to get our fair share of the business given out by that railway—and it must be remembered that the two railways of Canada are by far the largest and most important consumers of iron and steel products in this country—and it is essential that we be put in a position to make deliveries on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway as I have indicated.

Now I refer to another matter. Owing to territorial concessions to other provinces and certain changes in the distribution of population, largely due to the exodus of the population of the Maritime provinces to the west, it is imperative that the Maritime representation in the Dominion parliament be now readjusted so that our voice and prestige in the Dominion parliament be adequately maintained. What is necessary to-day is to restore representation in the federal parliament in the proportion set forth in section 37 of the British North America Act. The Maritime provinces contend that they have a proprietary interest in the natural resources of the former Northwest Territories. They maintain that they should and must be recompensed for that portion of the territory in question which has been ceded to other provinces, and from which it is now proposed to make further transfers, although no compensation has been or is proposed to be given to the Maritime provinces for such transfers.

There has grown up a deep feeling of discontent in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick during the past few years with regard to the relations existing between these provinces and the Dominion as a whole. This feeling has been increased by the apparent indifference with which appeals for fair treatment have been received, coupled with the other grievances to which I have referred—the reduced representation in parliament accorded those provinces, particularly Nova Scotia. What we are now asking is a fair and honest recognition of our rights and interests in view of the fact that but for Nova Scotia, the oldest province in the Dominion, confederation and the creation of the Dominion of Canada would have been impossible.

I do not think it is necessary to enlarge on the fact that but for the entry of Nova Scotia into confederation the federation compact would have been impossible. For five months in the year this Dominion is dependent entirely on these two provinces for access to the sea. That was demonstrated, as I have already pointed out, during the war. Surely we have not forgotten the lesson then impressed upon us. Surely we are prepared to pay those Maritime provinces a fair consideration for the position that they occupy and the difficulties which they have encountered as members of confederation. Prior to confederation we Nova Scotians were a prosperous people. Nova Scotia then stood fourth amongst the shipowning nations of the world, possessing more shipping property per capita than any nation on the globe. Our flag—and Nova Scotia alone of all the dominions then had a flag—our white ensign with the blue cross of St. Andrew, was shown on every sea. We had freighters on the Atlantic. Far up the Rio Grande, and all the ports and rivers of South America were equally familiar to our captains, our seamen, and our ships, Nova Scotia shipping was to be found on all the trade routes of the world. Now, I do not say that confederation is responsible for the ruining of that trade and the disappearance of our shipping. The transition from wooden to iron bottoms, and later on the victory of the steel tramp steamer over the steel sailing vessel wiped out our wooden fleet. Then came confederation with its inducements as to our being able to transport our products and manufactures over the Intercolonial to the central and western provinces. Those suggestions turned our thoughts to other employment, and instead of taking up the building of a fleet of steel steamers as we should have done and could have done readily—and as was done by Norway first and later by Holland—and thus maintaining our supremacy in the transport of traffic and navigation throughout the world for which we were admirably adapted by nature, we sold our fleets largely to the Norwegians and spent the proceeds, supplemented by our savings in the building of sugar refineries, cotton mills, iron and steel furnaces and mills, the products of which we were assured were to be carried by the Intercolonial to Upper Canada, a thing to be rendered possible by special freight rates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, isolated on the extreme east of Canada, and separated from Quebec by 500 miles practically of wilderness in which no trade for the Maritime provinces exists, we were promised a differential which is now nonexistent. To-day we are charged full mileage rates which are from 100 to 150 per cent greater than those in effect twelve years ago, and in not a few cases the westbound rates are higher than the eastbound rates. This is in absolute contradiction indeed a complete reversal of the promises made to us. All protests so far made as to this unfair treatment have been ignored or denied. Our whole freight traffic structure is controlled and administered to-day by a few old Grand Trunk officials established in Montreal who view the Maritimes from the background of Chicago, Portland and New London instead of in the light of the industrial interests of Amherst, New Glasgow the Sydneys and the other manufacturing towns of the east. Due to competition with the mass production of the industries of Quebec and Ontario, and unequal and oppressive freight rates, it is now impossible to carry on many of the enterprises to which I have referred. Enterprises which were entered into a few years ago with a good deal of enthusiasm have now come to grief, with loss of much of the capital invested therein. Another difficulty with which we have to contend is that the steel duties have been so dealt with as to make them practically of little or no value to the industries of the Maritime provinces. More than three score of items have been taken from the dutiable schedule and put in the free list, and to-day there is practically nothing on which we have protection worth mentioning outside of the one item of railway materials. We have been sacrificed to the manufacturers elsewhere, to the implement people of Canada, to the interests of anybody who had some pull or made pretensions to do something at the expense of somebody else.

Prior to confederation our coal went largely to the New England states. Fifty years ago over a thousand vessels loaded every summer in the port of Pictou for the New England ports and almost as many in the port of Sydney for the same market. Had it not been for confederation we would have been able to establish satisfactory and permanent arrangements and connections with American capital, with American railways, with American manufacturers, principally in the New England states, and would have done so. Thus we would have secured an all-the-year-round market for our coal. After the monopoly of the General Mining Association of London was broken up in 1856 it was American capital that developed our collieries, not Canadian, or European, or British capital. The only exception to that statement was in the case of one colliery in Cumberland county, one in Pictou county and possibly one in Cape Breton.

It is said that we in Nova Scotia are trading unnaturally and there may be some truth in that statement. But whether or not it be the case, the fact is that we are trading to-day as we are forced to do, and have been for fifty years been forced to do through our being included in the Dominion of Canada. This virtually means that Nova Scotia has been sacrificed to the consolidation of the empire. Unfortunately the Dominion as a whole treats Nova Scotia in the main as the empire has always treated its soldiers, relying on them in time of war and forgetting and neglecting them in time of peace. That has been our fortune—just the same treatment as the empire from time immemorial has accorded the men who fought for and defended the empire in time of stress. We were told within the last day or two by an eminent advocate speaking in this city, who dealing with the present political situation, said that the cleft as between the east and the rest of Canada is not permanent and can be cured when the Maritimes take again to the toil of their forefathers. I wonder if he knew the meaning of his own statement? In effect, he suggests that after contributing to confederation, having contributed millions of dollars to the various railway enterprises in the central and western provinces and in manufacturing industries in our own provinces, dependent entirely upon equal trading advantages as compared with the central provinces, first as to transportation and second to tariff protection, we are now to scrap all our manufactures, lose the millions which we have invested, the savings of a century of toil, go back to wooden ships, make a futile effort to regain our lost position as world carriers and be content to be further exploited by the manufacturers, the millers and the food producers west of the St. Lawrence river.

This matter of justice to the Maritimes is not a local dispute, such as that between a industrial corporation and its workers or between a railway system and its operatives. It is rather a case of long standing dissatisfaction, due to years of disregard of understandings, pledges and promises incidental to and arising out of confederation—unequal contribution and commitments as to railway construction, and the relatively small proportion of benefits and advantages accruing to the eastern provinces; our contributions to and our obligations resulting from the Maritime proportionate contribution to and share of the construction and share of the operative loss on the great canal system of Canada. This system, which cost $225,000,000, has been operated entirely for the benefit of the central and western provinces, with only this exception, that to some considerable extent the United States coal and steel producers, who are our great competitors, are accorded free transport on these same canals, the operating loss of which is equally borne by us with the other provinces; fancy Americans given free transport facilities, at our expense, to compete with ourselves in the central provinces of Canada. If any more ludicrous trade conditions can exist it is impossible for me to conceive of them. We are subject to all these conditions, and no attention whatever, over a long period of years, has been given to any objection we have made in regard to them. We have called the attention of government after government and parliament after parliament, one set of ministers after another, to the unequal and unfair treatment which we have been accorded in that connection. The unequal advantage accruing to the central provinces from the present unfair operation of the tariff and the greatly preponderating advantages which the central sections of the Dominion derive from it is another matter of which we complain. In that regard we expect and have a right to expect that justice shall be accorded us. Then there is the failure to recognize the undoubted rights of the Maritime provinces in the lands already alienated and now proposed to be further alienated from the federal domain. These and some other federal questions, and the situation arising out of them, are so far reaching and so vitally important to the well-being of the provinces and confederacy as to put the whole matter quite beyond the range of questions that can or should be dealt with by a commission.

I have no present intention to here or now attack the personnel of the proposed commission, but for the weighty reasons I have referred to and others equally important we decline to submit our case to or to be in any way guided or obligated by any findings arising out of an investigation by such a commission. On the contrary we ask for, indeed we demand, a parliamentary committee to which we can appeal, as in the case of the Crowsnest pass rate question, which was considered and dealt with by such a committee in the year 1922; and that is not so far back but that most of the members of this House are quite familiar with the question and the settlement arrived at as to the matters then in dispute. Failure to meet the demands of Nova Scotia will tend to make of that province another Ireland, with an accompaniment of ill feeling, trouble and loss as between the eastern provinces and the Dominion greater and more far reaching than any disturbance which has arisen in the past out of the Irish question. Some hon. members opposite may laugh, but I can assure them it is no laughing matter. It is a matter which should receive the serious consideration of this House and unless it does receive such consideration there is trouble in store for this country; as to that there is no possibility of doubt.

I again tell the government we do not want a commission. We ask and demand that the matter of our grievances be examined by a committee of this House. The responsibility is on the government and to them the provinces by the sea look for relief, failing which this government must and will be held responsible for consequences that will affect not Nova Scotia alone but the whole of this Dominion.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): It was not my intention to take any part in this debate; I prefer to put myself in the position of a listener and a learner. I think I have much to learn, and I think also that I will have much to learn after the debate is concluded. I should not have spoken had not the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) made certain references to a speech of my own delivered on a former occasion in answer to certain remarks made by the hon. member for Pictou himself. In the course of his speech on February 10 the hon. member used these words:

Within a few years—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BROWN: Are hon. members going to stand on such strict technicalities that they will not allow a sentence to be quoted from a speech in this House? I think the hon. member for Pictou quoted from mine.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not quote from Hansard, I quoted from memory.

Mr. BROWN: My memory is fairly good and I will quote from memory. The hon. member for Pictou in a speech delivered in this House said that within a few years following the confederation of the four provinces the Hudson's Bay Company's rights were bought out for the sum of £300,000, and that that sum was paid by the four original provinces of confederation. That is almost word for word although perhaps not absolutely verbatim. I took exception to that statement and disputed the position taken by the hon. member that that sum was paid by the four original provinces of confederation.

I understand that the hon. gentleman in his speech this afternoon went further back than the time of confederation; I believe he made some reference to certain things that happened as far back as 1830. I was not able to follow his speech with strict accuracy, and perhaps it might have been wiser had I waited until I had seen it in Hansard before undertaking to reply. But when I spoke in this House I was replying to the statement made by the hon. member for Pictou that the four original provinces of confederation had paid the sum of £300,000 for the extinguishment of the Hudson's Bay Company's claims. I pointed out in the course of my remarks that the Rupert's Land Act made it necessary for that money to be raised by the Dominion of Canada, it being made one of the terms of the Rupert's Land Act that that amount should form no charge upon the consolidated funds of the Imperial government. I referred also to the fact that provision was made for repayment on the 1st April, 1904, of the loan that was made on that occasion by the British bankers. I also quoted from the public record to show that that amount of £300,000 or $1,460,000 formed part of a payment that was made on the debt of the country in that year, the total amount of the debt extinguished being $23,793,566.67.

I pointed out further that when the time came that debt was paid and that it must, of necessity, have been paid in one of two different ways. One way was payment by cash, and another was by some refunding operation, the amount being added to the debt of the whole Dominion. To my mind it did not make any difference in which way the debt was paid. I understood the hon. member this afternoon to say something about its being paid from a sinking fund. If

I made a mistake on that point I would be very glad to be corrected. A sinking fund, in my opinion, is a fund into which money is paid from time to time to discharge a liability that comes due at a certain time, and you certainly cannot take money out of a sinking fund unless money is put into it. It must be remembered that the debt was incurred in 1870 and was finally discharged only in the year 1904, so that it stands to reason that if provision was made for the extinguishment of that debt in any way it was borne in equal measure or up to the measure of our responsibilities and obligations by the other provinces of the Dominion just as well as by the four original provinces. It makes no difference whether the amount was paid in cash or whether it was paid by some refunding operation and thus added to the general debt of the country.

This is a matter of some importance, since hon. members have continued to insist that they have borne that whole obligation. How, for instance, do hon. members from Prince Edward Island and hon. members from British Columbia like to be told that they had no share in the payment of that debt? To show that I am not speaking without some authority upon this matter I wish to quote from a work that was prepared by Mr. Chester Martin, in which he deals with the whole question of the natural resources of the prairie provinces. It is a work to which I would draw the attention of hon. members from the east. They might study it with some profit to themselves and to the welfare of Canada, and their study of it will, perhaps, be calculated to promote greater harmony than seems likely to be the case when we discuss these matters more definitely. I was taking the position which Mr. Martin took when I spoke on the matter before. This is what he says in his works:

> It may be added that the west is not "the property" of Canada since the public domain is "vested in the crown," and that the £300,000 was not "paid by" the rest of Canada for the west in any case. It was paid immediately by British bankers, and the amount was subsequently raised by Canada (including Manitoba) by public loan guaranteed by British treasury warrant of June 18, 1870, pursuant to the Rupert's Land Loan Act, the principal to be repaid on 1st Arpil, 1904. The per capita contribution of Manitoba to Dominion customs revenues was for many years the highest in Canada, and thus even at the current conception of the status of Manitoba so largely prevalent in eastern Canada, this province may be said to have discharged rather more than her share of the "purchase" price of her own public domain.

It seems to me that the claim is an absolutely absurd one. If the £300,000 had been paid out of money which was actually in the possession of the four eastern provinces at that time there might be some ground for their argument; but in view of the fact that it was raised by a loan that was borne by the whole of Canada, there is no ground for their contention. When Manitoba entered confederation in 1870 we secured our fair share of all the assets and all the liabilities of the Dominion of Canada just as the other provinces did when they entered confederation. To my mind it is absurd for any hon. gentleman at this late stage to say that the four original provinces bore all the cost of the extinguishment of the Hudson's Bay Company's claims. I would like to have a statement from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) on this matter. I notice that he did not seem to be particularly happy when the hon. member for Pictou was speaking, and there is no man in this House who is more competent to set forth the facts in regard to this whole matter than the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, the leader of the official opposition. I have a great respect for his ability and I would listen to him with a good deal of pleasure if he would deal with this matter.

A short time ago the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) made some reference to what he believes to be a fact, namely, that the east was bearing a large measure of the burdens of the western people. The hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) very fittingly and properly rebuked the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George in a speech that showed him to be truly western, and set forth very clearly and concisely the position which western Canada has occupied these many years in the economic life of the Dominion. It is nearly time that we heard something from some of the other western members of that party. We would like to hear from the right hon. leader of the opposition on that question, and perhaps the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) might be willing to state his views as to whether the east is bearing an undue share of the burdens of the country. We would also like to hear from the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Mackenzie King); the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins); the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hay); the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) and the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Murphy). Let us hear what they have to say as to whether the east is bearing such a heavy burden, which should be partly carried by the west. It would be very interesting to hear something from these gentlemen.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. gentleman allow me?

Mr. BROWN: Certainly.

Mr. CAHAN: Has he heard any hon. member state that there are additional burdens which should be laid on the west?

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George himself made a reference to this matter which called forth a rebuke from the hon. member for West Calgary. I believe the hon. member was not in his place at the time, but I am referring to Hansard.

Mr. CAHAN: Laying aside the question of a rebuke, I again ask if the hon. member has ever heard anyone in this House say or urge that additional burdens should be placed on the west?

Mr. BROWN: I have heard the statement made repeatedly that the east is bearing an undue share of the burdens of the country. That statement was repeated by the hon. member for Pictou in regard to this specific matter.

Mr. CAHAN: I have not heard it, and I have listened carefully to the debates.

Mr. FOSTER: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. BROWN: Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER: Does the government not admit that that contention is sound, by the appointment of the commission?

Mr. BROWN: That what contention is sound?

Mr. FOSTER: The contention that certain portions of eastern Canada are bearing an undue share of our burdens?

Mr. BROWN: I refer the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George to the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Foster) for an answer to the question which he just put to me.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that it is not an answer.

Mr. BROWN: In regard to the matter immediately before the House, Mr. Speaker, I did not want to enter into the debate; I only wished to listen and to learn. I wanted to ascertain, if I could, just what claims the prairie provinces are making; what their rights are and how they should be granted; what their wrongs are and how they should be given redress. I think it is unfortunate that some things should be introduced into this question which do not specifically refer to the Maritime provinces, and in which the Maritime provinces are not alone interested. Such a question is that of the tariff. I do not think the hon. members from the Maritime provinces are quite agreed on that question; indeed, it is certain that they are not. They tell us that parties do not count in this question of Maritime rights. If that is the case perhaps it would be wise for them to confine themselves to those things on which the parties in the Maritime provinces are apparently agreed. They are certainly not agreed on the tariff. It is true that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George announced what we all knew—that he is a protectionist—but he cannot claim that the Maritime provinces unanimously endorse that doctrine.

Mr. HANSON: Will the hon. member name one member on this side of the House, representing a Maritime constituency, who is not a supporter of the principle of protection?

Mr. BROWN: If the hon. member had waited just a moment I would have dealt with that point.

Mr. HANSON: Or on the other side?

Mr. BROWN: It is true that the members here representing the Maritime provinces claim adherence to the principle of protection, but it is just as true that the Maritime members in the last House were as violently opposed to that doctrine as are the members from the prairie provinces. For my part, since they tell us that Maritime rights is something on which the people are absolutely agreed, I am prepared to believe that the members from the Maritime provinces who were in the last House represented the people of those provinces on that particular question just as accurately and perhaps a little more accurately, in my judgment, than have the present members. That is my opinion; if it be not correct perhaps this commission which has been appointed may be able to bring us some very useful information on the subject.

I think it very unfortunate that these differences should arise, or that anything savouring of ill feeling or ill will should exist. So far as the first part of this resolution is concerned, I am in hearty agreement that there should be good faith kept with the people of the Maritime provinces, but we would like to know whether good faith is being kept, or to what degree that good faith has been broken. In regard to the second part of the resolution I am not quite sure of all that is there implied. If I were allowed to put my own interpretation on it, this section would not seem very dangerous, although of course there might be more read into it at a later stage than appears on the surface. It suggests that freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway should be adjusted in accordance with the understanding at the time of confederation. That is of course a very indefinite and general term, upon which any person might put his own interpretation; to me it is simply a matter of adjusting the freight rates in accordance with the understanding at the time of confederation, and I could support that very heartily. However, I see that it is something into which others might read far more than that, and thus it might lead to confusion at a later time.

Speaking generally, Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to give very careful consideration to any claims coming from any part of Canada. If there is a part of this Dominion which is handicapped; if there are wrongs that must be redressed, for my part I am willing to give the utmost consideration to such claims. I would like to hear these claims stated a little more definitely and specifically, however, than they have been stated up to the present. Do the hon. members, for instance, demand that the Intercolonial railway be distinct from the Canadian National railways, and handled henceforth as a separate unit? Is that their demand? If it is, let us have it stated plainly in order that there may be no misunderstanding. Then I would like to hear what the right hon. leader of the opposition would have to say about that proposition.

I am quite prepared to believe, from the former speech of the hon. member for Pictou, that there are many inequalities in freight rates which should be corrected. But while that is true I still feel that it is necessary for us to have a great deal more information; certainly it is necessary for me to secure much more information before I could feel in a position to pronounce positively as to what might be done or what could be done to remedy the wrongs which are complained of.

Mr. J. A. MACDONALD (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I would scarcely have taken part in this debate were it not for the fact that I represent a constituency in the province which, of all the provinces, has perhaps suffered the most through the failure of Canada to carry out the terms of confederation and, as the resolution puts it, "to keep faith with the assurances and undertakings of the government and parliament of Canada." I do not intend to cover the ground of the resolution generally, but to refer briefly to some parts that apply particularly to the province of Prince Edward Island.

[Mr. Brown.]

Prince Edward Island held out for better terms than those originally proposed in 1867, and having secured them entered Confederation in 1873. At that time the island had been a self-governing colony for over one hundred years, and in the interval had made great progress. People from the Old Country settled there and hewed farms out of the wilderness and eventually became prosperous. They developed a thriving trade and established industries suitable to their needs, such as cloth mills, knitting mills, boot and shoe factories and agricultural implement factories. In the thirty years before confederation the population doubled itself, the revenues were buoyant and sufficient in every way to meet the colony's expenditure.

Now, the last speaker (Mr. Brown) asked in what way the terms of confederation were not carried out. One of the terms under which Prince Edward Island entered the Dominion was:

> Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between the Island and the mainland, winter and Summer, thus placing the Island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial railway and the railway system of the Dominion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member: Does he know how faith was kept with Prince Edward Island with respect to that term of the union? We suffered for many years under the failure of Canada to carry out that part of the bargain. In 1900, under the Laurier government, the claims of Prince Edward Island for damages in that regard were recognized, and the government of that day granted an additional subsidy of $30,000 a year in settlement of all claims on that account up to 1900. That represented probably a capital sum of a million dollars at that time. But would any hon. member say that a million dollars would compensate for the hardships we suffered for twenty-seven long years by reason of that failure of Canada to carry out that term of the confederation pact?

But suppose we say we were adequately settled with up to 1900, I would point out to the House some of the things that happened later. In the winter of 1902-03 we were 35 days without steam connection of any kind with the mainland, and 33 days during which there was only a one-way or a half-trip service: in the winter of 1904-05 we were 54 days without any steamer communication with the mainland and were 19 days with only a one-way or half-trip service, while for 21 days we never received any mail from the mainland; in the winter of 1906-07 we were thirty-five days without any communication with the mainland. Yet we entered confederation on the distinct understanding with the Dominion government that we would be furnished with an efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers continuously throughout the year between the Island and the mainland. I ask the hon. member: In the face of these facts does he think Prince Edward Island was fairly treated? Why, sir, under the conditions I have described between 1900 and the present time our trade has fallen off through the non-fulfilment of this particular term of the contract, and as a result many firms have gone into bankruptcy owing to losses incurred by destruction of perishable products through delay in transportation. These disastrous conditions have seriously injured our people, until to-day our former thriving industries are a mere memory and our population has dwindled from practically a hundred thousand people in 1873 to less than 90,000 to-day.

Now, this is one of the failures of Canada to implement its promises that we think should be dealt with. Whether the royal commission that has been appointed will deal with our grievances fully and fairly is something that I do not care to discuss. I do feel, however, that we should not be put off with a royal commission, that the facts can be fairly represented to the government by the members of this House and by the provincial governments of the three maritime provinces. The three premiers are now engaged in preparing the case of the maritimes for presentation to the federal government. I know that the premier of Prince Edward Island, in conjunction with the premiers of Nova and New Brunswick, has been working on the case for two years. I believe that those gentlemen and the members in this House representing the maritime provinces are in a far better position than any royal commission to present to the federal government our local needs and claims.

While our claims have much in common with those of the other two maritime provinces, we have a claim peculiar to the Island; I refer to our mainland connection, which is not yet satisfactory. Although in 1912 the Borden government made a start to implement this clause of the confederation agreement, even to-day our communication with the mainland is not entirely satisfactory, but I am ready to admit that it is much better than it used to be. I am not citing the action of the Borden government for political reasons, because I am quite ready to give the Laurier government credit for recognizing our claims in 1900, but the Borden government went a long way to improve conditions when they began to standardize our railway and provide a car ferry service. But what is the condition to-day? More than half of the Prince Edward Island railway is still narrow gauge, and hon. members, unless they have had the experience of handling traffic from a narrow gauge to a standard gauge line, cannot understand the hardships and inconvenience it entails. Not only that, but the car ferry service cannot carry anything like the quantity of freight that is offered. A few weeks ago there were two hundred cars of freight lying on the sidings between Moncton and Tormentine waiting for transportation, which was not available. Perishable products, such as potatoes, have been lying in Prince Edward Island all winter and could not be moved because there was not sufficient steamship transportation, which the Dominion government promised us. Our handicaps are chiefly transportation. When we entered confederation the claim held out was that we would be given the markets of Upper Canada instead of the markets that we had developed to the south. The southern markets, of course, we came in touch with through water communication, but it was said that the Intercolonial would give us a much better market in Upper Canada, and we believed that. It did so, but the condition to-day is that while we have products which we could sell in Upper Canada, and sell to advantage at the prices obtainable in Montreal, Toronto and other cities in Upper Canada, the transportation charges are so great that they eat up in some cases the greater part of the price we could obtain for our products before they ever reach the market. It would be a good market if we were in touch with it at a reasonable freight rate, such a freight rate as we were led to expect when we entered confederation.

We want additional transportation facilities to-day. There is a very strong agitation in Prince Edward Island for a second car ferry, for two reasons: First, the present car ferry is not able to perform all the service that is required there; it is not able to carry the amount of freight that is offered; second, because of the very great danger that exists to-day in the fact that if anything should happen to that car ferry, we should be isolated altogether. When we look back to the days when we had only ice boat communication, when a passenger leaving Prince Edward Island had to put a strap over his shoulder and assist in hauling the ice boat across, paying six dollars for the privilege, we view with alarm the prospect of something happening to that car ferry and of our having to go back to those conditions; because if anything does happen there will be nothing else to depend upon. In the strait of Canso, where conditions are comparatively easy compared with the strait of Northumberland, they provide a service of two car ferries; they have one auxiliary in case something should happen to the regular ferry. The distance is practically only a mile, and little ice to contend with, whereas we have nine miles, and very heavy ice to contend with; yet we have to depend on only one car ferry.

There is another way in which this government might easily help out, and that is with an air service. We could at least get mails and light baggage and perhaps some passengers, transported by air if the government would utilize their air force down there. The air force could carry on their experimenting there just as well as anywhere else, and at the same time give some reasonable service that would be of great value to Prince Edward Island by giving us a speedy and sure connection for mails, and perhaps light baggage and passengers, at all times and under all conditions. It is a serious hardship at present, at best, for passengers who have to cross by the car ferry, to be out there for hours, and days sometimes, and missing all train connections. While the service is very much better than it was many years ago, it is still far from satisfactory, and this is one of the things we expect the government to deal with.

To give an instance of the kind of service we get on that railway, I had the experience a few weeks ago of starting from Borden to Charlottetown. After getting off the car ferry several hours late, we had to get into a train, and although the authorities knew that the train had to start out from Borden, when the passengers got aboard there were no lights; something had gone wrong with the electric light apparatus, and we were furnished with old worn-out cars from the railway system on the mainland, with one lantern to light the whole coach. We had not gone very far before a brake beam gave out, and we were detained till that was repaired. We went a little further and then the air hose broke, and the braking system was out of commission. I just mention these things so that hon. gentlemen may have some idea of the difficulties we have to contend with. These things are unknown on the mainland, and the western members I am sure can hardly realize that such conditions exist; but these are some of our problems.

[Mr. J. A. Macdonald.]

I do not believe a commission of this kind is good enough. I think we can present these matters to the federal government ourselves just as well as any commission could possibly do; in fact, we could do it better. Particularly I say this, that if a commission was deemed to be necessary, if the government felt they could not deal with the question satisfactorily themselves, they would have been wise to select at least one or two practical business men from the Maritime provinces as members of that commission. However, I am not criticizing the personnel of the commission. I am glad to know that a former Prince Edward Islander, Dr. Macmillan, is one of the members. I hope that he at all events will have the interests of his native province at heart, and see that some of our hardships are remedied.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House to any great extent because the general features of the question have been already discussed rather fully. But I do hope that action of some kind will be taken, and I am sorry the government have found it necessary to delegate this matter to a commission, instead of dealing with it themselves at this present session. These delays are expensive, and they are costing Prince Edward Island, as well at the other Maritime provinces, much hardship and much loss. Not only that, but in addition to the loss and the hardship, a great deal of discontent has developed; it is developing day by day. The longer these conditions exist the more will that discontent grow, and the greater danger there will be that some movement will take firm hold of the people which may possibly have very serious consequences for the whole Dominion of Canada and the confederation pact. There is a real danger there, and I would like to appeal to the Prime Minister and the members of his government to deal as speedily as possible with these matters, with the particular object of allaying this discontent, which is perhaps a more serious feature of the situation than the loss and hardship, financial and otherwise, which the people in the Maritime provinces are suffering.

In conclusion, referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) who has just spoken, I do not know that protection enters into this question to any great extent, but so far as the members from the Maritime provinces are concerned, there is no question whatever where they stand on the principle of protection. They were all elected on that principle, and they represent that principle, believing it is the best thing for the interests of Canada as a whole. When the hon. member speaks about the delegation that came from the Maritime provinces four years ago, and says that they had diametrically opposite views, I would ask him why did they not carry their views into effect in this parliament when they had the power to do it. I would once again plead with the government for action, and speedy action, in this matter.

Mr. G. T. MacNUTT (Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I shall take up but a short time in speaking to this resolution, for there is very little I can add to what I said on this question on a previous occasion, and repetition would be merely a waste of the valuable time of this parliament. I think it was the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) who declared that the question of Maritime rights would be presented at every available opportunity throughout this session. In view of that declaration I make no apology for addressing the House to-night.

I was somewhat amused at the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) who ventured the opinion that no contractual rights had been taken away from us. I warn the hon. gentleman that in expressing such an opinion he is venturing on very thin ice. Would my hon. friend have us believe that the pledges of the Fathers of Confederation are no more sacred than the promises of a horse trader? I can assure my hon. friend that if the Maritime rights commission, which is shortly expected to function, entertains the same ideas with regard to the spirit of the confederation pact, that, commission will be very short-lived indeed, in fact its dissolution will begin the very first day it meets. Why, Mr. Speaker, the whole crux of the situation depends upon whether we are going to honour the pledges that were entered into at the time of confederation. It was upon the strength of those pledges and those pledges alone that the representatives of the Maritime provinces agreed to the pact. As I stated here on a previous occasion, the mere laying of two streaks of steel from Moncton to Quebec through a wilderness of 500 miles was not a sufficiently powerful thing of itself to induce the brainy men of those days who acted for the Maritime provinces to subscribe to confederation. We did not want to enter into confederation; we were persuaded to do so by the pledges given at that time. And the commission which is charged with making the investigation into Maritime province rights must acknowledge that those pledges are equally as binding as section 145 of the British North America Act, which was read by the Minister of National Defence this afternoon. Unless that is done we shall never arrive at a real solution of our troubles in the Maritimes.

We have been told on several occasions during the present session that in advocating Maritime rights we were raising a sectional cry. In this I do not agree. It is the duty of every member in this House to see that the interests of the district which he represents are carefully safeguarded; and surely hon. gentlemen to my left will resent the idea that in advocating the building of the Hudson Bay railway, and other large enterprises, they are laying themselves open to the charge of raising the sectional cry. I believe that if the representatives from the respective constituencies, or provinces, do not look after the rights of those portions of Canada, they cannot expect members from other parts of the Dominion to do it for them.

A few days ago the legislature of Nova Scotia passed a resolution on this subject. That resolution is brief and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read it. It is worded as follows:

> Whereas Nova Scotia in entering confederation made possible the unification and consolidation of a British dominion on this continent;
> And whereas at that time certain pledges were given that such measures would be undertaken and such policies pursued as would ensure for the future a satisfactory economic position for this province;
>
> And whereas the pledges given have been disregarded as a result of which Nova Scotia has not shared in equal measure in the prosperity enjoyed by the Dominion as a whole;
>
> And whereas the government is now engaged in preparing a memorandum setting forth in detail the claims of the province with the object in view of seeking such adequate redress as will ensure such a return of contentment and prosperity to our people;
> Therefore be it resolved that this House approves the action now being taken by this government,
> And be it further resolved that such memorandum be presented by the government to the federal government with the assurance that the people of this province believe that adequate remedies exist and must be applied.

The foregoing resolution passed the legislature on a strict party vote, the three Liberal members of the House voting against it. That resolution was not presented in any party spirit or with any desire to make party capital. Premier Rhodes closed a memorable address with which he supported the resolution in the following words:

> The serpent of secession has raised its slimy head in this province, so I am told. I wish to dissociate myself with any man who ever suggests secession. There are those who say we would have been better off had we not entered confederation. From the bottom of my heart I think we were wise to have entered confederation. I believe the Fathers of Confederation built better than they knew. They were men of prophetic vision, and that we have not reaped the full benefit of confederation is due more to neglect on our part, and I say regardless of whether a Conservative or Liberal government was in power at Ottawa, that the remedies for our ills can be found within the four corners of confederation. If we will only diligently seek them and apply them we will solve our problems.

Like Premier Rhodes I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we can solve our problems not only within the four corners of confederation but within the four walls of this building. I believe the representatives from the Maritime provinces have sufficient data to enable this investigation to be carried on while this House is in session. I think it was the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who made the suggestion a short time ago that a parliamentary committee be named here before whom the desired investigation could be held. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) characterized the suggestion as a good one and expressed the belief that the government was ready to consider such an appointment. Unfortunately, following that announcement the minister was taken to the hospital a very sick man and for some weeks he was absent from the deliberations of the government. I believe, Sir, that if the hon. minister, who is the only minister from the Maritime provinces, had been in the councils of the government during those weeks, a parliamentary committee would have been appointed rather than the royal commission which has been named by the government. We are glad indeed to hear his voice in the House this afternoon, and we hope he may yet prevail upon the government to name a parliamentary committee before whom we may take our case. The question is such an important one that it seems to me unsafe to allow it to be dealt with by a royal commission for the next six, eight or twelve months. We realize that the situation is a very difficult one for any government, and personally I sympathize with the government which has to face the problem. I believe it is the biggest problem that has had to be dealt with by any government in recent years. But it must be faced, and the sooner it is faced the better for this country and I am sure the better for the Maritime provinces.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) a few moments ago referred to the west not getting more than the east. I should like to draw his attention to the matter of the distribution of outlay. This information can be obtained from the reports of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Railways and Canals. The Canada Year Book shows that in the year 1924 the total commitments for railways and canals was $3,103,259,242 and that the proportion of that amount for the Maritime provinces, according to population, should have been $341,858,512. But it was found that the amount spent in the Maritimes up to 1924 amounted to $194,024,017.

Mr. BROWN: What was the total amount?

Mr. MacNUTT: $3,103,259,242. The Maritimes have received 53 per cent of the proportion they were entitled to. We do not ask that dollar for dollar be spent in these provinces.

Mr. BROWN: Was that money spent for railways and canals?

Mr. MacNUTT: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: Did the hon. member say three billions?

Mr. MacNUTT: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: In one year?

Mr. MacNUTT: No, the total up to 1924. We can easily see now that this session another $100,000,000 will be added to the debt of the country, and I am sure that the Maritime provinces are not going to gain much by the bills now before the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the hon. member included the steamship subsidy and expenditures for docks and all that kind of thing?

Mr. MacNUTT: No, that is railways and canals only.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member might make a comparison between the harbour expenditures in the west and in the east.

Mr. MacNUTT: I think I might present that to the hon. member at some future time, but not to-night. As the transportation question in Canada seems to transcend all other questions, I have recently secured a copy of an address given by D. A. McGibbon, Professor of political economy in the University of Alberta. This address was delivered before the agricultural society in Saskatoon on January 14, 1926. I have not the pleasure of an acquaintance with the professor. I do not know whether he is a Maritime province man or not, but in his address he told the people that logically and morally he believed the position of the people of the Maritimes was absolutely unattackable. He referred to four great transportation problems; first the demands of British Columbia that the railway should make very low rates to enable that province to handle all the grain of Alberta and western Saskatchewan; second, the agitation for the completion for the Hudson Bay route as a grain carrying channel; third, the project of deepening the St. Lawrence to enable ocean going carriers to load at Fort William and Port Arthur, and fourth, the contention of the Maritime provinces that the people of Halifax and St. John should handle the Canadian grain that now goes out via New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia. I regret that this pamphlet is so long, because I would like to see it in the hands of every hon. member in this House who has not seen it. I will quote briefly a few portions of it. He says:

The facts that I have placed before you suggest a conclusion which may not have occurred to you. All these projects, in so far as they lean upon the government, in so far as they aim to divert trade, industry and capital from the courses they would naturally take under conditions of free enterprise, are part and parcel of a policy of protection. Many people in Canada identify protection only in connection with the policy of maintaining a protective tariff. But that is a mistake. A protective tariff operates to divert capital and industry into lines that it would not take if the government had not intervened. This is what all these transportation measures, directly or indirectly, propose to do. The bringing of transportation systems within the scope of economic protectionism is well known to students of the subject. The German authority Grunzel points out that in Germany before the war, "railway rates became not merely an auxiliary to protective duties, but in a still higher degree a means of encouraging exportations". The Germans manipulated railways rates to feed their own ports at the expense of their Belgian and French and Dutch competitors. Grunzel relates how Bismark exerted his influence upon the railways to make them "become instruments of government policy."

Of exactly similar import are the reductions arranged for on coal from Alberta to Ontario. The government has granted a sum of money drawn from the taxpayers of Canada to make these shipments possible. This sum of money is a bounty expended in the interests of encouraging home industry. The same thing is true of the government subsidizes a route to Europe via Hudson Bay, or a ship canal via the St. Lawrence, or by meeting deficits on the National Railways, due to its requiring them to carry grain exports at less than remunerative rates.

Then he proceeds:

The claims of the Maritimes.

This brings me to the complaints that are being registered by the cities of St. John and Halifax. Logically and morally, I believe their position is absolutely unattackable.

I will repeat that and emphasize it.

Logically and morally I believe their position is absolutely unattackable. Transportation ventures, all purporting to be for the national benefit, are being or have been subsidized right and left by our national government. On the basis of political promises, on the ground of transportation subsidies given elsewhere, in the very words setting forth the reasons for the construction of what are now the National railways, our sister provinces by the sea and the city of Quebec have the right to feel that their claims have not received full consideration. The promises which the people of Canada endorsed by the election of 1904 have not been implemented. . .

Nor can I agree with a former premier of Nova Scotia when he said that the grain growers of the west should ship their grain through Canadian Atlantic seaboard ports even though it cost them money to do so. That is too much to expect of human nature, nor is it in accord with the logic of economic protectionism, of which all these transportation ventures and schemes are a type.

This leads only to one conclusion. We cannot expect the Board of Railway Commissioners to order the railways to make rates that the latter can show are not remunerative in order to subsidize Canadian routes. Valuable as its function is, there are metes and bounds to what it can accomplish. The only way by which a volume of grain shipments might be set flowing to Canadian Atlantic seaboard ports is through parliament frankly subsidizing the route. The method of accomplishment would be: (1) to have the Board of Railway Commissioners make a thorough investigation and determine a rate that would not cause loss to the railways; (2) determine at what rates grain should reach tidewater in order to compete with the American range of ports; (3) the difference between these two figures would have to be made up by a rebate to the exporter using Canadian lines and seaports; (4) the burden of making these rebates would have to fall upon the Dominion treasury; (5) such rates should come into effect with the closing of the St. Lawrence river, and should remain available each year until the opening of that channel in the spring. This is the only method I know of by which the Maritime seaports may hope to share in a large way in the export of Canadian grain.

If the people of Canada wish to utilize their own ports this is the course they will have to pursue. Economic protectionism has been part of the policy of Canada for 46 years. The doctrine of the development through protection of infant industries has been preached incessantly—a subsidy to encourage the Maritime ports would be in accord with the logic of that policy.

I should like also to refer to a paper that came into my hands a few days ago. Hon. members can see it. There is this heading in two-inch, heavy type, block letters in the Boston Advertiser of March 31, 1926:

Secession Move in Maritimes

Separatist banner is likely to be hoisted on birthday of confederation.

The 59th birthday of Canada's confederation, on July 1, next, may see the banner of secession formally hoisted by the Maritimes provinces, if plans now afoot here mature according to schedule.

Secession rumours have stirred eastern Canada before now, and the issue of "Maritime rights" has been one of those most persistently to the fore in the present session of parliament. The movement now launched, according to its sponsors, is designed to fan the embers of unrest into an open flame, and to win complete fiscal autonomy for the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Geographic transportation conditions make it impossible for them to find a market for their exports in the other provinces of Canada and the present United States tariff closes the doors of that country to their produce.

Other planks in the secessionist platform are:

Complete control of the provinces' natural resources.

Provincial collections of all duties and excise, income taxes and other levies.

Control of all fisheries within the provinces.

Co-operation with the Dominion in military defence, postal services and navigation.

Contributions to the National railway deficit to be in proportion to mileage in the province.

Contributions to the national debt to be in proportion to population.

Appointment of a royal commission to investigate the grievances of the Martime provinces, was one of the promises made by Premier King at the opening of the present session of the Dominion parliament. But the secessionists declare that their grievances have been too long ignored; that the hour for investigation and negotiation has passed, and the hour for direct action has struck.

That is what is appearing in papers across the line. I am not a secessionist. I do not like the word. I do not believe that at present you can find a great number of secessionists in my province, but I believe we are to-day standing upon a volcano of public feeling in that province, a volcano which is liable to burst into eruption at any time. I plead with this government and ask that they recede from their present position in the appointment of a royal commission, act upon the suggestion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and name a parliamentary committee before whom we can place the case for the Maritime provinces.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, coming from Ontario I may say that no part of Canada is more interested in Maritime rights than the old province of Ontario. I am glad a party has risen up in this House to point out exactly what Maritime rights are. In the last parliament a group of members from the prairie provinces presented their case; members from British Columbia presented its case, but there were very few to present the case of the Maritime provinces. As I said before, we in Ontario are in sympathy with the claims of the Maritime provinces; but after all is said and done, if Ontario which pays about 46 per cent of the taxes of this Dominion, were to prepare a bill of rights—and dear knows Ontario needs a ginger group in this House—the other parts of the country would know that in some respects they are well off as compared with Ontario.

I admire the Maritime provinces; in fact I brought up a bill regarding coal and Maritime rights the first session I was in this parliament. The resolution before the Chair covers the whole phase of Maritime rights from the day they entered confederation, the contract entered into by them when they entered into confederation, which contract the Railway Commission of this country construed in a judgment as not making binding any special freight or passenger rates. The main industries of the Maritime provinces are the products of the sea, the soil, the forest and the mine. There is the coal industry, the steel industry, the lumbering industry, the fishing industry and I might add a fifth one, the agricultural industry and the fruit industry. A very fair statement of this bill of rights was presented by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall), and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) in a very able address spoke about the fishing industry. The steel and coal industry was covered by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley). The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) referred to some of the legal phases of the matter and presented a very fair statement of what Maritime rights are.

It is all very well for this legislature to say 'What are Maritime rights?" and for the government to ask a deputation headed by the late Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Armstrong, what Maritime rights were. The Prime Minister asked the same question in the Maritime provinces, previous to the election. Without reading his remarks in full, the gist of his speech was that if he knew what Maritime rights were he would see what could be done. Every province in Canada is suffering economically to-day, and I contend that the solution for each is the great gospel of protection, starting with the Maritime provinces. There should be protection for the coal industry; protection for the steel industry; protection and safeguarding legislation for the lumber industry and for agriculture, to meet the changed conditions which confront the people of those provinces to-day. The people of the Maritime provinces have too much government; there is no reason why they should not unite into one great province for the upbuilding of that part of Canada. Canada is one of the most over-governed countries in the world to-day, and because of that fact we are greatly over-taxed. The way to look at these economic problems is from the confederation standpoint of bearing one another's burdens. We in Ontario would be glad to get coal from the Maritime provinces, whether by rail or by water; we would be glad to take steel from the Maritime provinces, as well as fruit, lumber, and fish. Ontario is clamouring for Maritime fish to-day, and we should get some supply from the Maritime provinces. They are ninety per cent a transportation problem.

All these problems could be solved if we only had men big enough to carry on the work. I said the other night, speaking of our country, that Canada always placed the wrong men in the right places, and the moment the right man is put in the right place, unfortunately the Lord calls him to his own. Many of the ills of the Maritime provinces have been due to the length of office of some of the provincial governments, in power for thirty-four, thirty-five or thirty-six years, then the premier resigns and comes to Ottawa and an absentee landlordism is carried on in the government and the old work done by the former premier is continued, that of doing nothing. We had the same thing at one time in Ontario; the government of Sir Oliver Mowat was in power for a long time, thirty-three years. Sir Oliver Mowat was a very fine man, but without any vision. That government, however, was in power too long. They could never see the importance of the hydro and cheap power scheme, and in 1905 the last of the Niagara power limits in Ontario, were almost given away by the Ross government. If that had been done Ontario would have had no hydro electric system to-day. The hydro electric development has done more to assist the resources of the province than any other step ever taken, and what happened in Ontario should have happened in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

I do not believe commissions will help in the solution of these problems, whether a tariff commission or a commission to inquire into Maritime rights. The tariff, I hope, will always be in politics, and the responsibility for the tariff should be on the government of the day. This House is composed of 245 commissioners elected by the people to solve these problems, and we should not rely on a commission appointed perhaps for political reasons. It is not responsible government as I see it. What do the members of the Maritime rights commission know about conditions in the Maritimes? I venture to say that any representative of a Maritime constituency in this House knows a good deal more of that question than any of the gentlemen on that commission.

Since 1922 this government has had before it the question of a national coal supply, which has very largely to do with the Maritime provinces, and they have done nothing. The solution which I proposed, that of a national coal policy and of subsidies, subventions and bonuses, was voted down each year. As the hon. member for Pictou has said, this is the great question before the Maritime people to-day. If we put that industry on its feet the other kindred industries will be benefited also. The government, in the dying days of the session of 1923, after voting my motion down, brought forward a bill providing for subventions and subsidies of $200,000 to the coal industry, for the carrying of coal from Alberta and the Maritime provinces. Has that money been spent in the assistance of the Maritimes? Not one cent that year was sent in that way; it has all been devoted to bringing Alberta coal down to central Canada. Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin had a much greater problem on his hands. England was losing its steel and coal supremacy to Hamburg, notwithstanding the great difference between conditions in Germany and those in England. England was on the verge of a social revolution because of a contemplated coal strike which would have destroyed the British Empire, but Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin relieved the situation by introducing a bill which provided for bonuses and subsidies to the extent of $210,000,000, in order to bring the coal industry back to normal. That is the course which should have been followed by the government here in 1922; something should have been done in a practical way. One fifth to one fourth of the population of the Maritime provinces are engaged in the coal industry. This question should stay in politics until a solution is found, and there is nothing to prevent us from solving the difficulty during the present session.

I believe that the Maritime provinces, notwithstanding what the courts and the railway commission may decide legally, made an honest, just, fair, square and equitable arrangement under which they came into confederation, by which they were to have certain Maritime rights now referred to. We in the province of Ontario have certain rights, but we are content to see the other provinces get justice, for we continue to pay 46 per cent of the taxation of this country without getting anything in return. One of the most important agencies to solve our national problems is scientific research as applied to the products of the sea, the soil, the forest, and the mine. What are the universities in the Maritime provinces doing in that direction? Scientific research would aid the solution of Maritime ills.

As I said before, the Liberal party is very largely to blame for the conditions to-day in the Maritime provinces. The principles of protection are the only principles that can establish the foundations of economic unity between our various provinces. We in Ontario are willing to sacrifice something for the general good of confederation to help the other provinces. We had a similar state of affairs in our province and solved it by protection. If you want to see a monument of the efficacy of protection, look around at what it has done for the water powers of Ontario. If you want to see a monument of this folly of free trade, look at what it has done for the natural resources of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. For almost fifty years the natural resources of Nova Scotia were administered according to the principles of Adam Smith, as those principles were interpreted by corporations, corporationist Liberals, in Halifax with headquarters in Montreal. Private ownership grabbed all the water powers and coal resources in sight.

I believe our national railway system might be so operated as to help very considerably to solve the problems of the Maritimes. Is it to be operated for the benefit of the people that own the railway, or for the benefit of the American coal barons who have their headquarters in Philadelphia? A committee of this House dealt with the coal question and found that $7 a ton was a fair rate for Alberta and Nova Scotia coal. What happened? Nothing was done. Sir Henry Thornton after accepting it in two years openly repudiated the finding of the committee. He might as well have quoted a rate $15 or $25 a ton as $9, because anything over $7 is prohibitive and, as I contend, is a surrender to the American coal barons of the coal market of the central provinces and is a blow to the coal industry of Alberta and the Maritime provinces.

I believe in a national policy for the solution of all our problems. We mobilized our resources in war time with great advantage; it is equally necessary and advantageous to mobilize them in times of peace. We should mobilize our railways in peace time to develop our great natural resources. If that was done you would have the national railway system co-operating in the solution of these maritime problems. I entered the lists on behalf of the Maritime provinces with a fuel policy at my first session of parliament. I have never yet seen any reason to regret that action. I have advocated a national policy for the marketing of our coal, our grain, our fruit, and all our products. I support that policy to-day after a very close study of conditions in the Maritime provinces, which I had the good fortune to visit for a couple of brief periods during the war. I then reached the conclusion that there were never three provinces where Providence has done so much and man so little. In my opinion, protection for the Maritime provinces is not a luxury, it is a necessity.

10 p.m.

Our railways are Americanized to-day. Canadian grain is carried at preferential rates to the head of the lakes, where it is diverted to the port of Buffalo, although we have spent millions of dollars on our canal system in an endeavour to secure an all-Canadian route. Buffalo to-day has the cream of the milling business, not only of the United States but of Canada as well. We are losing that whole industry. The grain industry is not a north-and-south industry, as some hon. gentlemen to my left contend, but an east-and-west industry, and an overseas industry, with the product selling in the markets of continental Europe. I went into this question at length last session and discussed the elevator combine, the transportation combine, and the Great Lakes combine. There is now a merger of all Canadian and American boats on the Great Lakes, and the result is that our grain trade is being diverted to Buffalo, as a return that was brought down to the House on the 3rd of March last shows. If you take 150 as the unit, 100 per cent of our grain goes through United States ports, and only 50 through Canadian channels. I think that is a fair summary of the return that was brought down. The grain industry is one which could do a great deal for the Maritime provinces. In Ontario we used to have a chain of elevators in days gone by, but to-day there is hardly a terminal elevator in the whole of central Ontario. Why? Buffalo a few years ago had only a few elevators, but the whole elevator policy and grain policy of this country has resulted in the erection of twenty-eight big elevators in Buffalo to handle Canadian grain, as is set out in the report of the grain commission and has resulted in the great bulk of our grain going through American ports. The more you look into this thing the more clearly you see how the Maritime provinces have got the worst of it all along the line, through our grain not being routed through Canadian channels. Sir Henry Thornton has made somewhat of a superficial study of the question, and his conclusions are contrary to those of the grain commission which studied this particular problem. If there is any industry in this country which should be under a national policy, it is the grain-growing industry. The United States is a grain-growing country; it grows far more than it can consume itself; it consumes only little more than half of its crop and has an exportable surplus of about a third of its crop. We consume a little more than that, and it is the price obtained for the exportable surplus which by the economic law of supply and demand determines the price for the part used at home. What has been the result in Canada? Canada's grain crop should go through Canadian ports under adequate protection and by Canadian railways. Buffalo has twenty-eight elevators to-day as a result of the folly of such an anti-Canadian grain policy. The industrial department of the city of Buffalo, in its advertising, speaks of the great boon the present grain policy of Canada regarding grain has been to that port. It has built up the port of Buffalo, and built up traffic on the Erie barge canal. Instead of our grain going to Port Colborne and then to Montreal, it goes to Buffalo and New York and Baltimore, where in violation of the law and by a bootlegging policy it is mixed with American cheap grain and milled, whence it goes out in the form of flour, under certificate, to Europe as No. 1 grade. The United States has captured not only the oversea grain trade of Canada, but the oversea market for the milling trade as well, and the solution of this grain and milling problem and the development of the industry on an embargo principle in this country would pay off the deficit we have on the National railways of fifty to sixty million dollars a year. The Buffalo papers for the past few months have carried columns of printed matter wondering if at this session anything was going to be done to divert Canadian grain through Canadian channels by placing an embargo on hard wheat as recommended by the grain commission. According to a report of the American Shipping Board published in the Toronto Globe this morning, about 25 per cent less grain is now going through United States channels than last year. That has been diverted to Canadian channels as a result of the educational campaign that has been conducted in this House in the matter of a grain embargo during the last four sessions. Secondly, it has been due to the invasion of new blood, the sixteen new members in this House from the Maritime provinces.

The coal problem is also connected with this question. Coal should be carried on the same preferential rates as grain and flour, for after all is said and done, coal is equivalent to food, because nothing on the breakfast table can be prepared as food without the use of coal. You can do without a meal, once in a while but you cannot do without fuel in winter time; we have to burn coal for six or seven months in the year. I have proposed to this House that we should have a national policy on coal, and that the government merchant marine and the National railways should be mobilized and utilized to put this policy into effect. Nova Scotia had a Liberal government for thirty-four years, but did you ever hear of the legislature of Nova Scotia making any attempt to solve this coal problem until the new government came in? Did they send any delegation here last year when the Conservatives brought this matter up? Premier Armstrong prepared a learned memorandum in which he spoke of the evils of this particular problem. I would urge that a system of bonuses, subsidies and subventions, be applied to the coal industry. We have the president of the Canadian National Railways, and its dummy board meets now and then; it looks to me more like the board of a Liberal campaign fund than a board of railway directors. Some of them do not know any more about running a railway than they do about running a movie theater. The people of Canada are disappointed in the management of the National railways to-day. We have spent nearly two billion dollars on the National railway system to help solve our problem, and we are disappointed with the result.

Where does the railway commission stand to-day? I have not heard of them. They are supposed to investigate freight rates as applied to Maritime rights of their own volition. The Railway Act requires them to prevent unjust, unfair, and undue discrimination between localities, and lays down the principle that there shall be equality of treatment, that preference shall not be given to one product at the expense of another. A railway must be operated to provide, first, sinking fund and fixed charges on the investment; secondly, it must make operating expenses; thirdly, a reasonable dividend on the investment; fourthly, provide, if possible, a sum for betterments and extensions. The basis of all rate structures in this country is the Crowsnest pass agreement. Who is responsible for that bungle? The Liberal party. Who is responsible for building the Grand Trunk Pacific, and for the deficits on the National railways? Who is responsible for building the National Transcontinental, when one transcontinental with a double track would have been sufficient for our needs? The Liberal party. The Right Hon. Mr. Fielding, a man for whom we have the utmost respect, went up and down the Maritime provinces during that National Transcontinental campaign and promised that grain would be routed through Canadian channels and that the Maritime provinces would come into their own when that railway was built. What happened? I venture to say that we would not have had the railway bungle we have in this country to-day if Sir William Mulock and the late Mr. J. F. Lister had had their way. They attacked the Laurier-Sifton proposals for the construction of the Crowsnest pass railway. Sir John Willison for weeks and months carried the slogan across the front page of the Globe, "Concessions for Concessions," representing the maximum rates proposed in the Crowsnest pass contract as then, in 1897, and forever applicable to shipments from every point on the Canadian Pacific system in Canada. The Crowsnest pass deal was put through by the Liberal party and from that day forward freight rates were fixed by statute, preferences given, and a political rate structure established. The enactment of that legislation was the greatest mistake this country ever made. It is responsible to-day for a great many of the transportation ills from which this country is suffering. It is the basis of the political railway rate structure of Canada from coast to coast. We have always had a political railway rate structure in this country. We have not yet, and never have had, an economic rate structure. The railway commission is not competent to create an economic rate structure because this parliament has seen fit, since the inception of the Crowsnest pass agreement, to fix rates on some products and not on others, and establish certain tolls by legislation at the expense of others, for instance on grain and flour from the west to the head of the lakes. Who pays for this? The central provinces of Canada. The railway commission is not in a position to-day to solve this problem as long as the Crowsnest pass legislation, or any part of it, remains in force with all the evils flowing therefrom. I believe this unfair legislation is one of the reasons why the Maritime provinces are suffering from the discrimination pointed out by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley). I have copies of the railway tariffs and codes which have been passed for the last ten years and I can corroborate every word the hon. gentleman has said not only as regards the rates on steel and coal but also as regards those on fruit, lumber and agricultural, and other commodities carried between the head of the lakes and the city of Sydney, between the head of the lakes and Halifax, between Hamilton and Montreal, and between Hamilton and the seaboard. Between these points the greatest discrimination exists.

Instead of having a proper regulation of rates and a fair rate established as between one city and another, certain basic products have been selected for a preference which has been given certain parts of Canada at the expense of the rest of the Dominion. Not only has the hon. member for Pictou spoken in an absolutely correct manner, but the statements made by the representatives for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) and Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) are entirely accurate. Reasonable and equitable rates are necessary in the interest of the great fishing industry of the Maritime provinces, as well as other industries, but instead the worst discrimination exists.

A proper solution of this rate problem would bring the producer and the consumer together in a mutually satisfactory manner, and meet the existing difficulties in a variety of ways. The province of Ontario has by cheap light and power solved its problems by protection in a very satisfactory manner. For thirty-four years the needs of the situation in the matter of cheap light and power were overlooked by the various provincial Liberal governments there, but the Liberal party could see nothing and had no vision in Ontario. It remained for the government of the late Sir James P. Whitney and the late Sir Adam Beck to take action and they handled the situation in a manner which has made Ontario the admiration of the world. The following are some of the results which have been achieved by the hydro in Ontario:

1. Every dollar of the $160,000,000 Hydro investment is earning interest and sinking fund.
2. Hydro investment saved Ontario from a coal famine that would have bankrupted the province in war time.
3. Hydro investment saved 2,200,000 shareholders over $75,000,000 in reduced coal, light and power bills.
4. Hydro investment saved Ontario over $100,000,000, on coal prices which would have gone to $30 per ton in war time but for the Hydro investment that gave Ontario the equivalent of 3,000,000 tons of United States coal per annum.

If Ontario can solve its problems through the Hydro-Electric Commission why cannot the Maritime provinces do the same? The hydro-electric policy involves the protectionist principle. It is protection in the truest sense; it means utilizing the public resources of a province for the benefit of that province. The hydro has fought in Ontario the battle of the masses against the classes. If the principle involved in the policy of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario in the conservation of its light and power resources had been applied to the Maritime provinces, those provinces would have developed their coal mines, power, and timber instead of giving those resources away to political favourites. I say to hon. gentlemen from the Maritime provinces: Do not blame everything on the central provinces of the Dominion, do not blame everything on the confederation pact. The people of Nova Scotia kept in power for thirty-four years a Liberal administration that gave away its resources to be developed for private greed and private gain. The Maritime provinces would have had a place in the sun long ago if the people had looked after their resources and conserved them. If the principle of protection were applied to the development of the power, coal, fisheries and lumber resources of the Maritime provinces it would solve the existing problems almost automatically. After all Providence only helps those who help themselves. The people of those provinces have only themselves to blame for not working out the solution of their problems on the protective principle and in the manner I have indicated.

I wish now to say a word or two about the way in which the Canadian National Railways have been Americanized. The passenger and to some extent the freight rates from St. Louis and Chicago, and points beyond that as far as Minneapolis, to Montreal, are only about one-third of the rates from Toronto, Hamilton and London to the same port. In other words, under the auspices of this parliament, and of the board of management of the system, the Canadian National Railways are being operated for the benefit of foreigners at Rotterdam and other cities in Europe and America and for the benefit of cities and towns in the United States. Sir Henry Thornton would rather quote a price like $9, $10 or $15 a ton for the carriage of Canadian coal, in order to permit the Philadelphia coal barons to get the cream of the business, than quote a rate of $7 in the case of Alberta coal and $4 in the case of coal from the Maritime provinces and solve some of confederation's problems. If the latter policy were pursued, Alberta and the Maritime provinces would get the cream of the Canadian coal business rather than the American coal barons.

In addition to that, the United States branch lines of the Canadian National railways are being operated in such a way as to divert trade to Portland and other American ports. The Canadian shippers are not to blame. They must obey the railway laws of this country. That those laws are what they are to-day is the fault of the present and past Canadian parliaments, and the parliament that preceded the present one, in erecting in Canada a political rate structure instead of an economic rate structure. We believed in mobilizing the resources of our railways and transportation systems in time of war. Why do we not do the same in peace time? Surely we should do that in order to protect our industries,, our people and our markets from foreign competitors. Why was an elevator built at Halifax if there was no grain to put in it? Why have we spent about 2 billion dollars in building railways for the benefit of the United States, the highest protected country in the world? The condition in the Maritime provinces is very largely due to the fact that they have not had a safeguarding of industries act, and consequently their industries have not been properly protected. If they had had a Stanley Baldwin in the Maritime provinces during the thirty-four years of Liberal administration, he would have accomplished something for the provinces and would have done a great deal to protect their resources and their products. The Maritimes want an economic revival and a revivalist to lead it. What the Maritime provinces require is an act for the safeguarding of industries and protection. But what has happened? Instead of this government attempting to solve the problem in a rational way they have made a football of it. I do not know what this Maritime commission has been appointed for. What is the commission to do? To find out what the Maritime rights are? The members of the government can easily ascertain what those rights are if they read the speeches of hon. members from those provinces on this side of the House.

The former Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Armstrong, seemed to find out very suddenly what Maritime rights were. He came up to Ottawa previous to the election and found out what the Maritime rights were, and he presented his bill of rights. He refers to the question of coal, steel, fisheries, lumbering and all the other matters relating to the provinces. If I understood the reports in the papers, he was told that the government of Canada did not understand what Maritime rights were. I think however, they have had a better idea of those rights since the 29th of October.

I believe the provinces of central Canada desire to trade with the Maritimes, and they think it would be much better for confederation if they would. The quicker the railway commission, of their own volition, settle these problems for the Maritime provinces, the better for Canada. That would be far better than waiting for this government to take action. The career of some of the Liberal prime ministers and statesmen who came from the Maritime provinces to this House after having enjoyed cabinet rank in the provincial legislatures, is not reassuring. They have made a great success, perhaps, in finding material for speeches and in delivering speeches, but they have been about the biggest public failures in Canada when it came to doing anything in the way of practical policies for the Maritime provinces. I have seen them administering the affairs of the Maritime provinces, and they have treated the resources of the Maritime provinces as they would a Christmas tree; and made handouts off the Christmas tree—to all the big interests. Of course, they took the coal resources off the Christmas tree and grabbed many other things, such as power, timber resources and water-powers. They played Santa Claus for 34 years to the resources of the Maritime provinces, the timber wealth and the fisheries, and in fact I might say the products of the sea, the soil, the forests and the mines were given away in hand-outs. They handed these resources to whom? To a commission on public utilities? No, they handed them over to the big interests and party favourites. They transferred many of these interests to Montreal, and the big interests took charge of them there. These Liberal provincial premiers Ottawa bound—abound in public speech, but as a result of their work for forty years in the provinces, those provinces are not a dollar richer or have an additional inhabitant. They have been ruled for thirty-four years by a sort of non-apostolic succession of rulers and premiers and now that apostolic succession of Liberal rulers has been displaced. They believed they could make Nova Scotia rich by the free and unrestricted distribution of the coal, the power and other resources of the province to favourites and by giving preferences. They did and they were mistaken. They have handed out all these resources to the big interests in Montreal at the expense of the Maritimes. They have carried on this principle of handing out these resources, not only the coal but the other valuable assets; even the banking system—everything—has been sacrificed for the big interests. Talk about banking! Who is responsible for the bank legislation? Two or three of the finance ministers came from the Maritimes. What did they do? They allowed the solicitors of the Bankers association to draft the Bank Act and as drawn up it was never enforced or carried out. You cannot blame central Canada for that. Blame your own statesmen who could prepare and make speeches but could not create a policy for their province. We have had many mergers of banks, and we have seen the actions of those big interest companies which had control of the coal and other Maritime industries. They have had coal strikes, lock-outs and other calamities as a result. Talk about agriculture! What did the Liberal Premiers of Nova Scotia ever do down in those provinces for agriculture or lumbering?

[Mr. Church.]

What was done in the last parliament in the way of bill of rights? Nothing that I know of. We have had a debate annually in this chamber for three years in regard to the national coal supply. Did we ever get any help from the Premier of Nova Scotia or from any of his ministers in regard to the coal question? No resolution was ever sent here to help us along.

I am glad this question has come up. While we have many problems in Ontario, we are getting practically no help in the way of a tariff—all is nibbling and reducing and uncertainty of tariffs. We have had a very uncertain tariff for the last few years, and we have had a reduction of the tariff which has had the result of closing many industries. Ontario is badly in need of protection for its basic products and industries. We could very well present a bill of rights from Ontario. I do not know of any province which is suffering more on account of the transportation problem than Ontario. They talk about Ontario getting the Grand Trunk Pacific. They did not want it. The province of Ontario had to build the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway themselves, and this was a work for the general advantage of Canada. They will have to build their own railway to James Bay. Ontario did not want the duplication of three National Transcontinental or three or four lines also Toronto to Belleville where one line with a double track would have been sufficient.

Sir William Mulock and other prominent men opposed the system of Crowsnest railway construction which produced railway chaos in rates. I approach this question with a feeling of sympathy with the Maritime provinces. What would Canada have done in time of war, were it not for the Intercolonial? It was all right to have a national railway to the Maritime provinces in time of war, to transport manufactures and goods to the seaboard. But when the war was over they soon forgot all about it. During the war the people were glad to have the British fleet to protect our shores and our Maritime ports, but as soon as the war was over they were glad to forget all about it and do nothing to contribute for all this protection and Maritime freedom.

The solution of this problem is not by means of a commission. I have lost confidence in any commission appointed by the government. We have not got responsible government in this country to-day. Problem after problem is side-stepped and handed over to commissions. I never knew a commission in Canada yet to accomplish anything, except one, and that was the commission which solved the light and power problem of Ontario and created a surplus for every municipality. I refer to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. The railway commission got lost during the last two or three years. They were appointed to fix rates, and they have had the cases of the Bell Telephone and the express companies and other public service corporations before them, but what did they do? These companies come down and ask the railway commission to increase rates and presented figures to the commission. The commission practically took their figures as gospel and increased rates were allowed and granted. They took their figures of expenditures, and so on. They might just as well have allowed the companies to make their own tolls and fares and their own rates. Instead of the railway commission having long ago solved the problem of equality of rates and preventing unjust, unfair and undue discrimination between localities and provinces, they have done nothing of their own volition to carry out the functions for which they were appointed by this honourable House.

In conclusion, I congratulate the mover of the resolution, I congratulate the Maritime provinces on having been led into a revival and on having sixteen revivalists here in parliament to waken up the people of this country and parliament to do something practical for the people of the Maritime provinces by adopting a policy of protection to remedy Maritime ills. A policy of protection for all the provinces from coast to coast is the only thing that can solve our economic ills and bring about a better understanding among the different provinces that go to make up this British confederacy of Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with my friend and colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) in expressing appreciation of the attitude in which this resolution has been approached for the most part by all hon. members who have thus far spoken upon it. The debate throughout the day has been conducted largely without partisan spirit. Hon. members have recognized that the subject is one of the most important with which our country is concerned and with which parliament can be called upon to deal, and doubtless this fact has influenced the addresses which have been made in the course of the day. One is bound to feel that hon. members of the House have at heart first and foremost the interest of our great Dominion and not less a desire to show to our friends in the Maritime provinces that, in so far as we come from other provinces in the Dominion, our attitude towards the Maritime provinces is a wholly sympathetic one.

This question of Maritime rights or of the just claims the Maritime provinces may have is not a question to be viewed from the standpoint of Conservative or Liberal, of government or of opposition. It is rather a matter between the Maritime provinces and the other provinces of the Dominion. I think the essential feature of it is that in so far as it is a question at all it is a question of the other provinces of the Dominion joining in a wholehearted way in an endeavour to have the Maritime provinces feel that, as they are a part of confederation, every effort should be made to see that their rights in confederation are implemented to the letter and in full.

If it will help at all to take this resolution out of the realm of possible partisan discussion, I should like to go one better than my hon. friend the member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) who has seconded the resolution. He said that he hoped this motion would be pressed to a vote and that the House would approve the resolution as it is drafted. I should rather hope that it will not be necessary to have a vote and that the House will express its approval unanimously of the resolution which has been moved and which he has seconded. The resolution is one which in my opinion the House should unanimously accept.

Mr. MacLAREN: My suggestion was a vote and naturally a unanimous vote, I hope.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope it will not even be necessary to take a vote and that the House will so express itself that there will be no opposition to the resolution. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, good faith should be kept with the Maritime provinces and other interested parts of the Dominion in regard to the recorded assurances and undertakings of governments and parliament and the agreements set out in the statutes of the Dominion respecting the routing of Canadian trade over Canadian territory and through Canadian ports, and, that freight rates over the Intercolonial railway be adjusted in accordance with the understanding of confederation.

I venture to say that every hon. member wishes to have good faith kept with the Maritime provinces in regard to any recorded assurances and undertakings of governments and parliaments and any agreements that are set out in the statutes of the Dominion. I cannot conceive of any hon. member expressing himself in terms other than those that are there expressed. Similarly I cannot conceive of any hon. gentleman expressing himself with respect to freight rates over the Intercolonial, other than that they "be adjusted in accordance with the understanding of confederation"; I would not restrict that clause to the matter of freight rates. I should be inclined to say that any understanding that was genuinely such at the time of confederation should be carried out, and I think it would be the wish of all hon. members from provinces other than the Maritime provinces that such should be the case.

If we accept the resolution in that spirit, the matter that then presents itself is that we should agree upon just what are the specific undertakings of governments and parliaments that are not being carried out and also upon what are the understandings of confederation with respect to freight rates or other matters which are not being carried out. If that be the case, how can we best arrive at a decision upon those points? The government has carefully considered that phase of the matter, and if we had believed that a decision could be more readily arrived at by referring these matters to a committee of this House than by referring them to a royal commission, we would have adopted the former course. But considering very carefully and thoughtfully in what atmosphere a calm and judicial decision could best be given on a matter which must be decided in that way, the government felt that its duty towards the Maritime provinces would be best performed if matters of the kind were referred to a royal commission for a report to parliament, so that action might be taken upon specific recommendations that might be made. That was the reason why the government adopted the policy of referring these questions to a royal commission.

Having decided to refer the matter to a royal commission, the government felt that the next object to be attained was to see that the personnel and the scope of the commission were of such a character as to inspire confidence in the expressed desire of the government to do what was right to all concerned. With respect to the personnel of the commission I think I am right when I say that hon. members in referring this afternoon and evening to the commission have, on the whole, expressed approval of the government's selection. True, there has been a modified expression of view with respect to one or two of the members of the commission. I certainly think that with regard to the chairman, every hon. member who has spoken, if he has alluded to the commission at all, has expressed himself in a way which would leave the impression that it would have been difficult for the government to have made a better choice. In making any choice, no matter what the choice was, there was bound to be some limitation in some direction, but we felt that above all else we should aim at getting as chairman and members of the commission gentlemen who would be considered by our Martime provinces friends and by members from the other provinces likely to be as impartial and fair as men could be expected to be. In this connection it might be noted that Nova Scotia, one of the provinces concerned, has been dealing with some of these problems which are all-important in the Martime provinces as a whole. The Premier of Nova Scotia, one who in politics is of the same persuasion as hon. gentlemen opposite, in seeking to choose a chairman who would inspire confidence in his province as between the different parties concerned in a matter which was in dispute, and which affected in an immediate way the interests of the entire province, took what seems to me the very admirable step of asking the British government to designate a gentleman who would be most likely to serve with satisfaction as a commissioner in dealing with questions of industrial controversy. The British government named Sir Andrew Duncan—a gentleman of wide experience in industrial matters and one standing high in his profession as a lawyer—as a gentleman whom they believed might be expected to carry out the particular commission with which he might be entrusted with satisfaction to the province concerned. There is no longer a question whether Sir Andrew Duncan did his work in a satisfactory manner. The government of Nova Scotia has since placed itself on record in regard to the manner in which Sir Andrew Duncan performed his task. I have in my hand a copy of the Speech from the Throne which was delievered at the opening of the legislature of Nova Scotia on February 9 of this year, and among other paragraphs it contains the following:

> A royal commission of inquiry was thereupon constituted, His Majesty's government being asked to nominate a chairman. A complete investigation of all conditions affecting the coal mining industry was made and the recommendations contained in the commission's report have been accepted by the corporation and by the representatives of the men. This is a matter of great satisfaction to government and people presaging as it does an era of peace and prosperity for this basic industry and those dependent upon it. The terms of reference and findings of the commission will be placed before you.

Those are terms of commendation which cannot be misunderstood. The government which appointed the commission states that its report presages an era of peace and prosperity in the particular industry with which it was called upon to deal. The facts speak for themselves, that in a matter of great controversy the findings of the commission were accepted by the two parties to the controversy.

Those in brief are the reasons which led the government to seek to obtain the services of Sir Andrew Duncan for this commission, to inquire into not only one grievance of a particular province, but rather into the larger series of questions embraced under the general heading which is used so frequently, namely Maritime rights. I think, Mr. Speaker, the House will agree that in asking Sir Andrew Duncan to undertake this work as chairman of the commission, the government has shown its sincere desire to deal with this question in a non-partizan way, and in a manner which will inspire confidence on the part of all concerned.

In the consideration of the other commissioners I confess there was some discussion as to whether or not, in the interests of the Maritime provinces, it would be advisable to have Maritime province representation on the commission. There is much to be said both for and against the wisdom of having, on a commission to deal with matters of the kind, gentlemen chosen from the provinces concerned. After weighing the matter carefully the government concluded that it would be advisable to have at least one commissioner selected from the Maritime provinces, but it was also thought advisable in making the selection to choose someone who had been removed from the arena of party controversy for many years, and who might be expected to bring to bear on the matters before the commission a judicial temperament and attitude. For that reason His Honour Judge Wallace was selected as one of the Commissioners. As respects the third commissioner the government felt that in securing the services of Professor Macmillan of McGill university, it was again choosing a gentleman who was not likely to be swayed in his examination of the matters into which he might inquire by party prejudice or passion, but rather one whose training, being academic, in character, was calculated to give him an unbiased and unprejudiced attitude. Those who know Professor Macmillan will agree that he is a gentleman who has given a great deal of thought and consideration to this very problem of the rights of the Maritime provinces under confederation. I at least have been led to believe that he has made a very thorough study of that particular aspect of this great problem. It is true that he is a college professor, and has many of the characteristics of the scholar and man of research, but he is also very much a man of action and a man of affairs. During the war he was major in command of the Sixth Siege Artillery of St. John, and he has identified himself with public matters in a large way. Professor Macmillan may be expected, I think, to be most helpful on the commission.

These are the three gentlemen to whom the government has referred for inquiry and report the important questions embraced under the heading of Maritime rights. Undoubtedly any commission which might be appointed will have its limitations, but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that having regard to the difficulties the government has experienced in making any choice which we felt would commend itself as nearly as possible to all concerned, we have secured a commission which I believe will command general confidence, and which will do its work thoroughly and well.

Having selected the personnel of the commission, the other matter of main consideration was the scope of its work. I shall not take up the time of the House by reading the order in council, which sets out the matters which are referred to the commission. I would like the order, however, to be a matter of record, and with the permission of the House I shall place it as it has been drafted on Hansard, without taking time at the moment to read it. The order in council is as follows:

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 6th April, 1926, from the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, submitting that representations have from time to time been made on behalf of the people of the Maritime provinces by resolution passed by the legislature of Nova Scotia, by boards of trade and other public bodies and by their representatives in parliament and the various legislatures, that the interests of the Maritime provinces have suffered as a result of certain legislative and administrative measures adopted from time to time by successive parliaments and governments of Canada. Such representations relate more particularly to the alleged failure to use Canadian ports for Canadian trade to the extent to which they might be utilized, and to the handicaps said to result from the operation of the schedules of rates chargeable for the carriage of goods on the railways uniting the Maritime provinces with the other provinces of Canada and to the manner of administering that part of the Canadian National Railways system which was formerly known as the Intercolonial Railway by methods and conditions alleged to be inconsistent with the pledges given at the time of confederation in regard thereto and with the practice followed from the time of the construction of the railway until December, 1918. These representations have also been directed to the effects of the customs, immigration and other economic policies adopted by successive governments, of certain financial measures, and of the disposition or allotment to provinces of public lands of Canada, and it is alleged that at the time of the consummation of the confederation certain pledges were given that such measures would be undertaken and such policies pursued as would insure for the future a satisfactory economic position for these provinces and that these pledges have been disregarded as a result of which the Maritime provinces have not shared in equal measure the prosperity enjoyed by the Dominion as a whole.

The Prime Minister is also advised that on the twelfth day of March, 1926, the Premier of the province of Nova Scotia presented to the Legislative Assembly a resolution to the effect that his Government is engaged in preparing a memorandum setting forth in detail the claims of that province with the object in view of seeking such adequate redress as will insure a return of contentment and prosperity to the people of that province.

The Prime Minister observes that it is most undesirable that any section of the peaple of the Maritime provinces should entertain the opinion that their interests are being knowingly prejudiced, and that the public interest requires that every occasion for the existence of a feeling of grievance should, if possible, be removed.

The Prime Minister submits that, in order to determine how this can best be done, it is necessary that there should be an inquiry into the representations set out above, and into the claims set forth in any memorandum that may be presented in pursuance of the said resolution by the government of Nova Scotia or in any memorandum on behalf of the governments of New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island and into representations that may be presented to the federal government or to the commission to be hereafter named relative to the conditions and claims of the people of the Maritime provinces, and that an examination from a national standpoint of all the factors which peculiarly affect the economic position of the inhabitants of the provinces in question should be made and that upon the results of such inquiry and examination there should be based specific recommendations which in the opinion of the commissioners would result in affording relief from the conditions complained of.

The Prime Minister recommends that, for the purpose of making such inquiry and examination and formulating such recommendations a royal commission be constituted under part 1 of the Inquiries Act, such commission to have the special authority specified under section 2 of the said act, and to be composed of the following persons, namely:

Sir Andrew (Rae) Duncan, Kt.

His Honour W. B. Wallace, Judge of the County Court, District No. 1, Province of Nova Scotia.

Professor Cyrus Macmillan, M.A., Ph.D., McGill University.

of whom the first-named shall be chairman.

The Prime Minister further recommends that the commission be instructed to make its report as speedily as possible.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendations and submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

Hon. gentlemen reading that order in council will see that the government has had in view the embracing within its scope whatever subjects are likely to be considered by the Maritime provinces themselves as those to which they attach the greatest importance. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) drew my attention some days ago, as he may remember, to a resolution which was being prepared by the legislature of Nova Scotia, and asked whether the government had taken cognizance of the fact that the government of Nova Scotia was itself preparing a statement of those matters which it felt to be all-important to the Maritime provinces. I told the hon. member then that I did not like to divulge the terms of the order in council in full, but that I could assure him that that resolution, and whatever its contents might be, would be one of the matters submitted for consideration to the commission. He will now find in this order in council—which, by the way, had been drafted before his question was asked—that that resolution is one of those which will be referred to the commission. It has been read in full this evening by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. MacNutt) and I submit again, Mr. Speaker, that in thus including the resolution in the terms of reference, the government has given ample evidence of its hope that the provinces will bring forward in a concrete way the particular matters in which they feel they have a grievance, and also of its desire to see that those questions are given the consideration and careful thought to which they are entitled.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) spoke of the necessity of having the policy of the government stated before the commission was appointed; he said that it was desirable to have the commission know the point of view from which the government or parliament would wish to have these matters discussed. May I in passing thank him very cordially for the generous manner in which he referred to my interest in this matter and to his belief in the desire of the government to see that the question was dealt with in the fair and honourable way that so great a national question should be dealt with by the government and by parliament.

I agree with my hon. friend as to the importance of the royal commissioners being made aware of the principles which we expect shall govern. I am not so sure about the use of the word "policy," because I think there is apt to be a very considerable difference of view between some hon. gentlemen opposite and some on this side as to what is the best policy on some matters—for instance, trade and tariff—in the Maritime provinces as elsewhere in the Dominion. What I think my hon. friend had in mind was a statement of policy, using that term in its broadest sense, perhaps, more accurately the word which he himself first used, namely the "principles" which should govern the commission in dealing with the matters referred to it. I will not take up the time of the House in discussing the principles generally, but with respect to the two matters referred to in the resolution, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the government has already made very clear what principles it wishes to govern. The first is with respect to the routing of Canadian trade over Canadian territory and through Canadian ports. My hon. friend from St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) asked if the government would notify the National railway management as to its policy in that regard. Well, I cannot think of a more emphatic manner of enunciating policy than that it should be embodied in the Speech from the Throne. In no uncertain terms the government's policy in this particular was read by His Excellency at the opening of this very session. I will read the clause:

In pursuance of the fixed policy of the government to encourage the movement of grain and other Canadian products through Canadian ports, the Board of Railway Commissioners has been instructed to include in the general rate investigation now in progress, a special inquiry into the causes of diversion of Canadian grain and other products through other than Canadian ports, and to take such action under the Railway Act as it may deem efficient to ensure as far as possible the utilization of Canadian ports for Canadian traffic.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that I referred to the Canadian National Railway board, not to the railway commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But this is an instruction from the government to the commission which has the control of railway rates and is the proper body to deal with the rate question. If the Canadian National railway is not carrying out the policy of the government in this matter, it becomes the duty of the railway commission, when so instructed by an order of the government, to see that that policy is carried out. A word from the commission should be much more effective than any communication from the government itself to the management of the National railways. Nothing could be more emphatic than the words "the fixed policy of the government." It is not some chance assertion of policy. Our desire is that the railway commission, the railways, in fact, everyone shall realize what the policy of the government is—namely, that we wish to encourage trade over Canadian railways east and west, and that in particular we wish to encourage Canadian trade via Canadian ports. That is the fixed policy of the government and our hope in connection with the enquiry before the railway commission and before the royal commission is that that policy will become more firmly emphasized, and as a consequence more effectively carried out as opportunity offers.

Now, I am not aware that the House has had before it up to the present a copy of the order in council which refers this matter specifically to the railway commission. I will therefore read it to the House. It was approved on January 7 of this year and is in these words:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 6th January, 1926, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that the Committee of the Privy Council has had under consideration the advisability of encouraging to the fullest extent the movement of Canadian grain and other products through Canadian ports.

The minister states that by order in council (P.C. 886), dated 5th June, 1925, the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada was directed to make a thorough investigation, already under way, of the rates structures of railways and railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the Dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of its agricultural and other basic industries, and in particular to:

(a) the claim asserted on behalf of the Maritime provinces that they are entitled to the restoration of the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919;

(b) the encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports;

(c) the increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama Canal.

The Committee of the Privy Council therefore recommends that the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada be directed, as a part of the general rate investigation above referred to, especially to enquire into the causes of Canadian grain and other products being routed or diverted to other than Canadian ports, and to take such effective action under the Railway Act, 1919, as the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may deem necessary to ensure, as far as possible, the routing of Canadian grain and other products through Canadian ports.

There is a statement of policy, Mr. Speaker, which is unequivocal and leaves no room for doubt. It refers to a general rate investigation, which is a larger matter that the board entered upon some time ago. As an evidence that this rate investigation is likely to be helpful to the Maritimes and is the proper way of proceeding, may I again refer to the speech from the throne which was delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the Nova Scotia legislature on February 9 of this year. Paragraph 12 reads as follows:

During the past summer an agreement was entered into with the governments of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to engage jointly the services of an expert to prepare a statement of facts in connection with railway freight rates affecting the Maritime province, to be submitted to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. I am informed that certain changes in rates as a result of these efforts have already effected a considerable saving to shippers in these provinces.

There is a statement made by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia only a few months ago with reference to a result already achieved through representations made by a solicitor retained by 11 p.m. the Maritime provinces to appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada and argue for their rights with respect to freight rates.

So, Mr. Speaker, I submit in relation to the resolution which has been moved and seconded, and which contains the reference to freight rates over the Intercolonial and their adjustment in accordance with whatever understandings there may have been at the time of and as a part of confederation, that in expecting this matter to be dealt with by the railway commission, and in particular by instructing that commission to pay special attention to this very question of routing Canadian grain and other products over Canadian railways and through Canadian ports, the government has taken the course which, if any course at all is calculated to bring about the desired result, is the one that may be expected so to do.

I might take up considerable of the time of the House by making further references to the desire and action of the government to meet the Maritime provinces with respect to matters which are of great concern to them. I would submit that this reference to the commission of certain matters is only one part of the work of the government in that regard. Last session I recall making a strong appeal to members of the Progressive party in this House to support the government in an effort to raise the tariff on bituminous slack coal, mainly because of a desire to help in the Maritime situation. I think it is permissible to refer to a debate in a previous session, though not to one in the same session, and I would like just to remind hon. members of the House of what I said at that time. This government was not standing for any general increase of the tariff, but we were thinking of the Maritime interests with respect to a particular industry which we believed needed to be assisted in a particular way, even if the measure proposed did not accord with our policy as generally applied. I hope we shall never become such slaves to any doctrine that when we find it necessary to invoke the exception which proves the rule we shall be unwilling to make the exception. This was a case where it seemed to us there was ground for an exception, and speaking in the budget debate, on April 30th, I used the following words with reference to increasing the duty on bituminous slack coal:

> We have felt further that there is one part of our Dominion which to-day has been having a hard struggle; no one can deny that. The Maritime provinces have had and are having a hard time. We were not without hope that our action in this particular would put new faith and comfort into the hearts and minds of the people of the Maritime provinces and for no class more than those who are engaged in the hard work of mining coal in connection with the primary industries of that part of our country. We felt this was helping on as well a great national policy of self-sufficiency in the matter of our coal supplies in this country. Those were great national reasons transcending, I believe, all other reasons. I ask my friends of the Progressive party: Are you not going to be magnanimous enough to sink any little feeling you may entertain with respect to some theoretical maximum on tariffs and stretch to our friends in the Maritime provinces the same helping hand they stretched out to you in good faith and good fellowship last session? You have an opportunity to do so on this budget. You have an opportunity by your action on this budget to show that in your outlook, you are something more than sectional; that you have a broad vision; that you are thinking first of Canada as a whole. You have your chance on this budget and it is for you to say. I again appeal to my hon. friends. It has been from this larger point of view, from the point of view of national interest as a whole, national economy, national well-being and national goodwill, that the government has taken the stand that it has on the tariff question at this particular session.

That was the attitude in which the government approached the Maritime provinces' problem at the last session of parliament, and I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the government's attitude to-day towards the Maritime provinces is what it was then—an attitude of seeking to understand the problem, and of seeking to meet it, of give and take as between the different provinces of this Dominion. The most unfortunate thing that could happen in this parliament is that we should begin to discuss public questions in terms of east or in terms of west. I need not remind the House of those well known lines:

> But there is neither east nor west, border nor breed nor birth
> When two strong men stand face to face, tho' they come from the ends of the earth!

We are sent here by our different constituencies to speak to each other as strong men, men who can speak their minds fearlessly and courageously, with one aim and one end in common, and I venture to say that if, in discussions of these questions, this House will keep first and foremost in view, the end and the aim, the idea and the ideal, which we have in common of a united Canada, we shall not have much difficulty in reaching a solution of the Maritime or any other problem. That spirit I think has been evident this afternoon.

As I was saying, the government has in this matter of the commission sought to take one step which it believed was fundamental and essential to a proper understanding of and consequent dealing with the situation in the Maritimes. Other policies we have had and have which we believe will do a lot for the Maritime provinces. I am not so sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with all of them. One policy in which the Liberal party has strongly believed, and in which we still believe, is a policy of reciprocal trade in natural products. I believe that the defeat of that policy in 1911 has done more than almost any other single thing to affect adversely the situation for the Maritime provinces, for if there is one part of this Dominion that would have profited by having a wider market for the sale of the natural products, they have in such abundance, the products of the mine, of the farm, of the forest, and of the sea, it is the Maritime provinces. Our policies in that regard have had in view the well-being and the welfare of the Maritime provinces in common with the well-being and the welfare of the whole Dominion, but I would submit again that, taking the Dominion as a whole, there is no part unless it be western Canada, that would have stood to gain as much as would the Maritime provinces had that particular agreement gone into force.

But it has not been only in that particular that the government sought to further the interests of the Maritime provinces. Reference has been made several times to my having asked the question in the Maritime provinces during the last campaign, what are Maritime rights? I did ask that question, but I asked it in order to answer it, and I did answer it. My hon. friends have not done me the justice to give the answer I made at that time. Having asked the question, I proceeded to answer it by pointing out what I thought were Maritime rights, and among the things I pointed out as Maritime rights was their right to the largest possible market that could be found for their commodities; the right to have their instruments of production in the basic industries made as cheap as possible; the right to expand their trade in different directions; the right to have as much Canadian import and export trade brought through the Maritime provinces as it was possible to bring; the right to more effective steamship services as between the different parts of the Maritimes and as between the Maritimes and the British West Indies. These are only some of the answers I gave to that question. I asked the question, what are Maritime rights? But I asked it with a view to making an answer, and hon. gentlemen will find that to be the case if they care and will take the trouble to look at the speeches I made in the Maritime provinces.

May I say with regard to this question of meeting the Maritime provinces' problem, that other of our policies have had in view Maritime interests, as well as those pertaining to trade—the policy, for instance, that we had with respect to the reduction of duties on the implements of production. There was a policy intended for all of Canada, but it was a policy with very particular benefits and with particular relation to the Maritime provinces. Only last session we further reduced certain duties on some of the equipment used by fishermen, on gasoline engines installed in fishing craft, as I recall it. We had in a previous session made other reductions in the duties on the implements of production, in mining, fishing, lumbering, and agriculture, all of which were greatly to the benefit of the Maritime provinces, not exclusively, but in common with the rest of the Dominion.

In regard to the encouragement of trade through Maritime ports, in 1923, I think it was, in order to further Canadian trade by Canadian ports, we gave an additional ten per cent discount on the tariff inposed on commodities coming under the British preference into Canada where they came through Canadian ports; in other words, we increased the preference where goods coming from Great Britain or other parts of the empire enjoying the preference came through Canadian ports.

Hon. members will recall that at the inception of this movement on behalf of Maritime rights, a delegation of very considerable proportions came to Ottawa from the Maritime provinces to urge upon the government the desirability and the necessity of taking some action which would cause all trade under the British preference to come via Canadian ports, in order that the Maritimes might get the benefit of that trade. These gentlemen were no sooner assembled here than they discovered, some of them much to their chagrin, that what they had come all the way to ask for had already under the policy of this government been carried out, and that as the result of the ten per cent discount on the existing preferential rate which the government had granted, something like 98 or 99 and a fraction per cent of the total trade enjoying the British preference was coming to Canada via Canadian ports in so far as it came through ports on the Atlantic. Now, if it will cause our friends in the Maritime provinces to feel any greater trust in the government's desire to further Maritime interests by having it understood that in order to enjoy the British preference at all the trade must come through Canadian ports, I for one would be very pleased to see that policy carried out. It might help to give more general satisfaction were the British preference made applicable only to commodities coming into Canada via Canadian ports. That, as I have said, is practically accomplished to-day by the additional discount, but if the extension of the idea by express terms will help in any way, I believe we should undertake to see that that further step is taken.

Now, to come to another matter of policy. One hon. gentleman speaking this afternoon said, "Drop the question of commissions and get down to practical business."

Mr. HANSON: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says "Hear, hear." Well, we got down to practical business when we negotiated the trade treaty with the West Indies. True enough that treaty may mean something by way of subsidies to provide the necessary transportation facilities that will be required, we may have to ask our friends opposite to join with us in agreeing to pay out of the public treasury a little more for subsidies in order to secure the improved steamship service which is proposed in order to get for the people of the Maritime provinces the increase in their trade we desire to see. At any rate the government has felt that one of the needs of the Maritimes was to secure for the Maritimes the nearest available market beyond our borders. Now there is a natural market for them in the West India islands, a market which if it was ever intended to serve any purpose seems designed to suit the needs of the Maritime provinces. While the actual location of the British West Indies is closer to parts of the United States than it is to this Dominion, we have a relationship to those islands much closer in the true sense of the word than that which geography affords. We have the relationship of common kinship under a common sovereign and under a common flag. We are of the opinion that the most should be made of that relationship, and that we should seek, so far as is possible, to develop inter-imperial trade wherever the opportunity presents itself. Here it presents itself in a very special and helpful way, in a way particularly helpful to our friends in the Maritime provinces. The government went to a good deal of trouble in the matter of negotiating that agreement. We did not go at it in any hurried slapdash fashion. We had a representative of this parliament visit the British West Indies. Mr. Hance Logan, the then member for Cumberland, was the gentleman chosen. He had given the subject much careful study and had brought it to the attention of parliament. He visited the West Indies and extended to those islands a formal invitation to send representatives to Ottawa to meet with the representatives of the Canadian government and see if we could not work out a trade arrangement which would give to the products of the Maritimes a wider market, and to the consumers of the Maritimes as well as the consumers of other parts of Canada at a lower cost certain commodities which are produced in tropical regions and which are not produced here, though in considerable use. After a period of negotiation an agreement was come to which is before the House at the present time. Now, I believe hon. gentlemen opposite, in fact hon. gentlemen generally, are going to meet the government in the matter of permitting that agreement to go into force. Whatever criticism there may be of details, I believe the House will rise to the point of saying, "After all, here is an agreement which means something in inter-imperial relations. We are going to see it through, and we are going to give it a trial." I submit that regardless of what it may mean in the matter of a little additional cost for the establishment of proper transportation facilities it is the duty of all who have the interests of the Maritime provinces at heart to join with the government and to strengthen our hands in making that arrangement effective.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have not taken up too much time. My desire has been simply to point out that in this matter we have endeavoured sincerely to meet a serious condition and one which it is the supreme duty of both government and parliament to meet.

A word has been used in the course of this debate, not in any direct way but indirectly, the word "secession." I do not think it is necessary to bring that word into our discussions in this House. In this case the word was quoted from some American publication. I hear a good deal of talk about going to the United States for this purpose and for that, but I do not think we need to go to the United States in order to bring into this House any talk about secession in the Dominion. We can afford to leave that word out of our vocabulary altogether. But do not let me be misunderstood. I do believe that in the Maritime provinces there is a feeling of unrest. I do believe that in the Maritime provinces there is a feeling that they have suffered in some particulars. I do not believe that feeling will be removed by ignoring the situation. Neither do I believe that the situation will be helped by seeking to secure in virtue of it party advantage or party gain in any particular. If we study the history of this continent we will find that the experience of the Maritime provinces, whether they were in or out of confederation, was bound to a certain extent to have been very much what it has been for the simple reason that as the great west developed, as expansion has gone westward, the older provinces of the Dominion were bound to suffer considerably with respect to their agricultural and some of their other industries. It was so in the New England states, it has been so in every country; where there has been expansion and development from old settled parts to new, the former have more or less suffered relatively for the time being. The more aggressive, the more energetic elements of the population, those who have most in the way of initiative, move to the new fields where they think the opportunity is greater. We have in Canada to-day a great west that has been built up by men possessed of the necessary initiative who were content to endure all the hardships incidental to pioneering because of the future advantage they foresaw. That development in Canada has been in part from the Maritimes and has had a certain adverse effect on the Maritime provinces. But that condition is beginning more and more to right itself. It only remains for us who really desire to be helpful and not sectional or critical to seek by united action to bring about the object aimed at in this resolution, and thereby to further the larger objects which we have at heart with respect to the good of the country.

In conclusion may I say that during the week just past much was said in commemoration of the ninth anniversary of the great victory at Vimy Ridge where the Canadian army corps fought as a unit, with one aim, with one idea. Speaking of that great achievement the distinguished commander of that great army corps has used the expression that at that time the nine provinces of Canada had gone up the hill side by side animated and united by a common idea and a common ideal. If that was the inspiration; if that was the means whereby victory was achieved in a great war, to the lasting glory of this country and the empire of which it is a part, surely we in this parliament representing the nine provinces of the Dominion will not in these days of peace find it difficult to go up the hill together in the solution of whatever problems may still remain in the perfecting of confederation and the great idea and ideal of national unity it was intended to serve.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it will not be necessary for me to comment, at least in any adverse way, on a considerable portion of the speech just delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I make this comment to concentrate attention on the line I propose to follow more than for any other purpose: that the speech was replete with very much interesting matter, some good declamation, full of very good ideals, but was singularly wanting in discussion of what really is before the House, namely, the need, the reason for and the office of this new royal commission.

As to the resolution which we are asked to support, moved by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), I am in accord with the views expressed by the Prime Minister. The resolution certainly could not be voted against, nor do I think the resolution is in danger of misinterpretation, certainly not intentional misinterpretation, at the hands of any hon. member on this side or any side of the House. So that so far as the vote thereon is concerned, further discussion is unnecessary. The only object which can be served is to disclose what has been the course of parliament, and especially this parliament, in relation to the whole question; what has been the conduct of the administration; what now is the administration offering, and should the House be satisfied with what the government proposes.

That the responsibility is a serious one we all admit. That the problem is a complex one we equally agree. What it is we are pretty well agreed on too. This country since 1921 has suffered from very general depression. We revolved into it along with all other nations on this continent. We have remained in it longer than any other nation. We suffer from it still. Certain portions of the country have undergone greater trials than others. Those which labour under what one might describe as geographical disabilities naturally suffer the most. One of those portions is the Maritime provinces of Canada. That they have undergone many hardships in the last five years there can be no question. They were generally prosperous for a number of years before, but they recently have lost in population; they have lost in business enterprises and they have lost in hope—more so, undoubtedly, than any other portion of our country. There may be some discussion in regard to what the reason has been, but there can be no dispute as to the fact itself. These things have given rise to questioning as to whether or not they have received what was their due at the hands of the country, and especially whether or not the "terms" used in its widest sense, under which they entered confederation have been faithfully and loyally adhered to. The Maritime provinces claim they have not been adhered to. The question then before us is, What are they? Have they been adhered to? And if not, what can be done to remedy the situation? Were we agreed that they had been adhered to, I do not think this problem then would be solved. A practical condition confronts us. Those provinces are undoubtedly today labouring under disabilities not common to, or at all events greater than, those endured by other parts. That is a condition of affairs which the whole country cannot permit to continue. We cannot afford to see disaffection grow in any portion of our country to any serious extent, or continue for any great length of time. It demands attention at the hands of statesmen. It must have this attention, and must have it irrespective of whether the terms of confederation have been adhered to.

Now the government proposes a royal commission, and sets out in an order in council what the royal commission is to do and the names of its members. I dismiss the latter point at once. I know none of the members of the commission; so far as I know I have never seen any of them; I have heard very little of any of them, except the chairman; consequently I would be ill-qualified to make any comment at all. It is only fair to say that I have heard the chairman well spoken of at all times, and I believe his work in a wholly different field, namely, an inquiry into a labour dispute in Cape Breton island, and the recommending of a remedy therefor, was admirably performed. That he is an excellent citizen there is no doubt. That he will do his utmost in this work there is no question. With those words, I dismiss that point.

Then I come to the purpose of the commission and the reason of its being, and ask myself: is its appointment really meeting the situation which confronts us? The Prime Minister was very brief on the point. I presume that is one of the artifices of a skilled debater to be very, very cursory on the portion which is hard to support. He said "Here is a resolution which calls upon us to live up to the terms of confederation, and the first thing to know in order to carry it out is, what terms of confederation are not being lived up to?" Now I put myself in the judgment of the House when I say that was the only reason given for the appointment of this royal commission—in order to ascertain what terms of confederation were not being adhered to on the part of Canada today with respect to the Maritimes. I submit, Mr. Speaker, we all know what the terms of confederation were. They are written and he who runs may read. The book is open, we can study them. We know as well what the concomitant speeches were.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my right hon. friend failed to recognize that I was confining my remarks to the words of the resolution, and in speaking of confederation I referred to the understandings arrived at, not the specific terms of confederation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will broaden my remarks accordingly; I was intending to anyway, and in fact I had already done so. We know what the concomitant speeches were. There is nothing unknown. Indeed there is nothing left for investigation. If any of us had forgotten, they have certainly been brought to our minds most pointedly and forcibly by hon. members from the Maritimes this session. There may be a question as to the implications. There is no question as to the meaning of the terms, but as to the implications there may be some. But surely we in this House can judge of the implications as well as any living beings. We Canadian citizens here, elected to legislate for Canada, can decide what the implications are and act accordingly, we do not need any commission, however learned, to instruct us. I think there are implications beyond the exact effect of the words. For example, when in order to induce Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to enter confederation, we agreed that the Intercolonial railway would be built, it is too narrow to reason from those words that our obligation was fulfilled when the road was built. That, I presume, would be a mathematical deduction from the words; but surely it cannot be taken to be a complete deduction, because we being in control, the majority being west of the Maritimes, could build the road and then establish freight rates so high that the road would be worthless. This would not be carrying out the terms of confederation; it would be only mocking them by a subterfuge. It seems to me to follow as a necessary implication that in addition to the construction of the road we must see that it is so operated as to fulfil the well-understood purposes of its construction.

We all know what the well-understood purposes were, and therefore we know the implications. What is there to inquire into in order to enable us to determine what the high line of policy should be? Do we say that we do not know whether they are being violated? We know what we are doing. We are doing it even ourselves; we are running the railway. We know all that. There is no fact in this sphere that is obscure; there is nothing here for a commission. We who made the contract are doing this. Do we need Sir Andrew Duncan to tell us whether we are keeping the spirit of it? We certainly do not. There is no purpose, therefore, to be found for a commission from any exploration in that field. What then is the commission for? Has anybody in this debate suggested up to this time what it is appointed for?

I come now to the terms of this order in council which is indeed a fearful and wonderfull production. I read the portions which intimate the several subjects into which the commission must inquire. The order recites that representations have been made and then it states:

Such representations relate more particularly to the alleged failure to use Canadian ports for Canadian trade to the extent to which they might be utilized.

That is one subject.

And to the handicaps said to result from the operation of the schedules of rates chargeable for the carriage of goods on the railways uniting the Maritime provinces with the other provinces of Canada.

Subject No. 1 is "use of ports". Subject No. 2 is "railway rates". What is the third?

And to the manner of administering that part of the Canadian National railways system which was formerly known as the Intercolonial railway—

I presume that is the work of the National railway board. I do not know whether any importance is attached to that or not. I cannot see what it is if there is any. The next is:

—by methods and conditions alleged to be inconsistent with the pledges given at the time of confederation in regard thereto and with the practice followed from the time of the construction of the railway until December, 1918.

That is all one subject—"administration of the railways." Next:

These representations have also been directed to the effects of the customs, immigration and other economic policies adopted by successive governments, of certain financial measures, and of the disposition or allotment to provinces of public lands of Canada.

I will ask the House to analyze those quotations carefully. The first is "use of ports;" the second, "rates"; the third, "administration by the government's directorate", and the fourth "the effects of the customs." The House will note how skilfully "customs" is used instead of "tariff." In a word, and to call a spade a spade, this means to inquire into tariff policy. What the "other financial measures" are I do not know, but the fourth subject is "tariff policy." I have already read the fifth:

The disposition or allotment to provinces of public lands of Canada.

There I have reviewed the five subjects of inquiry. Let me now proceed to ask the House whether there is anything that can be described as common sense in the appointment of a commission at this hour to inquire into those subjects with a view to determination of policy. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I say that if the government would take any one of them and say: Here is a case that demands a remedy and we move to remedy it along this line, there might be reason for an inquiry to find out just what the effect of the adoption of that line of policy is, how far you should go, where it should apply, in a word, to work out the application. I do not know that there would be such reason; it would not appear to me likely, but there might be. But before you do that, to ask a commission, for example, to say what are the rights of the Maritimes in respect of those western lands,—can you think of anything more absurd? Think of asking Sir Andrew Duncan, Judge Wallace and Professor Macmillan to tell the Commons of Canada what are the rights of the Maritimes in respect of the subject of the natural resources of Alberta! I put that seriously to hon. gentlemen opposite. Does their imagination enable them to think of anything more absurd? What is the limitation on this government that it cannot decide such a thing? Where is the restraint? What light is it that they are asking for? Where is it to come from? Is there anything concealed? Why, the documents have been before us for fifty years. The only conclusion I can come to—and I submit it to the House—is that it is just a method of enabling the government not to decide for a while yet. Is that not all?

Let us come to the other points. Sir Andrew Duncan, Judge Wallace and Professor Macmillan are to help this House decide what is the best tariff policy for the Maritimes! Mr. Speaker, if you were not in the Chair you could not sit with sober mien when I put that question. This government declared, just two years ago, that so far as coal was concerned they knew what the right policy was, that it was protection and more protection. How is it that they know what the right policy is as to coal, but they do not know what it is as regards steel? How is it that they know what the right policy is for the rest of the country, but for the life of them they cannot tell what it is for the Maritimes without the help of Sir Andrew Duncan?

The performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was a pretty skilful one and I like to see a skilful performance even in a bad cause. Looking to his Progressive friends he said, and of course with an eye to Maritime sympathy: "Do you not remember how I appealed pathetically to you two years ago to support those extra duties on coal?" Even in the face of our declared policy we knew there would have to be an exception as regards coal, the exception as he described it, which proved the rule. He said it was a special case, forgetting for the time being that "the tariff was a tax." Has that immortal truth been lost to memory? Why was he not reminded by his Saskatchewan supporters that the tariff was a tax and that you can never in the world help an industry by taxing it? Why did they not think of that? It is quite true that two years ago the Prime Minister, commanded to do so by the Liberal party of the Maritime provinces, came to this House and demanded a higher duty on coal, and he did so in the face of a policy pronounced at the time of lower tariff on the implements of production. I wonder if coal is not an instrument of production? I appeal to the Liberal members from Saskatchewan; I appeal to those on my left, who supported a higher duty on coal at the instance of the government of the day; is not coal, of all things, an instrument of production of nearly everything? Is there anything more distinctly and fundamentally an instrument of production than coal? Then how is that to be the exception which proves the rule? Yes, they knew that there had to be more protection on coal but what else do they want Sir Andrew Duncan to tell them. No, they do not; they do not want Sir Andrew Duncan to tell them anything. This is just another stall on the tariff.

But, Mr. Speaker, what about this new tariff commission? Where has it been relegated to? That commission, with the Right Hon. George P. Graham as its head; with Mr. Daoust scattered to the four winds because he believed in protection on coal and said so, and protection all around—where is that commission now? Is it only competent to decide tariff matters for the rest of the country, and incompetent to decide them for the Maritime provinces? What a position the government is in! They have referred to a new commission, not ten days after their tariff commission is appointed, the question of deciding what is the right tariff policy for the Maritime provinces.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Let us now go back to the first ones; what were they? To inquire into this long standing question of the use of Canadian ports a brand new commission has now been appointed which is to report to the government. The Prime Minister says, "On this we have a policy," and what is the policy? It is to use Canadian ports to the fullest possible extent. When was Canada without that policy? There never was a time when any government did not profess it, but everyone knows that the question must be reduced to the concrete, "What are you going to do to bring it about?" What is their policy on that? Their policy is nothing; objective alone is not policy: there must be a method —a plan. What is the government method—a royal commission? No, it is not one royal commission, it is two or three or four of them. Possibly I cannot account for four, but I am sure that I can recite three references of this same question to commissions. The Prime Minister read, when on his feet, a reference of the same subject to another commission, and the railway commission is engaged this very day in labouring over that very point. While the railway commission is in the throes of its toil another commission is appointed to inquire into the very same thing.

The same words apply to the subject of rates, and with that subject I have covered all. The second thing this commission is to inquire into is rates as between the Maritime provinces and the rest of the country. That was referred to the commission, but do you know, Mr. Speaker, that it was the third reference of this question? I will read the second now. I have in my hand an order in council dated June 5, 1925; it is a long order in council, but I will read the last paragraph:

> The committee therefore advise that the board—

That is, the railway commission.

> —be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structures of railways and railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure, which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the Dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of its agricultural and other basic industries and in particular to:
> (a) The claim asserted on behalf of the Maritime provinces that they are entitled to the restoration of the rate basis which they enjoyed prior to 1919;
>
> (b) The encouragement of the movement of traffic through Canadian ports;
> (c) The increased traffic westward and eastward through Pacific coast ports owing to the expansion of trade with the Orient and to the transportation of products through the Panama canal.

So this is the third reference to a commission, but that is not all. These things have been before the railway commission ever since the commission was created! Ever since that commission became a commission its plain duty under the Railway Act was tc erect a rate structure based on these very principles. So if reference to a commission would cure this situation the government has tried the application of that dose in repeated and unstinted measure. Month after month they come before parliament; now it is referred to this commission and again to that commission. But can you imagine the chaos we are in now, with the railway commission sitting on these very questions, hearing evidence and arguments; and in the midst of it all there is another commission appointed, headed by Sir Andrew Duncan, to make a thorough inquiry, over top of all the others, into the very same thing.

This is the government policy, and we are asked to believe that it is devised because of anxiety for unity in Canada. Commissions to make unity! After this commission comes back where will we be? I will make a prophecy; we will have another commission appointed to inquire into the same subject again. If this agitation keeps up, a few months more will see a reference of this same subject to some other commission; that is the "fixed" policy of the government.

It does seem clear that until there is an announcement of a step to be taken, something concrete and definite, there is no purpose which this commission can serve. However good the commission may be, however well intentioned its members, what purpose can the imagination of man divine which this commission may serve at this time? If there is something in the way of inquiry as to the assessment or effect of its policy or as to its application, that is one thing. But to appoint a commission to devise a policy, and especially to appoint such a commission after there had been repeated directions to another commission over and over again is to me the very acme of the absurd.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) spoke this afternoon. I do not yet very well know what his views are. He was very timid about pronouncing himself, but he did say that he had been opposed all along to the acquirement of the Canadian Northern railway and subsequently to the acquirement of the Grand Trunk railway; and in that way he sought to wash his hands of the present situation. "I am not responsible" he said, "I fought the acquirement of the Canadian Northern away back in 1914, I also fought the acquirement of the Grand Trunk in 1919. May I ask any member of this House: Does the present situation flow from the acquirement of the Canadian Northern railway, or the acquirement of the Grand Trunk railway; does any single atom of it flow from such a source? The minister of National Defence suggested one thing—he did not say it —he suggested—I do not think anyone else would seriously suggest it—that because in acquiring the Grand Trunk we got the line which runs to Portland, there flows from this fact the greater use of that port. Can anybody follow his reasoning? Because we own the stock of the Grand Trunk instead of the old Grand Trunk shareholders owning it, does that fact cause more railway freight to run to Portland? Well, if so, who is responsible? Is it not the directorate appointed by this government? Because we own that line to the terminus with the other lines, if there is any result in the world, it gives us more commanding control of the situation. Let me repeat. If the fact of our ownership of the Portland line affects the situation in any way whatever, it affects it to give the government of the day a greater control of the direction of traffic.

I know there was a motion moved, and I wondered that the minister of Defence read it —I noticed he did not read it very loudly —a motion moved by the Minister of Justice, then the member for Kamouraska, in amendment to the motion for the third reading of the Grand Trunk bill of 1919. I think I have it here.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg my right hon. friend's pardon, I never moved that motion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not matter who moved it, it is here anyway. I guess it was moved by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg my right hon. friend's pardon, I did not move it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I certainly compliment them that their second thought is better than their first, for they all supported it, every one of them. That they are ashamed of it now is a tribute to their intelligence today, if not to their judgment then. It was referred to by the Minister of National Defence: I had almost forgotten it. He referred to it by way of emphasizing the consistent stand taken by the Liberal party on this question. "Why" he said, "there was moved a motion that we do not read that Grand Trunk bill a third time." But why? "Because by acquiring railways in the States we would land ourselves in international complications—complications so serious that they would drift us into annexation." The House really will hardly believe that any hon. member could have moved such a resolution. Only in 1919—I remember the debate well—over and over again we were warned that if we got the stock of the Grand Trunk instead of the stockholders in England owning it, then, as the Grand Trunk included some lines in the States, that would land us into trouble with Washington. All sorts of international complications would ensue, and we would be in danger of annexation. Mr. Speaker, it was really for that the Liberal party voted! Well, we have had the road now for seven years, and who has ever heard of any international complications? I appeal to the memories of members of the Liberal party. The member for Bellechasse (Mr. Fournier) shakes his head in the negative. He is the first one to record himself honestly. There has never been the slightest sign or symptom of any such complications. But that was the objection taken to the acquirement. So far as affecting this problem is concerned, if it had any effect at all, it gave the government greater control over the situation.

Then the Minister of National Defence said, "I opposed the acquirement even of the Canadian Northern." What relation that point has to the question I at least am at a loss to divine. He said, "Why, I fought against it in 1914, even though at that time we were only guaranteeing the bonds of the railway." The Minister of National Defence did oppose the guarantee of the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway in 1914. He opposed it all the way through. We felt we had to guarantee them or have the system go into liquidation, which in the end would cost us far more. But did he oppose it because it was a step towards the acquirement of the road? Will the House believe me when I state that he opposed it because we were not inserting in the guarantee agreement a clause to provide for the acquirement of the road? I have before me a motion made by—I hope nobody will deny its authorship—made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It will be found in Hansard of June 2, 1914, at page 4634:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved, seconded by Mr. Pugsley, that the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved that under existing circumstances no assistance should be given to the Canadian Northern Railway Company unless at the same time it is provided that the government have power, within a reasonable time, to acquire ownership of the entire stock of the company at a price to be fixed by arbitration, but not to exceed $30,000,000.

If hon. members will turn to page 4633 of the same Hansard they will find among those voting "yea" on that amendment the name of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. CANNON: How did the member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) vote on that occasion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The member for West Calgary is not down as voting at all, but if he had voted in favour of acquiring the railway he would not be standing on his feet to-day and boasting that he had always opposed its acquirement. It was not therefore the acquirement of the road that the Minister of National Defence voted against. He voted against our assisting it without enabling the country to acquire it. He wanted us then and there to take steps to acquire it. And he was ready to pay $30,000,000 for the capital stock. So hon. members will seee just how much sincerity there has been in this campaign and talk about the Liberal party having been against the acquirement of the National railways. They were against it just because we found it necessary to acquire those railways, and up to the time when we found that it was essential, that we could not help 12 m. it, they were urging us on in that very direction, finding fault with us and voting for amendments because we would not proceed with the acquirement rapidly enough.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the history of the acquirement question. Again I say, it has nothing in the world to do with this situation. This is a question of rates. The subject of rates is just as much under our control to-day, even more under our control now that we are the owners of one great portion of Canadian roads, than if we were owners of none. It would be, it is true, under our control in any event, even were we not owners. But the question before us is this: How can we so exercise our control as to give the assistance necessary to meet this situation to the far off extremes of our country? I have taken the pains and taken the responsibility, and met with very considerable antagonism on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, in an effort to outline one method which could be adopted to meet the Maritime situation on the side of transportation. It was announced in a resolution moved on the 2nd of June last. By that resolution I still adhere, and by that resolution I believe every member of this House on this side adheres. Our criticism, therefore, is not wholly destructive. We are on record in constructive fashion. Where are the government? We are now almost a year past that date, and their policy is "royal commissions" still. Let the government suggest some other line upon which we can move. What did they say when this line was suggested? I appeal to the Maritime members on whose behalf they are so sympathetic now. They stood up in the province of Ontario and in the province of Quebec and said: Meighen wants to take out of the treasury of Canada a share of the freight rate to enable Maritime goods to get to these central provinces.

Mr. CANNON: The Tories said it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and we were denounced for making that proposal. It was declared to be unfair to the central provinces of Canada; it was declared to be unfair to those producing goods in the central provinces to have to sell against the Maritimes, who were to ship them at rates assisted by parliament. These were the men who now stand up and appeal to our Atlantic brothers to believe that they are at great pains and agonies because of the troubles of the Maritimes. If there is any better way than my suggestion we would all like to hear it. I know of no better way myself. If a better can be found, I will follow it. But I proposed that just described, and I venture to suggest that the government will come to it before long themselves.

I was not going to mention again the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), but now that he is in, I think I should. There was read this afternoon by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) an inquiry put to the Minister of National Defence before the 1921 election. The minister will remember that the 1921 election was run by the Liberal party on the cry: "Take the Intercolonial out of the National system; put it back where it was," and the Minister of National Defence, of course, was the most vociferous and authoritative voice behind the cry. This question was put to him during the 1921 compaign:

> Realizing the importance of the campaign which our newspaper has consistently supported for restoration of Maritime rights with Canadian National Railway by establishment of eastern unit, with headquarters at Moncton in charge of Maritime trained men, we would appreciate if you would favour us with a brief definite statement of your attitude on the question.

Here is the answer:

> For the past year and a half I have consistently urged that the only method to enable the industries of the Maritime provinces to be carried on with any degree of success would be by detaching the Intercolonial altogether from the Canadian National railway and Grand Trunk railway connections, and running and operating it as it was operated for forty years under the terms of confederation.

One thing I will say about that declaration: It is clear, it is definite, there is no misunderstanding it at all. He goes on:

> We would thus be freed from the taxation which is now imposed upon the patrons of the road for the purpose of paying the interest upon the enormous debts contracted by the Canadian National Railway in its construction in western Canada. The control of the Intercolonial must be taken from Toronto and vested in Moncton, where it always was, and the railway should be officered by men in sympathy with Maritime interests and Maritime rights.

Now when faced with this to-day and questioned by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), what was the statement made by the Minister of National Defence? "Why, certainly," he said, "I was against the Intercolonial being run in 1922 by"—I do not know just how he put it; I wish he would put it just the same way again, but this was the effect of it: "Because I opposed the taking over of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk, therefore I was consistent in 1921 when I made that statement to the Halifax Herald." What has the opposing of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk to do with that statement? That statement was made two years after they were both our property. Nor did the minister refer to his opposition because specifically he referred to a year and a half before the time he sent his message to the Herald. He says: "For 'a year and a half' I have been urging the taking of the Intercolonial out of the National system altogether, and putting it back where it was and where it had been for forty years." But did he do it when he got into power? Did he take a single step towards taking it out? Certainly he did not. I will not say he never intended to; I do not know, but he ought to admit to the House that he was wholly wrong in 1921, and that the votes he got on that declaration he had no right to whatever. All the votes obtained through the Maritime provinces, obtained by proclamations to take the Intercolonial out of the National system, all these votes were fraudulently obtained. The Minister of National Defence sat four years in this House before he went back to his people, and never in all that time had he taken a single step towards redeeming the pledge he openly and publicly gave in the fall of 1921.

The Intercolonial is part of the National system. There is an Atlantic division at Moncton. There could not have been one established until the Grand Trunk was fully amalgamated. That could not take place, did not take place even under this government until the end of 1922 or the beginning of 1923. We could not possibly do so for the reason that the arbitration proceedings had not been fully completed and executed. But I stated in that campaign that when such amalgamation was done there would be one established, that the directorate had so pronounced, that its headquarters would be in the Maritime provinces, and that its jurisdiction would extend westward as far as the end of the Intercolonial. Such was the purpose of the government of that day. And in opposition to that expressed declaration of policy, the Minister of National Defence and his followers in the Maritime provinces stumped those provinces and declared that if they were elected they would take the Intercolonial out of the National system and restore it to the place where it had been for forty years, and run it as a distinct and separate entity. There is the breach of faith on the part of the Liberal party of this country. It is because of such things that disaffection exists to-day.

I stood in this House some weeks ago and said, as I have always done, that I did not believe the taking of the Intercolonial out would itself be any remedy to the Maritime provinces. It is not whether the National Railway board runs it or not that counts; it is the rates that count; it is the burden on the people who ship goods; that is what tells in the success or failure of trade along its line. So I think I have brought home to the Minister of National Defence conduct which certainly did not help him in the late campaign, and which no doubt was partly explanatory of his flight from Pictou into the county of Antigonish-Guysborough.

Now let me say, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment this problem of Maritime rights mainly is a question, first and foremost, of transportation, and secondly, of tariff adjustments. I am advised—I may not be advised correctly—that a representative of the National Railway board, speaking before the railway commission recently, made the statement that the Intercolonial was not built to give the Maritimes access to the central provinces; but rather was built to give the production of the central provinces access to the Maritimes. I know the gentleman to whom those words are ascribed, and I find it hard to think he would make such a statement, but if he did, I feel he has wholly misapprehended the central purpose which dictated the construction of the road. The road undoubtedly was constructed by way of concession to the Maritimes, and to enable those provinces to reach the central markets of our country. That it was hoped it would serve the complementary purpose there is no doubt, but to intimate that the complementary purpose, access to the Maritimes from the central provinces, was the primary objective of its construction is wholly to misread history and to misconstrue facts. To serve the Maritimes was the great purpose of the Intercolonial, and in national policy to-day this must be taken into account. In deciding what we are going to do to meet the special transportation difficulties of these provinces we must keep ever before us the primary and essential end for which the Intercolonial was built. Along that line you can give relief. My method of acting along that line I have indicated to this House and the country; I call upon the government to indicate theirs. I say to them: do not hide behind more royal commissions. Do not trifle with public opinion any longer. Do not waste the country's money. Do not do what is far worse—waste the country's time and test the patience of our people by those devious, scientific procrastinations.

And then as to the tariff. The tariff has been manipulated in late years undoubtedly to the disadvantage of the Maritime provinces. I wonder by what colour of right the tariff on steel, for example, is taken, the protection cast away and the industry virtually paralyzed in order that some pet hobby about men specially engaged in making "implements of production" being entitled to a singular line of treatment may be carried into effect. All this has hurt the Maritimes. In reference to the tariff the line which must be taken is this: Remove the disabilities that have been placed upon those provinces of late years and turn our tariff policy in the direction of developing industries in the Maritime provinces by giving those industries protection. I am advised that in the late campaign as the discussion reached its climax and election day approached down in Cape Breton island—yes, and in territory near Cape Breton island as well,—every Liberal candidate was compelled to come out and declare that he supported the principle of protection for Maritime products. I ask that this fact sink into the minds of hon. members from Saskatchewan. "Oh," we are told by the Prime Minister, "if we only had that reciprocity treaty!" Did you ever hear anything discussed in this House and the government utterly at a loss for an excuse that they did not bring up the reciprocity pact? The members from the Maritime provinces as well as from the west will not forget that only a few weeks ago I challenged the government face to face on that issue. I challenged any one of them to stand up and say that if he could re-enact the provisions of that treaty to-day he would do so. Not one of them responded. It is a great treaty as long as it it out of existence; it is a great treaty as long as it is not readvanced; but I invite them now just to reintroduce that treaty and let us go to the country upon it. The Prime Minister says, "Oh, if we had reciprocity in natural products!" Did you observe this prayer was offered up just about two paragraphs after he had stated that we needed higher protection on coal? Did you observe anything in the reciprocity pact of 1911 for free trade in coal? Mention was made there about free fruit and about free vegetables, but not about free coal. I wonder is coal not a natural product? What is unnatural about it? What is to be thought, then, of the professed fidelity of hon. gentlemen opposite towards free trade or reciprocity in natural products? The only consistent fixed policy of the government is royal commissions. Against that policy I appeal and I ask the government first to lay out the path along which they intend to travel; I ask them to tell us something they intend to do, tell us the policy they intend to adopt. Having done that they will have discharged their duty, and the country at least will have respect for them as men of courage and men who understand their responsibilities.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before I put the motion I wish to remind the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) that he has the right to reply if he so desires.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Just make it only one partisan speech.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.18 a.m. (Tuesday).

Tuesday, April 13, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 19, to incorporate The Agents Insurance Company.—Mr. Malcolm.

Bill No. 20, respecting The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Clark.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi) moved:

That the first report of the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PETITION FROM THE BLIND

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the following petition from blind persons in the city of Winnipeg—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Is the hon. gentleman going to read the whole petition?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I read the petition?

Mr. SPEAKER: No. Under rule 75, certain proceedings are necessary before a petition is in order. First the petition must be presented to the Clerk of the House. The day following the Examiner of Petitions reports, and if the petition does not contain matter in breach of the privileges of the House, it may be read by the Clerk of the House. The hon. member may however present his petition to-day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to present a petition signed by some 144 blind persons, and also a petition signed by some 21,000 citizens of Manitoba.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES ON MONDAY AND WEDNESDAY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Monday, the 19th of April instant, and on and after Wednesday, the 21st April instant, and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays until the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence after questions and notices of motions for production of papers.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the government really and seriously want both days all at once. I am speaking on behalf of my hon. friends to my left who, I see, have a great many notices of motions on the order paper.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): I would suggest that the leader of the opposition just speak for his own party.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would have confined myself to doing so, but I see evidences of the arrangement in the silence of hon. gentlemen to my left. I do not like to assume that they put these motions on the order paper merely for display, but that seems to be the conclusion from the remarks of the leader of the Progressive party. However, we did not put our motions on the order paper for that purpose. I know, of course, that it will be necessary to take an increasing share of the days of private members, but unless the rules are amended, or at least the time deferred, it really becomes absurd to place important motions on the order paper at all. It is true that some motions have been called, but that does not affect the case, because if those motions had been moved the others could not have been. All the motions that could have been moved have been moved within the time allotted. Personally, I would not object to Wednesday being taken; I think it is usual to take Wednesday first and withhold Monday for a little time. We will get through as fast as possible; but there are four or five pretty important resolutions for the discussion of which an opportunity should be afforded. I would ask the government to amend the motion so as to limit it to Wednesday—I have no objection to that—leaving Monday still available for the business of private members of the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to endorse what has been said by the leader of the opposition. It seems to me there are several motions on the order paper that are of importance. There has not been a very long time since the government really established itself to discuss these matters, and speaking for my own little group in this corner, I would say there are one or two motions on the order paper which we would like to have discussed. My colleague (Mr. Heaps) had a motion for the production of papers which, contrary to the usual custom, was put down on the order paper to be debated. There has been no opportunity whatever of having that motion debated. I would hope that we would be given another day or two in order that this and other motions might be discussed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wonder if it would meet my hon. friend's wishes if we were to leave Monday, April 19, that is, instead of saying "on and after Monday, 19th of April" to say "after Monday, 19th and subsequent Wednesdays". That would give another Monday. If the suggestion is agreeable I should like to amend the resolution in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think that we should not fix the Mondays yet. Wednesday will be taken, and we have no objection to sitting at night on Wednesday. It is not that we want to delay the House at all, but reasonable opportunity should be afforded to discuss such resolutions as are of substantial importance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, I am anxious in this, as in all matters, to get unanimity as far as possible. I have no objection just for the present, without committing the government for any period of time, to eliminate that part of the resolution which relates to Mondays and have it relate only to Wednesdays. Then we will strike out the words "on and after Monday the 19th, instant", and the motion will read:

> On and after Wednesday the 21st, instant, and on all subsequent Wednesdays to the end of the session, government notices of motion and so forth shall have precedence.

That is meeting my right hon. friend in full, but I hope, later on, when we ask to take Mondays, my right hon. friend will have no objection.

Motion as amended agreed to.

RURAL CREDITS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I desire to ask the government when it is their intention to introduce the rural credits measure. I would point out to the Prime Minister that I have had a resolution relating to this matter on the order paper ever since the commencement of the session. I have refrained from discussing it, not because of any neglect on my part but in view of the notice given by the government that it was their intention to introduce such legislation. I thought it would perhaps be unfair to press my resolution prior to the government measure being brought down. I point out also that the session is advancing, and the rural credits measure is a very important one. It is apprehended that there may be two or more classes of views in connection with it, and I should not like to see such an important measure introduced in the closing hours of the session, when we would be compelled to vote yes or no without an opportunity of offering constructive criticism or amendments. I am desirous of assisting in such legislation. May we expect this measure to be introduced at an early date?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The only reason for the delay has been the desire of the government to bring down a measure that will as far as possible commend itself not only to this House but to the other chamber as well. The law officers of the crown are at the present time, I understand, drafting the resolution which precedes the introduction of the bill and we hope to have it on the order paper this week.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARY REVISION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. R. E. RYERSON (Brantford): I desire to ask the right hon. leader of the government if the report of the Civil Service Commission respecting salary revision of the civil service has been received and considered by the cabinet. If so, when will this report be brought down, and when will the decision of the government in relation to it be made known Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I will have to read over my hon. friend's question because I am not sure that I caught it all, but if he refers to a statement which appeared in the press to the effect that the Civil Service Commission had presented to the government their report with reference to revision of salaries, I may say that I am advised the report has not yet been received by the government.

Mr. RYERSON: Will the report be laid on the table after it is received?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government would naturally wish to have an opportunity of considering the report before laying it on the table, but after it has been considered if there be no objection, it will be placed on the table of the House.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNUAL REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Can the Minister of Railways and Canals advise us when we are likely to receive the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for the year 1925?

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I expect to be able to deal with the matter in the course of the next week or so.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): I am under the impression that the Minister misunderstood my question with reference to the annual report of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not hear it all.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was not referring to the annual statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals. My question was whether he could advise us as to when we might expect the annual report of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: I understood that part of the question, and I cannot at the moment answer it.

ACCIDENTS TO PASSENGER TRAINS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. F. P. QUINN (Halifax): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) if he has taken notice that during the past three months four rather serious wrecks have happened on the eastern division of the Canadian National Railways, or what is better known as the Intercolonial railway, in connection with two of the most important trains on the railway, namely the Maritime Express and the Ocean Limited, and if he has drawn the attention of the railway board to the matter, so that they might examine the road bed of that division of the railway, with a view to making it safe for the people of the Maritime provinces to travel to the western provinces of Canada and vice versa. This is rather important, and I think it should be looked into at once.

Mr. HANSON: And give instructions to have a little more ballast placed on the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. MANION: And a little more ballast on the government.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The question is somewhat involved. I understand my hon. friend to ask whether the Minister of Railways is aware of those wrecks, and the answer is yes. I understand the remainder of the question is as to whether or not an investigation has been made. I may say that investigation is being made. I have not yet received, as minister, the report of the result of it. With regard to the specific suggestion as to how accidents should be prevented, I prefer to leave that to the technical railway men, rather than to suggest more ballast or any other specific remedy. Of course it is the desire of the railway board and of the government that accidents should as far as possible be prevented, but I hardly think that those of us who are laymen sitting here in parliament are able to devise the precise means by which that may be accomplished. I feel reasonably sure the railway officers are very greatly concerned about the succession of accidents and are doing all they can to prevent them.

An hon. MEMBER: Might I suggest a royal commission?

CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE—1923

RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING SALARY SCHEDULES AND OTHER MATTERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Supplementing a question already addressed to the Prime Minister regarding the civil service salary revision, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will recall that I asked the question and presented a petition or document to the government about ten days ago. On Thursday last the minister was good enough to intimate that he expected to be in a position to make some statement soon. Is he now in a position to answer my question?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I think my hon. friend will find an answer in Hansard on the day following the day the question was put, or perhaps a couple of days after, in which, speaking on behalf of the Civil Service Commission, I stated their report would be ready at an early date and sent to the Governor in Council to be dealt with.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that the only answer for the time being that the government have to the question which I put and the petition which I presented?

Mr. LAPOINTE: What was included in the petition really comes under the general scheme. I think the answer of the Civil Service Commission covered the points in the petition presented by my hon. friend.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

The House resumed from Friday, April 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. 17 to amend the Soldier Settlement Act, 1919—Hon. Mr. Stewart—Mr. Duff in the chair.

On section 1—Revaluation of land sold to settlers.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): For the convenience of hon. members the proposed amendments, as nearly as I could gauge the desire of the committee, have been drafted and hon. members will find them on their desks. The number of the bill is the same but hon. members will use the reprint in which the amendments appear.

In our discussion the other afternoon a very wide field was covered and with the Soldier Settlement Board I have gone carefully over the suggestions that were made in the committee, but I find there are innumerable difficulties in meeting all the requests. One of the most persistent and apparently one that was voiced by almost every member was that the soldier who might be desirous of re-establishing himself on his own land after revaluation should be given consideration. Owing to the provisions of the old act we find it exceedingly difficult to do that without a great deal of amendment, and after discussing the matter thoroughly with the board we came to the conclusion that in cases where there was a desire on the part of the soldier to re-establish himself on his own land, we would have to hold up the final closing out of his agreement, because after all it is nothing more nor less than an agreement with the board to purchase, and give him an opportunity, if he was able to re-establish himself, to come back on his land.

I am well aware that a much wider field was discussed, and I pointed out to the committee that owing to the fact that a very large number of these farms had already been disposed of and more of them were allocated, the large bulk of the land, if you can call it that, that would be left, would be land of very inferior quality and land upon which, of course, there would be a pretty heavy depreciation before it was sold. After discussing the matter thoroughly, I came to the conclusion that the best thing we could do in that case was to follow the suggestion of the board and notify immediately the party who was being closed out that he would be given a reasonable period of time in which to re-establish himself on his own land. Beyond that I do not think we can go. I discussed the matter with some of the members of the House pointing out our difficulties and they appeared to agree with me in that particular, that beyond that we could not very well go.

If the land is completely closed out, the provisions of the old act rather debar the soldier from securing the land, but we will use our best endeavours to place any man back on his land if the land is available and to give him an opportunity of taking advantage of the revaluation for which the soldiers themselves have been contending. That was the conclusion we came to in order to meet that objection.

The other contention was as to the method of revaluation and hon. members will see in the reprint of the bill our definition, as regards those who would be dealt with, of how depreciation will be computed. That is in paragraph (c) of section 68. It reads:

> The difference or depreciation in value to be determined shall be the diminution, not due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, in the present market value of the land as compared with the price at which the soldier agreed to purchase the said land from the board; provided that in any case where the actual sale price is greater than the maximum amount which under section 16 of this act may be advanced by the board in the purchase of land on behalf of any settler, such maximum amount shall be deemed the sale price for the purposes of this section.

That is the provision we made as to the method to be followed by the committee in arriving at a decision as to how much the depreciation, if any, should be on any given soldier settler's land.

In paragraph (e) we have provided for the composition of the district arbitration committee. I found a very wide variation of opinion amongst members of the committee with respect to how this should be done. Some were strongly in favour of having the whole matter left to the decision of the county court or district court judge. Others favoured an arrangement to be arrived at if possible between representatives of the Soldier Settlement Board and the soldiers themselves with provision for appeal in case of dispute. Having in mind the desirability of shortening this and trying to meet the views of the committee as far as possible, I decided to embody in the provisions of this paragraph the views of the board, that is to make the judge chairman of the board with a representative from the Soldier Settlement Board to be named by that board and a representative of the soldiers themselves. This would not involve any serious departure from the request that they be dealt with by the board where at all possible, but it would provide that the judge would sit on every case. The judge would be chairman of the committee and there would be one hearing which would be final. That would obviate the necessity of an appeal and it would bring the hearing close to the soldier's home, because as hon. members will notice, later on there is a provision that the hearing be held within the district of the county court or district court judge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does that apply to every case?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, there is no appeal.

Mr. HANNESSON: The majority of the board would govern.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, it would have to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is to say the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, the soldier and the judge?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. They would have equal authority with the judge, although undoubtedly in every case the judge as chairman of the board would exercise considerable influence. It would be useless to deny that if the two representatives were in agreement the judge would simply ratify that agreement; but where they disagree he will be in exactly the same position as in the case of an appeal. The rest of the amendment is intended to conform with the previous changes as provided for in the act. These are the principal changes that are effected by the amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I shall speak only for a few minutes and on one point, namely, the settlement of the question of revaluation. I do not think that the minister apprehends the entire effect of the plan he has suggested. If I understand it, that plan is that in the case of every revaluation there shall be a board composed of a judge of the county court, a representative named by the Soldier Settlement Board and, I presume, the veteran himself or someone acting in his behalf. Who selects the third man? Is it the soldier himself?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, if there is no veterans' organization in the locality.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And if there is one the organization selects the third man. I do not know what the minister expects to gain by that. I am so satisfied that it is not in his own interest to go on with that proposal that I am rather surprised at his having brought it in. In the first place it leaves the situation precisely as it was before in regard to all those cases in which the board and the settler are agreed on the valuation. In that event the situation is just the same as if there never was a board at all, for all they have to do is to go before the judge, who sits there powerless. Why go through the mummery of having a court if that is to be the proceeding? Of course I want the court, but such a court as this is a mere mockery. In every case where the representative of the board and the representative of the soldier himself are at one the judge has no more to say about it than if he were a wooden god. Consequently the minister's representatives will simply be given carte blanche to the treasury of the country in respect of all that wide sweep of cases, in fact over the whole thing, inasmuch as they can agree on any price they like. So that the minister would be in a position, if the representatives were such as have represented governments before, to do what he liked with the treasury to the extent of the whole value of the lands to be revalued. It is not right. The principle itself is wrong; it is false.

Suppose the minister leaves the other two representatives out: see where he is. He is in a splendid position in every single case, because the county court judge then fixes the valuation. The representative of the board and the soldier's representative are both there, and they can argue the facts and produce witnesses; but the judge fixes the valuation and that settles it, so that the minister has no responsibility. Furthermore, the machinery is infinitely more simple, and is less expensive.

I cannot see the slightest thing in the world to be gained by putting these two men on with the judge. I do not think I idolize judges more than I should, but I submit that it is unfair to a judge to put a veteran's representative or a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board on a parity with himself. I do not think it is treating the bench as it ought to be treated by this House. I do not suggest that judges would refuse to act; I do not suppose they would. Indeed, I think that every one would help in any way he could. But we have to preserve the dignity of the bench, not for the sake of the bench, but for the sake of the people and in the interests of the administration of justice. This is not doing so. I therefore criticize the proposal on two grounds principally; first, that it leaves the minister carte blanche, just as was the case before; and secondly, that it is much more expensive than the other method I suggest and that no purpose can be served by it. And I add a third ground, namely, that it is not fair to the judiciary to put untrained men on a parity with a judge in the hearing of evidence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why more expensive?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because you will have to pay the representatives. If you create a board with a veterans' representative on it, you will have to pay him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We may have to pay one representative, yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, and to that extent it will be more expensive.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We should have to pay him in any case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I do not think so. If a soldier comes before the board for revaluation I do not see why it should be essential to pay a lawyer to act for him, although I have no objection to that course if the minister so desires.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It would not be a lawyer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Or anyone else who might represent the soldier. It may be wise to pay someone to represent him, but that is so much more added to the cost. The minister's plan is vulnerable at every point and I cannot see what he hopes to gain by it. In the honest administration of his office, in the faithful performance of this task, which I assume to be his only motive, he has nothing in the world to gain by having these two representatives acting in conjunction with the judge. On the other hand he has everything to gain by placing the whole responsibility on the judge, who in the fulfilment of his oath of office can assess the value of the land. To make the judge share that responsibility with others, indeed, to shift the whole responsibility from him whenever the soldier and the representative of the board agree, is to make a mockery of the bench and of the law as well.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There seems to be considerable aversion to the cold application of the law in cases of this kind. I confess there is a good deal in the argument of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen), but I have received representations from various sources confirming the advisability, with a view to settling the matter as expeditiously as possible, of having an arrangement made between the representatives of the board and the soldier himself, and in the event of such an agreement not being reached, of referring the matter to a judge. When the two were in agreement I cannot conceive that the judge would have very much to say on the question. He might review the case; he might criticize the agreement; and he might consider in certain cases even where there was an agreement that he had a right to interfere. And undoubtedly the weight of his counsel would have considerable effect upon both parties. It is not uncommon for a judge to act in such a capacity; judges have been doing so on commissions of various kinds where they did not exercise absolute control. I thought therefore that in this way the matter might be expedited. I do not like the idea of appeals, and it was in order to meet the point of view suggested by the various proposals submitted to me by the committee that I embodied this plan in the bill. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that it will cost more to have the county judge deal with it absolutely as a judge after listening to the representations made by each side. I am well aware, of course, of the method pursued in many cases of disputed assessment,—

Mr. MEIGHEN: And in expropriation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; but I do not fear what he anticipates, that the judge's hands will be tied. Indeed I think he will exercise all his discretionary powers in each case. Where there is disagreement the judge will agree with either one or other of the contestants, and that is what he usually does in every case that comes before him. This commends itself to me as the best method of speedily settling the whole matter. The Soldier Settlement Act is not changed in any particular with respect to the board. The board has pretty wide powers under the act. With those powers I have never attempted to interfere, and I do not propose to do so now. On the other hand, I cannot say that I have ever had very strong representations from soldier settlers as to what should be the composition of the board to deal with their cases. A great many of them say they are perfectly willing to leave the adjustment to a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board. Of course, one might infer that the board would be too generous, but I rather gathered the trend of the discussion in the House was that generally the board was not generous enough in dealing with the soldiers. My thought is that this will commend itself to the committee as a fair and equitable method of reaching an adjustment.

Mr. BOYS:: I should like to add a word or two to what my leader has said in connection with the method proposed by the minister. I cannot see any object whatever in having a committee of three. As has been said, if the two representatives agree the judge becomes a figure-head, the case is pre-judged and the decision is really reached before the case gets to him at all. On the other hand, if there is any disagreement—and I would be inclined to think if each did his duty there would be disagreement—it practically means the decision of the judge alone. Surely the minister must realize it will cost a great deal more, if there are going to be thousands of applications, for instead of the county judge presiding you will have a committee of three members. Surely to goodness the judge alone can hear the evidence quickly and reach a decision which will be fair to the soldiers. I am given to understand that members of the House who have been interesting themselves in this matter have received letters from many soldier settlers indicating a desire on their part that the county judge alone should dispose of these cases. I commend the minister for one change he has made; that is, each case must go before the county judge. I think it would have been unfortunate if the clause had stood as it was originally introduced. Now there cannot be much delay, nor can there be much expense. I am not going to advocate that the department should pay a lawyer to appear for the soldier settler. I think myself he can get people in the vicinity to give evidence as to the value of the land. I certainly agree with the minister that there should be no appeal. None has been suggested, as I understand, and none is provided. So we are in accord with that. Certainly it will save the country thousands of dollars to leave the matter to the county judge, and for the reasons I have stated it seems to me you will get a satisfactory decision in that way. If the case goes to the committee without being prejudged, it will be his decision which in the end will govern. You will have one arbitrator seeking a high valuation on behalf of the soldier, and presumably you will have someone on behalf of the department seeking a low valuation. The judge may make one come down a little and the other go up a little, but after all it is what he thinks is proper and he gives the decision.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): On the question of delay, my hon. friend is not arguing that because the committee are sitting rather than the judge it would occasion delay?

Mr. BOYS: I am not going to say it would increase the delay a great deal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Nor the cost.

Mr. BOYS: It goes without saying that if you have three people to agree on the date for the hearing it is going to take longer to get them in accord. The practice in Ontario which obtains in connection with overholding tenants would, to my mind, be the practice to adopt in cases of this kind. Application is received, and immediately the parties go before the judge and ask him for an appointment, which is soon arranged, and the judge at the time appointed hears the case and decides it. So while I am not arguing that the delay would be very much greater, it would certainly be greater to some extent. My main point is that you have a more satisfactory tribunal when you have the county judge, and the country might as well be saved the extra expense that a committee of three would entail.

A very excellent practice has been adopted by the various ministers in showing in italics all amendments to their bills. That practice has not been followed with this bill, perhaps through lack of time, but as a member of the House I do hope that excellent practice will be followed in future. It is so much easier to follow any proposed changes in a bill when they are printed in italics.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I am in a position to give the committee some direct information of the opinion of the soldier settlers in regard to this matter. The right hon. leader of the opposition, not so much to-day but the other day when we were on the bill, emphasized the point that in his opinion there was danger of the soldier settler's representative and the political appointee, the second man, getting together in more or less collusion in order to cut the price down to the applicant soldier to make themselves good fellows with the soldier and thereby secure political influence. That is not the view entertained, at least by one fairly large body of soldiers in the district I represent. They have been hard hit by the old act and are hoping for a considerable reduction in the valuation of their farms. They are fairly well organized. I had a wire from them a few days ago, I have not it with me, but the gist of it is this. The bill contemplated a board to be composed of one man, the appointee of the government, being a Soldier Settlement Board man, one by the soldiers and a third by the government also. They object to that on grounds the very opposite to those expressed by the right hon. leader of the opposition. They seemed to fear that the government having two members on the board might be unfair to them, not too lenient. From past experience there is always a certain amount of antagonism between the man collecting debts and enforcing regulations and the party with whom he is dealing. While their whole point of view was not set out at length in the wire, it was to the effect that they did not think it was fair to them to have two men on the board appointed by the government. They wanted to have the third man appointed by the first two. I wired back that two alternatives had been suggested: one, that the third man should be the county court judge; the other —the proposal of the right hon. leader of the opposition—that the county court judge should be the sole arbiter. I asked them which of the two in their judgment they would prefer. They wired back at once to say they would be satisfied if the third man were a county court judge. I merely give that opinion for what it is worth, but there is a considerable body of men; they know what they want; they know local conditions and that is their point of view.

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Chairman, I would strongly urge upon the minister that he leave this matter to a county court judge alone. If the soldier wants to have his land revalued he must find a representative to sit on this board. In the district which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) represents there is a body of soldiers probably one hundred in number. Is that not correct?

Mr. NEILL: No, that is not correct. Call it 250.

Mr. CLARK: There is a large number, at any rate. The fact is that in British Columbia farm lands generally have depreciated in value by almost 50 per cent since 1920, according to the statistics of the Department of Agriculture. That condition obtains all over British Columbia, and I imagine that in the district represented by my hon. friend the depreciation is greater than that; it is 50 per cent, at least. That will mean a great many arbitrations, and the soldiers will have to find representatives for each of these arbitrations. That means expense, because no man is going to sit as the third arbitrator for a period of months without some recompense. Who is to pay him—the soldier? He cannot pay because he has not the money; many of them have not enough money to buy clothing; they have been sticking it out for years waiting for a chance to get on their feet. They have had a heavy load to carry, a heavy indebtedness to meet yearly and they have not the money to pay an arbitrator. Then who is going to initiate these proceedings? The soldier must take the responsibility of initiating the proceedings, but who is to do it for him? Solicitors are not plentiful in the district which my hon. friend represents.

Mr. NEILL: There are enough solicitors for our needs.

Mr. CLARK: A few miles away, in all probability. There may be enough solicitors, but I know the solicitors on Vancouver island fairly well, and they are not very plentiful. They all have to earn a living. Who is going to pay the solicitors to initiate and continue the proceedings for the men who want to have their lands revalued? Who is to pay the solicitors, or the solicitor retained on behalf of a group of men? The proceedings will be costly enough without having a board of three men on every arbitration. Every arbitration conducted by such a board is going to take longer than would a county court judge sitting alone, because all the members of that board will have questions to ask; they are not men experienced in arbitrations, and the proceedings will be prolonged unnecessarily. On the other hand the county court judge knows how such proceedings should be carried on, and he is qualified to give decisions in judicial matters such as these. I suggest that this wording is very vague indeed, as to how this representative is to be chosen.

A representative of the veterans' organization in the district.

Supposing there is no soldiers' organization in a particular district? I know that on certain islands on the British Columbia coast there is perhaps only one soldier settler; who is going to act for him? Who is he to appoint to represent him on the board? Can he act himself, may I ask the minister?

4 p.m.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, he can.

Mr. CLARK: Then we have this delightful anomaly of a man acting for himself—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But what is the judge going to do to shorten these proceedings? My hon. friend is raising a barricade of difficulties now and I would like to ask him again wherein the judge will shorten the time expended?

Mr. CLARK: I am coming to that. Of course there are going to be difficulties; I am pointing out difficulties which I expect the minister to meet and which it is his duty to meet. These points have been brought out before, and I am surprised that the minister has not come back with a solution for them. Either we have this strange anomaly, if the soldier can act as his own representative on that board—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say that he could act as a member of the board; I said that he might appear and give evidence.

Mr. CLARK: I must have misunderstood the minister, but I certainly understood him to say distinctly that the soldier himself could act as a member of this board of arbitration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. CLARK: Then supposing there is no soldiers' organization in a particular district, I would like to ask who is going to represent the soldier?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will look at the provisions of the act he will see that the soldiers, either by themselves of by their organizations, may nominate someone for that purpose, but not the individual soldier whose case is being tried.

Mr. CLARK: The words I am looking at are:

—and one a representative of the veterans' organization in the district.

Supposing there is no such organization in that district?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will surely admit that where there are three or four settlers, they may organize themselves. That section which my hon. friend read is to give the men absolute scope in choosing the third member of the board.

Mr. CLARK: I am pointing out to the minister the case where there may be no settlement. I know of one instance where a soldier settler is on an island about 135 miles north of Vancouver; that man is the only settler on the island.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is he in a judicial district?

Mr. CLARK: Possibly so, but think of all the trouble that man will have in finding a soldiers' organization 100 miles away, and then saying to someone, "You come over here and act as my representative."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the soldier is furnished with a form upon which to make his application, with all the information necessary for the consideration of his claim embodied in that form, surely he can fill it in without the aid of a solicitor.

Mr. CLARK: He will certainly need a solicitor or someone to take his affidavit, which is provided for in the early part of the act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He can go before any justice of the peace, and if that man is 150 miles away his case will get the same consideration; it will be examined by the board and will be presented to the tribunal by the board. I have asked my hon. friend before wherein the difference would lie between going before this tribunal and appearing before a county court judge?

Mr. CLARK: I will answer that question now. In the first place the proceedings before a county court judge will be much more expeditious than those before three men inexperienced in judicial proceedings. Secondly, the proceedings before a judge will be very much more economical to the man than the proceedings before such a tribunal. Because, I maintain, somebody must pay this soldier's representative. You must either have a man chosen at random for each particular arbitration, a man who knows nothing about arbitration proceedings, to act on behalf of the individual soldier, or you must have one man—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my hon. friend is again building up a barricade.

You would not have more than one member of the arbitration board in any judicial district. My hon. friend is not suggesting that every individual case has a different arbitrator?

Mr. CLARK: That is my point. Let me put myself in the position of the soldier settler. I have been struggling there for three or four years. My neighbour may be quite satisfied with the particular representative for his man on the board. I might say "No; that man will not do for me, I will not have him at any cost. If I am to be entitled to somebody to look after my interests on that board then I insist upon having some voice in the choice of that man. He must be my nominee." I would not submit, and I am certain the soldiers in any district would not submit to what is proposed here.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask my hon. friend another question: In the adjustment of pensions under the soldiers' civil re-establishment is there not a paid individual who acts on behalf of the soldiers in every province? My hon. friend is aware of that?

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, did my hon. friend ever hear any individual soldier say that this man was not going to be permitted to act for him?

Mr. CLARK: That is quite a different matter. That man is not adjudicating on his case, he is an advocate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That does not prevent the soldier from having any representation made before the board on his behalf through anybody he likes.

Mr. CLARK: I am afraid the minister does not appreciate the case at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my hon. friend would not suggest that we should have anything so cumbersome as changing the arbitrator for every individual case. The one committee would deal with every case in the judicial district.

Mr. CLARK: Then if that is the minister's intention I say emphatically that the individual soldier has no representation on that board at all, none whatever, and it would be far better to trust himself in the hands of a judge, who is sworn to do his duty and who is trained in judicial matters, than to trust himself in the hands of somebody appointed in the manner proposed to look after his interests on the board. I may be a soldier and I may be quite satisfied to have the minister, for instance, as my representative on that board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. CLARK: I say that I as a soldier settler may be quite satisfied to have the minister act for me on the board, if that were possible, or I may prefer somebody else. If the soldier on the land is to be represented on this board of arbitrators then he must have some voice in the selection of that third man. On the other hand the minister's suggestion is that the same man shall represent the soldiers on the board in a particular district. He asks me wherein it would be easier if the judge alone were acting and I tell him this: If the same board acts in fifty or two hundred and fifty cases you must pay that board. Who is going to pay the costs? Is the soldier going to pay the costs of his representative on the board? Is that man to be paid remuneration from day to day for each day that he sits?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The representative of the soldier?

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, undoubtedly. You could not expect the soldiers to pay this man themselves. The government will have to pay him.

Mr. CLARK: Under what authority?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is provided for in the bill.

Mr. CLARK: I read there:

> Expenditures necessarily incurred by any district arbitration committee shall be paid out of monies appropriated from time to time by parliament to soldier land settlement.

That means the expenditures incurred. That does not mean they are entitled to any special remuneration. That does not entitle the Land Settlement Board, or the government, to pay the soldiers' representative one penny as far as I can see. Personally I would feel inclined to move an amendment unless the minister can see his way clear to reconsider this provision. I think such a board is an absurdity, I think it will be cumbersome, I think it will be unfair to the soldier, and that the minister will be well advised to leave this matter with the county judge. I think the same people will be brought into operation if the county court judge is acting alone as will be brought in here. In this way: The board will get together and they may agree upon a fair valuation based upon independent reports. In that case an application can be made before the judge to confirm a certain valuation without any long-winded hearing of evidence, but upon proper affidavits or proper valuations from independent sources. The judge determines at this sitting in a judicial capacity. The responsibility is his to peruse these valuations and affidavits. If these two men cannot go and make this application before the judge by consent it must mean a more or less contested application in each case, the judge and the two arbitrators hearing the evidence viva voce, and giving a decision upon that evidence. That will mean that valuators, and so on, will have to go before the board personally and give their evidence as to valuation, whereas if the county court judge is sitting alone the soldier may get independent valuators to go before him in case of a contest, and the independent evidence will convince the judge very easily. Or the two representatives together will go before the judge with affidavits by agreement after having arrived at a valuation which they consider fair. I feel very strongly that this section should be amended and the judge alone made the sole arbitrator from the points of view of expense and of fairness to the soldier concerned.

Mr. BOYS: I just want to make sure of paragraph (g). I think we can apprehend its meaning but I will read it:

> Expenditures necessarily incurred by any district arbitration committee shall be paid out of monies appropriated from time to time by parliament to soldier land settlement.

I understand the purpose of that paragraph is to devise a means to pay these two representatives. Am I right or wrong in that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not quite catch my hon. friend's question.

Mr. BOYS: I am dealing with paragraph (g) which I have just read, and I take it for granted the purpose of that paragraph is to provide funds to pay the members of this committee?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There will be the necessary expenses, yes.

Mr. BOYS: That would be their travelling expenses, of course, and there would be a per diem allowance. I think we may assume the per diem allowance would not be less than $10 a day, at least. With two men to provide for that would be $20 apart, from the county judge. Now, I do not know whether the minister has reached a decision as to what the policy of the department is to be in connection with this valuation. Suppose, for instance, the soldier makes application for a revaluation and he claims that the land should be worth only four thousand whereas he paid six thousand. Suppose the department is of the opinion that the valuation of four thousand which he sets is altogether too low. Would it be the intention of the department to provide counsel, on its behalf to appear and to contest his application with some degree of vigour as would be done in any ordinary case before the Exchequer court, or is it the intention of the department merely to leave the soldier on the one hand, and perhaps to have some lay representative of the department, prepare the case and go before the county judge? I would be almost inclined to think that the department, when they were contesting a case, would want to follow it up with some degree of vigor, and would probably have some qualified person present to act for them. What about the soldier? I know a few in my own county, but we have not very many there. From what I have heard in regard to this matter, there must be many soldiers who could not afford the expense of securing counsel to appear for them and present their case, and there is no provision in the bill regarding costs. Suppose a soldier without means, but with a good case, having confidence in it, decides to go before the board and wins his case; is he to be at the entire expense of securing counsel if that be necessary? Is he to find money for witnesses? Is this board to be in a position to award to that soldier, in case of success, a reasonable allowance for expenses? I think if he succeeds he should get his expenses. Of course if a soldier presents a case which has no merit and fails, he should not get costs. In such an extreme case, if the soldier were worth anything, perhaps he should be made to pay some of the costs. I am not advocating that proposition, but that could be argued and I want to present that feature of the case to the minister.

I want to make a concrete suggestion in the first instance. The fee for counsel would be $10 a day or more, and might easily be $20, but I am satisfied it would not be less than $10 for each of the men. I should think, if you had much of a contest, the average duration of a case would be a day, two days or perhaps a day and a half, which would mean two days. There you have two days at $10, and that would mean an expense of $40. I would suggest that you should make an allowance to the soldier of anything he saves in revaluation. If he demonstrates he has a good case, he should be allowed $30 or $40 at least, which would be merely the cost this legislation is going to impose upon the country, and give that to the soldier to get an expert witness as to valuation. If you want to go a step further, I would be prepared to support the proposition that where a soldier brings his claim before a judge and succeeds he should be allowed reasonable expenses in pressing his claim. It is done in the Exchequer court and every other court.

I have not heard a word from the minister as to what good he thinks is going to be accomplished by a membership of three on this committee. What suggestion does he make? If there is disagreement between the two the judge will decide anyway, therefore why not let the judge deal with the matter? It will certainly be less expensive. The case will not last as long, and if you want to dispose of a little of the country's money, instead of giving it to useless men on the board—not useless as far as the men are concerned, because the judge will ultimately decide the case—use that money to help that soldier press his claim. I would make it contingent upon his success, because if he chooses to bring a case asking for a re-valuation in the hope of getting a lower value placed on the land, and fails, I should not suggest that he should get any of the money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Nor any assistance to bring the case?

Mr. BOYS: I did not say the soldier should get any assistance if his case is not meritorious. I can quite understand that if you put in a provision allowing a certain sum in cash to the men, it would be an incentive, perhaps, to bring cases that were none too meritorious. I do not go that far at all, but where there is merit, I say we should help the soldier, and I certainly think there must be very many meritorious cases. In my own county the returned soldiers may be better off and may have greater opportunities than in some of the remote parts of the country, but I feel satisfied there is not one that really has the money to properly handle his case before the judge, and in the west, of course, the costs are heavier. What are the witness fees to be paid? Suppose you confine yourself to the law obtaining in my province and probably in other provinces. The law permits the calling of three experts. Where are you going to get three experts out west to travel a hundred miles to attend a hearing, unless you have a nice little sum at your disposal? Where is the money to come from Is the soldier not to be put in a position to secure redress? You have a provision in the bill that, where the applicant is successful, out of any award that is made a sum is paid in cash. I believe it is going to be the policy of the department to employ counsel. I am not saying it in a nasty spirit but it is done in all cases. If the department has counsel, in what position is the soldier placed, if he has not money and cannot get competent witnesses, to say nothing about employing an advocate of sufficient ability and experience to properly plead his case Dealing with the question of arbitrators, you have two tribunals, one is the ordinary judicial tribunal where you have a judge presiding. The other is a board of arbitrators. As far as I know in all arbitrations you have one arbitrator selected by one of the parties concerned and the other arbitrator selected by the other party. It is the duty of those two arbitrators to do their utmost to secure the best results for those who appoint them. Then the third arbitrator is, as a rule, selected by those two arbitrators and is supposed to be an independent man. In this case the soldier is not going to have the same right in that regard. The department will have a man there who will be specially instructed, whose duty it will be to keep that man as near to the original value as possible, because I take it for granted the department would not fight a case if they did not think they had a right to do it. They would be willing to agree to a lower valuation before going to court if they had doubt about the matter. They are going to fight to keep the valuation up. Who will appear before the tribunal with the same degree of interest on behalf of the soldier? I do not say that there would not be any representative of the soldier. I have a great deal of faith in the representatives of the soldiers on our various boards, and I have nothing to say against them. I think it would be the desire on the part of the veterans' organization and the Soldier Settlement Board to do whatever they could for the soldiers, but nobody suggests that that representative would have the same interest as the soldier himself, or as the representative of a party to an arbitration would have.

For the reasons I have given, I think the minister should leave this with the county judge in the district, and if he wants to hand out any money, instead of giving it to the members of that committee, who are not going to improve the situation but will of course impose expense on the country, better take that $30 or $40 and give it to the soldier to help him present his case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I agree with a great deal of what the hon. member has said, particularly with his remarks in respect to arbitration. I do not share in his fear about the soldier not being represented, but I do share his view that the representative of the soldier and the Soldier Settlement Board are very likely—

Mr. BOYS: I did not say the soldier would not be represented. I said he would not be as well represented on that committee by the appointee named by the government as he would by an appointee named by himself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the hon. member is wrong in speaking of an appointee named by the government. Bear in mind that the representative who will be on the committee will be a member of the Soldier Settlement Board; he will be named by them.

Mr. BOYS: It does not say so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes he is to be named by the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. BOYS: The sub-section provides that the minister may appoint a district arbitration committee, and one of them shall be the county judge and two others are named, one from the Soldier Settlement Board and one from the veterans organization in the district.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely the machinery is there to make the appointment. I was seeking to get away from this thing entirely as minister. Of course, I cannot get away from the responsibility of it any more than the minister can get away from the responsibility of the Soldier Settlement Act, but surely the House does not hold the minister responsible for all the doings of the Soldier Settlement Board. He is, as minister, responsible for the board, but the board itself will name the representative who will sit on this arbitration committee.

Mr. BOYS: The bill does not say that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It says through the minister. The minister is in charge of the board. If necessary I will change it to the effect that the board will do the appointing, if that will help the matter in any way, but I do not think it will.

Mr. BOYS: If the minister is going to make any changes, he should change the composition of the committee. Will he give us some good reason why he wants three members on the committee instead of just the county court judge?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I pointed out a moment ago that where one of the representatives on the committee is a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, he is a government official and as it is the actions of the board that are on trial, he will be liable to protect the interests of the government. That, I think, is a fair argument. On the other hand I leave it to the local soldier organization to appoint their representative.

Mr. HANSON: That is just where the minister falls down. Under the correct wording of that section the minister himself as head of the department designates a man who comes from a particular class, a representative of the soldiers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But to be named by the organization.

Mr. HANSON: That is not what the bill says.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend want the organization to name the man and that he shall be appointed?

Mr. BOYS: If the minister must have it, but that is not what I want at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am willing to do that. I am willing to step as far away from this thing as possible for political advantage or otherwise, but I want the committee to understand what we are trying to do and I want to argue why I think the arbitration committee is preferable to the judge alone. I am going to base myself on the very argument presented by my hon. friend, and that is this. I do not want the representative of the soldier to be changed on every individual case; neither will any of my hon. friends contend that. The judge has jurisdiction within the particular district, and if he is to be the sole arbitrator he will deal with every individual case in that whole judicial district. I fail to see why anyone should desire that every little corner should have a special representative. Surely they can agree upon some man who will present their case. I admit at once and I do not think anyone will deny that the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board will be named for the judicial district and will sit on every case in that district.

Mr. HANSON: By whom?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): By the Soldier Settlement Board, or by the government, if you will. There is no objection to that, I take it. Then you are right in the face of my hon. friend's argument that this result will come about, namely, that you have the client represented, of course, by a representative of himself on the board and naturally the representative will bring him with him because he will appear there—

Mr. BOYS: I object to that statement, "of course." That person is not appointed by him. It is true that a person is appointed by an association of which he may or may not be a member.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a very difficult thing to get down to individual cases. I do not agree with my hon. friend in his argument that just because a soldier, in the opinion of the board and consequently in the opinion of the minister, has not a good case, he should not be given any facilities to reach the court or the judge or the committee.

Mr. BOYS: I am not going to argue that far.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not believe we would get very far with that sort of thing, but I am going to leave it for the moment. If you leave the matter to the judge, you will have the condition of affairs pictured by my hon. friend, of counsel appearing for the government and counsel appearing for the soldier. What does this mean? It means a hard and fast trial before a judge, settled on a point of law.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think anyone can refute that. It means that and nothing else.

Mr. BURY: It could not possibly be settled on a point of law; it would be settled on a point of fact—the fact of value. The minister misunderstands the meaning of the phrase "a point of law."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am quite ready to be corrected on points of law as I am a layman, but I will challenge any of my legal friends to prove to me that an investigation held with the judge sitting as chairman of the board will not be less expensive and will not entail less legal array on both sides of the case. It will be rather a case of arbitration, because that is the name of the committee, the soldier coming before them if he so wishes. I cannot speak for all the provinces of Canada, but I can speak for my own province where the judge goes around to the smaller centres and holds his court. There is no reason why the committee cannot travel to those small centres and thus make it cheaper for the soldier to appear and bring his witnesses, lessening the cost, instead of having the cold and hard factor of law, which the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) speaks of, brought out before a county court judge. If you have lawyers there—and I do not say you can keep them out—I am going to say to my hon. friend that it will be hard for the soldier.

Mr. BOYS: Why does my hon. friend press that point? Has he heard me suggest that there should be any lawyers there? I asked him what the policy of the department was to be as to pressing their side of the case and I gathered from what he said that they are going to have somebody there. If he wants to provide against lawyers appearing, let him say if he likes that the case be heard without lawyers. I am a lawyer, but I am willing to have it that way. I cannot understand how the minister thinks it is going to cost less to hear a case before three people, one of whom is the county court judge, than to hear it before the judge alone. The minister and I are old friends. He comes from within a few miles of where I live and I remember the highly judicial attitude he used to display in years gone by in the county of Simcoe. I know he knows something about law; he was even an assessor in his own township years ago and he learned something about municipal law. He is not green at all; he is a man of excellent judgment. But why does the minister introduce that point? How is any lawyer going to be involved in this? There is one question alone and that is the value of the land. The question of law does not and cannot arise. The question is purely as to whether you are going to have one or three men to say what the value of the land is. Perhaps I have interrupted the minister too soon and he may have some other arguments. I may say to him frankly that he has not advanced a solitary argument so far as I am concerned—and my mind is open—to show me that he is going to get any good results or save one cent by the process he has adopted as against the one advocated. Anyone who has any independent thought must see that a committee is going to lead to delay. The minister speaks about the tribunal moving about. Is it not easier and less expensive for a tribunal of one to go to the locality in which the land is than for a tribunal of three to go there? How can there be a saving of expense by having three on the committee? I know many people say that the district judges have not enough to do, but I do not subscribe to that. Some of them may not have as much as they can attend to, but many of them to my knowledge have a good deal to do. At the same time, however, I do not think that they have so much on their hands as to be unable to undertake this work as well. I think undoubtedly that the district judge should do in this matter as is done in the divisional courts throughout the country: he should hold his court in the place most convenient to the soldier and to the witnesses who would have to attend the trial. And the judge himself could go to that place, more conveniently and at less expense than could a tribunal of three. Perhaps I interrupted the minister too prematurely. In that case I still await with interest the convincing arguments that are to come to show why a tribunal of three will be less expensive and more practicable than a tribunal of one, that one being an independent judicial officer.

Mr. CLARK: Does the minister say that if the judge is the sole arbitrator then the department proposes to be represented by a lawyer on each of these arbitrations?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say that.

Mr. CLARK: But that if, on the other hand, the tribunal is to consist of three, composed of the judge and two others representing the board and the soldier, the department does not intend to engage a lawyer? That is the inference that must be drawn from the minister's remarks.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friends know that many of the representatives of the board are lawyers who naturally are better able to protect the interests of the board than a non-professional man could.

Mr. BOYS: That would be hard on the soldier, who in such a case would have a lawyer against him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I admit that at once, but I would point out to my hon. friend that the representative of the board, whether a lawyer or a layman, would undoubtedly have considerable experience in any case. He is dealing with these matters every day and is quite familiar with them. He knows the values of the lands and he can put up arguments to support his case, arguments which the soldier who is busily engaged in working his land, no matter how clever he may be, is not in a position to dispute if he appears in his own behalf. I should expect a representative of the settlement board to be a man of standing and judgment, and one who would be able to see that the interests of the board were protected without injustice to the soldier himself. My hon. friend tells me that I have not advanced any argument. Well, the strongest argument I have to offer is this, that by adopting the plan I have suggested, the proceedings will not have the cold judicial character of a court in which there is formal submission of evidence. My hon. friends will not agree with that.

Mr. HANSON: Per se, is that a harmful thing?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not suggesting that it is harmful, but I am of the opinion that the proposal I have submitted will make for a lower cost in the long run.

Mr. BOYS: Will the minister tell us how it could possibly do so?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall try to if my hon. friends will give me a chance and not too frequently interrupt the trend of my statements. My argument briefly, is this: you cannot conduct a court without the employment of certain legal machinery. At least, I have not seen it done except in the case of an assessment court before which I have appeared in defence of my own position. In that case the municipality was represented by a lawyer, and I spoke only through him. In nine cases out of ten in which facts were heard by a court my experience has been that the appellant was represented by a lawyer. I am convinced that appeals to the courts are expensive. This conclusion I have been forced to after an experience of some seven years, during which time I have frequently settled matters outside, sometimes giving away more than I thought I should have done in the interests of the municipality in order to keep expenses within bounds. For there is no doubt about its being an expensive matter. A number of soldiers who have spoken to me have suggested that in cases where the board and the soldier could agree the matter might be settled by arrangement and, if it were thought advisable, referred to a judge for review, the court being resorted to only in the event of a disagreement between the board and the soldier.

There is no use in arguing that the soldier will be saved any money by one course in preference to the other. He has to submit his claim for consideration, whether it be by a committee consisting of a representative of the board and himself, or by some other tribunal. In order to facilitate matters the board has prepared forms which the soldier can fill out giving all the particulars necessary for the consideration of his case. He makes an affidavit that to the best of his knowledge and belief the statement he submits is a correct report of the conditions under which he is trying to carry on his farming operations. The board, on the other hand, if it disagrees, naturally prepares a counter statement showing why the man should not be given the consideration for which he asks. I must say that I do not see any necessity for the employment of legal representatives to act on behalf of either party. It seems to me that they might quietly go before the board, submit their case, and have the arbitration committee settle the matter. I do not, of course, suggest that the judge could not do the same thing, but I fail to see where any reduction in expenses could be effected. I repeat what I said a few moments ago, that to my mind the strongest argument in favour of the plan suggested is that it will make for a more satisfactory settlement. You will get a better judgment from the representatives as named in the amended bill than you will from the hard and fast adjudication of the court itself. I may be wrong, but that is my conviction.

Mr. BOYS: The minister says that the soldier makes his application and supports it with an affidavit, and that the department rejoins with another. Am I to infer that this is to be the method of determining the value of the land?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BOYS: That is what I thought. Well, then, is it not the intention that witnesses shall be called either before a judge or before a tribunal of three?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hardly think it will be necessary to call witnesses in many cases. There may be a few serious cases of dispute, but on the whole I do not think that witnesses will be necessary.

Mr. BOYS: I warn the minister that if he does not provide in the bill that the evidence shall be documentary in the form of affidavits, there is not the slightest doubt that expert witnesses will be called to give evidence as to the value of the land. If the minister does not intend that witnesses shall be called, he must make some provision in that respect. Now, the minister speaks of a hard and fast legal tribunal. But what is the difference between a county court judge sitting alone, and a county court judge sitting on a tribunal of three? Are you not going to have the same evidence, the same documents submitted, and the same degree of activity and pressure in either case? So far as that answer goes, therefore, it is of no weight. If the minister lays it down that the soldier shall present his case in the form of an affidavit and the department shall do the same, I do not think it makes much difference whether the tribunal consists of three or one, except as regards the greater expense entailed in the larger body.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The appearance of the soldier would not be precluded. When the form has been duly filled out applying for consideration, it must be backed up by an affidavit.

Mr. BOYS: I understand that. Then the next step is the hearing of the case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The next step, if the board is not in possession of the full information, will be to send someone on a visit of inspection to the farm. The information submitted to the board might not agree with the complete facts as disclosed by that visit. Of course, I am anticipating a good deal; I have not thought out the form of procedure precisely. The next step would be to estimate the value.

Mr. BOYS: The minister surely does not mean that that is the procedure under this legislation. The application is made, and the committee must meet and hear the case. The case can be heard in one or two ways: either documentary evidence alone is accepted or a date is fixed for the hearing of the parties. Now, I have not the slightest doubt that this is what is contemplated by the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I say frankly we could not think of precluding the submission of evidence.

Mr. BOYS: Then if this stands in its present form you have the three of them and the parties appear either with witnesses or with counsel. So you have the same procedure, but in one case before three men and in the other before a single arbitrator.

Mr. MULLINS: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get your eye for some time. Apparently the legal lights would like to hold the attention of the committee all the time. I want to bring a little horse sense into this discussion. For my part, I want nothing to do with the county judge. I do not want him on the bench either as a judge or in an advisory capacity. I want to see the soldier settler represented on that committee by one of his own number off the land. With all due respect to my legal friends, why should we select the county judge to the exclusion of the man on the land? If the minister will provide a small fee to bring the soldier from his district before the board, it will meet with my approval. I think I have more returned men in my constituency than has any other member.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. MULLINS: I think my friends will find that I have as many returned men in my constituency as they have in theirs. I have had petitions from the men themselves, and they have asked to be allowed a representative on the board. As their member, it is only fair that I should ask that for them. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) says there will be no more Conservative members from Manitoba after the next general election because the Progressives and the Liberals are united and have got horse sense. He may be correct. Anyway, I am not playing politics in this. I only want to play the game fair. I think the minister has a bill which meets with the approval of the returned men and of the soldier settlers on the land, who are asking for redress, for some assistance in the way of revaluation. During my campaign I met many of them, and I found they were all struggling grimly to hold on. After being three or four years at the front they were anxious to re-establish themselves on the land, but they were too keen and took their land at an exorbitant price. Now it is only fair to re-value that land and give those men a chance. Let me say to the minister in an advisory way: Help the men, the men that left their land for a few months or during last summer, help them to get back. Help them to get into live stock, and have a practical man travel through the country to teach those men how to carry on with mixed farming. The bill in my opinion meets with the approval of the returned men in Marquette.

Mr. HAY: Mr. Chairman, I heartily endorse what has been said by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins) with respect to the clause now under consideration. There may be other clauses that I do not agree with, but I will deal with them when they are before the House. I am in favour of having a committee appointed as provided by the bill. I am not favourable to having a trial, as it were, of a judicial character before which the returned men must come in order to prove their case as to revaluation. I believe the soldiers themselves would be opposed to such a scheme and would rather favour the present arrangement. I do not believe it would cost as much as if they were compelled to go before a county judge. It would be necessary in a case of that kind, as the minister states, to have legal advice, because as laymen we do not favour court proceedings very much and we are not anxious to get into court more often than we have to. Consequently I believe the soldiers themselves favour the arrangement provided for in this clause. I am not looking at it from the political point of view, I am considering it from the angle of the soldier settler who wishes for a revaluation of his land. I certainly approve of this section as brought down by the minister.

Mr. MURPHY: I have two questions to ask the minister. First, has he received representations from soldiers individually or from soldier organizations as to the manner in which they prefer to have the revaluation made? Second, with regard to this clause:

> The minister may appoint district arbitration committees having jurisdiction in such soldier settlement districts as may be necessary, each committee to consist of three members, one of whom shall be the judge of the county or district court, as the case may be, of the county or judicial district within which the land is situate, such judge to be the chairman of the committee, one a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, and one a representative of a veterans' or settlers' organization in the district.

Is the minister to appoint the representative of the soldier's organization on his own initiative, or will he do so on the recommendation of the soldier's organization itself? That is a very important point. If the soldiers themselves, through their organization in the district, choose their representative, then I do not think there can be any objection, but if the minister appoints the representative arbitrarily then I think there is room for criticism.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have had no representations from soldier organizations.

Mr. MURPHY: Or individually?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I have had nothing from soldiers individually. I have not had the opportunity of presenting this matter to them, I have been taking the consensus of opinion of hon. members with respect to the method to be pursued. As to the appointment of the representative of the soldiers, undoubtedly there will be some difficulty, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark) in judicial districts in British Columbia, for instance, where owing to the mountainous nature of the country the soldier settlements are not in such close communication with one another as they are on the prairies, and consequently difficulty might arise in the various communities not being able to agree upon a representative. But I may say to my hon. friend that I propose to accept the nominee of the soldiers' organization for the third member of the board.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Which organization?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have named two. If there is an organization in existence, we can accept the representative from that organization. If there is not any existence, there is nothing in the world to prevent the soldier settlers interested getting together and naming a representative.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But you may have a number of these organizations.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I realize that and admit frankly the difficulty so far as British Columbia is concerned. My hope was that the one representative would serve for the judicial district, but I am given to understand that that difficulty does exist in British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Whose advice would the minister take?

Mr. GEARY: I think the minister is a little in error as to the trial, as he calls it, which may occur before a judge. Would the minister remember that the reason he is putting a judge on this board is because of the experience any man on the bench gets in adjusting belief as to matters of fact, as well as of his knowledge of law. A very important quality of a judge is his ability to adjust conflicting questions of fact and get at the truth. May I also point out to the minister that a board of arbitration consisting of three members is in practice a farce. One party appoints one member; the other party appoints another, and the third member of the arbitration is appointed in some other way. The result is that the third man is the final adjudicator; the other two are counsel. Are we to have that sort of a board with one member, in effect, sitting for each party, and back of them again lawyers for the parties? I merely suggest to the minister that he is complicating matters by having a three-man board. It would be much more simple to create a one-man board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. GEARY: Then I think that is about the end of this discussion, so far as it goes, and I would like to get on to some point about which there is some opportunity for discussion. I think the House has covered this point pretty well, and if my hon. friend makes that his decision, I do not think we are usefully occupying our time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not wish to take issue with anyone in respect to his views, but I cannot help thinking that the two hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House (Mr. Mullins and Mr. Hay) have perhaps touched the vital point in this matter. I have no personal objection to a judge, I may say frankly, but I have reached the point in my own mind, judging from the arguments presented in this House—and I very frankly confess that I have not asked for outside opinion—where I think all parties will be better satisfied with the tribunal as provided for in the act than they would with the judge acting alone. That is my conviction at the moment, and of course one must stand by his convictions. I would be the last to criticize our judicial tribunals; I think our duty is to sustain them whether we like their decisions or not, but I do feel that in this as in many other cases where the judge is made chairman of the board, he will have some control over the committee, but after all it will not be a judicial hearing in the real sense of the term—

Mr. GEARY: It never is; it could not be.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —but will rather tend to give all parties a fair opportunity—

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to get some assurance from the minister that he will give the soldier some protection. Parliament is now trying to redress an injustice done the soldier when he was sold land at inflated prices. I do not see how the soldier is going to profit very much by this court, or call it what you will, unless there is some provision whereby his case will be properly presented. That means that the government must get behind him with a certain amount of money. If the government does not do that the case of the soldier will not be properly presented and he will not in the end get justice. It seems to me that this is the important question in this whole undertaking. The soldier should and must have the right to select his own counsel, and that counsel should be paid by the department. Presumably the soldier has a credit balance in this country; if he has not a credit balance, due to his war service, this bill has no right to be before parliament. A part of that balance should be used in pressing his claims and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that unless the government makes some provision whereby he can obtain a certain amount of money by means of which his case may be properly presented, he may not get justice.

5 p.m.

I am not reflecting on the good intentions of the government, nor on the purposes of the bill; it makes very little difference to me whether you have a one-man tribunal or a three-man tribunal; the soldier will likely get justice in either case if his case is properly presented. I would like the minister to give some assurance that his department will place a reasonable sum of money to the credit of the soldier in order to allow him to select his own counsel for the presentation of his case. If I were a soldier I would want a lawyer—and a good one—to present my case, and I think the more ably it is presented the more success he will have.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask one question? I understand that there are about 10,000 cases which would be affected by this legislation; there are probably 15,000 men who would make application for revaluation. Would the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat give us some idea of the expense his proposal would entail?

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not concerned with the expense; all I am concerned with is that justice be done to these men, and if this bill is not intended for that purpose it has no place before us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are all trying to do that, but this idea seems to me rather impractical.

Mr. BROWN: Now that we have agreed that there must be a revaluation it becomes a very important question as to what tribunal shall undertake this task. There is a good deal of truth in the old saying that the best committee is a committee of three with two members absent, and there is a good deal to be said for the contention that the county court judge should act in this capacity. I think, however, that it might be just as well for us to recognize the fact that the ordinary individual has some little suspicion of courts of justice. I do not share in the prejudice against judges and lawyers, but I think perhaps we should recognize that it does exist, and it seems to me that a court constituted under the terms of this bill would make a greater appeal to the men who are directly affected than would a county court judge acting alone. It might be well to point out that the right hon. leader of the opposition took the ground that there was some danger that the interests of the country might be jeopardized, and that the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board—who might be spoken of as the representative of the government—would be likely to sacrifice the interests of the government. On the other hand the member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark) took the stand that it would not be fair to the soldier to have this board constituted as this act provides. Those two gentlemen drew two different conclusions from the same premises.

I think there is also a misapprehension as to the spirit in which this tribunal is likely to deal with these matters. I do not anticipate that it will be in the nature of a hard and fast legal trial, or a board of arbitration in which the representative of each party to the dispute is trying to get something excessive for those whom he represents. Naturally, of course, the soldier in the case will want to get his land revalued at the lowest possible figure, but, I do not anticipate that the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board will try on the other hand to secure the utmost he could possibly get from that tribunal. I anticipate that the attitude of the Soldier Settlement Board will be that a large measure of reduction in most cases is necessary, and instead of taking the attitude that it will get the highest possible value placed upon the land it will meet the soldier settler in the spirit of give and take and try to arrive at an amicable decision.

Now as regards the matter of expenditures. It is to be expected, of course, that a tribunal of three will be a little more expensive than a tribunal of one. But in regard to the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board I think it might be pointed out that the board will have one representative there anyway—there can be no question of that—and the representative of that board who must be on the tribunal will furnish it with all the information the board has at its disposal and thus it will be placed in possession of all the facts of the case. Naturally during all these years through which the board has been operating it has become possessed of a great deal of detailed information. I know you can go to that board to-day and get detailed information in regard to any given case. In the very nature of the case the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board will be furnished with that information when he comes to take part in the proceedings of this arbitration. Therefore I cannot understand why there should be necessity for any other lawyer in the case at all. It seems to me there should be no necessity for any other lawyer to present the case because the representative of the board will be in possession of all the information which the board has to offer upon the subject.

Mr. McGIBBON: Put yourself in the soldier settler's place. Would you not want to see your case presented in the most favourable light before the board?

Mr. BROWN: Up to the present I have not discussed the matter from the soldier settler's standpoint. If the hon. member will wait perhaps I will come to that. I have been discussing the matter so far only from the standpoint of the board. I say naturally that the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board will be in possession of all the facts the board has to offer upon the matter.

Now let us come to the standpoint of the soldier settler. Naturally he would wish to be represented or to appear in person before the tribunal, and many of these soldier settlers are themselves thoroughly competent men, able to argue their own case, and to make the most effective presentation of it. Therefore, in a great many instances they would not require the services of counsel at all. On the other hand I quite understand that many men are in such a position that it would be very desirable that they should have counsel. In such cases I think it would be quite proper that the government should make provision for the satisfactory presentation of the soldier's case. I would agree heartily with that, knowing as I do that perhaps many men might not be able to look after their own interests if they were not properly advised. Putting one method over against the other—taking the judge on the one hand and the tribunal as provided for in the bill on the other—while there is something to be said in favour of the judge alone acting, it seems to me that taking everything into consideration greater satisfaction will be given by the provisions of the bill to the men whose interests are directly affected, rather than by allowing them to go before a county court judge acting alone, notwithstanding, I admit, that from the standpoint of strict logic a good deal may be said for the position of those who represent that the county court judge alone should act.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would suggest to the minister that in the great majority of cases when application is made for a reduction in the value of land the soldier settler has a representative at hand, the local representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, who has been in touch with each and every one of these cases for years back. Why could it not be arranged that a settlement should be made, if possible, as between that representative and the soldier settler, and only those cases referred to the arbitration committee or to the judge where such a settlement was not possible? If necessary we could safeguard that by saying that settlements so made, if any, should be referred for final decision to the judge who is to be the head of the arbitration board. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that the man who has been in touch with the settler, who knows the actual conditions, the value of the land—if his experience is worth anything he should know the actual value of the land at the present time—and the circumstances under which each of these settlers purchased his land, is competent to act, and if such an arrangement could be made between the two parties, that is between this local man as representing the government and the soldier settler, there is no need for any abitration or for any proceedings other than, perhaps, a review of the finding before the county court judge. In that way we would obviate the questions that arise this afternoon.

I would further say that I am in favour of the one-man tribunal. I think the judge is all that is necessary in these cases. In the great majority of instances the local county court judge is pretty well in touch with the conditions as to farm lands and everything else within his own jurisdiction. So I say that one man would be just as good as three. I believe it is quite possible in the case of sixty or seventy per cent of these cases, perhaps more, to effect a settlement without any trouble at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may say that was what was contemplated by the bill as originally drafted, but changes were made in order to meet the varied arguments in the House. May I answer my hon. friend at once by saying that where the parties are in agreement the appearance before the arbitration board will be purely perfunctory.

Mr. ARTHURS: The bill does not say so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That will be the procedure; as a matter of fact, it cannot be otherwise. My hon. friend suggested that there should be a review of the decision. In such cases there will be a review, that is where the Soldier Settlement Board and the settler agree. That is why I provide the tribunal; so that there shall be a final and complete settlement. In such cases, the preliminaries, such as those my hon. friend suggested, having been gone through and the parties being in agreement, it is only a matter of obtaining sanction; there will be no necessity even for the soldier to appear on his own behalf.

Mr. ARTHURS: That would not appear to be the case from the provisions of the act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The act does not so provide, it is true, but it is the procedure that will be followed.

Mr. POWER: Even though I do not look at the matter exactly from the same angle as my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I am in entire accord with him that this tribunal should be composed of one judge only, the county court judge. In order that hon. members may be correctly seized of the situation I should like to go back and recall the principles on which this legislation was founded. The right hon. leader of the opposition will recall that this act was not conceived with the object of helping the returned soldiers. It was conceived purely and simply as a colonization scheme. In order to show that this theory is the right one I have only to recall to the memory of those who were in the House in 1920 and 1921 the efforts made by hon. members to induce the government of that day to help the returned soldiers who were in other walks of life than agriculture. On many occasions members asked that mechanics be assisted, that small shopkeepers be assisted, and they said, "If you help the farmers, why not help the others?" Invariably the answer came back "We are rendering assistance to returned soldiers to place them on the land because they are the best settlers, and this is purely and simply a colonization scheme and not a scheme to help returned men." That being the case, let us see what has happened? We have squandered something like eighty to a hundred million dollars on a scheme that was badly conceived, badly administered, and which we now find is bankrupt. Therefore the best thing to do is to get out of it as cheaply as we can. I therefore suggest that we appoint one judge on the tribunal, because a judge would be neither trammelled by the exigencies of the returned soldier, nor influenced by the amiability possibly of some member of the Settlement Board who might be only too willing to assist the returned soldier to help himself. A soldier in such a case might get far more than he was entitled to. Therefore, in the interests of the country, in order to rescue the country from the deplorable situation in which it was placed when this scheme was put in force, I suggest that one judge be appointed, and, in spite of what the hon. minister has said, that he give not a hard and fast legal judgment, but a decision as fair as possible and one through which the country may suffer the least possible.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In common with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) I believe that having arrived at the decision to assist the soldier on the land, the matter to be determined is, what is the best way to do it? Clause (e) provides that the minister may appoint a district arbitration committee and he chooses as the first member the county judge; then he selects a member of the Soldier Settlement Board and then he selects a third—the minister, not the soldier—and the third may be a member of the veterans' or settlers' organization. Where is the soldier represented on that board? The minister selects those three or one of them is selected by the state, and he is the county court judge. The other two are selected by the minister. The soldier is not represented unless he secures counsel to represent him, and when he is going before that board he is going before two men who are representing the state and his dispute, if he has a dispute, is with the state; we may call it the Soldier Settlement Board if we will, but in reality they represent the state, and the other arbitrator, selected by the minister from some of the soldiers' organizations, if there happen to be such, is also a representative of the state. These two agree, and where does the district court judge come in?

If the minister would leave that matter in the hands of the district court judge then the money he is going to spend could be saved. Let the Soldier Settlement Board be represented by someone appointed by the state, and let the third man, the soldier's representative, who need not necessarily be a lawyer, be selected by the soldier himself. If he wishes to select him from the soldiers' organization where there happens to be one, well and good. If he desires to secure a farmer residing on the next farm to him, let that farmer be his representative, but let him be the representative of the soldier.

Coming to the matter of securing the representative from the soldiers' organization, the question has been asked, what organization are you going to select him from? I know one judicial district in this country where there are two distinct soldier organizations. There was what was formerly the Great War Veterans' organization and there is a complete and separate organization now, quite apart from that organization, and refusing to recognize it, and it is termed the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League. I know another district where there is no such soldiers' organization. What are you going to do in that case? Take the newer parts of the country where the settlers are far apart, we find the soldiers are sparsely distributed. There may be twenty-five miles between one soldier and another, and then there may be two or three in a group. Where will you get the soldiers' organization to represent these men? You cannot get one. But they have just the same right to representation as the soldier residing in a district where there are a thousand soldiers. If this measure is to be made effective and satisfactory to the settler, make it as simple as you can, leave it to the district court, let the minister put in a provision by which the Soldier Settlement Board will present the case for the soldier, let the soldier select a man to present his case, and let the department pay for it and fix the fee now. Do not make it possible to have these legal gentlemen getting the large fees that have been spoken of. Set a reasonable per diem allowance. A practical, experienced farmer, if you will, might be selected by the soldier settler to present the case to the tribunal if the soldier so desires. If the soldier desires a lawyer, fix the same per diem for the lawyer as for the farmer, and if the lawyer does not take it somebody else will. Simplify it, let three men comprise the tribunal, but do not have a board with two representatives of the state, or a board the members of which are all selected by the minister and the government, because this would leave the matter in the hands of the government itself to dispense justice as it saw fit.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the government a policy or plan worked out by which it purposes to revalue the land for its own information? Naturally when the representatives go before the committee they must have a very definite idea themselves as to the value of the land. I presume the government has some policy under which the value is to be arrived at.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In all cases where that information is not already in the possession of the board it will be necessary for them to make an appraisal of the property, having in mind of course the provisions of clause (c) in the act. They will consider what in their opinion the value of the land is at the present day and make their representations accordingly. The soldier, also having in mind what he has to do, would make his representations from the same basis. Now they may or may not agree, but that would be the ordinary method of establishing the value for assessment purposes or anything else. That is just the method to be pursued, and one must bear in mind that in both cases we are subject to the human frailties of the individual who makes the valuation.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The valuation would be made by the local officer of the board. I should like to point out to the minister some confusion that would arise in that way. Each man would have different ideas as to the value, and I think it would be important that one set of possibly exceptionally well qualified appraisers should be appointed, and re-value all that land in respect to which application for reduction is made. Then you would have at least standardization. In one particular district the officer might have an opinion as to the value of the land quite different from that of the officer operating in the next district. When you come before the appeal board you will have the case cited in one of the districts where the land is valued low, and it will be presented as an argument in favour of reduced value in another district; so that if you get a regular man appointed who would re-value all the land, it seems to me you would eliminate a lot of trouble. I can see no reasonable argument in favour of submitting all this to a judge. I believe that in ninety per cent and possibly more of the cases, the revaluation would be worked out quite satisfactorily between the board and the soldiers themselves. If we have confidence in the Soldier Settlement Board to administer the business they have to administer to-day, surely they are qualified to carry this out, and if we have not confidence in them, it is time we got another board. I do not see any good reason for submitting this to a judge.

The argument has been raised that politics will work into it. Politics works into every department of government to a degree, but when there are only 17,000 soldiers, even if every single one of them were put in a position where he practically had to support the government, that would not keep any government in power. As an opponent of the government I would not be very greatly concerned about that angle of the matter, and in any case the question of loss to the treasury is not so great as it would appear because if, through favouritism, some soldier got a particularly low valuation, neighbouring soldiers would naturally use that in the appeal as an argument for revaluation of their lands. Therefore, I cannot conceive of the board going to any great degree in extending favouritism to any soldier. I do not think they could get away with it. The revaluation must be worked out on a reasonable and equitable basis. Naturally, these soldiers will all be watching one another in order to see what the revaluation of their respective land is. If one of these men, because he might be a political favourite, got a large amount written off his debt, naturally the other men would have an argument in asking for the same treatment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have already laid before the minister some consideration which,

I think, completely destroy this proposal of his, but he does not accept them. The responsibility is his own. I have dwelt on the one mentioned by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell). I do not know how he comes to the conclusion he does so lightly that the power which could be exercised in this way politically is not very great. He may witness and experience something which will impress him more than anything that can be said on the floor of this House. But I do not want to labour that longer. I should like to call another matter to the consideration of the minister and then my responsibility is over.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Might I ask the leader of the opposition if there is not equal danger of that at present and if the officers of the board have not been fairly satisfactory in that regard in the past?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. Because the officers of the government have no power in the world to make concessions to soldiers to-day. The act will not permit them to do so. It never followed such a principle.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They have considerable power to make concessions in granting loans. In one particular case I have in mind, the granting of seed grain to soldiers who lost their crops, they have great power and I have never seen it abused. I think they have used very good judgment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Granting loans which the fellow has to pay—of course that has to pass through quite a number of imprimaturs before it is finally done. There is really no opportunity there. The great thing is that the man has to pay it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the land is overvalued, naturally he will not be able to pay it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not now, but he felt he had to when he got the money, and it was not any great benefit to him to get more than he could pay back. In the original act the opportunities for fraud were undoubtedly reduced to the very minimum. It was made a criminal offence to take any commission, for example, on a sale. In the purchase of land the soldier himself had to select it, be satisfied with it, be content with the price, and so declare over his signature to the board. Those were two precautions. In the next place the soldier could not gain anything by paying too much; he had everything to lose Next, the Farm Loans Board had to be satisfied; before fraud could creep in they had to be deceived or they had to be dishonest Next, the inspector had to be satisfied; before fraud could creep in he had to be deceived or he had to be dishonest. I think the House will admit that there were a series of fortifications against fraud on the treasury which were at least as great as they could be made, but the House knows that they were not successful. The House knows that fraud was committed over top of the whole of them; that the rapacious man got in, got his fist on the treasury and got away with it. He did this to quite an extent on the west shore of lake Manitoba. All these men who should have been on guard were put into a moral sleep; one after another was deceived or one after another was fraudulent. This was the case east of lake Winnipeg as well. As I said before the cases were not general; they were isolated and the proportion was small. Nevertheless, the amount was large and it was the cause of the worst situation we have in the whole field of soldier settlement.

What is going to be the opportunity in this case? I remind the minister again that he is going to allow the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board and the man to make an arrangement which nobody in the world can upset, which is final. I remind the minister too that while the judge might have power to speak and to advise, that is all the power he has and knowing that, nine out of ten of them will never say a word if the Soldier Settlement Board and the man agree.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely the right hon. member is not suggesting that the judge would sit quiet under what he considered was a fraud committed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How does he know it to be a fraud? The two come before him. The soldier says that the land is worth so much and the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board agrees. The judge knows nothing about it. There are no witnesses. In nineteen cases out of twenty they will just put their O.K. right there. Like other people they are not running about the country trying to put more work on their backs.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely some uniformity would be preserved. I think one hon. gentleman who spoke from the Progressive party put his finger on the spot. I admit that you cannot frame any statute under which you can protect the country against fraud, but as in the case of assessment appeals consideration is had to the surrounding property and it must be so in every case. The judge is the man who perhaps knows as much as anybody about that, because it is part of his official duty, and I cannot conceive that he would sit still under what would appear to be a fraudulent readjustment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How would it appear to be so? There would be nothing to appear at all. The judge has nothing before him but blank space. He does not know a thing about the matter. I will venture to say that in nineteen cases out of twenty, if not in ninety-nine out of a hundred, the judge would never have seen that special piece of land with the idea of coming to any estimate of its value.

The minister says there must be some uniformity, and the hon. member for Mackenzie mentioned it. I do not know where there is any uniformity in land values. I have quite a little land and I do not know two quarter sections that are uniform in any degree. Imagine such a thing as uniformity in farm land values! There are a dozen considerations in regard to lands that are immediately adjoining, one across the road from the other. Five hundred dollars would be a small variation between one farm on one side of the road and another on the other side, although perhaps both looked the same from the road. That would be accounted for by some characterization of the soil, by the lay of the land. The minister is going to have to use hundreds of representatives of that board. He has to do it. These representatives, I will assume, are of average honesty; they have done their work well and they have the confidence of the board. But they have never had anything in the world to do that would enable them to make money illegitimately. Here, however, that oportunity is going to be put in their way. The $500 could be divided between somebody and the representative and they could go before the judge and agree on the valuation. Who is ever going to find it out? Where is the precaution? There is none at all. The minister is really opening the door of the treasury. That is what he is doing. He is not doing it intentionally, but the fact is that he has not provided himself with a single fortification. And if he remembers his Horace he knows that the immortal greed of gold will tempt the heart of man to do nearly anything. Why should we expose ourselves in this way? There is no need of it. The representative of the Soldier Settlement Board and the soldier should not be given the right to come to a decision not subject to review by anybody. The principle cannot be defended at all and the minister will regret the day he ever suggested it to this House. I have nothing to say about the motives of anyone, but I do say no one has ever sought to administer so vast a thing as this in such a way.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will not the danger be just as great where the two parties agree to a certain decision before going to the judge?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is precisely the danger against which I have been arguing ever since the subject came up. My contention is that the representative of the board and the soldier should never be allowed to come to an agreement. To allow them to do so is to open wide the door to fraud to the extent of millions.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is there then no means by which a plaintiff and a defendant could agree between themselves?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is neither plaintiff nor defendant in this case. The man who is supposed to represent the government is protecting not his own money but the country's. For that reason the principle of plaintiff and defendant does not apply here. That is why an exchequer court is necessary. I suggest that in every case the two should go before the judge and have the judge himself send for the witnesses, the responsibility resting upon him finally. He should decide as to the value of the land. The judge should be held responsible. He will probably spend the rest of his life in the community and his reputation depends upon the honesty of his work. But what about the others? They would likely be gone the next day and no one would know anything about the matter. I appeal to the minister and those behind him not to expose the country to such a peril.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Some machinery should be provided in relation to the appointment of the representative of the soldier or settler. The bill as it stands before us does not make that point clear at all. If I followed the minister I inferred that one man would act for the settlers in the whole of the judicial district. How will he be appointed and from whom is the minister going to accept advice in that appointment? In my constituency there are a number of soldier organizations—the Army and Navy, the Great War Veterans, the Imperial Veterans, and now a new organization, the Canadian Legion. The bill speaks of "a representative of the veterans' or settlers' organization." In my opinion something will have to be incorporated in the bill to clear up this point; otherwise there will be a good deal of trouble. There is nothing here to provide for the returned men in the district getting together and agreeing upon a man to represent them. I want to hear the minister's view on the question. We should know just how the appointment is to be made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I admit the difficulty and I say frankly that the responsibility is one that I do not like. Unfortunately, however, I do not know of any way of avoiding it and of deciding what representative shall act on behalf of the soldier settler. I should prefer a representative from amongst the soldier organizations themselves rather than from an organization outside, which might not be particularly interested in the soldier settlement scheme. I would say however that someone representing as nearly as possible the men themselves should be selected, named by them and not by me.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister says that he would like to get rid of the responsibility of making this selection. There is a simple way by which he may do so, and that is not to have this provision in the bill at all. There is nothing here that provides that the soldiers' organization shall appoint the representative, or that the soldier will have anything to do with that appointment. The simple fact is, as my right hon. leader (Mr. Meighen) has pointed out, that two men will settle the matter between themselves before going to the judge. If the minister wants to escape the undesirable position which he has indicated, I suggest that he have nothing to do with the appointment of the representative, but allow the soldier to select his own man, the government paying that man whatever they would have to pay an arbitrator. I do not think they could get anybody to act for nothing. Let the representative of the board and the representative of the soldier present the case to the judge and let the judge take the full responsibility. That would relieve the minister and the Soldier Settlement Board of any possibility not only of embarrassment but ultimately of wrongdoing.

Mr. CHURCH: There are too many technicalities in this bill. The government is providing for a tribunal which is to be rigged up after the fashion of a high court of justice. We know that you create here the same machinery as is used to take over a railway or public corporation worth millions, namely, an arbitration court of a judge and two arbitrators with him. Why should such ridiculous procedure be followed here as in connection with street railways, where merely a few acres of land are involved? The cost of this matter is going to come out of the soldiers in the long run, and the trouble with all soldier legislation in this country is that it is not practical enough. Some 100,000 of our returned soldiers have had to go to the United States to look for work, while about 17,000 have been game enough to go upon the land in Canada, and those who have done so have had considerable hardships to endure, requiring the exercise of human qualities of endurance, courage, resource, skill, perseverance that are more the qualities of a race than an individual. This country has given away millions of acres of land to our railways; yet finds it almost impossible to take care adequately of the soldiers who went overseas and fought for us. We are here setting up all the red tape of a superior court of justice in connection with this matter, with all the attending cost and lack of results. Where does the soldier and his family come in while all this red tape is going on? These men demand practical soldier legislation and not technicalities after the Pension Board fiasco. Have we no time to deal with questions affecting our returned men? Are we to devote our time wholly to debating technical points respecting the most impracticable bill that could be introduced on behalf of the men who so nobly did their duty for the empire? I appreciate the difficulties of the minister, but why not put the onus on the county court judges or quasi-judicial officers? Or why not appoint a federal commission of several specially well qualified commissioners to deal with this very important work. Let such a commission take up the whole problem affecting the 17,000 cases involved and get quick action. A similar course was taken in connection with the Home Bank depositors, and I see no reason why a royal commission should not be appointed to deal with what is of vital importance to our returned men. I urge the minister to adopt this course. Let us quit fooling with this problem—appoint several judicial commissioners to settle these claims quickly, cut out petty matters and settle the bill.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the personnel of the board, I think the suggestion of my right hon. leader is the proper one to adopt. There seems to be some misconception by hon. members as to what that suggestion involves. What was in the mind of my right hon. leader when he suggested this machinery was that the county court judge should act independently as a kind of valuator, that he should obtain evidence as to the value of the land and decide what that value really should be. Now, our district or county court judges are thoroughly conversant with land values. Members who state the contrary are perhaps unaware of the fact that those judges are continually dealing with actions for foreclosure of mortgages and for specific performance of agreements of sale of real estate, all involving valuation of land. This is simply a matter of precisely the same kind and nature. However, if the minister is absolutely determined to have a board of arbitration, then, inasmuch as he has stated that he is anxious to withdraw as far as possible from all responsibility of appointing the members of such boards, I think he should tell us just how he proposes that the appointments should be made. Difficulties have been raised by members who are familiar with conditions in some of the ridings, and who know that the bill in its present form is utterly impracticable. The minister, I take it, admits that as the bill reads he himself has the absolute right of appointment of all members of the board of three. He says he is anxious to get away from that responsibility—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as the soldiers' representative is concerned.

Mr. BURY: How does he propose to do so? What does he propose to substitute in the bill as it now stands?

I wish now to direct the minister's attention to two other points. To one of them I referred when the bill first came before the House. Subsection (a) of section 1 of the bill reads as follows:

> Application for revaluation can be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the said land.

I called the attention of the minister to the fact that there might be instances—and I understand from some members on this side that this is more than a mere supposititious case; that there are in point of fact cases—where soldiers who have current agreements of sale with the Soldier Settlement Board which are not in default, or which at any rate have not been determined through default, may not be personally farming the land. For some reason or other they may have someone farming it for them, or may have leased the land to a tenant. I now urge upon the minister that the wording of the bill be altered so as to include, and make its benefits open to all soldier settlers who have agreements of sale not determined.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 17—Hon. Mr. Stewart—to amend the Soldier Settlement Act, 1919, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Mr. BURY: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was dealing with sub-section (a) of section 1, which addresses itself to the soldier settlers who are to come within the provisions of the bill, and I was urging on the minister the advisability of extending the provisions of the bill to embrace not merely soldier settlers who are personally in occupation of the lands and engaged in active farming operations on them, but also those soldier settlers who, possibly and probably for no reason over which they have control—being still purchasers under contracts in good standing, or contracts at any rate not yet determined by default of payment of the purchase money and ejectment—are not able at present to carry on farming operations. I told the committee that I had the assurance of one hon. member from Manitoba that I was not imagining such a case, that there were in fact cases of this kind. It is not open to the government, it is not open to the House, to make answer: parliament has the right to give all these gratuitous benefits to whomsoever it will. The Minister of the Interior used that argument in introducing the bill. He admitted that certain classes of soldier settlers who appeared to be legally, legitimately entitled to the benefits of the bill were being excluded, that no provision was being made for them. He frankly admitted that these provisions were being confined to one particular class, and the justification he suggested for that was this: Owing to the deflation of land values, private vendors continually make readjustments of prices and terms with their purchasers, who otherwise would throw back the lands on their hands, and the new sales no doubt would be at greatly diminished prices. And the argument seemed to be that inasmuch as the private vendor had a right to say whether he would make a new arrangement and abandon part of his purchase price, and had a right to say that he would make such concessions to certain purchasers and not make them to others, the Dominion government and the parliament of Canada had a right to do the same thing. In my humble opinion the argument of the Minister of the Interior is unsound, because one of his premisses is false. The parliament of Canada is not in the position of a private purchaser using his own money. The parliament of Canada is using the money of the taxpayers of this country, using the money of the people of this country, and amongst the very people whose money is being used are these soldier settlers who are being left out of the purview of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Is that the argument of the Minister of the Interior or the leader of the opposition?

Mr. BURY: In my recollection it was the argument of the Minister of the Interior, that these readjustments had continually to be made by private vendors because of the deflation in prices. Now if Canada as a country was in the position of a private vendor I would agree with the argument, because in that case the Dominion would be using its own money and therefore would have the right to say whether it would or would not make a concession in respect to the money that was due to it—it would be its own money and the Dominion would be the only one to be hit and hurt. But here we are using the money of the people of Canada for concessions to certain soldier settlers, and that very money is the money of other soldier settlers as well as of other taxpayers. Therefore we are not in the same position as a private vendor. I do not see how you can possibly get away from that. You are doing an injustice to a certain class of soldier settlers, and they have the right—these soldier settlers whose claims are not being met, the men who have paid in full for their lands or the men who, by reason of the inflated prices which they paid for the land in the first instance, have made default in their payments and have been ejected, or the men who have not yet been ejected but are not personally farming for some reason or other—all these men, or any one of them, can come to the Parliament of Canada and say "You have made a concession to these soldier settlers out of the funds of this country to which I contributed, and I have the same right as they have." I cannot see how the minister can get away from the fact that if the bill passes in its present form it will be an injustice to the soldier settlers who, it may be, have paid in full, not merely out of the proceeds of their farms but possibly out of personal moneys that they had acquired from some other source, or which they borrowed and subsequently paid back. And you will be doing an injustice to those soldier settlers who have not paid in full but who are not able at present personally to continue farming operations.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is wrong about that. We embrace all who are on the land whose contracts have not expired.

Mr. BURY: The bill does not say so. In this, as in other matters, the mind of the minister is one thing and the expression of the minister in the bill as drafted is an absolutely different thing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend should not be so facetious. The minister did not say or convey anything of that kind.

Mr. BURY: I am only reading the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are different ways of looking at the bill, but with all due respect to the ability of my hon. friend from East Edmonton—

Mr. BURY: Will the minister allow me to read his own bill?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but not to put any interpretation the hon. member sees fit to put on it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BURY: I am content to stand on the bill as it is drafted, and I will leave it to hon. members, even to those who have said "Hear, hear," to say whether the position I have taken is correct. The bill says:

> Application for revaluation can be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the said land.

Surely no language could be plainer or clearer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend forget that there is another provision in the bill that he may go on the land and be in occupation of his own land in six months' time?

Mr. BURY: I take the minister's word that there is such a provision. But even that is not sufficient, because a soldier might have left his land for reasons over which he had no control, reasons of health or of business; he may have been obliged to make a temporary letting of his land for one, two or three years. Meanwhile he is keeping up his payments to the Soldier Settlement Board. He is in good standing on his contract, but because he does not come within the four corners of the bill as it is drafted, he cannot get the benefit of its provisions. I say again that you are doing an injustice to a large body of soldier settlers. That injustice should be at least reduced to the minimum; you should not exclude the class of soldier to which I have already alluded. You are doing an injustice to those who have paid their purchase money in full, as well as to the other classes I have mentioned, and you cannot get out of that position without completely altering the scope of the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have until October 1 to make application.

Mr. HANNESSON: In view of the wording of section 68, which provides that the only people who have the right to apply are those who have not abandoned the land—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for East Edmonton has the floor.

Mr. BURY: I have made the point sufficiently clear, and no doubt other hon. members will take up the point just raised by the hon. member (Mr. Hannesson).

I desire to call the attention of the minister to subsection (c) and I want to assure him that in all I say I am only anxious to offer constructive criticism. I want the bill to be the best measure possible, and I wish the minister would get into his mind the fact that I am not hostile to the bill, still less hostile to himself. The proviso at the end of subsection (c) reads:

> Provided that in any case where the actual sale price is greater than the maximum amount which under section sixteen of this act may be advanced by the board in the purchase of land on behalf of any settler, such maximum amount shall be deemed the sale price for the purposes of this section.

The words of subsection (c) are:

> In any case where the actual sale price is greater than the maximum amount which under section sixteen of this act may be advanced—

Not "is advanced" but "may be advanced." Now I turn to section 16 of the act and I find the maximum amount which may be advanced to be $5,000, ten per cent to be paid down, namely, $500, the balance, $4,500, to be paid in instalments. If that is correct, I would ask the minister to consider what the effect of that will be on the provisions of this section. The maximum amount which under section 16 of the act may be advanced by the board in the purchase of land on behalf of any settler is $5,000. That is the only maximum mentioned in the section, and, if that is so, the price from which the revaluation price is to be deducted is $5,000. Perhaps I am wrong, and if so the minister will correct me.

[Mr. Bury.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member is practically correct.

Mr. BURY:: Here is a provision of the bill which says that when a soldier settler applies for revaluation, if the price he has paid is more than $5,000, they take the $5,000 as the price from which the deduction is to be made. Is that right?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is hardly correct. The hon. gentleman will notice that under section 17 there may be cases where $5,500 will be the maximum, or in exceptional cases it may go to $6,000, where the buildings are taken into consideration. But the point is this: the government are not taking into consideration any additional payments the soldier may have made, because I understand in some cases they have paid as high as $2,000. I presume the board took the view that if he were willing to make the investment, and he thought the property was worth that, that was really his business. Whether or not that was a proper position to take, I am not going to argue, but the fact remains that we are providing only for the amount of money invested in the property by the government itself.

Mr. BURY: The minister is not doing that. I thought that was what he intended to do, but what he says is this: Where a man has paid more than $5,000, say, $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, $9,000, $10,000 or as high as you like for his farm, the price for the purpose of valuation is to be taken as $5,000 and then there is deducted from that the new value put on the land. In other words, supposing the new valuation is $4,000, the concession is $1,000 and no more. As regards the statement of the minister about section 17 or any other section in the act of 1919, the only section mentioned in the bill is section 16 and that is the only section with which we are concerned. I do not know whether the intention of the government now is that the bill should stand as it is. I had thought that probably the government's intention was in every case to take the amount at which the farm was valued by the Soldier Settlement Board for the purpose of the loan or the amount of money which the Soldier Settlement Board lent on the farm, and to make their deductions from that. But that is not what the bill says.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is arguing that we should take in every case the exact amount the government invested in the property?

Mr. BURY: I thought that was what the government intended to do.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As nearly as possible. I want my hon. friend to realize how difficult it is to get that amount.

Mr. BURY: Yes. Those are the two points I would like to call to the attention of the minister, because they are quite vital points.

Mr. MULLINS: Paragraph (e) reads:

> Each committee to consist of three members, one of whom shall be the judge of the county or district court, as the case may be, of the county or judicial district which the land is situate, such judge to be the chairman of the committee, one a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, and one a representative of a veterans' or settlers' organization in the district.

Is it the intention of the minister to appoint that representative of the veterans' or settlers' organization in the district?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is the intention of the government to accept the nominee preferably of the settlers themselves. One of the difficulties we meet with in getting a representative of the soldiers is that there are two or three different soldiers' organizations, but as the only soldier who is interested in this revaluation is the man on the land himself, we shall as far as possible deal with the nominee of the soldier settlers.

Mr. MULLINS: Will it be the soldier settlers in the district that will make the appointment, or will it be the minister?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They make the recommendation. I have to assume the responsibility of making the appointment.

Mr. MULLINS: That is putting too much leverage in the hands of the minister to make political appointments, and I do not agree with that. I want the minister to leave that out and to let the appoinment be made by the settlers in the district. They know more about the matter and it is only fair to them that they should make the appointment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have no objection in the world, but I want my hon. friend to understand how difficult that would be. I have no concern about the actual naming of the man, but if my hon. friend has had anything to do with soldiers' organizations, he knows how many of them there are and how bitterly they can disagree amongst themselves. That is the only reason on earth why the matter is being dealt with in this way. If there was one definite organization in each province and it would name a satisfactory man for each judicial district, I would accept such nomination at once. I have no desire to interfere. My sole desire would be to accept the nominee of the organization that was really representative of the soldier settlers themselves.

Mr. MULLINS: I would be far more satisfied if the minister would agree to have the appointment made by the soldier settlers, so as to give them a chance to have some say in the matter without any political influence being brought to bear upon them.

Mr. HAY: I would like to recommend to the minister that he should have one of the soldiers' organizations either in the district or in the province nominate the men's representative who would sit on this committee. I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill or to make an amendment to it, but I feel sure it would be more satisfactory to the soldier settlers if they had the right to nominate their representative on this committee. Can the minister see his way clear to amend the bill along this line?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will at once admit the difficulty. I canvassed the situation pretty thoroughly. In Alberta, which is perhaps representative of most of the provinces, we have two or three provincial organizations representative of returned soldiers. I doubt very much whether the soldier settler has much representation in any of those organizations, although they are provincial in character. They perform a splendid service for the man who has pension difficulties and all that sort of thing, but the soldier settler has been somewhat outside of that. If the soldier settlers would nominate amongst themselves in each judicial district one who would represent them, I would have no objection in the world to appointing him.

Mr. HAY: That is what I am asking, but the bill does not provide for that. The minister has said that he wishes to dissociate himself from the matter in a political way. I can understand his difficulty in getting soldier settlers to agree upon a man, because I do not suppose there are many active organizations in the country districts representing soldier settlers. I can understand the difficulty of the minister in that respect, but I submit that the matter should be taken from the sphere of political influence.

Mr. CLARK: I am glad to note that the minister sees the difficulty he is in.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me assure my hon. friend that I am not seeing it now for the first time; I have appreciated that difficulty from the beginning.

Mr. CLARK: I am glad to note, however, that it is becoming more apparent. The situation is one that, in my opinion, was impossible when the bill was drafted, as it is impossible now. The minister declares that he is anxious to divorce himself from all responsibility in connection with these appointments but this very bill enacts that he himself shall be the person to make the appointments. The board will not be one of arbitration in the interests of the soldier, inasmuch as it will be nominated by the minister himself. No matter how anxious he may be to evade responsibility for the appointments, the minister can not do so if he insists upon this bill. He and no one else will nominate both the man who is to represent the board and the man who will represent the soldier. Furthermore, the minister will name the third independent arbitrator, the county court judge. Why not leave the soldier alone to look after his own interests instead of taking so paternal an interest in him as to nominate the man who is to represent him? I do suggest to the minister that he might very well leave the matter to the county court judge. The judge, I am sure, would not be wedded to formalities, and he would have no hesitation in accompanying the parties interested in the dispute on an inspection of the land, viewing it in order to arrive at a common sense decision. The county court judge would be independent both of the soldier and of the board. If the minister is sincerely desirous to get rid of the responsibility in this matter let him leave it to a member of the judiciary who by the very nature of his office would be independent of all concerned; and let the soldier name his own representative to take care of his interests in the arbitration. It is always possible, of course, for the soldier and the representative of the board to come to an agreement, but I can see no reason why the minister should not leave it solely to the judge to decide upon a fair valuation of the land when the representative of the board and the representative of the soldier come before him. These two might say that in their opinion the land should be valued at less than the price at which it was originally sold, and if the judge were not satisfied the responsibility would rest with him. If the judge were appointed there would be no possibility of collusion between the soldier and the representative of the board or anyone else, and there would be a greater likelihood of justice being done. If necessary the minister could make regulations requiring the judge to view the land and give a valuation where there was no dispute between the two representatives. In any case we can rest assured that in every instance the judge would see that justice was done and that there was no opportunity for any sort of collusion. Only adopting that course can the minister divorce himself from the responsibility which apparently he is anxious to avoid; and only by that course can justice be done to the soldier.

Mr. FOSTER: When I point out that personally I should be perfectly willing to accept the decision of the county court judge recently appointed in Hants-Kings, I am sure the minister will acquit me of any desire to be anything but absolutely fair to himself. I make that statement even though the gentleman to whom I refer was a late official of the Liberal party and a Liberal member of this House in the last parliament. I am sure that no one would have any hesitation about accepting any judgment he might render in a matter of this kind. If the minister has made up his mind to have a board of three, the language of the paragraph before us makes it clear that he himself or his successor, should he leave his present office, will have the responsibility of appointing the three. Now, let us suppose that there is a community in which there are five or six or, if you prefer, say two or three soldier organizations, meeting in their respective halls, and each appointing a candidate for the board. I pay the minister this compliment, from the short acquaintance that I have had with him, that if he remained in charge of the department I should be quite willing to trust to his selection of one man out of these five or six competitors. But there might be a change of ministers and one might not be quite so ready to depend upon the selection in that case. If the minister is not willing to admit that the county court judge is fit to be made the sole arbitrator, I would suggest that at least he amend the bill to provide that the judge and the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board should choose the soldiers' representative from among the rival candidates. By so doing the minister would relieve himself of responsibility, shifting it partly to the judge and partly to the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. NEILL: Does the hon. member, or any other hon. gentleman for that matter, know of any rural settlement that contains two, three, four or five rival soldier settler organizations?

Mr. FOSTER: Right at the moment I cannot point to any case; I am frank with my hon. friend. But I can point to a number of returned soldiers who would not at all be willing to accept the nominee who might be selected by the soldier settlement club or league or other gathering in a certain community. If my hon. friend has not a similar situation in his own constituency, then I can assure him he is very well favoured indeed.

Mr. NEILL: It may exist as to individuals but not as to organizations.

Mr. MULLINS: May I suggest to the minister that he allow the soldier organization to select a member of the committee? I have a petition sent to me by seventeen soldier settlers in the vicinity of Marquette. I know every one of these boys; they were raised in the district and they are all absolutely capable of taking a seat on that committee. If he does not want to select them from the district, let him select them from the provincial organization. Either method will be satisfactory to the soldier settlers. I think it would be well for the minister to amend the clause to meet this objection. It seems to be the only objection to the bill. I would prefer to have one of the boys on the board independently of any appointment by the minister or the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, I can readily understand that the minister is somewhat "up in the air" regarding this bill, especially in view of the opposition now developing from some of my friends in Manitoba who were enthusiastic for it an hour or two ago. They now see the difficulties which some of us older members have seen for years with regard to this particular form of legislation. I pointed out to the minister to-day, as I have done on several previous occasions, some of the difficulties which we had to deal with in the special committee regarding the character of this legislation. Although the minister has pronounced upon it, I am still of opinion that the arbitration, if any, should be before the county judge only, because I believe that in the great majority of cases, as I have already stated to-day, the matter can be settled as between the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board and the soldier settler himself.

I might go further and say that I am opposed to this bill in toto, for the simple reason that it gives relief to only one class of settlers, and then to a very limited extent —simply to the amount to which that settler is indebted to the government. There can be no justification for legislation of this kind except probably on three grounds: first, as a means of keeping the settler upon the land; second, as relief to the soldier settlers as soldiers, or, third, as a matter of charity. There can be no other grounds for legislation of this kind. If it is the purpose of the bill to keep the soldier settler upon the land, then we should reinstate all those soldiers who have been driven out by action of the Soldier Settlement Board or by adverse circumstances over which they had no control. Nature does not make two men alike—not even officials of the Soldier Settlement Board. At the present time we have officials of this board who are probably rather stringent in dealing with the soldier settler. They have driven hundreds from the land by officious action, by paternal care, and so on. Some of them have even gone to the extent of telling the settlers' wives how to make bread! This is something which can continue only for a limited length of time among free Canadian citizens. As a result some of these men have left the land. Wherever possible they should be reinstated, especially in view of the fact that perhaps the official of the Soldier Settlement Board in the adjoining district has continued men on the land who have made practically no payments for several years. How can you justify driving off his land one man who has made an honest legitimate attempt to continue as a settler, while to another man who has made very little effort, to say the least, you give certain benefits under this measure?

Many of the men who have already left the land have paid a considerable amount of money on account of their holdings and have made certain valuable improvements. I do not need any further proof of this than the statement of the minister himself that the government has made a profit on all the salvaged lands which have been already disposed of. Why was this profit made? Largely because of the initial payments by the soldier settler himself, amounting to at least ten per cent of the purchase money and in many cases much more than that, and also because of the improvements he put on the land. As to this legislation being based on charity, I do not think the government takes that stand. As a matter of fact every argument—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Was it not on account of crown lands having been sold that the board was ahead of the deal in very many cases after salvaging the soldier settlers' holdings?

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not think that enters into the case at all. As a matter of fact it only tends to prove my argument. If a man takes unimproved crown land and improves it so that the government makes a profit on its resale, then he should be given consideration for those improvements.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Even if those lands were not improved, when once the patents were issued to the board would they not be more salable?

Mr. ARTHURS: A man who took crown land under the Soldier Settlement scheme received no loan except for improvements or for stock. So he does not come under this bill in any event. As I said before, the third reason which could be ascribed for this bill would be charity, and every argument that has been advanced from this side of the House or elsewhere against the bill will apply equally in that case. Take for example one or two specific instances that I have thought out myself. Take the case of a man who has come over here desiring to be a farmer, and very careful in regard to assuming any financial obligations. He knew his capital was limited, and therefore he purposely purchased a farm with little or no improvements upon it. We will suppose for the sake of argument that he purchased a farm worth $3,000; he paid about $1,000 upon it; he duly made his payments and improved the farm, because naturally in order to keep himself on the land for seven or eight years he would have to improve it. Under this bill that man gets no relief because the farm to-day is worth at least as much as the loan which the government originally advanced upon it. Then take another man, less careful. He buys an adjoining quarter section and pays $5,000 for it, pays 10 per cent down, and to-day is owing the government a large sum of money. Those two farms are now of equal value—the one which was purchased for $5,000 and unimproved since has no greater value than the one which was purchased at $3,000 and upon which the soldier settler has done certain work. In the one case the careful and industrious man will derive no benefit under this bill; in the other case the man of wider ambition, who was less careful and did less work by way of improvement, will receive a large return from the government.

I think I have already told the House that there is another class of settlers, namely, the men who have paid in full; the men who were tired of this paternal care by the Soldier Settlement Board or who perhaps wanted to sell their farms. They went to Tom Jones or Dick Smith or somebody else and borrowed money at 7 per cent or 8 per cent in order to pay for their farms, and that money is still owing. These men are entitled to consideration and I see no reason why any thoughtful man, desirous of doing the best for the soldiers and the best for Canada, should not be able to give them some relief. If you pass this act as it is you are going to create a dissatisfaction all through the ranks of the men who have gone on these lands, because they will not receive equal treatment.

Mr. BOYS: I have already indicated definitely my position as to the formation of the tribunal which is to revalue these lands, and I do not intend to repeat what I have already said. If the minister is bent on having an arbitration committee and if that is the prevalent idea in his mind, why not follow the proper course and give the soldier the right to name his own arbitrator? Did the minister ever hear of an arbitration where more than the presiding arbitrator was named by any outsider? Each side names an arbitrator to act for them; in this case the department would name the arbitrator to act for the board, and the soldier should be allowed to name his arbitrator.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have been trying to meet this difficulty. The wording of that section of the bill is:

—one of whom shall be the judge of the county or district court, as the case may be, of the county or judicial district within which the land is situate, such judge to be the chairman of the committee, one a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, and one a representative of a veterans' or settlers' organization in the district.

I would be willing to have the third man named by the judge, if that would be satisfactory.

Mr. BOYS: In common with the minister I have only one desire; that is, to get a bill which will be fair to all concerned. Let the bill stand as it is so far as the judge and the nominee of the board are concerned, but let the soldier interested name his own arbitrator. There will then be at least one member of the board whose main duty will be to consider the soldier and get him what he thinks is proper.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Do I understand my hon. friend to suggest that each individual soldier should name his own man?

Mr. BOYS: Certainly. Does not the minister think that a proposition involving $3,000 or $4,000 or $5,000—every blessed thing the settler has in the world—is of sufficient importance to give him the right to name an arbitrator to act for him in the case? All manner of things are occupying the attention of judges, many of them not amounting to one-tenth or one-twentieth of those sums. I am not varying my views one iota regarding the tribunal, which I think is best for the department and for the soldier, but for some reason or other the minister—I do not think he has given the committee a good reason—seems to be bent on this committee. If that is so, then let him carry out the ideas that have been prevalent in connection with arbitrations of this kind for years and years.

I understood the minister to say that under the provisions of this amended bill soldiers will have the opportunity for a period of six months of returning upon the land and getting the benefit of this act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not catch my hon. friend's remark.

Mr. BOYS: The minister corrected himself and said October first. The minister did say six months at first, but I will not quibble over that, whether it is October first or six months. In one case it is a three months' period and in the other case six months, but I am not complaining of that. I want to ask the minister if he thinks there is any chance of carrying that out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not follow my hon. friend all the way through.

Mr. BOYS: I will state it again. As I understood him, the minister made the statement that he considered the provisions of this bill open to soldiers for a period of six months, even where the soldier was not upon the land. I now say to the minister that that is not so. In the first place it would be only to October first; it would not be six months, because there is not much chance of this bill becoming law for probably another month. So the soldier would only have about three months left. The section is as follows:

> Application for revaluation can be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the said land—

Then the minister seeks to meet the point raised by referring to October first, which appears in subsection (d) of the same section, as follows:

> All applications for revaluation must be submitted to the board prior to the first day of October, 1926.

They must be submitted by men upon the land, and if these men are not upon the land now and this bill does not become law until possibly June first, does the minister seriously think any man is going back upon the land just in the hope that he may get a revaluation and make something? It was urged upon the minister that the provisions of this act should be open to any soldier not upon the land, but whose land was still unallotted. If the original location is still unoccupied why should not a soldier make an application, whether or not he is on the land? I believe that is what the minister thought he had done; if he did not think that I do not know why he rose to correct the hon. member who was calling his attention to it. If I am right in assuming that that was his intention I think he will agree that this bill will not produce that result. Is there any reason in the world why a soldier who has vacated land; who has suffered—as we all admit very many of them have suffered—and whose land has not been allotted either under the colonization scheme referred to by the minister or under any other scheme; who has put his good money into it and who is out of pocket, should not be able to make application in connection with that land and get the relief intended by this bill? I urge the minister to consider that feature. It is not going to hurt anyone, because if the land is allotted the soldier is out of it and out of pocket, and the man who has sold his land is out of it also. I know there are difficulties in the way; I know the minister wants to do the best he can, and I think this act should be still further amended in the way I have suggested.

9 p.m.

Mr. HAY: The hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) made some reference to the newer members of the House, stating that they were beginning to see light in connection with this question. I may say that I appreciate very fully the difficulties which confronted the minister in drafting a bill of this kind. I stated so in speaking to the bill when it first came before this House and I appreciate perhaps a little more to-day the difficulties the minister has had to face in dealing with this situation. I believe the change suggested by the minister will meet the situation, and I cannot agree with the last speaker when he says that each individual soldier should name his own representative. That would be impossible and unreasonable.

Mr. BOYS: Would the hon. member tell me why that would be unreasonable?

Mr. HAY: Because the expense incurred would make it impossible. It would be too expensive to the settler to have a representative for each separate case coming before the committee.

Mr. BOYS: It would not put the settler to any expense. The representative named by the soldier would be paid by the department, under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HAY: I differ with you on that point.

Mr. BOYS: I venture to say the minister will not.

Mr. HAY: I cannot speak for the minister, I can only speak for myself. A representative appointed by one of the veterans' organizations, or some similar organization, in the centre of the district in which the soldier settler lives, will be sufficient. I think that one individual on the board could represent the different soldier settlers living in the community. I still stand squarely behind the minister with respect to the committee to be appointed, provided my hon. friend makes the change he suggested just now. That would be the most inexpensive method. It would serve the purpose of the soldier settler better than having him apply to the county court judge to have his grievances remedied.

Mr. CAHAN: In the minister's opinion, under the terms of this section, must all three members of the arbitration committee, so-called, agree in order to have a finding? Must they be unanimous in their opinion?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. CAHAN: Then if they are not to be unanimous in their opinion, under what provision of the bill is it declared that the opinion of the majority shall prevail? The mere fact of calling this committee an arbitration committee does not imply that the finding of a majority shall prevail. Under the terms of the bill there must be first, a unanimous finding, and I think that point should be carefully considered by the minister.

Furthermore, in subsection (c) there is this provision:

> The difference or depreciation in value to be determined shall be the diminution, not due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, in the present market value of the land as compared with the price at which the settler agreed to purchase the said land from the board—

And then in subsection (h) it is provided:

> Upon the hearing of all evidence submitted the committee shall decide the extent to which depreciation in value has taken place and its decision shall be final.

Now, subsection (c) contemplates a finding that no part of the diminution in value is due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of a settler, or if a part of a diminution or depreciation in value is due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, the settler shall not be allowed such depreciation as is due to neglect or mismanagement, as the case may be. But under subsection (h), when we deal with a finding, all questions as to neglect or mismanagement are excluded.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Under which?

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. CAHAN: Under sub-section (h), because the committee are to decide, and only to decide, the extent to which depreciation in value has taken place. Now the extent to which depreciation in value has taken place is one thing; the extent to which that depreciation in value is due to mismanagement or neglect on the part of a settler is another, and is not to enter into the decision according to the terms of sub-section (h).

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not a lawyer, but is not the direction in sub-section (c) to the arbitration board?

Mr. CAHAN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It merely mentions depreciation.

Mr. CAHAN: Sub-section (c) says:

> The difference or depreciation in value to be determined shall be the diminution, not due to neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler—

And so on. I suggest that there is some confusion, because under sub-section (h) you say that the committee shall decide the extent to which depreciation in value has taken place, and its decision shall be final. If that is dealing with the same depreciation that is provided for in sub-section (c), then it is unnecessary. I suggest that a judge of any court would say that there is one provision in sub-section (c) and another in sub-section (h), and that the provision in sub-section (c) would necessarily be followed. I suggest in that connection that only a judge who has some knowledge of the law is competent to decide this question of depreciation due to neglect or mismanagement. That is a question that should be left to judicial decision, and I suggest that under this bill it would be far better to leave the matter entirely to the county or district court judge. As the bill now stands I am of the opinion that the committee must be unanimous. If they are not to be unanimous, the matter should be decided by the majority, consisting of the judge and one other member. Having got that far, why not leave the decision to the judge after hearing both sides?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does not my hon. friend see that where three men are appointed there must be provision for decision by a majority? They may decide with the soldier's representative on one occasion, and with the representative of the board on another. An agreement by two would constitute a decision, but it would be impossible to have a board of three and have them all in agreement. Naturally the contestant would want to bring in a minority report, and the thing would be unending.

Mr. CAHAN: With great respect to the minister I suggest that that is exactly what he is providing, whether intentionally or not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is certainly not intentional.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest with deference that under this bill there is clearly no doubt whatever but that committee must be unanimous. There is no provision for a decision of the majority.

Mr. NEILL: I would suggest that the hon. member should look at sub-section (j).

Mr. CAHAN: That subsection reads as follows:

> The board may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make such regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the purposes of this section.

Well, that is as broad as it is possible to make it. But they may only make such regulations as may be necessary, and it is not necessary that two should constitute a quorum of that board. If a fundamental matter requiring the decision of the majority is to be a subject of regulation under sub-section (j), almost everything conceivable may be provided for. Certainly parliament is not going to give to the minister or to the board, even to the board approved by the Governor in Council, as wide powers as those suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will be necessary to give the board fairly wide power. You cannot provide the statute for everything that will crop up. All we want in the statute is the necessary provision for the operation of the board and to give parliament the requisite control.

Mr. CAHAN: I appreciate that. All I suggest, with deference, is that a matter so fundamental as to whether the three shall be unanimous, or whether the finding of two shall prevail, cannot be provided for by any regulations passed and approved within the meaning of clause (j). I do not wish to be too finicky about the matter, but there are so many "cans", "wills", "mays" and "shalls" in this measure that I do not think anyone in the House could tell exactly what it means.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Better can the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: Take clause (h), which reads:

> Upon receipt of an application for revaluation supported as aforesaid, the board shall refer the same to the district arbitration committee who will thereupon fix a convenient time and place for hearing.

Certainly the word "will" is not the proper one to carry out what I believe to be the intention of the minister. Then take clause (i), which reads:

> The committee shall forthwith forward a copy of its decision to the board, and where the decision shows—

Well, the decision does not show anything. I do not understand the meaning of the word "show" in that connection. You might say, "where the committee finds or decides". I am convinced that someone in the office of the minister has drafted these amendments hurriedly, and without due care to provide that the diction shall be so clear as to obviate litigation.

Mr. CAHILL: I desire to make a suggestion to the minister, as this appears to be the time for making suggestions and several have been made by members of the opposition. My understanding of the bill is that it is a measure designed to get a lot of people out of trouble which they have got into on account of the action of the Tory party in the past. It was designed and drafted by the Liberal government in an attempt to relieve thousands of soldiers in the country of obligations that they undertook at the instigation of the Tory party in previous years. It was presented to the House, and in less than an hour I have heard at least five suggestions from members of the opposition in regard to various ways of constituting this board. The suggestion is made by the leader of the opposition that it should be left to the county court judge, then the Conservative whip (Mr. Boys) sitting immediately behind the right hon. leader, suggests that it should be determined by a board of three.

Mr. BOYS: No. If the hon. member had been attending to his duties in the House this afternoon he would have heard the very reverse.

Mr. CAHILL: Did my hon. friend not suggest a moment ago, as to the method of appointing the tribunal, that one should be appointed by the soldier himself?

Mr. BOYS: If the hon. gentleman had listened he would have heard me declare my views as to what the tribunal should consist of, namely, the county court judge. But I said that if the minister insisted on the arbitration idea, involving a board of three, the soldier should have the right to name one arbitrator.

Mr. CAHILL: That is it exactly—that the soldier should have the right to appoint one of the arbitrators if there were to be three. Another hon. member a few moments ago suggested five, and he was kind enough to allow the government to appoint one of the five, provided the minister now in charge of the bill should be in charge of the matter during the administration of the measure. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not endorse the suggestion of my right hon. friend, and apparently there is no agreement among hon. members on the other side. They got these men into the mess and now they are not willing to let the government get them out of it. The government prepared the bill; why not let them take the responsibility of doing the best they can for these men? The whole difficulty seems to be that members of the opposition think some person is going to get a little political kudos out of it. After the discussion this afternoon in regard to this measure, if these soldiers are not turned against the opposition I do not think anything they can do in the future could have that effect. After listening to the suggestions of the opposition on a bill promoted by the government for the purpose of getting these men out of a difficulty in which they have been placed by the opposition, I suggest to the minister he should ask the committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, until my hon. friends have had time to consult with the people vitally interested, the soldiers, and ascertain what they have to say about it. I am quite satisfied the soldiers will tell hon. members opposite that they had better let the government go ahead with the business and not do any more blockading, such as they have been doing for the last few days.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope my hon. friend from Pontiac will forgive me if I do not refer to his speech, but say a few words on the bill. The main purpose of any bill is to express the will of the House as to what should be done to meet the purpose of such bill, whatever it may be.

Mr. CAHILL: The will of the majority of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we are all ready to let the minister do what he likes, it can be done very simply. I ask the minister if he would support the bill if it read this way:

> The minister may appoint district arbitration committees having jurisdiction in such soldier settlement districts as may be necessary, each committee to consist of three members, one of whom shall be the judge of the county or district court, as the case may be, of the county or judicial district within which the land is situate, such judge to be the chairman of the committee, and the others the president and secretary of the Liberal Association, or whoever else the minister likes.

Would the minister support the clause if it read that way, and appoint either the president or secretary of the Liberal Association or whomever he likes? The clause as it reads has precisely the same effect; under it the minister can appoint whomever he likes as the other two arbitrators; he can appoint the president and secretary of the Liberal Association or anybody he desires to appoint. It is true the bill says that one shall be the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, but he does not need to be an officer of the board in order to be a representative. He can appoint a Chinaman if he likes and call him the representative of the board, or he can appoint a Japanese, and call him the representative of a soldiers' organization. He does not need to be an officer of the board. But hon. members say the minister will not do that. Well, why are we inserting this clause in the bill? Why not let the minister do as he likes? Word the bill in this way:

> That as respects what the soldier shall pay on any land he gets, the Minister of the Interior may, in the exercise of his mature judgment, and in the light of his Scriptural teaching, do whatever he pleases.

We might as well pass such legislation as that. The duty of the House is so to word the bill as to guard the public interest as best we can. That is the purpose of the wording. I repeat: The word "representative" does not mean, as hon. members seem to assume, that a man to be a representative of soldiers' organization is selected by them or is even a member of the organization. He does not need to be that. The minister can go into Marquette, select the president of the Liberal association and say to him: You are on the arbitration board for Marquette district and you represent the soldiers' organization. It may be said that he cannot do so. Very well, what is the legislation for? He can appoint somebody else and say: You are the representative for the Soldier Settlement Board—and that man does not need to be an officer of the board at all. Surely the minister would not pass the legislation if it was worded as I read it first, but the way he has it in this bill it has exactly the same effect: his powers are just as ample; the meaning is just the same. Surely that is not good legislating.

I know we are taking some time, but the minister is on the wrong line, to begin with; and in the next place the legislation is sloppy.

It is crude in its whole verbiage; it is not carefully conceived. I have given the minister credit for having in mind only a good bill, a method of working this thing out aright; but he has had no excuse at all for tying to the tail of a judge any two arbitrators of any kind. What does the minister want them for? He is opening the door to fraud. He may not mean to do that and I know he does not mean to; but why do it? It does not matter what he means; if the door is open he can take it for granted that frauds will be committed. He has opened the door to anyone who may be in charge, who desires to act fraudulently in a district, to do so. The door will be just as wide open as anything in the world ever was.

The suggestions have been simple; there has been nothing complex about them. The suggestions are simply these: Follow the same course that you follow in expropriations, that you follow in assessments, that you follow in relation to any other matter where the crown and the individual under the crown are concerned; simply have the judge hear the evidence and decide. If the minister then cares to provide—and I think he probably would—some means of enabling the soldier to conduct his case, that is a simple matter. Discretion should be given to the judge in that regard to give the soldier a certain allowance up to a limit say, under such conditions that might be framed by regulation. That is only a detail, but the essence of the whole thing is to get your tribunal sound and to get the principle sound upon which the tribunal acts. If the minister gets that done, the rest is not of as great consequence although it is of consequence, of course. If you are bound to move on this line, putting it on a basis of helping rather than on a basis of protection, then you are certainly going to have to extend it to those men who are off the land, whether they were put off or not, and you have to get it just as was indicated in the speech of the hon. member just behind. These are the two main factors if the minister would consider them. It is not that we are wanting to complain.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend is speaking only for himself in that respect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know there are one or two misconceptions of the effect of the bill, but I am not speaking only for myself or only for this side of the House.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is again misquoting me, for this reason: I have reference only to his latest statement, namely, that I am making the bill too wide. Not many hon. members share that view.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am saying that the minister has not his bill wide enough in the personnel; he did not have it wide enough in the beginning. He is having it apply to a class of cases it does not need to apply to, but there are more cases on the other side to which it does not apply and he is going to have it applied to them. If he does not do so this year, he will next year; he cannot get out of doing it. What I am driving at now —and it is really the main feature—is that he should get his principle right as to the tribunal. That is the simplest thing in the world. The clause could be worded in two minutes; we would then be past that, and I venture to say that we would be past it with the overwhelming concurrence of this committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The appointment of a judge alone?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I doubt it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister does not do this, the complications he is going to get into will certainly be very great. Does he imagine he is going to satisfy soldiers' organizations by naming a man? In Portage la Prairie I do not know how many soldiers organizations there are. There is an Army and Navy Club; there is a Veterans' Association and there are soldiers settled all around that district. Which one is he going to recognize? I would not want to have to do it, and if he recognizes one the others will not be pleased. He is going to have representatives on many boards at the same time because there are thousands and thousands of cases. When he sends his representatives out he is certainly going to get some that will not be acceptable, and the whole thing is for no purpose at all. They will only be an encumbrance when they are there. The judge is the one who ought to decide the matter and the one who will decide it if the minister will only simplify his bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The leader of the opposition is quite correct when he suggests that if the president and secretary of the Liberal association were named, I would object to the bill. Any sensible man would.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said he could name them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my right hon. friend allow me to speak? I am not in the habit of interrupting him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister interrupted me several times and I was glad to have those interruptions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, when my right hon. friend strays too far from the path of rectitude. It is useless to argue that such a construction as my right hon. friend has just indicated could be placed upon the wording of the bill. That is the furthest thing from the intention of the bill. If I have told the House once, I have told it fifty times that I have no desire to name these men. I did not think I was naming them. My right hon. friend put that construction on the bill. I was leaving it to the organizations to name their representatives. I have not much objection to accepting the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) that each soldier go before the board, make his own representation and name his own representative quite apart from me altogether, if that will meet the situation, but an hon. gentleman sitting over there objects to that, and I think for some reason.

Mr. BOYS: I do not think he understood the intention.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is not the ordinary case that we are dealing with, nor have we ever dealt with soldiers' problems from the standpoint of sending them to the courts as the courts exist to-day. On every occasion we have appointed a committee of this House, accepted the finding of that committee and put it into effect. It can be said that committees of this House have been too generous in the past. I had no thought on earth of dictating to the board as to the appointment of their representatives. The only reason the word "representative" is in this bill is that we did not want to name definitely the field or district supervisor, because in some cases these men might not be the proper persons to act for the board. That is all; otherwise we would have named the district supervisor as the individual to be upon that committee. Apparently there is a desire to nail this thing down to a hard and fast rule. It is not the case that the government or the minister wants to have jurisdiction in the matter or to make it a political machine as some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think. Our anticipation is that this bill will do the government far more harm with the returned soldier than it will do it good. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to take the responsibility of it, I shall be glad to give it to them, because I think the government that handles this matter will lose more votes than it will gain. That is my candid opinion.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are trying to help it so that it will not hurt you.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I question that. However, the government must assume the responsibility. It does not rest upon my hon. friends opposite but upon us, and if we take that responsibility we must have something to say about the bill. I am not criticizing the suggestions that have been offered and I certainly do not think anyone can charge me with having done so. I have sat here and tried to gather from the various suggestions that have been put forward some idea of what kind of measure would best meet the view of the House as a whole. When the bill is passed it is scarcely likely to satisfy everyone. With due respect to the legal fraternity as represented in this House, I venture to say that no bill that might be enacted here would meet with their entire approval: there would be some who would have some fault to find with it. At any rate I have not yet seen one measure pass that was agreed to unanimously, and I have seen a good many go through all the stages of legislation in this House.

Mr. BOYS: Is it the intention that a majority of the members of the tribunal shall have the right to give a decision?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Certainly. My hon. friend does not think that it would be necessary to have an entire agreement, for in that case there would be no decision.

Mr. BOYS: No, but there should be some provision whereby any two of the three might bring in an award.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are a number of things in this bill which will have to be left to regulation.

Mr. BURY: The decision is the decision of the board as an entity and it must therefore be the decision of the whole three, unless you provide in the bill that the voice of two shall speak for the board as a whole.

Mr. MANION: As regards the possibility of appointments being made from political considerations, I would bring to the minister's attention what occurred in connection with the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, under the Hon. Mr. Beland. That was much more a soldier organization than is the Soldier Settlement Board, for, as the hon. member (Mr. Power) pointed out this afternoon, the Soldier Settlement Board was originally established as a settlement scheme. The Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, on the contrary, was essentially an organization to serve the interests of the soldiers themselves, and notwithstanding that fact changes were made in the medical personnel throughout the country for no other than political reasons. Many such changes were made. If, therefore, there was that danger in connection with the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, because the medical officers who were displaced were of the wrong political colour, is there not the same danger, indeed, a greater danger, in this case where the organization is not so peculiarly one in the interests of the soldiers? I do not charge the minister with anything of that kind—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You cannot, because I have made no changes in the board.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt that the minister is sincere in his desire to put through a proper measure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will not argue that the officers of the board were appointed because they were Liberals.

Mr. MANION: What I am saying is that changes were made in the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment because of political considerations, Conservatives being replaced by Liberals. And this occurred not in one instance, but in many. At the head of the lakes a Conservative who had served in the lines overseas was replaced by a Liberal who had never been out of Canada, and the same is true of the constituency represented by my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross). I have heard that hon. member make a similar statement regarding certain officers in his section of the country. The fact of the matter is that throughout Canada changes were made in the personnel of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment because the incumbents who were ousted happened to be of the wrong political persuasion. Now that, as I have said, was essentially a soldier organization, whereas the board we are discussing was established primarily as a means of settling soldiers. I argue, therefore, that there is a greater danger of political influence being brought to bear in this matter than in the other. I give the minister credit for sincerity and I think he should be only too willing to avoid the possibility of having this legislation used as a political machine. He can help to this end by allowing the judge to be the sole arbitrator in these cases.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not afraid of the political machine. My hon. friend refers to the fact that a few doctors were changed on the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. God knows there were not many on this board who were of any other stripe than Conservative when it started.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Lots of them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not many.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What about Edmonton?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have, however, nothing to do with the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I am speaking of the Soldier Settlement Board. I do not know what their politics were, but there were not many Liberals on it.

Mr. MANION: That is to their discredit, because the men were appointed only on the ground of their having been overseas.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking of the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say there were not any Liberals on that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not many.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There were only three on the board, one of whom certainly was a Liberal. As to the other two, I do not know what their politics were.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Now that the matter is up we may as well have a free-for-all over it. I do not propose to have it said that because the Liberal party are in office they have indiscriminately made changes for political reasons. I have never practised that sort of thing and probably have not practised it enough.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear. That is more like it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): However, I do not propose to start now.

Mr. MANION: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) indicates to the Minister of the Interior the danger that exists.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will be rather a sad day for the soldier settlers if politics are to have anything to do with this matter. Personally I am thoroughly satisfied with the board and with the way they are carrying on, and I can assure the committee that I have never inquired into politics, although it has been stated on more than one occasion that, if anything, the Liberal party has suffered in this respect. But that is not the way we want to approach this question, and I resent the implication, either from the leader of the opposition or from any other hon. gentleman opposite, that because this bill is drafted in its present form political advantage will be taken of its provisions.

Mr. MANION: We are only pointing out the dangers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend seems to be very much alarmed about the dangers.

Mr. CLARK: Suppose the Minister of Agriculture should take charge.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The committee is dealing with the Minister of Interior at present; it can deal with the Minister of Agriculture when agricultural matters are under consideration. Now, I am prepared to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Boys) with respect to the soldiers' representative, but I am not prepared to accept the judge as the final arbitrator. I make that perfectly plain to the committee, because the government must take responsibility for the bill. Further, I am prepared to amend the clause relating to the classes to be dealt with.

Mr. BROWN: If the minister accepts the suggestion of the hon. member with regard to the representative of the soldier, I would suggest, in order to preclude such an interpretation as was indicated by the leader of the opposition, that it be made to read "an appointee of the Soldier Settlement Board" instead of a representative.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely the committee will leave one poor individual for the minister to have some say about. The government, I repeat, must assume the responsibility in the matter.

Mr. BROWN: I was merely suggesting that he should be an appointee of the board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He will be an appointee of the board, but the minister will reserve the right to make that particular appointment. The government must have some representation, but there will be no interference on the part of the minister. I am prepared to widen the scope of the bill to deal with every man whose contract is not cancelled, but I will not go further, because to do so to an unlimited degree would only create untold complications. As to the decision of the board, I am quite prepared to insert a proviso that the majority of the board shall prevail in every case.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister referred to "any man whose contract is not cancelled." Will that include those men whose contracts are closed by payment in full?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not at all; they are in the same position as those who have cancelled their contracts.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BURY: The contracts are determined.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. It covers only the man whose contract is in existence and who owes the government a substantial sum of money on it.

Mr. CAHAN: I would point out to the minister that if he does insert—and he certainly must insert as a fundamental provision of this bill—that the decision of the majority shall prevail, he cannot do so under this clause.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I propose to amend it.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I would call attention to this objection. Provision being made that if the arbitration committee, so-called, is not necessarily unanimous the finding of two of the arbitrators will prevail, it is quite possible for two members other than the judge to unite to oust the judge entirely. Thereupon you have two members of the committee rendering a majority decision opposed to that of the judge on whatever legal questions may arise. I suggest to the minister that he make his amendment read so that one member of the majority of two must be the judge, otherwise it is utterly useless to have a judge as one of the members of the committee.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) apparently is not very sure as to what the bill really means. After listening to all the discussion that has taken place, I have not been able to apprehend the meaning of the suggestions that have been made other than that the county court judge shall decide all the circumstances. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) seemingly is very much afraid that the tribunal will in reality be a political machine. I do not think there is much danger of that if the right people are chosen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FORKE: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not lost faith in human nature yet. Politics is bad enough, but I believe men can be found to act honestly and uprightly, no matter whether they be Conservatives or Liberals. As I mentioned before, I have had some experience as a member of a tribunal ascertaining the value of land. Land valuation is a very difficult and complicated problem. No man can tell what is the value of a certain portion of land. The only criterion of its value is what anyone is willing to pay for it. That is the only real basis of valuation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. FORKE: Some of my hon. friends say, "No, no;" but there is no other way of ascertaining the value of land except on the basis of what somebody will pay to get hold of it. The value goes up and down and a great many things enter into the question. Now, a judge may be the very best qualified individual to decide certain legal questions, but I doubt if he is best fitted to give a final decision on the value of land. He is learned in many ways, he is perhaps a good judge of human nature, which, of course, is of great assistance to him in weighing evidence, but that evidence must be adduced by people who know what they are talking about. Consequently if he has the other two members of that board sitting with him, and they have a pretty good idea of the value of land, I think perhaps he can perform a very useful function in weighing the evidence adduced. In regard to who two of the arbitrators should be, I think the minister would be well advised to take a man representing the soldier settlers in the district. It should not be at all difficult in any particular locality to divide it into districts, and then let the soldiers in those several districts elect someone to be their representative upon the board. I am sure those soldier settlers are so earnest in their desire to get a thoroughly competent board that they would not worry whether their representative was a Conservative, a Progressive or a Liberal. Undoubtedly they would select the best man available to represent them. Although technically the minister is head of the Soldier Settlement Board, I do not think that even members of the opposition believe he is going to interfere with the arbitrator that will be chosen to represent the Soldier Settlement Board. It does seem to me that those two arbitrators with the county court judge ought to constitute a board that will be just as near satisfactory as you can get it. I am quite aware that no matter how you set about doing it, this work will be beset with difficulties and will not give satisfaction to a number of soldier settlers; but we have simply to do the very best we can under the circumstances. I do believe that most hon. members are really anxious to get something that will be as nearly satisfactory as possible. I think I would agree with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that the judge should form one of the majority of the committee when the decision is not unanimous. There is something in the argument of the leader of the opposition that there might be some collusion between the soldier settler representative and the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board, and consequently the common interest might not be taken care of just as carefully as it should be. By making the judge one of the majority I think we shall guard against that contingency.

The minister is altogether too apologetic. I think he ought to make up his mind just exactly what he wants, and fight for it. However, I am inclined to believe the criticisms have been offered in good faith and that we are all anxious to do the best we can for the soldier settler. I have been getting letters every day, in fact I got two to-day, voicing objection to a judge being the final arbitrator. I can understand how the soldier settlers may take that point of view, and of course there are two sides to every question. I have a long letter and quite a large petition from British Columbia—I think they are from the group of men referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill)—and all those people are against the judge having the sole authority. This is a serious question which is going to cost a good deal of money, and I am inclined to agree with the minister that the government will not come through with very much glory when they finish. I am perfectly sure of that.

Mr. CLARK: Would the hon. member tell us from whom he received the petition, and its contents?

Mr. FORKE: I could not do that because I have not the petition with me, but it is no secret; I will let the hon. member see it if he so desires. I think I have received more complaints in regard to this question from British Columbia than from any other province; I believe I receive more letters touching this matter than do most of the members of my group, and I find a great deal of dissatisfaction in British Columbia and in Manitoba. I do not know that I have added anything to the value of this debate, but I hope we can get together and work out something which will be satisfactory to everyone.

Mr. GEARY: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: In a three-man board does not the county court judge become the final arbiter?

Mr. FORKE: Not necessarily so.

Mr. GEARY: Why not, if there is any dispute?

Mr. FORKE: The other two members of the board might agree and would form a majority, leaving the judge in the minority.

Mr. GEARY: Then there would be no dispute between the other two parties.

Mr. FORKE: What I suggested was that the majority would have to be composed of one of the other members and the judge.

Mr. GEARY: Is not the judge always the final arbiter, if he constitutes the majority?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Supposing the other two members decide against the judge; he would not have anything to say about it at all.

Mr. FORKE: I suppose that difficulty might arise. However, I have said all that I propose to say in regard to the matter. I am quite satisfied that we will never get a bill with which everyone will be satisfied, but we are going to do the best we can. I have had a little experience with appeals to a judge, and I can tell hon. members that this is going to be very unpopular with the county court judges. They do not want this work, and do not like it. I know that the judges are honourable and patriotic and will undertake the duty, but they will not like the work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I just wanted to ask the hon. member a question before he closes and I am quite conscious of the 10 p.m. fact that he is just as anxious as anyone to find a real solution to this question. Would he object to the department being represented by one man, the soldier represented by one man, these two appearing before the judge and the judge giving a decision after considering all the facts?

Mr. FORKE: I think what I have already said would almost lead to that conclusion. There is not very much difference of opinion in regard to the advisability of having those two representatives; the only difference which exists at present is as to the standing they should have. The recommendation of the right hon. leader of the opposition I believe, was that the judge should sit as a judge, with the others appearing as witnesses. Under the other plan, instead of appearing only as witnesses they would be members of the board and would have more standing in that way.

I would like to refer for just a moment to the question of expense. We are not going to add much to the expense by enlarging the board to three. It may be rather arbitrary to put any such regulation into the act, but I would almost be prepared to say that no lawyer should appear before that board. I am quite well aware that we cannot do without the lawyers in a great many cases; we have found that out by experience, but this is one of the cases where we can get along without their help. I was chairman of a court which held sessions all over the province of Manitoba, and in every place where lawyers appeared we were held up. If we undertook to value land and inquire as to the assessment we generally could get somewhere, but if lawyers appeared in the case it took us hours to get anywhere. I hope the legal members of the House will pardon my references.

Mr. NEILL: In the way this debate has swung around—I might say rambled around—on the several phases of this bill we have a good illustration of the troubles we get into in departing from the well established rules of the House, sanctioned by years of experience. It has been well known that in a committee we can only debate one section of a bill at a time. Had we not departed from that custom to-day and the last time this bill was being discussed we would have made more progress. As the debate has gone on, one man has spoken of the first section, and following him someone else speaks about the last section. If we had only started at one end of the bill we would have made some progress, and I hope that rule will be adhered to in the future.

I would like to support a portion of the remarks of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys). He brought forward a case which has been brought up again and again during the last two or three days, the case of men who have been what is popularly known as salvaged—that is the technical term—or who have been thrown off or have abandoned their farms. They are off the land. A number of hon. members have made representations on behalf of those men, urging that they be given at least an opportunity to go back on the land again at the reduced value, if such be granted by the board. The minister said twice to-day that he was prepared to make an arrangement of that character; where the land had not been disposed of to an empire settler or in any other way, he was prepared to give the soldier a chance to go back. I do not believe many would return, for many reasons. Most of them are sick of it, but I think it would be the proper thing to give them a chance. I was going to rise when I heard him make that remark early this afternoon and again this evening; I wanted to ask that that be put into the bill, because we all know that utterances made on the floor of this House are not bound up in the bill and form no portion of it. Within the last few minutes, however, the minister stated, if I have not misunderstood him—and if I have I hope he will correct me—that he would not give any instructions to include the man who has had his agreement cancelled. I think it was agreed by the House that these men should get some consideration, and I think the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) was also going to raise that point. I would like to ask the minister to make that promise again, and to allow it to be put into the bill in order that these men may have an opportunity of going back again.

Mr. HANNESSON: The minister made a statement a moment ago that he would not look after anyone who had left the land. I want to remind him that the last time this matter came up he gave an undertaking that the desired provision in that respect would be embodied in the bill. Now I want to ask him this question: Is he or is he not willing to extend the scope of the bill to cover the revaluation of all salvaged lands undisposed of by the board, so that any former settler may make application and be entitled to the benefit if he can establish to the satisfaction of the board that he has proper qualifications and is financially able to carry on without further assistance? I gave the minister a copy of the memorandum I have here, so that this question will not surprise him. I only ask that the privilege be extended for a matter of two months in respect of a man whose land is still in the hands of the board, and for four months in the matter of the selection of any other lands the board still hold.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not follow my hon. friend. He suggests that the soldier settler be allowed a period of two months.

Mr. HANNESSON: That he be given a preference for two months.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We certainly made a promise that we would give consideration to those cases where salvaging was going through, or in cases where we had not allocated the land.

Mr. HANNESSON: Not disposed of it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Or disposed of it by allotment or in some other way. I want to make it perfectly clear we are not considering the case of the man whose lands have been salvaged and are gone, but in cases where salvaging has just gone through, the hope was entertained that we might be able to get those men back. There are a thousand and one difficulties in the way of dealing with a man who is off his land and gone. He still owes the government in many cases a considerable amount of money, his stock and implements have been sold. This illustrates the difficulties that arise. But in the case of the man who can re-establish himself and has not been allocated his land we are prepared not only to receive his application but to notify him that if he wants to come back we will give him reasonable time to re-establish himself.

Mr. HANNESSON: Will the time be extended?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This man simply comes back and gets into the same position as the man who has not left his land at all.

Mr. HANNESSON: I understand the minister is prepared in the case of the empire settlement scheme to give settlers there the land on the revaluation basis. I am not asking anything in respect of land that was abandoned, but in respect of any soldier settler lands we give the returned man who is qualified and does not need further financial assistance the opportunity to buy at the revaluation figure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is right.

Mr. HANNESSON: In making a resale to a soldier settler is the minister prepared to give credit for the amount of principal paid by the settler in the past on the revaluation figure? That point is also mentioned in the memorandum I give him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as his payments were concerned he would have to go back just as he stood.

Mr. HANNESSON: He would receive no credit for past principal payments?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He would be in exactly the same position as if he had not left the land; he would be in no better or no worse position.

Mr. HANNESSON: Suppose he goes on another piece of land?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That would raise complications. It is a most difficult thing to settle. The man will be beginning all over again. I am not prepared to give my hon. friend a direct answer; I want time to consider that.

Mr. BURY: I understand the minister's answer to the last question is that in that case the soldier and his agreement will be reinstated, and he will get the benefit of the reduction on revaluation as though he had not been put off the land at all and his original agreement had not been determined.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot conceive of any other condition.

Mr. BURY: That is the position I understand the minister to take. I understand he is also prepared to amend the bill so as to embody this provision in the measure and not leave it to be provided for by regulations.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid we cannot do that without making many amendments in the old act. What is proposed is a very simple process. We will treat cases of the kind as though salvage had not taken place.

Mr. BURY: Surely the minister could put something in the bill providing that in cases where an agreement has been determined, or is in process of determination through the board, on the fulfilment of certain conditions the agreement that has been or is being determined on that ground may be reinstated, and the man may come under the provisions of the bill in the same way as though he had not forfeited his rights. The trouble is just this: I can see that the important provisions of the bill are apparently going to be in the regulations and that is a very pernicious practice. We do not want the provisison of the bill to be in the regulations, and leave these regulations at the mercy and under the control of an order in council. The House ought to pass on all the important substantive provisions of the bill.

There is one further observation I should like to make in this connection. I cannot see how the country can suffer by allowing a soldier settler who has forfeited his agreement and been put off his land coming forward as a new man, making an application, and getting a preference for the purchase of other lands that are still in the hands of the government. All those lands will have to be put up for sale and they can only be sold to proper and competent purchasers at a fair value at the time the sale is made. Now, if the soldier who had forfeited his agreement because of the excessive price that he paid for his land is now in a position to become a purchaser of other lands at the price at which the government would sell them to a stranger, why should he not have the right to do so?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no particular objection, but should the payments he had made on the former land be carried forward?

Mr. BURY: I did not quite catch the minister's question, but my contention is this: I cannot see what objection there is to allowing a returned soldier who has not had his agreement determined, from purchasing land on the same conditions as an ordinary settler.

There is one other matter I should like to mention, and that involves going back for a minute to the question of the personnel of the arbitration board. If the minister is determined to have his board of three, may I again urge in support of the position taken by the hon. member (Mr. Boys) the suggestion which the minister said he was prepared to adopt, namely, that the soldier himself have the right to make the appointment of his representative. It has been stated that the better way would be to allow the soldiers in a certain district, either through their constituted organizations or any new organization, to appoint a representative in their behalf. Now the difficulty is that where a soldier has confidence in the soldier organization of his district he will in any event probably accept the appointee of that organization, but it is not at all uncommon for an individual soldier not to be in particular favour or in good standing with the soldier organization of his district. If he is in sympathy with and has confidence in the soldier organization of his district, he will accept their nominee anyway; even if you leave to him the power of appointing his own nominee he will probably appoint the nominee chosen by them, whereas if you get the occasional man, as you are bound to do, who has not the sympathy or the support of the soldiers' organization, he may desire to appoint his own nominee. I would suggest, therefore, that the soldier would in all cases be in a better position if he were to appoint his own nominee on the board. It is not an unusual proceeding. In every arbitration where there is a dispute between two parties each party appoints his own arbitrator, and the third arbitrator is selected by the two arbitrators. There is no reason why, in a dispute between an individual soldier and the Soldier Settlement Board, the same thing should not be done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not propose to change the arbitration board in any particular, except to accept the suggestion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Boys), namely, that the soldier shall appoint his own arbitrator. The other two shall remain as they are, the judge and the representative of the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. BOYS: I desire to express my appreciation of the consideration given by the minister to my suggestion, but I observe that he seems to rather reluctantly accept the suggestion regarding the right of the soldier to name his own arbitrator. I should not think the minister would accept it if he did not think it was practicable. I believe it is practicable, and I suggest to him that in providing for that he should insert a clause making it necessary that the arbitrator to act for the soldier shall be a landowner resident in the judicial district in which the land is situate. That would avoid any chance of the soldier appointing a man residing many miles away. Where one such soldier has been acting, assuming he is a capable man, the chances are that other soldiers coming before the same judge and the same arbitrator appointed by the board will accept that nominee as his nominee as well, and in that way I do not think there would be very much embarrassment in connection with it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the hon. member not think it would complicate the matter if we inserted these provisions? It would be much simpler to let the soldier nominate his own representative; then one man may be chosen for two or three dozen. But if you start in by saying that he must be a farmer—

Mr. BOYS: I said a resident.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I prefer to leave it open; let him have a free choice and not tie him up in any way.

Mr. BOYS: I am quite satisfied. Remarks have been made of a critical nature. I understood we were making these suggestions at the request of the minister, and I offer no apology for any time I have taken up. This is a matter involving millions of dollars, and even if the discussion has taken all the afternoon and part of this evening, the time has been well spent. The minister must feel that some improvement has been made on the previous legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the committee agree I should like to run over the bill, because when I bring it back I desire to have it in such form that it will meet the suggestions, as far as practicable, that would appear to be acceptable; then, we would not have to spend a great deal of time upon it. I take it there is no objection to clause 1 of 68. I propose to amend sub-section (a) by striking out all the words after "revaluation" down to the word "and" in the third line, so that it will read:

> Application for revaluation shall be submitted to the district superintendent of the Soldier Settlement Board for the district within which the said land is situate.

That strikes out the provision that he shall be on the land, and it takes in all the soldiers whose contracts are in existence.

Mr. GEARY: Read clause 68, section (1), just before that. There is a limitation still in the act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In answer to what the hon. member for East Edmonton has said, I am informed by the chairman of the board that they have authority now to rescind cancellation proceedings and reinstate the former owner of the land, provided, of course, that they have not disposed of the land; and as a matter of fact they are doing it. So that provision is made for that case. Without amending the act the board has that authority.

Mr. BURY: I know that, but they could not exercise that authority unless you strike out these words, because these words shall surely conclude them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If they reinstated them now they would not have authority to reduce the value of the property.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): So far as the arbitration board is concerned, the matter has been amply discussed and the minister tells us what he intends to do. But I am still concerned with the question of the man who is on the land. There is the further point of the settler who definitely left the land. That is what we are considering here. I want to cite a case where the soldier, having come to the conclusion that the land was too highly valued, left it and definitely abandoned it. The minister has stated that he would be prepared to consider allowing a man to go back on the land if his agreement had not been cancelled. There is some indefiniteness as to what that means, because I do not think the board takes any formal cancellation proceedings. If the man walks off, they have the authority to salvage the farm and realize on it? Assuming a man has to all intents and purposes left the farm; you now decide to revalue that farm. I want that man to have the right to go back to the board and say, "On your revaluation I want to go back on that land". I think that point is under consideration. I gathered, when this matter was being discussed the other day, and recently to-night, that in the view of the minister, if such a man would satisfy the board he was a good risk and was not going to ask for any further commitment from the board by way of advance of moneys, the matter of taking him back on the land would be considered.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the land had not been disposed of.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Yes. I think the House is generally agreed that he should be permitted to go back on the land. Then I think we must amend the bill to make it read in this way. If the minister were dealing with it, I have no doubt he would let the man go back; but in the administration of this measure, whether it be by a board of arbitration or by a judge, you will find that when a man comes to that board asserting a right, they will go to the legislation and say: We have no discretion. Anyone who has had experience with pensions knows that the Board of Pension Commissioners, however philanthropic may be their intention, go to the act and say: We have no discretion. The same thing will ultimately apply to this measure of relief. The arbitration board or the judge will turn to this amendment and will say: Those are our powers. I suggest to the minister that in order to carry out this intention he should so amend the bill as to say in effect that not only those who are residing on the land, as section 68 (1) says, but soldier settlers who, having left their farms, now desire to go back to farms which have not been allotted on the revaluation scheme, shall be entitled to apply for revaluation.

Mr. MILLAR: In that connection I should like to ask the minister if such a returned soldier will have the benefit of and be given credit for his former payments on that land, that is in case a soldier is allowed to go back on land that he previously left, the contract perhaps having been cancelled. In some cases he may have paid a sum of money almost as much as the land is revalued at. Is the minister prepared to say whether in such a case the soldier would be given credit for the amount of money he had previously paid, or must he start at the bottom again and pay for the land practically twice over?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought I made it clear to the committee twice this evening that the soldier would be re-established in the same position he was in when he left the land, and that whatever principal payments had been credited to him would still be to his credit. He might have paid a great deal of interest, but that does not apply on principal payments on the land. He would be in the same position as the man who had stayed on the land and made his payments, when we can replace him on his own land. A suggestion has been made from the opposition that not only should we do that, but we should allow men to go back and take other land. In that case he could not be given credit for any payments.

Mr. LADNER: Does the minister say that interest payments on the higher valuation will be charged against the soldier's account?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You would get into a hopeless tangle if you started to take interest payments into consideration. Whatever principal payments a man has made against his property would naturally apply, but his interest payments are simply interest payments he has made on the land at the valuation whether high or low.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister answer the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy) about amending the bill?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I would say that this is not the regular routine mortgage foreclosure proceeding. The board have authority under the act to cancel the agreement with the settler and he is simply served with a notice. What they do is simply to rescind that cancellation when the land is available and not to wait for him to make application, but at once to offer it to him if he wants to come back, provided—and there will always have to be a proviso—that he is morally and otherwise a fit man to come back. There are a great many cases in which it would be a mistake to try to make a man come back; to make it indiscriminate that he should be allowed to come back without let or hindrance is out of the question. But in a case where he wants to come back and he can re-establish himself on the land, that course would be adopted. We have that authority in the act at the moment.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): It does not seem to be so to me.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, they are doing it, although they may be doing it contrary to the act. Of course they cannot reduce the value. The amendments will take care of that situation.

Mr. WARD: In the event of the suggestion that came principally from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hannesson) being adopted, what would happen in the case of a salvaged soldier whose chattels were all gone? It would be impossible for such a man to re-establish himself in order to come under this legislation. I am not sure that that point has been made clear. I have remarked that members making these suggestions, I think without exception, are members who are not soldiers or not farmers.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): The hon. gentleman is making a mistake.

Mr. WARD: If hon. members understood the matter as we understand it who have gone through the school of experience, they would know that not one per cent of those who have already been salvaged will even make application. I am certain that is the case in my riding. I think we are spending a great deal of time over something that will never happen. We are endeavouring to develop an impossible case. I should like to see, if this suggestion is adopted, that that soldier is put back in the same position he occupied before he was salvaged; otherwise, he is still tremendously discriminated against. I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has thought out that phase of the question.

Mr. HAY: If the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) is followed it will mean great expense to the country. The committee cannot meet to consider every individual application for a revaluation. Supposing the committee announce that they will sit at a certain place to hear applications for revaluation. If such individual soldier has the right to name his own representative on the committee and if you have fifty cases coming before the committee, you will have fifty soldiers' representatives present, and according to the bill we shall have to appropriate money to pay those representatives. That is my understanding of the bill, and therefore I say that the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe is in my opinion impracticable and would prove costly to the country. If we had committees in one or two hundred different districts of the Dominion sitting at the same time and had an army of a thousand individuals representing the soldier settlers, that would mean a large expense to the country. It seems to me that the scheme is unworkable. I would suggest that the veterans' organizations in the different districts nominate the man who is to represent the soldiers. That, I think, would be more satisfactory to the returned men; it would be more workable, and it would be less expensive.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to amend the bill now so that at least we may get something fairly satisfactory, because I can assure the committee that I shall not attempt to change it further. If it is objected to on the next introduction I will withdraw it. And that is no idle threat, because it is an absolute impossibility to secure a measure that will meet the views of the committee as a whole if there is to be no give and take. If on the other hand the government takes full responsibility for the bill I will put it through, but I will not spend an inordinate length of time over it. We have been discussing it now almost three days, and while I do not suggest for a moment that the time has been wasted, I do say that the committee should allow it to go through. Having tried as far as I possibly can to meet the general wish of the committee, I trust that the bill will now be allowed to go through. As regards (a) we shall now include all contracts that are in good standing as well as those that are being rescinded where the land has not been allocated. We are already able, however, to deal with such cases.

Mr. BURY: The minister might add a provision in respect of agreements which are reinstated by the board under the existing act and in respect of which the land has not been allocated. I understand that he is going to amend the bill in relation to agreements that are in process of rescission.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is to say, where the land has not been allocated but is still in the hands of the board. As I have pointed out, we have authority already to deal with such cases.

Mr. BURY: That is all I am asking.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There will be no necessity for adding an amendment to that effect because the board is already empowered in that respect, although it has not the authority to revalue. That authority is being given by this legislation. The board at present can put the soldier back on the land while it is in their hands.

Mr. BURY: That is all I am suggesting, to bring within the purview of the bill the agreements that are reinstated by the board under its existing powers.

Mr. BOYS: I think it will be necessary to amend line 13 to conform with line 20 in paragraph (a).

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As amended, paragraph (a) will read:

Application for revaluation shall be submitted to the district superintendent of the Soldier Settlement Board for the district within which the said land is situate.

Mr. BOYS: With the words struck out by that amendment the paragraph provides that the application for revaluation may be considered only when made by a settler residing on and himself farming the land. If a man is not residing on the land I should think that he has abandoned it. So that if you omit these words in paragraph (a) and do not strike out in line 13 the words "who has not abandoned his land" the two paragraphs will conflict.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that line 13 refers to the case in which there is a quit claim.

Mr. BOYS: If that is the meaning of the paragraph I think the language is unfortunate. I do not want to be critical but I do not think you can say that a man has not abandoned his land merely because he has not given you a quit claim deed. When he leaves the land he abandons it whether he gives such a deed or not. I do not want the minister to make the amendment now. I simply bring the matter to his attention because I think it would be wise to make that change.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend referring to a man who is temporarily off the land?

Mr. BOYS: Subsection (1) reads:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, the board is hereby empowered upon the application of a settler who has agreed to purchase any land from the board, who has not abandoned his land—

And so forth. The last clause in that paragraph, as I have quoted it, means that the man must be still on the land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He has not abandoned the land if his contract is not cancelled. If he has abandoned the land then he is outside the provisions of the act.

Mr. BOYS: You should provide for all cases where the contract has not been cancelled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have covered that.

Mr. LADNER: There is a distinction between abandonment and temporary absence.

[Mr. Bury.]

Mr. BOYS: I do not want to worry the minister; indeed, I want to compliment him on the extraordinary patience he has shown in this matter, and I am convinced that he is most sincere in his desire to do what is best. I will therefore say no more but simply bring the point to his attention.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not follow the argument of my hon. friend, and I want to understand it, because I do not wish to bring the bill back again unless I have it as nearly as possible in final shape.

Mr. BOYS: I understand the minister does not expect to do it at this moment. I propose that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. The committee will not rise until I get a definite idea of where we are going to land with this bill, because, as I say, when I bring it back I do not propose to be bothered with any further amendments. If it is not then satisfactory, the government will have to take the responsibility of passing the measure as submitted.

Mr. BOYS: All I am seeking to do now is to pass on to the minister what appears to me to be a conflict in the wording of these two sections. When he gives consideration to what I have said, if he thinks there is nothing in it of course he will not accede to it; on the other hand, if he thinks there is something in it, perhaps he will accept it.

Mr. BURY: Will the minister not delete the words "who has not abandoned his land" from sub-section 1 of section 68?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that this section is for the purpose of taking care of cases where the soldier has sold his land to a civilian.

Mr. BOYS: I would say at once to the minister, there is no room for doubt in that case at all.

Mr. BURY: In such a case surely the soldier's agreement must first have been determined.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that the section is to cover the case of a settler who has sold his land—abandoning it —under a three party agreement. Clearly, we do not intend to deal with any but soldiers.

Mr. BURY: The phrase "abandoning his land" will not cover that case at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend would not suggest that either the settler or the man who succeeded him should be given consideration?

Mr. BURY: No, I only suggest that the phrase does not cover the case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress. May I say that I am very thankful for the kind expressions of opinion respecting this bill, but I want to add, Sir, that when this measure comes down again the government will accept full responsibility for it, and I trust the committee will be ready to pass it without very much further discussion. I am going to amend the bill to meet what I think is the consensus of opinion of hon. members, but I certainly do not expect to spend another two or three hours over it.

Mr. STIRLING: May I ask whether the minister has given consideration to the point I raised with regard to the particular situation of those soldier settlers who have gone on orchard lands? I have been waiting for him to reach clause (c) so that I might again raise the point.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has moved that the committee rise, therefore any discussion is out of order.

Mr. STIRLING: May I not speak to the motion, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I propose to look carefully into the suggestion.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister proposes to take it into consideration in that regard?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Progress reported.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House spent nearly a day on the second reading of the Old Age Pensions resolution. Possibly hon. members would be agreeable to allow the second reading to pass in order to get the resolution into committee. We would like to make a little progress to-day.

Mr. ROGERS: I think my right hon. friend should allow that to stand. It is a very important matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is only the second reading of the resolution. It has still to be discussed in committee, and the bill founded on it has still to be introduced.

Mr. ROGERS: I quite appreciate that, still we must have some notice in view of the importance of this measure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

The House in committee of Supply, Mr. Duff in the chair.

Department of Labour—Annuities Act, $5,000.

Mr. BOYS: Mr. Chairman, it is certainly a relief to find a reduction. Perhaps the minister will tell us how he is able to properly carry out the necessary work in connection with this item and at the same time cut off $15,000.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, this expenditure covers disbursements for travelling and advertising. The reduction is made because it is not expected that there will be any extensive expenditure for advertising this year.

Mr. HANSON: The Annuities Act has never been given its proper place in the life of the country, and I am surprised that my hon. friend, coming in with all the zeal of a a new minister, is desirous of cutting down the operations of his department with respect to this act. I cannot very well understand why the act should be under the Labour department. The Annuities Act of Canada is a fine thing, and should be promoted by the government, but I think it should be under a department which has offices in every part of the Dominion; in my humble judgment it should be under the Post Office Department, which I think is the plan adopted in the Old Country. We should have some statement of policy by the government as to whether they intend to go on with this scheme and push it. People who buy annuities under such a scheme as this are relieved of all anxiety for their old age; they get back everything without any expense, and it seems to me that instead of embarking upon a very expensive scheme of old age pensions this act should be helped in order to make it really worth while. I do not say one should be assisted to the exclusion of the other, but I do say that this act has never been given its fair share of public esteem. Will the government say whether or not the Annuities Act is to be shelved, to make room for the much more pretentious scheme of old age pensions?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no intention on the part of the government to shelve the Annuities Act. I quite agree that it is an excellent act and an important one, but we are able to reduce the expenditure as it has been reduced in the estimates—which I may tell the committee very frankly were very largely prepared before I assumed control of the department—because it was thought that without any impairment of the usefulness of the act we could dispense with the sum which has hitherto been expended in advertising.

Mr. HANSON: I notice that the Post Office Department is now embarking on a large scheme of advertising; that is a department with a monopoly in its own field, and in my judgment it does not require any advertising at all. The Annuities Act should be made popular, and the only way in which that can be done is by publicity, bringing the advantages of the act before the public. I would suggest that the minister give some consideration to this matter before his next estimates come up—if they ever do come up—in order to see whether this act cannot be brought before the public as it should be.

I would like to ask the minister how many new annuities were purchased during the past year. Perhaps we might have the list for the past five years in order to show in some degree whether the act is popular with the public or whether they are leaving it alone, as I am afraid they are.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The total annuities purchased for the year 1925-1926 numbered 669, with a total value of $1,945,571, as compared with 486 annuities in 1924-1925 with a value of $1,606,665.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the minister please tell the committee how the appropriation was expended last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was expended as follows: travelling expenses, $315.05; advertising, $60; printing and stationery, $916.44; telegrams, 80 cents; commissions paid to postmasters, $1,534.85; sundries, $56.14, and outstanding advances, $1.55, a total of $2,884.83 to March 17, 1926.

Mr. BOYS: I understand that it is the policy of the department, so far as possible, to sell these annuities at cost. I remember well a discussion which took place some two years ago; I cannot recall the 11 p.m. figures, but it seems to me that a very decided profit was shown in the sale of annuities, and the then minister intimated in the House that he had under consideration a possible revision of the basis upon which the cost of the annuities was worked out. I do not know whether the minister has had time to consider that question, or whether he is familiar with it. Can he inform the committee as to the financial state of the balance sheet for the past year in this connection? If the department is making a considerable profit, would it not be advisable to reduce the cost of the annuities? I remember inquiring into that cost, and I found it fairly high. The minister informed the House that possibly the time had arrived when some reduction in the cost of those annuities could be worked out. I think the cost is figured on a certain rate of interest, and the idea was that that rate might be varied, which would result in a lower cost to the purchasers. I am sure we all agree that this is a most excellent way for people to invest their money and to be assured of an income for the rest of their days. It should be made as convenient as possible, and I think the policy of the government should be to operate that branch as nearly at cost as possible.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say that that is the policy.

Mr. BOYS: Can the minister give us some idea of the condition of the balance sheet for the last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to furnish my hon. friend with that information; I do not have it at hand.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I asked the minister for details of the expenditure of last year, when $20,000 was voted. The items which he gave the committee amount to only about $3,000, and I wanted the particulars of the whole expenditure making up the $20,000 voted last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have already given the items of expenditure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Out of the $20,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. The advertising was not proceeded with; it was not considered necessary last year, and that amount was not expended.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then what was the total expenditure last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What I have already stated, $2,884.83.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And this year it is $5,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are asking for $5,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then you are asking for more this year, and there is not a decrease of $15,000. What did the minister mean when he said that there was a decrease of $15,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will notice, the estimate for last year was $20,000, which amount was voted. We are asking for a vote of $5,000 this year, a decrease of $15,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But there is an increase in the expenditure, perhaps?

Mr. McGIBBON: If I remember this act correctly it was introduced by the late Sir Richard Cartwright. I would like to ask the minister if there has been any revision of the rates since that time. Conditions have changed considerably during the last twenty years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There has been no revision, so far as I am aware.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is any revision contemplated by the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not that I know of.

Mr. BOYS: That is exactly what I wanted to follow up. I remember the then minister two or three years ago promising that consideration would be given to this matter, and I should like to find out if the department has done that. If not why not?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that the matter has been discussed. It was suggested that there should be some revision, but it is found that the rates are as nearly correct as possible. Consequently there has been no revision so far as I am aware.

Mr. BOYS: If that decision has been reached it must be because little or no profit was being made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The rates were as near cost as possible.

Mr. BOYS: If the business has been increasing as the minister points out there must have been some increase of profit. This feature is very important in the interest of the people who want to purchase annuities. I do not care whether the discussion comes under this item or some other item, but we ought to know just what money has been made by the department in this connection in the last year, in fact for three or four years, because the surplus must be piling up.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to get that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Would the minister inform the committee when the administration of the Annuities Act came under the Department of Labour, and what department it was under prior to that time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that formerly it was under the Department of Trade and Commerce and later the Post Office Department. It was brought under the Department of Labour in 1922.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the minister whether in the matter of sales the annuities have not been a failure, and if that is not largely due to the fact that people can get more advantageous terms from insurance companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There has been a substantial increase in the number of contracts. I could give my hon. friend a list of the contracts for the various dates starting with 1909. Since that year the contracts have been increasing steadily.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister please give them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The list is as follows:

Mr. NICHOLSON: Going back to 1924-25, and following up what the minister has said, it would seem that there is a deliberate purpose on the part of the government to let this Annuities Act die. In the report of the Auditor General tabled this session we find that in 1924-25 the sum of $19,922.94 was spent in advertising the act. Last year nothing was spent, and according to the estimate now before us it is not intended that anything shall be spent during the current year. In other words no further effort is to be made to push the scheme. I support what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Boys), that the annuities scheme should be well advertised in the post offices in every town, village and hamlet. I am confident that if this was done there would be a very large increase in the number of those who are taking advantage of this splendid opportunity to provide for their own future.

Mr. BOYS: I have no desire to hold this item up, but I ask the minister under what item we may get the information we have sought and when further discussion can take place with respect to this feature so important from the two angles to which I have referred. If we can be sure of getting the desired information, and if the minister will agree to discuss the matter in connection with some other item, I have no desire to hold the vote up at the moment. But the minister must give us some idea as to how this will be done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I give my hon. friend the assurance that in connection with the Conciliation and Labour Act vote the information asked for will be brought down.

Mr. BOYS: And this discussion will be continued?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Some years ago I got some information in regard to these annuities and found out that a man could obtain a great income if he invested his money in government bonds. Furthermore, he would have something to bequeath on his death. There must be something wrong in connection with the government annuities scheme, because the annuities are not selling as they should. I should like the minister to look into that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The great increase in the number of annuities being sold indicates that my hon. friend's statement is scarcely correct.

Mr. HANSON: The increase is so small compared with the population served by the act that I do not think the minister and the department can claim very much credit. We have had very little explanation from the minister, but I quite appreciate the fact that as yet probably he does not know very much about the matter. The department is more or less dormant—I think that is a fair conclusion to arrive at—and it is dormant by reason of a lack of publicity. I do not think you can sell insurance or anything else unless you have publicity and go after the business. It is quite apparent that no energy has been displayed by the government in going after the business, and there has been insufficient publicity. I have never sold insurance but often I think I could. There are two requisites necessary to success—publicity, and an aggressive selling campaign. Apparently in this case we have not had either of these requisites. I consider this a fine scheme and I am rather anxious about it. Will the minister consider an active selling policy and an active publicity campaign? I would be willing to vote him the $20,000 if he would use it for the right purpose. I would like to have some assurance from the minister that he will look into the question of the cost of the annuity and the cost to the country as well. If the interest is too high he will have his actuary—and I presume there is an actuary in charge of this scheme—go over the figures, and if it is found, as I think it will be, that the scheme could be placed before the public in a proper way, he should so place it for the benefit of the Canadian people.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The increase over last year has been from 486 contracts, amounting to $1,606,665.03, to 669 contracts, amounting to $1,945,571.12. I do not think he will suggest that that is not a good increase. But I shall be very glad indeed to consider the suggestion my hon. friend has made, probably in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BOYS: What is the total cash on hand to meet the various contracts?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will use up the value of the item in the time we are discussing it.

Mr. CANTLEY: To my mind no question to-day is of more outstanding importance to this country than the question of thrift. We all know, or have some idea at all events, of what this country is up against in the matter of debt. I do not think there was ever a time when there was as much money expended, not only by youths but by adults, in extravagances of various kinds. No subject demanding the attention of this House is more important than that of thrift in connection with the matter of annuities. This is an old age pension scheme under which the beneficiaries themselves contribute, and it should be brought to the attention not only of the youth of the country but of all people in Canada. The increase that the minister refers to is only a matter of 12½ cents per head of the population of the country. It is infinitesimal. I would like to know why $20,000 was asked for a year ago while, only $5,000 is asked for this year. According to the figures given by the minister, less than $3,000 was actually expended out of the $20,000 voted last year. It is obvious that nothing has been done in the way of publicity to bring this annuities scheme before the people throughout the country. If the plan was advertised and brought to the attention of the people as life insurance is advertised, I am quite satisfied the amount invested in annuities by all portions of the population would be a thousand times as much as it is to-day, and that is as it should be. I suggest that the new minister bring this matter before the people so that the youth of the country will realize that, by a very small monthly payment, they can make themselves independent at fifty years of age or a little later in life. I hope something worth while will be done by the new broom which has appeared in the department to-day.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

Wednesday, April 14, 1926

The House met at three o'clock.

PETITION FROM THE BLIND

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, may we have the petition from the blind persons in the city of Winnipeg, presented yesterday read to the House?

Mr. SPEAKER: The Examiner of Petitions has reported that the petition does not contain matter in breach of the privileges of the House, and it may be read by the Clerk of the House.

The petition was read, as follows:

To the honourable the House of Commons in parliament assembled:

The 18th day of January, A.D. 1926.

The petition of the undersigned blind persons representing themselves and other blind persons in the city of Winnipeg and throughout the province of Manitoba, humbly showeth:

1. That among such blind persons there are a number who are aged and have no means whatever of their own and because of their age and blindness are absolutely incapable of maintaining themselves and their dependents.

2. That there are among such blind persons a considerable number over fifty years of age who have no means of their own and are incapable because of their blindness to maintain themselves and their dependents.

3. That there are in this province a considerable number of blind persons fifty years of age or under without means who, because of their blindness, are unable to earn sufficient to maintain themselves and their dependents.

4. That there are in this province a considerable number of blind persons under fifty years of age who are without means of their own and who, by reason of their blindness and other disabilities, are absolutely incapable of earning anything whatever for the support of themselves and their dependents.

5. That such blind persons being without and unable to earn their own livelihood or support themselves and their dependents are either living in dire poverty or have been and are dependent upon the charity of others and as a result such unfortunate persons are finding it exceedingly difficult to live, and the lives of many are being considerably shortened.

6. That different countries have enacted measures involving the expenditure of moneys for the purpose of maintaining the unfortunate, and are providing assistance in the form of old age pensions and mothers' allowances.

7. That the obligation of the state to guarantee to those of its unfortunate members who have become incapable of maintaining for themselves and their dependents a reasonable standard of living now appears to be generally recognized.

Your petitioners most respectfully therefore pray: That your honourable House will at once enact legislation which will provide for a system of pensions to such blind persons in the Dominion of Canada who are incapable of maintaining themselves and their dependents, with the end in view of enabling such persons and their dependents to enjoy a reasonable standard of living.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PENSION TO LT.-COLONEL J. S. O'MEARA

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Is Lt.-Colonel J. S. O'Meara, residing in the city of Quebec, in receipt of a government pension?
2. If so, on what date was said pension granted and for what reason?
3. What does said pension amount to?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No.
2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES

Mr. JONES:

What are the amounts of subsidy under each head paid to each province of the Dominion in each year since confederation?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

REMUNERATION TO ELECTION OFFICIALS IN ATHABASKA

Mr. LUCAS:

For a return showing a list of the election officials, together with the amount of remuneration paid to each, and the kind of service performed, in the constituency of Athabaska.

PAYMENT OF ELECTION OFFICIALS IN ATHABASKA

Mr. LUCAS:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, and other documents passing between the chief electoral officer and any other person or persons relative to the payment of election officials in the constituency of Athabaska.

RICHIBUCTO COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Mr. DOUCET:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents, regarding the retirement of John D. McMinn as collector of Customs and Excise of the port of Richibucto, and his subsequent superannuation.

NATIONAL SYSTEM OF BANKING

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has come for the establishment of a national system of banking.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last year I introduced a motion of similar purport to this though it was put in rather the negative form:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is not in the interests of the country at large that the privilege of issuing currency and of controlling financial credit should be granted to private corporations.

In connection with my presentation of the case at that time I discussed at some length the accepted theory of money, and it is not my purpose to go over in any detail the ground covered then. However, since this is more or less a new House, I should like to outline very briefly the position then taken.

We have to-day three principal kinds of money: First, gold money, which is practically not in use in this country; second, money which we call bank note money, and third, cheque money. About ninety-six per cent of the entire business of Canada is carried on by means of the cheque system. The bankers are very hesitant about admitting that cheques constitute real money, for a reason that I shall give in a few minutes, but in classifying cheques as money I have the authority of no less a person than the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna who said:

Let me define the sense in which I shall use the word "money." I understand by it all currency in circulation among the public and all bank deposits drawable by cheque.

So that cheque money is just as much money as gold or bank notes. We come to the second point: What determines the value or purchasing power of money in this country, we will say of the individual dollar? I tried to point out last year that the accepted theory of the economists is that the value of money varies inversely to the quantity in circulation. As Professor Taussig in his Principles of Economics puts it:

Double the quantity of money, and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one-half. Halve the quantity of money, and, other things being equal, prices will be one-half of what they were before and the value of money double.

It then becomes obvious that those who control the quantity of money in circulation, whether of gold, bank notes or credit, control the value of all other things since all other things are measured in terms of money. The only way of increasing the quantity of gold is by digging it out of the earth. The quantity of bank notes may be increased by putting the printing presses to work, but either directly or indirectly the government control the quantity of bank note money in circulation. It is, however, an altogether different matter with credit money, which is, according to the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, "bank deposits drawable by cheque." To a very large extent the control of the amount of this class of money that is in circulation is in the hands of the banks, and this without any supervision or regulation whatever by the government. In that sense then, it may be said that we have handed over to private corporations the right to make money or to destroy money. In the old days, what was termed "coining" was regarded as a most serious offence. It is still a serious offence as regards producing gold or subsidiary coins, but to-day we have actually turned over the privilege of the "coining" of the newer kinds of money to private corporations.

In my presentation of the case last year I ventured to summarize what seemed to me to be the privileges which, under our Bank Act, are granted to private corporations. First of all, to a considerable extent, banks control the savings of the people. This is a most important function. Second, they have the very important franchise of issuing currency, a franchise that incidentally brings considerable profit to themselves. But much more important than either of these is the control of credit which, as I said a few minutes ago, is almost entirely in the hands of the banks and without any regulation by any governmental authority. In the fourth place, private banks to a considerable extent do the financing for the government itself. This means that we have these private corporations placed in a position where they can practically dictate financial policy for the whole country. Through interlocking directorates, to which reference was made on the floor of this House during the time of the Bank Act revision, banks are able to have a very large control over other corporations, such as insurance companies, trust and loan companies, as well as commercial and industrial organizations. My conclusion of last year, therefore, is this:

My thought is not that we should attempt to break this monopoly that we have to-day, this money monopoly, but rather that in some way the people themselves should assume the direction or control of the monopoly, and use it not in the interests of a few but administer it in the interests of the whole of the people of Canada.

I am very glad to say that although the financial papers ridiculed my motion of last year a very considerable number of people throughout the country have endorsed the ideas which were therein put forth. At a meeting of the Farmers' Union of Canada held at Saskatoon on July 21 and 22, 1925, a long resolution was passed concluding as follows:

Therefore be it resolved that we, the Farmers' Union of Canada, in convention assembled, do hereby endorse the motion aforesaid moved by J. S. Woodsworth in the House of Commons, and call upon every citizen, irrespective of party, and in the general interest and welfare as we do ourselves hereby agree, to vote for only those federal nominees who will pledge themselves to support by voice, work and vote at Ottawa the principles embodied in the Woodsworth motion.

That organization of some 20,000 members has thus definitely placed itself behind the principles embodied in that motion. The organization may possibly not count for very much in certain circles in eastern Canada, but I can assure the House that the influence which it exerts in western Canada is by no means negligible. We have also along somewhat similar lines a resolution passed recently by the United Farmers of Alberta at their convention. It was recommended:

"That suitable steps be taken to establish and put into operation a central bank for Canada, the policy of this bank to be controlled by and in the interests of the people of Canada." The convention also urged upon the Alberta government the desirability of making a thorough investigation into the present system of financing, and if the principle is found feasible, that they "urge the Dominion government to pass legislation to make a change from our present system of financing to that of a treasury bill." The resolution described the present system as "a debt creating and not a debt paying system."—U.F.A., February 15, 1926.

Not only are the farmers' organizations taking action in this direction, but the fact is apparent that at least some of our businessmen are not quite so assured as they were two or three years ago that our present Canadian banking system is the last word in financial efficiency. Let me quote a few paragraphs from the Petroleum and Mines Journal published in Vancouver. The following appears in its issue of July, 1925:

Federalizing of industries, state control of commercial institutions, or unique interference with the trade and commercial activities of a civilized people will not be conceded by any true economist.

Evidently this journal is not particularly socialistic in its outlook.

But there are certain institutions which statesmen in their vision do arrogate to the state, the right to monopolize. In Australia, railways, street car systems, telephones, telegraphs and post offices, know no private stockholders. The post office is in every country a monopoly of the state. The others are not always so. Of late the Australian federation has partially interfered in the banking system and converted the Post Office Savings Bank into a strong federal bank of issue. Grave suspicions are afloat that it is the thin edge of the wedge to monopolize the whole.

Again:

There are many who believe that the banking system of Canada lends no aid to the development of the country's latent resources, that the monopoly of the country's currency by private corporations is beneficial to traders in Belgian francs and Cuban sugar, victory bonds and shares, but of little use to the hardy pioneer of native development—that the system finances speculation but leaves the government to finance getting in the country's harvest. A system which lends itself to developing the native resources of the country—regardless of cost—indifferent to minor risks, uses the credit of the nation as its basis of finance is asked for—a system applied in the art of war but which stupid statesmen seem to think inapplicable to the arts of peace.

The author goes on to answer certain objections which had been raised to the effect that the federalization of the banking system would ruin the country while fraudulent politicians had influence. He says:

Dishonest administration is no answer to sound principles. The whole financial world recently financed on the credit of their respective nations and they are still carrying on business at the old stand. The money borrowed was not for production either. It was for destruction—not only for centuries of savings but of millions of human beings as well. Destruction financing is scientific, but production financing, no! This is the fetish of modern finance. To feed the living is unbusinesslike, but to kill—well! the money is forthcoming.

In this connection I want to give one other quotation from one who is, I think, more or less recognized as having the right to express opinions upon public questions. This statement, which is familiar to most of us, was made at the time of the recent election. I am not particularly concerned with its political significance but I am interested in the statement itself. Sir Clifford Sifton said:

We are rapidly approaching that condition in which two, or at least three banks will be doing the whole of the business of the Dominion and you will have the spectacle of about three men sitting on the whole of the funds of the people of Canada, deposited in the banks, and deciding to whom they will loan these funds.

Sir Clifford Sifton does not seem to exercise the reserve which even a soap-box orator must cultivate, for he says:

If anything will justify armed rebellion against the established condition of affairs, I think such a consummation of our banking system is the one thing that would justify it.

He concludes:

I declare the fight in this election is not primarily about the tariff. The issue is monopoly or no monopoly: Monopoly of the money power, monopoly of transportation on land, monopoly of transportation on sea, control of the government by half a dozen plutocrats in Montreal instead of the people.

Personally I do not care very much whether the plutocrats are located in Montreal or whether this is just a fractional fight between the plutocrats of Toronto and those of Montreal. The fact is that to-day our financing is undoubtedly becoming highly centralized.

Let me now refer to a statement made a few months ago before the Academy of Political Science by Professor W. Z. Ripley of Harvard. Ripley notes especially the divorce of property ownership from direct accountability for its prudent and efficient management and the assumption of irresponsible control by bankers. According to him these tendencies, because they enthrone the bankers, menace alike the welfare of private owners and of the working class, because the possession of uncontrolled power is always certain to entail abuse. I quote his exact words:

The present transformation is merely in respect of the seat of power. All kinds of private businesses are being bought up by banking houses and new corporations are being substituted in order that the purchase price (and more) may be recovered by the sale of shares to the general public. But the significant change is that the new stock that is thus sold is entirely bereft of any voting power, except in the case of bankruptcy.

So great is the opposition that is steadily growing to the banking monopoly that the Financial Post in its issue of January 8 of this year asks rather naively:

Will Canadian banks be forced to take steps to guide opinion?

The Financial Post apparently is oblivious to the fact that it became known to the whole country at the time of the revision of the Bank Act that the Bankers Association spent $100,000 in their effort to "guide opinion" —and they seemed to be able to guide it fairly effectively so far as the majority of the members of the Banking and Commerce committee was concerned.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. McGIBBON: If I might ask the hon. member a question: Is the inference to be drawn that the Bankers Association spent the money on the Banking and Commerce committee?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The inference to be drawn is that the Bankers Association spent $100,000 in connection with the revision of the Bank Act. I presume most of it was spent in retaining a large number of very highly priced lawyers whom we saw around the committee room throughout the whole time the Bank Act was under discussion.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that only the federal authorities should be permitted to make or destroy money. Mr. McKenna, whom I have already quoted, said a year or so ago in an address to the Midland Bank shareholders:

I am afraid the ordinary citizen will not like to be told that the banks or the Bank of England can create or destroy money.

The bankers are not anxious to have the public informed with regard to that matter. It is very true. In this country to a very large extent the private corporations have it in their own hands to make or destroy money.

Mr. CAHAN: What does the hon. gentleman mean exactly by that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already suggested my meaning. I shall be glad to elaborate it. I have said there were really three kinds of money to-day—gold money, bank-note money, and money that is drawable by cheque.

Mr. CAHAN: And which of those do they destroy?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I said, they do not destroy gold money, nor do they destroy bank-note money; but they do control the amount of credit,—

Mr. CAHAN: And do they destroy cheques?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —and in that way they have the power of creating or destroying money.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman allow me? I can well understand that a cheque on a bank which is met by a credit is destroyed or becomes non-effective when it is paid; and possibly the manipulation of destroyed cheques may be in the hands of the bank or of the drawers of the cheques; but I ask: How do banks destroy money by paying cheques, or liquidating cheques, or by giving credit on cheques?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman gives me credit for understanding a little bit more about money than would be suggested by his question.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he give us a little more credit than he seems to do in his explanation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting at all the actual destruction or creation of the credit instruments as the way in which money itself is made or destroyed. What I am suggesting is that credit itself may be extended or contracted, and that the very expansion of credit—which we call inflation—or its contraction—which we call deflation—is in effect the making or the destroying of money.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask another question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Certainly.

Mr. CAHAN: When the credit of the country is enlarged every year for the purpose of transporting wheat from the west to foreign markets, does the expansion of that credit depress wheat prices or in any way destroy money?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, because in that particular instance the larger amount of money is needed to do a particular work, and when that work is done the money is recalled; but that is not inflation.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask another question? Is there any time in the history of banking when extensions of credit to merchants or manufacturers or others are not given for a particular purpose in commerce or manufacture or industry, whether growing fruit or wheat or producing any manufactured article?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Very often, as a matter of fact, credit is so given. But I am not talking of the giving of credit in one particular instance, I am talking about enlarging the whole volume of credit.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman must admit that the total volume is always made up of particular instances.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so; but at the same time it may be greatly extended or greatly contracted. Let me come back to my quotation again. Surely Mr. McKenna had something in view when he said:

> I am afraid the ordinary citizen will not like to be told that the banks or the Bank of England can create or destroy money.

I am not sure that the hon. gentleman likes to have that driven home. Let me quote further—and I am quoting somewhat extensively to-day because if I spoke on my own behalf it might be considered that I knew comparatively little of business or banking or economics and my words might be discounted; therefore I am quoting from those sources which cannot be easily set aside. Let me give a paragraph which carries on the thought I have been expressing. It is from an article entitled "National Credit is the Real Currency Basis." It is by Stanley Clark who operates a statistical service. He says:

> What would happen to the modern Rip Van Winkle who went to sleep in 1913 with his money belt about him containing $1,000 in Dominion government notes and $1,000 in Canadian bank notes and awoke on August 31, 1924, hungry, thirsty and clad in rags? What if on that day, by proclamation, all note issues were to be redeemed to the amount of gold available for that purpose and his paper money would not be accepted for his needs.
> He would find that this $2,000 in notes would obtain for him only $1,000 in gold. If he wished to spend the whole $1,000 in refurnishing the inner and outer man, he would find that prices had gone up in eleven years to the extent that his $1,000 would buy him only as much as $640 would have bought him on the day he went to sleep, so he would realize in goods only 32 cents out of every paper dollar when his gold basis was put to the test.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. gentleman would allow another interruption—is there any other application to that case than that it is inopportune to go to sleep for some twenty or thirty years?

An hon. MEMBER: Better not wake up!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I take it, Mr. Speaker, that even although a man should go to sleep for twenty or thirty years, if money is as stable as we have been informed it is, his money would be there when he awoke. That is the point. To-day his money has vanished. If money is as unstable as that, we need to know what group of people is sending money up or down in value. I should like to quote another paragraph for the benefit of my hon. friend from a pamphlet by Professor Irving Fisher entitled "Ethics in the Monetary System." This is along the very lines that he gave us before the Banking and Commerce committee three years ago. Professor Fisher altogether exonerates any individual from responsibility for the vanishing of these dollars, but he points out that the dollars do vanish and that the system is responsible.

> The robber dollar does the stealing, the social injustice. The extent of this subtle robbing is prodigious. Professor W. I. King, one of the best statisticians I know, when appearing in favour of a bill in congress on this subject a year or so ago, said that as nearly as he could reckon it, there had been a sort of pocket-picking to the tune of forty billions of dollars in the United States during the last half dozen years. What would we in America do if we realized that fact to-day? Supposing there had been a forty billion dollar robbery, or a tenth thereof, a four billion dollar robbery, such a robbery would be on the front page of every newspaper. And yet a forty billion dollar robbery, which you could not personify and localize, and which is due to our unstable monetary system, is something which as such we do not think anything about, because we do not realize it.

Mr. CAHAN: What is the date of that, please? Mr. Fisher changes his opinion so frequently that one would like to know the date of that announcement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The pamphlet is not dated, but Mr. Fisher gave evidence of this character before the Banking and Commerce committee three years ago.

Mr. CAHAN: No man in America changes his opinion more frequently than does Professor Fisher.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like for a moment to refer to the question of the gold standard, simply because there are gentlemen in this House and throughout the country who still believe that it is the gold standard which gives something like stability to the value of our money. Let me again quote Mr. McKenna, the chairman of the Midland Bank. I do not know whether he changes his opinions, but he said:

A managed currency has been kept more stable than one based on gold.

But he remarks somewhat cynically:

So long as nine people out of ten in every country think the gold standard is the best, it is the best.

I should also like to quote the opinion of Mr. John A. Hobson on the gold standard, as published in The Nation of April 29, 1925:

Stability of the internal level of prices is to be achieved by a "managed money" independent of the vagaries of gold values.

And again:

It is at least significant that neither Britain nor America is regulating her money system on the previously accepted gold basis. Not only is gold no longer used for internal currency in either country but the credit issue and general volume of purchasing powers are not regulated by relation to quantity of gold.

And again:

For experience and statistical research have made it evident that the old notion that quantity of gold regulated the total volume of money and so the level of prices, by a reliable automatic operation, was never true, and that the acceptance of the falsehood was responsible for grave errors in banking policy reflected in needless fluctuations of prices and industrial activity.

Mr. CAHAN: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just a moment. Again Mr. Hobson says:

There is a new and strong argument that money can and should be managed by national financial controls, with as much international co-operation as can be got, and that this control will involve, to a constantly diminishing extent, the use of gold, either as a store of values or as a standard.

In quoting Mr. Hobson it might be well to give the following:

A protective policy which undertakes to stop payment, by adjusting the tariff to meet every cheapening of foreign goods seeking to enter the American market, removes the natural check upon the efflux of gold which seeks to correct a falling exchange by stimulation of exports.

Mr. CAHAN: I was going to ask the hon. gentleman whether that statement, which is destructive of the quantitative theory of money, is not equally destructive of the premises with which the hon. gentleman opened his argument.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not at all; this statement is not destructive of the quantitative theory of money.

Mr. CAHAN: It says it was not a theory that was ever true.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The trouble is that the older economists, in applying the quantitative theory of money, thought only of gold because originally gold was the standard. Since that time a large quantity of new money, that is to say, bank note money, has also come into existence. Not only that, but still later we find a third kind of money, cheque money. According to my understanding, the quantitative theory must be taken in view as applying not merely to gold money but also to bank note money and cheque money.

Mr. CAHAN: Were not cheques and bank notes in existence when Taussig created his theory, from which the hon. gentleman has produced his premises?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so, and Hobson and the others on this point are quite in agreement with Taussig.

I have already made some reference to the fact that the banks were largely responsible for the government finances. We have been apt to look to Great Britain for our lead in respect of banking arrangements, and I might say that in England there is a very considerable move towards reform in financial affairs. In showing the power of the banks I think I cannot do better than quote from a little leaflet which has come into my hands through an organization of which the president is Right Hon. J. R. Clynes, M.P. I think this is sufficient to vouch for the accuracy of the statement:

In 1694 the charter of the Bank of England was granted in return for the loan of £1,200,000 at 8 per cent interest to William III, for his wars in Flanders. By means of that miracle worker, unpaid compound interest, this £1,200,000 became in the course of a few years £14,686,000. To-day, after paying back about £3,670,900 capital reduction, and £100,000,000 in interest, Great Britain still owes the Bank of England £11,015,100, with interest upon same at the rate of about £275,000 per annum. Of course this interest helps to increase our income tax.

What, however, is so significant is that for centuries the Bank of England has treated Great Britin's indebtedness exactly the same as if it were gold, so that to-day the Bank prints and issues £11,015,100 worth of bank notes to its customers at the current bank rate of interest or over, solely upon the security of Great Britain's promise to pay, that is her credit power.

But if the Bank of England considers the credit power of Great Britain good enough to justify it in printing and issuing solely for the bank's own private profit over eleven million pounds worth of notes upon which it draws from 4 per cent to 5 per cent in interest, say £500,000 per annum, or £50,000,000 per century, why cannot this same credit power be issued by the treasury, against tangible assets, to help our farmers, manufacturers and exporters develop and protect our agriculture, manufactures and exports?

We have not yet exhausted this remarkable transaction, because if Great Britain still owes the Bank of England £11,015,100, and still ought to pay about £275,000 per annum in interest, as we do, how are we to describe the printing and issuing of Bank of England notes for this same amount, in addition? Either the right to print and issue bank notes for over eleven million pounds cancelled out Great Britain's debt immediately it was granted by the treasury, or else the Bank of England has collected about £150,000,000 in interest more than it was entitled to. In any event the borrowing of £1,200,000 from the Bank of England in 1694 has cost the community, so far, in one form and another, about £250,000,000.

It is not very much wonder that there is before the House of Commons in Great Britain at the present time a bill to nationalize the Bank of England.

While my motion calls for the nationalization of our Canadian banking system, I would like to suggest that we should be very practical to-day and consider what could be done in the immediate future. What could and should be done now? First of all, I urge that the currency should be issued by the government. I am going to leave these points to be developed more fully by other speakers; I simply repeat, my first suggestion is that the currency should be issued only by the government.

Secondly, I would urge that our post office savings banks should be developed and modernized, and freed from red tape. There seems to be no reason whatever why in practice the people should be driven to deposit their savings in private banks except that they find it so awkward to do business conveniently at the government savings banks. We could greatly increase the business done by our government savings banks, and at the same time provide a source from which the government itself could draw very largely for its loans.

My third point is with regard to provincial savings banks. We have these banks in Ontario and Manitoba, and in both cases they are carrying on very successfully. I would urge that these provincial savings banks be given full banking privileges.

Mr. HANNESSON: Have they asked for that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am suggesting certain things that might be done. In this connection I might say that even in Great Britain, which is supposed to be very conservative, people's banks are being encouraged. There is, for example, in Birmingham a municipal bank. You can imagine the horror with which our people in this country would view the advocacy of the establishment of a municipal bank, and yet they have it in England.

Mr. GEARY: Is there not one in Toronto at the present time? The Penny bank?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether you call the Penny bank a municipal bank.

Mr. GEARY: It is run by the municipality.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have heard of the Penny bank, but I am not sure how far that goes; I would be glad to hear more about it from the hon. gentleman when he speaks.

Mr. GEARY: It is a good start.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I just quote this extract with regard to the Birmingham municipal bank? Mr. Neville Chamberlain, on opening a new branch of the bank, said:

> You may call it socialism, if you like. I have never been frightened by a name. I do not care whether it is socialism or not, so long as it is a good thing. I think our experience proves that the Municipal Savings Bank has advantages which other forms of savings banks have not.

I have here a paragraph with regard to the operation of the bank:

> The result of the rapid progress made during the past six years is that the bank now has 32 branches; and there is a reserve fund of £70,000, whilst over 160,000 depositors have accumulated funds standing to their credit of over £5½ million.
> The bank advances money on mortgage to depositors for the purchase of their private dwelling houses. For this purpose £352,544 was advanced last year. Since the establishment of the bank £974,959 has been advanced for this purpose.

I might add that the ratepayers have never been asked to find a penny of capital; on the other hand, they have benefited, for the surplus funds of the bank over those loaned to depositors for the purpose of buying their own houses, are loaned to the corporation at a rate of interest below that which the corporation would have to offer on the general money market for its loans, while still making a margin above the 3½ per cent which is paid to depositors.

4 p.m.

In the next place, I would urge that there be given larger facilities for co-operative credit. It would seem to me that there should be an amendment to the Finance Act, so that producers' organizations may secure advances on securities similar to those now accepted from the banks. Why should the wheat pool, for example, be forced to go to a private corporation in order to secure money to finance its operations? Why should it not go directly to the treasury, and deposit with the treasury the very selfsame securities which it now has to deposit with the bank, and which the bank, in turn, deposits with the Treasury board?

Mr. KAISER: As long as they get the money, what difference does it make where they get it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: One minor difference would be that from one to two per cent would be saved to the farmers.

Mr. KAISER: Perhaps.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think that is probable.

Mr. KAISER: It is a great big "perhaps."

Mr. CAHAN: Under present conditions an organization dealing in wheat, the wheat pool for instance, goes to a bank and gets credit on its notes, or sometimes by pledging its bills of lading and that sort of thing; it may also, under the Bank Act, get credit itself on its wheat. But, under the Bank Act, can any bank advancing credit on such assignments of bills of lading and securities of that kind get money from the Dominion government on those very same securities?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Money can be procured from the Dominion government, I think we all recognize, to help carry the wheat crop.

Mr. CAHAN: But what security do the banks give?

Mr. COOTE: Bills of lading.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Bills of lading, I believe.

Mr. CAHAN: Direct to the government?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think so. I should be glad to hear from the Finance Minister on that point, but I am informed by those who are in touch with the details of the business that the security which the government demands is precisely the same as that which the farmers are able to advance, to the banks.

Mr. CAHAN: If the banks do put up that same sort of security, the government has, in addition, the security of the banks themselves.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may have, but I am inclined to think that the wheat crop of the west is as good security as any government is likely to get.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the hon. member carry his theory further and have the treasury of this country finance every industry?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not suggested that, but I see no reason whatever why there should be maintained a financial monopoly such as we have to-day. Why should not producers' organizations of all kinds be able to do their own financing? Why should they have to be dependent upon a group of some ten private banks?

Mr. CAHAN: Why should not the producers' organizations be permitted to issue their own money as they did one hundred years ago?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should say they have every bit as much right to issue their own money as the bank has to issue its private money.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the hon. member suggest what would be the value of it, in most cases, if issued?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It would be just as valuable, since there would be the same security behind it as there is under the existing system. But I am not advocating that these producers' organizations should have the right to issue money. On the contrary I want to take away the right of issuing money from all except the government itself.

Mr. KAISER: Would not that be creating a monopoly? There are ten banks at the present time, and you want to do away with their power to issue money and centralize the whole power of issue in the government. What is the difference between having the power in the government or in our banking institutions?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The difference is that the private institutions now receive their own profit, and if there is any money in the operation I think it should be secured by the government itself. I have no fear of a government monopoly.

Mr. KAISER: The government must decide who is to receive credit.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Oh no.

Mr. KAISER: You want it so that everybody will get credit. The great difficulty is to get credit.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: You have not got my meaning at all.

Mr. CAHAN: Presuming the government had a monopoly of the issue of money, and the Conservative government were in office for instance, do you think the Liberals of this country would secure very much credit from them, or vice versa?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the hon. member knows, the government has a monopoly in issuing gold money. It has a monopoly in issuing certain classes of notes. I do not see why the issuance of bank notes of higher denomination should be turned over to the banks. I do not see why it should not be with the government. I do not see why politics enters into it, although some hon. gentlemen would like to drag it into the discussion.

Last of all, I should like to see the creation of a central bank board, something along the lines of the Federal Reserve Board in the United States. This central bank board would do the work now done by the Treasury board, but further than that it would act as a federal reserve board. It alone would issue currency and it alone would control discount, and if there is any financial value either in the issuance of currency, as I have said before, or in the control of discounts, that financial advantage should be in the hands of the government and not in the hands of private corporations.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the Federal Reserve Board of the United States not in the control of private corporations?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, unfortunately.

Mr. CAHAN: Then why suggest an analogy with the Federal Reserve Board of the United States whose boards represent the directors of the individual banks who are members of it. They are controlled by the individual banks?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. member had waited a moment I was going to suggest instead of that board being a bankers' board it should be distinctly responsible to the government of this country. That is the difference between the central bank I should like to have and the existing Federal Reserve Board of the United States.

Mr. CAHAN: Something after the manner and method in which the board of the National Railways is responsible to the government, I suppose?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a matter for consideration. I should like to place on record one or two paragraphs from a memorandum on currency and central banks from 1913 to 1924, as published by the League of Nations. I think probably hon. gentlemen will regard this as sufficiently authoritative. It is a huge work comprised in two volumes and containing some five or six hundred pages. Referring to the Canadian system this book says:

> The chartered banks are commercial banks; but, owing to the absence of a special central bank in Canada, they have assumed certain functions which in other countries are mainly exercised by such banks.

In Canada our chartered banks have assumed certain functions which in other countries are mainly assumed by such banks.

Mr. CAHAN: Like the Bank of England?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, that is a central bank. With regard to the Federal Reserve Bank in the United States, I should like to quote a statement in this memorandum:

> By the Federal Reserve Act (approved December 23rd, 1913) a regional reserve bank system was established in the United States. There are twelve federal reserve banks located in various sections of the country. Each such bank acts as a central bank for the commercial banks of its sections, the latter being the sole shareholders of the reserve bank. Although the various reserve banks are formally independent of each other, they are under the direction of a common central authority, the Federal Reserve Board in Washington. This board consists of two ex-officio members: the Secretary of the Treasury (Minister of Finance), who acts as the chairman of the board, and the Controller of the Currency; and, in addition, five members appointed for a period of ten years by the President of the United States on the advice and with the consent of the Senate. At least two of these five members must be "experienced in banking and finance". The Federal Reserve Board appoints three of the nine directors of each federal reserve bank, the six remaining directors being in each case elected by the member banks. There of these directors are representatives of the member banks, whereas the remaining three must be men who are actively engaged in their respective districts in agriculture, commerce and industry. The three directors appointed by the Federal Reserve Board cannot be officers, directors or stockholders in any bank, one of them being chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve Bank and at the same time "Federal Reserve Agent" of the Federal Reserve district, another of these three directors being his substitute. The chairman of the board of directors is required to be a person of "tested banking experience".
> Besides the Federal Reserve Board, there is a Federal Advisory Council consisting of twelve members appointed by the boards of directors of the twelve federal reserve banks. This council is convoked by the Federal Reserve Board at least four times a year. As indicated by the name, it has only an advisory vote.

The main function of the Federal Reserve Board is to control the operations of the reserve banks and, in general, to see that the Federal Reserve Act is properly applied. It may "examine at its discretion the accounts, books and affairs of each federal reserve bank and of each member bank and require such statements and reports as it may deem necessary." The Federal Reserve Board does not interfere in the details as regards the discount operations of the federal reserve banks, but it lays down the rules to be followed by them and is given large powers in matters of general policy. The power of issuing federal reserve notes under the act is thus entirely in the hands of the board. In view of the unified working and the strict centralization in all essential matters, the federal reserve organization as a whole corresponds closely to the central banks in other countries.

And I should also like to place on record a statement in this memorandum with regard to the situation in Australia. I think this suggests to us some of the lines along which we might well proceed:

The Commonwealth Bank was established under a special act dated December 22, 1911, as a state institution managed by a governor and a deputy-governor appointed by the Governor General of the Commonwealth. It had no basic capital, but the Commonwealth government was and is still responsible for all moneys due by the bank. On the other hand, one-half of its net profits is credited to a special "redemption fund," which, though under the administration of the bank, could be used in paying off Commonwealth debts or state debts taken over by the Commonwealth.

The bank was not at first a bank of issue, the issue department of the treasury established under the Australian Notes Act of 1910 maintaining the issue of Australian notes. In December, 1920, however, the control of the Australian note issue was handed over to the Commonwealth Bank, a special issue department of the bank being established for this purpose. This department, to which the assets and liabilities of the note-issuing department of the treasury were transferred was under the management of a board appointed by the Governor General of the Commonwealth and included the governor and secretary of the bank, a leading treasury official, and two outside financial experts. It was provided that, in times of emergency, the note issue might be retransferred to the treasury by proclamation of the Governor General.

With a view to enabling the Commonwealth Bank to act as a proper central bank of note issue controlling the credit resources of the country and the economic policy of the other banks, the government proposed in July, 1924, an amendment to the Commonwealth Bank Act which was passed on August 20 and came into force on October 10, 1924.

Under the new law the bank is to be managed by a board of directors consisting of the governor of the bank, the secretary to the Commonwealth treasury and six other persons, who are or have been actively engaged in agriculture, commerce, finance or industry. All the members of the board are to be appointed by the Governor General of the commonwealth for seven years. Reappointment at the end of the term is permitted. In addition there is a London board of advice consisting of three members appointed by the Governor General for four years and eligible for reappointment. A director or officer of any banking business may not be a member of either board. The special "Notes Board" is abolished and its functions are assumed by the board of directors.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. McGIBBON: What application has the Federal Reserve Bank to my hon. friend's argument?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I shall have to leave that for the moment. I should like to—

Mr. KAISER: We are wondering where the hon. member sees a comparison between the United States federal banking system and what he has termed in this resolution a national banking system for Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know that it is necessary for me to recapitulate what I have been trying to say for the last hour. I am suggesting that we ought to have a central bank such as exists in most countries, the functions of which in this country are assumed largely by a small group of chartered banks—a bank that will be given the exclusive authority of note issue and of rediscounting. As an example of a central bank I have instanced the Federal Reserve Bank, which true does not comply exactly with what I think we should adopt to the best advantage, and I have also just been instancing the Commonwealth Bank of Australia.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is a federal reserve bank not simply a bank of rediscount?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and it issues currency. Just before I close, let me give one more quotation to illustrate the advances that have been made in Australia through its Commonwealth Bank. I quote this paragraph from the Official Year Book of 1925:

As the initial expenses of the bank were heavy, the early operations resulted in a small loss, but with the increasing prosperity of the institution the early deficit was gradually reduced, until on 30th June, 1915, it was entirely extinguished. The following table shows the aggregate net profiits from the initiation of the bank to the end of each of the last five financial years.

I would ask the permission of the House to place this table on Hansard. The table is as follows:

Commonwealth Bank—Aggregate profits, 1920 to 1924

	Aggregate net profits to date
Date	General bank	Savings bank	Total
30th June, 1920..	£2,426,067	£330,038	£2,756,105
30th June, 1921..	3,082,249	369,116	3,451,365
30th June, 1922..	3,577,317	424,342	4,001,659
30th June, 1923..	3,869,219	534,768	4,403,987
30th June, 1924..	3,964,620	690,053	4,654,673

In accordance with the provisions of section 30 of the Bank Act and section 9 (2) of the National Debt Sinking Fund Act, half of the net profits of the bank have been placed to the credit of the bank's reserve fund and half to the credit of the National Debt Sinking Fund.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): Will the hon. gentleman state how the resources of the Commonwealth Bank are invested, that is to say, what percentage is invested in ordinary commercial loans?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The investments are not in ordinary commercial loans, although during the war various producers' organizations were financed by the bank. With regard to the details I would refer the hon. gentleman to this memorandum, in which the whole matter is dealt with very exhaustively.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. member identify the memorandum so that we can find it in the library?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: League of Nations Memorandum on Currency and Central Banks, 1913-14, published at Geneva, 1925, to be found in the Library of Parliament.

I do not intend to make any plea whatever for the various suggestions which I have advanced. I know there are other gentlemen from the west and, I think, some from the east as well who are ready to take part in this debate. I wish simply to suggest that since other countries are moving along these lines and are finding success in various directions, there is no earthly reason why we in Canada should still be held in bondage to the old idea that we have a banking system which is the last word in the financial arrangements of the world. I know this is too great a subject to be disposed of in one debate. My hope is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will see his way to refer this matter to the committee on Banking and Commerce, where we shall have an opportunity for much fuller discussion. I am sure the committee after consideration could bring in recommendations which would be much more valuable than those I have tried to lay before the House.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in supporting the resolution that is before the House. This is the fifth year, to my knowledge, that this all-important subject has been brought before the House and discussed very extensively. It is pleasing indeed to me to find that each year hon. members are taking a greater interest in it, the reason no doubt being that the subject has become one of some moment from one end of the country to the other.

The hon. member who introduced the resolution read one passed by a very large organization in Saskatchewan. I have in my hand a resolution passed by a similar organization in Alberta. It reads:

> Whereas, it is desirable to secure decentralization in the private control of credit, and to this end smaller banks should be established, and
> Whereas, all currency should be issued by the government in the interest of the public, and
>
> Whereas, these and other desirable objects can be best achieved through the creation of a central bank;
> Resolved, that this convention recommend that suitable steps be taken to establish and put into operation a central bank for Canada, and to provide that the policy of this bank may be controlled by, and in the interests of the people of Canada.

I understand that there is an organization called the Monetary Reform League in the city of Toronto, and that several eminent men who live in the city of Montreal are also lecturing on the subject. So we see that each year the subject is becoming more and more discussed, and it is only right that it should be brought before this House for discussion so that in time we may expect to have legislation passed with regard to it.

The hon. member who introduced the resolution said that the medium of exchange had made various changes from the time of barter, developing into coinage and then into notes, and later on very largely into what we call cheque money, based on credit, created as the result of security being lodged, with the banks, and used in 96 per cent of the cases in Canada—to facilitate the transfer of goods from the producer to the consumer. This is very well set out by Professor Soddy of Oxford University, who outlines the situation in the following words, which are endorsed by the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna and Major C. H. Douglas of London, England:

> Another and most important fact to be emphasized, is that virtually all the money in the hands (or banking accounts) of the community originally came into existence in the form of loans from the banking system. It can come from nowhere else, nor otherwise than as loans. This fact, which reverses all the old concepts of loans as money taken out of pre-existing deposits, is demonstrated fully in Major Douglas's works, and, in fact, has since been endorsed by Mr. McKenna, the chairman of the Midland Bank. The order of procedure is as follows:
> (1) Money is printed or written into existence by the banks:
>
> (2) It enters circulation as a loan to somebody:
> (3) It is then spent, and then becomes a "deposit" in the name of the receiver.

As loans are repaid a similar amount of deposits must be cancelled. It has been mentioned this afternoon that during the last twenty years or so there has been a vast absorption of various banks in this country until the thirty-four institutions which we had twenty-three years ago have been reduced to eleven. Of these eleven all except one, a small concern, have their head office in Montreal or in Toronto. This is not in the best interests of the Dominion. We have seen what absentee landlordism did for many years in Ireland, and we are witnessing what absentee financialism is doing for Canada. We find that the far eastern section of this country and the great west have suffered very largely from stagnation of business owing to this centralization of the control of credit. It would not be so bad if those who are interested in banking institutions were not also interested in other business, but unfortunately for the business welfare of Canada we find that apart from the officials of the bank, those who control these institutions—the directors—are interested in all of the country's industries except possibly agriculture, which I may say they certainly control. That being so, it can readily be seen that where there are interlocking directorates between the banks and other business concerns it is quite simple and easy as well as natural for the banks to feed certain businesses with credit while they starve others in which they are not so closely associated. I have before me a chart showing the names of fifteen directors of banks, and so on, who are interlocked in sixteen corporations. This chart was placed before the House in 1922 by the then member for Brome. The businesses of these corporations include insurance, banking, implement manufacturing, textile, railways, light, heat and power companies, water-power, paper and cotton, and in all they control investments to the extent of $4,285,000,000.

The branch bank system has given a good deal of satisfaction in small, thickly settled countries such as Great Britain, but I have to admit that in Canada, with its vast territories and its thin population, the system has been a failure. You need, however, only compare the United States and Canada, one with a banking system providing for branches to meet local interests and the other with our highly centralized system, to see how great a development has taken place on the one hand and what stagnation there has been on the other. Banks are just commercial concerns like any other business. They are out for profit. That is their business and naturally they do not want competition. It is perfectly natural, also, that if individuals desire to get together and start any business of the type in which the various directors of these banks happen to be interested, it would be the part of wisdom, from the point of view of these directors, to prohibit credit being given to these pioneers. And that is being done every day. That is one of the main reasons why we claim it is unfair that the control of the major portion of the private credit of the country should be in the hands of private financial institutions. This control of credit is in my opinion by far the greatest power that exists, for governments themselves have not been exempt from its influence. I will say further that there is not a man, there is not a member here, who can call himself free if he is indebted to these institutions. Whatever his security may be, if he has to go to a bank to get a line of credit on their terms, credit which can be cancelled any time they choose, then he is not a free man.

The second clause of the resolution I read calls for a monopoly of the issues of currency by the government as outlined by the hon. member who has moved the motion. Other countries have decided to monopolize the issue of currency through government control, but Canada is backward in this respect. I will not go into the details of this question inasmuch as the speaker who preceded me dealt with it fully. Private banking institutions in Canada—and they are the only type of banks we have here—are the only concerns I know of which as soon as they get their charter have the right to double their assets by the simple process of printing paper. They are the only people I know of who have the great privilege of charging interest on their debts. To put it another way, when they take a note, or a bill, or "a promise to pay," which is a debt, and pass it across the counter to the public, interest is charged thereon. Now, why should not this privilege be retained by the government itself, and the resultant profit devoted to lessening the burden of taxation?

I have before me some rather interesting figures with regard to our note issues. I will give only those for the month of January, 1926. The information is taken from the Canada Gazette of February 13, 1926. Dominion notes then in circulation amounted to $214,058,885, but of this total I find that the huge sum of $177,675,000 represented "legals"—notes of large denomination used between the banks. This leaves a balance of only $36,383,885, representing the note issue used by the public.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the hon. member give the quantity of gold behind that issue?

Mr. SPENCER: I shall be very glad to do so in a moment. With regard to the relative stability of a government bank and a private bank, there is no comparison in case of a financial panic due to war or other crisis. We know perfectly well that the private bank cannot withstand a run on it by the public, such as occurred in 1914. On the other hand a government bank has the prerogative of issuing notes which are legal tender, based on the assets of the whole country, and therefore it could meet all emergencies.

Mr. CAHAN: Was not the greatest run in history made on the Reich Bank of Germany, and did it not issue notes in such profusion that at last they were worthless?

Mr. SPENCER: So long as a bank issues notes only to the amount of the deposits placed with it, those notes, will be perfectly good.

Mr. CAHAN: Then you must impose a limit, and the moment you do so do you not restrict the bank's operations?

Mr. SPENCER: Any bank can be called upon to pay in gold the last dollar deposited with it. That is impossible under our present banking system, because our chartered banks have not the wherewithal to pay their depositors in gold.

The question will probably be asked: What about the gold basis? I am not going to spend much time on that, except to quote a well known writer on financial reform. I refer to Mr. Arthur Kitson, who is chairman of the Banking Reform League of Great Britain. He has written many books on the subject. He is also a manufacturer in a very large way in both Great Britain and United States. Writing to the London Clarion on November 27, 1914, he said:

> Our bank rate jumped to 10 per cent in one day—higher than it has been in France, Germany or Austria just before or since the war. Every bank suspended payment, the gold basis collapsed, and, but for the common sense of the Chancellor in supporting the banks with the national credit—

I ask the House to note that, because we did the same thing and saved our banks at that time.

> —the whole financial and industrial structure would have come tumbling down in the mire. Possibly we may to-day be able to create some public interest where we have hitherto failed; at any rate, it is well worth the effort. The lesson to drive into the heads of the community from what has happened is the fact that the so-called gold basis is a delusion and a snare —a legalized fraud, used to enable the financial classes to control and tax the industrial classes.

In my opinion that information is just as important, if not more important, to the great manufacturing interests as to those toiling with their hands. For the benefit of the hon. member who sits near me and asked me a question a few moments ago (Mr. Garland) I would point out that according to the Canada Gazette of February 13, 1926, gold held by the Dominion in January, 1926, amounted to $127,380,217; and according to the Canada Gazette of March 13, 1926, gold held by our banks in the same month of January amounted to $43,154,000, or a total of $170,534,217. This reserve of gold was held against notes and financial credits to the tune of $2,827,488,885—or a deficit in gold of $2,656,954,668.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the hon. gentleman even in the wildest flight of his fancy suggest that those are the only gold assets available?

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to know what other gold assets there are.

Mr. CAHAN: As to the chartered banks, take the entire loans in New York, for instance, callable within twenty-four hours and payable in gold.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SPENCER: I do not think that answers the question. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the day is so short for this all-important subject. I have discussed it somewhat rapidly, and as I know other hon. members want to take part in the debate, I will conclude by saying that I shall be very glad to give my hearty support to the resolution before the House.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the resolution now before the House carries an implication that I should not like to go out to the world. In saying that I believe I voice the opinion of every hon. member, even that of the mover himself. He implies that Canada has not now a national banking system. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have a national banking system, that it is a good system, and that it meets the requirements of the country. As every hon. member knows, we are on a gold basis, and to-day our money is as good as the money of any other country. Indeed, only a few days ago the Canadian dollar was quoted at a premium in New York. The bank notes of any bank in Canada pass at par in any of our provinces, so I say we have a good banking system.

To those who were in the last parliament the question introduced and discussed to-day by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) is not a new one. This question was debated at considerable length in 1923 and again in 1924, not only in this chamber but also before the Banking and Commerce committee. Experienced bankers, both Canadian and those from other countries, were brought before the Banking and Commerce committee to give evidence, and I propose to place on record very briefly the opinions of some of those gentlemen. I have in mind Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, general manager of the Bank of Montreal. I have never met a banker, either from Canada, the United States or the Mother Country, who has not acknowledged that Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor is recognized as a good banker who understands well the systems of banking not only in our country but in the other countries of the world. The opinions of Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor will be found, if any hon. gentleman desires to look them up, at page 297 of the proceedings of the investigation of 1923. His opinion was that the system as it exists now in Canada meets our requirements and is very much better suited to those requirements than would be the federal reserve bank system of the United States.

That view was also shared by another eminent banker, Sir John Aird, who is not only a good banker with considerable experience, but is also generally recognized as an economist, and a gentleman with wide experience in the business, commercial and industrial life of Canada. No man understands better than does Sir John Aird the requirements of Canada, both for the moving of the crops and the providing of money for the carrying on of our industrial affairs. If hon. gentlemen will refer to page 363 of the report of the 1923 proceedings the evidence of Sir John Aird will be found.

We had before that committee still another gentleman, who is recognized as an economist and a man supposed to pronounce the views of western Canada upon this question. I refer to Professor Swanson of the University of Saskatchewan. Professor Swanson was more interested, I believe, in sound economics than in helping any theories. His evidence is found at pages 783 and 784, and I am going to quote it, because I propose in a few moments to accept a suggestion made by my hon. friend. Professor Swanson also thought that the banking system of Canada was quite suited to our requirements.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the minister aware that Professor Swanson criticized the gold basis some years ago, before an open convention in Calgary, as readily as have some of the hon. members of the House to-day?

Mr. ROBB: I am not sure about that, but I find that on page 778 of the 1923 proceedings Professor Swanson said:

> I think we ought to make a very careful detailed and comprehensive study of the American system and exactly the results that have been secured therefrom before we make such an experiment in Canada.

Then later on, at page 784:

> I do not think it is required in Canada. Our banks have the resources right now. It is not the case that we have not the money. No federal reserve scheme superimposed on our banks could increase the credit to a much greater degree than the banks can increase their credit right now. When a bank says it is not able to extend its loan in an individual case, often it is because the security or the character of the borrower, either one or the other, is not up to par.

That was his opinion, expressed before that committee in 1923. But the Banking and Commerce committee, not satisfied with the evidence of Canadian bankers and economists, called before them a gentleman who is a recognized authority in the United States—Mr. John W. Pole, chief national bank examiner of the United States. Mr. Pole's evidence can be found at page 136 of the 1924 proceedings of that committee. I am not going to tire the House any more than to read the following:

> The federal reserve system is admirably adapted to the unit system of banking, but for a very small number of banks with a large number of branches to attempt to adjust themselves so as to fit into such a scheme would appear to be highly impracticable.

That is the opinion of Mr. Pole, and he continues:

> Under the provisions of the Finance Act it seems to be quite possible for any bank in Canada whose assets would be of such liquid character as to enable it to take advantage of any facilities offered by the reserve system, to avail itself of equal opportunity offered by the Finance Act, the operation of which is easy and inexpensive and, judging from the manner in which it has been functioning, effective.

It is upon evidence such as this that I submit to the House that we should not allow the idea to go out that Canada has not a good banking system, and one which is suited to the needs of our country.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the Finance Act. For the information of the House it may be interesting to know to just what extent the Finance Act is required by the banks. I will place on Hansard a few figures to show the use of the Finance Act and to prove that it is not very much needed under our present banking system. The following table shows the maximum advances under the Finance Act in each of the years from 1918 to 1925 inclusive:

1918	$116,500,000 00
1919	112,957,000 00
1920	123,689,025 00
1921	108,707,960 75

Then we come to 1922, and I ask hon. gentlemen to notice the drop:

1922	$60,619,769 74
1923	40,020,000 00
1924	37,800,000 00
1925	30,400,000 00

According to the bank return of January 30, 1926, the advances totalled only $9,000,000, and that was during a period when there was some movement of crops.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to detain the House at any length, because I understand there are other speakers.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister if he has the Finance Act at hand, and if he would be good enough to tell the House the class of securities on which money may be advanced.

Mr. ROBB: I have not the Finance Act at hand, so I cannot give that information to my hon. friend, but he will understand from the figures just given that there has been no restraint in the banking facilities offered. The banks, we may suppose, had just as good security in 1924 and 1925 as in 1918, and had they required the money they would have got it, and at a lower rate of interest than they got in 1918. I will admit at once that the banking situation in Canada to-day gives less worry, at all events, to the Finance Minister and to the government, than it did in the years 1921, 1922 and 1923. The banks in Canada are in pretty good shape to-day, and we have improved the system to a degree by the introduction of the inspection system.

I am not one who objects at all to securing all the information that we can get brought before us in the Banking and Commerce committee. I admit at once that the information brought before the government and before the members in the last parliament enabled us to improve very considerably upon the inspection system of the banks, to the good, I believe, of all Canada, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the suggestion which I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has made, that this question be referred for study to the Banking and Commerce committee. I would like however to make this reservation: I appeal to my hon. friends who have given study to this matter and who have advanced these ideas, I appeal also to every member of the Banking and Commerce committee, that in bringing witnesses before that commitee they do not pay heavy travelling expenses to bring some person before them who knows nothing about the matter, or some person outside the country. I do not object to bringing gentlemen before the committee who are able to give us information that will be of any value, but as to our paying heavy travelling expenses for men who have simply theories to advance, and who come possibly from a long distance and have heavy accounts, I submit that the Banking and Commerce committee might very well pass upon that, and help the Finance Minister to keep down expenses. With that reservation, I accept the suggestion that this question be referred for further study to the Banking and Commerce committee.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I do not intend to take up much of the time of the House in dealing with this question. I may say at the beginning that I have no brief whatever for the banks as they exist in Canada to-day. Like most professional men, I make my deposits, draw my cheques, and once in a while have the good luck to be able to borrow some money from the banks.

Mr. ROBB: Lucky man!

Mr. MANION: Generally speaking, at the basis of all resolutions of this kind, there is a suggestion, it seems to me, that the ordinary credit facilities of our banking system are not adequate for the needs of the country. That probably is correct in some special lines of credit, such perhaps as might be dealt with by the rural credits scheme, or something of that sort, but on the whole I think that one of the greatest curses of Canada in the past, in some periods at all events, has been the giving of too much credit. I well remember, for example, that between 1910 and 1912 in the western country, from the head of the lakes clear through to Vancouver, there was so much credit, and thoughtless credit, issued by the banks, almost anybody being able to borrow five or ten thousand dollars to invest in real estate, that as a consequence we had a real estate boom which ruined nearly all the people through the west, and did actually ruin very, very many of them.

5 p.m.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does not the very condition the hon. member speaks of show something wrong with the system?

Mr. MANION: I am not going to defend the present banking system at all. I do not suggest that it is perfect or anything of that sort; on the contrary, I think there is plenty of room probably for improvement in the system, but I was simply discussing credit.

I am not going to discuss banking, the gold standard, or the different types of money. In fact, and I say this without any reflection on my hon. friend, I have the idea that a debate of this sort is absolutely useless in the House at the present time. The very fact that during this debate there is a very small attendance in the House shows that certainly the idea is not accepted by the House generally that any great change from the system of private banking to national banking is necessary

The Minister of Finance, who has just sat down, says he has no objection to this question being referred to the Banking and Commerce committee. Neither have I, but I have objection, which the Finance Minister apparently has not, to this question being investigated again now after we have just had two years of the same type of investigation. I do not see any reason why at the present time the people of Canada should be saddled with the expense of bringing before the Banking and Commerce committee, from a long distance, and at heavy expense, witnesses who in very many cases have nothing but a superficial, theoretic knowledge of banking, or of any other problem I have heard many of them discuss, simply to expound in many cases futile theories. I well remember a couple of years ago a witness who was brought before that committee, at great expense, whose theories were so thick that nobody could understand them at all, and I do not think even he had any idea of what they meant himself.

What I am opposing is the nationalization of banking. I am not upholding the banking system as it exists in Canada to-day, nor saying that it cannot be improved; I willingly admit it can, but I am opposing the idea of nationalization of our banking system, or, for the matter of that, the nationalization of anything else that we have not already nationalized in this country. The function of government is to govern, not to trade, whether the trade is in money or in goods of any kind. I think we have too much government at the present time. We are continually passing legislation much of which is useless. Somebody is continually proposing that we should nationalize this or that. My good friend who has moved this resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) has another resolution on the order paper to nationalize coal mines. I have no doubt that if we nationalized the banks, and then the coal mines, my good friend from Winnipeg North Centre would go on nationalizing until finally he had nationalized every line of endeavour in this country. Russia tried that; in fact they did it, and they made a pretty rotten mess of the whole job, so far as we are able to find out. There are certain lines of endeavour which a government alone can properly handle —the mails for instance, hygienic and sanitary questions, the supplying of cities and towns with a safe water supply, and other lines of endeavour of that nature affecting the whole community of a city or province or the citizens of the whole country, and which can be properly dealt with only by a government. But there are other lines of endeavour which should be left to private initiative. Most of us believe, and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree with this, that practically everything that is done by governments is done more extravagantly than if the same service were performed by a private corporation. That is true, I believe, from a municipal, provincial, and Dominion standpoint—

Mr. HEAPS: Does the hon. member apply that to the hydro-electric enterprise in this country?

Mr. MANION: I probably would have said the same of that enterprise if I had been asked before the thing was done, but that is now done.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. member stated that governments are more extravagant than private concerns, and I was asking whether that was true in regard to the development of electrical energy under public ownership and private enterprise.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt whatever that the building of hydro-electric plants under public ownership has cost very much more than if those same plants had been built under private ownership. I have no doubt of it whatever, and I could give instances to prove it.

Mr. HEAPS: Do not the people of Ontario pay much less for their energy, under public ownership, than do the people of Quebec, where the enterprise is under private ownership?

Mr. MANION: That is not the question my hon. friend asked before. He asked me if it cost more to develop the hydro-electric enterprise under public ownership than it would have under private ownership, and I answered that question. However, I am not criticizing the hydro-electric development which has taken place in Ontario. What I am maintaining is that we have enough nationalization at the present time and until we can get out of some of the difficulties we are in, we should do no more, and even then I will have to be shown some good and plain reason for nationalizing anything further.

Mr. HEAPS: Does not the mess which the hon. gentleman has referred to arise out of the failure of private ownership?

Mr. MANION: What mess is that?

Mr. HEAPS: In regard to the National Railways?

Mr. MANION: No, it did not arise out of the failure of private ownership. It arose partly out of that, but mainly out of the overbuilding of railways on the part of the government.

I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the railway situation or of the hydro-electric question, but I repeat that we have nationalized enough things in this country—surely the railway situation is proof enough of that—without wishing to nationalize the banking system.

Not only is a government more extravagant in construction and operation, but as a rule the efficiency is not so good in any nationally-operated enterprise as in private operation. In England the telephone and the telegraph were at one time in the hands of private companies, but were taken over by the government, with the result that the government is out millions of dollars annually on the operation of the system and the service is not nearly so good. I have observed the same thing in other parts of the world. I have travelled on the Italian railways, and if there are any worse railways in the world I do not know where they could possibly be found. The French government railways are in nearly as bad a condition. The Australian railways, I am told, though I have not travelled on them, are operated by the government, and they have gone so far as to have different gauges; so that in the middle of the night you have to get off one sleeping car and get into another, because the gauges of the roads are different. The operation has not been satisfactory there. There has been only one line of publicly-operated railway in the world which has really given satisfaction—those in Germany. I have travelled on the trains in that country myself, and they were very satisfactory. But the Germans are a different people from the English speaking and the French speaking people in the countries in which we live. The German people are apparently willing to be governed by bureaucrats. They are willing to be docile enough to permit the higher officers to compel them to do as they wish. I remember well a thing that struck me on the German railways, in fact you will find it all over Germany, and that was that the word "verboten" which means forbidden was written all over the walls in the public places and on the railway trains. The German people are willing to be forbidden to do anything which the bureaucrats desire to forbid. The Anglo-Saxon people of England and of Canada are not satisfied to be forbidden to do this, that and the other. In thinking the matter over, I came to the conclusion that the German railways, though government owned, made a success, in contradistinction to the railways of the other countries, because of the national characteristics of the German people.

Another reason why I object to the nationalization of enterprises is that it leads to business methods being replaced by favouritism and politics. It has been suggested that some political friends would be favoured. I think the hon. gentleman from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) made the suggestion that if the government was in control of the banking system favouritism would be shown. I have no doubt that statement is absolutely correct, whether it be a Conservative, Liberal, or even a Progressive government. I have an idea that if my Progressive friends controlled the banking system they would give all the money to the farmers of the prairie provinces.

Mr. COOTE: Would the hon. member insinuate that, in the administration of the Finance Act, in regard to the loans referred to a few minutes ago by the Finance Minister, there has been any favouritism shown to one bank or another because of the politics of the bank?

Mr. MANION: I do not know. I have never been Finance Minister. The Finance Minister could probably answer that question, but I cannot. If there was opportunity for a government to favour one bank more than another, and a particular bank was friendly to them, I have no doubt they would favour it. I think that is true of all governments. Governments are made up of human beings, they are naturally going to favour their friends and generally speaking they are pretty nearly right in favouring them, but I do not wish to put the whole banking system of this country into the hands of any government, whether it be the party sitting on this side of the House or the Liberal party on the other side of the House. I should not care to put the banking system into their hands and allow them to favour their friends by giving loans to those to whom they chose to give them. I consider if you go on nationalizing enterprises you take away the personal incentive and initiative needed to build up the country. Not only that, but you paralyse to a certain extent private enterprise, which after all, under our present system—although it can be improved in many ways—is the stimulus which makes the wheels of industry go round and tends to make the country prosper.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How much private enterprise is possible in a financial world to-day where ten banks control the whole situation?

Mr. MANION: If there is no private enterprise possible when ten banks control the banking system, how much enterprise is possible when one government controls it? It would be just one-tenth of that amount. A logical argument was put up by one of my hon. friends behind me, who asked if it was not a monopoly to hand the banking system over to the government. Certainly it would be a monopoly. It is not a monopoly to-day. We have ten different banking systems all competing with each other.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: One system.

Mr. MANION: Ten different organizations, ten competitors competing with each other for the business of the country, and they do compete. Any man who has dealings with the banks knows that sometimes he will be refused credit by one bank and receive credit from another, in order possibly to get his business. So that there is competition. There would be no competition if the government obtained control of it, except the competition between the government's friends and the government's enemies.

Mr. SPENCER: Would it not be just as fair to say that the government-owned railway might refuse to carry people not friendly to them?

Mr. MANION: No, but all government railways carry a lot of people they should not carry. I have noticed that. I have been struck very often by the number of deadheads, including myself, on the government trains.

Mr. DUNNING: Is the hon. member suggesting that the railway companies break the law?

Mr. MANION: I do not know whether they break the law or not but the Minister of Railways will have a good opportunity to look into that, and I feel sure, judging from the thoroughness and thrift which was shown by that great Saskatchewan political machine of his, he will be able to clean up any irregularity in that respect.

Mr. DUNNING: I was not trying to invite any partisan discussion, but the hon. member was speaking of the railways and the methods they adopted in regard to transportation, and I really think the statement he made which might carry the inference that they are not complying with the provisions of the law should be withdrawn, or information given with regard to it.

Mr. MANION: I would advise my hon. friend to look into the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I am glad my hon. friend has withdrawn the inference.

Mr. MANION: I did not withdraw anything. My hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Dunning) does not seem to know whether I was speaking of the past or the present, and I did not say whether I was referring to the past or present events; but as a matter of fact I was speaking of the past. However that is another issue and I do not want to be dragged into a discussion of it. But I know—and I repeat to the Minister of Railways—that there are people carried on government railways as well, perhaps, as private railways who have no right to that privilege. It is, however, up to the Minister of Railways to look into that.

Doubtless there are weaknesses in our present banking system. I will admit that; I am not defending the banks at all; I am not going even so far as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) did in defending them. I think we can improve them by controlling them, by seeing that they serve the people as they should. For example, the rural credit scheme which, I believe, is to be put into force this year, although the legislation has not been brought down yet, is for the purpose of implementing the work of the banks.

I have noticed that those governments are, generally speaking, the most efficient which undertake the least. The more you hand over to a government to handle, the less likely you are to get efficient government. We have at the present time governmental problems enough without handing them over the whole banking system of the country. We have, indeed, a national railway problem which is perhaps the greatest problem we have in Canada to-day, and I am sure the energies of my good friend the Minister of Railways will be well taken up if he is to get us out of the muddle into which the people and governments of the past have got us in the National railway system.

I did not wish to take up so much time, but my friends as usual made half my speech for me. I submit, in closing, that by government control, that is by suitable legislation put upon the banks, we can improve the banking system of Canada. But I object to any more government ownership or government management than we have at present.

We have enough government ownership in other matters to manage without taking over the banks of this country and attempting to manage them. I would agree, therefore, with the Minister of Finance that this resolution might be sent to the Banking and Commerce committee to play with it if they will, but I object to any expense being incurred by the people of this country in bringing witnesses before that committee. That would be my attitude and I would be very much disappointed if the House did endorse the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we must feel that a considerable step forward has been made by protagonists of changes or reforms in the banking system when we find that both the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) are now willing to discuss this question before the Banking and Commerce committee. I have in mind the debate that took place last year, and may I say at this point that although this question has been discussed by this House for three years and discussed in the Banking and Commerce committee during one year, it has never yet been made a specific question for discussion and recommendation by any committee of this House or by the House itself.

The time has now come, I believe, when a suggestion such as has been offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) should meet with the approval of the House, and an examination of a possible alteration or evolution of the system that now exists should take place with a view to improving that system. Like the hon. member for Fort William, I am not going at this moment to advocate any theoretical, revolutionary modifications or changes in our system, but I am going to urge that something should be done to coordinate several of the different branches of the present system into one central force, with perhaps certain effects which I will deal with later.

Last year the Banking and Commerce committee, appointed to discuss rural credits and some other matters, decided that there ought to come within its scope the question of a national bank or central bank or bank of rediscount, and so that committee, in spite of the opposition of its chairman, recommended to the House that the scope of the committee should be widened to include that question. That recommendation was carried by the committee and sent forward to the House on May 21. Unfortunately, owing to processes of which I know not and influences that have never been explained, that report was not presented to the House for discussion until July 2, a short time prior to prorogation, with the result that although a debate took place, the resolution widening the scope of the committee and allowing this investigation was voted down. On that occasion, however, the Minister of Finance took exception to the scope of the committee being widened for a discussion of this question. He did so on two grounds; first, that the Finance Act now provided rediscount facilities as they were required by the present system and supplied an elastic currency which would satisfy every need for credits in this country. The second objection he took was, of course, on the orthodox ground that you must not interfere with the revision of the Bank Act that had taken place for ten years and that we should let it go at that. That ground was taken by my hon. friends to my right, with the exception of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), who has always been a strong supporter of centralizing the various banking functions that exist to-day.

Perhaps I had better approach this question by making one or two fairly general statements. First of all, that there is something wrong not alone in this country, but in most countries in connection with the financial system must be apparent to anyone who will study the question. Let us note that during the whole history of nations, so far as I have been able to study them, there has been only one period in Canada and one in Great Britain since the Napoleonic wars during which the whole productive capacity of the nation was used to its limit. That was during the past war. We ask ourselves why. The explanation is at once forthcoming when we study the changes that took place instantaneously both in this country and in Great Britain at the outbreak of the war—it took place also in other countries, but I do not wish to refer to them—which placed beneath the whole banking structure all the public credit, all the power of public credit; placed it definitely under a private banking structure and so gave it that great power of credit inflation which enabled the peak production to be reached without any difficulty. There was no unemployment; there were no wretched conditions either in Great Britain or in this country during that otherwise wretched period. After that war was over we found that the interests that prior to then had controlled currency, coinage, everything in the way of credit, decided to contract that credit and to reassert their previous domination. They did that by a process of violent deflation, of forced contraction of credit, with the result that during the period 1920 to 1921 there was an increase in private debt, agricultural, municipal, provincial and even federal debt, to the extent of about 100 per cent. In other words, our debts, national and provincial, were doubled in that period. That matter has been discussed at least temporarily by the committee, and I do not wish to dwell further upon it, except to say that it is almost hopeless to expect that in a House of this kind or in any House, even out in the country, we can get the great bulk of the people at this moment to accept any reform which may yet in itself be for their benefit. They are not ready for it. The best we can hope to do in the meantime, therefore, is to educate them, to point out certain truths that exist, and to get the people to apply them to present conditions. Imagine if you will that here we have bootless sons of unemployed shoemakers! Did you ever hear of anything so utterly absurd? You have a nation like Canada capable of vast expansion in productive enterprise, but our industries are working at low ebb. This is not due to any lack of protection by any means.

Mr. CAHAN: It is not due to lack of credit, either.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Our men, too, are unemployed, and this again is due to no lack of protection. We have had a vast army of unemployed for years and we shall unfortunately continue to have them under a system which can, by the creation of credit or the contraction of it, decrease or increase prices and decrease or increase manufacturing output. That great power should not rest with private individuals who use it for private gain. I am simply stating fair, honest facts. The power of contraction or of expansion of credit should certainly not rest with private individuals for personal gain. It does so to-day, and that is the question before us for discussion. Hon. gentlemen may of course discuss the nationalization of railways or of mines, or any other question of that kind, but there is no parallel whatever between the nationalization of one particular capital asset and the nationalization of something that constitutes the whole social and state structure. Money power is at this moment the state itself, and without it no state can function. Men greater than I can ever aspire to be have so declared in unequivocal terms and no one has dared to contradict the statement, indeed no one can contradict it. These are general facts which are well known to all of us. If, instead of spending a good deal of our time and energy in the discussion of unimportant details, we tried to get into our heads one or two facts of real importance, then possibly we might get together and evolve some solution.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) said a moment ago that he was not going to accept the underlying principle of this motion because, forsooth, certain bankers had alleged that in their opinion there was no need for it, inasmuch as the present system could supply all our needs. May I remind him that these same great experts on banking assured us in 1923 that there was not a single banking institution in the country which was then in danger? They told us that bank inspection was unnecessary and, indeed, would be a bad thing. They went further: they were of the opinion that suitable conditions generally existed in banking. But they were wrong in all this. Why therefore should we now take their word in this matter especially when we remember that men in exactly the same position, the high protectionists, when asked whether or not they want more protection, say that they do. Of course they want it; it is to their interest to get protection . And of course the bankers want the present system perpetuated, for it is decidedly in their interests that it should continue. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, this sovereign right of the people, the right of note issue, which was delegated to private individuals by unwise persons in the past, should be restored to the state. It would take from the profits of the bankers of this country about six or seven million dollars a year, which surely is worth considering. This has been done in Australia and it can be done in Canada. Why should we place in the hands of private individuals the power not only of credit issue but of the control of industry—the power of issuing the very medium through which we exchange and buy goods?

How many hon. gentlemen have considered this fact, that no nation can afford to accept as a free gift any large quantity of necessary commodities from any other nation? Suppose some country owed us $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 and were ready to pay us at once in goods: what would be the first thing we should do? We should do exactly what they do in England, in France, in Belgium and what as a matter of fact we do in Canada: we should take steps at once to prevent the importation of those goods which they were anxious to give us for nothing . If we accepted them for nothing they would have to be stored in our warehouses and that would leave our men unemployed; there would not be the purchasing power in circulation to procure the goods. That leads us to the statement made by the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna as to the nature of the solution. Now he is no extremist; he is no Bolshevist; he propagates no violent revolutionary theories such as my hon. friend from Fort William and others have referred to. He has been Chancellor of the British Exchequer, he is a man of immense mental capacity, and he has probably seen and done more in a financial way than any hon. gentleman who sits in this House. And what does he say? He declares that if you wish to get rid of unemployment you must first recognize clearly the steps that are to be taken. In order to consume the increased production that would result from the employment of people you must be prepared to issue enough purchasing power to buy those goods. That is the problem that is facing not only Canada but other countries at the moment. How can we put our people to work to make industry active and prosperous? We can do it only by returning to the workers sufficient purchasing power to buy back the goods they produce. If you can find any system that will do that, you will have accomplished probably a greater reform than has been brought about in centuries, possibly the greatest reform that the world has ever witnessed. It is worth considering, and the idea is not so insane as some hon. gentlemen suggest.

The present system in this country has up to now undoubtedly supplied our requirements within certain moderate bounds. It is not an ideal system by any means. Indeed, no system can be ideal which leaves to two such centres as Toronto and Montreal the final determination of the amount of credit that shall be extended to any community, or how much shall be given to any individual. Think of this vast Dominion, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Arctic to the boundary line, functioning under a system by which the credit reservoirs which are now situated in Montreal and Toronto can be and are filled by the power derived from deposits from the Yukon to Montana and from Vancouver to Halifax! That great power rests finally with this limited number of private individuals in these two centres, and it is used by them not for the public benefit but for private gain. These are points to be kept in mind. I say therefore that the present banking system is not the best that we might have, for the reason that it is a private system operated for individual profit and not for the good of the state. The inclination to monopoly in banking was evident fifty years ago and to-day it is realized in actual fact. In that period we have gradually contracted the number of our banks by amalgamations, by forced failures, and by other means until to-day we have but a very restricted number, which is still decreasing. Exactly the same process has gone on in Great Britain; there has been a steady contraction of the number of banks and a centralization of banking power in the hands of fewer and fewer individuals.

How many hon. gentlemen who have read the Bank Act realize that three men constituting a quorum on a board have the power to make unlimited loans to any individual, company or corporation, or even to any one of themselves, or to a company which may be really a director of the bank? We submitted a few years ago an amendment asking for a curtailment of that power. We asked that the unanimous consent of all the directors called at a special meeting should be given before the bank should have the right to give to any company controlled by a director a loan greater than ten per cent of its paid-up capital.

Mr. SPENCER: Was it not a majority of the directors?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I think it was unanimous consent. I must say in fairness to him that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) supported us in that amendment; he was just as anxious as we were to see that this vast power which is still vested in these directors should be controlled. Now, when we recognize that fact we see the truth of every statement I have made previously about the vast control which rests in the hands of these private individuals.

There are further reasons why to-day the interest rates in this country are unquestionably bad; in western Canada they are exceedingly bad. They are not really governed by the law, for although the Bank Act says seven per cent is the maximum, the banks in western Canada cleverly get around that limitation on every occasion. Only the other day I received a renewal note for a small amount with the notification, "8 per cent before and after maturity." We tried to have inserted in the Bank Act a fixed legal rate of interest above which the banks could not go. That motion was defeated by the committee. Why, no good reason has ever been given. Why there should not be a limit to the amount of interest to be charged by a bank is something beyond my comprehension. There should be a legal limit. To-day there is really no limit; for although, as I say, the Bank Act contains a limitation of seven per cent, there is no penalty provided for any infraction of that limitation.

Mr. BURY: May I call the attention of the hon. member to this penalty—if he refuses to pay the bank will only get five per cent?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then he would have a mighty hard time when he went back to the bank for further credit.

Mr. BURY: Surely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman perhaps knows that in western Canada the banks have adopted the practice of collecting the interest in advance—discounting in advance.

Mr. BURY: Surely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): So the banks for private profit very cleverly use their power under this vast monopoly to defeat the intention and spirit of the act itself. Is that fair or right?

Mr. McMILLAN: That is what the banks try to do here, but we will not pay the interest in advance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There you see the spirit which is being developed as a result of this oppressive action by the banks. That spirit will grow more and more among business men and manufacturing interests as they feel the steadily growing pressure of this practice. The great industrialists are beginning to realize it. There was a time, you know, when the captains of industry—they were called capitalists—exercised great control over money and industry, but to-day that power has passed beyond them to a few men. Financial power, concentrated and tremendously effective, controls industry itself, and rapidly our business men are realizing that to-day. The interest rate is practically in the hands of the bankers themselves. It is wrong that that should be so. It is wrong that they should be charging to us in western Canada as high as ten per cent on renewal loans in bad years. Therefore I urge the establishment of some central co-ordinating agency which by competition would prevent any further exploitation of our people in that way. It has been completely successful in Australia, where the Commonwealth Bank has succeeded in reducing the general level of the rate of bank interest.

I simply cite these cases in passing, not urging upon the House, or the committee subsequently, the adoption of any one of these specific plans. I do not like the federal reserve system of the United States any more than other members here do. My chief objection to it is that, although it appears to be sound, it is a bankers' reserve system and is not for the people. There is no doubt that a central bank or some central co-ordinating agency, call it what you may, having the state's interest at heart will have a greater and wider outlook upon the prosperity and development of this country than have our chartered banks, and would be in a much better position to meet the necessary credit requirements in any district.

Let me ask hon. gentlemen this question In western Canada, particularly the province from which my distinguished friend from East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) comes, we have vast resources available for the development of industry; we have markets for that industry close at hand—we are close to the Pacific seaboard, we are close to the vast market along the western coast of America and in the Orient; we have right under our feet coal in tremendous quantities, we have petroleum, we have gas, we have wood. Why has industrial development not taken place out there to a greater extent? This question I know the hon. member for East Edmonton has asked himself repeatedly. It is natural he should do so. I also have pondered the question. Why has not industrial development been more rapid in those prairie provinces? There are just two reasons: one is, the recent industrial development of eastern Canada; the other is, the banking system of this country. These two factors with their interlocking directorates have resulted in the concentration in two provinces of the Dominion of the vast power of industry and the vast power of finance, with the result that just as soon as a little plant or manufacturing concern starts up in a place like Medicine Hat or Calgary or Edmonton, that industry if not absolutely natural to the district itself, and frequently even if it is, is quickly crushed out by the contraction of credit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that offends my sense of justice more than another it is that those vast resources which are lying there available to the people of this country are to remain dormant, undeveloped, unprogressive, and we unprosperous, simply because of the concentrated control, under our branch bank system, of that vast power in Toronto and Montreal. The sooner we get away from that the better. The other day we had an excellent debate, and I congratulate hon. members from the Maritimes on their militant, logical and powerful arguments. But they perhaps overlooked this aspect of the matter; the Hon. F. B. McCurdy did not overlook it. The fact of the matter is that in the Maritime provinces just as in the west, their condition to-day is unquestionably very largely due to the fact that they are long-distance customers of our bankers. Let me quote from Mr. McCurdy's pamphlet:

When even the wealthiest banking customer in Nova Scotia to-day applies for a loan, even though fortified by ample collateral, he is politely apprised that in the ordinary course of the bank's routine his application will be submitted for adjudication to an office several thousand miles away.

Now, is that not enough to arrest the development of any province? The same thing exactly obtains in western Canada. The branch bank managers in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick have a certain discretionary limit, just as they have in the prairie provinces and British Columbia, a discretionary limit within the jurisdiction of gentlemen in Toronto and Montreal. I have a branch bank manager in my own little town, and two years ago he had a discretionary limit of $300. Could anything be more absurd?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does not the hon. gentleman know that the same limit applies in Ontario?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, but you are in a different situation, you have the head office immediately at your hand; we have not. You have the personal contact of the head offices in Toronto and Montreal with the individual requirements of industry in Quebec and Ontario, but if you are separated by vast miles of rocks and Christmas trees as we are in the prairies, or by a vast stretch of territory as you are in the Maritimes, what is to be done with the situation? The fact of the matter is that the present branch bank system is successful in crushing out individual initiative—that very thing which the hon. member for Fort William spoke of—initiative of men who would gladly take up the banking business in districts like Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the western provinces. The sooner we recognize these facts the better it is going to be for the country.

The hour is getting late and I know the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has something to say. I have many other arguments I could use, but I do not wish to inflict them all on the hon. member; I want to see him contribute his quota to the debate. But may I say this in conclusion? Should we in our wisdom reach the stage where we decide that some national banking institution is necessary, the question will at once arise in our minds, what about capital? I made inquiry the other day, and I find that we would have instantly available for the use of any national bank which might be established not only those privileges of note issue and other matters which are now exploited by the present system, but also some $97,710,189, made up as follows:

Post office savings bank deposits, 1924..	$24,330,486
Dominion government savings..	9,185,377
Other savings banks..	64,194,326

In addition to that there would be the provincial government business and that of the municipalities, which would make an enormous amount of business for such a bank.

In conclusion let me suggest that at present we have a Department of Finance which receives from the banks annual and semi-annual statements. These annual statements have not served any good purpose as yet. The Department of Finance was aware for eight years that the Home Bank, for example, was in an insolvent condition; they had reports to that effect, yet they took no action. Then we have a central gold reserve, which is under the direction of four trustees—and here again we see the control of the banks. One trustee is appointed by the government and the other three are appointed by the Canadian Bankers' Association. We then have the Finance Act, which was probably the most evolutionary and best development which has taken place in our banking system over a period of years. Unfortunately that act was brought in by a Conservative government in an entirely illegal manner. I think they were justified in so doing under those conditions, but the fact should be borne in mind that the very verboten, autocratic and bureaucratic methods condemned by the hon. member for Fort William were used most effectively by a minister of his own government. This is an act for the bankers only; it allows discount privileges to no one else, and should be amended. We will discuss that question, however, at greater length on a future occasion.

Then we have a treasury board, consisting of the five Privy Councillors, which for some time set an inflexible rate of interest of 5 per cent. A peculiar situation developed then, by which we were paying to the bankers 5½ per cent for the money we had borrowed, but we were lending them money at 5 per cent. That was an amazing situation which, I am glad to say, no longer exists. We have also a bankers' association, incorporated by the Dominion and possessing certain supervisory powers, and lastly that new institution whose functions have not yet been examined thoroughly and whose usefulness has not been properly determined, the Inspector of Banking.

My suggestion at this moment is that we should consider the grouping together of these separate functions under the control of a single commission or board, completely free from political influence. The board should be appointed for a number of years and should be enabled to hold office irrespective of what political party may be in power. If that suggestion is followed there is no danger of political interference in this most important matter. That method has been followed succesfully in Australia where, although there have been four changes of government, practically no change in policy has taken place. In the meantime it was found in Australia that the system did not lend itself to proper commercial loans, with the result that they have adopted the idea of the advisory board.

Let me in closing, Mr. Speaker, say that I hope the words of the late Mr. Woodrow Wilson, ex-president of the United States, will be borne in mind by hon. members in discussing this question. Writing in the New Freedom, after relinquishing the presidency, Woodrow Wilson said:

> Some of the biggest men in the United States, in the fields of commerce and manufacture, are afraid of somebody, are afraid of something. They know that there is a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so pervasive, that they had better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation. The "control of credit" has become dangerously centralized. It is the mere truth to say that the financial resources of this country are not at the command of those who do not submit to the dictation and domination of small groups of capitalists. The great monopoly in this country is the monopoly of "big credits."

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): At this late hour Mr. Speaker, as it is impossible for this motion to be voted upon, I will not press so strongly as I otherwise intended that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) should not refer it under present conditions to the committee on Banking and Commerce. We have this session a number of very important measures coming before the House, to which we believe we can devote a great deal of time and attention in order to expedite the work of the session and secure prorogation at an early date, but I suggest that there is no real reason why this motion should be referred to the committe on Banking and Commerce, and compel us there to listen to such wild and irrelevant propaganda as we have heard this afternoon in this House.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

If you will dissect the statements of alleged fact presented by hon. members you will find that they are very partial and incomplete, or entirely erroneous. Let us take, for example, the federal reserve bank system of the United States. I have had, both in my professional and in a business capacity, to study that system. It is not a national banking system any more than the banking system of Canada is a national system. It is a national banking system simply because its constitution depends upon the legislation of the congress of the United States.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I suggest—

Mr. CAHAN: I have only three minutes left; please let me finish.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not suggest that it was a national banking system.

Mr. CAHAN: I have heard it suggested in the House that it was a national banking system and according to my notes, the hon. member suggested that that was one of the objects we ought to attain by legislation which might be introduced under the terms of this resolution. The federal reserve boards of the United States are constituted by federal legislation; the banks of Canada are constituted and organized under federal legislation. But every dollar of the capital of the federal banks of the United States is advanced by the banks which have membership in that system. The entire banking capital is provided from private sources.

Then I think the Federal Reserve Board, appointed as my hon. friend suggested, is a board of supervision; it has no administrative capacity whatsoever and is simply a federal authority supervising the federal system, to see that the federal reserve acts are strictly complied with. As to the boards of the various districts, they are also nominated and appointed, in the majority, by the different banks of the United States. That system has advantages in that country to the south of us where there are some tens of thousands of state banks, and national banks, to the number of thousands.

The resources, on February 1st last, of the federal reserve banking system were $118,250,000 of capital paid in, but all privately owned, and it had deposits amounting to $2,270,000,000, but they were all the deposits of the member banks. The United States government, as a government, did not own or control a single dollar of those deposits, with the exception of the fact that the United States government temporarily had on deposit $30,000,000 of that $2,270,000,000 of deposits held by the member banks.

Hon. gentlemen have referred to the Finance Act as if that act, under present conditions, conferred great advantages upon the banking system of Canada. It does in a crisis, but under present conditions there is no lack of credit in Canada. According to the last return of the chartered banks of Canada, dated February 27, 1926, the entire eleven banks of Canada had only $2,000,000 of loans from the government under the Finance Act, $1,000,000 by one bank which I need not name, and $1,000,000 by another bank, two of the smaller banks of the country. But there was no need for larger loans.

Furthermore, hon. gentlemen say that because the banks have the right to issue their own notes, therefore there is a clear gain of the interest upon the entire amount of notes issued by the banks of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We did not say any such thing.

Mr. CAHAN: Not the hon. member, but the hon. member who sat beside him, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), suggested in his argument that the act conferred upon the banks of Canada the right to issue money on which they did not pay one cent of interest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Oh no, one per cent per annum is paid.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not referring to what the hon. member for Bow River said, but to the argument of the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think he said that; he knows much better.

Mr. CAHAN: I should think hon. gentlemen would have known very much better than to have said many of the things which they have said this afternoon, but there is no limit sometimes to ignorance.

The total amount of notes in circulation by the banks in Canada, according to the return of February 27, 1926, was $163,617,467, but at the same time the banks of Canada held of Dominion legal notes, upon which they were receiving no interest whatever, $164,023,820. Where in that situation do the banks of Canada receive a great advantage by the issuance of their own notes, when at the same time for carrying on their business they have to hold in hand an equal amount practically, within a few dollars, of Dominion legals on which they receive no interest whatever.

As it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question being put, pursuant to rule.

Thursday, April 15, 1926.

The House met at three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

First report of the joint committee of both houses on the Printing of Parliament.—Mr. Marcil.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

FRANKING PRIVILEGE

Mr. BOUCHER:

1. Is the government aware that there are being sent through His Majesty's mails to the province of Quebec thousands of pamphlets containing the speeches delivered by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen at Hamilton and in the county of Bagot, also accompanied by a photograph of the author, and that the postage is not paid on these postal matters, the envelopes being franked at the House of Commons and bearing the initials S.F.T., M.P.?

2. Who is the member or official represented by said initials S.F.T., M.P., on above postal matters?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. No.

2. The postmaster of the House of Commons informs the government that the initials "S.F.T., M.P." are those of S. F. Tolmie.

Mr. DOUCET:

1. Is the government aware that even before the session of parliament opened there have been sent through His Majesty's mails to the province of Ontario thousands of pamphlets issued by the National Liberal committee, 115 Sparks street, Ottawa, containing criticism of the speech delivered by the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen at Hamilton as not being sufficiently imperialistic for said National Liberal committee, and that the postage was not paid on these postal matters the envelopes being franked and bearing the initials, "W.L.M.K., P.M."?

2. Who is the member or official represented by said initials "W.L.M.K., P.M.", on above postal matters?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. No.

2. The postmaster of the House of Commons informs the government that the initials "W.L.M.K., P.M." are those of W. L. Mackenzie King.

CORNWALL POST OFFICE—PRIVATE BOXES

Mr. HAMILTON:

1. Is it a fact that the charges for post office boxes in the post office at Cornwall, Ontario, have been increased one hundred per cent without notice?
2. If so, why?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. These rates have been increased as follows:

Style "A" from $2 to $4.
Style "B" from $3 to $6.
Style "C" from $5 to $8.
Style "D" from $8 to $12.

2. The higher rates are those applicable at post offices where delivery is made by letter carrier. Letter carrier delivery was established at Cornwall on the 4th January, 1926. The postmaster was advised of the increased rates to be charged on the 7th April, 1926.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY—MR. CALDER

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Did Mr. R. L. Calder send in a bill as counsel before the special committee investigating matters connected with the Customs department?
2. If so, for what amount?
3. On what basis is he being paid?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Yes.

2. $4,655. (Fees and expenses.)

3. Fee $200 per diem, while engaged in work for the committee, and $15 per diem expenses, when so engaged elsewhere than in Montreal.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY—ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Did the firm of Clarkson, Gordon & Dilworth, chartered accountants of Toronto, send in a bill for services rendered to the special committee investigating matters connected with the Customs department?
2. If so, how much does this bill amount to and what period does it cover?
3. How many men is this firm employing for the work and how much is each man paid per day?
4. How much is this firm charging for the expenses of each man?
5. How were their services retained?
6. Were there any special arrangements made beforehand for fees and expenses?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Yes.

2. Fees, $8,684.50; expenses, $2,234.06. Total, $10,918.56, from February 19 to March 27, 1926.

3. 18 men (2 part time only) and 2 stenographers.—(2 part time) at $150 per diem, 1 at $100 per diem, 2 at $40 per diem, 1 at $25 per diem, 2 at $20 per diem, 1 at $15 per diem, 9 at $10 per diem, 2 stenographers at $5 per diem.

4. Actual travelling and hotel or boarding house expenses only. (Vouchers attached to account).

5. By resolution of the committee dated February 17, 1926.

6. No.

GERMAN REPARATIONS

Mr. NICHOLSON:

1. Which department of the government is responsible for the work of the Canadian Reparations Commissioner, and the administration of all matters for which Canada is responsible under the treaties of peace between Germany and Austria and the allied nations, more particularly articles 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, and the annexes and general provisions relating thereto?
2. Has such department of the government or the Reparations Commissioner made an annual report for presentation to parliament?
3. If not, has there been any report whatever which sets out fully the work of the Reparations Commissioner or the department of the government responsible for the work?
4. If no reports have been made is there to be a report, and when may it be expected?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No official with the title "Canadian Reparations Commissioner" has been appointed or holds office. Mr. James Friel, K.C., was appointed under the provisions of the Inquiries Act, chapter 104 of R.S.C., to inquire into and report upon claims for losses sustained by the civil population during the war, and he is not subject to responsibility of any department of the government. The fund from which his expenses are paid is administered by the department of the Secretary of State. The administration of matters for which Canada is responsible under Economic Clauses Articles 296 to 303 of the treaties of Peace have been delegated to the custodian appointed under the various treaties of Peace orders in council. The custodian is defined by the treaty of Peace order in council as follows:

"The custodian" means, in respect of the time prior to the date of this order, the Minister of Finance and Receiver-General, and from the date of this order means the Secretary of State of Canada, who shall be the successor as custodian of the Minister of Finance and Receiver-General, and to whom all property, rights and interests heretofore vested in the custodian are hereby transferred."

2. No.

3. No.

4. Mr. Friel is required by his commission to make a report to the Governor General in Council. The custodian is not required by the treaties of Peace orders in council to make a report.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has any invitation to the proposed colonial conference next October yet been received from the British government? If so, what are its terms?

2. Will Canada be represented if one is held; who will represent the government, and will the government lay on the table of the House the correspondence as to any proposed conference and the replies made to the same by Canada to Great Britain and the various governments of the oversea dominions?

3. Will the agenda for said conference be presented to parliament for consideration and discussion at the present session?

4. What questions are proposed to be taken up by the government at the said conference on behalf of Canada, or what suggestions have been made by Canada?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. The proposal to hold an Imperial conference in October has been received. The terms were set out in the copies of the correspondence between the governments of Great Britain and Canada, tabled in this House on March 16. (Additional copies are hereto attached.)

2. As indicated in that correspondence, the Canadian government has concurred in the proposal. The question as to what ministers will represent the government will be determined later. As noted above, the available correspondence has already been tabled.

3. Yes.

4. The question of the agenda is under discussion between the various governments of the empire.

London, December 21, 1925.

Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister. Begins:

You will remember, tnat in my message of November 18 I said that we hoped to be able to make proposal in the near future as to the date of the next Imperial conference.

We have been considering whether we should propose a meeting in 1926 or in 1927. We could hardly, at this stage, suggest a time for assembling if the latter alternative were adopted but if a meeting were arranged for next year, we think the time might be either the middle of June or the beginning of October. Before however proceeding any further, we should be glad to know your own views as to the most suitable date. I am sending a similar telegram to other Prime Ministers.

Ottawa, 8th January, 1926.

As to the date of the next Imperial conference, it is evident that the present parliamentary position in Canada makes it impossible to undertake to send representatives to a conference in June of this year, and very uncertain whether they could be sent in October. So far as Canada is concerned, early in October, 1927, would at present appear the most convenient time, pending announcement by all the other governments concerned of the dates they would prefer.

Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister: Begins:

I have brought before the cabinet your message of January 8th and the question of the date of the next Imperial conference has now been further considered. As you will have seen, general view of the government of the other dominions and of India is in favour of a conference in October, 1926, and this view is shared by the cabinet here. In these circumstances would you concur in an announcement being made that it is intended to hold an Imperial conference in October, 1926. I am repeating this telegram to other dominions.

Following from the Prime Minister for your Prime Minister.

Begins:

Your telegram of February 15 with reference to Imperial conference received. As between the two years suggested in your telegram of December 21 for holding the conference, 1927, would undoubtedly, as previously indicated, be more suitable from Canada's point of view. In consequence, however, of your statement of February 4 that the general view of the governments of other dominions and of India is in favour of a conference in October, 1926, and that this view is shared by the British cabinet, the Canadian government is prepared to concur in the proposal to set October, 1926, as the date of the conference.

CARILLON POWER DEVELOPMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways whether any permits or licenses or leases have been applied for or granted involving construction in the Ottawa river at Carillon or involving the right to export power.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I will make inquiry into the matter and give my right hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

MAIL MATTER—MARKING WITH RUBBER STAMP

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West Centre): I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Postmaster General. I have in my hand an envelope of a letter posted in the city of Montreal and upon the face of it applied by rubber stamp is this statement:

In bilingual Canada why not a bilingual postage stamp?

Is this done with the approval and consent of the government?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have not noticed the particular matter to which my hon. friend has referred. I am obliged to him for having brought it to my attention. I will have inquiry made as to just how it appears there.

Mr. HOCKEN: I presume this kind of thing must be done with consent of the Post Office Department.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOCKEN: Am I right?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOCKEN: I will ask the Prime Minister another question. Can this kind of propaganda be carried on without the consent of the postal department?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no doubt the Postmaster General himself has knowledge of the matter, but it has not been brought to my attention before. However, I shall make inquiries of the Postmaster General, ascertain the fact, and give my hon. friend further word. If my hon. friend will be kind enough to let me have the envelope to which he has referred it will help me in my inquiries.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. HOCKEN: It is understood, of course, that it will be returned to me?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member will have to trust me all in all or not at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as an order for return.

LA SALLE CAUSEWAY BRIDGE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Has the attention of the Minister of Public Works been called to the possibilities of accident on the La Salle causeway bridge? Perhaps I may quote a newspaper paragraph in reference to the condition of this structure. A mother and son narrowly escaped injury recently, according to this item, which concludes as follows:

On closer inspection it was noticed that the slabs of concrete are in a somewhat dilapidated condition. The falling of this piece of concrete illustrates the potential danger that exists there.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF HON. J. A. ROBB, MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of Ways and Means.

He said: A Dominion budget necessarily deals with two years—the year that is past and for which the Public Accounts have been submitted to parliament, and the year that is either current or, as in this case, just closed.

Public Accounts 1924-25

The Public Accounts for the financial year 1924-25 were tabled on the 11th of January last. In the budget speech delivered on the 24th of March, 1925, in making the estimate for the outcome of the year 1924-25, I followed the usual safe practice of estimating revenues yet to come as somewhat less than they would likely be and expenditures as somewhat greater.

The actual outcome of that year, as shown by the Public Accounts recently tabled, gives in round figures $2,800,000 more of ordinary revenue than was estimated. Ordinary expenditures were $808,000 less than were estimated; capital expenditures $1,500,000 less; special expenditures $209,000 less; and loans to the Canadian National Railways $8,000,000 less. The budget estimated an increase of debt for that year of some $13,000,000. In connection with this estimated increase of debt I now desire to offer a pleasing explanation. When the estimate for budget purposes was determined, an item of $7,500,000 for the Canadian National Railways in the supplementary estimates submitted to the House for that year was included as an expenditure. Three months later, when under consideration in the House, this item was, on the motion of a member of the government, struck out, thus reducing by that amount the estimated increase of debt. The improvement in our revenues and the curtailment of expenditures in these and other minor services were sufficient to change an estimated increase of some $13,000,000 in the debt into a decrease of $345,589.29, as shown by the Public Accounts for that year.

Increase of $29,965,520 in Revenue

Coming now to the fiscal year 1925-26, four years of prudent administration, good crops and greater production at home, improved conditions and increased purchasing power abroad, enabled me to-day to present a financial statement as encouraging to Canadians as it must be gratifying to all interested in the progress and development of Canada. Throughout the year imports of raw material for Canadian industries have been well maintained, in a number of instances in excess of previous years; while from month to month during the year export trade increased, resulting in a steady growth of our favourable balance, which at the end of the fiscal year exceeds $402,000,000. Nowhere are the results of this growing trade more accurately reflected than in the increased earnings of Canadian railways and in the annual statements of Canadian financial institutions and Canadian industrial corporations.

The actual ordinary revenues received up to and including March 31 last amounted to $367,958,495. The estimated revenue yet to come when the accounts for the year are finally closed is $8,841,505. This gives a total revenue of $376,800,000, an increase of some $29,965,520 over similar revenues for 1924-25.

Revenues and Expenditures

The revenue estimated from customs duties is $127,360,000, an increase of $19,200,000 over the previous year; from excise duties we expect $42,920,000, an increase of $4,300,000; we estimate that the revenue from excise taxes will be $95,500,000, an increase of $9,689,000; from income taxes we estimate $55,530,000, a decrease of $700,00 under the previous year; of arrears overdue under the former Business Profits War Tax Act we have collected some $1,150,000; from interests on investments we estimate a revenue of $8,270,000, a decrease of about $3,062,000; we expect to receive $30,334,000 as post office receipts, an increase of $1,540,000; and from all other sources we estimate a total of $15,736,000, being an increase of $541,000.

With the permission of the House, I shall place on Hansard a comparative summary of the two years' revenues by services; also a further statement showing the percentages of revenues to the total revenues for the year 1925-26.

Taking the estimated revenues for the year ended March 31, 1926, as $376,800,000 and the estimated expenditures chargeable to consolidated fund as $321,800,000, there will be available for capital, special and other obligations a surplus of revenue over ordinary expenditure of $55,000,000.

Capital expenditure for public works, including that of the Marine department, will amount to $4,930,000; and for Railways and Canals $12,005,000, of which $11,945,000 is for the Welland ship canal. The total net capital expenditure for the year will therefore be $16,935,000.

Special expenditures will amount to $4,155,000, made up of: adjustment of war claims, $275,000; cost of and discount on loan flotations for refunding maturing loans, $3,530,000; and consolidated fund transfer charges, $350,000.

With the approval of the House, I submit herewith a summary of the estimated expenditures on government business for the past fiscal year, showing the various amounts and their precentages to the total expenditures on government services.

Surplus of $33,910,000 on Government Service

Comparison of the total expenditures on all government services, namely $342,890,000, with our estimated revenue receipts for the year of $376,800,000, will show that we have more than balanced the year's business on government services by the sum of $33,910,000.

Special War Tax Revenues and Expenditures

The special war tax revenues received during the fiscal year 1925-26 will amount to some $154,580,000. The total expenditures directly attributable to the war—and I desire to especially direct this to the attention of the House—will amount to some $163,997,000, or $9,417,000 more than the receipts from our special war revenues. This difference becomes a charge on other sources of revenue.

I submit herewith in the form of a summary the war revenues and expenditures by services for the years 1924-25 and 1925-26.

The expenditures given in this summary are absolute and exact, with the exception of the amount for interest on public debt, which is taken as the difference between the amount spent in the years shown and the amount that was paid prior to the war in 1913-14.

Total Expenditure attributable to the War	$167,281,587 09	$ 163,997,000

Obviously, had we not the heavy railway and merchant marine expenditures and those expenditures which grew out of war conditions, our surpluses and other available resources might have been used in the reduction of war debt and would have permitted the showing of a lower figure for interest attributable to the war. On the other hand, during the war and demobilization periods large outlays were charged to ordinary expenses which, while not actual war cost, were directly attributable to war conditions. Even now there are heavy annual charges not taken into consideration in the summary submitted for which the war is responsible, for instance, the amount of $4,000,000 expended in the collection of war taxes has not been included, nor have the annual charges relating to the management of loans issued for war purposes and the expenses of refinancing maturing war loans. These latter charges and expenses may be estimated conservatively at $4,000,000. There might also be included the cost of housing the staffs connected with these services, which is now carried by the Public Works department.

Public Debt

Coming now to the public debt: On March 31, 1925, our net public debt stood at $2,417,437,685.59.

With estimated ordinary revenues of $376,800,000 and estimated ordinary, capital and special expenditures, as set out above, of $342,890,000, there will be a favourable balance in the year's operations on government services of $33,910,000.

There are other receipts and credits, amounting to $2,143,000, together with certain expenditures of about $13,700,000 which have not been dealt with as affecting the result of the year's business on government services, but which must be taken into account in determining the net debt. These receipts and credits are as follows: receipts on account of reparation payments $1,593,000, and interest-bearing bonds amounting to $550,000 deposited by the Vancouver Harbour Commission on account of the transfer of the government elevator at Vancouver to that Commission. These bonds have been included in our balance sheet as an investment.

On the expenditure side we have a loan of $10,000,000 to the Canadian National Railways, $668,000 to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and $511,000 to the Quebec Harbour Commission. There was also paid out some $2,521,000 under the provisions of the Home Bank Creditors' Relief Act.

To obtain the net debt as of March 31, 1926, of $2,395,084,685.59, the excess of $11,557,000 of these special expenditures over these special revenues should be deducted from the surplus of $33,910,000 mentioned above, which will give a reduction of debt during the year of $22,353,000. May I again emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this reduction of debt is net, clear of everything? I again ask the permission of the House to submit a summary of the details showing the estimated decrease of debt.

Loan Flotations During the Fiscal Year

During the fiscal year securities amounting to $164,347,833 matured. These obligations were met by issuing refunding loans amounting to $145,000,000, the balance being provided from cash resources. As a result of these transactions, the outstanding funded debt was reduced by $19,347,833 and a saving of $819,058 was made in the annual interest charges.

The securities which matured were as follows:

Due in London—$24,333,333 4 per cent Treasury Bills replacing 4½ per cent Bond Loan, 1920-25.

Due in Canada—$8,000,000 4 per cent Notes, 1924-25 $42,014,500 5 per cent war Loan 1915-25 (tax free).

Due in United States—$90,000,000 4 per cent Notes, 1924-25.

To meet these obligations, there were sold on September 1, 1925, $70,000,000 four per cent, One-year Treasury Notes, payable in New York, and $75,000,000 four and one-half per cent fifteen year bonds, payable in Canada and subject to Canadian taxes. We thus replaced tax-free bonds by taxable to the extent of $42,014,500.

The $75,000,000 bond issue was sold to a Canadian syndicate at 95.80 flat, payment being made in three instalments to suit our financial requirements,—one-third on September 30, one-third on October 31 and one-third on November 30.

The $70,000,000 note issue replacing $90,000,000 falling due was sold to a New York syndicate at par. The government reserved the right to redeem this issue on notice after March 1, 1926.

This completed the financing of obligations due in the fiscal year 1925-26.

Recently we have entered into an important and successful refunding operation to meet securities falling due in the year 1926-27. On April 1, 1926, there fell due in New York $25,000,000 5 per cent bonds of the Public Service Loan of 1916. While making provision for this maturity, advantage was taken of existing favourable market conditions to arrange for the refunding of other obligations, including $70,000,000 of temporary notes due in New York on September 1, 1926. Under our option, these notes were called for redemption on April 1. This brought the total of securities for redemption in New York on April 1, 1926, to $95,000,000. Negotiations with New York and Canadian financial houses resulted in issues being made of $40,000,000 in New York and $65,000,000 in Canada, thus effecting a reduction of $55,000,000 in our obligations due in New York.

The issue of $40,000,000 4½ per cent ten year bonds in New York realized 97.354 flat. The issues in Canada were divided as to maturity into $20,000,000 4½ per cent four-year bonds and $45,000,000 4½ per cent twenty-year bonds, realizing an average price of 96.735 flat.

Railway Finances

Those who have followed the published reports of earnings of the Canadian National Railways will not be surprised to learn that their financial requirements have fallen much below the estimate of $50,000,000 asked for and voted by parliament last session. The Minister of Railways will shortly make the usual detailed presentation of railway accounts, but I have thought it advisable, at this time, to refer briefly to the financial outcome of the year, so that we may have a clear conception of how the country stands when the railway results are considered in conjunction with the government's own debt position.

The annual statement of the Canadian National Railways for the calendar year 1925 will show earnings of $30,443,852 in excess of all operating and income charges, exclusive of interest. Government accounts are based upon the fiscal year ended 31st March, and it is for that period that the railway estimates are voted. I have, therefore, secured from the railway management their figures corresponding to our fiscal-year period. The first three months of 1926 show considerable improvement in earnings over the first quarter of 1925, and we have for the fiscal year 1925-26 an approximate figure of $33,000,000 representing earnings of the roads in excess of all operating and income charges, exclusive of interest.

The annual interest is $71,800,000 in round figures, of which $40,400,000 is payable on outstanding securities in the hands of the public. The balance, $31,400,000, is a bookkeeping and not a cash item and represents their liability for interest on government advances. As stated last year, this interest is not paid by the railways but is held in abeyance by the Dominion as an overdue account. The item, having been absorbed indirectly through the Dominion accounts into our net national debt, may therefore be left aside for present purposes. Setting off the earnings of $33,000,000 against $40,400,000 of interest paid the public, there remains a shortage of $7,400,000, which represents the actual cash loss to the railways in the fiscal year. It is to meet such losses, as well as to provide for sundry debt retirements and capital expenditures, that the railway estimates are voted.

Coming now to the financial aid which we were called upon to give to the railways during the fiscal year just closed: in the budget speech last session, I announced assistance to the railways, during the fiscal year 1924-25, to the extent of $74,000,000, exclusive of an issue of bonds for refunding purposes. This $74,000,000 was made up of:—

Cash advances from the government..	$10,000,000
Bond issues guaranteed..	64,000,000

In the year just closed, financial assistance to the railways has been limited to $10,000,000 advanced by the government in cash from our revenues. No guarantees have been given or floating indebtedness incurred. This situation is attributable partly to the substantial increase in earnings and partly to reductions in the purchase of materials and supplies and by the use of working capital. In addition there were unspent balances of guaranteed bond issues of previous years amounting to $2,700,000 odd which have been utilized.

The advance of $10,000,000 has been charged to the net debt of the Dominion as a non-active asset, in the same way as all railway cash loans have been treated. This advance covers the loss of $7,400,000 referred to and leaves $2,600,000 for capital purposes. It will therefore be seen that the public accounts for the year will include not only all government expenditures but also the total loss of the railways and an amount of $2,600,000 available for railway capital purposes, over and above which no further financial assistance was given.

Our total payments in respect of these railway corporations now reach $601,000,000, actual cash outlay charged to our national debt. This is exclusive of accumulated interest charges, as well as the capital cost of the original Canadian Government Railways. A large part of this sum represents provision for losses incurred, adding no value to the road. A very substantial amount, however, has been devoted to improvements in the road and equipment, which have materially enhanced the value of the lines. The improvement of $43,000,000 in earnings within a period of four years speaks for itself.

One estimate of the value of the government's investment in the Canadian National Railways, exclusive of Canadian Government Railways, is $375,000,000. This figure is arrived at after eliminating deficits and such over-valuations and inflations as were established on the occasion of the royal commission investigation of 1917 and the subsequent arbitration proceedings.

Whatever may ultimately be decided as a proper valuation for the government's investment in the system, the fact remains that a very substantial contribution has been made and included as a non-active asset in arriving at the net debt as shown in our public accounts. With the company to-day almost within striking distance of meeting its fixed charges due the public, the time should not be far distant when additions to our national debt for Canadian National Railway purposes will cease. Certainly we have in the railway situation, as affecting our Dominion finances, a much improved showing and a brighter outlook.

Fiscal Year 1926-27

To forecast revenues for the current year accurately is always difficult. Indications, however, point towards a year of increased revenues. The main estimates already submitted to parliament and the probable amount of the further supplementary estimates would give a fairly close indication of the expenditures for the year.

[Mr. Robb.]

The main estimates for all services other than railways amount to $345,771,351. Advances to railways amount to $31,000,000, and advances to merchant marine $600,000, or a total of $31,600,000. To this must be added something for supplementary estimates. For this purpose I shall allow $4,500,000, being approximately the amount of last year's supplementary estimates, less sundry items amounting to some $4,500,000 which will not this year be required. I confidently hope, however, that the amount will not be so large, and I warn my friends on both sides that I will do my best to keep it lower.

May I direct the attention of the House and of the country to the remarkable development which has taken place in Canada's trade. We closed the fiscal year with a favourable balance of over $402,000,000, which constitutes a record for any year since the war period. Unrevised figures for the fiscal year ended March 31, last show our total trade to be $2,258,534,453, an increase of $380,000,000 over that of the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1925, when our total trade amounted to $1,878,000,000. Our exports have continued to exceed our imports, and for the year under review these exports totalled $1,330,000,000, as against $1,081,000,000, the year previous. This is an increase in our export trade of $249,000,000. Our imports during the fiscal year totalled $927,000,000, as compared with $796,000,000 for the previous year, or an increase of $130,000,000. Summarizing these figures, it is seen that the favourable balance of our exports over imports has this year increased from $284,000,000 to $402,695,000.

When comparing our trade from year to year, there are two points of particular interest. One is the general favourable balance; the other, the source of our expansion of trade. Statistical reports for the whole fiscal year have not reached such a stage of completion that the trade can be classified by countries. But the figures for the eleven months ending February 28 are available, and a comparison can be made between that period and the same period ending February 28, 1925. During the eleven months of the last fiscal year the balance of exports over imports increased by $115,000,000. Of this increase, no less than $104,000,000, or 90 per cent of the favourable balance, is accounted for by empire trade. This, Sir, is ample vindication of the trade policy adopted by the government, and shows that our efforts should be increasingly directed towards the cultivation of trade within the empire and with countries favourably disposed towards commercial intercourse with Canada.

The most striking feature of our empire trade is the rapid growth, since the removal of the embargo on April 1, 1923, of our cattle exports to the United Kingdom. During the year preceding the lifting of the embargo, our exports of cattle to Britain were valued at $2,809,796, while for the eleven months ending February last they were $11,283,007, or over four times as great. The growth of this trade in the past three years is indicated in the following table:

Exports of Cattle over One Year Old from Canada to Great Britain, 1923-1926
(From Customs returns)

	Number	Value
1923	25,758	$ 2,809,796
1924	59,486	6,287,815
1925	86,245	9,125,667
1926 (11 months ending February)	106,200	11,283,007

The Income Tax

Now I come to a part of the financial statement that may interest every member of the House, and particularly the country. Happily our financial and commerical position now enables us to make very substantial reductions in the income taxes. With a desire to make available new money for development, our proposals provide reductions all along the line. In the revision of the Income War Tax Act, a distinction has been made between yearly earnings and income derived from investments. The act is now presented in a new and less complicated form, one which will make the tax easier to calculate and, we believe, easier to pay.

For the information of the members of the House, I now ask leave to place on Hansard a comparative statement of the proposed changes:

*The "proposed tax" in the above table is calculated on incomes exclusive of dividends.

I shall not go over the whole list, but may I offer a few examples to show the effect of the proposed changes. On an income of $3,000 the present tax is $40; under the new proposal, nothing will be paid; on an income of $6,000 the present tax is $178.50; under the new proposal, it will be $70; on an income of $12,000 the present tax is $871.50; under the new proposal it will be $460; on an income of $18,000 the present tax is $1,753.50; under the new proposal it will be $1,210. If there is any person interested in knowing how much he will have to pay on an income of $1,000,000 he will be able to find that on Hansard tomorrow morning.

Mr. WHITE (Mount Royal): May I ask the hon. minister if these tax reductions are to be retroactive to last year?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to go beyond this present year, but if it will sweeten the taste to hon. gentlemen, I may say that we hope, if the enactment meets with the approval of parliament that it may apply to the taxes which are now being collected, but that will depend on hon. gentlemen opposite as much as upon ourselves.

Proposed Changes in Customs Tariff and Taxation

Coming now to the resolutions which I shall submit to the House proposing customs tariff changes and reductions of taxation under the Special War Revenue Act and the Income War Tax Act, apart from certain modifications to meet the requirements of the West Indies and other trade agreements, the tariff changes proposed are not numerous. Prior to the appointment of the Tariff Advisory Board, certain tariff changes to meet new and growing conditions had been determined on, and these are embodied in the resolutions I shall place before you.

On cocoa beans it is proposed to increase the general tariff from $1.50 to $2.00 per hundred pounds, and a corresponding increase is made on certain cocoa products.

It is also proposed to make green coffee free under the British preferential tariff.

The rates on ginger, spices, nutmegs, mace and arrowroot are reduced in compliance with the terms of the West Indies agreement.

Bananas remain free under all tariffs but the Governor in Council is given power to impose a duty of 50 cents a bunch under the general and intermediate tariffs, leaving them free under the British preferential tariff when imported by ship direct.

It is proposed to reduce the rate on pineapples in air-tight tins from 1¾ cents a pound to one-half cent under the British preferential tariff.

The general tariff on fresh meats is to be increased one-half cent a pound.

To encourage the conservation of our timber resources, it is proposed to admit tree seeds for reafforestation free of duty.

The duty on sugar for refining purposes testing 96 degrees of polarization is reduced under the British preferential tariff 16.288 cents per hundred pounds, that is from 45 cents to 28.712 cents. Proportionate reductions are made in the duty on sugar of other degrees of polarization.

Angostura bitters, imported by ship direct, are to be admitted under the British preferential tariff at $5.00 a gallon as compared with the present duty of $10.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROBB: That seems to meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen.

It is further proposed, in harmony with the terms of the West Indies agreement, that sponges, which now pay a duty of 12½ per cent under the British preferential tariff and 8¾ per cent under the West Indies agreement of 1920, shall be admitted free under the British preferential tariff.

Tin plate, of a class or kind not made in Canada, is to be free under the British preferential tariff and dutiable at 5 per cent under the intermediate and general tariffs. This will benefit principally the canning industry.

There is a pronounced sentiment throughout Canada that the automobile industry enjoys more protection than is needed to maintain it on a reasonably profitable basis, and in deference to that sentiment we propose a downward readjustment of automobile, motor truck and motor cycle duties. It is proposed to reduce the duty on automobiles valued at retail at not more than $1,200 and on motor trucks and motor cycles to 20 per cent under the general tariff, 17½ per cent under the intermediate tariff and 12½ per cent under the British preferential tariff. On automobiles valued at more than $1,200 each, the general tariff is reduced to 27½ per cent, the intermediate to 25 per cent and the British preferential to 15 per cent. To encourage Canadian industry a drawback of 25 per cent will be paid on materials used in the manufacture of the above-mentioned motor vehicles, provided that at least 50 per cent of the cost of the finished vehicle is produced in Canada.

The duty on pasteurizers and equipment for generating electric power for farm purposes is reduced under the British preferential tariff to 5 per cent, under the intermediate and general tariffs to 10 per cent. A proportional reduction is made on the raw material.

The duty on steel casting in the rough for the manufacture of shot guns is reduced under the general tariff to 10 per cent. The duty on gunstocks is also reduced under the general tariff to 15 per cent.

It is proposed to remove the duty on belt and cap lamps for miners and parts of miners' safety lamps.

Machinery for use only in producing unrefined oil or fertilizers from shales is to be placed on the free list and is also exempted from sales tax.

Aircraft engines and complete parts are to be free under the British preferential tariff and to be dutiable at the rate of 7½ per cent under the intermediate tariff and 10 per cent under the general tariff until July 1, 1928.

4 p.m.

Ethylene glycol used in the manufacture of explosives is to be made free.

Drawbacks

It is proposed to grant the following drawbacks:

99 per cent on sugar used in the manufacture of loganberry wine. A similar drawback is now allowed on sugar used in making grape wine.

80 per cent on artificial silk tops and waste until January 1, 1928.

80 per cent on artificial silk yarns enumerated in Tariff Item 583 when imported prior to January 1, 1926, and further manufactured before January 1, 1927.

99 per cent on cellulose acetate in powder form when imported after April 30, 1927, and before November 1, 1927, and manufactured before December 1, 1927.

80 per cent on yarns produced from cellulose acetate, dry spun, when imported after October 31, 1926, and prior to August 1, 1927, and manufactured before September 1, 1927.

Direct Shipments

It is proposed that after the first of January, 1927, the benefits of the British preferential tariff shall apply only to goods conveyed direct without transhipment into a sea or river port of Canada.

Tax on Carbonic Acid Gas

It is proposed to repeal the tax on carbonic acid gas specified in Schedule II of the Special War Revenue Act.

Sales Tax Exemptions

The sales tax will be removed from a number of articles and will be reduced to 2½ per cent on canned fish.

Penny Postage

Of the taxes imposed in 1915 under the Special War Revenue Act, none affected all the people more than the fifty per cent increase on letter postage. Every person using the post office has contributed to that tax. The improved condition of our finances enables us to-day to announce that Canadians this year will celebrate Dominion Day by a return to two cent postage, or what is popularly known as penny postage.

Receipt Tax

The receipt tax has also been abolished.

The statement presented this afternoon reflects the growing prosperity of Canada. Relief, estimated at $25,000,000, affecting all classes, is given to the people by way of removal of and reductions in certain of our taxes. I should not wish it to be inferred that I ascribe all that has thus been achieved to the influence of government policy upon the development of our economic interests; though I am free to admit that had the trend been in an opposite direction there are those who would have been quick to hold government policy responsible. There are some who subscribe to the belief that prosperity and commercial expansion are solely a consequence of those of their own political affiliation being in power. There are others who place all blame and responsibility for isolated depressions on the government of the day. May we not look for the true statement of cause and effect somewhere between these two extremes? Personally, I hold to the belief that the progress of our spheres of life, whether in the basic industries, in the commercial world or in any of the varied interests which make up our national life, the eddying of the cycles of prosperity and depression find their origin partly in the world-wide conditions with which our interests must compete, and partly in the skill, sagacity and energy which we give to the performance of our national tasks.

I have the greater reason for mentioning this because of my belief that the Canadian people, in coping with the era of depression which followed the collapse of the post-war boom, have been unnecessarily hampered by a plague of gloom which shrouded the thoughts and utterances of too many Canadians, and but for which the prosperity of the moment would be even greater than it is to-day my privilege to record.

This era of depression has been overcome: all statistical compilations which mirror the year to year business of Canada prove it. Canada to-day is steadily growing more prosperous; there is less unemployment; the influx of settlers is growing; and with a hopeful spirit manifesting itself throughout Canada from coast to coast, the year 1926 is full of promise.

To-day in Canada we have problems, many problems, problems that demand the best we can give if we are to maintain a united Canada. There are those in the east who say the west—the great producing west—demands too much; and there are those in the west who say the east is selfish. Are not all such equally wrong? Is there not a truer and more generous sentiment? I believe that in both the east and the west, as elsewhere throughout our Dominion, there is, above all else, a strong, healthy Canadian spirit. Nowhere more than in the east and in the west are there men and women who are prepared to live and let live and to make reasonable concessions for the good of all Canada, or who share more gladly the wider vision of prosperous and happy homes in all our provinces. It is not by emphasizing our differences, whether they be of location or origin, that we shall attain the ideal progress which all have most at heart. It is by a union of all our forces under the inspiration of one ideal. Where shall we find a better motto than in the words, "A United and Prosperous Canada."

I beg to give notice that when the House resolves itself into committee, I shall move the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Customs Tariff, 1907, be amended by repealing subsection one of section three and substituting therefor the following:

(1) The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column 1, "British Preferential Tariff", shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of the following British countries when conveyed without transshipment from a port of any British country enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff into a sea or river port of Canada:

(a) the United Kingdom;
(b) the British colony of Bermuda;
(c) the British colonies commonly called the British West Indies, including the following,— the Bahamas;
Jamaica;
Turks and Caicos Islands;
the Leeward Islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat, and the Virgin Islands); the Windward Islands (Grenada, St. Vincent and St. Lucia); Barbadoes;
Trinidad and Tobago;
(d) British Guiana;
(e) British India;
(f) Ceylon;
(g) Straits Settlements;
(h) New Zealand;
(i) Union of South Africa;
(j) Southern Rhodesia;;
(k) any other British colony or possession admitted to the benefits of the British preferential tariff in Canada, in the manner hereinafter provided;

Provided, however, that goods entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff shall be accorded such benefits when such goods are shipped on a through bill of lading consigned to a consignee in a specified port in Canada when such goods are transferred at a port of a British colony or possession not enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff, and conveyed without further transhipment into a sea or river port of Canada.

2. Resolved, That schedule A to The Customs Tariff, 1907, as amended by chapter fifteen of the statutes of 1913, chapter forty-seven of the statutes of 1919, chapter twenty-seven of the statutes of 1921, chapter nineteen of the statutes of 1922, chapter forty-two of the statutes of 1923 and chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1924, be further amended by striking thereout tariff items : 7, 20a, 22, 23, 28, 30, 32, 39b, 77a, 90, 134, 135, 438, 448, 590a, 680a, the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of said items, and to provide that the following items, enumerations and rates of duty be inserted in Schedule A:

1055	Materials, including all parts	When used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b. Provided that no drawback shall be paid under this item unless at least 50 per cent of the cost of the finished article has been produced in Canada	25 p.c.

4. Resolved, That any enactment founded on resolution number one shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of January, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-seven, and to have applied to goods imported under the provisions of said resolution number one on and after that day.

5. Resolved, That any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions number two and three shall be deemed to have come into force on the sixteenth day of April, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-six, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Resolved, That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Special War Revenue Act, 1915, and to provide:—

1. That subsection five of section thirteen of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"(5) On every post card for transmission by post for any distance within Canada and on every letter and post card posted at and intended for delivery through the same post office, there shall be levied and collected a tax of one cent in addition to postage payable in the form of a postage stamp to be affixed thereto at or before the time of posting the letter or post card; but such tax shall not be levied or collected on any letter or post card entitled to the privilege of free transmission under the provisions of The Post Office Act. The stamp so affixed shall be cancelled by the postmaster or other officer of the Post Office Department whose duty it is to cancel the postage stamps affixed to such letters or post cards in prepayment of postage."

2. That section fourteen of the said act be repealed.

3. That paragraph (a) of subsection one of section nineteen BB of the said act as enacted by chapter fifty of the statutes of 1921, be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"(a) A tax on playing cards for every fifty-four cards or fraction of fifty-four in each package—ten cents per pack."

4. That section nineteen BBB of the said act be amended by adding after subsection two thereof the following as subsection two A:—

"(2A) In case any person other than the manufacturer or producer or importer or transferee or licensed wholesaler or jobber hereinbefore mentioned acquires from or against any one of these persons the right to sell any goods, whether as a result of the operation of law or of any transaction not taxable under this section, the sale of such goods by him shall be taxable as if made by the manufacturer or producer or importer or transferee or licensed wholesaler or jobber as the case may be and the person so selling shall be liable to pay the tax."

5. That subsection four of section nineteen BBB of the said act, being the list of excepted articles not liable to the consumption or sales tax, be amended by adding thereto the following:—

"Pot barley; pearl barley; split peas; goods enumerated in customs tariff items 469b, 700, 701, 702, 703, and 704."

6. That subsection five of section nineteen BBB of the said act, being the list of articles liable to only fifty per cent of the consumption or sales tax, be amended by adding thereto the following:—

"Fish, or products thereof, canned but not medicated."

7. That schedule two to the said act be amended by striking thereout the last five lines respecting carbonic acid gas which were added to the said schedule by section twelve of chapter seventy of the statutes of 1923.

8. That a refund of the amount of taxes paid under sections sixteen A, nineteen B, nineteen BB, and nineteen BBB of the said act be granted to a manufacturer, producer, wholesaler, jobber, or other dealer on goods hereafter sold as ships' stores.

9. That any enactment founded on paragraph one of this resolution shall come into force on the first day of July, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-six.

10. That any enactment founded on paragraphs two and eight of this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the sixteenth day of April, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-six.

11. That any enactment founded on paragraphs three, five, six, and seven of this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the sixteenth day of April, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-six and to have applied to all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917, and to provide.

1. That the amount of income exempted from the tax be increased to three thousand dollars in the case of a married person or householder, or any other person supporting certain relatives as at present set forth in the act and to fifteen hundred dollars in the case of other persons;

2. That where a husband and wife have each a separate income in excess of fifteen hundred dollars each shall receive an exemption of fifteen hundred dollars in lieu of the exemption set forth above;

3. That the parents may arrange between themselves as to how the exemption for each dependent child is to be allotted;

4. That in respect of income for the year 1925, and each year thereafter the rates of tax at present imposed be repealed and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—

The rates set forth in this subsection shall not apply to corporations or joint stock companies.

5. that the rate of tax applicable to corporations be reduced from ten per centum to nine per centum,

6. that the five per cent additional tax applicable to incomes of five thousand dollars or more be repealed,

7. that the income of a personal corporation (being a corporation controlled by one person or his family, the income of which is derived from investments or dealing in investments) shall each year be deemed to be distributed as a dividend to the shareholders and taxable accordingly,

8. that the carrying charges or expenses of unproductive property or assets not acquired for the purposes of a trade, business or calling or of a liability not incurred in connection with a trade, business or calling shall not be allowed as a deduction in determining income,

9. that any distribution or advance made to the shareholders of a corporation shall be deemed to be a dividend to the extent that such corporation has on hand undistributed income and such dividend shall constitute income of the shareholder of the year during which the distribution or advance is made,

10. that where a corporation having undistributed income on hand reduces its capital stock, then to the extent that such corporation has on hand undistributed income the amount received by the shareholder by virtue of the reduction of the capital shall be deemed to be a dividend and to be income received by the shareholder,

11. that where a corporation having undistributed income on hand redeems its shares at a premium the premium shall be deemed to be a dividend and to be income received by the shareholder,

12. that where a person or persons, owning shares of a corporation which has undistributed income on hand, transfer such shares or a portion thereof to a second corporation promoted at his or their instance or controlled by him or them, which second corporation subsequently receives a dividend from the first mentioned corporation and, within a period of three years from the date of such share transfer, applies the income thus received, in whole or in part, directly or indirectly,

(a) in payment of the shares purchased by the second corporation from such person or persons or,

(b) in the discharge of any liability incurred to such person or persons by reason of and in connection with the purchase of such shares or,

(c) in the discharge of a loan obtained by the second company for the purpose of paying for such shares, then such person or persons shall be taxable in full in respect of such dividend as if he or they had received it in the year that the first mentioned corporation declared the dividend,

13. that when, as a result of the reorganization of a corporation or the readjustment of its capital stock the whole or any part of its undistributed income is capitalized, the amount capitalized shall be deemed to be distributed as a dividend during the year in which the reorganization or readjustment takes place and the shareholders of the said corporation shall be deemed to receive such dividend in proportion to their interest in the capital stock of the corporation or in the class of capital stock affected and,

14. that the income of a non-resident person or a non-resident corporation which consists exclusively of earnings derived from the operation of a ship or ships registered under the laws of a foreign country which grants an equivalent exemption to residents of Canada and to corporations organized in Canada shall not be liable to taxation.

15. that in respect of income for the year 1925 and each year thereafter the provisions of paragraph (d) of subsection one of section three of the said act as enacted by section two of chapter fifty-five of the statutes of 1919 shall not apply.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my first word upon this occasion must be to express the regret which I feel and which I have no doubt is felt in every quarter of the House that the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), who usually acts as financial critic on occasions such as the present, is absent from the House at this time through indisposition. It is a great loss to the House that the hon. member for West York is not present upon this occasion. He has a familiarity with national finance which few of us possess. He has a great grasp of all things pertaining to the Department of Finance and he is intimate with the various details of that department to an extent that few of us can boast. Therefore, I feel under some disadvantage at the present moment, and I sincerely ask the indulgence of the House as I proceed if in the remarks which I propose to deliver this afternoon I am guilty of sins either of commission or omission. But I will do my best to offer such criticism as appears to me to be proper in regard to the budget statement which has just been delivered to the House by the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Robb).

[Mr. Robb.]

There is apparently much jubilation on the government side this afternoon upon the presentation of the annual budget. Let me say that we on this side of the House are prepared to tender our congratulations upon any real achievement of the minister or of the government in respect to the financial condition which has prevailed and which still prevails in the Dominion of Canada. The jubilation is not felt exclusively upon the other side of the House; but if we refrain from giving this government credit for the satisfactory statement which in some respects has been presented to the House to-day, if we are inclined to think that the credit is due in the first instance to a munificent Providence and in the second instance to the virility, strength and efforts of the Canadian people, I think we shall not be far amiss having in mind the modest remarks with which the Minister of Finance concluded his address.

We realize quite as fully as does the government that this country has within the past season been blessed by Providence much more abundantly than in former years; yes, most marvellously blessed have we been in the abundance of crop which this country has yielded. I believe I am within the mark when I say that Providence has blessed Canada during the past season with a wheat yield in the western provinces unsurpassed both in quality and quantity, a yield which is to-day commanding a good price in the markets of the world and this fact constitutes the most important feature of our commercial success. I do not believe I am far wrong in making that statement. But fortunately it is not only in the prairie provinces of the west that Providence has blessed us. Ontario, this great central province of Canada, has also been blessed with a wonderful harvest. So far as Providence has seen fit to act in the matter, He has poured out on this country an abundance which we have not enjoyed for many years past and we are to-day reaping the benefits.

I believe the situation which I have tried to portray to the House has been reflected in every walk, in every avenue, in every branch of the industrial life of the people of the Dominion of Canada, and as a result we have had some return to a moderate prosperity which has not existed in this country during the past four years. I do not suggest for a moment that the return has been complete; I do not suggest for a moment that the return has been general throughout the Dominion; but I say this—and this is all I will say—that conditions are better in Canada to-day than they have been during the past four years. We on this side of the House congratulate the people of Canada on the improved condition which has recently arisen as compared with the unfortunate state of affairs that has prevailed during the past four years. Now, if we are not inclined to bestow much of the credit for this improvement on the government of the day, no one can complain. This country has improved to some extent, not on account of any effort of the government but in spite of the government. For if the prosperity of a country was ever hindered or delayed by an organization of human beings this country has been so hindered and delayed through the administration of the King government.

The Minister of Finance comes to this chamber to-day and presents a budget which I think we may say is from the financial point of view, reasonably satisfactory. The figures which he has just given to the House are figures on which I think we may fairly congratulate him. The outstanding points in his budget presentation are certainly two: he announces, in the first place, a reduction in income tax, and in the second place a reduction in the duty on motor trucks and automobiles.

An hon. MEMBER: What about postage?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will come to that too. I have only this to remark upon the financial statement submitted to the House to-day. While there is an apparent balance in the year's operations—

Mr. ROBB: It is real.

Mr. GUTHRIE: —amounting, I believe, to about $22,300,000 we must observe that the expenditure of the last year was greater than that of the year before. The expenditure proposed by the government for the present fiscal year is also greater than the expenditure of last year. So that the government year by year is progressing on an ascending scale in the matter of national expenditures. If there is one thing which the people of this country demand at the present time, I think it is that the expenditure of the national government be cut down. I know of no cry throughout the province of Ontario more persistent than that government economy be exercised to the very last degree. We hear that cry in our provincial legislature, and we are pleased to note that the government of Ontario has put the finances of the province on such a footing that within a reasonable time that province will regain its former financial stability. We hear the same cry in our municipalities, where there is a call for greater economy. On the other hand, in the public services of Canada, there has been year by year under this government an annual increase in our expenditure. I make that statement without fear of contradiction. Anyone who will take the trouble to examine the estimates laid on the table of the House for the present session will find, upon page after page of those estimates, thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of dollars of proposed expenditures which might well be stricken out, without any great inconvenience or any injury to the public service. I do not say that all the expenditures proposed in the estimates are unjustifiable; certainly not. I do say, however, that there are millions of dollars of suggested expenditures which might very well be deferred for some years to come without any inconvenience and with no ill effects on the Dominion.

The minister has at last begun to reduce the taxation from which the people of Canada suffer. It is a hard task and I commend him for what he has done. Although I have not all the figures before me he proposes, I believe, something substantial in the way of income tax reduction. But I may remind the Minister of Finance that he is a member of a government which owes the people substantial reduction in taxation. He is a member of a government which has greatly increased the direct taxation in the four years that have passed, and the time is certainly at hand now when a substantial reduction should take place. Let me point out to the minister that when the Meighen government went out of power we had a sales tax of one and one-half per cent on the manufacturer and one and one-half per cent on the jobber, which tax during the first year of the King administration was increased to four and a half per cent. During the next year it was increased to six per cent. Then when it was found that the tax had become so high that it actually impeded trade in Canada it was reluctantly reduced to five per cent. That was one increase in taxation on the people of the country which materially added to their burdens; and the King administration was responsible for that increase. I would point out to the government, further, that when they took office there was in force a two cent cheque tax which the King administration promptly increased to one dollar in respect of large cheques, thus raising an enormous additional revenue and greatly increasing the burdens of the country. This was the second increase. I point out, again, that when the King administration took charge of the affairs of the country we had no such thing as a tax on receipts; that was a device of hon. gentlemen opposite. It was the third increase. And now the time has come when the Minister of Finance announces, as though he had achieved a triumph, that he is going to take off the tax on receipts. That tax should never have been imposed in the first instance; it placed upon the people of Canada an unnecessary burden which, together with the other taxes I have mentioned, has increased from year to year as I can show from the figures of the government.

When we consider that the country has had the advantage of a favourable crop with high prices for farm produce prevailing, and when we reflect that general business has improved throughout Canada and that the government is in no immediate need of money, should special praise be bestowed upon a government for endeavouring to do now what it should have done one, two or three years ago? I said that the government had materially increased the burden of taxation in this country, and I make that statement on the strength of the government's own report. At page 47 of this year's Public Accounts there is a statement showing what the taxes have been. In the last year of the Meighen government, the amount collected in sales tax, cheque tax, transportation tax, and so forth—all the taxes that were in force then—was $73,000,000 odd. During the first year of the King administration those collections, increased to $106,000,000 odd. During the next year that amount had again risen to $120,000,000 odd. Last year there was a falling off because business was not being done in the country and they could not raise the revenue—there was a falling off in these taxes down to $85,000,000 odd. At the close of the present fiscal year, March 31, last, as announced to-day by the Minister of Finance, these taxes amounted to some $95,000,000, an increase of $25,000,000 over the highest amount ever received by the Meighen administration under this branch of taxation.

Now, at the last general election the people made a demand for reduction of taxes and the government has at last heard that demand, and recognizing its justice has granted a partial measure of relief. So far as the income tax reduction is concerned, we welcome it; and the people will rejoice in it. But it is very late in coming. It should have come one, two or three years ago. And it could have come one, two or three years ago if the government had properly administered the affairs of the country, if it had pursued from the time it took office proper rules of economy, if it had cut down various expenditures,—I say, Sir, that if the government had properly administered the various departments of state millions and millions, yes, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars of taxation could have been taken off one, two or three years ago. If the administration of the Customs department had been what it should have been there would have been an increase of revenue from customs and excise duties sufficient to have allowed large reductions in taxation. I well recall, Mr. Speaker, the statement made in this House about a year ago by the Prime Minister when he induced us to grant him a large sum of money, $350,000 I think it was,—for what purpose? Because, he said, serious smuggling and other frauds on the customs were going on throughout the length and breadth of Canada and millions and millions of dollars were being lost to the treasury. Lost through what? Through lax administration, through carelessness in administering the affairs of that department, millions and millions of dollars annually were lost to the treasury, lost to the people. Had the administration of that department been what the country was entitled to expect, this much delayed announcement of tax reduction might have been made, one, two or three years ago, and the income tax cut for the benefit of the taxpayers instead of money being diverted into the pockets of smugglers both in this country and in the United States.

There are matters, Mr. Speaker, in the budget speech upon which, as I said before, I think the Minister of Finance may well be congratulated. The reduction in postage should naturally take place. This announcement has likewise been long delayed. The Post Office Department has shown a favourable balance for some time past. During the war it was necessary to increase the rate from two cents to three cents for the purpose of the treasury. But the war has been over for many years now. Postage is something which appeals to every member in the community, it directly affects every citizen, and I regret that the action of the government in reducing the postage rate has been somewhat tardy. Year after year the post office has produced an abundant revenue, year after year it has shown a handsome surplus. Now, Sir, I am one of those who believe that the post office is established for the convenience of the people, not as a money-making agency of government, and as soon as the post office can be maintained upon the basis of actual cost then the postage rates should be brought down to an absolute minimum. For the last four years, as I say, a handsome surplus has been obtained from the Post Office Department. Any time within that period this reduction might have taken place. To-day we have a welcome, though a very tardy, announcement that the rate of postage is to be reduced from three cents to two cents.

But, Mr. Speaker, I fancy that when the people of the Dominion to-morrow read in the newspapers the budget statement of the Minister of Finance, the portions which will most attract attention, particularly the people in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and eastern Canada generally, will be those in which the minister deliberately interferes with our fiscal policy. We in the province of Ontario represent more than one-third of the population of the Dominion, and we contribute to the treasury more than one-half of its receipts. Last year in customs duties alone out of a total revenue of $108,000,000 Ontario contributed no less than $56,000,000. Therefore Ontario has a vital interest in the affairs of this country as transacted in this parliament. But we are in the strange and unsatisfactory position to-day that we have in this chamber representing this great province of Ontario but one single member of the cabinet, and he a new-comer. We are under a serious disadvantage in this respect in the province of Ontario. The great province of Saskatchewan is represented upon the floor of this House by three ministers, all more or less pledged in one direction in regard to fiscal matters; all heading for the free trade goal, and we have at the same time to represent the province of Ontario but a single minister. He may be very able, he may be very capable, but I think the House will agree with me that the importunity of the present government proved the opportunity of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott). I think he can sit in his chair and smile and say, "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." I think also in relation to him we can all realize the truth of another old adage: Some men are born to greatness, some men achieve greatness, and some men have greatness thrust upon them.

Now, Sir, I have nothing but the highest opinion and regard for my hon. friend the Minister of Labour. I have known him for many years as a very able, and a very active lawyer, a credit to his profession. I have known him chiefly as a corporation lawyer in the city of London; but I should never have dreamt of him as a man to represent labour; I should never have dreamt of him as a man so soon to become Acting Minister of Health; I should never have selected him as a man to become Acting Minister of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment as I noticed announced in the papers this morning. Well, honours are falling thick and fast upon him. I wonder if he can successfully overtake the manifold duties of the various offices he is now called upon to discharge. Who knows but what he will soon be designated as Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, then as Acting Postmaster General, or Secretary of State? But the fact I wish to emphasize is this, that the great province of Ontario is not fairly or adequately represented in this parliament to-day.

Mr. DUNNING: This parliament! Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps I made a slip, and my hon. friend the Minister of Railways seems to have taken the keenest enjoyment of it; let him enjoy it. Now I will repeat what I intended to say, that the great province of Ontario is not fairly represented in the government of this country. Nothing is more noticeable than this, and the direct result of that failure to give Ontario proper representation in the cabinet, is shown in those changes in the tariff schedules announced by the Minister of Finance to-day. Sir, without disrespect, speaking for the province of Ontario, I say that we are a great industrial province; we have a tremendous force of organized labour in this province, and we know where the labouring men stand in regard to the question of the reduction of duty on motor cars. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Labour if he believes he truly represents the labouring men of Ontario in respect to the reductions announced to-day. Why, Sir, he sits around the council board confronted by the Prime Minister of this country, from the free trade province of Saskatchewan, and himself at heart a free trader. He sits at that council board beside the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton), men who are ready to sound the death knell of the doctrine of protection. He sits there beside another great free trade champion from Saskatchewan, the new Minister of Railways and Canals, who announced at a public hearing before a commission in the west that he was "prepared to pay those eastern provinces in their own coin"; he was going to get even with them for the wrongs they had inflicted upon the west.

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I made no such statement on any occasion as that now attributed to me. I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw his statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Certainly I will withdraw it. I took the statement from a speech reported in Hansard during the present session, and it purports to be a statement made before the Grain Inquiry Commission by the minister. I regret very much if I am in error, and I wish to withdraw the remark, but the statement will be found at page 878 of Hansard for this session.

Mr. DUNNING: What is the date?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The date is February 10.

Mr. DUNNING: I was not then in the House. If I had been I should have entered a denial then to any such words as those attributed to me by my hon. friend. I trust that he will take my word that on no occasion did I make a statement such as that to which he has referred.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I withdraw the words most cheerfully; I would not care to misrepresent my hon. friend in the slightest degree. But the statement is in Hansard and I will read it. If it is wrong it should be withdrawn.

This is the first opportunity to make the people of the east suffer for what they have given the west for the last forty years, and I think we should give them a dose of their own medicine now that they want our coal.

Mr. DUNNING: Who made the statement?

Mr. GUTHRIE: One of the hon. members for Calgary.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know whether I would be in order in also asking him to withdraw it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: At all events we know quite well the views of the Minister of Railways upon the fiscal question; we know where he stands; we know how he has voted in the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan, and now I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Labour whether, representing the labouring people of this province as well as the rest of the people, he placed the facts in regard to the motor industry fairly before his colleagues, and whether they voted him down or turned him down. He must know the views of labouring men upon this very question. I am going to place on Hansard an article touching this question which appeared in The Labour Leader of April 9 last, and I commend this to the attention of the Minister of Labour, to my hon. friends from Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Heaps), and to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), because they are all named in the article, which is as follows:

The working men of Canada never had a bed of roses to repose on, nor do they want one, but at least are entitled to and expect a square deal from the government of Canada.

There is 11,389 workers employed in the Willys-Overland, Limited, West Toronto; Durant Motors of Canada, Leaside; General Motors of Canada, Limited, Oshawa; Ford Motor Car Company of Canada, Limited, Ont.; Dodge Bros. of Canada, Limited, Toronto; Studebaker Corporation of Canada, Limited, Walkerville, and several assembly plants of the automotive industry located in various Canadian centres have just reason to worry these days and appeal to Canadians generally to rally to their support to try and prevent the Dominion government from passing legislation to take the duty off motor cars made in the United States, so as to reduce their selling price in the Canadian market.

The 11,389 men employed in Canadian motor car factories during 1925 received $17,595,282.44 in wages. Again there are some 8,000 additional men employed in tire factories and other plants that make parts and accessories for Canadian motor car plants. We have not the wage bill of these extra 8,000 men.

The Canadian motor car manufacturers pay annually to the government about seven and one-half million dollars duty on material they import. By abolishing the duty on motor cars, this money would be lost to the Dominion treasury.

This legislation is being introduced to appease the western Progressives, and they want it so badly that they apparently do not care the injury it will inflict on the men employed in the Canadian automobile manufacturing plants. This is absolutely selfish legislation and there is no justification whatever for it.

Jobs are scarce enough in Canada to-day without enacting legislation that will take jobs away from thousands of Canadian industrial workers. Besides the men employed in the above-named concerns, there are thousands of other men working in factories that make parts for these automobile manufacturers, as well as men in paint and varnish factories, and the hundreds that are making motor car tires in the tire factories of this Dominion. Were the thousands of motor cars that are now made in Canada to be replaced by those made in the United States, they would certainly come to Canada with tires on them and thus add another army to the unemployed.

The sale of motor cars in Canada has not been retarded by the few dollars extra that Canadians have had to pay in the past, as the streets of our cities are to-day crowded with motor vehicles, and everyone knows that the motor industry has been a God-send to the mechanics of Canada. Canadians, therefore, cannot afford to sit idly by and see the jobs of these men slaughtered by the introduction of legislation to remove the present duty on motor cars of the smaller and medium priced varieties.

Eighty-five per cent of the employees of Canadian motor car industries are married men, with families dependent upon them. Must these men, women and children suffer to provide a reduction in price of motor cars to western farmers and other Canadians who are imbued with such selfishness.

We claim it would be an outrage and we appeal to Canadians in every walk of life to get busy and write protests to the government at Ottawa before this legislation is passed. The government has appointed a Tariff board, so why not let this new board report on the quesetion before any legislation is introduced? This would at least give the working men of Oshawa, Toronto, Leaside and Ford an opportunity of presenting their case on such a vital question.

We believe the members of the government should be big enough Canadians to overlook the few dollars extra on each car and consider the jobs and homes of the thousands who are dependent on this industry for their citizenship. No citizen will leave Canada if the price of cars remains where it is to-day, but if the duty is removed thousands will have to leave to obtain employment to look after the wants of themselves and their families.

This is an opportunity for Messieurs J. S. Woodsworth, M.P., A. A. Heaps, M.P., and Peter Heenan, M.P., who claim they are representing labour in the House of Commons, to give their aid to the 20,000 motor car mechanics of Canada in retaining their jobs. Canadian labour men will expect these three members of the House to put up a fight to have the matter at least referred to the new Tariff board, so that the employees of the motor car plants of Canada can present their claims to the board.

This is one of the most serious situations that the industrial workers of Canada have had to meet, and the Labour Leader makes an earnest plea to Canadians to forget any selfish ideas they may have and join in a joint protest that no government can afford to overlook. Canadians, be real Canadians and help your fellow Canadians who are employed in automotive industries to retain their jobs.

Now I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Labour whether he laid that article before his colleagues when the present reduction of duty was determined upon; I ask whether he, in his present office, should not protect the rights of the labouring men of eastern Canada, or whether he was simply overborne by his western colleagues in the free trade campaign which they have carried on in this country for the last five, ten or fifteen years.

But what is the province of Ontario going to say or do over the situation? What relief can we get? What relief can we expect to get? The government defeated at the polls, its ranks decimated, nine of its ministers gone, four or five months now gone in which to recruit; yet they have produced for the great province of Ontario only one minister, they have placed him into the Department of Labour, and the first thing labour in this country gets is a black eye such as it never got in Canada before.

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to overstate the importance of the motor industry in the province of Ontario. In the city from which I come, and which I have the honour to represent in this House, we have no automobile factory. We do make trucks or bodies which go into an automobile, but we have no automobile factory. Yet last year I find that no less than $1,280,000 was spent by the Ford Company in the city of Guelph in procuring the various parts necessary for the automobiles made in Windsor. This sum went for Guelph labour and Guelph material. Look over the list of cities and towns in the province of Ontario and you will find scores of them which are to a very large extent dependent upon the very motor industry which this present budget is striving to kill. It is an industry with an investment of $60,000,000 of capital in this province, and at one fell swoop the Minister of Finance announces a reduction of 15 per cent upon automobiles up to $1,200 in value. Sir, I am within the mark, I believe, when I state that a reduction of 15 per cent represents far more than the profit of these companies which are manufacturing automobiles. They cannot stand this reduction of 15 per cent and still operate at a profit. It may be that in years gone by, in the early days before prices became fixed, before competition became keen, very large profits were accumulated by some of these industries; but it is not so to-day. Competition to-day is of the keenest order, and I am prepared to state now, on the information I have received, that this 15 per cent reduction represents more than the average annual profits of any concern engaged in the production of these automobiles to-day in the province of Ontario. This reduction is made at one fell swoop, and it may prove a death blow. Why do it? Why jeopardize the livelihood of 12,000 mechanics in these factories, and 8,000 other mechanics working in allied or kindred industries in different parts of Ontario? Why not listen to the appeal of the labour men of this country? These 20,000 operatives represent possibly a population of from 80,000 to 100,000 people in Ontario who are dependent for their livelihood upon this industry. You are placing their employment in jeopardy by the action which you propose to-day.

Mr. Speaker, why is this done now? Have we forgotten that during the course of the last election, on practically every platform of the Liberal party, representations were made to the electors of this country that if the government were returned to power it would appoint a tariff board or a tariff commission, something in the nature of an advisory commission to advise them upon all questions of the customs tariff and upon all matters of taxation? Have we forgotten that within the last two weeks, perhaps only ten days ago, an announcement was made to this House by the Prime Minister of this country that his tariff board had been appointed? He produced in this House the order in council; he named the chairman and the members of the board, and the secretary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is mistaken. I did not produce the order in council at the time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Perhaps I am wrong in that, but the Prime Minister announced that the order in council had been passed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I was asked the question on the spur of the moment by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and I tried to give him in advance what might be the possible order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What would be.
