Mr. Speaker: One other waiver of the formalities of the rules is necessary to permit the committee to sit at once and I take it the intention of the house following the statement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs is that the committee proceed to consider these bills and report on them, if it can, so that they may come back to the house without undue delay.

I draw the attention of hon. members to the wording of paragraph 1 of standing order No. 106:

106 (1) No committee on any private bill originating in this house is to consider the same until after one week's notice of the sitting of such committee has been first affixed in the lobby; nor, in the case of any such bill originating in the Senate, until after 24 hours' like notice.

Therefore, it will be seen that 24 hours' notice would be required. If the house would give consent to the suspension of the standing order with respect to these particular bills which have just received second reading it would be possible for the committee to proceed.

Mr. Howard: There are some bills which might be considered contentious concerning which there is some likelihood of contestation arising out of irregularities which might exist. By the waiving of this rule we would not wish to deprive individuals the right of a hearing of their case nor to have dissolution of marriage granted when perhaps it should not be granted.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will be prepared to leave that to the good sense and judgment of the committee. It is a matter for them. This waiver would only permit the bills to come before the committee. On that basis, is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the next order is called, may I suggest to the house leader that we call it six o'clock now. It seems rather absurd to embark on a discussion of the Pine Point railway bill for five minutes and then to come back to the other bill which was not fully completed. In making this suggestion perhaps I should ask the house leader if it is clearly understood that we will be disposing of the other bill at 7.30 so that no hon. member will feel, if he is a few minutes late, that he is being restricted in his rights.

Mr. Churchill: In order that all might be informed I corroborate the statement that we intend to proceed with Bill No. C-131 and take up the corrections that have been made in its translation, to be followed by consideration of Bill C-126. Both are in committee. Perhaps we could move into committee now and then call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the house proceed in committee with Bill No. C-131?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SPORTS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ON PHYSICAL FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-131, to encourage fitness and amateur sport—Mr. Monteith (Perth)—Mr. Chown in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7.30 p.m.

On clause 7—Council established.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, following the brief discussion we had this afternoon with respect to the French version of the bill now before the committee, I should like to propose this amendment to subsection (4) of section 7:

That Bill C-131 be amended by the deletion of subsection (4) of section 7, and its replacement by the following, in the French version:

Now, with regard to the other point raised by my hon. friend from St. Denis (Mr. Denis) concerning the translation of the word "fitness", I must say, first of all, that the translators have looked into this problem, and this may seem peculiar to the hon. members, but the word "fitness" is extremely difficult to translate in the present context. Personally, I think that the word "santé" was well suited for the definition of the bill, because this is an act to promote health through amateur sport. After all, a person who does not enjoy good health can regain health through sports and athletics.

However, if the committee insists on having the word "santé" replaced because it is a little too vague or because it could lead to confusion, I should tell the committee that it has been suggested to me that in such a case, the expression "condition de l'individu" could be substituted for the word "santé". The title would then read as follows: "Favorisant la condition de l'individu par la pratique du sport amateur". Then the word "santé" would be replaced by the expression "condition de l'individu" wherever it appears in the bill.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will forgive me for interrupting the minister but the word "condition" means nothing in itself. The words "condition physique" or "santé physique" would be all right.

During the recess hour, we ventured to consult the larger dictionaries. We found that, the word "fitness" was translated by "santé physique". It may seem strange, but the translation of fitness is "santé physique". Everyone knows that we usually say: "He is in good condition; he is in form". However, "santé physique" is defined in the dictionary by the words "en forme". By itself, the word "santé" would have no meaning, just like "condition" used alone would have no meaning.

I therefore suggest that we simply add to the word "santé" the adjective "physique".

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I think that what my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare wanted to make clear is that we are concerned here with both mental and physical health. Besides, the well known saying "mens sana in corpore sano" shows that the word "santé" is used for both mental health and physical health.

When my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggested that we use that word in the French version, he meant that this legislation encourages physical and mental health of the individual.

As regards the word "condition", that word has an athletic meaning. Here is the definition I find in the Larousse dictionary:

Is applied to animals and athletes whose physical fitness has reached the highest degree of development, when they are capable of putting forth without fatigue the effort for which they are trained.

So we do not need the words "bonne condition" when speaking of the "condition de l'individu", because it would be a pleonasm. In this case, it should be "condition".

As for me, I am far from being a linguist, but I am of the opinion that the word "santé" is a good translation of "fitness", since it means in fact the physical and intellectual or mental health of the individual.

Mr. Denis: If it is a case of explaining the intention of the Minister of Health and Welfare when he talks about "physical and mental health", why not amend the English version by substituting the word "health" to the word "fitness". The English version can be amended as well as the French. I do not see why we should always try to amend the French version when the English can be amended when the meaning, is not the same. Besides, the hon. member who just spoke knows very well that when we talk about a man in good health, we mean a man who is not sick in bed, who does not suffer from arthritis, who has no heart condition; that is what is meant by health.

An hon. Member: He does not suffer from rheumatism.

Mr. Denis: "Fitness" simply means that a man is in good physical condition. But if the Minister of National Health and Welfare has something else in mind and wants mental health to be included as well as physical fitness, he can express it as well in English as in French. Therefore, let him translate the French word "santé" by "health" in the English version. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for St. Denis has just said. I say there is some doubt as to just what the word "fitness" means. Surely, the whole problem would be solved if we changed the English title to "an act to encourage physical fitness". There would be no question about translating that by "santé physique". We all remember the old jokes by Stephen Leacock on the word "fitness". He asked, fitness for what? Fitness was, of course, really a slang expression up until a generation ago and it is only recently that it has become an accepted English word. I do think that perhaps we might resolve this difficulty if we were to put the adjective in both titles and it would make it clearer that we are not attempting to invade the realm of the spirit, which is perhaps within the provincial jurisdiction, if we can judge by some of the resolutions—

Mr. Drysdale: Are you opposed to mental fitness?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I am not opposed to mental fitness. I think even this house could profit from it. I do not know whether, in view of the fact that although the government promised this before the last election, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has never been willing to pay the federal share of the cost of people in mental hospitals, can be taken as an indication that they regard mental fitness as a provincial matter.

It seems to me that if we put the words "physical fitness" in the English title, they could be translated by the words "santé physique" and we would come as nearly as we ever can to "le même sens dans les deux langues".

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I wonder if I might mention that the present act under which we are operating, that is under which the federal government does not participate in the cost of hospitalization for mental illness, was originally drawn up by the previous administration.

I should like to point out that the word "physical" in the English text, at any rate, limits the concept of all-around fitness. We are interested in the "whole person" and in encouraging, through participation in amateur sports and fitness activities, the emotional as well as the physical well-being of the participants. If we do not have the word "physical" it will be more in line with current views on this subject which have been developing over the past several years. As a matter of fact, the previous national physical fitness council had asked the government to delete the word "physical" in the previous legislation.

It seemed to me, from the explanation that the Minister of Transport gave, that the word "health" as translated by "santé" in the French language—I can only apologize for my inability to interpret the exact sense of it—that it might be well to leave it as it is.

Mr. Denis: The word "santé" in French has another meaning. When you take a drink, it is—

"A la santé!" That may be ambiguous, apart from the fact that if you abuse physical exercise, you are liable to mental illness. I know of boxers who, at a certain time, became mentally ill.

So it might be a good idea to clarify the situation in order to find out exactly whether you mean physical health or mental health. If you mean both, then say "physical and mental health".

(Text):

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to make one comment. Under clause 12 of the bill, in both English and French, the word "fitness" which is translated by the word "santé" is defined under the regulations. I quote:

(Translation):

The governor in council may make regulations (a) defining for the purposes of this act the expressions "fitness" and "amateur sport";

(Text):

I feel this indicates quite clearly that under this specific measure the word "santé" will be defined by the governor in council under the regulations. I feel that this is purely a question of semantics in which the hon. member for St. Denis is engaged and the point is covered quite clearly by clause 12.

Mr. Denis: The hon. member is going too far if he means he wants to correct the French language. I would say, as the Union Nationale does, you are interfering with autonomy.

Mr. Balcer: Actually, I have a lot of respect for the great knowledge of my colleague, the hon. member for St. Denis. However, I must admit that I think he has limitations, just as I have, in so far as being the grande linguiste is concerned. After meeting with the translators and hearing the various explanations as to why they picked the word "santé" in this context, I really think that the spirit of the bill and the intention of the legislators will be extremely well covered by the word "santé" in the French.

(Translation):

Actually, the idea in this legislation is to promote good health through sports.

I therefore think the expression is rightly used. I think that the word "santé" is a very good translation for the word "fitness", and I am asking this house to accept the version suggested by the government.

Mr. Denis: This will be another badly written legislation from the government.

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by Mr. Balcer:

That Bill C-131 be amended by eliminating subclause 4 of clause 7 and replacing it by the following:

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before the question is put—and I am going to support the amendment—I think the committee will feel a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Labelle, one of the freshman members of the house, who spotted this mistake and who saved us all from making a regrettable error. Perhaps it is not a tremendously important one, but what is behind it is tremendously important. I refer to the complete equality of the two official languages and the importance of having our texts properly expressed in both.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier)?

Mr. Monteith (Perth) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF LINE TO GREAT SLAVE LAKE

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-126, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta and in the Northwest Territories by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near Grimshaw, in the province of Alberta, in a northerly direction to Great Slave lake, in the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction and completion.

Mr. Chevrier: Has the minister a statement to make arising out of the report from the committee?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Chairman. Actually there was quite an extended discussion of this project at the resolution stage and then on second reading. Hon. members have had the opportunity to ask questions of the experts who appeared as witnesses before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I think the whole matter has been dealt with in a broad way. The agreement has been tabled. It was in the hands of all the members of the standing committee. Everyone has had the opportunity to ask any questions he wished to ask. I simply again recommend to the committee this bill which means so much in the development of the Canadian north and which makes provision for a great development undertaking. I do not propose at the present time to make any more remarks on it.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know that I can agree with everything the minister has said. It is true that there was a meeting of the committee and it is true the committee was furnished with the agreement. The committee will recall that we on this side of the chamber gave our approval to the principle of this bill and that repeatedly we asked for production of the agreement which up until now has not been signed.

The agreement was produced shortly before the bell started to ring for 11 o'clock during the committee proceedings. I note that the minister shakes his head. Perhaps I could be a little bit more accurate. It is a fact that the agreement was circulated in the early part of the committee proceedings but we did not get to an examination of it until shortly before the bell rang for the 11 o'clock sitting of the house.

I do not wish to dwell on that agreement at the present time as there are some questions which come to my mind arising out of the agreement and which perhaps the minister would care to answer. However, before I put them, I think I should say this in all fairness to those who were members of that committee as well as to those who were not members of it. Here was a most important agreement that took many months to negotiate, perhaps a couple of years; I do not know how long it took. It is an extremely complicated agreement, one which a Philadelphia lawyer would have a great deal of trouble in understanding.

Mr. Baldwin: Quite simple.

Mr. Chevrier: We are given this agreement which expert lawyers took many months to prepare and we are told: "There is the agreement; if you have any comment to make or any suggestions to make, we are open to suggestions". My hon. friend has interrupted me by saying "Quite simple". I wish I had his legal ability. May I say that already I have read the agreement twice and that I certainly do not find it either simple or uncomplicated. However, if I understand correctly both the evidence and the agreement, it appears that the C.N.R. will move the concentrates at a rate which will permit them to pay for the maintenance and operation of the line. Any additional traffic will be surplus and that will go in reduction of the C.N.R. deficit. Pine Point will pay $7.75 per ton in accordance with the terms of the agreement for the movement of the ore. Pine Point will also pay a subsidy in accordance with clause 6.

Mr. Baldwin: Clause 5.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, that is correct; in accordance with clause 5. Cominco—that is Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company—will put Pine Point in funds for the construction of the mine and the C.P.R. together with the C.N.R. will get a share of the traffic which will move. The question which comes to my mind now is this. What will the taxpayer get for his $86 million? What provision is being made for (1) the amortization of the capital; (2) the servicing of the capital; and (3) the interest during construction? Those are the questions to which I should like to have answers at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Chevrier: I have not finished what I intended to say, Mr. Chairman. If it is the intention of the hon. member to interrupt, I will continue. On the other hand, I was trying to be helpful by asking the minister if he would reply to those questions first. I have other remarks to make.

Mr. Baldwin: I will wait until the hon. member has exhausted his possibilities.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you.

Mr. Balcer: Once again I want to remind the committee and the hon. member for Laurier that this is the first time an agreement of this type has ever been put in the hands of the committee at this stage. These agreements have always been kept confidential. It is the first time that the government has ever placed such an agreement in the hands of the committee. The hon. member says that the agreement is not signed. I never said the agreement was signed. I said that in relation to this agreement I have received a letter from Pine Point Mines Limited, from Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and from the C.N.R. stating that they are ready to sign such agreement if the bill is approved by the house. This is the situation at the present time. There is no mystery about that; there is no secrecy. It is an open book. This agreement was placed in the hands of every hon. member of the committee. The hon. member for Laurier had time to read it twice.

As I said before the standing committee, the Department of Justice is still reviewing the agreement to check whether there are any legal errors in it, or anything of that kind, which should be corrected. At that time I also invited hon. members of the committee to make suggestions on this agreement. However, I must remind the committee that this agreement is actually requested in clause 6 of the bill, which makes it a condition. The government is ready to build a railway. We set forth in clause 6 some very clear conditions that have to be met by Pine Point Mines, Cominco and the C.N.R. before the bill before the committee comes into force and before the railway is built.

The hon. member also asked how this railway is going to be financed. I have stated, and he has recognized, that as far as the operation and the maintenance of the railway is concerned, the C.N.R. has a guarantee that what is going to be paid by the company for the moving of its concentrates will meet the maintenance and the operation of this line. Also, the company is giving a guarantee of 215,000 tons of traffic for 10 years. This will cover the operation and the maintenance of the line.

Therefore this railway will not be a source of deficit for the C.N.R. It will become an integral part of the C.N.R. and in addition, Canadian National Railways will have this great advantage of being the sole mover of these concentrates on the run between Edmonton and Calgary and will share half and half from Grimshaw to Edmonton on the Northern Alberta Railways, which is jointly owned by the C.N.R. and C.P.R.

As far as the financing of the capital for the building of this line is concerned, this is going to be paid out of an item in the estimates of the Department of Transport. These estimates come before the committee every year. Part of the capital will be reimbursed out of payments that are mentioned in schedule B of the agreement and also in subclause (a) of clause 6. These payments to Her Majesty can reach $20 million. This is part of the cost on the part of Pine Point Mines as its share in the building of this great undertaking of a railway in the north.

Of course, we could have built that railroad simply for the development of the north. It is a rather long railway; it is a huge railway, but we have such confidence in the north of Canada, with all its mineral richness and also, in that particular area, the tremendous reserves of timber and agricultural products, that I think the government would have been justified in building the railway. However, we are fortunate enough that there are proven reserves of lead and zinc which are ready to be developed, which development is going to be undertaken by Pine Point Mines, a subsidiary of Cominco. I think we got a very good deal from this new mine both for the government and for Canadian National Railways, and I recommend it to the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not dealt with the question which I put to him. He did give the method and the manner in which the Department of Transport will handle this money, by setting aside an estimate. But my question to the minister was this: what will the taxpayer get for the maximum amount of $86 million that is being invested by the government? I think the committee is entitled to know that.

Then, what provision is being made for servicing that capital? What provision is being made for interest during construction, because this railway will not be completed until 1966? Therefore as the railway is constructed large sums of money will have to be provided. Whether it will be $25 million at the end of the first year and $20 million at the end of the second year and so on, I do not know; but the government does not manufacture that money. The government will have to borrow it and will have to pay interest on it.

I think the committee is entitled to know, (1) what will the taxpayer get for this capital amount of money that is being invested in the line? Then (2), what provision is being made for servicing the capital; and (3), what provision is being made for the interest during construction?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asks, what is the taxpayer going to get for this investment? First of all, this is going to be a brand new railway which will become an integral part of the C.N.R., and as such any profit on that line will serve to reduce the deficit of the C.N.R., which is a crown-owned agency and for which the taxpayers of Canada have to put up the money to cover the deficit each year.

With regard to how the money will be paid, I think clause 5 is quite clear. It says:

> The subsidy hereby authorized shall be paid to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund by the payment from time to time, at the direction of the governor in council upon the report of the Minister of Transport as to the mileage of railway line constructed or to be constructed, of such amounts, in such manner and subject to such conditions, if any, as the governor in council deems expedient.

I think it is quite clear here that the governor in council will decide in what manner and subject to what conditions these payments will be made, how the debt will be serviced and how the interest will be met. It will be all done by order in council, as is set forth in clause 5.

Mr. Chevrier: Then from what the minister has said, am I right in assuming that all the taxpayer can expect to get back is the amount mentioned in clause 6(a), namely, a maximum of $20 million.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interfere—

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to have an answer if I may.

The Deputy Chairman: I did not hear an answer from the minister to the last question asked by the hon. member for Laurier. I saw him nod his head.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Laurier asked a question. It was not a question seeking specific information lying exclusively within the knowledge of the Minister of Transport. It was a question which, I think, any member of this house with a little reasonable understanding of what is involved should be able to answer, and I propose to answer it.

The question was: what does the taxpayer get. It seems to me the grand old man of the Liberal party Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said "the twentieth century belongs to Canada" would turn in his grave if he heard these trifling and petulant quibblings on a question of this kind. Here is a railway which is going to open up a brand new empire and before we get through I propose to submit very briefly, perhaps later on in the proceedings, some of the statements which appear in the record of the Manning royal commission concerning the assets of the area which will be contributing to this line of railway. As a matter of fact, I think this will probably be one of the last great railways ever built on this continent.

The taxpayer is going to get (a) a line of railway built to the Pine Point mine which is at this time of sufficient importance to justify the company in spending a total of almost $40 million at Pine Point itself and at Trail, in addition to the large and substantial sums which will be contributed by the others concerned. The taxpayer will receive (b) the benefits which will naturally arise from the bringing into production of an area lying from 40 miles north of Grimshaw to Hay River with tremendous resources in agriculture, timber, fishing, natural gas and petroleum. This is not a speculative proposition. These things have been, to some extent, found, and they have been the subject already of some development. They have waited for one thing only —the construction of this railway. The province of Alberta has stated that it will not open up new townships or land in this particular area unless and until some provision for transportation is made. This was the statement made to the Manning royal commission on behalf of the Alberta government, and the same statement has been made to me by officials of that government charged with the responsibility of the settlement of this area. When this railroad is built, and as it progresses, there is no doubt that thousands of new townships will be established and land opened up for cultivation. The same applies to timber. Surely, any national development on this scale which brings into production resources of this order is bound to have the effect of reducing the capital cost of this railway.

Evidence was given before the standing committee about which the hon. gentleman spoke that both the railway company and the mining company had made certain calculations as a result of which they felt that the rates which are to be charged, and which are referred to in the schedules to the agreement, should be sufficient to repay the operating and maintenance charges of the railway. Anything else above that is bound to result in a reduction of the capital sum. If some hon. members want it put in dollars and cents, that is what the taxpayer is getting. What is of far more importance are the benefits which will derive from the opening up of this region. Moreover, when this railroad gets to the south shore of Great Slave lake it will make available at substantially reduced prices, goods, commodities and services whose cost, up to the present time, has been at a substantial level. This high cost of goods and services have had the effect of holding back to some extent the expansion of development in the mining area in the Northwest Territories. The minute this railway gets to the port of Hay River hon. members will see an acceleration in the rate of development which will, I think, be of tremendous benefit of the whole country. These are not pipe dreams. I have been up there and talked with these people.

I think that is a fair answer to the hon. member for Laurier. He asked a valid question and I have, I think, given him a reasonable answer.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps I might say just a word in connection with what the hon. member for Peace River has said. He has attempted to give an answer covering what is generally done in connection with a developmental railway. We all know what the practice is in connection with such railways. However, he has not given the answer to the questions about the amortization of the capital and the servicing of the debt and the interest during construction. These are substantial matters. I simply say that there are on the record three questions to which I have not received satisfactory answers.

I go on, now to another question. It was stated in the committee that the title to this line would be with the Canadian National Railways although the government would pay for it. My question is: what is being done by the government to protect its interest of between $75 million and $86 million less the subsidy paid by the Pine Point Company, with the C.N.R. in reference to its investment? Here is a sum of between $75 million and $86 million which is to be put into the construction of this line. Have the C.N.R. and the government arrived at an agreement, first, about the capital investment and, second, about the roadbed and all the real estate, the title to which will go to the C.N.R.?

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, the government is building the railroad from Grimshaw to Pine Point. The railway is going to become part of the C.N.R. system. It is going to be operated by the Canadian National Railways and it is going to be built by the railway company; it will become, also, the property of the C.N.R. As far as the government is concerned there will be, first of all, this $20 million capital payment by the users of this line. In addition, the taxpayers will get as a return for their contribution a reduction in the C.N.R. deficit. There will be a net contribution to the C.N.R. system, and that contribution will provide for the carrying charges on the capital investment. As I said, this line will become part of the Canadian National Railways system which is a government-owned corporation and as such it will still be the property of the Canadian public and the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, when the C.N.R. provides a service for the government, the government pays for that service. The estimates of the Department of Transport are replete with items for subsidies representing services which the C.N.R. provides to the government and the people of Canada. The government pays for those services by subsidies under a vote in this house. Now converse action is taking place. What provision has the government made to protect its $75 million to $86 million? From the answer which the minister has given it would appear that the government has provided no protection but has simply said that if there is a surplus it will be used to reduce the deficit of the C.N.R.

The question that occurs to me is this. Did the officers of the C.N.R. or the Northern Alberta Railways study this project for and on behalf of the government, or did anyone else do so?

Mr. Balcer: At what time?

Mr. Chevrier: Did the C.N.R. make a study of the economics of this project and then recommend it to the government?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That is all a matter of history. All hon. members of the committee know that both railways were asked if they were interested in building such a line and both said that it was not economically attractive to them. The government had the courage to decide that it was worth building such a railway. That is why the government asked the C.N.R. to build the railway line and operate it. The government will pay for it. The government has enough confidence in the north of Canada and in the future of the nation to be sure it is a good undertaking. By developing this virgin part of our country we are rendering a great service not only to future generations but to the present one.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has not replied to my question, so I shall restate it. Did the government make a study of the economics of the project or did the C.N.R. make one? That is what I wish to know.

Mr. Balcer: Both did. I mean the government made a study before proposing this measure to the house. In addition to that we asked a royal commission to investigate which of the two routes would be the better one. The majority report indicated the western route would be superior. The government then decided to proceed. We have also asked the C.N.R. to make a land survey of the route and that survey which is very encouraging is progressing rapidly. By December next we will have the results of that survey and the C.N.R. will be able to go ahead with the construction of this important railway.

Mr. Winch: At both the resolution and second reading stages, hon. members of this group supported this measure in principle. It is axiomatic that we will support any proposal which is constructive, which aids in the development of Canada or which results in supplying employment to our people. Although one supports the principle of a bill there is a responsibility on hon. members of the committee to question the grounds upon which the government reaches its conclusions and I am on my feet for that purpose at this moment. I was prompted to rise because of the intriguing statement made by the minister a moment ago when he said the C.P.R. was not interested in constructing this railroad.

The government is interested in developing the north and therefore it asked the C.N.R. if it would construct the line. The government is prepared to pay a subsidy of up to $86 million. Can the minister tell us why the C.P.R. was not interested?

As I understand it, 78 per cent of the Pine Point company is owned by Consolidated Mining and Smelting and over 50 per cent of Consolidated Mining and Smelting is owned by the C.P.R. It would therefore appear that the chief benefit will accrue to the C.P.R.

Mr. Balcer: Nonsense.

Mr. Winch: On what basis is the government prepared to pay the subsidy? What benefits will accrue to the C.P.R?

Mr. Benidickson: It appears as though the railway will be undertaken for the benefit of C.P.R. shareholders.

Mr. Winch: Private enterprise is one thing, but it appears that the taxpayers of Canada are now being asked to subsidize the C.P.R. That is precisely what has happened. Will the minister explain the situation and make clear on what basis the government has decided that this is a correct way to proceed?

I invite the minister to tell us of the analyses made of the ore reserves in this area. I have examined the two volumes of the report of the royal commission on the Great Slave lake railway and have read a number of other reports. I find there is nothing conclusive. Estimates of the reserves range from a few million tons to 20,000 million tons. That is a vast difference. Has the government any factual information?

Is there any indication that it is more feasible in the development of this ore to transport the ore hundreds of miles across northern Canada to Trail than it would be to construct a development point at the site? We are investing the people's money and are entitled to ask the minister on what basis the government reached certain conclusions.

Another logical question is this. Since the subsidy is basically for Pine Point which is controlled by Consolidated Mining and Smelting located at Trail and Kimberley, is one not entitled to ask if all the reserves held by Consolidated Mining and Smelting in the British Columbia area have been used?

An hon. Member: So that is what is eating the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Winch: Are all the reserves of Consolidated Mining and Smelting at Kimberley and Trail under development? Is it true that Consolidated Mining and Smelting has within range of British Columbia a mountain of ore that has not yet been touched on which they hold leases? These are the questions we should have liked to ask in committee when an opportunity was provided to direct such questions to people connected with Consolidated Mining and Smelting, but unfortunately we did not know the committee was meeting. I do not know how it happened but we did not know anything about it until after the meeting was held. Otherwise I can assure the minister we would have been there. I do not want to hold up this measure unduly but I think the minister has a responsibility to give us information as fully as possible with respect to why they reached the decision they did and why we are not going to have full development in the north if we have 20,000 million tons of ore reserves in this one area? Is it going to be shipped because there is not lead and zinc at Trail? Why is it being done by subsidy when the company basically involved in the last analysis is the Canadian Pacific Railway? We are just asking for information. At the same time, we do not want to be misunderstood. We support any constructive recommendation for the development of the northern part of this country.

Mr. Benidickson: You mean you do not support it.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to comment?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I have heard the question posed a couple of times as to what the people are going to get for the $86 million that is going to be invested in this railway. The first thing that comes to my mind is that they are going to get a railway that was promised them by the Liberal party 30 years ago but which the Liberals never quite got around to building. That is the first thing that I can see they are going to get.

From some of the other remarks that have been made I can see that we have the same kind of mentality on the part of some people that there was in this country in the 1870's when the railway to open up western Canada was being proposed. At that time there were many people who did not think it was of any very great importance and wanted to know what the taxpayers were going to get for their money. I think we should consider that this railway is not a railway to open up a mine or to open up any one particular community. It is a railroad to open up the northern part of this country in line with the policy that was outlined by the government, a policy to which it committed itself and for the carrying out of which it received a mandate from the peeople of this country.

When we look at the matter from a purely dollars and cents point of view, certainly there is nobody in the house who would even be able to estimate what the returns to the country will be when the railroad has opened up that part of the country. We can see some of the benefits that will come about. We can appreciate that there will be an increase in the gross national product as soon as the mine at Pine Point is opened. I do not think there have been many projects started in Canada on such a basis as this one, namely a guarantee that the railroad is not going to lose any money with a private company having guaranteed in writing enough business to underwrite the cost of operation and maintenance of the railroad line. I do not think that the country has ever been in the position before of undertaking such an important development with all the costs being underwritten to this extent.

In addition to the increase in the gross national product that will result, there will, of course, be taxation thereon from which the federal treasury will benefit. I know it was estimated a number of years ago by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, who presented a brief to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, that the business available then would result in an increase of $3½ million in direct taxes payable to the federal treasury by the one mine that at that time contemplated starting operations. Since that time it has become quite apparent that there is going to be a good deal more business. When he made his estimate for the benefit of the royal commission the commissioner pointed out that was the direct financial return from one source and that all the other things involved would also result in the federal treasury receiving increased tax payments.

Then there are the benefits to the 77,000 people who live in the Peace River area. I am sure that the development of agriculture in that area will be of great benefit to this country and cannot be measured in dollars and cents. The bill represents the carrying out of a commitment that has been made by governments to the people in that area over the years, but this is the first government that has had the courage to make a decision and proceed with the opening up of the north. That is just what the government was elected by the people of this country to do.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two things to which I thought the hon. member who has just spoken would have replied but he too went off on a tangent to tell us about the developmental aspect of this railway.

An hon. Member: There have to be tangents.

Mr. Chevrier: It seems that the only way in which the bill is going to be justified is by tangents and not by answers to the questions we have put from time to time. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway stated that the Liberal administration had promised this railway for 30 years but did not build it. However, the present government seems to have been unable to make up its mind whether the eastern or western route should be followed or when the line should be built notwithstanding that Canadian National Railways recommended the western route from Grimshaw as far back as 1954 and again in 1956. Those are the facts. The hon. member states that the government received a mandate from the people of Canada to build this railway. In this form? Under this agreement? I say without hesitation that the Liberal party would never have built this railway under the terms of this agreement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: If there was ever a one-sided agreement, it was this one. If high-priced lawyers ever prepared an agreement, it was those who appeared on behalf of three of the parties to this agreement.

Mr. Benidickson: You mean outside the crown.

Mr. Chevrier: Who appeared on behalf of the government? Whom did the government have to protect the interests of the taxpayers? Whom did the government have to protect this tremendous amount of money? I asked the minister during consideration in the railway committee as well as during the proceedings in another committee why there had been an increase in the cost. In 1954 the cost as estimated by Canadian National Railways was $50 million to $55 million. In 1956, two years later, the estimate was the same. What were we told when the matter came up in the committee? The witness, Mr. Purves, presented an estimate of $75 million plus 15 per cent or a total of $86 million. He was asked how they arrived at that estimate and he said that Major Charles made the survey. Did we hear Major Charles? Why was he not called as a witness to indicate how the estimate was arrived at? We were informed that he was on the site. He was not there to tell us how the estimate was made. Neither was there anybody from the engineering department.

It was amazing to me that no one appeared from the engineering department of Canadian National Railways to tell us first of all about the economics of the line and then about the manner in which the estimate was arrived at. We were simply told that the estimate was fixed on the basis of the data that Major Charles had in July of 1961. We do not know what data or additional data Major Charles had so far as the estimate is concerned last Thursday, three months later. It seems to me that the witness should either have given this information himself or, if he was not able to do so, the person who prepared the estimate should have been present.

Then, I ask the minister, is this the way to prepare an estimate? We were told that no borings were taken to substantiate the estimate. Mr. Purves says that borings were being taken when he was up there two weeks ago, but the estimate was not based on any borings. I wonder what the Minister of Public Works would say if an estimate were made of any public works project and the house were asked to vote a sum of money, but there had been no borings made?

Mr. Balcer: That is precisely why we have the survey. You can be sure, Mr. Chairman, that the survey will give us an opportunity to pay exactly the correct amount of money for every mile of railway that will be built; that is all there is to it. There is not a single man in Canada who could estimate, four months in advance, exactly how much per mile the railway is going to cost. We are giving an estimation, and the estimation was made by Major Charles who is considered to be the most experienced officer in any railway company in Canada in so far as this matter is concerned. This gentleman has given us this estimation, and it is upon this estimation that we have based the amount of money shown in the schedules to this bill.

There is no mystery about it.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to answer my question?

Mr. Balcer: The hon. member for Laurier seems to want to leave the inference that we are throwing money away. The hon. member does not have to worry. There will not be one cent paid over and above the amount of money needed to carry out that undertaking, following the survey which will be completed in December.

Mr. Chevrier: I am worried—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has said—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and I am not going to yield. I yielded to the minister because I thought the minister was going to reply to my question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): Has the hon. member for Peace River a point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: No, not a point or order but I want to correct what the hon. member said.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member does not have a point of order, then I am not yielding the floor.

Mr. Baldwin: I want to correct a statement made by the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: If the point of order is merely the correction of a statement which I have made, then the hon. member can correct it after I have sat down.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): The hon. member for Peace River says he has a point of order, and if so I will hear him on that.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member made an inaccurate statement when he said there is nothing in the transcript of evidence given before the standing committee on this point. I should like to quote from page 250 of the minutes of evidence of the committee, as follows:

> Mr. Baldwin: I have a question supplementary to that. Is it not correct that the first opportunity the C.N.R. had to prepare anything close to an estimate was following the preliminary reconnaissance made by Major Charles in 1957? I understand Major Charles went up to make a preliminary reconnaissance of both routes in 1957?
> Mr. Purves: I suggest both of these reconnaissances were merely preliminary reconnaissances and nothing else.
> Mr. Baldwin: I understand that, and Major Charles, giving testimony before the Manning commission, made certain that point was understood, and in giving evidence based on 1956 and 1957 figures he emphasized this was very preliminary and the cost might be in the neighbourhood of $65 million at that time.
> Mr. Purves: That is right.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. MacEwan): I am afraid I cannot agree that the hon. member has raised a point of order. I recognize the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: I was dealing with the question of the estimate and the minister said in reply that I should not be worried. Well, I am worried and I have every right to be worried as a member of the opposition on behalf of the taxpayers of this country. I am worried because of the form and nature of the contents of the agreement. I asked the minister repeatedly how the estimate was arrived at. The minister said, how could we give an estimate when we have not even made a survey? This has been our point all along. The minister should have brought an estimate here and have had a survey ready before going on with this measure and asking parliament to vote substantial sums of money which might even reach $100 million.

Mr. Balcer: You want to put the thing off for another six months.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): That is Liberal policy; call it off.

Mr. Chevrier: The point that is being made, sir, is this: Before coming to parliament and asking parliament for this tremendous sum of money there should have been an estimate made based on something; Major Charles should have been told to complete his survey so that parliament would have an idea of the amount of money involved in this project. According to the answer the minister has given me, it looks now as if it might not be $85 million—

Mr. Balcer: It will probably be less.

Mr. Chevrier: I think parliament has a right to know just how and on what basis this estimate has been made; that is the taxpayers' interest and no one seems to have bothered about the interest of the taxpayers.

Here, we have four parties to the agreement. There is the Canadian National Railways which is interested in one thing and one thing alone. This is the policy upon which the railway has operated all along, namely to make sure it will get from the freight rates and from the movement of traffic a financial position that will not be a deficitory one. In this case, the Canadian National Railways, through its officers, has said it will have a small surplus. The minister has added that anything over and above that will go in reduction of the deficit of the Canadian National Railways.

Then, the Pine Point mine comes in, and they certainly come out of this agreement all right. They have to pay in any event to move their concentrates. They will pay $7.75 per ton annually for a period of ten years, and they will also pay a subsidy on account of the capital investment made by the government. But is there any assurance that they will pay the $20 million? Where in the agreement is there any assurance that the full amount of $20 million will be forthcoming from Pine Point?

Mr. Balcer: The bill does not say that, either.

Mr. Chevrier: No, but it is a good thing for the taxpayers to know.

Mr. Balcer: Everybody who reads the bill will know.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think the bill, in any way, shape or form gives any idea of the terms of the agreement. Well, I was going on to say that the third party involved is Consolidated Mining and Smelting. They will put up the cash, they will put Pine Point mines in funds. The Canadian Pacific Railway, together with Canadian National Railways, will divided the traffic as between Edmonton to Calgary; Calgary to Tadanac and Tadanac to the B.C. ports.

Mr. Balcer: Just to keep the record straight—

Mr. Chevrier: I am not giving the minister the floor. I gave the minister the right to reply when he interrupted me before, and then another hon. member got the floor. If the minister wants to reply to my questions, I will yield.

Mr. Balcer: All right.

Mr. Chevrier: I put three questions to the minister and he has not replied to them. If the minister wants to interrupt me to answer questions, I will yield. A moment ago I yielded and he proceeded to make a speech; then, somebody else got the floor. I am being interrupted continually. I have no objection to being interrupted when a question is being answered, but thus far there have not been answers to these questions.

I asked the minister, upon what basis did the government proceed before it invested this money. I asked the minister whether Canadian National Railways had produced a report, and he said yes they had, and the government had studied it. Is that not right? Canadian National Railways produced a report and the government, I take it, acted on the report of Canadian National. The minister nods his head. Here you have Canadian National Railways, in this case an interested party, interested in getting a return out of the line, making a recommendation to the government, but where are the government's own advisers in this matter in respect to the taxpayer?

Mr. Balcer: The government was right there.

Mr. Chevrier: Pardon?

Mr. Balcer: The government was a party to this agreement. If my hon. friend will read the agreement he will find that the first party to this agreement is Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada as represented by the Minister of Transport. My officers, my economists and my lawyers were representing the government in all the dealings in connection with this agreement and they have successfully obtained all kinds of guarantees, special treatment, special rights and so on. They made this agreement one of the best that could be entered into by the government for the building of a railway and it also protected at the same time the Canadian National Railways. They also obtained from Pine Point mine and Cominco all kinds of agreements for a quantity of concentrate to be shipped every year. It is a tremendous amount, being 215,000 tons for 10 years. I think it is quite a large undertaking. This was obtained by the lawyers of my department representing the government as a party to this agreement. My hon. friend says this is an agreement between three parties, namely Cominco, Pine Point and the C.N.R., that the three of them were interested. Very well, the three of them were interested. However, the government was interested and the government was present at each and every one of these discussions and the government dictated the form of the agreement. At all times the government was there to protect the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: The government pays the loss.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a great deal of respect, as my hon. friend knows, for the officers of the Department of Transport. No one has more respect for them than I have and I am sure the minister has the same respect because he is in daily contact with them. However, the point that I am making is this. In so far as the government is concerned, it did not get the proper protection for the investments that it should have obtained under the circumstances. The point I am making is that three of the parties to the agreement over and above the government, or over and above the crown, looked after their interests. They made sure that they would be protected, the one by getting a surplus out of the operation of the line if such should be the case, the other by getting the line to bring its ore from Great Slave lake down to a market, with very little expenditure. As the hon. member for Vancouver East put it a moment ago, why did not the Canadian National Railways build this line?

Mr. Baldwin: They are doing so.

Mr. Chevrier: I can tell you why they are not building it out of their own funds. Why did not the Northern Alberta Railways build it, represented by the C.P.R. and C.N.R.? Why did not the C.P.R. build it? No one wanted to build this line because they had looked at the economics of it. If the government wanted to build the line, as it had a perfect right to do and as was promised, in my opinion it should have built it, but on terms different from these. It should have protected its investment, something which under the circumstances it did not do.

Mr. Balcer: A few minutes ago while the hon. member was speaking and when I tried to correct him for the record, he said that the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. were going to share from Grimshaw to Edmonton and from Edmonton to Calgary and then the C.P.R. would be alone from Tadanac.

Mr. Chevrier: It is the N.A.R.; I was mistaken.

Mr. Balcer: It will be a joint operation from Grimshaw to Edmonton and from Edmonton to Calgary it will be only C.N.R. and the C.P.R. from Calgary to Tadanac. The C.N.R. line between those two points will not get a single ton of traffic.

Mr. Regier: Who said that?

Mr. Balcer: It is in the agreement. My hon. friend says that neither the C.P.R. nor the C.N.R. wanted to go it alone on this undertaking. That is quite true. There is no secret about that matter. These railway companies are facing difficult times and they must run their railways in an economic fashion. It is hard for them to decide to build a railway of this size without government support. The government decided to go ahead for the reasons that have been expressed in such a clear fashion and with such forward looking spirit by the hon. member for Peace River a few moments ago and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. As to Pine Point mine, of course, it is a subsidiary of Cominco—

Mr. Benidickson: C.P.R.

Mr. Balcer: —and Cominco is also a subsidiary of the C.P.R. But I can tell the committee this. As far as the advantages of the C.P.R. are concerned, they are practically nil compared with what the C.N.R. is going to get out of this line.

Mr. Benidickson: Explain.

Mr. Balcer: I will explain. The C.N.R. is getting 438 miles from Pine Point to Grimshaw. It is going to get half of the Grimshaw to Edmonton traffic, all of the Edmonton to Calgary traffic and all that the C.P.R. will get is from Calgary to Tadanac.

Mr. Benidickson: What are the revenues projected per year?

Mr. Balcer: If my hon. friend will go back in Hansard to what was said earlier at previous stages of this legislation he will find the answer to his question. My friend the hon. member for Laurier said that Pine Point was getting some advantages of this and that. Of course, Pine Point will have the opportunity to ship lead and zinc from its mine. However, Pine Point is going to invest $21 million in this mine. I should say that $16 million is going to be spent at Trail by Cominco for an expansion to their smelter. The plant at Pine Point will cost Pine Point mines $21 million. This is an outlay of $37 million which will give work to a number of Canadians. At the Pine Point plant you will have 600 Canadians who are going to be employees there. In Trail there will be 300 more. Also the manufacture of equipment for these two undertakings will require 2,200 man hours. All told the construction of this undertaking means 7,700 man hours. I think it was really worth the effort the government put into the planning of this railway.

To go back to what my friend the hon. member for Laurier said on the estimates, may I say this. Of course, we should like to see the estimates as low as possible. However, we want to be realistic and in the schedule we have put the closest estimate we could have at the time. Since then we have received very encouraging preliminary reports from the survey that is being carried on by the C.N.R. for the government of Canada. These encouraging reports lead us to believe that the construction of the line might be less expensive than we had thought. On the other hand, I do not want to be overly optimistic. That is why we stick to the amount that was estimated by our engineer or rather the C.N.R. engineer, namely Major Charles. They are going to pay $7.75 a ton which means quite a surcharge on the normal rates they would normally pay for traffic on that line. They have also agreed to pay another surcharge, which will vary. It will not be over $20 million but with the present prices of lead and zinc it will mean something over $12,500,000 for the government of Canada. Therefore I think Pine Point Mines are not getting any favoured treatment. They are requesting us to put up a huge amount of money and also to take some risk. The government is taking some risk in this enterprise. I think it is a good risk. Cominco, Pine Point, C.N.R. and C.P.R. are all taking a risk, but it is a good risk.

These people are all Canadians. They are taking a chance on the future of Canada, and I think they are right. There is no special treatment for anyone in this matter. I think it is a very good project and whatever calculated risk we are taking in this matter, I am confident that the future will show the government was right in coming before this house to ask for the money to build such a development railway.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say on clause 1 of this bill. First of all, after hearing the debate this evening it seems obvious to me that two points have been made by the opposition. The first seems to be that the Liberal party is opposed to the development of the north of this country. Second, it is particularly opposed to the expansion of the C.N.R.

I am not going to say anything about the first point but I wish to say a few words about the expansion of the C.N.R. The written agreement has been studied by the officials of the railway, and the railway is apparently in complete agreement with it. The railway wants to expand and this government is giving the C.N.R. every encouragement and, if necessary, financial assistance. If a few more agreements like this had been negotiated during the 22 years of Liberal rule, probably the C.N.R. deficit today would be very small or non-existent.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, oh.

Mr. Creaghan: We would probably have no deficit. In addition, we would have a great many more people working for this crown corporation. I do not think it makes much difference whether the C.N.R. floats a bond issue which is guaranteed by the government or whether the government does so itself. The railway is owned by the government; therefore we are going to own the roadbed and any improvements that come therefrom. New jobs will be open to all Canadians not only during the course of construction but during the maintenance and operation of the line.

It would seem to me to be very improper for a bill of this type to be introduced if the line was going to be owned by Canadian Pacific. However, as the line is going to be owned by the C.N.R., and as the C.N.R. is owned by the government, which is the taxpayers, I do not see why we cannot proceed and pass this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad you recognized the hon. member for Westmorland before you recognized me, because he advanced some additional arguments which I think carry us a little further into the Alice-in-Wonderland economics which seem to characterize this bill.

Before I come to that, however, I should like the minister to deal with this point. Much of what I have to say depends upon whether I understood him correctly to say that the C.N.R. would get enough to cover the service on the investment, by which I presume he means a reasonable rate of interest on the $86 million.

The minister is asking the treasury of Canada to invest $86 million, of which we might get back $20 million. At the present prices of lead and zinc, the minister just said we would get back $12½ million. But nobody is going to guarantee those present prices; they would depend on whether the full allowance was mined, and there is no guarantee of that. The company just says it hopes to ship 215,000 tons—

Mr. Balcer: There is a guarantee that there will be 215,000 tons of concentrate every year for 10 years. If there is less than that, the company is going to pay the rate on it just the same. So this guarantee is there.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I misunderstood, I will come to that matter.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the C.N.R. investing anything?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is all invested by the government.

Mr. Benidickson: It is invested by the taxpayers.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has not answered the question to which I really want an answer. As I read the agreement, the C.N.R. is to get a freight rate of $7.75 a ton, which would be sufficient to cover the cost of operations, which I understand means the running charges—

Mr. Chevrier: Operation and maintenance.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and the cost of maintenance, which I understand means the C.N.R. would keep the line up and would not allow it to depreciate. But that is all I understand by "operation and maintenance". I thought the minister said this rate was also calculated to give them enough to service the $86 million investment. I should like to know whether I am right or wrong about that before I continue.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, for the sixth time I am very pleased to say that the taxpayer gets his return through a reduction of the C.N.R. deficit. There will be a net contribution to the C.N.R. system. The net contribution to the C.N.R. system will provide for the carrying charges on the capital investment.

I want to repeat that the advantage to the taxpayer is through a reduction of the C.N.R. deficit. Whenever the C.N.R., which is a crown-owned company, has a deficit the taxpayer is called upon to pay for that deficit. Under the present agreement and the present bill, whatever surplus there is on this line will contribute to the lowering of the C.N.R. deficit and so improve the position of the Canadian taxpayers in regard to that deficit.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that if that is all the minister meant by the service on the investment I am not a bit surprised that no railway company is willing to contemplate building this railway, because as I read this agreement the only hope of getting anything more than a very tiny surplus over and above operation and maintenance is from some other shippers than Pine Point Mines.

If there were all the other traffic that would justify this proposition economically I do not think any railway would have hesitated to go into it. Therefore one can only assume that the best railway economists in the country have all concluded that this is not the kind of investment they would recommend to any one of the investing public. In other words, what seems to me very clear is that the taxpayers might get back, of the $86 million—there is no assurance that they will—only $20 million. In other words—

Mr. Balcer: They might get more.

Mr. Pickersgill: They might get more, but when you consider what the—

Mr. Balcer: I know you have no confidence in the north of Canada, but we have.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell the minister right now that I have no confidence in hot air, whether it comes from Prince Albert or Three Rivers. I have a lot more confidence in hard calculations, and I would be much more impressed if Mr. Crump told me this was a paying proposition than if the present Prime Minister told me that, and, I think most businessmen would too.

Mr. Benidickson: The C.P.R. is not in this.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway talked about the fact that there had been no development of the north until this heaven-sent government appeared in 1957. That is the most unadulterated rubbish, because when my friend the hon. member for Laurier who is sitting beside me was minister of transport he brought measures into this house to build a railway in northern Manitoba which is paying and which goes a long way north. This was a big undertaking. He brought in a bill to build a railway across a good part of northern Quebec.

Mr. Speakman: And is that a paying proposition?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not entirely, but the house was told exactly what it would cost. We were told it was a development railway and that there would be the expectation of certain deficits of a relatively modest character.

Mr. Speakman: Modest? $76 million?

Mr. Pickersgill: If anyone wants to compare the propositions let them put the arithmetic clearly down and not toss about casual figures. Moreover it was during the period when my hon. friend was minister of transport that the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway was built. It was true that no taxpayers' money went into the construction of that railway. It was built by private enterprise as a private enterprise, but it was built because we had the kind of government which ran the affairs of this country in such a way that investors had confidence.

Mr. Ricard: You had another government in Quebec also.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, and now under the present government of Quebec another railway is being built by private enterprise.

Mr. Ricard: Started by the previous government.

Mr. Benidickson: Formerly there were low rates of interest on the capital.

Mr. Pickersgill: The plain fact is that we have had a tremendous amount of northern development ever since the second world war in all parts of the north and this has been a very good thing. It will be a good thing if we can keep on having it—

An hon. Member: Then let's go.

Mr. Pickersgill: —as long as it is soundly based; as long as there is to be some return commensurate with the effort. As hon. members know, there are a great many people in this house who represent other parts of the country which are underdeveloped, and if the taxpayers in these years in which we have such huge surpluses as the Minister of Finance is reporting year after year—

Mr. Benidickson: Deficits.

Mr. Pickersgill: —if the taxpayer has to spend another $66 million on which the government expects no direct return whatever, there will, naturally, be that much less to spend in other directions. The government does, of course, expect some indirect return but it expects to have none of that capital back and not a cent of interest on that $66 million.

The hon. member for Royal knows that this $66 million would build two thirds of the Chignecto canal. It would more than build the whole of the Gaspe railway which has been talked about since confederation, if the taxpayers of Canada were willing to pay out such a sum with no direct return. There is no doubt there would be many indirect returns from the building of the Gaspe railway, and I believe there would be both direct and indirect returns from the construction of the Chignecto canal. That $66 million would go a long way toward giving Newfoundland a standard gauge railway. It would be sufficient to pave the whole of the trans-Canada highway across Newfoundland. It would be sufficient to build the Guysborough railway, which has been promised by a good many governments in years past, many times over.

Mr. Keays: May I ask the hon. member a question? Since when has he become interested in the railway in the Gaspe peninsula?

Mr. Pickersgill: All my life I have tried to interest myself in every part of Canada I knew anything about. I must say I have found that taking an interest in parts of the country in which I did not live as a boy seems to have done me no harm.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): When was the harm done?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I think the hon. member for Saint John-Albert can score there. I shall not even attempt to reply. It is such a rare occasion when the hon. gentleman has a chance.

I think we have to look at this thing cold-bloodedly. As I said on the resolution stage, it is only five years since in this chamber the opposition, some of whom are now sitting on the treasury benches, fought tooth and nail against a loan, not a gift, of $80 million—not $86 million but $80 million—at a very good rate of interest with the best possible security, a loan backed by the Tory government of Ontario to build a pipe line across the whole country to boost development and maintain the growth which, up until 1957, we had in this country and which has been sadly lacking ever since. What would the opposition of that day have said if it had been proposed that the treasury should give this $80 million to that company to operate a pipe line without provision for any direct return? Yet this is the proposition which is before us. As the minister has told us, on this $66 million there is to be no direct return and there is no prospect of any ultimate return sufficient to cause any investor to expect any of his capital back.

Mr. Chambers: At least a Canadian company.

Mr. Pickersgill: The C.P.R. is a Canadian company. The hon. gentleman had better look to see who holds the securities and stock of the C.P.R.

Mr. Benidickson: About 35 per cent owned in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, what are you going to say to any other company which has a lead and zinc mine too far away to be exploited because of transportation difficulties which comes along and says: "To develop our mine, please build us a railway and put in $66 million. We might pay back $20 million and we shall pay a little higher than the usual freight rate for a few years. We shall not absolutely guarantee that $20 million, but if we sell enough zinc and the price is good enough that is what you will get."

We did not know these things on second reading. We asked the minister questions and we got equivocal answers. I did suspect some of these things, but I could hardly believe it possible that a proposition of this kind would seriously be placed before any parliament. The minister says this will probably be the last great railway to be built. I am afraid it will. That is precisely why we are asking these questions. We are doing so because it should not be the last railway to be built. I say this for two reasons. I do not think we should make a firm decision to build this railway until we have better evidence than we have been given up till now that there is going to be a tangible return. I do not say that the railway itself has got to make money and repay interest on the capital investment directly. I do not go that far. But I think that just as was the case in connection with the Chibougamau railway if there is a certain ratio between the cost and what you are getting, that is all right. But I say that when the ratio reaches the proportions it reaches in this proposition it is going to be very hard work for hon. members, no matter to what party they belong, to go into their constituencies—except, perhaps, Peace River—and defend this proposition.

Mr. Baldwin: What about the Northwest Territories and Mackenzie river?

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend refers to Mackenzie river. I suppose that if the minister came along and said he would spend $66 million in my constituency it would be awfully tempting. Even if I could not justify it on national grounds it would be extremely tempting. I can tell the minister that if his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, or the Minister of Public Works, would spend $1 million in my constituency, doing as much for the fishermen as this railway is apparently going to do for Consolidated Mining and Smelting, those fishermen would have a much better chance of making a living than they have at present.

This is a tremendous amount of capital for the taxpayers of Canada to be investing on the security in a single mine. That is really what the proposal is, that we put $66 million into the Pine Point mine. We receive none of the profits. We might get some carrying charges and we might have some Canadians employed who otherwise would not be employed, at least in the Pine Point mine, but I venture to say that if the minister went to the best half dozen economists or financiers in Canada and said—I will take the lowest figure; I am trying to be fair about this and completely non-partisan; we will all have to answer for this if a mistake is made—"the Minister of Finance has $66 million which he does not know exactly what to do with; he is thinking of building a railway from Grimshaw to Pine Point; is that the best way in which he could use $66 million to develop Canada and provide employment?" not one who did not have a personal interest would recommend this particular use of that sum of money.

That is the question that faces us at the present time. We are responsible to the Canadian people in the 263 constituencies in this country, not just in one or two. We are spending here money which in one way or another will have to be collected from the taxes of people all across the country. Once we embark on the railway and have it half built we cannot very well stop, although there have been governments that did that sort of thing in the past as many hon. members know full well. As I said, we will not be able to stop but will be required to complete the railway. Before we proceed we really ought to be very sure that this is the best use we can make of $86 million at a time when we are contemplating a deficit in the treasury this year of between $600 and $700 million. This money is not going to grow on trees. The Minister of Finance will have to go out and borrow this sum. As the minister has told us he is not going to receive any interest on it. He may recover some $20 million or some part of that $20 million and he may get in indirect ways an inflow into the treasury but no greater inflow than that which would be received if private investment were involved. This is a tremendous piece of socialism, to put it bluntly; that is what it is. It is also very clearly a tremendous gamble in which the mining company does not stand to lose and in which the C.N.R. has fixed up its statistical position all right, but fixed it up at the expense of the Canadian treasury. This is a gamble in which every contingent risk is taken, not by private investors which are supposed to take risks but by the treasury.

This tremendous amount of money is going to be spent in a great area. Nobody would like to see this done more than I would. Nobody would like to see any development more than I would. I do not think any hon. member feels any differently about it. However, we are trustees and this is not our money we are using. This money is to be collected from the fishermen on the Atlantic coast, from the farmers across the nation, from the workers in our cities—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): From the way the hon. member has been talking lately I did not know he realized that there were farmers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, I probably lived on a farm just as long as the hon. member did because I am about twice his age.

An hon. Member: And have half his wisdom.

Mr. Chambers: It is time the hon. gentleman got the hay out of his hair.

Mr. Pickersgill: To my way of thinking we need a great deal more justification of an investment of this character than we have in a vision or a belief—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member did not even have enough vision to accept the proposal for the Saskatchewan dam.

Mr. Pickersgill: That has very little to do with the subject under discussion, but the hon. member, of course, is quite right in saying that many people shared the same concern about the Saskatchewan dam. I do not ever remember meeting anyone who did not think the Saskatchewan dam would be a wonderful thing and I think it will be, but—

Mr. Drysdale: Your party did not give a dam.

Mr. Pickersgill: An hon. member said that our party did not give a "dam". That is quite true in more senses than one. We took the view when we were in office that we were the trustees of the treasury of Canada, that it was our duty to try to look after the taxpayers' money with the same prudence we would employ in looking after our own money. No doubt part of the reason the annual expenditures of this country have increased by over $1 billion in four years is that we have successors who have not taken the same view of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You have to spend money in order to earn money. If the hon. member had ever been a farmer in any real sense he would realize that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Most farmers I used to know in the days when I knew something about farms were very concerned about saving their dollars when they had any to save, which was not always the case.

Mr. Benidickson: They do not want the government to spend their dollars.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not wish to be diverted and I hope to come back to my point. It seems to me that everyone is agreed on this matter in principle but we also have this difficult proposition to decide, whether or not there is going to be a national return for a minimum of $66 million and what appears to be a maximum of $86 million of the taxpayers' money on which there is to be no interest paid and in respect of which, except for the difference between $66 and $86 million, no part of it is ever to be paid back.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate commenced his argument by saying that he was making certain assumptions. Let me say that he has argued his assumptions very ably but his assumptions were all wrong.

The hon. member, as have other hon. members, proceeded on the assumption that this is a railway solely for the purpose of opening up a mine. I propose to refute that argument in specific detail.

In 1929 the Liberal party first raised the question of this railway to Great Slave lake. The Hon. Charles Dunning, then minister of railways, said: "I shall live to see this railway completed to Great Slave lake before I die." The Liberals placed in the statute relating to the Northern Alberta Railways a clause giving permission for this railway to be built.

If the railway had been built at the time it should have been built it would have cost far less than it will now cost. The hon. member for Laurier mentioned the figure of $50 million. I venture to suggest that if the railway had been built right after the war as it should have been it would probably have cost less than $40 million. If it had been built then there might well now be half a million people in that part of the country. The Northwest Territories could have developed to a stage that would have caused a tremendous expansion in our gross national product. There lies the fault of the previous administration. I am sorry that hon. members of the opposition have shut their ears and have refused to listen to the pearls of parliamentary wisdom which the minister has cast before them. I have some regard for the Liberal party, but the speech that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has just made will go far to cause the few remaining members of his party now crouching in fox holes in the northern part of this country to burrow even deeper.

I was in Yellowknife a short time ago. For the last few years that part of the country has been pausing in its development. It has been standing still simply because there is a stage in the opening up of an area when the cost of the necessary goods, commodities and services laid down becomes too great to justify development. This is something that the hon. member and his party might well have dealt with if they had done between 1948 and 1952 or 1953 what we are now doing.

I should like to deal very briefly with a remark made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. He cannot have been listening too well to his leader who has been criticizing the government for attempting to do bad things to the crown corporations. I was amazed to hear the hon. member advocate construction of this railway by the C.P.R. rather than the C.N.R. There is a reason for construction by the C.N.R. When Northern Alberta Railways was created in 1929 the people of the north country were bitterly opposed to it. They requested and petitioned that this 1,000-mile railway stretching into the northern regions of British Columbia and Alberta should be operated by Canadian National Railways because they knew that a period of development would be required which might well be attended to and looked after much better by the national railway company with respect to which the government might be able to exert some measure of persuasion.

In my opinion the people of the northern part of Canada are much happier that this new railway is going to be built by the C.N.R. I think this is their desire. I have been in touch with them and I know what they are thinking and saying. This decision will meet with their approval. There is a division of freight haulage between the two railway companies with which the minister dealt. For approximately two thirds of the distance over which the ore from Pine Point will be carried to its destination it will be transported on the railway lines of the national system while for the remaining one-third transportation will be over C.P.R. lines.

The hon. member for Vancouver East suggested the construction of a smelter. I spoke about that the other day. I should like to seee a smelter built at this time but in my opinion the economics of the situation do not justify that now. The situation in Trail at this time is that the economic operation of the smelter can only be carried on provided some 200,000 to 250,000 tons of lead and zinc concentrates are made available within the next two or three years. If that is not done, the operation will not continue to be economic. People will be laid off and it will be necessary for the company to go outside of Canada and purchase custom concentrates in order to maintain operations at a high economic level. That is not a major reason, of course, but it is a reason which the house must take into consideration, the maintenance of high employment so far as this operation is concerned.

Canadian National Railways

There is another point which I think hon. members of the opposition who have spoken have forgotten. I refer to the revenue that will accrue to the railway company not from this line itself, which we can call the incremental increase, but the revenue which will accrue to them on their main lines. A substantial amount of money will accrue to Canadian National Railways from the ore it will carry from Grimshaw to Calgary. Substantial revenue will also accrue to Canadian National Railways from the supplies it will transport to Pine Point. Substantial revenue will accrue to Canadian National Railways from the large amount of lumber it will haul from the area north of Grimshaw to eastern Canada.

Hon. members of the opposition have suggested there is no basis on which the government could have proceeded. The Manning royal commission sat for almost one year. There are several thousand pages in the transcript of the proceedings. They contain in great detail a full and ample account supported by the best witnesses who could be obtained and by briefs submitted by hard-headed business people from Vancouver, Edmonton, Montreal and the northern part of the country. The evidence all went to the root of the issue and indicated that in addition to the minerals which would be transported from Pine Point there would be other sources of revenue.

One of the commissioners, Mr. John Anderson-Thomson, is a hard headed Scotsman who holds degrees as an engineer and as a surveyor. He has spent 25 to 30 years in the northern part of Canada and knows the country like the palm of his own hand. I had the privilege of appearing before the commission for almost five months and I heard the evidence submitted. The report is contained in a volume which is available to all hon. members and I am surprised that more of them have not read it. As found on page 83, Mr. Anderson-Thomson is dealing with agriculture and has this to say:

> If half the potential arable land was developed together with more intensive cultivation of existing farms, tonnage to the railway would increase from 50,000 tons to 200,000 tons annually. This tonnage would include the incoming traffic. It would be reasonable to assume a subsidy on export grain to bring the rate up to 50 cents per 100 pounds giving a gross revenue to the C.P.R. and C.N.R. of $2 million per annum.

On page 86 of the report the same commissioner gives an estimate with regard to lumber. The estimate is based on statements made by the Alberta department of forestry which carries on a scientific inventory of the forest resources of this area. He indicates that if the total potential of the annual allowable cut is developed, and I do not anticipate that this will happen at once, of course, there will be a total yearly revenue to the two railway companies of $3,600,000.

These are not the submissions of people who are biased. They are the findings of a responsible commissioner made after listening to the evidence brought before him and other members of the commission. They cannot be ignored. I know that the government has had reference to the evidence which was presented. I might say that a brief was presented to the commission by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories and a brief was also presented by Northern Alberta Railways on behalf of both the railway companies. These people knew what was involved. As a result of all these briefs and representations, here are the findings. I suggest that hon. members of the opposition take the time to read this report because in it they will find answers to all their questions.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make only a few brief remarks on this matter. However, I was amazed to hear the hon. member for Westmorland say that the Liberals had always been opposed to the expansion of the Canadian National. All hon. members know I am not a supporter of the Liberal party. However, I have been in this house long enough to have heard on innumerable occasions when the Conservatives were in opposition and also when the Conservatives were in office, the Conservatives being the great supporters of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I feel that for any hon. member to say that the Liberals have been opposed to the expansion of the Canadian National is misrepresenting history in every sense.

Now, this particular extension of the Canadian National has the support of this group, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to cause any doubt about that; we support the bill now before us. However, we support it basically because there are tens of thousands of people living in the area that is going to be served by this extension of the railway, a number of whom have been living there for 40, 50 or 60 years. They moved into this territory on the distinct understanding that railway was going to be built to serve their needs. It is for this reason we support the bill now before us. We do not support it because of the needs of the mining industries located in the southern part of British Columbia and owned by the Canadian Pacific. We support it because of the farmers and the owners of lumbering industries in the region involved who are going to derive great benefit as a result of this extension of the railroad into northern Canada.

We are very suspicious, however, as to the reason the government has decided, at this particular time, to build this extension of the Canadian railway system, from Grimshaw to Pine Point. We would immediately agree that a railway line ought to be built from Grimshaw to Fort Vermilion, but we fail to understand why it has to be built all the way up to Pine Point. If it is going to be a profitable undertaking, then I feel the Canadian Pacific would have decided to build this railroad. However, because the undertaking is of doubtful value, the taxpayers of Canada are being asked to build it.

I agree that the taxpayers of Canada ought to build it in so far as it is going to serve the settlers and the industries along the way. However, I do not for one moment believe that the taxpayers ought to be asked to subsidize the mining industries located down in Trail, British Columbia. There is no guarantee that this railway is going to operate at a profit. I have no particular quarrel with that aspect, if this railroad is going to meet our commitment to the settlers living in the Peace River area of Alberta. I believe it is up to the taxpayers to build a railroad to service the agricultural and lumbering interests in the area. However, if the extension up to Pine Point involves this railroad in a risk, then I feel that those who stand to benefit ought to run the risk, and that the Canadian Pacific ought to build this line.

We are going to support this bill. We are happy that the government has decided on the western route as opposed to the eastern. The construction of the eastern route might have pleased the people of Saskatchewan and of northeastern Alberta, but would have been much less satisfactory to the majority of the people who have an interest in this extension of our railways system. I say once again that in so far as this railroad extension is going to serve the interest of agriculture and lumbering we feel that in view of the promises that have been made over the past 40 or 50 years, the Canadian people owe it to these settlers to build this line. However, when it comes to building the line as far as Pine Point in order to deliver ores, we have severe reservations.

We feel that once again the government, this Conservative government, is being the willing stooge of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is using the taxpayers' money in the hope of cashing in on the good will of the farmers and the lumbering interests. Over the years we have heard our Prime Minister, when he was in opposition, plead the cause of the Canadian Pacific until his heart really bled. We have seen the decisions rendered in relation to T.C.A. and C.P.A., and we have seen innumerable other respects in which this government has been a staunch defender of the Canadian Pacific. Once again, we have reason to suspect that it is not really the lumbermen of northwestern Alberta, it is not really the farmers of northwestern Alberta, about whom this government is concerned, but it is the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Even the Canadian Pacific seems to be in doubt about the economics of transporting ores from Great Slave lake down to Trail because that railway is unwilling to run the risk involved in constructing the line. The taxpayers of Canada, therefore, are being asked to be the goats.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, in the interests of the farmers and those engaged in lumbering in northwestern Alberta, we are going to be very happy to support this bill with the reservation that we feel once more this government has bled its heart out for the welfare of the Canadian Pacific as opposed to the public interests.

Mr. Drysdale: I just want to speak very briefly on this matter, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I am particularly concerned about the narrowness of the viewpoint of those hon. members of the opposition who have spoken tonight. In so far as the interests of the Canadian people in general are concerned, I should like to draw to your attention the first paragraph of Bill No. C-126 which has apparently escaped the attention of hon. members.

It states:

> In order to establish transportation services to and from mining properties in the area of Great Slave lake, in the Northwest Territories, and otherwise to assist in the development of northern Canada, the governor in council may provide for the construction—

I emphasize that line, "and otherwise to assist in the development of northern Canada".

Again in the draft agreement which has been presented to the committee and in the preamble speaking about the development of the railway they say: for the purpose of providing railway service for the development of the northern region of Canada. Again, to emphasize and reiterate, as it appears that is the only way in which to get the point over to members of the opposition, I should like to refer to the minister's statement as found at page 8504 of Hansard of September 18. In summing up the advantages of this particular railway he said this:

> In other words, the proposed railway would be somewhat different from most branch lines constructed in recent years which were designed to service one mine or a group of mines. Its purpose, in fact, is to open up a whole new region.
> The Great Slave lake railway will therefore be for the general development of the north.

The reason I wish to draw this matter to the attention of the committee is the fact that, coming as I do from British Columbia, I can say that we also share in the Peace River block a block that has a population of some 70,000 people. We are also very fortunate in having the Pacific Great Eastern railway which connects Vancouver with the Peace River area up to Fort St. John. I think that it is the first stage of the development of further expansion of the north by converting by present methods a vision into a reality. I feel that members of the opposition have ignored the fact that it is approximately 40 miles or 50 miles from Fort St. John to Grimshaw, or in other words, the connecting up of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway with the Great Slave lake railway.

I bring this matter to the attention of the committee for this reason. If we take the average cost, which is approximately $171,000 per mile of development, I think that at a cost of well under $1 million, this connection could be made with the Pacific Great Eastern railway which taps the lower Vancouver area or the lower Vancouver mainland, an area with a population of approximately 1 million. I think the Pacific Great Eastern itself has shown its success as I believe the completion of the P.G.E. developed the lumber business to a point where it was ten times what it had been before the P.G.E. was completed to the north.

I mention this matter because it has not been drawn to the attention of the committee. We have had briefs during the course of this year and submissions from the province of British Columbia, the British Columbia and Yukon chamber of mines, the city of Dawson Creek, the north Vancouver board of trade and the Vancouver board of trade. They have shown their tangible interest in the development of that great area. I think this is one of the factors that must be considered for by developing this railway to the north and eventually looking towards the future expansion of the P.G.E., we are also helping the development of British Columbia as well as Alberta. I feel that members of the committee should support this extremely important bill, taking the long range viewpoint.

Mr. Regier: Before he takes his seat I wonder whether the hon. member would allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Drysdale: Certainly.

Mr. Regier: Is he aware of the fact that the British Columbia government has refused to connect the P.G.E. to this proposed extension? It is a matter, I believe, of less than 100 miles. Yet it consistently refuses to bridge the gap as it were in order to enable the province of British Columbia to get any benefits at all out of this development.

[Mr. Drysdale.]

Mr. Drysdale: I thank the hon. member for the question but perhaps I should put it in proper perspective. It is true that there is opposition from the province of British Columbia to going across the border because of certain difficulties coming under the Railway Act. However, the province of British Columbia and the premier are quite anxious to have it connected up. I am looking forward to a time in the future—and I hope not too far in the future—when there can be a further connection from Grimshaw to Fort St. John, whether it is accomplished by the C.N.R. or whether under some company is brought up to the province of British Columbia and then the connection will be provided by British Columbia. From the way in which the hon. member has stated the matter I think he is angry in a sense but there is this difficulty of coming under the board of transport commissioners as far as the Pacific Great Eastern is concerned. I am sure that my good friend the premier of British Columbia would be very anxious to have a connection from Grimshaw to Fort St. John.

Mr. Matheson: In speaking briefly to Bill No. C-126, I would point out the difficulty of some of us sitting on this side of the chamber in that we do not have confidence in the economic judgment of this government; nor do we have any reason to believe that this project, in the form in which it is presented to the committee tonight, is the result of any economic analysis or contract in any way having in mind the general interest of Canada.

In reply to interrogation the minister has answered that certain inquiries and investigations were made by governmental experts. If he made that statement, I know that would be so. On the other hand, we are mindful of the fact that when the present leader of the government was in opposition and campaigning he made precisely these pronouncements, namely that this project was economic, that all this was desirable, that this was his vision and that this would be one of the things he would do if he presided over the government of Canada. I refer to the Montreal Star of April 26, 1957:

> With a declaration that "this is a time for planning for greatness in Canada's future" Mr. Diefenbaker urged that the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald for developing the West be adapted to changing times and applied to the northland.
> "The North with its vast stores of hidden wealth is ready to come into its own" he said. "The wonder and challenge of the North must become our national consciousness. All that is needed is an imaginative policy which will open its doors to Canadian initiative and enterprise.

Almost in the same terms he expressed himself in his opening campaign address delivered in Massey Hall in Toronto on April 25, 1957, with the same slogan "The New Frontier Policy". This was a policy declared far and wide before it was analysed. It was a slogan before there was any economic or indeed geological study to substantiate or support it.

I take very strong issue with the conclusions from some of the suggested economic studies which have been later put forward by other members of this committee. I put it to you, Mr. Chairman, that in other economic prognostications the right hon. gentleman now holding the position of Prime Minister has been quite wrong; and that the Minister of Finance in the budget address of March 21, 1957, one of the rudest budget addresses in the history of our parliament gave a firm commitment for a balanced budget. We in the course of these last years know how completely imbalanced his own budgets have become.

We recognize the fact that the entire Northwest Territories, whose southerly boundary is approximately 50 miles north of Skagway, Alaska, have a population approximately the same as that of my small home town of Brockville, namely something under 20,000 people. I refer to my own small town paper the Recorder and Times which has an article headed "Relief Payments Here Hit Record High Level". I will not read the article in detail. It is to be found in the issue of September 22, 1961.

We all believe in development but we believe also in proportion. If this government is able to present a bill which presents possibilities for future development which are perhaps not entirely economic but which offer some prospects for people on the frontier well and good. Incidentally, I may say that we may not have these people for long because as the hon. lady presiding over the Department of Citizenship and Immigration knows, the present picture seems to indicate that our population is moving out of Canada. I put it to the committee that even if this were not entirely economical we might be quite interested—

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member to what he is referring? I do not remember ever making any such statement.

An hon. Member: He is just talking, as usual.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I referred to any comments made by the hon. lady. Perhaps she was reading her newspaper and did not hear the earlier part of my remarks.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member should explain himself. I have been listening carefully to what he has said—

Mr. Pickersgill: Fort six thousand people left this country in the last year.

Mrs. Fairclough: But I did not say that. The hon. member said that.

Mr. Matheson: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think the record will bear out that I made no such assertion.

Mr. Ricard: Only insinuation.

Mr. Matheson: I had no intention of making that assertion. It was simply my intention to state that the pattern of movement of people is not to Canada at the present time; it is from Canada. There has been a reversal. At this particular moment in history we come to the situation where we must examine an interesting part of the frontier, with perhaps tremendous possibilities in the future, and with 20,000 people there now. We are asked to put $86 million into this project, or perhaps it will be $125 million, because we have not had any firm estimate in support of the cost. We have no idea what the cost of this railway will be to Canada.

Also, when we examine this agreement, which we have only had an opportunity to examine within the last few hours, we find 17 pages of extremely complicated drafting, with a great deal of mathematics in it. I have been unable to discover where there is any benefit to the chief contracting party, Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada. The preamble says:

> Whereas the government desires the construction of a line of railway from a point at or near Grimshaw, Alberta, on the Northern Alberta Railway's line, to Great Slave lake,—

That is almost in the language of the present Prime Minister as he started his campaign at Massey Hall in 1957. But we see nothing else in the 17 foolscap pages of this document to suggest that Her Majesty the Queen gets a penny out of this project now or in the future. All we hear about is more dream or vision, and we have serious unemployment to cope with in the populous parts of Ontario and Quebec and in the east and in the west. This sounds to me somewhat out of proportion.

Again, when we look at this agreement we find four contracting parties. As other hon. members have mentioned, we have a situation where Her Majesty gets nothing now and nothing in the future, at a time of enormous public deficit, perhaps the largest deficit we will have in Canada's history.

The contracting party, Canadian National Railway Company, will probably not lose very much. It cannot, surely, gain anything substantial except at our cost. Pine Point Mines Limited is 78 per cent owned by Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company which is 50 per cent owned by C.P.R. which is 30 per cent owned by the Canadian people.

Who is getting this great big give-away? This is one of the things we have to be concerned about. If we look back just a few decades in history we will recall that one of the worries about the development of the west was the extent to which Conservative governments were developing this kind of project by a process of give-away. We believe in development. We think there has to be a development of the northlands. But there has to be a bit of quid pro quo in this matter. If there is not any clear benefit coming to Canadian people, I think frankly we have a duty to stand up at this time and say so.

Mr. Balcer: Vote against it.

Mr. Matheson: I ask the minister whether this perhaps should not be reconsidered.

Mr. Chambers: Do your thinking before you start.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George have a question?

Mr. Chambers: I just suggested the hon. member should do his thinking before he starts to speak, instead of now.

Mr. Matheson: I thank the hon. member. I think perhaps he should take this into consideration, that he is somewhat at an advantage in this situation because we on this side of the chamber received this 17-page document at approximately five o'clock tonight.

Mr. Drysdale: It was available last Thursday in committee.

Mr. Balcer: It was available last Thursday, and if the hon. member for Leeds had asked the hon. member for Laurier, he would have had a copy.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): You caught up with things very quickly this time.

Mr. Matheson: I personally wrote the Minister of Transport because I was unable to obtain a copy anywhere else. He told me that a copy would be forthcoming. But it was not forthcoming. I had to borrow a copy at approximately seven o'clock tonight, and I spent all the time available to me reading this document three or four times, and I still do not understand it.

An hon. Member: Hire a lawyer.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Matheson: I challenge the minister to explain it to this committee. I do not believe he is capable of explaining it because I do not think there is a lawyer in this house who understands the details of this agreement and can explain it item by item. I say this with great seriousness. I know the minister is a man learned in the law but this is something that has been drafted over a period of approximately one year, or possibly more, by people who were interested in three particular corporations, Canadian National Railways, Pine Point Mines and Consolidated Mining and Smelting. I think those interests have been manifestly well represented, but I question whether the crown has been represented in this particular matter.

Mr. Balcer: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the inference in the remarks of the hon. member is absolutely unfair. This is the second time an hon. member has risen and said the crown was not represented and this agreement has been a sort of big deal between three corporations. I resent that inference very much and I think it is absolutely unfair.

As I said earlier, all the discussions were conducted by officers of the Department of Transport, and I ask my hon. friend, if he does not understand the agreement why does he not just stop there? He should take a look at other agreements and he would see they are not as good as this one.

Mr. Chevrier: He will never see one like this.

Mr. Balcer: As far as Pine Point Mines is concerned, they are of course ready to take the risk and they are going to put up $21 million. They are also going to pay a very high surcharge. Also, they are going to pay an extra capital charge, which is not usually paid in these circumstances.

I resent very much the inference that the government has allowed this agreement to be a big deal between two or three companies. It is not that at all. This is a project for the development of the northern part of Canada. It just so happened that there was a mine there and it helps us to finance this great project that will develop the northern part of Canada.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister, who indicates that this question has been very thoroughly studied.

An hon. Member: Hire a lawyer.

Mr. Matheson: I suggest to the minister that it would have been extremely helpful if a document of this complexity had been made available to this side of the chamber at a time when it could have been examined with some thoroughness.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): It was.

Mr. Matheson: The minister referred to the fact—

Mr. Chevrier: It took two years to draft. Why should we not have had it before?

Mr. Drysdale: Do you want two years to look at it?

Mr. Chevrier: We have not even got the committee proceedings.

Mr. Drysdale: You were there.

Mr. Matheson: The minister indicated that the mine would benefit as a result of the development of this particular railway. We heard just a few days ago from the hon. member for Gloucester that a large and important mine, with a very high grade ore of both lead and zinc, had been closed in Gloucester, Northumberland county, for the past four years. We heard nothing from the minister with respect to the projected earnings. We heard nothing from him with respect to the likelihood of this ore being able to secure a guaranteed market. The fact is that we have no economic foundation for this venture at all. All we have is an agreement. The people of Canada do not benefit in any way.

I very seriously wonder what our duty to Canada is in these circumstances; whether trusting only in the slogan of the dream for the north, we should pass this bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Competitive bids or tenders.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, clause 2 says that the railway shall adopt the principle of competitive bids or tenders. I should like to suggest to the minister that these tenders be broken down into smaller tenders so that they can be given to smaller companies rather than one large company. They could not then let out subcontracts and in this way profit both from their tender and from the work of the subcontractors. I should like further to suggest that these contracts have inserted in them a definite clause to protect any subcontractors who might be employed.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the minister if he would give serious consideration to the possibility of making some commencement with the work of construction before the winter is over? I wonder if he would take up this point with the C.N.R.

Second, having in mind that this line will go through an area where there are large numbers of Indians, I wonder whether the C.N.R. could be requested to have the contractors see to it that as many Indians as possible are engaged to do all the work which can be done with regard to cutting out the line of survey and so on.

Mr. Balcer: I think those are two excellent suggestions. The crown company which will be building this railway has assured me that they intend to do their utmost to start the physical work as soon as possible. They have pressed forward the work of the survey so that it will be finished much earlier than had been expected. They are anxious to see the physical work started as early as possible.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Subsidy to Canadian National Railway Company for construction of railway.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister gave no indication of how the interest on this capital investment is to be provided. He did say, however, that in accordance with one clause in the agreement provision is made for a service charge. I think that was the expression used. The mine will be paying about $12 million which would, I take it, go toward the reduction of the sum invested. I just want to bring to the minister's attention that this $12 million will just about wipe out the interest charges during construction. Has the minister given any consideration to that?

Mr. Balcer: To what? What does the hon. gentleman wish to know?

Mr. Chevrier: I want to know if any provision has been made by the government for the payment of these interest charges during construction. I have already pointed out that they are considerable. Indeed, they are going to wipe out this $12 million which will be paid by the mine on account of the investment.

Mr. Balcer: I have nothing to add to what I said earlier. As far as the amount of money paid by the taxpayers is concerned, it would be represented by the decrease in the deficit to the C.N.R., and that is all. This railway is going to be financed by an estimate of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before this clause carries I should like to ask the minister if there is any provision here for the appropriation of any money, or whether there will be a vote in the estimates to provide the C.N.R. with money for the building of the line. The expenditure is apparently limited to $86,250,000 but it seems to me that none of this authorizes the expenditure of one cent and that it will be necessary, before money can be spent, for funds to be provided under an appropriation act or in some other way. Can the minister say if that is correct?

Mr. Balcer: That is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Agreement required.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister said a moment ago that the C.N.R. had been asked to build this line with its own capital but was not interested and that this applied to the C.P.R. as well. I understand, too, that the Northern Alberta Railway were also asked to build this line and that they, too, turned the idea down, I take it on economic grounds. Can the minister give us any idea of the amount of traffic in concentrates which either of those three companies said was requisite in order to make this line an economic project.

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that figure. At the present time a minimum of 215,000 tons is guaranteed by the mine. As to the tonnage which would have to be carried to make this project economically feasible, I cannot give the committee that information at the present time. It is a figure for the economists to work out.

Mr. Chevrier: Has consideration been given to this within the minister's department? It takes 215,000 tons of concentrates annually over a period of ten years at a freight rate of $7.75 a ton to provide for the operation and maintenance of the line. How much more would it take to pay for the amortization of the capital, let alone the servicing of the capital and the interest during construction? Has that been given any consideration by the officials of the department? Have they worked it out on a mathematical basis similar to the manner in which the freight rate was worked out? Would it not then require, to amortize everything, something in the neighbourhood of 800,000 or 900,000 tons of concentrates per year over a period of 25 years, not 10 years?

Mr. Balcer: That is quite possible. I know that the economists in my department have worked out all these figures, but I have not got them with me. I do not disagree with the hon. member, but what I wish to say is that this line is not being built exclusively for one mine. The line is being built in order to bring about the development of the whole area, and the government has full confidence that in ten years from now the amount of traffic coming from sources other than the mine will be enough to justify the confidence which it has placed in this undertaking.

Mr. Chevrier: After this railway is built, then, other mines may well be shipping ore, as the minister sees it. Then if any other mines ship concentrates, the Pine Point mines immediately cease to pay the $7.75 per ton rate and go back to the normal rate so that the other mines will be sharing the burden. The conclusion I reached in this connection is that the heavier the traffic which will move over the line the less the Pine Point mines will have to pay. Is that not a fact?

Mr. Balcer: That is right. There is a clause in the agreement that the Pine Point railway will not be discriminated against. If another mine uses the railway, the normal rate up to $7.75, will be diminished by the same amount so that the other mines will also bear part of the surcharge. This does not mean that neither of the two mines will pay a surcharge. It means that the surcharge will be spread among other mines that will receive the same benefit as Pine Point will receive.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this means that Pine Point may not have to pay the $20 million?

Mr. Balcer: That is not the same thing. The hon. member is talking about a rate of $7.75. On top of that there is a surcharge which is based on something else, and this Pine Point must pay whether or not there is another mine.

Mr. Benidickson: Regardless of any ultimate freight will Pine Point pay $20 million over a course of years on a capital expenditure which has been estimated as being in the neighbourhood of $75 to $80 million, or even greater? Will Pine Point mine, a subsidiary of Consolidated Mining and Smelting, eventually under any circumstances pay $20 million?

Mr. Balcer: In the agreement and in the bill there is a provision for the mine to pay this capital contribution which could reach a maximum of $20 million.

Mr. Benidickson: But it could be less than $20 million if some other mines in the area developed traffic.

Mr. Balcer: No. This special capital contribution by the mine to the government represents a definite undertaking by Pine Point which does not vary if other mines use the railway for their concentrates. It is only the surcharge between the normal charge and the $7.75 which will be spread among Pine Point and all other mines that might develop if the railway is built.

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder whether the minister would advise me if it is correct to say that under clause 4 of the agreement only if the total of all freight and other merchandise carried over the railway exceeds $6 million in one year would there be a lowering in the rates? My second question is this. Is it not a fact that in so far as the special transportation subsidy is concerned the formula is shown in schedule B which may be examined by hon. members? The formula is based on the average value of the ore and concentrates for which there is a specific charge as set out in the formula in schedule B. There are a number of different contingencies which are set out in that formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: In reply to the hon. member for Laurier the minister said he had no doubt that his officers, assuming there were no other shippers, would be able to tell us how many tons of concentrate would require to be shipped in order to cover the service and amortization of the capital and to recover the interest, but that he did not have these figures with him. Will the minister undertake to get those figures for us? It seems to me this is a very important point.

I am not saying there will not be other traffic as well. But this is one way of measuring probable traffic to see what prospects there are of the C.N.R. deriving enough out of this to make it indirectly a paying proposition. I certainly would like to see it made a paying proposition. I would support it to the hilt if anyone could show me that it would come anywhere near that.

In a qualified way the minister assented to the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Laurier that it would be 800,000 or 900,000 tons instead of the 215,000 which is over four times what they are being asked for over a period of years.

I believe we ought to have an indication other than merely the minister's expression of confidence that traffic will be available in approximately that volume. I do not necessarily refer to traffic in concentrates but to lumber and any other commodities that might be shipped. This railway will not carry passengers nor will it carry much package freight in an area where there is already a highway, as anyone who has had much experience of highways and railways knows. It is likely that this railway will carry only bulk cargo of one kind or another. I believe we ought to have a much harder estimate.

When we resume in committee tomorrow the minister should tell us what the estimate of the cost to the treasury is based upon including projected rate of interest they are working on. There must be an estimate available from the Department of Finance which is going to have to put up the money. We should have an estimate of the cost to the treasury from whatever time construction of this railway commences until 1966—or possibly earlier—and considering the speed at which this government moves, even if the government were in office and had much to do with these things at that period, I would say later would be a better guess than earlier.

In any event a certain amount in the millions will have to be put up every year to a maximum of $86 million on which there is going to be no return at all because the railway will not be in operation. It is going to cost the Minister of Finance a lot to get that money. I think we ought to know what the estimate is of what that is going to be and what the estimate is of what it is going to be for a reasonable interest and amortization into the future, so that we will have a clear picture of the whole thing before we are asked to make final disposition of the matter. Would the minister endeavour to give us those figures tomorrow?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, may I say I think it would have been appropriate had the hon. gentleman opposite asked those questions when the bill was before the committee.

Mr. Benidickson: We did not know the facts.

Mr. Chevrier: We could not do so when we did not have the agreement.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister did not give us the agreement.

Mr. Balcer: My hon. friends had the agreement.

Mr. Chevrier: Surely the minister could not reasonably expect that we could digest an agreement of that character which took over a year to draft when we were before the committee.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, let me say to my hon. friends in the opposition that I am sorry to have caused them so much trouble as a result of this agreement. We produced the agreement as I am sure hon. members opposite wished us to and apparently it has been the source of all the troubles of the opposition. The next time we will stick strictly to the bill and it will be much simpler. We will not have all the problems we have at this time.

I probably did not clearly understand what was sought by my friend the hon. member for Laurier. I believe I said that probably the economists in my department must have considered the tonnage figures and related material. If the figures are available I will do my utmost to produce them for the committee tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, just before we call it ten thirty might I thank the minister for undertaking to produce this information and thank him also for his discourse on the rights of parliament and the opposition, which was so like his leader's observations when he sat on this side of the house.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Nasty, nasty.

Mr. Benidickson: Factual, factual.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Four items, Mr. Speaker. The first would be the continuation of the bill we have just been dealing with, Bill No. C-126, the Pine Point railway. The second would be Bill No. C-122, the dominion-provincial tax collection agreements. The third item would be the estimates of the Department of Finance and the fourth item the estimates of the Department of Transport. There would also be the divorce bills when they have been returned to the house after consideration by the standing committee.

At 10.34 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 26, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS—SIXTH AND SEVENTH REPORTS—CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette) presented the sixth and seventh reports of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and moved that the seventh report be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: By reason of the special orders that were made yesterday perhaps I should inquire whether it is the wish of the house that this sixth report, which appears to refer to a great many divorce bills, should be available for consideration today, in which case suspension of the ordinary practice of having it listed on the order paper will be required. Otherwise it could not be considered until tomorrow.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if the report were available today.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I think that would be the proper thing to do.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I do not think there would be any objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Then by unanimous consent the report which is now tabled will be available today at the hour for private bills, notwithstanding the fact that it has not been listed on the order paper. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Third report of standing committee on agriculture and colonization—Mr. McBain.

TRADE

ACCRA—STATEMENTS ON COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Hees: Yes; I missed motions.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, if the minister wishes to revert to motions I have no objection.

Mr. Hees: Could we revert to motions, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister has leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief report about a trip which has necessitated my absence during the past two weeks. During these two weeks I have, as the house already knows, attended the commonwealth economic conference at Accra with my colleague the Minister of Finance, and later visited our trade commissioners in five of the important markets of Europe.

At the Accra conference I outlined the importance to Canada of maintaining the commonwealth trading arrangements which have been so beneficial to our farmers, fishermen, lumbermen, miners, other primary producers and manufacturers in the United Kingdom market, and also to United Kingdom producers selling in the Canadian market. I pointed out that acceptance of the common market tariff by the United Kingdom would mean for us the loss of free entry for a number of important industrial raw materials, the whole range of semi-processed and manufactured goods, and most of our agricultural exports.

I told the meeting that out of total sales to the United Kingdom last year amounting to $915 million some $691 million, or 76 per cent, would be affected by United Kingdom acceptance of the common market tariff; $631 million would in our view be seriously affected; $584 million of this trade would be faced with higher tariffs, and $553 million would be faced with not only a loss of preference but, in most cases, a preference against Canadians and in favour of Europeans. I said this would be an entirely new and disturbing situation for us. I pointed out that such figures are by no means a full measure of the potential damage of such a move for Canada. In some cases the loss of preference, let alone reverse preference, could eliminate Canadians from the United Kingdom market.

The other commonwealth delegations attending the conference expressed similar concern over the effect which the loss of present trading arrangements in the United Kingdom market would have on their economies, and the communique, which was adopted unanimously, expresses accurately the grave concern felt by members of the commonwealth about this matter.

At no time did I say anything which could be construed as an ultimatum to the United Kingdom government that she must choose between the European common market and the commonwealth. I endeavoured to point out to the United Kingdom government the importance to Canadian producers of maintaining our present trading arrangements in the United Kingdom market, and the damage that will result if these trading arrangements are not maintained. I pointed out that our economy would be harmed to the degree that the United Kingdom government is unable to maintain these trading arrangements.

I think the house might be interested to learn of the increase in exports between this country and the United Kingdom which has developed since this government took office. In 1956 Canadian exports to the United Kingdom market amounted to $812,668,049. Last year exports to the United Kingdom market from Canada amounted to $915,289,654. Our exports to all commonwealth countries, including the United Kingdom, in 1956 amounted to $1,055,833,671. Last year they amounted to $1,244,519,631. I cite these figures simply to show how trade with the United Kingdom and the commonwealth as a whole has been increasing during the time we have been in office, and the importance of this trade to Canada.

After leaving Ghana I visited our trade commissioners in Italy, West Germany, France, Belgium and the United Kingdom. My purpose in doing so was threefold. First of all I wanted to examine the opportunities which exist for expanding trade in those countries. Having discussed this matter with our trade commissioners and with businessmen, I am convinced that we can substantially expand our trade in those markets if our businessmen will visit the markets and show prospective customers good samples at competitive prices. Canadians have a lot of goodwill in Europe and people there are anxious to do business with us, but they want to meet our salesmen face to face and discuss prospective sales with them.

My second purpose was to find out at first hand if our posts abroad are carrying out efficiently the task I have given them of making it as easy for a Canadian businessman to sell his products in the country in which they are serving as it is for him to do business in Canada. I find that this is being done very effectively in the five countries which I visited.

[Mr. Hees.]

My third purpose was to find out if the department in Ottawa can do a better job of backing up our trade commissioners in the important tasks they have been given to do. A number of good suggestions were made to me and these will be put into effect in the near future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I felt that the visits I made to posts abroad were very useful indeed, and I intend to make similar visits to other posts abroad just as soon as sufficient time is available.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Minister of Finance had a statement to make. If he has, I would rather reserve my comments until after he has completed his statement.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I arrived in Ottawa at a very late hour last night and I have no prepared statement. If it is the wish of the house, however, I shall be pleased to review this and other matters on which I had the privilege of representing Canada abroad during these past two and a half weeks. I understand that my estimates will perhaps be before the house today and I shall be glad indeed to deal more fully with any of these subjects at that time. However, if it is the wish of the house I shall be glad to make a statement now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Before the minister proceeds may I say I would think if there is to be discussion to any extent of the matters on which statements have been made, it would be more appropriate to deal with them on the estimates, where debate is permissible. At this time of day it is not customary to get into debate. I would think if that course commends itself to both sides it would be preferable, unless the statement is a purely factual statement which requires to be made at this time, which I take it that it is likely not to be.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I doubt that the statement is a purely factual one. In any event we on this side of the house are willing to abide by your suggestion.

First of all I wish to follow the course followed yesterday with respect to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and welcome back to the house the Minister of Finance. I should like to congratulate him at once for his decision to visit the Vatican. I think that was a commendable decision, and I should like to see others of the minister's colleagues emulate his decision. There is precedent in that the royal family have been visitors at the Holy See from time to time.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has made a statement which I shall not say was comprehensive, but which dealt with his activities at the economic commonwealth conference at Accra. We were concerned, and everyone in Canada who expressed an opinion was similarly concerned, as a result of the reports that came from Accra to the effect that not only the Minister of Finance but more particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce were lecturing the British about their own political problems. When we saw the text of the speech which the Minister of Trade and Commerce admitted yesterday was his text, a copy of which I hold in my hand, we were even more shocked to find that a Canadian minister was telling the British, in effect, that they could not stay in the commonwealth unless they did what the Canadian government told them to do.

Although the minister attempted this morning to water down what was said it is clear from this press report, prepared by Norman M. MacLeod of United Press International that Canada took the lead in ganging up in a negative and obstructive fashion against Britain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: We think this was the wrong approach.

Mr. Speaker: The course of the proceedings puts the Chair in some difficulty, because it is apparent that this is a debate. I suggest to the house that the debate be adjourned to the estimates of the Minister of Finance and be carried on there; otherwise I shall have to exercise my discretion and prescribe some limits to what is taking place.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of statements—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I speak on the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member were to be permitted to proceed in this fashion I would have to ask you to permit me to rise and contradict these misstatements categorically, Mr. Speaker, because they just do not accord with the facts of the case at Accra. There was no ganging up on the United Kingdom. That is a complete distortion of what happened at Accra.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the fact that that is the situation. If the hon. member for Laurier is permitted to continue in the way in which he is now going there will be necessity to give an opportunity to hon. members to comment on his statement, and then there would be no limit to the extent of the discussion.

This is not the period for debate. The Minister of Trade and Commerce expressed opinions and certainly they should be commented on, but I would expect that it might be more appropriately done, if the house would agree, when the house takes up the estimates of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, some comments were made by the Minister of Finance that I should like to deal with, and I think I can deal with them with the velvet glove instead of the iron fist that I am being accused of using.

If I am allowed to do so I should like to suggest to the minister that we on this side of the house think the statement he made this morning as well as the report of his speech which we have in our hands was the wrong approach. We think the approach which was adopted by the government at Accra was the wrong one. We think that rather than have proceeded in the way in which the government did there should have been a positive approach. We feel—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has made the position of his party clear, which is all that is normally permitted in the preliminary remarks, reserving the right to comment and debate further on. If the hon. member for Laurier proceeds it will not be possible to restrict the discussion. Therefore I would ask him whether he would leave it at this point.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall conclude what I have to say on the estimates of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I make a very short statement. I appreciate the opportunity to do so. I listened very carefully to the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is accepted in this house that when a member makes a denial of statements that have been credited to him the house accepts that denial, and this I am sure we all do. I think it is the general feeling of hon. members that the statement attributed to the minister would not have been a wise one to make, to say the least. However, Mr. Speaker, I think we can also go overboard in criticizing the minister for having pointed out in a very strong way the serious implications that can flow to Canada from Britain joining the common market.

I wish to say that I believe the minister was carrying out the responsible duty of a minister of the crown in pointing out in a very strong way the very serious consequences that will flow to Canada should Britain join the common market. The result could be a disastrous increase in tariffs applied affecting Canadian exports.

Canadian Disarmament Position

However, after having said that, I think it is also right to say that Canada must not be satisfied with a negative approach. We must have a positive approach toward increasing trade, toward extending the area where barriers to trade can be reduced, and we shall await with interest the minister's enunciation of these more positive proposals. We feel that Canada's role in the future must be one of association with members now in the European common market as well as with other nations in widening the areas in which trade barriers are reduced and will eventually be removed.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday President Kennedy, in his speech to the United Nations general assembly, revealed new disarmament proposals. The new plan has been submitted to the United Nations in a United States document. I want to make clear at once that it has full Canadian support, and that Canada took an active part in the preparation of these proposals. I think the house might be interested in a statement on their main features.

Throughout the summer we have been working closely with representatives of the other members of the ten nation disarmament committee to get these new proposals ready. There has been very full consultation with other members of the western alliance. The Canadian point of view was presented, and vigorously presented, in the course of those meetings, and the majority of the suggestions made by Canada are embodied in the new plan as enunciated.

These proposals meet the wishes of the average person throughout the world for a really significant measure of disarmament to be attained at the earliest possible date. As well, they underline the necessity of viewing disarmament as an uninterrupted process directed toward a definite goal.

These are factors to which great importance was attached by the commonwealth prime ministers at the meeting earlier this year. It is significant that they now find a place in the new disarmament proposals. In point of fact, the communique issued by the prime ministers' conference represented, I think, the first occasion on which all of the nations of the commonwealth joined together in one proposal and in one compendium of suggestions on this or any other matter.

The new plan, as enunciated, does not stop at pious deference to the ultimate goal of general disarmament. It provides an opportunity for undertaking immediate measures to put a stop to the arms race, to reduce the dangers of surprise attack and reverse the frightening spiral of threats to peace which now confronts the world. It is clear proof of the fact that the western nations are not out to promote empty slogans but are sincerely desirous of seeking active, concrete disarmament as soon as possible.

The most striking point of the new plan is that it provides for a large measure of disarmament at the very first stage. It would get disarmament started right away in all important areas. In that regard, I should point out that there are substantial proposals to deal with the most dangerous of modern armaments, nuclear weapons, and the means for their delivery. The production of nuclear weapons material is to be stopped at the very outset. Quantities of fissionable material from past production for military purposes are to be transferred to peaceful uses. In that connection I might point out that when I spoke at the United Nations assembly in September, 1960, that was one of the matters advanced.

In conjunction with these measures, provision is also made to stop the further spread of nuclear weapons by prohibiting any country which possesses them from relinquishing their control to countries which do not. The section in question, to which I might refer, reads as follows:

> States owning nuclear weapons shall not relinquish control of such weapons to any nation not owning them and shall not transmit to any such nation the information or material necessary for their manufacture. States not owning nuclear weapons shall not manufacture such weapons, attempt to obtain control of such weapons belonging to other states, or seek to receive information or material necessary to their manufacture.

There is also provision at the beginning of the program for the reduction of existing stocks of the major means of directing nuclear weapons to their targets, "strategic delivery vehicles" as they are called in the plan. The production and testing of specified types of these weapons are also to be limited or discontinued altogether. This provision, too, was one of those I placed before the assembly in September, 1960, when I pointed out the need of a law for outer space before the dangerous potentialities of the future would permit of the launching of war as against all mankind from outer space; and that outer space should be available to all nations, great or small, in an equal manner and should be used for peaceful purposes.

These measures suggested by the President go a long way toward removing the widespread fear that the nuclear powers are embarked on a contest which they cannot stop and which no one can win. Their importance cannot be exaggerated.

I think it is apparent that while nuclear weapons present the most frightening threat of modern times, the so-called conventional means of warfare can also cause—and have done so on more than one occasion in our lifetime—extraordinary devastation and misery.

There are provisions for significant manpower reductions, to 2.1 million men in the case of the United States and the Soviet union in the first stage. It is also provided that conventional armaments will be reduced. Further, the plan calls for limitations on the production of certain categories of conventional weapons.

There are measures designed to reduce the dangers of surprise attack or accidental war through advance notification of military manoeuvres and ground observation posts. An international commission is to be established to study further measures of this kind. The importance of these provisions is apparent in a world where a miscalculation could result in all-out war before either side has had time for second thought, sober second thought, on the subject.

A further section of the plan deals with the peaceful usage of outer space. I have already made reference to that. The plan would prohibit the stationing in outer space of weapons of mass destruction, and calls for a system of advance notification of satellite launchings so that all states will be reassured that these launchings are peaceful in intent. The Secretary of State for External Affairs on more than one occasion has advanced this and other suggestions that now find their way into the presentation of this plan.

The entire plan is to be implemented under the strictest international verification. The provisions for effective control are among the most important, because they give the assurance that is sought by all that the measures undertaken will in fact be carried out, and that all states will fully respect their obligations.

Finally, there are significant new provisions for increasing the strength and effectiveness of international machinery to keep the peace. These proposals are given prominence because it is clear that no states will be prepared to sacrifice the means by which they now provide self defence, unless there is sufficient guarantee that there will be effective arrangements by which the security of all states can be protected internationally. The new proposals look to the development of existing United Nations arrangements for keeping the peace, and call for the creation of a United Nations peace observation group which could investigate any incident anywhere in the world which would be likely to constitute a threat to the peace. In addition —and this has been the hope for 1,000 years —the creation of a genuine international force, to take place in the second stage of disarmament.

All these things constitute a broad program the goal of which is to remove all threat of war and to ensure that disputes between nations will be settled by peaceful means. After further development in stages two and three, if the plan is accepted, the only armaments and armed forces which would be retained would be those required to protect the security of individual citizens and for contributions as well to an international peace force.

I think the proposals are impressive and that, if they were accepted, they would bring about a major achievement in the field of disarmament effectively and quickly. To what extent they will prove acceptable to the Soviet union will be seen only in detailed negotiations. I think the proposals are realistic. While all of us feel a sense of encouragement with every indication of even the slightest change, I think the acceptance by the United States and the U.S.S.R. of the basic principles which underlie and guide these negotiations will be a step forward.

There are other problems which remain to be resolved. An element of co-operation on both sides can still contribute to their solution at an early date. It is an overriding obligation for everyone in our country as well as throughout the nations of the world to ensure that this challenge shall be met without further delay.

In the midst of the difficulties of the present, the fears that overhang all mankind, the proposals constitute great hope if accepted; for if the expenditures now being made in the field of armament could be applied to those talks that raise the living standards of men, we would be entering a new era in which the past would be far exceeded by the potentialities which technology permits and allows in the present.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wonder whether the Prime Minister would permit a question at this stage. It is this. Can the Prime Minister say whether the government was consulted about the third principle for disarmament put forward by the president and which reads as follows:

> Prohibiting the transfer of control over nuclear weapons to states that do not now own them.

If so, how can this be reconciled with joint control?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has continued to be in favour of a comprehensive system of disarmament which will include measures for stopping the further spread of nuclear weapons. Last year at the general assembly the Canadian representative said this:

> ... we believe that the spread of nuclear weapons to an ever increasing number of countries would pose a threat to mankind. We consider that the only satisfactory way to dispel the dangers inherent in this possibility is through international agreement on a comprehensive and carefully verified system of disarmament.

Consistent with this policy the Secretary of State for External Affairs and all Canadian representatives have worked for the recognition of the importance of including measures to prohibit the spread of these weapons as part of a disarmament program. I am glad that they form part of these new proposals.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the statement of the Prime Minister was something of a general summary of the speech of the President of the United States at the United Nations. I think peace loving people throughout the world will in general welcome the tone as well as most of the content of the speech delivered by President Kennedy. In the last few weeks, without wise counsel from important leaders of the world, the world was hell bent toward nuclear war. I think the statement of President Kennedy may bring to the councils of the world a measure of sense.

The resumption by the U.S.S.R. of nuclear tests was perhaps the greatest single blow in recent weeks to the hopes of mankind for an enduring peace. We have criticized the United States for resuming nuclear tests, but we welcome the statement of President Kennedy that cessation of nuclear tests by all nations should be agreed upon forthwith.

We welcome the statement by the Prime Minister that Canada had been consulted before these proposals were put forward by President Kennedy. It seems to me that President Kennedy, in stating that there should be no further extension of control of nuclear weapons, strengthens the opinion of those Canadians who believe that Canada should not accept nuclear weapons. We do not feel that nuclear weapons should be on Canadian soil, whether or not those weapons are under the control of Canada itself.

In recent weeks so much of the talk has been about preparation for eventual war that it seems a very satisfactory thing to hear the leader of the United States talk about peace and the terrible results of an atomic war. The world is looking to the United Nations now for leadership in the field of peace. We hope that the United Nations, as requested by President Kennedy, Canada and other nations, will appoint a secretary general who can continue the good work of the late Dag Hammarskjold.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think it might be well to have printed as an appendix to Hansard the United States declaration and program on disarmament which, as I said a moment ago, reflects the Canadian view and to which Canada made ample recommendations, many of which were accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the declaration submitted by the Prime Minister be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has he any comment to make on the story appearing in this morning's Gazette that Donald Gordon would be reappointed as head of the Canadian National Railways, and that his appointment would be announced by the Minister of Transport within the next 48 hours?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the old, old question the hon. gentleman has asked now in a different form. The answer remains the same as already given.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN WEST—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the general disappointment on the prairies arising out of the fact that the government has not announced a policy on acreage payments either in lieu of deficiency payments or as additional payments—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Argue: —in order to compensate for widespread drought, can the minister say when the government will make an announcement of policy, and whether the house will be asked to pass estimates at this time for such purposes.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had since the events of the past summer to extend my congratulations to the hon.

member for Assiniboia for the high office and the high responsibilities he has been given in the new party. I wish him well in those responsibilities.

In so far as the question is concerned, I think it is very apparent that the efforts of the government to meet the drought situation in its first stages, and second to deal with the water problems that now exist, are the main factors facing western farmers. Needless to say the question of income, in which we set an example in 1958 and 1960 and took some responsibility, is still under consideration. I think the farmers know where their friends are.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can ask the minister to clarify his answer by asking him whether this means no to western agriculture during this session. In the light of the minister's generous use of words we are entitled to an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CIVIL DEFENCE

CONFORMITY OF RECOMMENDED SHELTER WITH BUILDING CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works whether it is a fact that the shelter against radioactive elements which has been recommended for construction by the government is contrary to the national building code.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to accept that question as notice.

TELEVISION

TORONTO—REPORTED TRANSFER TO U.S. OF INTEREST IN PRIVATE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he has any information from the board of broadcast governors as to the matter of the transfer of stock in the television station in Toronto to a United States company. If so, would he inform the house?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. It has been the custom of the board to issue statements at the conclusion of hearings. I presume this will be done when they finalize the matter.

DRUGS

REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FORGED PRESCRIPTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the hon. member for Sudbury asked me if I had any comments in connection with a story in the Toronto Globe and Mail of that day which quoted reports that forged prescriptions for barbiturates had greatly increased over the past few months.

My department has been aware of irregularities in this field, and I can assure the hon. member the matter is under active investigation by police authorities. The general situation, as far as trafficking is concerned, led to the legislative action recently approved by parliament. These steps were effective as of September 15, and I have no doubt that many of the reported activities will be eliminated now that the legislation is operative.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, during my estimates on Saturday last I promised the hon. member for St. Denis that I would table some figures. At that time I said I had no objection to these figures being printed in Hansard. These are payments by the government for unemployment assistance over the past few years.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document?

Mr. Pickersgill: And have it printed in Hansard.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): At that time I said I would agree to the figures being printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the document be printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For figures referred to above, see appendix "B".]

HOUSING

UNIVERSITIES IN RECEIPT OF AND ELIGIBLE FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may put a question to the Minister of Public Works. During the course of the debate on the amendments to the housing act the minister was good enough to say that at a later date he would make available for inclusion in Hansard a list of the universities to which assistance had been given under that act, and a list of the institutions which were eligible for such assistance. I wonder if the minister would endeavour to expedite the production of that document for its inclusion in Hansard this session.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on the understanding that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is trying to expedite the prorogation of this house, I would be very happy to do that if he can give me an idea when that date will be.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

LABRADOR AND NEWFOUNDLAND—ASSISTANCE TO ESKIMOS AND INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister say what consideration is being given to providing funds to assist the Eskimos in Labrador?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, under the terms of union responsibility for the Eskimo population of Labrador fell to the province of Newfoundland. From time to time there have been suggestions whereby assistance might be rendered by the federal government. Incidentally, this also involves the Indian population of Newfoundland. I can assure the hon. member that we are giving consideration to these suggestions.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration similar to the one I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister say what consideration is being given to providing funds to assist Indians in Labrador?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has just said, the responsibility for the Indians of Labrador, like the Eskimos, under the terms of union was placed on the provincial government. Consequently theirs is the responsibility for providing services, housing, etc., for the Indian population.

However, we have received several suggestions from the provincial government of Newfoundland asking for assistance in the provision of housing accommodation for the Indians of Labrador. This matter is under consideration by the government at the present time and as soon as a decision has been reached an announcement will be made.

TRANSPORT

EASTERN NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON BUILDING OF CAR FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Trinity-Conception asked if I was in a position to say whether a decision had been reached to build a new ferry to operate from some port on Newfoundland's east coast and, if so, when construction would begin. No final decision has yet been arrived at.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF LINE TO GREAT SLAVE LAKE

The house resumed, from Monday, September 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-126 respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta and in the Northwest Territories by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near Grimshaw, in the province of Alberta, in a northerly direction to Great Slave lake, in the Northwest Territories—Mr. Balcer—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 6—Agreement required.

Mr. Pickersgill: When we adjourned last evening I had just asked the minister for certain information and he had undertaken to provide that information if possible. I am glad the Minister of Finance is here this morning, and perhaps I could have his attention; because if the Minister of Transport cannot provide this information I am perfectly sure the Minister of Finance can. Perhaps I should recall what it was I said:

> I believe we ought to have an indication other than merely the minister's expression of confidence that traffic will be available in approximately that volume. I do not necessarily refer to traffic in concentrates, but to lumber and any other commodities that might be shipped. This railway will not carry passengers, nor will it carry much package freight in an area where there is already a highway, as anyone who has had much experience of highways and railways knows. It is likely that this railway will carry only bulk cargo of one kind or another. I believe we ought to have a much harder estimate. When we resume in committee tomorrow the minister should tell us what the estimate of the cost to the treasury is based upon, including the projected rate of interest they are working on.

By the cost to the treasury I do not mean the $86 million; I mean the cost of carrying that $86 million over the period, since there is no provision in the agreement for any direct return on it.

Mr. Balcer: As I explained yesterday, this money will be paid to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund from time to time under the direction of the governor in council and upon a report of the Minister of Transport concerning the mileage of railway line constructed or to be constructed, in such amounts and in such manners and subject to such conditions, if any, as the governor in council deems expedient. There will be the same conditions, the same charges, as those applied in respect of any other subsidies paid out of consolidated revenue for any special purpose.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Minister of Finance would not have agreed to this agreement and to the introduction of this bill without having a projection over the period until 1966—during which the railway is not going to be operating, according to the prospects—of what this is going to cost the treasury. I am not talking about the $86 million itself. I am talking about the carrying charges on that sum as the money is borrowed over that period. I think before we approve this bill we ought to know what the estimate is. I realize that the actual amount will depend on how quickly the railway is built. The slower it is built the more it is going to cost, because more money will have to be provided for a longer period. I think the Minister of Finance, as the custodian of the treasury, should tell us what estimate has been made of the carrying charges up to the time the railway begins to operate in 1966.

Mr. Balcer: I think anybody will realize that if this money is to be borrowed we shall have to pay the interest in the bond market of Canada at that time. We do not know what this is going to be three years from now, for example, or at any given time. It will be whatever the market will require at that time.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the Minister of Finance what is the rate of interest which is being paid by the government now on short term borrowings?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It depends entirely on the maturity. The treasury bill rate has been remarkably low for some time now. Our own market borrowings have been in the short term field in keeping with the policy which I announced in the budget. We have not been borrowing in the long end of the market for some time. I shall be pleased, when we come to the discussion of my estimates, to deal with the question of interest rates if the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister not give some indication of what rate the government would have to pay if, say, $100 million were required?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That would depend on the time of the borrowing; it would depend on conditions at the time. It would depend on the maturity date, and on many other factors.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked the minister to tell us as of now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said that we have not been borrowing on the long end of the market for some time for the reasons I indicated in the budget speech. We have been leaving that end of the market open to the provinces and the municipalities. The maturity would be a matter for decision when the time came. I think the hon. member will not overlook the fact that this money is not all required at one particular time; it would be a matter of taking care of this additional requirement along with all the other cash requirements of the government.

Mr. Chevrier: I realize that, and if the minister had been here last night—he was not here, through no fault of his own—he would be aware that the discussion had to do with regular amounts which would have to be provided year by year until the railway was built.

I come back to the question I asked the minister last night in connection with the amount of concentrates required by the Northern Alberta Railways to amortize the capital over a period of years. The minister said he would consult with his officers to ascertain whether there had been an amount of concentrates per year required by the N.A.R. in case they should decide to build this line with their own capital.

Mr. Balcer: I understood from the discussion last night that this information was not required any longer. The hon. member for Laurier himself gave the figure; he had made the calculation. We had a rate for 215,000 tons of concentrates and he made the calculation himself based upon that figure and gave the results to the committee. I thought he was satisfied with that. If I understand him well, he wants to know what the Northern Alberta Railways figured would be the full requirement of concentrates which should be shipped on that line so as to completely amortize the total cost of the line. I am sorry, but I have not got that figure at the present time. My people can endeavour to get it, though I am not sure whether we have in the department any figure prepared by the Northern Alberta Railway Company with regard to such a requirement.

Mr. Chevrier: I put the question to the minister, as reported at page 8896 of Hansard, as follows:

> Would it not then require, to amortize everything, something in the neighbourhood of 800,000 or 900,000 tons of concentrates per year over a period of 25 years, not 10 years?

The minister replied:

> Tha is quite possible. I know that the economists in my department have worked out all these figures, but I have not got them with me. I do not disagree with the hon. member, but what I wish to say is that this line is not being built exclusively for one mine.

Later on, as reported at page 8897, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said:

> In a qualified way the minister assented to the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Laurier that it would be 800,000 or 900,000 tons instead of the 215,000, which is over four times what they are being asked for over a period of years.

I cannot readily locate it in Hansard, but I understood the minister to say that he would check with his officers to find out whether that was correct. The minister now says he could obtain those figures at a later date. I would appreciate it if he would secure them before the conclusion of this discussion.

Mr. Balcer: I have just received information from my officials. If all the traffic from Pine Point were to consist of concentrates a volume of approximately 800,000 tons would be required to amortize the capital cost. What the hon. member for Laurier seems to forget is that there would be concentrates other than from Pine Point. This does not take into account the traffic moving into Pine Point mines including equipment, supplies and other things, nor does it take into account commercial fishing at Great Slave lake which will be transported on this line, together with other commodities such as lumber and agricultural produce.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the note which the minister received say anything about the length of time required? The minister will remember that the agreement extends for only ten years. My suggestion was that when worked out mathematically it would take between 800,000 and 900,000 tons over a period of 25 years. That is four times greater so far as the volume is concerned, and two and a half times greater so far as the time is concerned. Has the minister any information as to the length of the term of the agreement?

Mr. Balcer: I agree with my hon. friend that approximately 800,000 or 900,000 tons will be required over a period of 25 years if we ship on that line exclusively concentrates from Pine Point.

Mr. Chevrier: That is fine. I thank the minister. I did not hear him refer to the period of 25 years.

I wish now to follow up another point raised by my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in connection with the demand for concentrates over the period of time mentioned in the agreement. Mr. D. F. Purves who appeared as a witness before the standing committee on Thursday, September 21, 1961, as reported at page 258 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, when referring to the assurance of a continuing market for concentrates, said:

> We do not have any assurance in that regard, but we do have the other assurance with which we primarily are concerned. That is, the company will ship 215,000 tons per year or pay a penalty.

The question that arises is this. Did the government make any survey of the future of these concentrates? From the evidence it would appear that both the C.N.R. and the government took the position of saying that they did not have to worry about that because that is the problem of Cominco, and that if they were willing to enter into an agreement that was no concern of the government or the C.N.R. That is the impression I received from the testimony of the witness, Mr. Purves, and also from what the minister said.

As the committee knows, there is a drive on in the United States congress to raise tariffs and also to impose quotas upon lead and zinc. The question that comes to mind is this. Suppose the decision with respect to lead and zinc is similar to that in relation to uranium. What steps has the government taken, either through an analysis by an interdepartmental committee or a study made by its economists and experts, to ascertain the future of lead and zinc tariffs? This is not a matter involving a few million dollars but perhaps $100 million. I wish to be enlightened on that point if the minister is able to assist me.

Mr. Balcer: The experts and economists in my department who dealt with this agreement reached the conclusion that the special guarantee from Pine Point and Cominco of a shipment of 215,000 tons a year for a period of ten years was a good guarantee as far as the government is concerned. As the agreement states, if in any year Pine Point produces and ships less than 215,000 tons, the mine will have to pay $7.75 for each ton it fails to produce.

According to the experts in my department who are well versed in questions involving tariffs, the building of railways and the drafting of agreements between the government and railways, this is a fair guarantee in the circumstances. The mine will spend $21 million to build a plant at Pine Point, and Cominco will spend $16 million to enlarge its smelter at Trail. We feel that these two companies are taking a risk. We feel that if they produce at that rate for ten years there is no reason to believe that immediately after that period the traffic will drop off. I think the agreement for ten years is a fair agreement. This is the agreement that is usually concluded in the trade with respect to the period of time and the amount of concentrates.

Mr. Chevrier: In his statement the minister said this was a fair risk, and he has now repeated that comment in another form by saying it is a fair agreement. Is that as far as the minister will go in qualifying the financial soundness of this agreement?

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, if we take into account the general situation it will be seen to be a very good agreement. I think it is a calculated risk, and that the people of Canada will appreciate that the government has entered into this venture.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to make one or two observations based upon the minister's disclosure this morning that in order to cover not merely the maintenance and operating cost but also the amortization of the capital this railway would require to ship approximately 800,000 tons of concentrates a year.

Mr. Balcer: If there were no other shippers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I will give the condition. I understand that this calculation is based on there being no other traffic. This is a good hard measure—it may not be accurate, of course; it is an estimate, and we recognize that—of the amount of traffic in one form or another that this railway will have to get in order to give a return to the people of Canada. Even though the treasury will not get the capital back directly, presumably it will get it back in indirect benefits through taxation and through reduction of the deficit of the C.N.R., and in that sort of way.

Mr. Balcer: I am sorry; I do not like my hon. friend to be under the wrong impression. It is the amount that would be derived from the shipment of 800,000 tons of concentrates that would completely amortize the $86 million. It is not the taxation, salaries and things of that sort. It would be strictly the amounts paid by the company—

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that perfectly. There is no provision in the agreement indicating that it would ever come back to the treasury directly if 800,000 tons were shipped. The only way it could get back to the treasury is through the profits of the C.N.R. or incidentally in an even more indirect way through increased business producing increased revenues, which is a proper consideration. I do not object to it at all. I think we would never develop this country if on every expenditure we said we have to get the return directly. I have never argued that, and no one on this side has ever argued that, but we feel we must be shown there is either a direct or an indirect return. Therefore we really need a very hard assurance that in a reasonable period of time there is going to be traffic of this volume on this railway, or it is not going to make a return. In other words, we have a measuring stick now to measure this proposition in hard terms, namely 800,000 tons of concentrates or its equivalent in other forms of traffic.

Last night the hon. member for Peace River in a rather persuasive intervention—and one understands the incentives to persuasion in the case of the hon. member—sought to show what other traffic there would be on this railway in addition to the concentrates.

Mr. Pugh: At what page of Hansard?

Mr. Pickersgill: At page 8890. He quoted from the report of the mining commission. I have had a chance this morning to look at the case made by the hon. member for Peace River. He quoted from Mr. Anderson-Thomson, whose qualifications he described very flatteringly. I have never met him and I have no reason to believe he is wrong. In fact in most matters not connected with his riding I would accept the words of the hon. member for Peace River without much question, and I would accept his word about any facts at any time; but when it comes to accepting his opinions, that is another matter.

Mr. Pugh: I bet it is mutual.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I hope it is mutual. I would not expect the hon. member to accept my opinion, but I would expect him to accept my word on a matter of fact, and I am sure he would.

The hon. gentleman quoted testimony to the effect that from the potential agricultural traffic both the C.N.R. and C.P.R. can expect an addition to their gross revenues of $2 million per annum; not immediately, of course, but over a period of years that would be a reasonable period of calculating by a businessman. I take it that is what the hon.

member meant. I am seeking to make this case in the best possible way, because I want to be fair.

The hon. member then referred to lumber. He said there would be a total yearly revenue—this is not a quotation, and I hope the hon. member will listen very carefully because I want to be sure I am correctly stating the implication of what he said. Perhaps I had better read what he did say:

> He indicates that if the total potential of the annual allowable cut is developed, and I do not anticipate that this will happen at once, of course, there will be a total yearly revenue to the two railway companies of $3,600,000.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman meant gross revenue to both railways, but I assume that since the only other figure was gross revenue to both railways, these are gross revenues. They are not profits; indeed, it is a nice question whether they would ever enter into the realm of profits at all. I feel that approximately $5.5 million of gross revenues from the only other two immediate sources in prospect—and that is not right away, and it is not just to this line mind you, but to the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific all over the country—does not go very far to fill the gap between the 215,000 tons of concentrates and 800,000 tons of concentrates which the minister has indicated his officials consider are really necessary to make this a self-supporting undertaking.

This really points up what we were trying to get, that is precise and hard information that is wanted by my hon. friend from Laurier and me and others who joined with us. This is the point we were trying to make last night, that we should have more than a gleam in the ministers' eye. We should see a probability, not this year, not next year, but a probability, not a possibility, of traffic of this magnitude in order to justify this operation.

Mr. Baldwin: I calculated last night that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would in all probability make an estimate of the statements I had made. I will not say I did it deliberately, but I left out two other prospects for traffic which I now bring to the attention of the committee. If the hon. member will read page 86 of the report of the commission to which I referred him last night he will find that in addition to the lumber there is a potential of traffic generated by pulp which would be available from this area. I think the hon. gentleman can see that in due course this potential would justify six pulp mills producing 200 tons a day, which would bring about a yearly traffic of $12 million.

I think the hon. member will see on the same page that in addition, once you get to the stage where you have this amount of business generated you are bound to find that more people will be in the area. There will then be incoming traffic of manufactured and processed goods, the long haul type of carriage, from the central and eastern parts of the continent. As I understand the formula which has been worked out, the profit pattern of railway transportation indicates that manufactured and processed goods of that nature always yield the highest revenue. Therefore when you ship out $5 million to $10 million worth of goods from this area you are bound to have a situation where substantial traffic in processed goods, probably equivalent to the same amount of money, will be shipped in yielding that much revenue to the railways.

This, I think, answers the point raised by the hon. member for Laurier, that this is not the kind of railway where you have to wait until the last tie is laid and the last spike driven before there will be revenue. Once this line has been laid and completed for a distance of 75 miles—and I refer to 75 miles from the south, because I am assuming that is where construction will start—substantial traffic will immediately be generated. I think the cost will be very much less than the average of $170,000 a mile. There will then be railway traffic available on the first 75 miles, and the cost of the construction of that mileage will probably be less than $10 million. In the ensuing years there will be more construction and more traffic generated, both incoming and outgoing. All these are things which hon. members have not taken into account in their calculations.

I should like to refer hon. members to the report of the Gordon commission and the Paley report which, it will be recalled, was a report delivered some years ago to the president of the United States. This report was based on careful calculations of the indicated material requirements of the North American continent. The Paley report coincides pretty well with the Gordon report. They say it is inevitable that over the course of the next 15 to 25 years there will be required of Canada substantial quantities of these lead and zinc concentrates. Mr. Fitzpatrick, the president of Cominco, in a speech he made early this spring in Edmonton, said that in his opinion the opening up of Pine Point would probably lead to the development of the mine and the shipment of concentrates for a greater period than 25 years. This is the statement of a responsible man and indicates the premise on which his company is prepared to expend almost $40 million. Surely, Mr. Chairman, if there are indications of substantial traffic for a greater period than 25 years, this should be an answer to the very pertinent questions which have been asked.

Mr. Robichaud: Last evening and earlier today we heard statements from the Minister of Transport in an attempt to justify the spending of $66 million of the taxpayers' money for the construction of a railway which could lead to the development of mineral deposits in the far north. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that in 1956 the Canadian National built 16 miles of railway in northern New Brunswick under similar, but probably much more favourable circumstances. This railway has been used rarely, I think only for the official opening ceremonies.

We have in New Brunswick, in populated and inhabited areas, from 12 to 20 miles from deep-sea ports, over 10 million tons of mineral deposits which are awaiting development. A small portion of this amount could be spent to much better advantage to the taxpayers of this country if the government would, by means of tax incentives or other provisions, stimulate the development of the deposits that are located in these populated areas. Here we are considering the construction of a railway from 500 to 600 miles long which goes almost nowhere, leading to mineral deposits, and those concentrates will have to be transported about 1,000 miles or more before they can be processed.

I repeat that we have right in northeastern New Brunswick 100 million tons of mineral deposits which are idle now, awaiting more advantageous market facilities. I suggest to the minister, therefore, that serious consideration should be given to the provision of facilities for existing mines in areas to which access is easier.

Mr. Chevrier: There are two questions that I do not think have been cleared up to my satisfaction. One of them has to do with the traffic from the various points. I think it is quite clear that from Great Slave lake to Grimshaw, a distance of 438 miles, that is traffic which would belong to the new line; from Grimshaw to Edmonton over the N.A.R., 325 miles, the traffic is divided equally between the two railways; from Edmonton to Calgary, 233 miles, the traffic moves over Canadian National; from Calgary to Tadanac, 460 miles, the traffic moves over the Canadian Pacific. I do not believe it has ever been stated how the traffic will move from the various points to British Columbia ports. There are several lines, as the minister knows. There is the national transcontinental, there is the P.G.E. and there is the Canadian Pacific. What is the division of traffic in so far as the various British Columbia ports are concerned?

Mr. Balcer: My information is that it will be 50-50 between the two railways.

Mr. Chevrier: The other question that came to my mind was this. Have the provincial interests been approached at all in connection with the cost of this railway? By that I mean that sometimes when arrangements are not satisfactory to Canadian National Railways, in the financial sense, in connection with a railway of this nature, namely of a developmental character, the provincial authorities are approached to ascertain whether or not they would be willing, because of the natural resource development which will ensue in their province, to contribute a subsidy toward the construction of the line. Were the provincial interests involved here approached in that respect?

Mr. Balcer: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to refer to the first question raised by the hon. member for Laurier, the division of traffic to British Columbia ports. I was not a member of the committee, so I was not able to ask this question during the committee proceedings. I presume the reference here is to concentrates which would be shipped not to Trail or Tadanac but to British Columbia ports for export, presumably from Edmonton. I presume there would be no choice of route up to Grimshaw, and there would be no choice beyond Grimshaw unless a line were built to the P.G.E. Presumably the agreement says the concentrates will be shipped from Edmonton; I read the agreement once and I think it said something about a fair distribution or something of that sort. I must say that my opinion of what a fair distribution would be, having regard to the fact that the taxpayers are putting up all the money to build the railway, would be 100 per cent to the Canadian National Railways. If the taxpayers are going to put up this money, and if the only way we can get back a return on our capital is directly through a Canadian National surplus, I do not see why any traffic should go via the Canadian Pacific where there is a Canadian National line.

There is no Canadian National line between Calgary and Trail, so that traffic has to go by the Canadian Pacific. However, a firm undertaking seems to have been given that the Canadian National will get the traffic between Edmonton and Calgary. During the sessions of the committee on railways air lines and shipping I asked Mr. Gordon a question about this traffic, and I am hoping that my intervention may have had some influence in making sure this traffic did go by Canadian National.

I have nothing against the Canadian Pacific; far from it. However, I see no good reason, if the taxpayers are going to put up the capital to generate this traffic, why the Canadian National should not get all the traffic everywhere it has a line. It seems to me this is one respect in which the government should insist upon this agreement being renegotiated in the interest of the taxpayers.

I assume that most of these concentrates will go to Trail. However, there may be an export market for concentrates beyond our smelting capacity in Canada. I suppose the government hopes there will be such a market or, at any rate, at some stage there is going to be more traffic. Surely we ought to make absolutely sure that all this traffic the C.N.R. can handle goes to the C.N.R.

It seems to me that this is a very serious defect in the agreement. If the C.P.R. were putting anything into this project, it would be another matter. However, they are not putting a plugged nickel into it. There is therefore no earthly reason why the C.N.R., if it has the capacity to do so, should not carry the traffic. I wonder whether the minister would comment on that aspect.

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, the fact is that from Pine Point to Grimshaw it will be all C.N.R. We all agree on that. On the N.A.R.—this is a jointly operated railway and there is nothing we can do about it—it has to go by N.A.R. From Edmonton to Calgary the situation is this. I can tell my hon. friend that there was a very substantial discussion that was carried on for a long time among the various parties to the agreement, and finally the government and the C.N.R. obtained agreement that all traffic between Edmonton and Calgary would be carried on the C.N.R. line which, by the way, is longer than the C.P.R. line to the same points.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not much. The rates are the same.

Mr. Balcer: That is a great departure from any usual practice in the circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is rather too bad that I did not ask Mr. Gordon another question in the committee last July. We might have obtained some arrangement between Edmonton and the coast. However, I think the minister ought to look at this matter again. After all, as my friend the hon. member for Laurier pointed out last night, the C.N.R.'s immediate concern is merely to cover its cost of maintenance and operation. The C.N.R. has no obligation to get any return on the capital. They do the best they can, no doubt.

After all, however, this is a pretty good deal for the C.P.R. and its creatures Cominco and Pine Point mines. We should not lose sight of the fact that between $66 million and $86 million of the taxpayers' money is going to be used for the immediate purpose of making a property owned largely by the C.P.R. a mine instead of a prospect. That is a fairly big plum for the C.P.R. If the taxpayers are going to do that, surely every ounce of traffic the C.N.R. can carry should go to the C.N.R.

Mr. Balcer: That is exactly what happens.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is not what happens. As far as traffic going to Trail is concerned that is what happens, but as far as traffic going from Edmonton to the Pacific coast is concerned, the minister told us it was to be divided 50-50 between the two railways. The C.N.R. has a railway that is, of course, a great deal better because the C.N.R. goes direct from Edmonton through Yellowhead pass. For the C.P.R. to carry this traffic it will have to go to Calgary through the Kicking Horse pass or away down through the Crowsnest pass. So in common sense there is no reason why any traffic going from Edmonton to the coast should go on any other railway than the C.N.R. I think the government should insist on this stipulation.

Mr. Balcer: I should not like to have given the committee the wrong information. I am not quite sure with regard to these concentrates for export. All I can say is that the C.N.R. are extremely pleased with the situation between Edmonton and the coast and believe they have a very favourable arrangement. Unfortunately, however, I cannot spell out what the agreement is as far as that part of the traffic is concerned. I know, for instance, that in the middle of the fight for the traffic between Edmonton and Calgary the C.N.R. were extremely keen on getting every possible bit of advantage as far as traffic was concerned, and they were pleased at the situation as far as the traffic between Edmonton and the west coast is concerned. I should not like to leave the committee with the wrong impression that the C.N.R. have given up any of its part of the shipments, as they were extremely pleased with the arrangement.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister to explain paragraph (a) of clause 6? It deals with the responsibilities and obligations of Pine Point mines. From this provision it would appear that the payments do not begin until 1966, and also that there may not be an obligation on their part to pay the full amount of $20 million. Will the minister explain the subclause and also comment on the two points I have raised?

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier in this debate, what is meant by subclause (a) is that in addition to $7.75 per ton, the mining company will also pay a special transportation charge based on the value of the concentrates shipped, starting three years after the commencement of production and extending for 10 years. This will not exceed $2 million in any year and $20 million over the whole 10 year period. At the anticipated rate of production and at average lead and zinc prices prevailing during the period 1951 to 1960, this contribution would aggregate $12,500,000 over the ten years. This amount is to be payable to the railway which in turn will pay it to the government. It constitutes a capital contribution by the mining company toward the building of the line.

Mr. Chevrier: Is this special transportation charge the minister speaks of the one referred to in schedule B of the agreement?

Mr. Balcer: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: If you look at that schedule, you will find that if the value of the ore or concentrate goes below $64 they do not pay anything. Is that right?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister's figure of $12 million based on ore at $80 per ton or on ore at $70 per ton, or on a price between the two?

Mr. Balcer: As I said, the $12,500,000 would be the contribution of the company if we were basing the payments on the average lead and zinc prices prevailing during the period 1951 to 1960. If I am not mistaken this average price is about $90. I am not too sure on that point, but my impression is that the average price prevailing from 1951 to 1960 is about $90.

Mr. Chevrier: This clause states that the payments to Her Majesty shall not exceed $20 million. However, in referring to schedule B of the agreement the minister has now indicated that the special transportation charge, which I take it is the charge referred to in subclause (a), will bring in roughly speaking, based on the average price between 1951 and 1960, approximately $12.5 million. Where is the other $8 million or so going to come from?

Mr. Balcer: That is the point. The agreement is that this figure will fluctuate with the price of lead and zinc. Of course if lead and zinc reach a very high price it will make quite a difference to what the company has to pay. The company had no interest in paying this, but after long discussion they agreed to pay it as their share in the building of this line. It is a capital contribution, and we have agreed to a limit of $20 million. I think this is quite fair, if the average price for nine years produces $12.5 million—I would imagine that for the next ten years we cannot expect to go too fast—and if the price increases by that amount, so much the better. But we had to put a certain limit on it, and we thought in fairness to all the parties $20 million would be a fair limit.

Mr. Chevrier: Am I being fair in the interpretation of this agreement when I say that should the price of the concentrates go below $64, under this clause no money will be payable to Her Majesty as a special transportation charge?

Mr. Balcer: That is quite right.

Mr. Chevrier: Then if the price is between $70 and $80, which was the average price between 1951 and 1960, the government, Her Majesty, will receive in the neighbourhood of $12 million?

Mr. Balcer: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: Finally, am I fair in saying that this might well be the full amount which Her Majesty will receive, and not the $20 million?

Mr. Balcer: Definitely.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister whether the officers of the Department of Finance and treasury board scrutinized this agreement. The minister tells us that on the basis of the last ten years this clause would produce $12.5 million, yet parliament is given the impression that it is going to produce $20 million. Is that the measure of the inflation the Minister of Finance is expecting over the decade after this bill comes into operation? Because if it is, that is a frightening prospect indeed and is very different from what he said in his budget speech and speeches made elsewhere.

It seems to me that either the government have been trying to pull the wool over our eyes by putting in this $20 million when there is no real prospect of deriving much more than $12 million or $13 million, or they are expecting a staggering inflation over a short period, relatively speaking, as these things go. Of course if there is a staggering inflation of that description we will not be getting back the dollars we are putting into this, but dollars that are worth a great deal less. On the other hand, as the hon. member for Laurier pointed out, if rather than staggering inflation we have a fall in the price of lead and zinc, which might easily happen if some of these protectionists in the United States have their way, we might get $8 million, $6 million or anything down to zero out of this.

When the minister talks about this being fair, it certainly does not seem to me that it is very fair to the taxpayers. This is by way of comment. However, I should like to put a question to the minister. I have read the agreement through once. I am not a lawyer. The minister is, and he can perhaps put me straight on this. There is a provision that the first charge on this special transportation fund is not the replacement of capital, but is to make good any deficiency in revenues to the C.N.R. That is to say, if less than 215,000 tons are shipped in any year, the special transportation charge goes first of all to the C.N.R. to make up this deficiency, and the crown only gets what is left over, if anything. Is that correct?

Mr. Balcer: If there is a deficiency under 215,000 tons.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there any provision for making up that deficiency in the succeeding year, or does the taxpayer just lose it for good and all?

Mr. Balcer: There is a rider clause there. If the mine ships less than 215,000 tons they pay a fine of $7.75 a ton on the difference. If it ships more than that, this is set aside in reserve to meet the deficiency of the next year, if there is a deficiency. I do not think the Canadian taxpayer stands to lose anything. I am not quite sure whether I understood the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is very complicated. I know I do not understand this agreement; I say that to the minister at once. However, I do not think anybody should let this bill pass until we do understand it, even the more stupid of us.

Mr. Churchill: We will never pass it if we have to wait for you.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know, but the hon. gentleman will find it is probably just as well to wait in some of these cases. By waiting, a great many mistakes have been avoided in the past. It looks as though there is a real opportunity to avoid one right now. What I am trying to get at is this. If there is less than 215,000 tons shipped in any one year during the operation of this agreement, this money—what I call the $20 million—will not go to the crown; it will go instead to the C.N.R. to make up for the loss in freight. Is there any way of ever getting that back? Is this debited against the company and do they have to make it up the next year, or does it mean there is that much more lost to the treasury? Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister would like to consult his officials on this matter.

Mr. Balcer: I will have to do that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister would at the same time ask his officials, so he can tell us at 2.30, precisely what the arrangement is between the two railways regarding traffic between Edmonton and the Pacific coast.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. At the time of our adjournment at one o'clock the minister said he would give us an answer to two questions at 2.30. One concerned the arrangements made for traffic beyond Edmonton which would go to the Pacific coast, or anywhere else for that matter, rather than to Trail. The other question was set out in a statement in which I defined the matter carefully and at length, and perhaps the minister would just as soon define it himself this time.

Mr. Balcer: In answer to the first question, any traffic in concentrates out of the Pine Point mine only which goes to the west coast for export will be divided on the basis of 50-50 when it leaves Edmonton. All other traffic will be controlled by the C.N.R.

The second question asked by the hon. member related to subclause (b) of clause 6. First of all, I must say that the mine will be organized to produce a minimum of 215,000 tons annually, and it is expected there will be no deficiency. The whole agreement is based upon that. The whole undertaking among the various parties concerned is based upon the assumption that a deficit is not to be expected. However, if there should be a deficit in any particular year, the first money drawn upon is the credit which the mining company may build up through shipping more than 215,000 tons in one year. If there is still a deficit, the money deriving from the special transportation charge is drawn upon, and should there still remain a deficit the Pine Point mine has to meet the remainder at $7.75 per ton. There is also a provision that the credit built up by the mining company shipping more than 215,000 tons a year would go to repay, first, the amount of money needed to meet a deficit by the mining company and, second, to repay the government for any money drawn from the special transportation charge account. Third, it would be used to repay the mining company for any of the deficits to which it might have contributed at $7.75 a ton.

Mr. Chevrier: Dealing with clause 6, subclause (b), I understand this to mean three things; first, a guarantee to the C.N.R. by the mine; next, a guarantee to Her Majesty by the company of the traffic volume; third, a guarantee by Her Majesty to the railway to the extent of the payments referred to in paragraph (a). That is my understanding of the breakdown of paragraph (b) of clause 6. I ask the minister now if this means that the payments received by Her Majesty under paragraph (a) will be transferred to the C.N.R.

Mr. Balcer: No, only if there is a deficiency in one year and the deficiency cannot be met from the surplus accumulated in the previous year. If that is the case Pine Point railway can use the money—the special transportation charge—in the first instance and, second, the mine would have to start paying $7.75 per ton, as I explained previously.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the meaning of the following language in the first part of paragraph (b):

(b) a guarantee to the company by Pine Point Mines Limited, and, to the extent of the payments referred to in paragraph (a), by Her Majesty—

Mr. Balcer: That is it.

Mr. Chevrier: Does that mean that Her Majesty guarantees the C.N.R. to the extent of the payments it receives from Pine Point Mines?

Mr. Balcer: That is what I have explained. There are two guarantees given to the C.N.R. First there is a guarantee by Pine Point Mines and, second, a guarantee by the government. Everything that Pine Point Mines ships over 215,000 tons will be paid to the C.N.R. It will be a reserve. If in succeeding years there is a year in which there is a deficiency, the money that has been paid to the C.N.R. will be used to meet the deficiency. If there is still a deficiency in that year the balance will be paid by Pine Point to the government as a special charge. This special charge will be paid to the C.N.R. Third, if all this is not enough, Pine Point will have to pay a minimum of $7.75 a ton for every ton that is not shipped on the line.

Mr. Chevrier: From what has been said do I understand that if the traffic falls short of 215,000 tons per year the government then might well have to put up the money to cover the operating and maintenance charges of the C.N.R.? As I understood the evidence in the committee, the C.N.R. wanted to make sure of one thing, namely that it had sufficient traffic at a fixed freight rate to guarantee the operating and maintenance costs of the line. That was clearly explained in the committee and I believe is understood. If the traffic in this movement of cencentrates is not sufficient to pay the operating and maintenance charges of the line, the government under this clause will have to put up the money to cover the operating and maintenance charges of the C.N.R. Is that correct?

Mr. Balcer: Only up to the amount the government will receive from Pine Point on these special transportation charges I mentioned earlier. If the charge is not enough to meet the deficiency, then Pine Point railway will have to pay $7.75 for each ton shortage under 215,000 tons.

Mr. Chevrier: Might a contingency arise under this clause wherein the government would have to put up the operating and maintenance charges over and above the capital investment?

Mr. Balcer: No, this cannot happen. As I explained earlier, the only thing the government could be called upon to pay is what the government has received from the mine as a special transportation charge. That would be the limit. Over and above that, payment would be made by Pine Point Mines.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to say respectfully to the minister that that is not the way I interpret paragraph (b), which I shall place on the record again:

(b) a guarantee to the company by Pine Point Mines Limited, and, to the extent of the payments referred to in paragraph (a)—

That is the $20 million. I continue:

—by Her Majesty—

That is a guarantee by Her Majesty. I continue:

—of such traffic volume over the railway line as will, in the opinion of the company, be sufficient to ensure recovery of the cost of operating and maintaining the railway line—

In my opinion that language means that if there is not enough to be derived from the special transportation charge the government will have to pay the operating and maintenance charges of the C.N.R.

Mr. Balcer: I am sorry, but my hon. friend is under the wrong impression. In this paragraph there are two guarantees. The first is a guarantee by Pine Point Mines to the C.N.R., and the second is a guarantee by the government to the C.N.R. The agreement outlines in detail what the guarantee is from both sources, the mine and the government. As I explained earlier, it is set out in the agreement. First, the deficiency is met by drawing on the surplus of the previous year, if there is a surplus and if it is large enough to meet the deficit. If a surplus does not exist or if it is not large enough, the government is called upon to draw on the special transportation charge that has been paid by Pine Point, and if that is not enough the government does not have to pay one cent more. What is paid in addition to that will be paid by Pine Point Mines.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to put a case which no one expects will arise—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to follow the precise point dealt with by the minister.

Mr. Baldwin: I also wish to do so, if the hon. member will bear with me. I wish to put a simple question to the minister. Under this paragraph there is recourse to the government, but there can be recourse to the government only to the extent of the special transportation fund which has built up. The railway may have an opportunity to draw upon the amount which is refered to in section 3 of the agreement, which is the revenue received by the railway from the industry and its suppliers applicable to the carriage of freight and merchandise other than ore, and also the revenue received by the railway from other mining companies applicable to the carriage of all types of ore and concentrates. Only if those two sources are exhausted will there be recourse to the amount of the special transportation fund which has been built up. Is that not correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has simply said in other words what the minister has already stated. I wish to put to the minister what I might describe as an extreme situation, and I shall do so whenever I have the minister's full attention. The extreme situation I wish to present is this. Suppose the mine does not operate at all. In that case there will be no special transportation charge, because it arises out of the price of the concentrate and its volume. In those circumstances there will be no traffic if the mine does not operate during the 12 month period. The minister had better not say this is theoretical because it was not theoretical in New Brunswick, which is a great deal nearer the markets than this other place. In that case is the company obliged none the less to pay to the C.N.R. the amount of money realized by multiplying 215,000 tons by $7.75 a ton in that year.

Mr. Balcer: Exactly.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is absolutely clear?

Mr. Balcer: Absolutely clear.

Mr. Pickersgill: If there is no production at all the company is still obliged to pay 215,000 times $7.75?

Mr. Balcer: Unless there is an accumulated surplus from the previous year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite. I want to put another question to the minister. In his explanation of this very complex matter the minister did indicate that if in a 12 month period there was somewhat less than 215,000 tons shipped and there was no surplus from any previous year, the next way of meeting the deficiency of the C.N.R. would be from this special transportation fund. Suppose that happens in the very first year, is that an airtight compartment, that first year, or does the special transportation fund recover in the second year what is used by the C.N.R. instead of the crown for the first year?

Mr. Balcer: I am not too sure that I understand my hon. friend's question correctly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let me put it arithmetically.

Mr. Balcer: I think I can clear it up by stating that the special transportation charge is the charge that will be paid by the company over a period of ten years, beginning in the third year after the start of the operation. With respect to anything that is shipped during the ten years, whether it is surplus or deficiency, at the end of ten years the government will make up the total and a special charge will have to be paid, or a special contribution charge will have to be made, by the company as a contribution to the capital of the line.

Mr. Pickersgill: Suppose—this might happen, sir—there is a deficiency every year in the whole ten year period so that in every year some of the special transportation charge which in the normal course is supposed to go to reduce the capital cost has to be used for operating and maintenance. At the end of the ten year period, as I see it, the agreement is over; whatever part of this fund has had to be used to meet those deficiencies, the crown loses.

Mr. Balcer: If there is no money from the special transportation charge it is estimated that the cost of the line will be $86 million.

But if a special transportation charge has to be paid by Pine Point and it is not drawn upon too heavily by the deficiency that we are talking about, then it will be $86 million less what is left in the special transportation charge.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the minister did seem to suggest at one stage that if this fund needed to be drawn upon in one year there was some way of recovering that amount in a subsequent year. Would the minister explain how it is done?

Mr. Balcer: Yes. First of all, it will be the reverse operation. I am getting all mixed up now; it goes backward. First of all, it is the amount of money contributed to meet a deficiency by the mining company. That will revert to the government. Second, it will be repaid to the government for any money drawn from this transportation charge. Third, it will be a repayment to the mining company. I am not quite clear there.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I can give a hypothetical illustration to the minister, that would perhaps clarify the matter. This is very important. Suppose during the first year—I take the first year so there will not be any complications about what was done before—instead of being able to ship 215,000 tons they are 30,000 tons short and ship only a 185,000 tons. They will have to draw on the fund. Suppose the price of concentrates is fairly good and they have quite a lot in the special fund. They will draw on the fund 30,000 times $7.75 to make up this deficiency. Well, if in the next year they are able to ship 245,000 tons, would they pay freight at $7.75 on that 245,000 tons, and would the extra money go back into the special fund? Is that how it operates? I am trying to assist the minister.

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to be sure about this.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, this matter becomes more and more confusing. We actually started this debate at around eight o'clock last night and we are still on it. I should like to ask the minister just one question. In view of the bill and the contractual agreement among the government and other parties, in order to simplify the entire situation, why was this not considered by the government as a straight capital expansion of the Canadian National Railways and dealt with as such, with an agreement that certain money would come back to the government because of the help it was going to give Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company through the medium of the Pine Point railway. Would it not have been a lot easier to deal with this thing as a straight capital expansion of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the reason the bill is based on such an agreement and that we did not take the very simple way mentioned by my hon. friend is precisely that the government wanted Pine Point Mines and Cominco to come into the picture and guarantee a minimum tonnage to be shipped from this mine every year. We also wanted this mine to contribute to the operation, the maintenance, and part of the capitalization of this railroad.

Mr. Winch: What the minister is saying now is that if this had been made a straight capital expenditure by the C.N.R. we could not have made that kind of arrangement with the Pine Point corporation.

Mr. Balcer: It could have been done. The C.N.R. is a crown company. It still would have been the Canadian taxpayer who in the long run would have been called upon to pay the capital cost.

Mr. Winch: They are stuck no matter how you do it.

Mr. Balcer: Yes. To reply to this matter of the taxpayer being stuck, I think it is quite proper to read from the brief presented to the Gordon commission, by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories as follows:

> A railway to Great Slave lake will not be just another railway. It is not a railway to a lake or to open a mine or to serve a community. A railway to Great Slave lake will be one of the great development railroads of the country. It will not bring population to the Northwest Territories to the same extent that the western railroads brought it to the prairies, but it may well bring in the years ahead of comparable increase in the wealth of Canada. This railway is quite different from most of the branch lines constructed in recent years which were destined to serve one mine, or a group of mines; its purpose is to open up a whole new region. The fact that there happens to be a potential mine of great value at its northern terminus is a piece of great good fortune, for it will enable this railroad to be built without the long wait for reasonable returns which so often has been the lot of a pioneer railroad.

I quite realize that the Pine Point mine will not pay the whole capital cost of the railway or for the operation of this railway. On the other hand, the Pine Point mine will make a very large contribution to the cost of operation and maintenance of this railway and will contribute, as well, to the capital cost of this line. I sincerely believe, therefore, that, using the arguments that have been put forward by Mr. Robertson, this is a railroad that is completely different from the other railroads that have been built in the past, or from the branch lines we are building, like the Mattagami line. The government will not be called upon to pay one cent for the Mattagami line because that railway is being built to serve one mine. Of course it is a much shorter line, too. This railway is a long one, and I think when you consider all the potentialities of the area we are justified in building it. We are fortunate that at the end of this line there happen to be deposits of lead and zinc which can be called upon to contribute to the cost of this undertaking.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it not a fact, notwithstanding what the minister said and in answer to a question which was addressed by the hon. member for Vancouver East, that the Canadian National Railways were not interested in making the kind of agreement that is set out here, or in making the kind of agreement which they made in the case of the Mattagami railway? If the Canadian taxpayers were not part and parcel of this agreement the Canadian National Railways would never have gone along with it, because they do not think it is a profitable venture.

Mr. Balcer: I agree with that entirely.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): The observations I have to make in connection with the bill now before the committee are brought about by the observations made by the hon. member for Gloucester this morning in connection with ore bodies of a similar nature to the ore body at Pine Point which exist in the northern part of New Brunswick. He mentioned that there were about 100 million tons in the two ore bodies in his own county. I would take exception to his estimate of the quantity, because I think it is much more than 100 million tons. As I recall, there are various ore bodies running into much larger quantities than those mentioned by the hon. member for Gloucester.

My feeling in connection with the bill before the committee is that we have to recognize that we are living in a very large country, a very rich country in so far as natural resources are concerned. I believe the hon. member for Peace River referred to the Paley report, and the fact that it indicates that in the years to come there will be a greater demand for lead and zinc than the available quantities of these two commodities would supply.

I support the hon. member for Gloucester to the fullest extent in so far as bringing to the attention of the committee the need for development in New Brunswick. I believe, however, the premier of New Brunswick has already announced that arrangements will be made shortly for the development of the mines situated in my hon. friend's constituency. It seems to me the committee might take into consideration this fact, that I see no particular reason for considering there is any conflict between the production of lead and zinc concentrates in western Canada and the production of those concentrates in eastern Canada, I am one of those who feel that there is a need and a place for all the natural resources that can be developed, and which we have in great abundance. I for one do not think progress was ever made by being pessimistic. I do not think progress is made by pessimists. I think we must have some courage and some faith; we have to go ahead and develop our country in the west, in the north, in the east and wherever we may have the opportunity and the natural resources at our disposal.

I suggest, therefore, there is no conflict between ore bodies in New Brunswick and ore bodies in Alberta or in the north. I think there is a need for all of them, and there is room for all of them. We as members of parliament and members of this committee might very well consider that we have every reason to be thankful that this country has natural resources in such volume.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Forestry has spoken with his usual moderation. I am not surprised that he is very moderate, almost tepid in his enthusiasm for the bill that is now before us. I think I would be too if I were on the treasury benches at this time. If I were on the treasury benches I do not think the bill would be before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not say there would not be a bill before the committee, but it would not be this bill with this agreement. I say that without any hesitation whatever. While I can readily agree with the Minister of Forestry that there should be no conflict between the development of mines in the east and the development of mines in the west, I think he will agree with me that there should also be equality of treatment.

One of the things that an investor in a mine takes into account when he makes his investment is the proximity of the mine to its market. This is one of the things that I, at least, would consider if I were going to invest in a mine. However, the market is not going to grow any more because we develop two mines in Canada rather than one. It will grow because there is an increasing demand, and not because there are more mines, unless the price is lowered so that the demand is increased in that way.

There is no doubt that this bill makes it possible for one company, having one mine in one place, to proceed with the development of that mine. Whatever the ancillary and secondary developments may be—and if we are going to construct this line I hope there will be lots of them—I think they are highly speculative. The only shipper willing to sign an agreement to ship anything on this railway is this mine, and I am sure if there are others we would have been told about them. This is the only shipper the C.N.R. now have. All they have in addition are a number of prospects. The hon. member for Peace River in my judgment did not improve his case, or perhaps I should say that from my angle he did not improve his case very much, by talking about additional pulp mills. The Minister of Forestry and I know how difficult it is to get pulp mills and paper mills established, and I do not think either one of us would be very much impressed by the kind of pulp and paper mills a member of parliament can establish in his constituency in a debate.

I should like to see a dozen contracts, even poor contracts like this one, between the C.N.R. and potential shippers, at least something concrete as to some kind of traffic. But to come back to this point I was making, may I say this. What we will do if we go ahead with this bill is to pay from a maximum of $86 million to a minimum of $66 million of the taxpayers' money for which we are to get no interest and no repayment directly, merely to make it cheaper than it otherwise would be for ore of this one company to be moved into the market.

What is the government going to say to every other mine in Canada, for instance to mines that are a good deal nearer the market? What about the people in this Mattagami case that we dealt with this session, who are to pay every dollar of the cost of the railway? Why should they do that? Why should Mr. Jules Timmins and the Iron Ore Company have had to build their railway entirely by themselves and raise all the money to get that iron ore out—and it was a stupendous undertaking—and then have the treasury come along and do this with another company?

The Lynn Lake deal was not like this deal. The deal this government made with the International Nickel Company in northern Manitoba was not like this deal. The thing that really troubles me is how we or this government or this parliament are ever going to face any other company with a mine unless we give them just as good terms as this one is going to get. That is basically the problem.

Perhaps there is not much profit in trying to go into all the details of section 6, as this whole agreement from start to finish, as far as the mine is concerned, is on a basis of heads I win, tails you lose vis-à-vis the treasury. One would at least have expected that since the company has so many safeguards given to it, if it turned out much better than had been expected a little of the gravy would go into the treasury. However, it seems that once the railway gets paid for the maintenance and operating costs the freight rates are to go down, the company is to get all the benefit, nothing is to come back to the taxpayers. If we are going to go into this proposition which is a real example of socialism as I said last night it is an exercise in socialism and very one sided socialism—I think it would probably be a great deal better for the C.N.R. also to take a share in the mine and, if the thing is going to pay, get some of the profits out of it. But according to what we are saying now, we are going to provide the transportation. We hope to get back the cost of maintenance and operation, but we are not even sure of that. We give up all idea of ever making any real profit out of this project unless there are many other shippers. But if the company make any profit they take it all and the treasury gets nothing. It seems to me that this is as one sided a deal as has ever been put up to the taxpayers of this country.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Balcer: Just before it carries may I say this. I should not like the committee to be left with the impression that my hon. friend was trying to create, namely that this is a special deal for this mine that was refused to other mines, and all that sort of thing; that this mine has special treatment, and that we are building this railroad just for this mine. This mine happens to be at the other end of this railroad, as I explained earlier, and we are charging a special rate to the mine which is much above the normal rate the mine could expect to pay on any other line across Canada. We are calling upon this mine to contribute to the building of this railroad which has as its primary purpose the development of a brand new area of Canada which is full of promise and which has such a bright future for the population of Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: Before this clause passes I wish to protest again about the manner in which the clause interprets the agreement. I do not think clause 6, with its three subparagraphs, fully interprets the agreement as set out among the parties. While it is an attempt to summarize what is in the agreement, nevertheless it is a very poor summary. As I said earlier, this is a very complicated agreement which has been prepared by topnotch lawyers of this country acting on behalf of three of the parties. To have tried to implement it in these three subclauses in the manner in which it has been done is, in my opinion, not fair to the House of Commons any more than it is fair to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Balcer: I very much resent those remarks, Mr. Chairman. Actually, I have never seen in any bill for a branch line any statement about the rates that shippers are going to pay or anything like that. It has never been included in a bill of this type. The bill is not a résumé of the agreement. The bill states some conditions which are required to be fulfilled before the government undertakes the building of this railroad. This agreement has been drawn not by topnotch lawyers of three companies but by the lawyers of four parties, and the first of the four parties was the government of Canada. As my hon. friend says, we had our topnotch lawyers, who are just as good as the other lawyers and who fought just as hard as they did.

I think it is a good deal for the government and for the C.N.R. There is no secrecy about the matter. The agreement was tabled. The agreement has been in the hands of the opposition. It is open to the press or to anybody. What are stated in clause 6 are the principles on which this line is going to be built. In the past it has never been the practice to give the rates for traffic on a railway line in any bill for any branch line in Canada. We have followed the practice that has been established in this House of Commons.

I think this bill is clear. We have protected the interests of the taxpayers, the Canadian government and the crown owned company, the C.N.R. I sincerely believe that the bill is drafted in proper fashion, and also that the agreement is a very good one as far as the government and the C.N.R. are concerned.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry the minister resents the remarks I have made, but so far as I am concerned they are on the record and they remain just as they are. The minister has said that they have been following the established practice. May I say to the minister that they have not been following the established practice. In committee and in the house the minister has stated that this is not the kind of agreement that has been made in former days, that this is an extraordinary agreement. The minister said that.

Mr. Balcer: It is the first time that an agreement has been given to the House of Commons.

Mr. Chevrier: It may be true that this is the first time an agreement has been given to the House of Commons, but it is an agreement that is entirely one sided.

Mr. Balcer: No.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: What I say is being done is this. The minister or the officers who prepared this bill have simply followed the ordinary pattern of former railway bills, and that is why I say clause 6 is not sufficient. That is why I say clause 6 does not give the house or the Canadian taxpayer any idea of what is contained in this extraordinary agreement.

Mr. Baldwin: That is not correct.

Mr. Chevrier: It would certainly take more than these three subclauses to do that. I am glad the minister has repeated that there is no secrecy about this agreement. I am going to remind the minister about that statement in a little while when we come to another clause, because I think there may be more to be said about it.

There is no deal by Canadian National Railways or by the government, as far as I know, that is similar to this one. If there are, let us have them. I am sure if there had been any the minister would have detailed them to the house. I am not familiar with all of them, but I am familiar with most of them. Each time there was a guarantee given the Canadian National Railways by the mine for a fixed amount of traffic which would pay not only the operating costs but would go beyond that. In this case there is no provision whatsoever for the amortization of the capital involved. Mr. Chairman, I rose originally to protest against the fashion in which clause 6 of this bill seeks to summarize what is in the agreement among the four parties.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, perhap the hon. member is right when he says this bill contains clauses that are different from clauses that have appeared in previous bills. However, I must tell him that this bill is complete. It states that other payments are going to be made; it states the type of guarantee we are going to have. As far as details are concerned, if we detailed how much is going to be paid for each ton, and so forth, we would have pages and pages of these freight rates, and I do not think they should be included in this bill.

The hon. member says this is a very poor bill; that it does not give the information that is needed; that it does not guarantee that the taxpayers' money will be properly used, and so on. If my hon. friend is against the bill, he can vote against it. I cannot go any further than the explanation I have given.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, we have heard in plain, unvarnished language, such as we never heard in this house during a very celebrated debate in 1956—I never heard it from the treasury benches—that the opposition has no right to information about the bill before the committee, and if they do not like it they can vote against it. That is a new concept of parliament that the minister has put forward.

Mr. Ricard: You are twisting the facts and the words.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, "You are not allowed to know how much you are committing the taxpayers to. If you do not like this bill, vote against it".

Mr. Speakman: There is the agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is the agreement, but it is not part of the bill. As my hon. friend from Laurier has shown, the agreement is not adequately reflected in the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speakman: Are you questioning the draftsmanship?

Mr. Pickersgill: I could carry that a little further, but I will not. I hope, Mr. Chairman, I will be allowed to make my points and make them consecutively. We have been seeking to get an explanation from the minister about this clause since twelve o'clock, I think, or a quarter past twelve. That is not a very long time in which to consider the details of an expenditure of $86 million, practically none of which is going to be recovered. It is not a very long time in which to be considering the commitment to the expenditure of that sum of money. I say it was impossible for the minister to explain to me—and I do not think I am very much more stupid than the average Canadian taxpayer—

An hon. Member: Oh, no?

Another hon. Member: Don't pat yourself on the back.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was impossible for the minister to explain to me, and he finally gave up himself, how this special transportation fund would be drawn upon to meet a deficiency in freight rates in one year that was to be repaid to the treasury in a subsequent year. The mechanics of that are not spelled out in the bill, and even the minister was not able to explain them. The hon. member for Peace River tried to help him a bit, but I do not think we were very much wiser when he was finished.

I have read the agreement myself. Hon. members of the house who are learned in the law, as I am not, have read it, some of them several times. It does not appear to be clear how this money, if it is to be paid back in a subsequent year, is going to be paid back and where it is to come from. Surely these things should be clear. Surely we who are the trustees of the treasury of this country are entitled to know these things. We are entitled to understand them fully, clearly and comprehensively.

I asked the Minister of Finance this morning to explain to us what his estimate was of how much this was going to cost the treasury. He refused to answer. Well, he did not answer the question; he simply remained in his seat, and then walked out before I had a chance to repeat the question. I suspect the Minister of Finance just hates this bill and does not want to be in the house. Certainly if I were minister of finance and were facing a deficit of $600 million to $700 million in the current fiscal year, and one of my colleagues was introducing a bill to expend $86 million on which there would be no return of any kind before 1966, and no return of the capital or of service on the capital at any time in the future, except for what is provided for in clause 6 (a) which, according to the present prices of lead and zinc would be about 12½ million, less the amount that might have to be used to meet the deficiency in freight revenues—and nobody can speculate what that might be—I would not be very happy when the bill was introduced.

Mr. Ricard: Call the vote; then we will know.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is very easy to say "Call the vote".

Mr. Ricard: Call the vote and we will know how you stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was not the kind of language heard from this side of the chamber in 1956. The desire then was not to call the votes; the desire then was, professedly, to debate a bill. That is the desire now, to debate this matter until it is understood, until we know what it is about, and until the people of Canada know what it is about and what is really being done. If they want it done, of course it should be done; but it should not be done in the dark, and the opposition should not be told "Well, vote on it, blind".

The minister has made a great deal—I have not said much about it up to now, but I think his last intervention makes it necessary to say something—of the fact that this draft agreement is of a character that was never made available before. I have not checked the records so I do not know whether that is the fact. However, I think that is utterly irrelevant. What is relevant, though, is that on the first day of the resumption of the session in September my hon. friend from Laurier, if I remember correctly—certainly someone on this side of the house —asked the minister if in order to facilitate debate on this measure he would table this agreement then. The agreement was ready. The minister admitted that; he said it had been finalized.

Mr. Balcer: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is in Hansard. The minister said it had been finalized, but he would not make it available to the opposition. This is not a strategic matter; there is nothing secret in it. The request was made plainly and reasonably. It was made again at the second reading stage of the bill. On both occasions the government declined to make it available, and did not make it available until hon. members were actually in committee, and then only to the hon. members who were in the committee.

I say there is no reason on earth, if the government had been respectful of the rights of the opposition or of the rights of any hon. member, why this document should not have been put on the table the day we came back here so there would have been time for people to be properly informed about this bill, so that when we met in committee those who were members of that committee—and I was not—could have asked all the questions which should have been asked instead of having the kind of debate we have been obliged to conduct in this chamber. Even with this kind of debate, the information we have been given is such that it really is almost incredible that any government should consider proceeding in the circumstances.

The minister said we are building a railway which just happens to have this mine at the end of it—a mine which is going to provide the railway with some traffic. Well, if that mine was not at the end of this railway, everybody in the house knows that this bill would not be before us. If that mine was not there, if that semi-assured traffic was not there for ten years, this bill would not be before us at all. I point out that there is no assurance of any other traffic. There is speculation about other traffic, and I have no doubt there will be other traffic, though I have a great deal of doubt about what the volume of that traffic will be. However, I am not recommending the bill to the house; this government is doing that. The minister has indicated to the committee that four times the amount which is now semi-assured to the railway would be needed in order to amortize the cost of this operation. It seems to me that the government should have something concrete in sight and not merely speculative suggestions as to what the future traffic might be before it embarks on this venture. I say this because $66 million or $86 million, whatever the cost turns out to be—and it may be more than that—is a great deal of money to spend even today when there is to be no direct reimbursement and no servicing of the debt. There are so many things in so many parts of this country which could be done with that money. It will not be spent twice, and that is why it is frightfully important for us to make sure that we are spending it in the best possible way.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 7 and 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Report to parliament.

Mr. Chevrier: I am reminded of the statement which the minister made a while ago that there was no secrecy respecting the agreement and the arrangements made between the parties. In the light of the fact that this is not an agreement of the ordinary kind, I intend to move an amendment to this clause and I hope the minister will have no objection to it.

I am familiar with the type of statement which the minister is required to file under clause 9. This is the type of statement which is usually filed within a fixed period of time after the opening of a session of parliament in connection with other railway lines. But this arrangement has some extraordinary features about it. For example, this is the first time an agreement has been produced. Then again, there is the fact that there is no secrecy about it. In these circumstances it would seem to me that the minister should have no objection to tabling, over and above the information which he would normally impart to the house, an annual report on the operation and maintenance of the line together with a statement showing the net capital investment. With this in view, I move:

That clause 9 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

and after completion of the line an annual financial statement on the operation and maintenance of the line together with a statement showing the net capital investment on the said line.

Mr. Balcer: We have no objection to this amendment, because the money which would be paid on the part of the government would be drawn from a vote in the estimates of the Department of Transport. At that time the house would have had every possibility of discussing the matter at length. With the assistance of my officials I could have produced all the information needed. However, I shall be glad to give this information.

Amendment (Mr. Chevrier) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Balcer moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): We have had some discussion over the last few days in connection with this bill. We on this side of the house have not been satisfied with the agreement which is referred to in the bill and with the contents of the agreement itself.

I wish to make it clear, however, that our position as far as the principle of the bill itself is concerned remains unchanged. I stated on the resolution stage, as I stated on the second reading of the bill and as I state again now, that we are in favour of the construction of the railway line into this northern area but we are not in favour of this kind of bill. We are not in favour of this agreement for many reasons, first, because the railways and the other groups who were approached to build this line turned the proposition down. We are against this agreement because it favours very clearly those persons involved in the agreement as against the crown and as against the taxpayer. We are against the agreement because the government and the taxpayers receive absolutely nothing for their investment—there is no amortization of the capital, there is no amortization of the interest during construction. The minister, himself, has stated that this is an extraordinary kind of agreement. If it is, then some attempt should be made in our estimation to recoup the capital by way of amortization. This has been the practice not only in connection with other railway lines but also in connection with many other public projects in this country. I do not wish to go into this now but there are many examples of projects where the taxpayer's money has been advanced and where that money has been amortized over a period of years, but not so in this case.

It has been clearly stated that the survey is not yet completed and will not be until the end of the year. The survey upon which the estimate is based is not yet completed. How then can there be a clear and intelligent estimate of the cost of this line? Surely parliament and the taxpayers are entitled to know what the cost will be. Neither the minister nor the witnesses in committee were able to give a clear indication of what this railway is going to cost. As a matter of fact, the borings on the line and the bridge have not yet been taken. I understand there is a bridge which must be built and where of necessity borings will have to be taken. If it is a fact that the survey will not be completed until the end of the year, what possible injustice could arise from the postponement of this bill until such time as the survey is completed and the estimate upon which we must base our decision made known?

The Prime Minister has indicated, although perhaps not officially at least semi-officially, that parliament is to meet again early in December. The survey will not be completed by that time. What injustice would be done to anyone if this bill were postponed until that time? When parliament meets in early December the government could come forward with a bill containing an accurate estimate of the expenditure involved in this matter.

I wonder what hon. gentlemen opposite would have said when they sat on this side of the house if we had brought in a measure of this nature without knowing the estimated ultimate cost and without having facts upon which to base an estimate of the cost of the project? That is exactly what is taking place here.

It was clearly established as far back as 1956 that the estimated cost of this project would be between $50 and $55 million. We have not yet been told why the estimate of the cost has been increased from $50-55 million to $75-86 million. The latter figure is only a guess because the witness stated that the person who was able to inform us about the cost was on the line and would not appear before the committee as a witness. It seems to me that no great harm would befall the area concerned if this matter were postponed for a couple of months.

Since the survey upon which is based the estimate of the cost of this line is not yet completed and will not be completed until the end of this year there would be no delay in building the railway line if this legislation were not passed now and if a new bill were introduced at the next session of parliament. As I have said at all three stages of our consideration of this bill hon. members on this side were in favour of the construction of a railway line in this area. We are, however, against this bill and this agreement. We favour construction of a railway but as members of the opposition it is our responsibility and duty to carefully scrutinize the agreement. Since there would be no delay in constructing the railway as a result of what we propose and since no one will be hurt in any way whatsoever if we were not to approve the bill in its present form, under the circumstances I move the following amendment to the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate:

That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months hence" be added at the end of the question.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the amendment. My hon. friend has moved that the bill be given a six months hoist which indicates that hon. gentlemen opposite wish to get rid of this bill. The hon. gentleman said he feels it is too early to proceed, that we should wait for the completion of the survey, that it is an awful thing that the bill should have been introduced while the survey remains incomplete. I feel it is exactly the opposite, that the government should be commended for bringing in this legislation while the survey is under way.

We are forced to base our figures on an estimate which in the long run may perhaps not be exact but there is nothing to prevent our correcting the estimate when the survey is finished. The sooner the survey is completed and the legislation passed, the sooner will a few thousand Canadians be employed in constructing the line. I feel this is a valuable reason for our proceeding with alacrity in a situation like this.

The hon. gentleman said he did not receive the information he sought. Last evening and again today I have endeavoured to answer not only the questions of fact but the large percentage of hypothetical questions which have been put to me by the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Approximately 60 per cent of their questions were hypothetical and I have repeated the answers six or seven times. Even now the hon. member for Laurier feels he is not quite sure he understands what is meant by the agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the minister understands it.

Mr. Chevrier: I hope the minister understands it.

Mr. Balcer: I do not wish to repeat the arguments that have been used during the debate but in order that there should be no misunderstanding let me say this. I feel that this bill and the agreement embody a principle which is in the interest of Canadians and the country as a whole. My hon. friend treated very lightly the fact that a mine is located at the terminus of the railway. I remind the hon. gentleman of what was said by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories in addressing the Gordon commission, that this railway is a great developmental railway. It is opening up a new area in Canada. A new pioneer spirit is embodied in this undertaking. We are going to develop a part of the country that is rich in potentialities, especially mining, timber and agricultural resources. We are indeed fortunate that there is found on the shores of Great Slave lake, one of the world's greatest lead and zinc deposits and that we have succeeded in having the owner of this mine enter an agreement under which there will be paid rates far above the normal rates and also special charges to help us meet the capital costs of this great project.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was hurt when we said, "If you do not like it you can vote against it." What we meant was that the opposition was just trying to carry on this attitude of theirs of criticizing everything and tearing it apart, to try to say that what we are doing is absolutely wrong; but they do not dare face the people and say that they are against such and such a big undertaking that is put forward for the development of Canada. I think this Pine Point railway marks a milestone in the history of the development of Canada, and of the north in particular, and I recommend to the house that it vote against this amendment because it would simply be putting off this great project. If the amendment is passed it will mean the killing of something that will definitely bring a lot of good eventually to the Canadian people.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before we vote on this amendment may I as a member from western Canada say that I feel I must rise and express the shock that I experienced at the incredible lack of confidence and faith in the future of western Canada and the north as expressed by the Liberal party in this house. I am sure it must come as a shock to every other member of this house. Of course we can realize the handicap that this party is operating under, since it has no members from western Canada to represent it in the house or to advise it. When one considers the attitude that they have adopted in this debate there is little wonder that they have no members from that part of the country.

They have professed to put forward to the people of this country that the only thing they can see in the whole northwest of this country is one mine, and they say if we build a railroad up there that is the only thing we are going to have. Well, surely, Mr. Speaker, nobody in this country has as little faith as that. I cannot understand how a political party, professing to be a major party in this country and representing all parts of it, could possibly or conceivably take such an attitude toward the development of northwestern Canada. As I pointed out the other day, this is not the first time they have adopted that attitude. When it came time to build the Canadian Pacific Railway to unite Canada into a nation and open up the western part of the country they adopted a similar attitude; they have adopted the same attitude toward this railroad. Some 30 years ago Mackenzie King promised to build it but they have found one excuse after another to put it off. Now we have the same suggestion from the hon. member for Laurier again; put it off again for another six months; it will not hurt. I suppose in his view, after his party put it off for 30 years, another six months will not hurt. I can only say that I think the people in this country are fortunate in having a government in office today that is not going to approach the problems facing Canada with an attitude such as that.

Here we have an opportunity to develop the whole northern part of this country in a way that has been outlined by the government of the province of British Columbia in support of this measure, and by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, and by the many briefs that were put before the royal commission which investigated the route. We are in a position where we can build this railroad and be guaranteed its operating and maintenance costs for a period of ten years. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) professes to tell us that he does not believe it is possible under these conditions for this railway to operate at a profit. No returns are we going to get, he says. There is apparently no return to the taxpayers from this. Well, I dare say even if what he said were true, even if we were spending $86 million and the Canadian taxpayer was not going to get something back in dollars and cents, the benefit obtained by developing that part of the country would be worth the money.

It has been pointed out already that there are many financial benefits which will be gained from it. I refer in that connection to what was said by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories when he pointed out the amount of ore that was going to be shipped fom this one mine. When the possibility of building the line was investigated in those days the estimate was considerably lower than what was signed for in this agreement which provides for 215,000 tons each year. At that time they were planning on shipping 147,000 tons and the commissioner pointed out that the federal treasury would benefit to the extent of $3.5 million a year just from that one thing alone. We are now guaranteed in this agreement that we are going to have that shipment for ten years so there will be a return to the taxpayer in taxes from the operation of this one mine of an amount of $40 million to $50 million. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate tell us that there is going to be no return to the taxpayer. In addition to that, as I have pointed out, the railroad is guaranteed its operating and maintenance costs for a period of ten years. Surely, with that potential development of northwest Canada in mind it seems incredible to believe that any member in this house would rise in his place and under those conditions say that this railroad cannot operate at a profit.

I do not want to take up any more of the time of the house on this matter. The various views have been put forward. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) have answered everything that has been raised and some of the things that have been raised by the opposition are so incredible that it is hard to believe that anyone in this country would hold views of this kind any longer.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in a peculiar, unique and difficult position, which is not unusual for a member of the House of Commons. This group voted for the principle of the legislation on the original resolution and second reading of the bill. Unfortunately, sir, we were not able to attend the committee meetings because we did not know of them. Yesterday in the committee of the whole I expressed certain misgivings because I felt that full information had not been given to the house. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that not one of the questions I raised was answered. However, we now find that there is a motion before us which asks that the word "now" be left out and that the words "this day six months hence" be added at the end of the question. This, sir, is a guillotine amendment. There is no question about that at all. That is its effect even though the Liberals unanimously supported the resolution and the second reading of the bill.

As a member of this group and as one who is speaking on the amendment I want to say that I have not changed my mind whatsoever from what I said yesterday at the committee stage. The entire matter has been mishandled. Basically, perhaps indirectly, the C.P.R. is going to be the recipient of the advantages of the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. The major expenditure, which is this subsidy, is going to be on behalf of private enterprise and not the publicly owned Canadian National Railways. And yet, sir, this bill, whether we have criticism or not and whether we like certain features of it or not, is one that is going to benefit Canada and is one that we all looked forward to. We expect that, irrespective of other considerations this bill will result in the development of the northern part of our country. Having made our whole position clear in voting on the principle of the bill, having raised our objection during the committee stage, I must say that, irrespective of criticisms, objection, understandings or misunderstandings, we in this group feel that the stand we are taking is in the interest of our country, We have sufficient hope and belief in our stand that we are prepared to support the bill and therefore cannot support the guillotine amendment which would kill the advancement of the development of the north. We will, therefore, oppose the amendment which is now being proposed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have not had the opportunity of being here throughout the entire debate. I have been here from time to time, however, and during the period when I have been here the particular section upon which questions were being asked was explained, and explained in detail, by the minister. However, as so often happens, regardless of the clarity of the explanation, the degree to which the opposition desires to oppose a measure is indicated by the fact that it invariably says, "well, we have not had an answer". This has been the course of the opposition on a number of measures.

I look back over the period when this particular railroad was under discussion. I remember well the election campaigns during which construction of the road was promised over and over again. At every election since 1926 the Liberal party has promised action but the same result was to be found in connection with this as we found in the province of Saskatchewan with that other development so frequently promised, the south Saskatchewan dam. These promises were conveniently forgotten after the election was over.

This is a most interesting situation now. If the hon. gentleman, the former minister of transport and subsequently the holder of a high position as chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway, had faced up to the situation and said, "I am opposed to this bill", we could have understood that.

Mr. Chevrier: We did not proceed in this manner with the seaway.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is simply a subterfuge on the part of the opposition. What they are trying to do is to pretend that at the next session of parliament the views of today will have changed in the meantime and they will be able to give support to this measure. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) moves a six months hoist. It has been mentioned that this, in fact, is the guillotine. Sir Thomas Erskine May summarizes the situation at page 530 in these words:

> The ordinary practice, in opposing the second reading of a bill, is to move an amendment to the question, by leaving out the word "now" and adding the words "upon this day six (or three) months".

As the case might be.

> The amendment, "upon this day three months" is usually employed in a normal session—

And so on. Then, he goes on to say:

> The acceptance by the house of such an amendment being tantamount to the rejection of the bill, if the session extends beyond the period of postponement, a bill . . . is not replaced upon the notice paper of the house.

That is what the opposition is doing, destroying the possibility of the building of this railway for the opening of the north. They are doing this by a subterranean course of pretense, pretending that at the continuance of this session, to use the words of the hon. gentleman, this matter "may be brought up again". This has been their attitude, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) said so well, throughout the years. This has been the attitude of the party represented by hon. gentlemen opposite from the days of the Canadian Pacific. There were no assured markets then; the west was unopened. The Liberal party at that time referred to the railroad as two streaks of rust on a roadbed of false hopes. Another Liberal member said that the axle grease would never be paid for. If there had not been a Macdonald, there never would have been the opening of western Canada.

The same situation exists today. In 1957, this party promised it was going to launch a long delayed national development policy and a policy for the opening of the north. Anyone visiting the north today, and I invite the hon. member for Laurier to do that, will see the change.

Mr. Chevrier: I have been there several times.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Recently?—not since the developments have taken place. I also invite the itinerant member for Newfoundland to go up there and see the tremendous developments that have taken place during the last four years. Let them go into the Yukon or into the Mackenzie constituency and argue that there have been no developments, no opening of the north, and I should like to see the reception they receive.

Mr. Chevrier: No one is arguing that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am at the moment. As a matter of fact, in 1957 the Liberal party said, "if you give us a chance this time we will build the railway". Does the hon. gentleman remember that promise? In 1958, they said the same thing. A few months ago we were criticized for not having brought this bill before the house earlier. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) said in western Canada on his last tour, a tour d'horizon during which he was looking over the field, and it is a disheartening look he is having, that we were not proceeding.

Mr. Chevrier: The tour d'horizon I see now is not a vision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman will maintain silence, I can proceed.

In looking over the field, what does he find? He complains that we have not proceeded with the Peace River route or with the Pine Point railway. While he is out there expressing himself, and I am sure being consistent and saying the same thing now as he did on his last visit, the acting leader of the Liberal party is in the house opposing the measure that his leader is advocating. Let there be no evasion of this fact. The motion means the defeat of the bill. I am looking forward to watching these hon. gentlemen vote at this time. Of course, they will have to support the amendment, and then on third reading the destruction of the bill. I am looking forward to that because it will be in keeping with their attitude toward development throughout the years. They give it vocal support; the objective is good, the purpose is admirable, but the vote is in the negative.

This is an example of what we have seen over and over again. This is one of the reasons the policy of opening the Northwest Territories to oil and mineral development, the roads to resources policy, all of those things advocated by this party when in opposition, have been implemented when we had the power to do so. This is one of the undertakings that we gave and I ask hon. members of the house to join with the government in advancing this policy of development. It covers every part of Canada. It covers British Columbia and the Columbia river if we can ever induce Premier Bennett to agree that the action we have taken is going to be beneficial. In the province of Alberta this railway is a step forward. In the province of Saskatchewan we have begun the south Saskatchewan dam. In the province of Manitoba we have the northern development of resources through the opening of areas that were never opened previously. In the maritimes we also have had a policy of opening resources through roadways and highways. All these things are part of the policy of national development. This Pine Point railway is one of the integral promises that we made. We wish to put it into effect at the earliest possible moment.

As to what it will do, may I say this. Mention has been made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) of the employment it will provide. It will provide freight service and passenger service to some 28,000 people living north of Grimshaw. It will provide service and savings to existing industry, such as commercial fishing on Great Slave lake and the Yellowknife gold mine. When I was in Yellowknife recently, the people there without regard to party considerations, pointed out that this was something they had been waiting for.

Once this railway is completed to Pine Point, it will make possible extensive development and, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) said, vast changes in mineral development in the north, in areas which are potentially great but which as yet have not had the transportation facilities to permit the necessary developments that should take place. There will be the stimulation of agricultural expansion in some 6 million acres of arable land adjacent to the railway. There are 13 million acres of adjacent forest land. There will be stimulation to the development of these particular forest areas, stimulation to mineral exploration and also the provision of essential transportation in order to equalize opportunities in all parts of Canada.

The people up north who have opened up those areas in northern Alberta have, through the years, looked forward to the day when there would be this railway. I am sure they will also look with great interest at the fact that the opposition, while giving lip service to the necessity for this development, having criticized this government for not having proceeded with it earlier and now having the opportunity to vote in favour of it, decide by this measure of an amendment to destroy and kill legislation to which they have given vocal support for so many years.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I had not really intended to speak on this amendment. I think the complaints we had to make were adequately made by my friend the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I still think so. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), of course, has not paid much attention to the bill. However, that is not unusual. The Prime Minister has passion for avoiding detail that has not been excelled by any of his predecessors. The Prime Minister has opened up other fields that I think are too tempting for me to resist and I do not intend to try to do so. I can only hope that the Prime Minister's history—I refer to his early history of the 20's and 30's about which I do not profess to be as detailed an expert—is a little bit more accurate than is his later history. I think I am familar with every promise that was made by the Liberal party in the elections of 1940, 1945, 1949, 1953 and 1957.

Mr. Churchill: And none of them was carried out.

Mr. Pickersgill: In all those elections I state without hesitation that the leader of the Liberal party whether it was Mr. King or Mr. St. Laurent never at any time promised to build this railway and never at any time promised to build the south Saskatchewan dam. As a matter of fact, not only did he not do that, the Prime Minister will recall that Mr. St. Laurent, during the course of one election, in Regina, at the armouries during the election campaign stated why he would not promise to build the south Saskatchewan dam.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to get that matter clear now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. The Prime Minister has a passion for history which is very entertaining. However, history, of course, has something to do with the facts and not simply what one would like the facts to be.

Mr. Grafftey: It depends on who is writing them.

Mr. Pickersgill: What Mr. Dunning may have said in 1929 and to which I think the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) made some reference is another matter. I was not with Mr. Dunning in 1929. As a matter of fact, in 1929, when Mr. Dunning must have visited that place, I was probably abroad completing my education. However, I know this. From the time the Prime Minister was elected to this House of Commons I know of no occasion when either Mr. King or Mr. St. Laurent ever promised to undertake either of these projects to which the Prime Minister has referred. I just point that out casually. It does not seem to me to be particularly relevant to the situation with which we are now faced. What is relevant to the situation with which we are now faced is whether or not this is a proper way in which to use $86 million more or less of the taxpayers' money.

An hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the important issue. The Prime Minister said that the amendment which had been moved by my hon. friend is a subterfuge. It is not a subterfuge at all. We do not argue for a moment—certainly I do not do so, and I do not think that my hon. friend meant to give any such impression—that if this motion is passed, this bill will not be killed, and killed it should be because it is a bad bargain for the Canadian people as has been clearly shown by the answers given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) to questions that have been put to him.

The Prime Minister said that the killing of this bill would destroy—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You will not be able to find a Liberal candidate for Peace River.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am glad of that interruption for this reason. It enables me in one reply to deal with the whole speech of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The tenor of the whole speech of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was that we should vote for this bill in the hope of electing Liberals in Alberta or Liberals in western Canada and not because on its merits, it was good for Canada. He said, "If you vote against this bill, good-bye to the chances of the Liberal party in western Canada." If this is just a great big scheme for buying votes, may I say that I do not think this is the way in which to defend it to serious minded people when you are spending other people's money. If the argument is sound that it may hurt Liberal candidates in one or two constituencies to vote against something that is not justified it will just have to hurt one or two Liberal candidates, as it is time that we had a few people in this House of Commons who considered the interests of the whole Canadian people and not merely their own immediate political future.

Mr. Jones: You certainly would not be in a position to speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: But of course the motion will not destroy the possibility of the railway at all. It will destroy this bill; but as the hon. member for Laurier has pointed out, there is going to be a new session of parliament soon—the Prime Minister has told us that—in December or January. There is nothing to prevent the government from bringing this bill back in a new session, although I hope they will not. Certainly there is nothing to prevent their bringing in another bill after finding some more customers for the railway and after making a better deal for the Canadian people.

That is why instead of just waiting for the third reading and voting against the bill we moved the six months hoist, to emphasize the point that nothing is going to be delayed. Everybody knows that this railway cannot be started, even by this government, before the survey is completed. We have been told that the survey will not be completed before the end of the year. Everybody knows that the contracts cannot be let on January 1 if the survey is completed on December 31.

Therefore there will not be one day's delay in providing employment if this bill stands over until next session and if the government proceeds expeditiously with a new bill in the next session. But between September and January there will be three or four months for the government to reconsider this matter and see whether not only with the parties to the agreement but with the other interested people they can make a better bargain, one that will protect the treasury and one that will give the taxpayers a reasonable break and a reasonable assurance that the people of Canada will get an adequate return on their investment.

The Prime Minister talked about the lack of vision of the Liberal party since the early days of the C.P.R., and I believe earlier in the debate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway talked the same way. Of course, there were two sides to the early days of the C.P.R. There was another side to it that the Conservative party never boasts about. There were hand-outs on a huge scale to the promoters of the C.P.R. Here is what is happening now. Again it is the C.P.R., in the guise of Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and the Pine Point mine that have to get a railway built for the transportation of these ores to the smelter; to get a railway built with the taxpayers' money, which money is not going to be recovered and on which no interest is going to be paid. That is what is involved here.

The Prime Minister talks about the opening of the north. Once more I think it is necessary to make a few corrections to the Prime Minister's historical perspective. The Prime Minister's conception of Canadian history seems to have jumped, as I said once before in the house, from June 6, 1891 to June 21, 1957. There is a big gap in between. It was a sort of jump from John to John. During that time nothing happened in this country. The fact of the matter—

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Igloo to igloo" was the slogan of the Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister evidently does not like what I am saying because he is seeking to divert me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would just suggest to the Prime Minister that the quickest way to kill healthy northern development is to go into schemes that will turn out not to be well founded. Sixty six million dollars or $86 million is still, as I said earlier, a tremendous amount to pay out of the treasury of Canada with no provision for interest on that money and no provision for the return of the capital. I am not saying it would not be justified in certain circumstances, but it is still—

An hon. Member: You have said all this before.

Mr. Pickersgill: Bearing in mind our resources, it is a tremendous sum. We have a duty here to be absolutely sure that when we are dealing with sums like that we are dealing with them in the best possible way. That is the point, and that is the only point we have been making throughout.

If in fact the traffic that the Minister of Transport told us just after lunch would be required to make this a self liquidating project—not self liquidating to the treasury but self liquidating to the whole economy—of about 800,000 tons of concentrates, or their equivalent, is going to be forthcoming, and if the government can show that will be forthcoming or that there is a very good prospect of it, nobody would vote for this bill with greater enthusiasm than I. But if this is going to turn out to be a flop—as railways built for development in Canada in the past have turned out to be flops; unfortunately all too many of them—this is just going to be another big drain on the treasury of Canada. It is going to hold back real development and set back those things which ought to be done.

The Prime Minister made a good deal of criticism of the Leader of the Opposition who said that this bill should have been brought in earlier. I echo that criticism. The hon. member for Laurier has made that criticism half a dozen times. I think it is a shocking thing that on the 172nd day of the session, when this railway was referred to on the first day in the speech from the throne, we have only at last got around to considering this tremendous project at a time when we are under unusual pressure to terminate the session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Churchill: It is your choice.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) says it is our choice. It is not our choice. Our choice would have been to have this bill earlier so we would have had time to consider it adequately. Our choice would have been to have the agreement as early even as September 7. We were denied that. Those were our choices. It was not our choice, it was the government's choice, to hold the bill back to the very last moment. I think when we see what kind of bill it is we understand why the government made that kind of choice. They hoped they could get this bill through with a minimum of publicity outside Alberta and the rest of Canada would not know too much about it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —so they could exploit it politically to the maximum out there. There is another thing, of course, about this bill that really demolishes completely the argument of the Minister of Transport that delaying this bill is going to hurt employment. Not one sou can be spent under this bill, as the minister told us—

Mr. Pallett: What is a sou?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just the French word for "cent". I say not one sou can be spent under this bill, as the minister told us. There has to be an appropriation. We are not going to have any more appropriations during this session, so the government cannot spend any money in any event. It cannot start this railway in any event until it has brought down the estimates in the next session, so any misleading argument that to delay this bill now will delay the work is destroyed, of course, by the frank statement made by the Minister of Transport.

The Prime Minister also said this project was part of a program for the development of the north which began in 1957. Of course, the development of the north did not begin in 1957. The development of the north began long, long ago in the days of the first prime minister of Canada.

An hon. Member: This sounds like a fairy story.

Mr. Pickersgill: I venture to say there has been no period in which greater progress was made in the development of the north than the nine years when my right hon. friend Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister of Canada. Every project of any consequence which the present government has carried out in the north was already on the drawing boards in June, 1957.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In invisible ink? Was it on the drawing boards in invisible ink?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it was not. That is shown by the fact that the biggest argument in favour of this railway, and the one the minister falls back on every time he is pressed, is the evidence given by Mr. Robertson before the Gordon commission. When was that evidence given? It was given under the previous administration. Anybody familiar with the real history of these things is aware that not only were there many blueprints but that many of the projects had been started.

An hon. Member: Igloos.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the new Aklavik was started by the previous government. Most of the roads were started by them. The new school program was started. I must say that the present government is to be commended for carrying on these programs. I have never complained about that. But the way in which they denature history in the way they have consistently done is another example of the fact that between June, 1891 and June, 1957, in the Prime Minister's book nothing happened in this country.

In the days when Mr. St. Laurent was Prime Minister it was not only the north which was being developed. There never was at any period in the history of this country so much capital development, both public and private, as there was in the years from 1947 to 1957, and the statistics which have been repeatedly brought before this house by the present government—reluctantly, I admit—go to show it. The evidence which was given in the other place before their committee on manpower and a great deal of other statistical evidence indicates very clearly that this progress stopped in the year 1958. It simply stopped.

Now the Prime Minister talks about the north as though Alberta were the only part of the north. It is not, you know. There is also a north which was developed right after the war by private enterprise in Labrador. Here was a company which paid for its own railway; it did not get it paid for by the taxpayer. I say we have to look at a question of this kind in broad prospective. We have to ask ourselves: if we are going to spend this amount of money out of the treasury without getting it back, without any service charge, is this the best place to do it? I say that the government has not yet made that case.

I do not know whether I should refer to this or not, and I do not know how my reference to it will be received by the house. However, I think most of us think the late Mr. C. D. Howe did have something to do with the development of this country and that he did have a good capacity to appraise a proposition and decide whether it was a good thing or not. I remember speaking to him a year or two ago—perhaps it was two or three years ago; it was since I have been in opposition—precisely on the subject of this Pine Point railway. The observation he made to me at that time was this: This railway, or some other means of transport if technology moves fast enough, must be provided, because that mine is a very good mine and there is no doubt it will be exploited sooner or later. Perhaps it will not be too long before it is exploited. But it is a very valuable property, and when it becomes really exploitable, the people who own it will not hesitate to exploit it. That, after all, is something we have to take into account.

This mine will not be lost if this railway is not built immediately. I noticed the other day that Dr. Solandt, one of the vice presidents of the C.N.R., said that what the railways most needed was research—basic research, not merely research into accounting and that sort of thing. It may very well be we shall see technological developments which will make it possible to provide transport very much cheaper than the present arrangements contemplate. This would be in the interests of everyone. It seems to me no one can say that because we are insisting that this should be a good project and a good bargain for the Canadian people before it is allowed to proceed, that this means we are against national development. When I say no one can say it, I know it will be said. It is probably being said already. But I suggest, without regard to what will be said about these things, that when the facts are such as they are in this case we must assure ourselves that this is the best use which can be made of these funds in the interests of all the Canadian people in the year 1962—I mention that year because this money certainly cannot be spent in 1961—and from then on. It is true that there is in contemplation the construction of 400 miles of line through a very rich part of the country which undoubtedly has a great future. But even the Minister of Finance is slowly beginning to discover that the resources which can be extracted from the taxpayers of Canada are limited. For this reason I have no hesitation whatever in standing up and being counted in opposition, not to the principle of the railway—after all, who would be opposed to it—but to this particular way of doing things.

I remember when I was a small boy living in the bush in northern Manitoba. We had on the wall of our dining room a map of Manitoba. The Hudson's Bay Railway was indicated by a dotted line and there was another dotted line running north from the Gypsumville line to connect with the Hudson's Bay Railway. I remember thinking that some day that railway would be built and the main route to Europe would be through Winnipeg right past our door to the Hudson's Bay Railway. That railway has not been built yet. We are all a little sentimental about these things and I confess that if there is $66 million in the treasury to spend on a railway I would rather see that railway built than one in Northern Alberta. That is just a personal preference, but I would not expect these things to be decided on the basis of personal preference. I would expect us to weigh the merits of the two and then decide which would be best in the national interest. And let no one say that a railway through northern Manitoba such as I have described would not open up a lot of valuable territory. It would reduce very considerably the distance over which the International Nickel Company would have to ship their concentrates. There is a lot of pulpwood in that country, a great new electrical development going on at the Grand Rapids. However, we are not asking the taxpayers to build that railway in northern Manitoba. We are asking them to build one in northern Alberta. Either would contribute to northern development. So would a railway to Hamilton Falls in Labrador, and to Goose Bay. There is no question but that there are tremendous potential resources in Labrador. But would the taxpayers of Canada, without some reasonable assurance that within a reasonable time those potentialities were going to become actual, be justified in doing that? I think we have to apply the same yardstick to all these proposals. Let us, of course, believe in our country, but do not let us do things which will turn out to be bad bargains and discourage people in the future from believing in this country, which certainly is not going to be destroyed if we take a second look at this proposition and come back here next year with a better one.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate but I cannot leave unchallenged some of the statements made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). The hon. gentleman has said that we should be very careful about proceeding with the bill because ill founded schemes could very well set back northern development. I live in the north, Mr. Speaker, and I have travelled across the Canadian north. In my view nothing has so set back northern development as did the 22 years of Liberal rule when a complete void and vacuum existed with respect to the development of the north. The hon. gentleman spoke of ill founded schemes. We could point to schemes that have been inordinately costly and that are a continuing drain on the taxpayers who live in the north. One project immediately comes to mind, the Whitehorse sewer and water system constructed during the Liberal administration at a cost of millions of dollars for a city of 20,000 people at a stage of development when there were only 2,500 people there. Is this the kind of scheme the hon. gentleman speaks of when he refers to ill founded schemes?

The hon. gentleman said the construction of the railway at this time might set back the undertaking of important projects that should be undertaken in the north. The party of which the hon. gentleman is a member should have thought of many projects that should have been undertaken in the north while they were in power, but they did not. I wonder, as must a great many hon. members of this house, whether these great plans for northern Canada, of which the Liberals now speak, were kept for 22 years in the same cupboard as their great shelf of public works which was supposed to be there when we took office in 1957? The cupboard was bare, these great plans are empty dreams and the words of hon. gentlemen opposite echo hollowly when they seek to claim credit for undertaking projects in the north.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said he had been in the north several times. I have never seen the hon. gentleman in the north. Since I have lived there I have seen only one Liberal minister of northern affairs and national resources in the north, Mr. Lesage, who visited in 1953. I have never seen the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in the north.

An hon. Member: You were fortunate.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps this is the explanation for the apparent and appalling ignorance of the hon. gentleman when he begins describing things that are happening in the north about which he has no knowledge. He does not know about them because he has not been there. I know that in the last three years more projects have been brought to completion in the north than were brought to completion in the previous decade, the reason being that this government implemented them, took action.

I also know of many projects that were turned down by the previous administration. One example is the road to the oil fields in Eagle Plains. The former government was asked by private industry to assist in the building of a trail to this area to the extent of contributing $300,000, but hon. gentlemen said they would not give a single nickel to assist in the development of this potentially rich area. They would not admit the possibility that reserves might be there. The same attitude is apparent with regard to this railway. This is yet another example of the waffling in which hon. members of the opposition have been engaging during even the short time I have been sitting here. Their leader has condemned the national development program of this government, and the policy designed to bring about northern development. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and I had an exchange a few months ago during which I tried to have the hon. member retract his "igloo to igloo" statement, the position he took with respect to communications in the northern part of this country. He would not do so on that occasion nor has he done so since. The reason is apparent. Hon. gentlemen opposite simply do not believe in the riches the north country has to contribute to the over-all development of Canada.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have lauded Mr. St. Laurent as the great northern developer. Not one single project of any size or importance was undertaken in the Yukon territory by the government of Mr. St. Laurent. We asked for roads and projects of all kinds but all were cast aside and rejected. Why? The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate speaks about projects for vote catching. I suspect the reason that the Liberals rejected the northern projects for the development of the nation as a whole is that there were more votes to be caught in some of the other provinces that are more heavily populated. The remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate are absolutely false and I give the lie to them. I do not ascribe to the hon. gentleman any motive in his saying these things. I believe he says them out of ignorance. The hon. gentleman has never been in the north and does not know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. It being five o'clock—

Mr. Churchill: I wonder, if there is to be another vote, if we could proceed with that without the ringing of the bells and then proceed with the private members' hour?

Mr. Chevrier: There is certainly no objection to that.

Mr. Speaker: The house gives unanimous consent to proceed to the next order and defer private members' hour until it is disposed of?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is the house ready for the question? Those in favour will please say yea.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence pursuant to standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: As there are a number of private bills that were ordered for consideration in the committee of the whole this day is it agreed that, in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54, they be referred to the committee in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JEAN GEORGE LIPSMAN

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Jean George Lipsman, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Howard: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that in the miscellaneous private bills committee the various bills which are now before us were given consideration by the committee to the extent of allowing three tenths of one second of time for each particular bill. That is an indication of the consideration that was given in the committee and the progress that was made.

If I may, I should just like to take this opportunity, for a second or two, to congratulate the hon. member for Marquette who is vice-chairman of the committee on the efficient and capable manner in which he handled the committee's proceedings this morning and on the justness with which he pursued his particular task. Inasmuch as he is only vice-chairman of the particular committee may I say this. If we are going to continue to consider these things in that committee, he may be slated for higher things in that committee.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for his kind words. With reference to the length of time allotted to each separate bill, I might put on the record the fact that it is the practice of the committee—or at least it has been the practice when I have been on it—that those bills which are uncontested are considered en bloc after the committee receives from the chairman or the vice-chairman an undertaking that they have been checked, read over and studied and that no objection was found.

Clause agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On division.

Motion agreed to on division, and bills read the third time and passed.

PENITENTIARY ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR USE OF DORMITORIES BY INMATES

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Howard for the second reading of Bill No. C-2, to amend the Penitentiary Act.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might revert to government business now, if the house is agreeable to so doing. We would go on with Bill No. C-122.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am the one who is making the great sacrifice again, but I nevertheless feel that I would be expressing the views of all my hon. friends if I forwent the chance to make a speech myself in order to enable us to hear one from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, there are a vast number of public bills which undoubtedly cannot be considered this session. Therefore it was the understanding of this group that we would agree, if there was unanimous consent, to reverting to government business.

Mr. Churchill: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed, then, that the house waive the balance of the hour for private and public bills and revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING TAX COLLECTION, ANNUAL GRANTS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill C-122, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into tax collection agreements with the governments of the provinces.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the willingness of the house to expedite consideration of this measure on second reading in the manner just now indicated, and in the same spirit I can assure the house that I propose to be very brief.

This measure, Bill No. C-122, was introduced in the house on July 12. That introduction followed a discussion in the committee of the whole on the resolution stage. In introducing the resolution in the committee I set forth at I think some length, Mr. Speaker, the features of the proposed measure and the reasons why the government is asking the house to adopt this measure as one which will contribute and we believe contribute substantially, to an improvement in dominion-provincial fiscal relations.

I think it would be quite superfluous to repeat the reasons which I advanced in the statement at that time. The remarks were recorded in Hansard at pages 7910 to 7930. I do not, of course, claim to have occupied 20 pages of Hansard with my remarks, but those pages included the quite extensive tables which were placed on record with the consent of the house and which contain quite an encyclopaedia of tabular material in relation to this subject which it was thought would be of assistance to the house in the approach to the consideration of the bill on second reading. I think, therefore, I have nothing to add to the remarks that I made on July 11.

I think I should say to the house that when we reach the committee stage I will be introducing an amendment, and perhaps I should say just a word about the nature of that amendment at this point. In order that the crown in right of the dominion may make deductions at the source on account of provincial tax from payments to its own employees or in respect of other payments made out of the consolidated revenue fund or by an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada, statutory authority for this purpose is required. It is proposed that the bill be amended to provide such statutory authority. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, when we reach the committee stage of the bill I shall be introducing an amendment to clause 6 of the bill which will add to that clause a subclause 3. In order that they may have the opportunity to consider it, I am sending over to hon. members opposite copies of this proposed amendment. Apart from these observations, Mr. Speaker, I think that any further information hon. members may require concerning the provisions of the bill or its purport can perhaps best be offered at the committee stage of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be an expression of profound disappointment at the brevity of the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). That regret is not because I am fond of hearing the Minister of Finance but because I hoped to have a rest until half past seven before I was obliged to take up the time of the house again. But the Minister of Finance has told us that except for the amendment, of which he has given us notice, he had his say on July 11 at the resolution stage and he has nothing in particular to add.

I had hoped and had rather expected that the minister would at least deal with those developments which have taken place since his speech on July 11. I refer to the protests that have come from at least half the premiers of the provinces of this country about the inadequacy of the bill from their point of view and about the arrogant manner in which the government has treated the provincial governments and their representations.

Knowing how thorough the Minister of Finance is when he replies to arguments, I had expected that he would attempt to deal with these protests. However, apparently the decision of the government is that the views of the provincial governments as expressed by the heads of those governments are to be ignored. I do not think that some of them can be ignored by those of us on this side of the house and in the course of my remarks I shall have some observations to make about them.

First of all I wish to say something about the measure itself. The purpose of this measure, as I see it, is to do two things. It is first of all to provide for a redistribution to the provinces of certain sums of money that are collected from the national taxpayers and paid into the national treasury, a redistribution of these sums to the provinces to be used in any way the provincial legislatures may see fit for provincial purposes. The other purpose of the legislation is to empower the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to collect for the provinces which wish to have their taxes collected for them, their income taxes both personal and corporate. It seems to me that this more or less exhausts the fundamental purposes of the bill, though the measure contains a good many ancillary features which can be dealt with at the committee stage.

I think it would not be amiss to say a word or two about why there should be any taxes at all collected by virtue of action of this parliament to be used for provincial purposes. When the Minister of Finance was on this side of the house he used to repeat arguments which have been made in other times and by distinguished Liberals about how desirable it would be at all times to have the taxes imposed and collected by those who spent the money. As Sir Wilfrid Laurier said in 1907 when he was proposing to increase the subsidies to the provinces, that is unexceptionable as a general abstract proposition. I do not think there is anyone who would argue that apart from attendant circumstances there is anything to be said in favour of one body collecting taxes for another body to spend. If we had ideal theoretical conditions that would probably be the way in which it could be done. But, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier also pointed out in 1907, there would have been one little difficulty. If we had adhered to this fundamental general principle there would never have been Canadian confederation and there would be no Canadian nation today. I say this because for all the provinces except Ontario—for all the original four except Ontario—and for every other province which has come into the Canadian union since, the subsidy has been a sine qua non. Without it the province could not have afforded to become part of the union. That has always been true, and for more than half a century after confederation the greater part of provincial revenues was derived from the federal treasury. I shall not deal further with that matter because I believe one of my colleagues will have more to say about it. There seems to be in certain parts of the country a profound ignorance of these plain historical facts, though these facts are easily ascertainable by anyone who wants to look them up.

Notwithstanding the fact that the foundation of confederation was subsidies, it happened in the thirties that there was a great recession in this country and for the first time we had to face the necessity either of letting people starve or of supporting them out of public funds on a great scale. The burden of doing this was far too great for any of the provinces to undertake on the basis of the taxation capacity the provinces had in those days. It was, of course, bankrupting to most of the provinces. One of the provinces which now boasts of being more financially orthodox than any other defaulted on the interest payments on its bonds. Other provinces were only saved from bankruptcy by hand-outs from the provincial treasury and, in the case of Manitoba, where I lived at that time, by the imposition of taxation of a severity which no province has ever experienced since. The problem was so great that by 1935 it had to be dealt with in one or two ways. This was recognized before the election of 1935. The present lieutenant governor of Quebec was, in fact, chairman of a committee of this house which considered this problem of federal-provincial relations in that year. This may seem odd to the ears of some people in the province in which he is now the representative of the crown, but that committee recommended centralization as a cure for this problem. That, of course, has been the historical position of the Tory party, and Mr. Gagnon and Mr. Bennett, in whose government he later served, were, of course, merely following that tradition. But after the election of 1935 a different position was taken by the new government and a great royal commission, perhaps the greatest royal commission ever appointed in this country, was established by Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Ernest Lapointe in 1937, the commission which is generally known as the Rowell-Sirois commission on dominion-provincial relations. That commission was instructed to approach this problem from the opposite point of view, not from the point of view of taking services away from the provinces and centralizing them in Ottawa, but from the point of view of finding the means to place all the provinces in a position to perform the services which the founders of confederation intended them to have. That, of course, was the historic Liberal approach to the problem and it has been the Liberal approach ever since. Unfortunately this problem was not finally solved before the second world war, and in the second world war, of course, many of the problems of the provinces disappeared because we had over full employment. During most of the years of the war every provincial government had substantial surpluses and the problem was temporarily obscured. Indeed, the easiest course at the end of the war would have been to go back to the situation as it was in 1937 or 1939 and start all over again.

That was not done. It was not done for two reasons. It was not done, in the first place, because the provincial governments did not want to do it. The man who took the initiative in bringing this question forward was the then premier of Ontario, Mr. George Drew. Neither did the federal government want a return to the old position. They felt there should be a more constructive approach to the whole problem. In 1945 and 1946 a prolonged effort was made to get an agreement on a very broad base. Unfortunately, it was not possible to get an agreement, and the federal government then made certain proposals to the provinces which all but two of them accepted—propositions which had the effect of putting the provinces in funds in order that they might provide their own services. In 1952, when those agreements expired, new agreements based on much the same foundation although somewhat changed were made, and on this occasion all the provinces participated with the exception of Quebec. Ontario, with a new premier, came in in the meantime.

It became increasingly apparent that through no fault of the federal government but through a self denying ordinance of the premier of Quebec of that day these arrangements were resulting in large sums of money being collected in nine and later in ten of the provinces and being disbursed for the benefit of people in only eight or nine. This was a situation which no Canadian interested in the unity of his country could contemplate with anything but sorrow, and the position was seriously aggravated when the financial situation of the province of Quebec became such as to cause anxiety. Because it was not willing to participate in the existing system, the government of that province put a tax on its people and this meant they were doubly taxed and getting no benefit from one of the taxes. I am not criticizing that government for that at this stage at all. I am simply stating the facts.

I well remember that at that time Mr. St. Laurent said one day: "I do not think we can go on being unfair because another government is, in our opinion, unreasonable". He and his officials then devoted a great deal of time and energy to devising a stop gap arrangement. That was recognized as a stop gap and a real search was made to find a better system in 1955 and 1956, accounts of which have been placed on Hansard times without number and I do not intend to weary the committee by repeating them now.

In my opinion a very substantial improvement was found. To paraphrase Mr. St. Laurent's words which I do not have here, it was the best thing that had been thought of up to that time. But he did not claim it was perfect. That was the system of equalization.

Now, what is equalization? What is the basis of equalization as it was established at that time? It is very simple. Mr. Harris expressed it very well in one of his budget speeches when he said that what we collect here in Ottawa in the federal treasury is collected from the people of Canada for the benefit of all the people of Canada and that it should benefit all the people of Canada equally and that that is the only basis on which we can safely proceed if we wish to have a united country.

The principle of equalization is very simple. It is that a certain fixed proportion of the revenues from the personal income tax and the corporation income tax, not fixed for all time but capable of being varied from time to time, should be allotted to the provincial governments. They should not be forced to impose the tax themselves but a certain proportion should be allotted to them for provincial purposes. In addition, any of those provinces where that allotment was less than the average of the collections of the two wealthiest provinces—that is to say, the provinces with the wealthiest taxpayers, on the average—the deficiency should be made up by an equalization payment so that the provincial governments of all our provinces would have, per head, the same amount to spend on their people out of these great national taxes. In other words, equality.

It was not quite equality, however, because to have complete equality one should have taken the highest province. There were certain objections to doing that which were put forward at the time by some of the provincial governments. It was felt that it should be the two highest provinces. I admit that personally I think it would have been more completely fair to have taken the highest, but it made very little difference because it was averaged not just between the two figures but with the population taken into account, and when that was taken into account the difference was slight whether Ontario was taken alone or whether Ontario and British Columbia were taken together.

That was the principle of equalization that was embodied in the statute of 1956. Indeed it was the basis of that statute but it was not the only basis. The statute of 1956 gave to the provincial governments a greater freedom of choice of physical expedients, plus equalization, plus redistribution from the federal treasury than any other scheme before. But equalization was paid as a matter of right. No province had to come and apply for it. The provinces did not have to sign for it. It was paid as a matter of right. Any province that wished to do so could rent to the federal government any of the three tax fields, the personal income tax, the corporation income tax or the succession duty, and not impose a tax, or it could impose any or all of the taxes, as it saw fit.

There was complete freedom. In addition to that, any province could impose any additional tax it liked although it could not get an abatement of such tax. In other words, no strings of any kind were attached except those which the provincial governments themselves wished to place upon their own freedom of action because they felt it was a better deal for them.

No province suffered through not making a tax rental agreement. The tax rental arrangement was a purely optional matter. The only thing about that which was completely new and really important was the equalization. Coupled with that, of course, there were certain provisions for stabilization.

I do not know whether or not some of the provincial premiers had a prescience about what might happen after 1956 or 1957 but some of them seemed to wish a floor on what they would get. I am sure that if they had been confident that the Liberal government was going to stay in office they would not have worried about a floor because they would have expected the kind of progress, expansion and growth which there was under the Liberal administration in 1956; but perhaps foreseeing what would happen in 1957 and fearing the financial mismanagement of the country after that date, they insisted on having a floor which was called stabilization, and this was provided. I shall not go into the details of it because this subject is not before us at the moment. As a result of what happened under the present government some of the provinces had to rely upon that stabilization to some degree and apparently are going to increasingly rely upon it.

We were told in 1957 during the course of a celebrated election campaign that all this was going to be changed, that a new era was going to dawn in federal-provincial relations, that if the Conservatives won the election there would be a state of harmony between the federal government and the provinces which had not existed before, that very much greater latitude would be given to them, that their revenues would be substantially increased and that the revenues of the federal treasury would be correspondingly reduced. Of course, this was all going to be done out of these great surpluses that the Liberals had so wickedly been building up over the years. It is perhaps not surprising that these great expectations were not fulfilled. Perhaps one cannot accurately describe them any longer as expectations; they are simply historic relics today.

Some of us recall these events and perhaps it is worth while reminding hon. members of the committee of some of them. At Massey Hall in Toronto on April 27, 1957 the present premier of Ontario was on his feet to address the opening Conservative rally of the election campaign of that year. What did Mr. Frost say? He said:

> We have been compelled to impose unfair taxation on our people because of the failure of the federal government to face up to our problems—

Not "its problems" but "our problems". I continue:

> —these are going to increase unless a just solution is found and the man who is going to find that solution is this man who is sitting on the platform.

Well, "this man" is now the Prime Minister of Canada. The solution to Mr. Frost's problem, as everyone in this chamber knows and is reminded of every time he makes a purchase in any shop in this province today was not found, except indirectly, by this man. Indeed, of all those who were disillusioned and disappointed by the outcome of the promises of that fair spring of 1957 there could be no more disillusioned man than the retiring premier of Ontario.

Mr. Drysdale: How much tax do they pay in Quebec?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know how much the tax is in Quebec; I happen to live in Ontario. I know the tax was not going to be imposed if we got a Tory government in Canada. This man was going to come up with another $100 million without any provincial taxes.

Mr. Benidickson: He did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have described those great expectations which ended up in mere historic relics.

Mr. Pallett: Look around you.

An hon. Member: Seven per cent in British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course the people of British Columbia swallowed the same kind of guff and look what they have there, as the hon. member has taken the trouble to point out.

The plain fact is, of course, that we were told that right after the election in 1957 there would be a federal-provincial conference. It would be the first thing that would happen. Well, it happened in November 1957 and, lo and behold, instead of a solution there were a few platitudinous observations made by the Prime Minister at the beginning of that conference and then the premiers stated, as they had been encouraged to by the election speeches, what they thought they ought to get out of the treasury, and then they got a cold towel in their faces from the Minister of Finance who had been adding with that capacity to add which we know is unrivalled in this country. He had found out how much this was going to cost and he told the premiers what he felt it was going to cost and suggested that they go home. He promised that they would be back in January.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I never suggested that anybody go home.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister does not think his speech was a suggestion to them to go home he has a very poor capacity, as I think he has, to calculate the effect of his own performances. At any rate, they came to pray and they went home to mourn. But they were told they were going to have another chance. This great harmony, this agreement, this understanding that was going to be reached, this new era of brotherly love and harmony between provincial premiers and the government of Canada that was to be ushered in in 1957 was going to come in 1958 at the next conference.

We know what the next conference was like. The next conference was held by way of the telegraph companies, and some of the premiers were not even present on time; they read about it first in the newspapers. The minister told them they were going to get a small slice on account of the great expectations and they were going to get it right away. They were not going to be consulted about it; it was going to be put through parliament quickly, and in the words of the minister, not on that occasion but on previous occasions, they could take it or leave it.

Well, of course, it was money; it was some more money and they took it. It was also before the 1958 election, and that is all they have ever seen. Then we had the great period of the minister's study groups, and that went on for a long time. Finally it was apparent that this whole business could not be stalled off much longer, and in 1960 the provincial premiers were again called back to Ottawa for another round. Before they came here the minister was asked whether this was with a view to improving the existing arrangements which had been so dreadful, of course, before 1957, but which were carried on all during this period, and the minister said, "Oh, no, all these agreements are in operation; this is for the next period after March 31, 1962." The premiers came here and I am sure they expected to be told what ideas were in the minds of the federal government. Well, they did not get any ideas; they did not get any suggestions in detail but they did get an assurance—and I want to read it and put it on Hansard because I think this is one of the most solemn assurances ever given to the provincial governments by any Prime Minister in the history of this country. This assurance will be found on page 10 of the report of the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference, 1960. It is part of the opening speech delivered by the Prime Minister as chairman of that conference, and the pledge reads:

> I want to make this abundantly clear on behalf of the dominion government that whatever the ultimate decision may be the principle of equalization must be preserved.
> Equalization, the second component, is a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

For provinces in which the tax potential is relatively low, this principle is the most important. It might be noted in passing that earlier arrangements did not recognize the principle of equalization explicity although it was to some extent implicit in the "per capita" basis of payment.

An then, these words:

Again I wish to emphasize that the federal government remains firmly committed to the principle of equalization and of financial assistance to those provinces in which incomes and taxable capacity are below those of the richer provinces.

What has happened to that pledge I will deal with in the second instalment of these remarks.

PROCEDURE

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Before I leave the chair may I ask leave of the house to table in English and in French the second report of the special committee appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benidickson: Is there to be a debate on it?

Mr. Speaker: If the house would permit a motion to bring the report before the house, for its consideration, to be put on the order paper for tomorrow, the report could be dealt with then if the house wished.

Mr. Benidickson: It would make it possible to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand, sir, that it would be printed in Votes and Proceedings so that every hon. member would be enabled to read it tomorrow before we would be expected to deal with it. This is my understanding, and it would seem to be a reasonable course.

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house the motion to approve the report will be put on the order paper and the report will be printed in Votes and Proceedings and be available to all hon. members for tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7.30 p.m.

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING TAX COLLECTION, ANNUAL GRANTS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-122, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into tax collection agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we adjourned at dinner time, I had just read the undertaking that had been given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on July 25 and which appears in the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference for the year 1960. I had expressed the strongest possible approval of that pledge. I did so at the resolution stage and I want again to make it very clear that I do not know of any better definition of equalization than the definition that was given by the Prime Minister. Had he stuck to the position he had taken on July 25, 1960 in this solemn undertaking to the provinces, I do not believe we would have had a very long debate tonight. While all the provincial governments would no doubt be anxious to get a larger share of the tax money, they all would recognize as was recognized certainly by the opposition in this house, that the basis of this equalization was just and fair. This basis was accepted by the government for four years.

Now, I do not want to leave out another aspect of this matter. It is true that in 1958, for the fiscal year 1958-59 and subsequent fiscal years up to the present one, the present government did increase the amount of the equalization. They did not change the basis in any respect whatever from the basis that was established on the recommendation of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Harris in 1956. However, they did increase the amount and that increase was undoubtedly a very welcome increase to the provincial governments. It was a good deal less than they would have liked to get. I might say parenthetically right here, and I am looking at a former provincial premier as I say this, that as long as we live in this vale of tears where men are imperfect, we will never have provincial governments completely satisfied with the share of the total revenues that is available to them. If they were satisfied I am afraid that many national services would be starved. This is something that anyone with any experience in these matters has to recognize.

It was recognized in 1956 by all of the premiers, even Mr. Duplessis who on all previous occasions had taken a completely intransigent attitude that this was such a marked improvement and that he would take the money, and he did take it. It was a very good thing for him that he did because he would not have been able to carry on much longer without it. It was a very good thing for the people of Quebec, too, that he did. The fact of the matter was that every premier at that conference recognized that the new basis of equalization was a great improvement over the old tax rental system. I think it is fair to say that there was no premier who would have been caught dead admitting that he had got quite enough. It might be that in retrospect they did not get quite enough. I would not be prepared to argue that point very strenuously. It may be that in the circumstances it might have been better to make the dividend a little larger than it was.

However, I am talking about the principle, and as I say this principle has been continued up to the present. There was an improvement made in the amount, quite a substantial improvement in 1958 by the present government. The present government did something else in 1958 for which I have never ceased to give them credit. I spoke for our party on this matter when the measure was first before the house and I expressed our approval of it. I commended the government for it and I have commended the government for it ever since. It is really about the only thing I can commend this government upon wholeheartedly, and its unique character makes me all the more willing to do so. I refer to the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. I say theoretically and I also say in a practical sense that I believe it would have been better if suggestions such as those which were made by Mr. Henry Hicks and by the then premier of New Brunswick (Mr. Flemming) who is now here, to establish these payments on a basis of principle had been accepted. I think those suggestions would be better than the fixed amount. I also think that it should apply in theory—I hope it would never apply in practice—to any province that found itself in similar circumstances. I think that would give it a wider and solider foundation. I am not seeking to embarrass him but I doubt that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) would disagree much with that statement. I know there are many people in the Atlantic provinces who agree with me. But notwithstanding that fact, substantially the same end was achieved by what was done.

At that time it was stressed by the government that equalization alone was not enough to meet the special needs of the Atlantic provinces and that something in addition to equalization was needed, and I stress this point. The two things were kept quite distinct. The minister emphasized that fact very strongly when he put the matter before the house, namely that they were quite separate and distinct things, and that this was something new done by the new government. It was something new and it was something which was very creditable. I doubt perhaps whether they would have done it with the same alacrity if they had had then the majority which they had after March 31, 1958. However, that is entering the field of speculation and perhaps I should not do so. I should underline the fact that they have done nothing more for the provinces since then. Once they obtained a majority they just stonewalled the provinces up until the time they finally called the conference for the next round in 1960 and they put nothing before them in July except a few pious platitudes.

Then came the debacle in October. What happened in October was this. I suppose it must have been one of those days after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) had had a bad night, when he had been thinking about his successive deficits and the terrible situation into which he had got the finances of this country. But at any rate the government decided to go right back to 1867. They said, "No more of this progress, no more of this improvement with the growth of the country, no more of this improvement with the growth of population." They said, "You will get $220 million this year and this is all you will get from now on." They said, "Of course we are not saying this is final. This is just a suggestion. We hope you will take it kindly. You can get together and divide it up in any way you like." This is the way in which you get harmony. You toss a bone to a number of—perhaps I should not describe the premiers in that way. Perhaps I had better pause, Mr. Speaker, in that analogy and let each hon. member go on for himself. As a device for the promotion of harmony, to say to 10 provincial premiers "You can have this much money; now you go off by yourselves and divide it up", I cannot think of any better way to get discord than that. It really is infallible. It is sure. It is bound to work and it did work, but not exactly in the way in which the government expected it to work. They did not get harmony but they got unanimity. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) pointed out at the resolution stage, the premiers were just falling over one another in condemning the government for the treatment they received at that conference. We all remember the Toronto Star and the anthology they had. The Minister of Finance remembers it well. He rises and denounces it every time it is mentioned. But there they were in black and white, what each of them said about it. I do not need to put it on the record again. It is in Hansard of last July 11 for those who care to read.

Mr. Chevrier: Unanimous condemnation.

Mr. Pickersgill: As my hon. friend the Acting Leader of the Opposition has said, it was unanimous condemnation. The government was rather nervous about it. Then Mr. Frost was pressed to bring down his budget in January. He rose in his place in the legislature one day in January and said, "I cannot bring down a budget because the government at Ottawa cannot make up its mind what it is going to do and I cannot bring in a budget until I find out what they are going to do." Then we asked the usual questions which it was the duty of an opposition to ask, and we received the usual replies which we receive from this government and which are not very illuminating, that some time in the future in due course if we are good boys, we would be told.

Then there was going to be a supply day the following Monday. Apparently the Minister of Finance or some other member of the government either heard or guessed that the opposition might bring in a vote of want of confidence based on federal-provincial relations. What a scurrying around there must have been over the week end because finally the minister came into the house that day and he could hardly contain himself. Of course, he does not sit in the corner but in every other respect he was like Little Jack Horner. So all of a sudden, out came the plum, namely this letter to the premiers. They had not had time to get it then. He was taking no chances with the post office or the Canadian National Telegraphs. He was getting it out through parliament. This letter told the premiers that there was going to be another conference that Santa Claus was not quite dead after all, because there was going to be what was called a growth factor in the equalization. We were having a debate, Mr. Speaker; and in the olden days in Canada the purpose of debates in this house used to be to illuminate a subject and to inform—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman changed that.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; that was changed in June 1957.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No; it was the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was changed in June 1957. Now the purpose of debate, as we have seen earlier today in another context is clearly to obscure every issue. But at any rate we asked the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member has occupied the floor most of today.

Mr. Ricard: When was closure applied?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pickersgill: We asked the Minister of Finance and we asked the Prime Minister for a couple of days—

Mr. Ricard: When was closure applied?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am just wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether you may not be impelled in the circumstances to remind the hon. gentleman. As I was saying—

Mr. Ricard: What were you saying anyway? Tell us what you were saying.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member who has the floor is entitled to an uninterupted hearing.

Mr. Ricard: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I was saying, we sought to find out what was meant by growth factor. We tried every device that was known to an opposition to get the definition of it. We obtained none. I think there is only one reason why we obtained no definition, namely that the government had no idea what the growth factor was going to be. They were faced then, as they are faced every so often, with a deadline which they were obliged to meet, just like the deadline that is coming in three or four days with regard to the C.N.R. presidency. They were faced with a deadline. Then at the last moment, just as the clock was about to strike 12, they had to produce something so they called it a growth factor, but they did not know what kind of growth factor it was going to be. They had not even decided what kind of fertilizer to use at that time.

Mr. Cardiff: There is a great deal of it flying about now.

Mr. Pickersgill: All they knew was that if they stuck by this principle that they had proposed in October, this $220 million and no more, they would have had the whole country against them, led by the premier of Ontario. So they had to do something about it. When the conference came in February they produced the scheme that they have now produced and which I intend to try to analyse very briefly and in a non-statistical way.

I think we have to start from the premise that the government was very irked by certain effects of the equalization plan. They were very irked by the fact that a very considerable equalization payment was made to the government of Quebec. Somehow or other they do not seem to have the same enthusiasm for the government of Quebec that they had in May and June of 1960. I do not know why, but they do not.

They were also very much irked in more ways than one by the government of British Columbia. They felt that government ought to be taught a lesson. They were apparently outraged by the fact that the government of Alberta got a substantial equalization payment and they felt something had to be done about that because Alberta was apparently considered too rich to deserve it.

They were also concerned about the fact that somehow or other, without spending much money, they had to scratch around and find a little more for the premier of Ontario; not, of course, what they had promised; not what the advertisements had promised in 1957, but another dividend. He was getting pretty restive after four years and he was not going to be content even with the sales tax unless he got some more out of the federal treasury; not directly, because Ontario got nothing directly, but indirectly from the federal government withdrawing from the field and leaving him to cultivate it at no extra cost to the taxpayer.

So they devised a scheme which they were pleased to call equalization but which is an utter travesty of equalization. They decided, instead of equalizing revenues so that all Canadians wherever they lived were treated alike, to use the national average as the basis. What effect did that have? That had been one of the formulae that had been considered in 1955 and 1956—I know that very well—and rejected because it was so unfair. But the government decided to try to use it. They got results from using it which would have been so unfavourable to the poorer provinces—in fact, to half the provinces—that they simply did not dare to produce that by itself.

Even so it was not doing enough harm to Alberta's position. Therefore they thought they would bring in some notion of taxes on natural resources. They got from the bureau of statistics some mysterious figure, and then they tossed it into the salad, mixed it up a little bit more and got the machine to crank out a figure to see how that worked. That did the trick as far as Alberta and British Columbia were concerned. It cut them down. It of course improved Ontario's position quite materially; and it cut Quebec down, which they were very anxious to do. This would have been fine, but it also cut down Manitoba. They just did not see how they could possibly cut Manitoba down.

Mr. Benidickson: They were following John then.

Mr. Pickersgill: After all, Manitoba had a Tory government. So they had to start the mixer working again and see if they could throw something else into the hopper, some other factor of some kind or other, and get something that would come out politically right. Whether is was just, whether it was fair, whether it was based on any principle did not matter, as long as it would bring the right political effect.

Then they said, "Well, if any province under our new scheme is going to get less than it got under the old scheme, it can stick to the old scheme". That fixed up Manitoba. Well, it did not fix up Manitoba, as I will show in a minute, but at least it did not make Manitoba's position quite as bad as it would otherwise have been. But of course it had the terrible disadvantage that it applied to Quebec also, and to Saskatchewan.

What has happened, sir, as a result of using all these shenanigans instead of following a basis of principle? All these various factors were put in to try to achieve at no cost, or very little cost to the treasury, some predetermined result. Then there was another gimmick for the Atlantic provinces. Of course, under this new equalization formula they were away below what they would have been under the old formula. So the minister said, "Toss them another $10 million under the Atlantic provinces grants and call it equalization. Mix it all up together. Then say, after mixing up the equalization, the Atlantic provinces grants and everything else, that they are not to get any less than they got before". We remember when the minister brought in the Atlantic provinces grants. In the first place he said they were separate from equalization. They were—

An hon. Member: Which you approved.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which we approved and which I still approve. He said they were something separate and distinct, which was needed, quite apart from equalization. But now they are in the mix, in the salad, as the machine turns around.

This had a wonderful effect because it really produced a result that was better for Prince Edward Island, and for Nova Scotia for the time being it was quite a considerable improvement. For Newfoundland there was some improvement, too, especially when account was taken of something that should never have been connected with this in any way whatsoever; that is what Newfoundland is entitled to as its constitutional right under the terms of union, which has also been mixed up in this formula.

However, it had this wonderful effect, that it really cut New Brunswick down. What was given with the one hand was taken away with the other. For some reason or another New Brunswick was not quite so popular with the present government after June, 1960 as it had been before. So they got another nice little political gimmick worked into this.

What is the result? The result, as the minister showed in the tables he put before us on July 11, is that the difference between the old scheme as projected for this year and the new scheme is $17 million approximately. It is costing the treasury $17 million more, and of that $17 million Ontario gains $18 million and the rest of the provinces lose $1 million. Stripped of all the other elements, that is what happened. That is shown in these tables.

Mr. Benidickson: But Ontario did not get $100 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ontario, of course, was very far below what "this man"—to quote the premier of Ontario, as I quoted him before—was going to produce. What did Mr. Frost do? He brought down his budget then, after this scheme was out. He decided the game was up. He brought down his budget and as a memorial to the Diefenbaker-Fleming government he established the sales tax. Being a realist and a politician he took good care to point out that it was not his fault that this sales tax was imposed but that the fault lay elsewhere. There is no doubt that as compared with the expectations he was properly entitled to say the fault did lie elsewhere.

Let us look at the result by provinces. British Columbia and Alberta, because they are above the national average, are actually going to get less next year than they are getting this year. Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan will get precisely what they would have got had there been no change whatsoever. New Brunswick gets very little more than it would have got had there been no change—substantially less than a million dollars. The other three Atlantic provinces will get substantially more for the time being. As I say, the one big gainer is Ontario. If the federal government had been prepared to recommend that the provincial government should get a larger share of the tax revenues than they were getting before, if they had felt they could afford to make such an offer, I would not begrudge it to any province on a fair basis, but I do not think anyone could argue that to increase the total amount by $17 million and have $18 million more go to one province is the way to promote that spirit of justice and fair play or that harmony which the Prime Minister promised would be the result of his substitution for the previous administration.

I had hoped—but I have gone on too long—to say something about the attitude of the various provincial premiers toward this proposal. However, most of the provincial premiers are articulate and have made their views known. It is certainly not a happy chorus that we hear. Not one of them has expressed himself as satisfied. As I said earlier, I do not think that is to be expected. Unlike the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who were convinced that if they could only sit over there they could make all the premiers happy, I never thought that was possible. I do not think hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches think so now, either. If they do, I advise them to go out and have another interview with Mr. Bennett—if they can find him. There are other premiers whom they could visit. Nothing would give me greater pleasure, for example, than to be able to eavesdrop at the door when the premier of Manitoba is expressing his real views about the way Manitoba has been treated by this government. If there is one government which has loyally, almost slavishly, supported the present government it has been the government of Manitoba, and it has got nothing but kicks, delays and lack of consideration for its pains. Evidently, the view is: you can count on good old Duff. He said "Where Dief goes, Duff will go, too." So there is no need to do anything for him. That seems to be the attitude toward Manitoba and it has been well reflected, I may say, in the treatment of Manitoba in this whole situation. Knowing the way this government approaches all these problems, perhaps one cannot blame them for taking an attitude of that kind toward the government of Saskatchewan, but one would have thought there would have been a little decent feeling toward poor Duff.

There is just one other thing I want to say. The Minister of Finance, speaking on the resolution stage, made one or two of his usual modest and accurate claims in regard to this matter and I think I should say a word or two about that. The minister said, as reported on page 7910 of Hansard:

> Although it has greatly improved the financial substance of the present arrangements this government has recognized the weaknesses of the tax rental system which it inherited, both from the provincial and federal standpoint, and has become increasingly convinced of the need for a new approach which would give greater freedom and responsibility to the provincial government and which would be compatible with the constitution.

I may say that this government did not inherit the tax rental system at all. The tax rental system as a system of redistributing revenues was abandoned by the previous government in 1956 in favour of equalization. That was done by the previous government, and no province was financially the loser, whether it had a tax rental agreement or not. The tax rental system was a pure convenience, and nothing more, from 1957 onward. It was an option which the provinces could take if they wished. No province had to take it in order to get the benefits of the equalization scheme. That is well known to the Minister of Finance, yet he talks jargon like this. Mr. Drew and Mr. Duplessis had a point in 1945 and 1946 when they said that in order to get the benefits of this scheme they were compelled to sign an agreement. But that was all done away with by the previous administration in 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Ricard: What did you say, then?

Mr. Pickersgill: In 1955 and 1956 I supported the abandonment of the tax rental system for the equalization system, though at that time the change was attacked and opposed by the Minister of Finance and by most of his colleagues who were in the house at that time. The plain fact is that the tax rental system has been nothing but a convenience from April 1, 1957, onwards, and there were no tax rental agreements except with those provincial governments which wanted them because their people did not want duplication of taxes.

There is only one reason why these arrangements have been abandoned by the present government in favour of this tax collection system, and it is this: it is because the minister has these mountainous deficits and wants to get a statistical reduction in his expenditures and in his deficits and create a statistical situation which would be different and which would be to this advantage. That is the only reason why the people of those provinces which do not want to abandon the convenience of the tax rental arrangement are being denied the opportunity of continuing those arrangements. This is not going to change anything. It will change nothing to have the taxes imposed by the legislature of Manitoba, say, and collected by this government. It will have no effect except that the minister can come here and say he has saved two or three million dollars in this way while the provinces have inflated their budgets. The minister will go around boasting that this is a real economy when it is nothing of the kind. Really, it is a cheap political dodge.

The other thing the minister says is that this will give the provinces greater freedom. As to that, under the present arrangements Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan have no freedom at all. I selected those three provinces for the reason that they got more under the old arrangements than they do under the new one. They would have to put their taxes up astronomically before they could make any gain. By putting up their taxes all they would do is to save the minister some real money. In other words what this new scheme has done has been to put Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan into a strait-jacket they were not in under the old equalization system. That is really fundamentally true, too, for the Atlantic provinces as I think the minister will see if he has had time yet to read the correspondence that was tabled the other day by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is fundamentally untrue.

Mr. Pickersgill: The phoniest part of this whole business was expressed by the minister in this way as reported at page 7911 of Hansard which may be summarized as follows: In short, the provinces would reassume their constitutional rights and responsibilities to impose and vary their tax levies as they saw fit.

In the first place, no province ever gave up any of those rights at any time.

An hon. Member: What about the War Measures Act?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not even under the War Measures Act. No province at any time in the history of this country has ever given up its constitutional right to tax; never, under any system. It is true that in return for very substantial payments which in every case amounted to more than the province could have raised from an equivalent rate of tax that the provinces voluntarily agreed not to impose—

Mr. Ricard: What is that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Such hair splitting.

Mr. Pickersgill: This minister dares to talk about hair splitting.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is engaged in hair splitting.

Mr. Pickersgill: This minister whose words I have been analysing to some extent dares to talk about hair splitting. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that proof of the fact that no province ever gave up any constitutional right is that Quebec would never enter into these agreements. If any constitutional rights had been taken away, surely they could not have been taken away from some provinces and not from others. The fact of the matter is that in 1947 the government in its wisdom saw fit to make offers which could be accepted or rejected for the rental of these tax fields and in every case, with respect to every province, what was paid for them was a good deal more than that province could have raised out of taxation in this field. Those are the facts.

Mr. Ricard: Take it or leave it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, the hon. gentleman is perfectly right. That is exactly what it was. There was no compulsion, they could take it or leave it. But what they could take or leave was a figure arrived at after two years of thorough discussions, a figure that was about 50 per cent higher than the figure suggested at the original conference in 1945, and a figure far beyond the dreams, hopes or expectations of any of the provincial premiers before that. It was the greatest advance ever made. Of course, it was not at all perfect and had grave imperfections to which I have referred. I have attempted to be very fair about this matter, sir. I have pointed out how at various stages these imperfections were taken away and I say there would have been more to take away. I am perfectly confident that if Mr. St. Laurent and a minister of his government had this thing to do again there would be no abandonment of principle in this matter. We would have stuck to sound principles but there would have been improvements in the scheme.

The minister said the provinces would reassume their constitutional rights and responsibilities to impose and vary their tax levies as they saw fit. It is true that Ontario can impose them as it sees fit. It has imposed one to make it fit, because it could not get the "fit" it was promised by this government, as has been pointed out and as we all know. Even people from outside Ontario who come to the capital contribute to make up the deficit created by the failure of the expectations of Mr. Frost as a result of those large promises made in the spring of 1957.

What we have had here is a poor substitution for a system based upon principle, equity and justice, a system which on July 25, 1960 the Prime Minister solemnly promised would be continued. Everybody believed it was going to be continued. We have had a melange, a salad, politically concocted to suit the convenience of the present government, based on no principle whatever and based upon a "growth factor" that the government itself was unable to define for at least three weeks after it invented the phrase.

We have had in this scheme not merely a substitution of a vastly inferior arrangement for a fair and equitable one but also a repudiation of a solemn undertaking given by the Prime Minister to the premiers of the provinces in July 1960. I say that a measure of this kind does not deserve the support of the house and, for my part, it is a measure which I could not possibly support.

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, it was with some shock and disappointment that this afternoon we found the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) unwilling to say any more about the dominion-provincial relationship in fiscal matters which had been brought before the house some months ago. For a period of three months no discussion has taken place on this matter. Hon. members were given to believe and I think the Canadian people certainly believed that this was a matter in respect of which there would be considerable give and take, a matter in respect of which there would be negotiation and in respect of which the ideas and concepts of the provincial premiers would be taken into account. It was believed that their arguments and suggestions would be weighed against those of the Minister of Finance and his experts and that out of this amalgam, out of this long term period of thoughtful soul searching a new proposal would be brought forth. And yet, although only two of the ten provinces are going to be helped by this proposal and although seven of the provincial premiers have come out publicly against it, the Minister of Finance chooses to say nothing. One might almost believe that the words which appear at the base of the coat of arms of Canada might no longer be "a mare usque ad mare", but "take it or leave it".

We hoped there would be a wide discussion this afternoon and evening but there will be none and therefore it would seem that we are back at the point where we were last June when we discussed this at the resolution stage.

I am not going to take up the time of the house by reading what provincial premiers have said, by bringing forward statistics, by reading from editorials which appeared in newspapers across the nation. I simply wish to point out the three great principles which we believe these proposals violate. First, they will not over the years give provinces sufficient money to carry out their constitutional tasks. Second, they will not ensure that an individual living in any part of Canada will have equal opportunity for all the various services with every other individual in any other part of Canada. Finally, they are a negation of the principle that the dominion government must assume responsibility for fiscal and monetary planning at the national level which will ensure a full employment society and a better way of life.

As the Prime Minister took us back through history this afternoon and recounted with some validity, although I must say it was a misuse of history to some extent, that the party now in power had always had progressive views in the area of railways—as I say, it had a certain measure of validity—I could not help thinking of that area where the first prime minister of this nation certainly had one blind spot, and that was in the area of federalism because Sir John A. Macdonald saw the provinces as merely large municipalities. Indeed, Sir John A. Macdonald would have been just as happy to see no provinces at all, no federal system at all, but rather a unitary state set up within the boundaries of this country. As a result, I think we have a kind of historic blind spot when it comes to dealing with the problem of federal-provincial relationships on the part of this government.

We in this group believe that there is a role for the provinces, and it is more than simply accepting conditional grants; it is more than simply carrying out the administration of federally initiated programs; it is more than simply a level of government which transfers money from above to below. We believe that the provinces can play a very dynamic role. In fact one might even suggest that the length of time we have sat in this chamber would indicate that perhaps the dominion government has bitten off more than it can chew. We have debated many things which will be redebated in all the provincial legislatures. While the provincial legislatures sit perhaps eight, ten weeks or 12 weeks, we sit from November to the following September. One might wonder whether a redivision not only of money but also of time, energy and talk might well be one subject to which we could put our minds.

To return to the first point, we believe that the twentieth century and all the problems of the twentieth century in an industrial society demand to quite an extent monetary and fiscal planning at the national level, which may not be enough. We are handicapped by giving over taxation responsibilities to the provincial governments. We feel that there must be some form of anti-cyclical budgeting. This is, of course, what we have been appealing for in vain over the last two or three years. But now that the recession is over this is the time when we shall need, and need very badly, what might be called a slowdown, possibly by means of fiscal and monetary policy, to stop a galloping inflation or a galloping expansion, and a realization that fiscal and monetary policy at the national level can accelerate our economy if such a recession should occur again. We feel that by giving over these powers in certain areas, as has been done by this system, the dominion government will be in a very serious position when it comes to adjusting the economy of this nation and finding a pattern whereby this nation's economy can find solutions in the coming days. This is the first reason and the first principle which we feel these dominion-provincial agreements violate.

The second, of course, and perhaps the most important is that of equalization. In spite of all the protests of the Minister of Finance and his experts, the form of equalization which is suggested by this system is not equalization at all, as has been stated already. He that hath will be given more.

It must be recognized that in a country the size of Canada, with its tremendous differences in resources, with the effect that national policies, tariffs and transportation will have on various people in various sections, some adjustment must be made. We believe that the adjustment of equalization that has been established over the last 20 years or so is one of the most valuable contributions that this nation has made to the whole concept of federalism throughout the world.

We believe—as I am sure all hon. members believe—that a man in no matter what part of Canada should have the same opportunity for the same kind of health services; that any young person should have the same opportunity for education; that all the opportunities for progress should be the same in each province. We believe that this change in the equalization system will not bring this about. All must share in the nation's wealth. This is where we feel this system very sadly indeed negates what has gone before. Surely, Mr. Speaker, during the 1930's this nation fought its way through with a constitutional division of powers and fiscal powers which made it very difficult indeed to deal with the unemployment and other dreadful problems of that era.

The fathers of confederation knew nothing of the difficulties of the twentieth century; but at the end of that period we came to a solution, and the Rowell-Sirois report stands as one of the great symbols of Canada's looking ahead at that point. Unfortunately the second world war came along just at the time when Canada would have taken a major step in the direction of equalization. But at least during the war we did make, I think, very important plans to adjust our policies to give a high degree of equalization.

The Rowell-Sirois report, of course, expected experts to be able to base the equalization on need. Whether that is possible I do not know. Whether we can determine the need of Newfoundland fishermen with respect to that of say the western farmer, and that of the British Columbia lumberman with that of the Ontario labourer. I do not know. I am not sure whether that can be done. But surely we have been moving in that direction, a direction which I do not think anyone in Canada wants to have reversed. That was the watershed of dominion-provincial relations, and it was with the greatest sadness and the greatest concern that this party has seen a reversal of that trend since that most important watershed. We believe that it will have the most serious effects as the smaller provinces, or the less wealthy provinces, are forced to raise their taxes in areas which will be unpopular. We know, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a popular subject anyway. Dominion-provincial relations always are politically unpopular because they come right down to the pocketbook of the individual Canadian; they come right down to the most unpopular task which any government has to do, and that is collect taxes. But surely, in the enlightened age in which we hope we live this should not stand in our way in continuing the trend which has been moving in the last years toward greater and greater equalization.

As the poor provinces increase their corporation taxes, their succession duties, their sales taxes and so on, industry will move to those provinces which can afford not to increase them. We will have more concentration of industry in the rich provinces and the rich provinces will get richer and the poor provinces will become poorer in spite of any protests in the opposite direction. This is the second reason why this party believes that this is a backward step. We believe also that it will create a jungle of taxation. Someone called it the jungle of the 1930's.

We do believe that without at least some order in the tax collecting policy of this country, there will be chaos. We feel that this would be most unfortunate and most unjust.

The third and final reason we feel that this is a negation of government responsibility is that over the years the provinces will lose their power to carry out the real objectives of their existence. We deny that the system will provide more money to the provinces. The Minister of Finance says that in the last few years of recession the opportunities for taxation have decreased and so the opportunities of the federal powers to give money to the provinces have also decreased. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this situation exists as well in so far as the provinces are concerned. No doubt the provinces have had to increase their taxes and apply sales taxes or gasoline taxes whereas, according to the Minister of Finance, the federal government has been able to lower its taxes. The burden on the provinces, therefore, is even greater. We would hope that this government is not now, at this stage of its administration, deciding we are going to have a continued recession and that this will continue to be a problem over the years in terms of adjusting our relationship with the provinces.

We feel, and I think very properly, that for these reasons the democratic party cannot support this particular proposal. We feel that it will emphasize the disparity in the levels of prosperity in the various provinces. For example, the 5 per cent increase will yield $2.50 per capita in Ontario but will yield only 60 cents per capita in Newfoundland. The Minister of Finance has decided he will say no more. He indicates that he will stand where he did last June. We have put our position and we feel this is unfair to the provinces. We feel it destroys equalization and, finally, we feel it is a negation of the responsibilities of the government. We cannot, therefore, possibly support this measure.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the remarks of the learned opposition members on this matter, and I was more particularly amused by the lengthy tirades of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

It is always exhilarating to hear him discourse because I might say that not only in his speeches, but also in his general behaviour, he seems to have the lyrical, and even the romantic touch.

He mentioned, for instance, that he would very much like to eavesdrop at the door when the premier of Manitoba and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) met with regard to those problems. But what was he doing when he was an active member of the former Liberal government?

Now, did he eavesdrop on the recriminations which not only the Canadian taxpayers, but the spokesmen of all provinces came to voice here in Ottawa, or did he rather at that time—as he seems unaware of such complaints—enjoy walking the famous dog Pat in the enchanting lanes of Ottawa?

We recall that, since 1945, the unyielding and centralizing attitude of the former Liberal government gave rise to many protests throughout the country. For instance, you only have to look briefly through some statements of provincial premiers, of which, to my mind, the oddest is one made in 1956 by the premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Smallwood, who, himself a Liberal threatened, under Liberal rule, to dissociate himself from the Canadian federation if Ottawa persisted in denying him fair treatment.

In 1956, Mr. Frost also stated the following:

> That is the same government as the one which resorts to mean tactics in a field of taxation that belongs to Ontario as much as to Ottawa.
> Here, in Ontario, in order to make ends meet, we must subject our people to a form of double taxation. It is a shame that things should come to this, at the very time when Nova Scotia announces a deficit and when New Brunswick is faced with financial problems.

During the same period, Mr. Fines, the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, had this to say:

> The share of tax revenues allowed to the provinces by Ottawa, under the new agreements, is entirely inadequate to enable them to meet the costs of services of provincial and local governments.

Mr. Patterson, the treasurer of New Brunswick, concluded his budget speech by stating:

> The basis of provincial taxes is too narrow to meet the increasing demands made upon the province and its municipalities in peacetime.

Not only did the previous Liberal government thrust on the people of Canada and the provincial governments intransigent and centralizing points of view, but in the application of the tax and allowances sharing, it acted quite unjustly, as it distributed the money according to a principle that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate still wants to uphold today.

We also remember what happened in 1956 when certain provinces that had received too much money from Ottawa were forced, after having started to spend their provincial budgets, to return certain amounts to the federal government. Those poorer provinces are Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. On the other hand, the richer provinces—of course, they had received less—received more afterwards, even during the administration of their budgets for that year. All this shows that the complicated system initiated by the Liberal government had caused glaring injustice to the provinces and created confusion in public administration. It is for that reason that the people of Canada, conscious of the turn of events, acted positively in 1957 by showing the government that had initiated those unacceptable measures that it was time to come back to confederation, the sound ideas of the Canadian constitution, the British North America Act of 1867.

The new formula is an effort towards decentralization. In fact, it is under a false principle that one government collects taxes that are spent by another government. These are not new statements, and I mean to stay above party politics. In fact, it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier who enunciated that principle in 1887 when he said that one government should not collect taxes to be spent by another government.

In 1930, the late Mr. Mackenzie King recalled the same principle. He then pointed out that it was a faulty principle which made it possible for one government to collect taxes and for another government, to spend the money through subsidies; however, this is what the previous Liberal government did progressively from 1945 to 1957. It seems that after 1945, the late Mr. Mackenzie King had forgotten the sincerity of his reference and had even opened the door for his successors to continue in this anticonstitutional direction.

The new scheme brought down by the present Progressive Conservative government is an effort towards decentralization. It seeks to let the federal government collect its own taxes and to let the provinces recover their fiscal freedom and receive their share of the taxes. It is therefore a return to the confederative deal, to our Canadian constitution, for the Canadian provinces have powers which are eloquently set out in the British North America Act, especially in clause 92 thereof.

In fact, what matters is not only to have the powers, but also the financial ways and means required to exercise them; that is why the terms of clause 92 of the British North America Act, besides allocating the powers to the provinces, provide the financial means required for their application.

This new scheme is a return to the spirit of the Canadian constitution. The provinces will thus progressively recover their fiscal freedom. In this regard, may I briefly quote from the views of Mr. Gerard Filion, editor of the newspaper Le Devoir, as set out in an editorial which was published on February 25, 1961. This is what he had to say:

> From a purely constitutional point of view, the Diefenbaker proposals are a definite improvement. The provinces, in any case those which value their freedom, should be satisfied.

A little farther, in the same editorial, Mr. Filion continues:

> If the provinces want to recover some ground, they must not be content with claiming more money from Ottawa, but rather offer to accept greater responsibilities.

That is precisely the nature, the substance and the purpose of this new formula, to give the provinces of Canada their fiscal freedom. Of course, it is not complete, it is not perfect, but it is a step in the right direction. It is a lead, an open door away from centralization; it is a decentralizing action aimed at giving back to the provinces the fiscal freedom which they clamoured for, and, although some did not clamour for it, deep down they have always longed to be given back their responsibilities.

So what is the substance of that formula? After March 31, 1962, Ottawa will no longer pay any fiscal allowances to the provinces, but the provinces will be able to levy themselves, or through Ottawa, free of charge, their own share of the three fields of direct taxation.

Although the federal government agreed to reduce its share in the three fields of direct taxation on the basis of specific amounts each year during the next tax-sharing period, it volunteered to levy provincial taxes in those fields at any rate of taxation established by the provinces.

This means that the provinces will be able to decide on taxation rates superior or inferior to the federal withdrawal in those fields. The only reservation imposed by the federal government is that the provincial tax rate shall be determined according to the same definition of taxable revenue as under the federal Income Tax Act.

The federal government agreed to reduce its personal income tax rate by 16 per cent for the taxation year 1962, and by another 1 per cent each year until the federal withdrawal reaches 20 per cent. With regard to the corporation income tax, the federal government agreed to continue reducing its own corporation income tax by 9 per cent of the taxable corporation revenue. It is to be noted that the federal withdrawal in the corporation income tax field is not 9 per cent of the federal levies on corporation income, but 9 per cent of the taxable corporation income.

As the current federal corporation income tax currently levied—with the exception of the old age security tax—is 47 per cent for corporations with a taxable income over $35,000 and 18 per cent for corporations with a lesser income, the federal corporation income tax is about 41 per cent of the total taxable corporation income. If the federal withdrawal of 9 per cent is expressed as a percentage of the current federal income tax levy, rather than as a percentage of taxable revenue, the federal withdrawal will be approximately 22 per cent. In the first year of the new arrangements, the federal govvernment itself will levy 84 per cent, 78 per cent, and 50 per cent of its current revenue in those three fields and 80 per cent, 78 per cent and 50 percent in the last year of the new agreements.

[Mr. Allard.]

The federal government has also agreed to maintain the equalization principle, but on a wider basis in accordance with the national average. Instead of equalizing payments to the provinces until they reach the yield of those three direct taxation fields in the two provinces where that yield was highest per capita, the federal government now offers the provinces an equalization payment equal to the difference between the yield of those three taxation fields per capita in each province, and the national average of the per capita yield of those three taxes, as well as an amount equal to the per capita amount by which provincial per capita revenue from natural resources has fallen below national average yield of provincial revenue from natural resources. In order to determine the amount to be attributed to the equalization factor based on natural resources, provincial revenue from natural resources per capita was established by taking 50 per cent of a moving scale for three years of provincial revenues from that source.

It has been decided to equalize provincial revenues from natural resources at 50 per cent of a moving scale over three years, for several reasons. As the provincial tax rates on natural resources and revenues derived from them vary from one province to the other and from one resource to the other, it was thought proper to consider those differences by using in the equalization formula 50 per cent rather than 100 per cent of revenues from resources. The three year average was used to avoid the marked differences sometimes shown in that source of revenue due to natural disasters or to the sale of resources.

In addition to equalization based on the national average, all the provinces are assured that they will not get less under the new tax rates of 16-9-50, 17-9-50, 18-9-50, etc., above and over equalization payments based on the national average than they would have received with the normal tax rates of 13-9-50, with equalization based on the average of the two provinces where yield was the highest in the previous year or on the average for the last two years of the current agreements, whichever may be the highest. In addition, the provinces which are under the national average according to the new formula have a guarantee that they will never get less in normal tax yield and equalization based on the national average than they would have received in the same year through an extrapolation of the agreements now in force.

This is the substance of this formula now before the house and examined from several angles.

It is obvious that this formula must show its worth. We must let it be implemented for some time, but we can already rest assured that it represents a real effort of this Conservative administration to decentralize and to gradually restore to the provinces their tax fields and their fiscal responsibilities. For we still want to believe in the existence and actuality of the constitution of 1867, we still want to have faith in the benefits of Canadian federalism. It must be recognized that this Canadian federalism of ours is based on an association of autonomous governments which in their activities, as described in articles 91 and 92 of the constitution, have their own powers and also their own means of financing in order to exercise such powers. And Canadian federalism clearly establishes that the various governments shall not be subjected one to another, but so co-ordinated. Those various governments, due to that federalist character of our constitution, must co-operate in common schemes, as it is stipulated, for instance, in article 95, as regards agriculture and immigration.

The new formula seeks a reconciliation after so many years of separation, after so many years of dislocation, for if we look back over the years we find that an agreement between various governments, in terms of our current economy, presents to our governments problems that are different from those of 1867. Because of particular circumstances resulting from an economic depression, or a war, governments have made concessions to each other; but after having benefited by concessions, the Liberal government maintained its hold, continued war in the fiscal field up to 1957, instead of realizing that the fiscal and economic war was over since 1945. Some have taken advantage of the confusion that happened in fiscal relations between the governments to interfere in fiscal fields that they did not own. The federal government took possession of taxation fields like personal income tax and corporation income tax and succession duties. Of course, it was not directly and absolutely forbidden by the constitution to impose direct taxation, because those three taxes I just mentioned are direct taxes; but the constitution states quite clearly that the federal government cannot levy taxes in those fields when the taxes are to be used for provincial purposes. What was wrong in the Liberal government's approach, was to seek to follow a centralizing policy with paternalism by distributing to the provinces certain amounts of money that it collected in fields that belonged to the provinces.

There are also provinces which, during those years have entered indirect taxation fields, while those fields under section 91, paragraph 3, belonged to the federal government.

In this last instance, I mean indirect taxes on retail sales, taxes on security transfers, on meals, on theater tickets and on gasoline and oil. Those indirect taxes collected by the provinces, were called direct taxes by the privy council because they were collected directly from the final consumer without including them in the initial price.

It must be remembered that during all those constitutional years existed such chaos and difficulties, the strait-jacket mentioned tonight by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). The result of those trends is that various governments intruded into taxation fields not clearly devolving upon them under the Canadian constitution. In addition the Liberal government was claiming unflinchingly for paternalistic reasons that it had to levy taxes, and through subsidies let provincial governments spend those amounts. That was meant to destroy the principle of responsible government which we have enjoyed for many years, because a responsible government, under the very spirit of our constitution, is the one which levies the taxes and spends them. It is accountable to the Canadian people for its tax collections and that responsibility does not devolve on any other government.

I welcome this new formula put forward by the Progressive Conservative government.

One might say, like the Conservative party of 1867 which was at the origin of the Canadian confederation, that it is the Conservative party of 1961 which, after so many difficulties, such confusion, and despite the acrobatics of the previous Liberal administration, makes serious, commendable and sincere efforts to return to the spirit of confederation.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation brought forward before the House of Commons as well as the topics discussed last year by the interested parties at the dominion-provincial conferences show that we are at a turning point of our constitutional venture, for we shall soon bring our constitution back home, and we shall then be able to amend it with the consent of the provinces. I take this opportunity to offer my warmest congratulations to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) for the efforts he has made, in conjunction with all the provincial ministers to repatriate our Canadian constitution, so that we shall be able to say, not only in principle but also in fact, that we have at long last a sovereign constitution, that we are able to amend without having to refer to any other country. By amending our constitution, I do not mean that we shall upset it, but rather clarify it, define it in clearer terms, and correct the incongruities brought about through the years by governmental practices and interventions.

In this context, it can be said that the present Progressive Conservative government presides over this wonderful trend towards the very spirit of the confederation deal, for if the present central government needs resources and particular revenues to meet its ever-increasing commitments, it nevertheless remains deeply human, and understands that the autonomous and sovereign provinces must preserve their economic independence by maintaining the fields of taxation granted to them by the constitution. The passing of the legislation now before us is the only way to achieve this, and I shall be glad to vote for it because it opens the door to the confederation deal of 1867.

That is why the province of Quebec is in favour of it. She will not be content with aleatory and illusory powers; she wants financial powers so that the province can carry on its responsibilities.

In practice when the representatives of the provinces and of the dominion government meet together to amend the constitution, adjustments will be brought about. But there is a field where Quebec will allow no change whatsoever, that is, the field of higher education, whose importance is clearly set out in clause 93 of our constitution, which grants to the provinces exclusive jurisdiction over this matter.

Without any reflection on the approach of other provinces—we, French Canadians from the province of Quebec, respect the views of the other provinces, and that is probably part of our worth, for we love our country and have great respect for the views of our fellow citizens—we keep a jealous watch over our own prerogatives. That is why the province of Quebec remains steadfast in its attitude, no matter which party is in power. Whether it be at the time of the Hon. Messrs. Taschereau, Duplessis, Sauve or Barrette—and even under Mr. Jean Lesage—the premiers of Quebec unfailingly voice the intent and desire of a whole people living in this corner of our Canadian land, to retain absolute control in the field of education, for, while we respect and admire other cultures, we are proud of our own, we want to remain masters of that culture, and direct it in our own way.

In order to do that, we need financial means; that explains the stand taken by the province of Quebec. Regardless of political parties, nothing is bad or evil and it is in that spirit that everything is done.

We respect the views of the other provinces, of our fellow citizens, but we demand that others understand us so that with the assistance of the present government, we may recover progressively the prerogatives which are dear to us in that field.

Last year, the present government reached an agreement with the late Hon. Mr. Sauve on a formula with respect to university grants. That was a step in the right direction and it enabled the province to collect the money which had accumulated.

We must always keep in mind that when the federal government takes a step, it must not favour only one province, but must introduce legislation which is suitable for all the provinces of Canada. It was understood that under that formula, the corporation income tax was to be raised by 1 per cent and that in return the corporations would benefit from an equal rebate with respect to the federal corporation income tax. Recently, I read in the newspapers—I did not have the chance to read the official correspondence—that the premier of the province of Quebec has refused to accept that formula on the grounds that he would accept the formula if it did not require the provinces to waive a certain surplus.

I would not say that the present premier of the province of Quebec is entirely wrong, but what I hold against him is that the formula in question, even though it was not perfect, was a step in the right direction since it was most advantageous to the universities of the province, while the latter were still getting direct assistance from the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. Lesage is now closing the door, probably for mere political considerations. I would not want to impute any motives to him, but I find his attitude most amazing. The autonomy he advocates is a negative one. He has not suggested any other formula, he has just closed the door and complicated matters. I wish he would follow the example of his predecessor, the Hon. Paul Sauve, and come up with an adequate formula of his choice.

I am sure that the present federal government will give close consideration to that formula. I hope the premier will act immediately so that the province may not suffer from any delay.

As for myself, I should like to make four suggestions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in this field of education. I suggest:

1. That this government publicly state its intention of considering as coming exclusively within the provincial jurisdiction all representations to increase the payments now made by the government of Canada, either to provincial governments or to teaching institutions, by way of grants or assistance of any kind to education at all levels;

2. That the government recognize the principle that, in due time, the control and distribution of the various kinds of assistance to education at present provided by the federal government should be returned to the provinces;

3. That the solution to the problem be sought by possible inclusion of the federal educational grants in the equalization payments provided the provinces under the present tax arrangements, and that both these payments be amalgamated and considered together when the renewal of tax-sharing arrangements is discussed;

4. That the foregoing be immediately implemented as far as university grants are concerned with the understanding, if need be, that the federal government shall be prepared—unless otherwise decided by the fiscal conference—to increase each year the equalization payments by the sum by which the university grants were to be increased, that is $1.50 per capita according to the increase in population.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, this bill raises the question of federal-provincial tax relations. It is a complicated problem and I shall try to deal with it in the most objective way possible.

A moment ago, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who indicated that the new formula which forms the basis of this bill infringes the principle of the legislation introduced by the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent's administration and that the application of that formula will be detrimental to the great majority of the provinces.

The first point I wish to make is that, by introducing this bill, the Conservative government admits its inability to find a basis of agreement which would be more beneficial to the provinces than the previous one. The government must be blamed, not only for the failure of the last federal-provincial conference, but especially for having held out, even before the conference even took place, promises which they knew or should have known they could not keep.

Speaking of promises, they were of two kinds. As a matter of fact, in the province of Quebec, our Conservative friends had come out against the equalization system as being contrary to the B.N.A. Act while, in the nine other provinces, the Prime Minister pledged to preserve it intact, as witness these lines from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix for February 14, 1958, where in the Prime Minister is reported as stating:

(Text):

I stated that the equalization principle would be preserved. I say it again, and I repeat it now. The principle will be put into effect.

(Translation):

That is not what our friends, the Conservatives, were saying in the province of Quebec. At any rate, in both cases, this bill proves that the promises made in 1958 have been repudiated. The taxation fields have not been abandoned as the Quebec Conservatives promised it and the equalization formula has not been left unchanged as the Prime Minister had guaranteed.

Speaking of equalization, I feel it would be a good thing at this point to quote once more what Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent said, as reported in Hansard for January 12, 1956:

After examining many possible plans, we came to the conclusion that the most generally acceptable means of bridging this gap in Canada between the costs of essential provincial services and the wide variations in the tax potentials available to the provincial governments, would be to develop a pattern of tax equalization payments from the federal to the provincial governments.

With his customary modesty, Mr. St. Laurent went on:

We have never contended that these agreements were a perfect answer to the problems in our fiscal relationships but that is the best formula that has been devised yet—and the steps we are taking—will be conducive to the growth and development of all the provinces and of that spirit of solidarity from one ocean to the other.

The aim pursued by Mr. St. Laurent and his government was therefore to reduce the gap between the incomes which the various provinces derived from taxes so that all provinces and all taxpayers would become equal partners in the confederation.

It must be recognized, I think, that this formula has stood the test of time. In the critical post-war years, it enabled the provinces, which were faced with expansion problems, to develop more harmoniously and it reduced considerably the gap between the provinces' income.

Thanks to that formula, citizens of all provinces enjoyed the benefits of comparable services.

There is another advantage which is far from being the least. By removing the inequalities which were prejudicial to the poorer provinces, the St. Laurent formula largely contributed to a better understanding of national unity.

It will be recalled that the equalization principle was denounced as being contrary to the spirit and letter of confederation.

I should like to deal immediately with a misrepresentation which was repeated tonight by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), a myth which our Conservative friends have kept alive in the province of Quebec and which has no foundation either in law or in history. It was said repeatedly that the equalization formula was the result of a centralization which was contrary to the spirit and letter of the constitution. Consequently, it will be necessary for me, I think, to go back briefly to the sources. With the help of historical data, I will prove that not only were subsidies an integral part of the pact of 1867 and—I do mean an integral part of the 1867 pact, but that the payment of those subsidies was a paramount condition to the entry into confederation of lower Canada and the maritimes.

On page 5290 of volume 3 of Hansard of 1906, we can read section 64 of the Quebec resolutions, outlining the following proposal. I quote:

> In consideration of the transfer to the general parliament of the powers of taxation, an annual grant in aid of each province shall be made, equal to 80 cents per head of the population—

And, as recorded on page 5291 of Hansard of March 25, 1907, the then prime minister, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stated:

> But it is also a matter of history that if the resolutions were passed in a certain form, if the allowance to the provinces were arranged in a certain way, the reason, the paramount reason, was that without such an enactment and such an allowance the provinces would not have consented to enter confederation.

Now, here is a statement of policy, made in 1865, by Mr. Brown, one of the fathers of confederation:

> I do not think I am being indiscreet in saying that, at the conference, I was most vocal in asking that all local expenses be paid by local governments through direct taxation; and that there were liberal-minded men, coming from all parts of the provinces, who would have liked nothing better than to see such a proposal accepted. But, Mr. Speaker, there was an obstacle, an obstacle we often meet in this world, and that obstacle amounted to this: the impossibility in which we were to have the idea accepted. We would not have been able to rally the members of the conference, neither those of the existing provincial legislatures.
> I am afraid, our friends in Lower Canada constitutionally object to direct taxation.

And, as can be seen on the same page, Sir Wilfrid Laurier added the following statement:

> This is conclusive evidence. Lower Canada would never have entered confederation, if, by that very fact, it had been forced to resort to direct taxation to levy the required sums for the management of its local business. The same state of mind prevailed in the Maritime provinces. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would never have agreed to the federal pact if they had to resort to direct taxation as a consequence.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those are statements that need no comment. And I want to support those statements by quoting indisputable figures. For the fiscal year 1867-1868, 54 per cent of the total provincial revenue was derived from subsidies by the Canadian government. From 1868 to 1888, that percentage varied from year to year between 42 and 57 per cent. In the period from 1888 to 1909, the percentage of subsidies paid to the provinces by the federal government varied between 29 and 37 per cent, after which they gradually decreased down to the depression years, from 1930 to 1935, whereas in 1955, that percentage reached 46 per cent, and subsequently decreased.

Now, in the case of Quebec, we find that, for the fiscal year 1867-1868, 59.67 per cent of the total revenue of that province was derived from federal subsidies. During the first ten years of confederation, that percentage reached an average of 46 per cent. In the first 25 years after confederation, the percentage for Quebec was 37.5 per cent.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those figures are part of this country's history. I trust they will be read again and considered by our Conservative friends in Quebec who will then be able to revise some of the conclusions reached in their speeches with regard to federal-provincial fiscal matters. It is therefore a well established fact that, during the lifetime of the fathers of confederation, the provinces lived for the greater part on federal subsidies and that, moreover, neither Quebec nor the maritime provinces would have entered confederation without a guarantee that those subsidies would be paid by the federal government.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit—

Mr. Deschatelets: If my hon. friend would let me continue—

Mr. Ricard: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deschatelets: I shall answer your questions when I have finished my remarks. Did you rise on a point of order?

Mr. Ricard: I am asking whether you will permit a question?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, when I have finished my remarks—

Mr. Ricard: That's it. It would be too difficult for you to answer.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont has the floor and did not yield it in order to permit a question. This is his right and privilege.

Mr. Ricard: Because he is afraid.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. I do not think there should be reflections on what may be the motives for not accepting a question. There will be an opportunity at the end of his remarks, and he can accept or reject a question at that time if he pleases.

Mr. Ricard: We are used to his running away.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: May I remind my hon. friend for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot that the Union Nationale convention in Quebec city is over and that this is Ottawa.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, if we are to refer to the Union Nationale convention—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: The purpose of this reference to history is not to take up the defence—

Mr. Ricard: You are running away; you are afraid.

Mr. Deschatelets:—of the system of grants to the provinces; quite the contrary, it is indeed to reply to several fallacious and erroneous arguments that are used too often to serve certain purposes.

One thing is sure though, it is that the fathers of confederation have accepted and the provinces have demanded in order to join the confederation, an equitable system of revenues, apart from direct taxation, to be able to efficiently fulfil their constitutional obligations.

In the light of what I have just said, it is quite obvious that the equalization formula of the St. Laurent government was not contrary to the confederation, but more than this government's formula it encouraged solidarity between the provinces, solidarity that is vital to this great federal family.

Mr. Speaker, the new formula, which is the basis of this bill, is inferior to the former one and destroys the principle of revenue equalization because it does not seek to treat all provinces on an equal basis.

At the resolution stage, on July 11 last, we wondered on what basis the Minister of Finance made the following statement. I quote from page 7910 of Hansard:

> The government has materially increased the return to the provinces from the existing tax sharing arrangements.

And we recall the lack of enthusiasm of the premiers of the various provinces and their expressed dissatisfaction. In fact, in February, the premier of British Columbia said:

> I am disappointed that my province will not receive equalization payments.

On February 27, the premier of Alberta said that he was disappointed by this new arrangement.

The treasurer of Saskatchewan said that his province would not receive the amounts that it would have under the existing agreements.

> The premier of Alberta said on April 8 that the new agreement presented certain features that he approved, but he added nevertheless that it was disappointing to see that his province would not receive any immediate increase.

The premier of Ontario said that this formula did not provide for his province anything like the $150 million additional yearly revenues he sought to obtain during the two day conference. And he added that his last resort was to levy new taxes.

We recall these words of the premier of Quebec:

> Equalization has just been killed.

The New Brunswick premier said that the new fiscal proposals "would cause enduring harm". The premiers of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland said they were satisfied and they accepted the formula but with some reservations.

That is how the new formula based on the average national revenues, on equalization, not from the top but from the middle, was received by the provinces.

After four years of conferences and negotiations, this cannot be called a great success. In fact, it is a resounding failure if we look at the promises that were made. However, we have cause for comfort because the Conservative government has invited the provinces to levy additional revenues themselves by collecting their own taxes. As if that right had not always existed. That is what the province of Ontario has already done, because the provincial tax which became effective on September 1 is the first tangible result of the fiscal federal-provincial failure. And it is after the provinces had been invited to resort to taxes that the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) stated recently in a flight of oratory: "This is the end of limitations; it is a reversion to the spirit and the letter of the constitution".

I showed a moment ago that this assertion is historically and legally erroneous and unfounded.

When one thinks that the Canadian taxpayer is already overtaxed, this is an invitation which does not constitute a very glittering policy for a government on the eve of an election.

If the government had been consistent or had fulfilled the promises made in Quebec by its candidates, it would have given the various fields of taxation back to the provinces. On the contrary, since 1958, it has clung to them more than any other previous government. This government has piled up deficits, expenditures, loans and high interests.

It must be remembered that in 1958 we had a $38.5 million deficit, $609,500,000 in 1959, $413 million in 1960, $300 million in 1961 and in 1962, according to the Canadian tax foundation estimate, Canada will incur a deficit of approximately $700 million.

From 1957 to 1961, the unemployment insurance fund was drained of approximately $900 million.

During the same period, $165 million were used out of the national defence special fund.

Those amounts total $3,126 million, or an additional debt of $750 for each Canadian family and it is in that financially stifling atmosphere that this government urges the provinces to accept its invitation to levy additional taxes in their own jurisdiction.

With all these facts, I feel that this Conservative government now levies within the provinces a higher ratio of taxes than any previous government and I am tempted to ask myself: If this is centralization, where are the centralizers, if they are not sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker?

I stated that those fiscal proposals were made by this government to the provinces which asked for a revision and a reconsideration thereof, but all the attempts to renew discussions were coolly turned down.

Let us admit that today we are voting for a five year failure. The dies are cast.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish, in the course of my remarks, to limit myself to criticism of the government. I should now like to consider the problem in order to facilitate its solution. I sincerely believe that the tax collection agreements with the provincial governments are complex because we have there a problem which cannot be dealt with satisfactorily before the major problem is solved; and the major problem is the redistribution of taxation powers and the respective responsibilities of the federal and the provincial governments.

Thus, it seems that the time has come to reconsider the Canadian constitution in the light of its 94 years of existence, and that the problems which arise here, in Canada, in 1961 will have to be reconsidered.

To that purpose, we must first reach an agreement with the provinces about a method of amending our constitution. That is the first step to take. Then, the government and the provinces, around a conference table, will have to determine a redistribution, as accurate and flexible as possible, of the powers of taxation and the respective administrative responsibilities. Surely, this will be delicate and difficult work. It will be a matter of putting back the rights and privileges of 1867 in a more up-to-date framework, yet preserving and strengthening if possible all the clauses and powers pertaining to the rights, privileges and autonomy of the provinces.

That is, I think, the main problem that arises in Canada today. It will have to be solved without delay so that the development and economic and industrial growth of the provinces will not be hindered.

To deal with this important problem, it has become necessary for the government to establish a department of federal-provincial affairs. I believe each province should set up such a department. Quebec already has shown the way in this connection. It would then be the responsibility of these ministers, through continuous contacts and consideration of problems we have in common with the provinces, to prepare and submit a report which, in a year or two, could become the second constitutional charter of Canada.

If such a work were undertaken now, there would be no reason for not finding a solution within the next two or three years. By adopting such a method, the arrangement contained in the bill before the house could easily be limited to two or three years instead of extending to five.

For it is my feeling that, within a year or two, we will have an election and it is a distinct possibility that those who are now at the left of the Speaker will be the ones called upon to decide, within two years, on the constitution to be given this country.

Mr. Speaker, when I said a moment ago that the time had come to take a second look at taxation powers, I had in mind the attitude of the government of the province of Quebec on joint plans, which are closely related to taxation powers.

It will be remembered that in La Reforme of June 24, 1961, Mr. Lesage had this to say:

> The sooner we can substitute to the joint plans our own plans based on revenue back from Ottawa, the better it will be for us.

Le Devoir, on Tuesday, September 26, 1961, quoted the Quebec minister of natural resources, Mr. Rene Levesque, as saying:

> It would be better if joint programs disappeared gradually.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to comment on those two statements. I wish to make it clear at the outset that there is no contradiction between the stand taken by the Quebec government and that of the St. Laurent government which introduced the joint programs which were so beneficial to all Canadians, whether it be hospital insurance, the trans-Canada highway, or the roads to resources program. In my opinion, the attitude taken by the Quebec provincial government is what we have always considered as positive autonomy, because even though Quebec expresses that wish, nevertheless, until the powers are redistributed, it accepts all the money which is spent under those joint programs, for the simple reason that that money belongs partly to the taxpayers of all the provinces—Quebec taxpayers like all the others—who are entitled to benefit from all possible services. Those services they are paying for through their taxes, whether it be to the federal or to the provincial government.

There is no point in comparing that attitude to that of Mr. Duplessis of whom it was said that he was practising a negative autonomy. And now that the Duplessis regime is a thing of the past, and that we now have a Liberal government in Quebec, we can, by simply comparing, determine the advantages of a positive autonomy policy over a negative policy. Mr. Duplessis stood for the return of taxation rights but because of his failure to take any initiative, by systematically turning down—

Mr. Ricard: He is even greater in his grave than you are, alive and breathing.

Mr. Deschatelets: —hundreds of millions of dollars of which the people of Quebec have unfairly been deprived.

Hon. members will remember that at the last federal-provincial conference he attended he stated: "It is cash we want".

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will remember that in the strictly federal field, Mr. St. Laurent's administration obtained the power to amend our constitution in this country in 1950. For the reasons we know, it was impossible to proceed with the provinces and amend our constitution here in Canada as far as provincial and joint matters are concerned. Mr. St. Laurent was never given the opportunity to pursue his expressed aim, but I am happy to notice that the repatriation of our constitution has now been made possible as far a provincial and joint matters are concerned.

I wish to emphasize—the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has already done so—the remarkable work of the provincial minister of youth, Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, whose work, initiative and knowledge of constitutional matters enabled us to expect a solution in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up I would suggest this to the government first of all, the immediate creation of a department of federal-provincial affairs; second, obtaining the power to amend the constitution in this country in joint and provincial matters at the earliest opportunity; third, immediate consideration of taxation powers and mutual responsibility between the central government and the provinces, in order to bring the constitution up to date for solving the problems arising in Canada today. But, until those measures are taken, I subscribe to the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), and I ask this government to come back to the formula of the St. Laurent government with regard to equalization payments, because if the bill remains in its present form, I shall have to vote against it.

(Text):

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, we have had a very interesting debate on the subject matter of Bill No. C-122. As hon. members know, this bill was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in this house on July 12, just prior to the summer recess. In the ensuing weeks most of us have had an opportunity of studying the bill, reading the speeches of the various premiers during the series of conferences and trying to familiarize ourselves with the details of this involved piece of legislation.

It is common knowledge that since confederation federal governments have always been obliged to lend financial aid and assistance to the provinces of Canada. This aid invariably took the form of special or conditional grants. In fact, prior to 1942 we had no evidence at all of unconditional grants. In 1941 Mr. Ilsley, the then minister of finance in his budget speech indicated that, whether or not there was an agreement, the provinces would have to vacate the personal and corporate fields of taxation for the duration of the war and one year thereafter. Consequently, in 1942 this House of Commons passed for the first time a bill authorizing unconditional grants and entitled the Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreement Act. In 1947 a new bill was introduced and passed known as the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements Act. It remained in effect for a period of five years and was replaced in 1952 by the second tax rental agreement act, namely the Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952.

In 1942 the province of New Brunswick received the sum of $4.2 million. In 1947, under the first tax rental agreements act, the province of New Brunswick received a total of $13.3 million, $8 million from tax rental and approximately $5 million from equalization payments. During the 1952 to 1957 agreements New Brunswick's share increased from $13 million to $18.5 million.

Briefly speaking that is a summary of what New Brunswick received during the first three agreements. During the period of 1956 there was a series of conferences following which, for the first time, legislation was introduced entitled the tax sharing arrangements act instead of the tax rental agreements act. We all know the formula. It was 10-9-50 and New Brunswick's share averaged approximately $23.5 million. Very soon after the agreement came into effect a change of government took place in Canada and a dominion-provincial conference was held at Ottawa. I believe it was during the month of November, 1957. That conference was brought about as a result of strong criticism coming from the maritime provinces and Ontario with regard to the tax sharing arrangements act of 1957. As a result, the formula was increased from 10-9-50 to a more generous level of 13-9-50. At that time agreement was also reached in principle on a special grant to the Atlantic provinces. As a result the tax sharing arrangements act was amended in 1958 in order to provide for an additional sum in round figures, of $100 million over a four year period to the four provinces in eastern Canada. As a result of the amendments in 1958, New Brunswick's share—and I may say

I have been using New Brunswick figures throughout—increased from the questionably generous offer of the previous administration of $22.5 million to a figure in 1958 of $31.6 million or an increase of nearly $10 million which figure has continually increased during the years 1959 and 1960. Consequently I think it is very difficult, and indeed impossible, for Liberal speakers to try to convince anybody living in the Atlantic provinces that the formula and equalization basis introduced by the former St. Laurent administration was in any way at all fair or acceptable to the poorer provinces.

In fact, if one looks at the tables introduced by the Minister of Finance on July 11 one notices—dealing again only with New Brunswick—that in 1956-57 under unconditional grants that province received approximately $19 million and an additional $8.7 million under conditional grants, or a total payment in the year 1956-57 of less than $30 million. In the current year, instead of receiving less than $30 million the province of New Brunswick is receiving in excess of $60 million. This small province increased its source of revenue as a result of the change of administration to the extent of 100 per cent or, in round figures, from $30 million to $60 million annually.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a factual question?

Mr. Creaghan: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman say why he used the year 1956-57, which was under the old tax rental agreements, instead of 1957-58, which was the first year of the tax-sharing arrangements and which would show a very different picture?

Mr. Creaghan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I think that is a fair question, bearing in mind that the hon. member who has asked it is some sort of an expert on this subject. I used the figures of the year 1956-57 because they are official figures and appear in Hansard of July 11 at page 7919. If I had used the figures of 1957-58, or the first year of the generous tax-sharing arrangements, the figures for New Brunswick would have amounted to a total of $34 million instead of $29 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: A pretty substantial increase.

Mr. Creaghan: That is an increase of $5 million, as opposed to an increase of $30 million.

Most of the criticism from the Atlantic provinces comes from one source, the premier of New Brunswick. He has raised public objection to this new scheme. He calls it discriminatory, suggesting that it is against the interests of the poorer provinces. In order to strengthen Premier Robichaud's argument he complains about the large sums going to be paid to the provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. In other words, he is suggesting that these three other provinces in eastern Canada are not poor provinces; that New Brunswick is the only poor province in eastern Canada.

To strengthen his argument further he has recently endorsed the former policy of the Progressive Conservative government of New Brunswick in reference to the division of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. In Hansard last week a telegram was tabled from the premier of New Brunswick addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). That telegram appears at page 8769 of Hansard of September 22 and reads as follows:

> New Brunswick favours thirty-thirty-thirty-ten distribution of Atlantic provinces grant.

In other words, in one moment he criticizes part of the formula and the next moment completely endorses the distribution agreed to by the premiers of the four provinces in the year 1958. The main objection from New Brunswick seems to be that the new formula includes 50 per cent of provincial revenue from natural resources in the equalization formula. Yet it is a known fact that revenue from this source in the case of New Brunswick is substantially well below the national average. Therefore New Brunswick's share will be a larger percentage under the new equalization formula than if this provincial revenue were excluded from the formula. It is included to make certain that more fiscal aid will be given to the less prosperous provinces rather than the reverse under the formula introduced by the Liberal administration.

The province of New Brunswick has also complained, alleging that it objects to the inclusion of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants in the equalization formula. These grants are not included and are separate and distinct according to the bill. In fact the Prime Minister assured Premier Robichaud of that policy in recent correspondence, particularly in a letter dated August 30 which was tabled in the house. The Prime Minister was dealing with the subject of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and the alleged inclusion of these grants in the equalization formula. I should like to quote one short paragraph from this recent letter:

> You refer at a number of points in your letter to the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants and contend that these grants should be kept separate from the other fiscal arrangements. In fact, the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants will continue to be a separate grant and the increase of $10 million in the total amount will benefit your province to the extent of $3 million per annum, which is the 30 per cent share of the additional grant of $10 million. This grant will be paid separately and is in no way connected with the basic equalization formula which ensures that New Brunswick will receive an equalization payment sufficient to raise revenues from the standard taxes and 50 per cent of the natural resource revenues to the per capita national average yield.

These grants are not a part of the equalization formula in any way, shape or form. Admittedly they are part of the guarantee formula. However, if one searches the records he will find that in the past under former agreements New Brunswick did not qualify or receive any benefit under the stabilization principle. It is my hope and the hope I believe of most people in New Brunswick who have an interest in its welfare, that at no time in the future will this province or any other province in Canada have to rely on the guarantee provisions. In fact, it is the hope of all concerned, premiers, politicians and interested citizens that none of the provinces in Canada will have to rely on the guarantee provisions.

In any case, the guarantee principle in no way hurts New Brunswick and the equalization formula contemplated in this bill is, if anything, in favour of all provinces which are in a less fortunate financial situation. In my opinion the objections raised by the premier of New Brunswick are hardly warranted. When the formula under the new bill is increased to the level of 20-9-50, which it will reach in the last year of the five-year agreement, New Brunswick stands to gain an additional $3 million approximately. This means that each and every year between 1962 and 1966 as the formula goes from 16 to 20 per cent in reference to personal income tax collections, this province, and every province in Canada, can expect its income to increase. It appears to me as though the province of New Brunswick, in a desperate move, is criticizing this bill in order that it may blame someone else for its own faulty administration. Perhaps it is trying to get sufficient additional money from Ottawa to carry out in full its election promises of 1960.

An hon. Member: Liberal.

Mr. Creaghan: Someone says "Liberal". I am speaking of a Liberal administration which was elected in June, 1960. Some of the members who have taken part in this debate have suggested that there were not sufficient meetings, supporting some of the demands that the conference be reopened. It is common knowledge that there have been held in Ottawa three conferences at the premiers' level—in July, 1960, in October, 1960, and in February, 1961. In addition, there have been continuous meetings of the heads of departments of the provincial and federal governments. Nothing could be accomplished by a further conference.

The bill introduced is most generous. It is non-discriminatory in so far as the eastern provinces are concerned and I intend to do all I can to speak in its favour and to support it in principle at every opportunity.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Creaghan) has given this house his version of the reaction of the maritimes toward this bill. Perhaps it would be possible for me briefly to speak with respect to the reactions in the province of Ontario to Bill No. C-122. May I give some of the history as we see it here in Ontario?

On March 27, 1957, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was the guest of honour at Athens at the most important political meeting which was ever held in that village in Leeds county. The meeting place was filled to capacity and the hon. gentleman made a profound impression on the people who listened to the address, indeed some listened from outside the hall. There were two points which the hon. member for Eglinton pressed on the citizenry of that community. The first was that it was inconceivable that a government with a half billion dollar surplus should continue in this fashion and make so few tax cuts. The other point was that the provinces and in particular the municipalities in Ontario were in a critical position financially and that their situation had to be drastically remedied. This, he said, would come about if the people placed their confidence in a Conservative administration.

A few days after this there was a meeting on May 3, 1957 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said the municipalities were being pauperised while the federal government wallowed in surpluses the like of which have not been seen in Canadian history.

Mr. Pickersgill: They certainly have not been seen since.

Mr. Matheson: Well, that was the end of Canada's surpluses. The situation with respect to our provinces and municipalities has not been improved. At least, the situation in Ontario has certainly not been better.

[Mr. Creaghan.]

When the minister was in Athens the situation with respect to our municipalities in Leeds county was critical. I say earnestly that the situation now is much more critical. May I give the comparative figures, the mill rates for three typical towns or villages in the area—Brockville, Gananoque and Smiths Falls. At the time the minister was speaking the mill rate for residents in Brockville was 63.5; today, it is 76. The industrial rate then was 69.5; it is now 81. In the prosperous little town of Gananoque in 1957 the residential mill rate was 50.4 whereas today it is 64.5. The industrial rate was 54.8, and today it is 69.8. In Smiths Falls in 1957 there was a common mill rate of 61 which has now been increased for residents to 66 and for industry to 70.5.

I read to the committee of this house last night a headline indicating that the municipality of Brockville was gravely concerned as to how it was going to meet its record relief payments. I pointed out that the situation was critical and I asked the committee to remember some of the undertakings to Ontario, which appears from everything we have heard to be one of the privileged parts of Canada. At a political meeting in Toronto on the evening of March 19, 1958, Premier Frost, introducing the present Prime Minister, said:

> I have talked of $100 million. I am convinced as I never was before that we are going to produce a new deal.

The right hon. gentleman, for his part, said he was sure Mr. Frost would ask nothing more than fairness and justice. All those who have written on this subject to explain the reasons why Ontario supported this administration in the forceful way it did under the leadership of Mr. Frost say this support was one of the principal reasons why this administration enjoys the position it does on the treasury benches today. I say, as a representative of Leeds, that we have been let down, because the fact is that our provincial and municipal obligations are substantially more serious today in 1961 than they were in 1957.

May I read to the house the concluding sentence of an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on June 5. It is called "The Crumbs from the Table", and reads:

> The ordinary people of Canada in their communities across the country have reached a point where they cannot afford the present maldistribution of public revenues.

I know it is unfair to consider a bill such as this from a provincial or parochial standpoint and I do not intend to continue to do so, but I think it is only reasonable that when we look at the results of this new tax-sharing plan we should consider the overall picture. I find we have four provinces rejoicing in Conservative administrations and those four provinces have benefited by $22,223,000 as compared with last year. I find that the non-Conservative provinces are six in number and the net result to them is a loss of $4,306,000. I ask seriously whether or not there is any principle in this bill before us other than political expediency.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the speech of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) who tried, in his remarks, to justify this new fiscal formula. After hearing him, I must come to the conclusion that the present arrangement is nothing but another mathematical confusion without any foundation and, also, that it is nothing else but a new measure to obtain a political advantage.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, it is known that—

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Matheson: When I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Ricard: It would be too tiresome to answer now.

Mr. Loiselle: You are too ignorant.

Mr. Robichaud: Why don't you go back to Quebec for your convention?

Mr. Caron: The Quebec convention is over.

(Text):

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, there has been some reference—

Mr. Ricard: It is too tiresome now for the hon. member to answer my question. The hon. member cannot answer me, is that it?

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, reference has been made—

Mr. Ricard: I am speaking to the hon. gentleman who has the floor, not to the hon. members who interject. It is easy to attack a man who is not here.

Mr. Matheson: The hon. member for Westmorland, Mr. Speaker, referred to some of the material contained in the report of the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference, 1960. I wish to refer the house to three points that were made at that conference by Mr. Frost, the premier of Ontario, who has been concerned about the problem since 1957. On July 25, 1960 as reported at page 18 of the report of proceedings to which I referred, Mr. Frost said:

> The crux of the problem is this: the provinces and the municipalities must have additional revenues.

He went on to say:

> I submit, in the light of the expansion occurring in Ontario, and indeed elsewhere, that the present division of these taxes is unrealistic.

He also said:

> It is entirely unfair that the provinces and their municipalities should be faced with the incidence of growth to which I have referred—

We know the extent of Mr. Frost's disappointment and we know the circumstances of his departure from public life. I point out that the needs of the next five years will be greater than and different from what we have witnessed to date. The offer presented by the Minister of Finance, who just a few years ago was talking about abundant surpluses and a new distribution of revenue, simply cannot meet these altered conditions.

An article by Mr. Charles King which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on February 24, 1961 quoted Mr. Frost as having stated:

> —by 1966 we will still not have reached the minimum requirement of 1956.

I believe that all hon. members are concerned about this problem. The fact is that Canada has become an extremely highly taxed country. It is obvious that if taxes go to one source they cannot go to other sources. I cannot determine what proportion of our dollar is represented by taxation divided among the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities but I read that something over 40 cents on each dollar is represented by taxes both direct and indirect. In our municipalities in Ontario we are worried over the fact that mill rates increase year by year, in some instances accompanied by decreasing services. Surely the only basis on which this unfortunate situation can be rectified is on a basis of having the financial affairs of the country conducted in a manner that has due regard to the development and prosperity of the country and one that avoids deficits year after year replacing them with surpluses from which we can do the things we require to do to ensure that our citizens live properly and well enjoying a high degree of prosperity.

It is not enough for hon. members of the opposition to rise and protest that what is being done by the present administration is inadequate and politically expedient. It is not enough for us simply to say that this administration has failed to fulfil its glowing election promises. We have to demonstrate and affirm that we would do things better and according to some principle.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate speaking on behalf of this party outlined the historical background of the principles of equalization and stabilization. He demonstrated that there was a sound principle at the root of the system introduced by the former administration.

The words I wish to place on Hansard in summarizing our position and in concluding these remarks are those adopted at the Liberal rally held in Ottawa last January. I can attest that much research, study and thought attended the deliberations held at that rally.

Mr. Ricard: You can say that again.

Mr. Matheson: I conclude with these words:

—the Canadian constitution was fashioned to provide a balance that gives effective central government in matters requiring national decision, and, in all other matters, full scope for provincial and local diversity. Liberalism will continue to uphold provincial rights and the traditions and customs which they express and guard.

Mr. Grafftey: I thought the hon. member had made his maiden speech.

Mr. Matheson: Does the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi have a question?

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member will not accept questions until he has finished. He never wants to answer my questions.

Mr. Grafftey: I merely point out that the hon. gentleman is doing a lot of talking considering that it is his first term in the house.

Mr. Benidickson: He is no longer "nouveau".

Mr. Speaker: Order. There have been many impromptu speeches made by hon. members speaking from their seats and sometimes from the seats of other hon. members. I trust that hon. gentlemen will allow the hon. member who has the floor to conclude his speech.

Mr. Matheson: I continue:

The Liberal party believes Canada cannot be prosperous unless every part of it enjoys prosperity. To achieve that purpose the financial resources of the nation must be available to provide both the national government and provincial and municipal governments with adequate revenues without imposing undue tax burdens.—The Liberal party therefore upholds the principle of equalization in federal-provincial tax arrangements. All provinces should receive the same revenue, per head of population, from the taxes shared with the federal government. In this way, Canadians everywhere receive an equal share of the revenues derived from national economic activities.—We condemn the Conservative proposal to destroy equalization and return to the pre-war conditions under which Canadians in different provinces had to pay different rates of tax—

[Mr. Matheson.]

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the effect of Bill No. C-122. I continue:

For a sound economy, it is important to retain the principle of equalization and also the related principle of stabilization. Tax revenues fall off if we encounter a recession in business. The federal government should protect the provinces against any serious decline in their revenues from the shared taxes.

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for "Chateau-Maisonneuve" (Mr. Deschatelets) prophesied a moment ago some rather dark days for our country and our province when he stated that his party would soon be brought back to power. I cannot, of course, stop this gloomy Cassandra from prophesying as he pleases, but it seems to me that past experience should prompt the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont to ask himhimself what would be the reaction of the people of this country should as tragic an event as the one he has just forecast become a reality. While listening to his complaints about the present situation and the blame he was putting on the Conservative government with regard to this tax-sharing issue, I was casting my mind back on all the events which, since 1939, have marked Canadian politics and shaken the very foundations of our constitution. Naturally, I connect those events with the presence of a Liberal government at the head of the country. That is why I find it difficult to believe the remarks made in this house by all Liberal members, and that is why I found it difficult to credit with sincerity a political party which was, for so many years, the contented promoter of constitutional disintegration.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two very short remarks on the general problem involved in the bill before us.

First of all, I should like to remind hon. members of a fact which I feel is basic, and that is that the stand of the members from Quebec on the problem involved in this bill cannot necessarily be the same as that of the members from the other provinces. I will probably surprise nobody by repeating, after a great many leaders, that the province of Quebec is not a province like the others and that, for this very reason, it cannot take the same stand as the other provinces on certain issues. Quebec has to consider carefully and circumspectly all constitutional proposals, for these proposals often contain important factors for the future of the people who make up the majority in the province of Quebec.

I am not an expert on constitutional matters, far from it, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I could not pretend to be well informed nor go into technical details on the various solutions which can be brought to our constitutional problems. However, having studied very recent history, that is the history of the last 15 years, I realize that a change has come about since 1958 which leads us to believe—and I am one of those who believe it—that our constitutional problems are being given a solution more in line with the general principles of our Canadian constitution.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont referred to the so-called autonomist spirit which is typical of the Liberal party. Frankly, in all that transpired from 1939 to 1957, I find very few signs of that spirit which, according to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, gives inspiration to the Liberal party, because, as I just pointed out, that party seems to have been the most frantic promoter of our constitutional disintegration by suggesting, year after year, steps designed to progressively take away from the provinces the rights and the privileges granted to them by the constitution.

I should like to recall a fact in order to show that the Liberal party has been far from being an autonomist party but that it has rather strived against this idea, this principle and this reality of provincial autonomy written into the Canadian constitution. And I should like to bring forward the problem of the invasion, due to the schemings of the Liberal party, of the field of education by the central government.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it 10.30?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business will be for tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the first matter to come before the house will be the report of the committee on procedure of the House of Commons which was tabled today. It will be printed in Votes and Proceedings so that members may study it. Since the report is a unanimous one of an all party committee chaired by Mr. Speaker himself, perhaps there will be no debate on the proposals, in view of the fact that the suggestions therein contained are applicable to the next session of parliament on a trial basis.

The main item of government business will be a continuation of the debate on Bill No. C-122, the dominion-provincial tax collection agreement, followed by the estimates of the Department of Finance, followed by the estimates of the Department of Transport.

At 10.32 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

APPENDIX "A"

PROPOSED DECLARATION ON DISARMAMENT

September 22, 1961

The following is submitted by the United States of America as a proposed declaration on disarmament for consideration by the general assembly of the United Nations as a guide for the negotiation of a program for general and complete disarmament in a peaceful world.

Declaration on Disarmament:
A Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World

The nations of the world,

Conscious of the crisis in human history produced by the revolutionary development of modern weapons within a world divided by serious ideological differences;

Determined to save present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war and the dangers and burdens of the arms race and to create conditions in which all peoples can strive freely and peacefully to fulfil their basic aspirations;

Declare their goal to be: A free, secure, and peaceful world of independent states adhering to common standards of justice and international conduct and subjecting the use of force to the rule of law; a world where adjustment to change takes place in accordance with the principles of the United Nations; a world where there shall be a permanent state of general and complete disarmament under effective international control and where the resources of nations shall be devoted to man's material, cultural, and spiritual advance;

Set forth as the objectives of a program of general and complete disarmament in a peaceful world:

(a) The disbanding of all national armed forces and the prohibition of their re-establishment in any form whatsoever other than those required to preserve internal order and for contributions to a United Nations peace force;

(b) The elimination from national arsenals of all armaments, including all weapons of mass destruction and the means for their delivery, other than those required for a United Nations peace force and for maintaining internal order;

(c) The establishment and effective operation of an international disarmament organization within the framework of the United Nations to ensure compliance at all times with all disarmament obligations;

(d) The institution of effective means for the enforcement of international agreements, for the settlement of disputes, and for the maintenance of peace in accordance with the principles of the United Nations.

Call on the negotiating states:

(a) To develop the outline program set forth below into an agreed plan for general and complete disarmament and to continue their efforts without interruption until the whole program has been achieved;

(b) To this end to seek to attain the widest possible area of agreement at the earliest possible date;

(c) Also to seek without prejudice to progress on the disarmament program agreement on those immediate measures that could contribute to the common security of nations and that could facilitate and form a part of that program.

Affirm that disarmament negotiations should be guided by the following principles:

(a) Disarmament shall take place as rapidly as possible until it is completed in stages containing balanced, phased and safeguarded measures, with each measure and stage to be carried out in an agreed period of time.

(b) Compliance with all disarmament obligations shall be effectively verified from their entry into force. Verification arrangements shall be instituted progressively and in such a manner as to verify not only that agreed limitations or reductions take place but also that retained armed forces and armaments do not exceed agreed levels at any stage.

(c) Disarmament shall take place in a manner that will not affect adversely the security of any state, whether or not a party to an international agreement or treaty.

(d) As states relinquish their arms, the United Nations shall be progressively strengthened in order to improve its capacity to assure international security and the peaceful settlement of differences as well as to facilitate the development of international cooperation in common tasks for the benefit of mankind.

(e) Transition from one stage of disarmament to the next shall take place as soon as all the measures in the preceding stage have been carried out and effective verification is continuing and as soon as the arrangements that have been agreed to be necessary for the next stage have been instituted.

Agree upon the following outline program for achieving general and complete disarmament:

Stage I

A. To establish an international disarmament organization:

(a) An international disarmament organisation (IDO) shall be established within the framework of the United Nations upon entry into force of the agreement. Its functions shall be expanded progressively as required for the effective verification of the disarmament program.

(b) The IDO shall have: (1) a general conference of all the parties; (2) a commission consisting of representatives of all the major powers as permanent members and certain other states on a rotating basis; and (3) an administrator who will administer the organization subject to the direction of the commission and who will have the authority, staff, and finances adequate to assure effective impartial implementation of the functions of the organization.

(c) The IDO shall: (1) ensure compliance with the obligations undertaken by verifying the execution of measures agreed upon; (2) assist the states in developing the details of agreed further verification and disarmament measures; (3) provide for the establishment of such bodies as may be necessary for working out the details of further measures provided for in the program and for such other expert study groups as may be required to give continuous study to the problems of disarmament; (4) receive reports on the progress of disarmament and verification arrangements and determine the transition from one stage to the next.

B. To reduce armed forces and armaments:

(a) Force levels shall be limited to 2.1 million each for the U.S. and U.S.S.R. and to appropriate levels not exceeding 2.1 million each for all other militarily significant states. Reductions to the agreed levels will proceed by equitable, proportionate, and verified steps.

(b) Levels of armaments of prescribed types shall be reduced by equitable and balanced steps. The reductions shall be accomplished by transfers of armaments to depots supervised by the IDO. When, at specified periods during the stage I reduction process, the states party to the agreement have agreed that the armaments and armed forces are at prescribed levels, the armaments in depots shall be destroyed or converted to peaceful uses.

(c) The production of agreed types of armaments shall be limited.

(d) A chemical, biological, radiological (CBR) experts commission shall be established within the IDO for the purpose of examining and reporting on the feasibility and means for accomplishing verifiable reduction and eventual elimination of CBR weapons stockpiles and the halting of their production.

C. To contain and reduce the nuclear threat:

(a) States that have not acceded to a treaty effectively prohibiting the testing of nuclear weapons shall do so.

(b) The production of fissionable materials for use in weapons shall be stopped.

(c) Upon the cessation of production of fissionable materials for use in weapons, agreed initial quantities of fissionable materials from past production shall be transferred to non-weapons purposes.

(d) Any fissionable materials transferred between countries for peaceful uses of nuclear energy shall be subject to appropriate safeguards to be developed in agreement with the IAEA.

(e) States owning nuclear weapons shall not relinquish control of such weapons to any nation not owning them and shall not transmit to any such nation the information or material necessary for their manufacture. States not owning nuclear weapons shall not manufacture such weapons, attempt to obtain control of such weapons belonging to other states, or seek or receive information or materials necessary to their manufacture.

(f) A nuclear experts commission consisting of representatives of the nuclear states shall be established within the IDO for the purpose of examining and reporting on the feasibility and means for accomplishing the verified reduction and eventual elimination of nuclear weapons stockpiles.

D. To reduce strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles:

(a) Strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles in specified categories and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be reduced to agreed levels by equitable and balanced steps. The reduction shall be accomplished in each step by transfers to depots supervised by the IDO of vehicles that are in excess of levels agreed upon for each step. At specified period during the Stage I reduction process, the vehicles that have been placed under supervision of the IDO shall be destroyed or converted to peaceful uses.

(b) Production of agreed categories of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be discontinued or limited.

(c) Testing of agreed categories of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be limited or halted.

E. To promote the peaceful uses of outer space:

(a) The placing into orbit or stationing in outer space of weapons capable of producing mass destruction shall be prohibited.

(b) States shall give advance notification to participating states and to the IDO of launchings of space vehicles and missiles, together with the track of the vehicle.

F. To reduce the risks of war by accident, miscalculation, and surprise attack:

(a) States shall give advance notification to the participating states and to the IDO of major military movements and manoeuvres, on a scale as may be agreed, which might give rise to misinterpretation or cause alarm and induce counter-measures. The notification shall include the geographic areas to be used and the nature, scale and time span of the event.

(b) There shall be established observation posts at such locations as major ports, railway centres, motor highways, and air bases to report on concentrations and movements of military forces.

(c) There shall also be established such additional inspection arrangements to reduce the danger of surprise attack as may be agreed.

(d) An international commission shall be established immediately within the IDO to examine and make recommendations on the possibility of further measures to reduce the risks of nuclear war by accident, miscalculation, or failure of communication.

G. To keep the peace:

(a) States shall reaffirm their obligations under the UN Charter to refrain from the threat or use of any type of armed force—including nuclear, conventional, or CBR—contrary to the principles of the UN Charter.

(b) States shall agree to refrain from indirect aggression and subversion against any country.

(c) States shall use all appropriate processes for the peaceful settlement of disputes and shall seek within the United Nations further arrangements for the peaceful settlement of international disputes and for the codification and progressive development of international law.

(d) States shall develop arrangements in stage I for the establishment in stage II of a UN peace force.

(e) A UN peace observation group shall be staffed with a standing cadre of observers who could be dispatched to investigate any situation which might constitute a threat to or breach of the peace.

Stage II

A. International disarmament organization:

The powers and responsibilities of the IDO shall be progressively enlarged in order to give it the capabilities to verify the measures undertaken in stage II.

B. To further reduce armed forces and armaments:

(a) Levels of forces for the U.S., U.S.S.R., and other militarily significant states shall be further reduced by substantial amounts to agreed levels in equitable and balanced steps.

(b) Levels of armaments of prescribed types shall be further reduced by equitable and balanced steps. The reduction shall be accomplished by transfers of armaments to depots supervised by the IDO. When, at specified periods during the stage II reduction process, the parties have agreed that the armaments and armed forces are at prescribed levels, the armaments in depots shall be destroyed or converted to peaceful uses.

(c) There shall be further agreed restrictions on the production of armaments.

(d) Agreed military bases and facilities wherever they are located shall be dismantled or converted to peaceful uses.

(e) Depending upon the findings of the experts commission on CBR weapons, the production of CBR weapons shall be halted, existing stocks progressively reduced, and the resulting excess quantities destroyed or converted to peaceful uses.

C. To further reduce the nuclear threat:

Stocks of nuclear weapons shall be progressively reduced to the minimum levels which can be agreed upon as a result of the findings of the nuclear experts commission; the resulting excess of fissionable material shall be transferred to peaceful purposes.

D. To further reduce strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles:

Further reductions in the stocks of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be carried out in accordance with the procedure outlined in stage I.

E. To keep the peace:

During stage II, states shall develop further the peace-keeping processes of the United Nations, to the end that the United Nations can effectively in stage III deter or suppress any threat or use of force in violation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations:

(a) States shall agree upon strengthening the structure, authority, and operation of the United Nations so as to assure that the United Nations will be able effectively to protect states against threats to or breaches of the peace.

(b) The UN peace force shall be established and progressively strengthened.

(c) States shall also agree upon further improvements and developments in rules of international conduct and in processes for peaceful settlement of disputes and differences.

Stage III

By the time stage II has been completed, the confidence produced through a verified disarmament program, the acceptance of rules of peaceful international behavior, and the development of strengthened international peace-keeping processes within the framework of the UN should have reached a point where the states of the world can move forward to stage III. In stage III progressive controlled disarmament and continuously developing principles and procedures of international law would proceed to a point where no state would have the military power to challenge the progressively strengthened UN peace force and all international disputes would be settled according to the agreed principles of international conduct.

The progressive steps to be taken during the final phase of the disarmament program would be directed toward the attainment of a world in which:

(a) States would retain only those forces, non-nuclear armaments, and establishments required for the purpose of maintaining internal order; they would also support and provide agreed manpower for a UN peace force.

(b) A UN peace force, equipped with agreed types and quantities of armaments, would be fully functioning.

(c) The manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those of agreed types and quantities, to be used by the UN peace force and those required to maintain internal order. All other armaments would be destroyed or converted to peaceful purposes.

(d) The peace keeping capabilities of the United Nations would be sufficiently strong and the obligations of all states under such arrangements sufficiently far reaching as to assure peace and the just settlement of differences in a disarmed world.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 27, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Eighth and ninth reports of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Mandziuk.

PROCEDURE—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the second report of the special committee appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house, presented on Tuesday, September 26, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

UNIVERSITIES IN RECEIPT OF AND ELIGIBLE FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): On September 19 last, during discussion on the second reading of Bill No. 128 to amend the National Housing Act, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked if I would place on record in Hansard a list of those universities which have had loans approved under part VIA of the National Housing Act. I now have this list, and with the permission of the house I shall be glad to have it tabled for inclusion in Hansard.

The hon. gentleman also asked for a list showing all the institutions which would be eligible for such loans. There is, of course, no such definitive list. I thought I had made this abundantly clear when replying to a similar question asked in December of last year, when my answer was recorded on page 1028 of Hansard. However, so as to avoid any further misunderstanding I will again define the meaning of "university" for the purposes of this part of the act. Institutions eligible for loans under part VIA of the National Housing Act are all degree conferring universities or colleges and also other institutions in which courses of full university standard are given although the degree may be conferred by a university with which it is affiliated.

May I have the permission of the house to table the list?

Mr. Speaker: To table and print it. Perhaps it would be convenient if it were printed at the point in Hansard where the answer is given. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BREAKWATER CONSTRUCTION, PORT RENFREW, B.C.

Question No. 472—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1961, have any representations been received regarding the building of a breakwater at Port Renfrew, Port San Juan bay, Vancouver island, B.C.?
2. If so, what is the name and address of each person, organization or group which made such representations, and the date of each?
3. What steps, if any, have been taken to build such a breakwater, and when will this project be started?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first question is yes. As for the second question, I have a long list and would ask leave to table it or to have it made an order for return. In answer to the third question, may I say that the proposal is still being studied and no decision has yet been reached on starting the project.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the list be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works arising out of his answer to starred question No. 472 the reply to which was tabled and which I have now examined. Why is the name of George Chatterton missing from the list, in view of the fact that on May 4, 1961 the minister indicated that Mr. Chatterton had made representations to him about the construction of this breakwater?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the reeve of Saanich is very different from the hon. member for Skeena. He came to see me personally not once but many times. He was not content with simply writing me letters.

Mr. Howard: Why, then, is his name not on the list?

Mr. Walker: If the hon. member reads the question and reply again he will have his answer.

COMBINES BRANCH—PRICE INCREASE, RADIO AND TELEVISION TUBES

Question No. 473—Mr. Benidickson:

Has the director of investigation and research of the combines investigation branch initiated an investigation into a simultaneous price increase of radio and television tubes by two manufacturers in the electronics industry?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The combines branch maintains a continuing interest in this field as in other fields, and any information coming to the attention of the director which may indicate a possible contravention of the Combines Investigation Act is considered carefully to determine whether the situation is such as to warrant formal inquiry. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry under the act is being pursued in a particular industry unless and until a report is published.

REDUCTION OF BENEFITS TO COAL MINERS, N.S.

Question No. 474—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Minister of Labour or the unemployment insurance commission received representations from the Phalen local of the united mine workers in Nova Scotia respecting the reduction in benefits during the week following the vacation period in the coal mines?
2. If so, has a reply been made, and what is the nature of the reply?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. In answer to the second part, a telegram reading as follows was sent to the Phalen local of the united mine workers in Nova Scotia on August 24, 1961:

Holiday pay for Dominion Coal employees will be allocated on basis of normal earnings for six day work week. Believe this will rectify situation which you brought to my attention.

CONTEMPLATED CHANGES, MONTREAL-HALIFAX PASSENGER SERVICE

Question No. 475—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Is a change contemplated in the Montreal-Halifax passenger service provided by the Ocean Limited, the Scotian, and the Maritime Express?
2. If so, (a) what are the changes contemplated? (b) what trades will be affected, and what will be the reduction in personnel in each trade? (c) will they affect present passenger services between divisional and subdivision points?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to parts 1 and 2 of this question, the management of Canadian National Railways advise that the maritime train services are currently under review but no changes have yet been decided upon.

WAGE INVESTIGATION, POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

Question No. 476—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Minister of National Defence received a communication from the international association of machinists, Point Edward naval base, requesting an investigation of the wage structure at the base with a view to establishing rates comparable for similar employees in other industries in the same area?
2. If so, what action has been taken on this request?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of this question is yes. In answer to part 2, the information in this letter has been forwarded to the Department of Labour, since that department is responsible for investigating and making recommendations regarding appropriate wage rates for prevailing rate employees of all government departments.

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL

Question No. 477—Mr. Loiselle:

1. When was the decision taken to build the Champlain bridge?
2. What was the estimate of cost at that date?
3. Have other estimates of cost been made since that date, and, if so, on what dates?
4. What is the present estimate of cost?
5. How many contracts have been given for the construction of this bridge and approaches, to whom, on what date, for what work, and in what amounts?
6. Have any claims been filed with the national harbours board by any of these contractors or subcontractors, and in what amounts?
7. What will be the final cost of this bridge?
8. What will be the official date for the opening of the bridge?
9. Will all the proposed approaches be ready at the opening of the bridge, and, if not, when will each approach be ready?

Starred Questions

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the details of a number of contracts are included in the answers to the several parts of this question. As the complete answer is very lengthy, perhaps the house will agree that it be printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer above referred to is as follows:]

The national harbours board advises as follows:

1. The construction of the bridge was authorized in 1955.
2. The estimate of cost at that date was $35,000,000.
3. No.
4. The present estimated cost of the bridge is $35,300,338.
5. The following contracts have been awarded in connection with the construction of Champlain bridge:

Description	Contractor	Amount	Date
Fill material, north end, Nuns' island bridge	Edouard Monette Ltee	$ 108,332.72	July 25/57

Construction of roadways, sections 2 and 3, Champlain bridge	Miron Company Ltd.	618,892.39	Aug. 29/61

6. No.

7. The final cost of the bridge and approaches will be approximately $35,000,000, exclusive of interest during construction.

8. It is expected that the bridge will be open for traffic in June, 1962.

9. Not all the final approaches will be completed when the bridge is opened in 1962 but means of access to the bridge will be available at both the north and south shore ends of the bridge so that it can be operated satisfactory.

CHIGNECTO CANAL FEASIBILITY SURVEY

Question No. 478—Mr. McWilliam:

1. On what date did the federal government agree to participate in a survey of the feasibility and cost of the Chignecto canal?
2. On what date did the survey actually start?
3. Is survey work in progress on the site at the present time?
4. Have any representations been received since July 1, 1961, in connection with the Chignecto canal survey, and, if so, from whom?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the information available but it will be made available. This is the first time this question has appeared on the order paper. May I ask that this be made an order for return?

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the minister's request that starred question No. 478 be made an order for return, and in view of the pending prorogation, I wonder if the minister would forward me the information requested as soon as possible.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I shall be very happy to do that.

[Mr. Speaker.]

DR. G. LANGIS

Question No. 479—Mr. Caron:

1. Was Dr. G. Langis, M.D., at one time a temporary medical officer of the Department of National Health and Welfare, quarantine and sick mariners division?
2. How long had he acted in this capacity?
3. Has he been dismissed?
4. When, and for what reason?
5. Is Dr. Langis a veteran with overseas service?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Dr. Langis was appointed port physician at Rimouski on December 5, 1935, and retained that position until August 25, 1961, with the exception of some three years during and immediately after the second world war.

3 and 4. A successor was named on August 25 of this year because it was felt that the duties of a part time position of this type, involving night calls and other inconveniences, could best be undertaken by a younger doctor who has not developed other demands on his time nor had the same opportunity to build up a large private practice. The new port physician had performed services for my department previously when Dr. Langis was not available.

5. Yes.

IMPORTS FROM AND EXPORTS TO CUBA—SUGAR IMPORTS

Question No. 480—Mr. Howard:

1. What was the value in dollars of (a) imports from, and (b) exports to Cuba, in (i) 1958 (ii) 1959 (iii) 1960 (iv) 1961 to date?
2. How much sugar was imported by Canada by countries, and by (a) tons (b) value in dollars, in (i) 1958 (ii) 1959 (iii) 1960 (iv) 1961 to date?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question requires three pages of tabulated material. It should be made an order for return, the answer tabled herewith.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

POLITICAL BROADCASTS, C.B.C.

Question No. 481—Mr. Howard:

1. For each year from January 1, 1956, to December 31, 1960, how many hours has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation granted, on both the English and French networks, for (a) radio broadcasts, and (b) television broadcasts, to any of the conventions by the (i) Progressive Conservative party (ii) Liberal party (iii) Social Credit party, and (iv) Co-operative Commonwealth Federation?
2. In each of the above-mentioned cases, what were the total amounts spent for broadcasting purposes?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous amount of detail material necessary in preparing the answer to this question. The corporation has been working on it but the information is not available today. Perhaps the hon. member will be willing to have this made an order for return so the answer could be forthcoming in the very near future. Alternatively, the next time these questions are called it could appear on the order paper again.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

BANK OF CANADA PENSION SCHEME

Question No. 482—Mr. Matheson:

1. What action, if any, has the government taken with respect to the pension scheme which was adopted by the board of directors of the Bank of Canada on February 15, 1960?
2. In what respect has such action, if any, affected the pension rights of the former governor, Mr. James Coyne?
3. In what respect has such action, if any, affected any other employees of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the board of directors of the Bank of Canada at its meeting on July 22, 1961 decided to seek legal opinion on the validity of the bank's pension by-law and in particular rule No. 17 in that by-law. On the same day the board of directors adopted a resolution suspending rule No. 17 of the by-law pending further consideration by the board.

SARNIA INDIAN RESERVE—TRUSTS ESTABLISHED IN LAND SALE

Question No. 483—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Were any trusts established in connection with the sale of the Sarnia Indian reserve which has since been cancelled?
2. What was the purpose of these trusts, and what amount was set aside for each of them?
3. Are the trusts being used for the purpose for which they were established?
4. If not, what disposition is to be made of these trusts?
5. Has any attempt been made to ascertain the views of the Sarnia Indian band with respect to these trusts, and, if so, with what results?
6. If the band has not been consulted, is it proposed to consult the band, and, if so, when, and how?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the six parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) The sum of $500,000 for the establishment of a modern village.

(b) The sum of $100,000 to aid members without land holdings to acquire building sites in the village.

3. The funds set aside in trust are being held to be used for the purposes stipulated.

4. Not applicable.

5. By vote taken on August 28, 1961 a majority of the electors of the band favoured a per capita distribution of these trust moneys. The legal problems involved are under study.

6. Answered by 5.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question supplementary to the starred question to which she replied earlier. May I ask the hon. lady whether there is any present intention of going ahead with the model village in the Sarnia reserve which was provided for in the agreement between the crown and Dimensional Investments Limited?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, some progress has been made. Some houses have been built and are presently occupied. I would have to have more information about the present situation before I could definitely answer the hon. member.

While I am on this subject may I refer to the answer which I gave earlier this morning. Possibly I should draw attention to the fact that there is a slight discrepancy between the figure of $1 million I gave yesterday and the figures I gave the hon. member this morning, which amounted to $600,000. The explanation of the $400,000 discrepancy is that that sum is in the band funds. That is the amount required under section 64 (a), of the Indian Act, that is 50 per cent of the capital funds, to be deposited in the band funds, the balance being available for distribution in circumstances similar to those in this case.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have another question I wish to put to the hon. lady. Are any negotiations or discussions going on at the present time with respect to another sale or attempted sale of the reserve, or what is left of it?

Mrs. Fairclough: I cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker, because the initial negotiations would be with the Indians. I really could not say whether they are presently negotiating with other purchasers. We usually do not hear about these matters in the branch until such time as some progress has been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the hon. lady is not aware of such discussions, is that correct?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Speaker.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TEXTS OF MINISTERS' SPEECHES, ACCRA CONFERENCE

Motion No. 164—Mr. Matheson:

For copies of the texts of the speeches delivered by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce at the Accra conference.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I stated on Monday last, as recorded at page 8829 of Hansard of that date, it is not considered correct procedure for ministers, when they return to the governments which they represent, and to their houses of parliament, to table the text of speeches delivered at a conference. In view of this I wonder whether the hon. member would consider withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Matheson: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Matheson) which was negatived on the following division:

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT OF ANTI-COMBINES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask if it is a fact that the anti-combines legislation as it affects exports is not working satisfactorily, and that what was thought in 1960 to be a new spur to foreign sales has become in 1961 a disappointment to the trade department.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this. If the hon. member wishes more specific information on how the anti-combines legislation is working, I think he should perhaps direct his question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, if I may, Mr. Speaker. I had reference, when I posed the question to the minister, to an article appearing in the Montreal Gazette of Monday in which it was indicated that because of the manner in which the legislation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Laurier will agree that a question about an opinion expressed in a newspaper is scarcely asking for factual information. If there is a question of fact about the administration of the department, I would of course be prepared to accept it.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not an opinion, Mr. Speaker; it is a question of fact. I was asking the minister whether it was a fact that this legislation was working a hardship.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has answered his own question. He says it is a fact, and then he asks me if it is a fact. I think that shows how confused the hon. member is.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a related question of the Minister of Justice. It is based on a report in the Toronto Globe and Mail of today in which the head of the combines branch is reported as having made certain statements. My question is this. What are the weaknesses in the combines law that seem to be complained of and referred to in this speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order. With due deference to the hon. members who opened this line of inquiry, it is a matter for debate on the expression of opinion and is not something that could be answered briefly on the orders of the day. It would require perhaps half an hour to expound in order to give an adequate answer.

Mr. McIlraith: Then I put a question that is capable of a very short answer, yes or no. Did the minister see the report of the speech made by Mr. D. W. W. Henry, director of investigation and research under the combines act, which is contained in today's Globe and Mail?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Henry has made a number of speeches in recent months with my knowledge and approval, and I am sure I do not know to what speech the hon. member is referring.

Mr. McIlraith: I am referring to the one reported in today's Globe and Mail.

Mr. Fulton: As you have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this is getting to be speculative. I have the article in today's Globe and Mail but I have not yet been able to pinpoint any speech made by Mr. Henry referred to therein.

Mr. McIlraith: It is at the bottom of the column.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I see. It was a speech made by Mr. Henry to the retail merchants' association in Toronto. If one reads that speech there is in it, as I see it, no statement that the legislation needs amending. My hon. friend has put a very different interpretation on it from that which I think a proper reading, even of the report in the Globe and Mail, would lead an ordinary, reasonable person to draw.

Mr. McIlraith: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but I think the matter has been pursued far enough.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION FOR BANK MERGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask the minister whether in recent days he has had any discussions with officials of the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of Nova Scotia relative to a merger of those two banks, and whether he has before him an application for a charter for a bank embracing the two banks I have mentioned.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO QUOTA POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister outline to the house the situation in regard to wheat delivery quotas on the prairies?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I am very glad I have been asked this question, Mr. Speaker, because it gives me an opportunity to—

Mr. Pickersgill: Make a speech.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —make a statement. In the last crop year we were able for the first time to give a 7-bushel quota to every delivery point on the prairies. For this year to date I can quote the figures by provinces. I know all members are interested. Last year at this time there were 360 places in Manitoba on the initial unit quota and 9 on the 1-bushel quota. This year there are 89 on the initial unit quota, 169 on the 1-bushel quota, 50 on the 2-bushel quota, 20 on the 3-bushel quota, 4 on the 4-bushel quota, and 21 on the 5-bushel quota.

In Saskatchewan last year 959 were on the initial unit quota and 123 on the 1-bushel quota. This year there are 424 on the initial unit quota, 532 on the 1-bushel quota, 79 on the 2-bushel quota, 20 on the 3-bushel quota, 1 on the 4-bushel quota and 6 on the 5-bushel quota.

In Alberta last year there were 492 still on the initial unit quota and only 57 on the 1-bushel quota. This year there are 110 on the initial unit quota, 255 on the 1-bushel quota, 119 on the 2-bushel quota, 48 on the 3-bushel quota, 1 on the 4-bushel quota and 11 on the 5-bushel quota.

This indicates that we should be able, thanks to the exports of last year and the continuing good sales of this year, to have quotas up to 3 and 4 at most delivery points by Christmas.

LIVESTOCK

RABIES—COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR LOSS IN MINOR OUTBREAKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say if the federal authority is still in effect and if it will continue in respect of reimbursing the province of Ontario for 40 per cent of the money paid to Ontario farmers suffering loss of domestic animals through rabies?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, our legislation is effective as long as the provincial legislation in Ontario is effective.

(Translation):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY MINISTER TO VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Bissonnette (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. We were happy to hear of his recent visit to His Holiness Pope John XXIII.

Would the minister care to say a few words about the impression he had after his audience with the Holy Father and about the language in which they conversed?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to circumscribe the minister, who has recently returned from an interesting trip, but as I understood the question it seemed like a general invitation to the minister to give us a travelogue, and perhaps he could do that more suitably on the estimates. If there is a short point, I have no objection.

(Translation):

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The conversation I was privileged to have with His Holiness, during a private audience, was entirely in French. As all members know, His Holiness speaks French with great facility.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: May I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance and ask him if the question he has just answered has any relation to his administrative responsibility?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I misunderstood the question. I did not realize it was limited to a particular interview.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day I wonder whether the house would allow me to make a correction in Hansard. I must apologize to the hon. member for Quebec West for misunderstanding his question. Unfortunately I relied on the translation, which was incomplete and faulty, and I did not understand that the hon. gentleman was asking about the minister's interview with His Holiness the Pope. I thought he was inviting the minister to give an account of his visit to Accra or to comment generally about his travels. I take the liberty of making this explanation because I am afraid earlier comments on what I thought had been asked might appear facetious in relation to the actual question.

BERLIN—REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON RUSSIAN PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the proposal made yesterday by the Soviet foreign minister, Mr. Gromyko, regarding Berlin?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have read Mr. Gromyko's observations in which there were references to the type of settlement which might be acceptable to the U.S.S.R. in so far as the United Nations is concerned and its connection therewith. I think it was at Winnipeg, at a meeting of the bar association, that I outlined the possibilities in this direction, and I did so again in the house some two weeks ago. I pointed out that a United Nations connection with the Berlin problem might be advantageous. As a matter of fact that view was presented by the Canadian government two years ago.

Whether or not Mr. Gromyko's plan or suggestion contains anything that would be acceptable, I cannot say. The whole matter is being canvassed at the moment. Discussions are taking place between the various members of the United Nations to ascertain whether or not the United Nations could play a role which would be generally acceptable. I hope that might be achieved.

CIVIL DEFENCE

WESTMOUNT, QUE.—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR BOMB SHELTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the government receive a request from the city of Westmount to assist financially in the inclusion of bomb emergency shelters in apartment houses being erected in that city, or to subsidize those shelters? If so, can the minister inform the house what the government is doing about this inquiry?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I know of no such request.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he is in a position today to answer the question I put to him yesterday with respect to the conformity of the recommended shelters with the national building code.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I was waiting only until the other questions had been asked. I am very happy to answer the hon. member for Nipissing, who asked whether it was true that the fall-out shelters which the government is recommending people should build in their basements are inconsistent with the national building code.

Upon inquiry I find that this matter has been considered by the associate committee of the national research council which drew up and recommended the national building code. They have made the following statement about the matter, which is incorporated in the booklet on this shelter:

> The associate committee on the national building code of the national research council considers this design of household fall-out shelters to be structurally acceptable for its intended use for installation in the basements of dwellings, for emergency use only.
> The associate committee makes this statement since the provisions of the national building code are intended for use with buildings for normal conditions of occupancy and not for emergency use.

There are two aspects of the shelter which diverge, for good reason, from certain of the details of the national building code. The first and most obvious one is that the code stipulates that each room in a house should have a window. It would, of course, defeat the whole purpose of the shelter to put a window in it, and the need for ventilation in the shelter is looked after otherwise by vents which it is recommended be built in appropriate places that will not impair the protective value of the shelter.

The other feature specified in the code which has not been carried into the shelter design is that which states that masonry should not be structurally supported on timber. The shelter uses masonry in the form of concrete blocks as a shielding material. To carry it on steel or on other masonry supports would make the shelter very much more expensive and more difficult to build. For the emergency purposes for which the shelter is designed and for the period of usefulness that might reasonably be expected for a shelter, it has been determined that, as reflected by the quotation from the associate committee, the design proposed is quite adequate.

UNITED NATIONS

POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN MINISTER AS SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister any report from our delegation at the United Nations to the effect that our Secretary of State for External Affairs could succeed the late Dag Hammarskjold as secretary general?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I would be afraid to speak in appropriate terms as to the qualifications of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for that particular position because my words might be misunderstood, as was a previous statement I made, as evidence of a potential separation, which of course is non-existent. I know of no one who could discharge those responsibilities in a better manner, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, decisions in this regard are the result of consultation and require the support of some nations which I am sure, having regard to some of the statements which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made on behalf of freedom, would not find his candidature altogether acceptable; I have in mind certain members of the United Nations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STATEMENT BY MOUNTED POLICE OFFICIAL RESPECTING UNION ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On Saturday last I put a question to the Minister of Justice. He was unavoidably absent at that moment. The question was based upon a speech made by Deputy Commissioner McClellan of the R.C.M.P. at Halifax with respect to some internal union matters at Sudbury. I wonder if the minister is now able to answer it.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I have looked into this matter, and I find that what the deputy commissioner was discussing there was the question of fact. Of course it is a well accepted rule that officers in his position do not make speeches on matters of policy. This speech dealt with a matter of fact to which I myself have already alluded in this house, that is, the efforts made by communists to infiltrate trade unions and other perfectly reputable organizations.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

OPPORTUNITY FOR REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING AMENDMENT PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the statement made by Mr. William F. Ryan, Q.C., president of the association of Canadian law teachers, appearing in the Montreal Star of September 26, criticizing the government's course in formulating proposals to amend the British North America Act, will the minister advise the house whether the government intends to provide an opportunity for public representations to be made on constitutional amendments before legislation is introduced?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The future course in respect of this matter is as I outlined it in reply to a question by the hon. member for Laurier about 10 days ago. Perhaps I should emphasize one point. When the final draft, which is being worked on at the present time, is circulated to the attorneys general in the near future it is the intention to make it public so there may be public information and discussion before legislative action is taken.

Miss LaMarsh: Is it the minister's intention to provide for public hearings at which representations may be made in a formal way prior to the introduction of such legislation?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, no such decision has been made on that point.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

TORONTO—CRASH OF TRAINER AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received any indication of the possible cause of the tragic crash of an R.C.A.F. trainer aircraft north of Toronto Monday night?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a report of the investigation being carried on as to the cause of this tragic crash.

COMBINES

MEAT PACKING—RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING DISSOLVING OF MERGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice arising out of the livestock producers' concern that there shall not be a combine in the meat packing industry. Has the government come to a conclusion with regard to the recommendation by the restrictive trade practices commission that a court order should be sought to have a merger in the meat packing industry dissolved or to prevent further mergers taking place?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government is in process of selecting counsel in that particular matter now. As soon as that has been done we will, of course, be discussing with counsel the appropriate course to be followed in the light of the report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAID HOLIDAYS FOR PART TIME EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Secretary of State? Is he now in a position to report to the house on his work concerning the advisability of granting to part-time or seasonal government employees paid holidays as for permanent employees?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I shall be able to give an answer to the hon. member tomorrow.

(Text):

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

CABINET MINISTERS' TRAVELLING EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I also direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask whether he could give another interim report on his efforts to comply with the orders of the house made on November 30 last for returns respecting the travels of cabinet ministers?

(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must repeat the answer I gave the hon. member for St. Denis. I am waiting until all the documents are gathered before tabling the information the hon. member is asking for.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TAKEN TO REDUCE STRONTIUM LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Are any steps being taken by the government to develop methods for combatting the level of strontium 90? I should also like to know whether there has been any progress in the removal of strontium 90 once it actually enters the body.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of these questions. I am pleased to be able to advise that a method is being developed which might prove useful in this connection. It is based on the work of Dr. B. B. Migicovsky of the Department of Agriculture, who has been concerned with the removal of strontium 90 from milk and other food products. I understand that he has been successful at the laboratory stage and that his methods are being tried out on a small production basis.

In answer to the second part of the hon. member's question, I understand that research is being carried out along these lines but has as yet produced little of practical value.

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING TAX COLLECTION, ANNUAL GRANTS, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, September 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-122, to authorize agreements respecting tax collection and annual grants.

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I stated last night how astounded and how surprised I was to hear the Liberals proclaim their autonomist faith. We really know them too well to be misled about their sincerity and their sense of responsibility. They know all the arts of make-believe, that I grant; but they surely have exhausted all their acting tricks. Nothing doing now, the people know who they are.

They know that the Liberal party eagerly destroyed the country's constitution while protesting that they were respectful of principles and traditions. We only have to remember the risky initiative of university grants. It constitutes clear enough evidence.

What is happening nowadays? The Liberals are uselessly trying to restore their virginity because a former federalist and centralizer, Mr. Jean Lesage, has placed them in a strange and precarious situation by solemnly stating his deep respect for principles and realities which only yesterday he was despising and treading underfoot.

A frantic centralist in 1949, 1951 and 1954, Mr. Lesage would now be, in 1961, an out-and-out autonomist; and that, shamelessly and even without the elementary tactfulness it would be in order for him to show towards his former accomplices. Flinging his autonomy into their faces, he forgets that the Liberals in Ottawa used to be his friends and associates.

Walking in someone else's shoes, it will be recalled that Mr. Lesage came to Ottawa, in 1960, to bumptiously assert Quebec's rights. He is now opposed to university grants, after having had a hand in the legislation that has put them into effect. He now shamelessly contradicts himself, having finally realized that his own little salvation lies in his being able to show off as an autonomist. He does not care a bit about his associates. That is why they are now like tight-rope walkers. They said so many times that they were in favour of federal grants to universities that today they do not know how to reconcile their former creed with Mr. Lesage's new gospel. For there is no doubt that Liberal members in Ottawa do not share Mr. Lesage's thinking.

We only have to recall the various statements they made, one by one in turn, about university grants.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record some of the statements I find in volume 3 of Hansard for 1960, in particular the following from the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge), on page 3315.

> I therefore think, Mr. Speaker, that I am entitled to express my humble opinion and to conclude that the central government, or rather the central parliament, has a perfect right to vote grants to the universities, without encroaching on provincial autonomy in the educational field.

Here is another statement, this one from the hon. member for Gatineau, which is found on page 3305 of the same volume of Hansard:

> I have always been in favour of university grants.

And now, Mr. Speaker, to add a pleasant aspect to a useful one, I shall quote the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), whose remarks are found on page 2759 of the same volume of Hansard:

> Everybody knows that grants to universities are a Liberal achievement.
> It is a Liberal legislation we adopted at the time, that we are approving today, and that we shall continue to approve.

And he added:

> We feel that the federal government has not only the right, but the duty, to assist our institutions of higher learning.

As to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), he made the following statement, which hon. members will find on page 3550, in the same volume:

> There is no possible doubt that the Liberal party was and still is in favour of assistance to universities.

Mr. Speaker, those people should therefore either remain centralists in Ottawa or become autonomists to please their allies in Quebec. In either case, they are inconsistent.

That explains their urge to find in other people instances of their own inconsistency. I shall immediately state, in order to reassure a tortured Liberal conscience, that the Conservative members from Quebec did not break the promise they made to their voters to defend autonomy and the rights of the province of Quebec in general.

Let us recall their stand on Bill C-56. At that time, they voted in favour of a bill which allowed the province of Quebec to pass its own tax legislation without its taxpayers being penalized. For my part, I said at the time that the solution contained in the bill was of a temporary nature, that it was, after all, a formula of compromise, a fair compromise under the circumstances because it left the door open for a final settlement of the thorny problem created by the Liberal party, when it brought the central power into the forbidden field of education.

At that time I did not hesitate to vote with my party, not only for reasons of political solidarity, but in order to co-operate realistically, without any surrender of principle.

I have always thought, and I want to state it quite categorically, that the problem of the federal government interference in the field of education was not solved for all that. While I had, for the time being, to accept compromise formulas, I have never made a surrender of principles. I would remind those who are looking for inconsistency, of the philosophical notions of end and means.

In my opinion, all the solutions that have been suggested or adopted to this day in order to solve the problem of grants to universities have been and still are only more or less efficient means to reach the goal, that is the progressive but finally total withdrawal of the central government from this prohibited field of education at all levels.

I know that this is not easy and that this problem is closely related to that of tax sharing. Therefore, I appreciate the efforts of the Conservative government to give satisfaction on the one hand to the fierce autonomist demands of the province of Quebec and on the other hand, to the wish of the other provinces which did not understand readily what was at stake in the constitutional fight that Quebec fought alone, or almost alone, in spite of all opposition.

Again I say that the province of Quebec is not like the other provinces. Its characteristics, its stands come from its conception of confederation. One should not be surprised to find that, on certain constitutional matters, the stand taken by the province of Quebec is not the same as that of other provinces. The reason is that things are not yet seen in the same light everywhere and that we must proceed slowly and by steps with those who do not have the same reasons as we have to be autonomists.

This dissimilarity is but the expression of confederation itself, which is a system of compromises that worked unevenly, and it worked only because a lot of concessions were made, often at the expense, unfortunately, of the minority.

It seems that people are afraid to accept the facts and to admit obvious realities, especially this one: that the governments in Ottawa have always been obliged to seesaw.

The coming into power of the Conservative party in 1957 has not brought any change to this basic situation. Confederation remained what it was: a system of compromises the polishing of which is a slow, arduous and very painful process. Will it ever work easily and smoothly? Personally, I have my doubts. But I pay a tribute to the Conservative government which, having inherited a very bad situation, has tried, and successfully, to set things straight and to correct the errors of the past.

After all it cannot be expected to move faster than facts, circumstances and existing situations will allow. The press, which is usually not too friendly towards Conservatives in general, has given credit to the members from Quebec in that respect. It understood the difficult situation in which we find ourselves. But, despite certain appearances which can still lend themselves to confusion, people are beginning to realize that we have fulfilled our undertaking to correct the constitutional situation. We have initiated methods and ways of assertion which have been effective and which should progressively overcome the difficulties brought about by the Liberal regime.

I do not wish to evade the issue rising from the bill before us by confining myself to generalities. I feel this is a worth-while piece of legislation. I think it would be better still if the option clause had been kept in. I will not hold that against the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) as long as he gives me the assurance that the government intends to continue its efforts in order to find a solution which will take into strict account the autonomist rights and demands of the province of Quebec. For we are not free to draw back. The problem of university grants has begun to be dealt with. The government should not, by shilly-shallying, lose the credit they have gained for themselves. Quebec members have no alternative. They need guarantees, while the government's action has only provided a deposit. But we want more than that. Looking at the facts I am led to believe that the government will not fail us, that they will not deceive us, that they will continue and complete the task.

I know the government is awaiting the Lesage proposals. But he is shy—he is hesitant now, after refusing the offers made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). He seems to be frightened by the consequences of autonomy. In any case, he is in no hurry to grasp the fiscal benefits of these offers, for he would then have the trouble—and quite serious trouble under the circumstances —to say a few words about it to Quebec taxpayers. Moreover, when you see how eager his so-called autonomist government has been to accept the joint plans, after having denounced them in 1960, you no longer have any illusion about the sincerity of his autonomist convictions. His is an awkward task since he must reassure the electors of the province of Quebec, whose votes he obtained under false pretenses, and at the same time, he must prepare his reappearance on the federal scene besides his centralizing associates.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec members have no choice, regardless of who they are. In his own way, every one of them must keep up the fight for autonomy which was led by Mr. Duplessis. We must admit that it has forced the central government to show a better frame of mind and that it has compelled a new concept of confederation. Indeed, Mr. Duplessis' autonomy was never negative or disguised. He often had to reject bluntly unacceptable proposals. On the other hand, he took the necessary steps.

Many try to minimize the importance of the role he played, to cut down his stature. That is why it is said that his fight for autonomy was inspired by petty considerations. Those people do not want to admit that he was the champion of our rights. He devoted his talents and his energy to the defence and preservation of the work of the fathers of the confederation.

We can rightly ask ourselves: What would have become of the Canadian confederation without him? During the tragic hours of the option, he fought alone and against everyone by refusing to comply with the entreaties of a central government which was anxious to take away from the provinces the rights and privileges they had acquired. He did so only to give his compatriots legal weapons to protect their national heritage. Instinctively, the people of our province understood the meaning of Maurice Duplessis' actions and remained true to him until the end.

Today, as the constitutional situation is becoming less entangled and the central power is led to reconsider sympathetically present and future problems caused by the province of Quebec to other parts of the country, decency requires that we recognize that such an improvement is but the result of the courageous stand taken by Mr. Duplessis, who showed himself capable placing our constitutional life back on its true course.

His stand brought the central government to repent. Solutions were tried, and then important reconquests were achieved, so that we can now say that he has restored confederation, opened avenues to new researches and shown the way that we think will lead to the political sovereignty of Quebec.

I close my remarks by saying that I have always felt that to work to this end was the responsibility of Quebec members in Ottawa.

(Text):

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the bill now under discussion is of major importance, not only because it concerns the economies of the ten provinces of Canada but because it also concerns the right of each province to participate equally in the progress and development of this country. It seems unfortunate that a measure of such importance is being discussed on the 173rd day of the present session and in what could be the dying moments not only of the present session but, according to rumours that are circulating, of Canada's twenty fourth parliament.

While speaking in the debate last evening the hon. member for Westmorland made certain remarks which I believe should be answered. First he accused the premier of New Brunswick of suggesting that the other three Atlantic provinces are not poor provinces and that New Brunswick is the only poor province in eastern Canada. I want to say that at no time has the premier of New Brunswick suggested that New Brunswick is the only poor province in eastern Canada. What the New Brunswick premier has done is to bring to the attention of the general public the discrepancy existing in the criteria used under these new arrangements for the distribution of federal grants, which arrangements result in discrimination against the province of New Brunswick.

The hon. member for Westmorland went further and said that the present government of New Brunswick is trying to get sufficient additional money from Ottawa to carry out in full its election promises of 1960. The fact is that the present government of New Brunswick has done more for that province in the first 15 months of its administration than the previous government of the province was able to promise in its eight years in office.

An hon. Member: How absurd can you get?

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member took serious exception to the objections raised by the premier of New Brunswick and stated that these objections, to use his own words, were hardly warranted. The position of the province of New Brunswick in so far as this legislation is concerned was made quite clear in a press release issued by the premier of New Brunswick on Monday of this week. I have here a copy of the premier's statement and I wish to place on record some parts of the statement and comment on others. The release issued by the premier of New Brunswick is in part as follows:

> The Prime Minister has recently replied to my letter of July 19, 1961, in which I requested, on behalf of the government of New Brunswick, that a further federal-provincial conference be held to discuss the arrangements to prevail after March 31, 1962. This reply, which has been publicized widely, ignores our request for further discussions, points to our ignorance of the "generous concessions" offered by the federal government, but generally fails to provide any answers to the questions which have been raised, both by letter and in discussion.
> For example, we expressed, along with all provinces, very great concern about the lack of flexibility permitted the provinces under the proposed tax collection agreements. The Prime Minister has replied that the new arrangements will permit the provinces—

And this point should be noted, Mr. Speaker, > —"to cultivate the tax fields in the way each province deems fit."

> The Prime Minister has made this statement several times, and to this extent I, like him, am reminded of the aptness of a statement made by an ancient public figure, "When I've said it three times, you can consider it the truth".

As further stated in the New Brunswick premier's statement, the facts are that all the provinces have been informed by Ottawa that they are not free to use their own definition of income. The provinces cannot determine the rates of progression; they can take advantage of only those exemptions allowed by the federal government. With regard to the corporation profits tax, should any province or its municipalities impose a non-income tax contrary to federal regulations, there will be a corresponding deduction from the federal payments to the province. I ask the Minister of Finance this question: Is that the way in which to cultivate the tax fields as each province deems fit?

What are the so-called federal concessions? They have already been described as being two in number, and both concessions are very minor. One of these concessions allows the federal government to share substantially the burden of logging taxes imposed by the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario. Of this concession the other eight provinces cannot take advantage. The second concession is to continue the sharing of certain public utility taxes. Such a concession, says the New Brunswick premier, is beneficial only to those provinces which possess private electric power generating companies.

During the past few months we all know that a great deal has been said about the proposed new arrangements which are before this house for approval, and specifically with regard to their financial effect on various provincial governments. It will be recalled that in his report to the legislature the premier of New Brunswick indicated that the new formula would provide some $600,000 more than the present formula if it were projected to the first year of the new agreement. Since then a number of statements have been made throughout the province of New Brunswick and published in the press to the effect that New Brunswick would receive approximately $2 million to $3 million in extra revenue in the first year of the new agreement, that is to say for the year 1962-63.

I note that the Minister of Forestry is in his seat listening to my remarks. I have here a press clipping from the Fredericton Gleaner under date of September 1, 1961. The heading of this article is "Federal Tax-Rental Scheme Said Not Discriminatory" and it reads as follows:

> Federal forestry minister Hugh John Flemming, speaking at a rally of Progressive Conservative supporters in Victoria-Carleton last night, attacked Premier Robichaud's stand that the federal government's tax rental scheme is discriminatory to New Brunswick.

Then in quotation marks appear the minister's own words:

> "Those who say that the tax rental deal is discriminatory to New Brunswick are simply not acquainting you with the facts," he said. "New Brunswick will get $2 million more under the new deal with Ottawa.
> "In addition, the Atlantic provinces premiers at Halifax had the responsibility of distributing the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, which were increased from $25 million a year to $35 million a year, or 40 per cent.

I now wish to place on record figures which will clarify such statements once and for all. The figures I am going to quote assume a constant rate of growth in tax yields under each formula so as to make them comparable, and there can be no question that even the federal government and even the Minister of Finance will agree as to the validity of the projections.

The following figures are based on the revenue projections for 1962-63. Under the standard tax yield, New Brunswick under the present formula should receive $9,727,000. Under the proposed formula New Brunswick, again under the standard tax yield, would receive $10,295,000 or a gain of $568,000. But under the equalization payments, under the present formula, New Brunswick will receive $18,484,000 as against $15,698,000 under this proposed formula or a decrease of $2,786,000. Therefore in total, under the present formula New Brunswick would receive $28,211,000 while under the proposed formula it will receive $25,993,000, or a total loss of $2,218,000.

To this it is true—and I wish to be fair—we have to add the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant. Under the present formula the adjustment grant which New Brunswick is to receive will amount to $7,500,000, for a grand total of $35,711,000. Under the proposed formula New Brunswick will receive $10,500,000 in adjustment grants for a grand total of $36,493,000. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the proposed formula the net gain to the province of New Brunswick is not $2 million or $3 million in the first year of the application of this act, but is in the vicinity of $782,000.

These figures clearly show the financial impact of each of the three components of the new arrangements as they will apply during the year 1962-63. They also show the reasons, as stated by the premier of New Brunswick, for New Brunswick's objection that such a formula will not make the best contribution to the public interest of that province.

If we consider the standard tax yield the new formula provides, as I have just stated, an additional $568,000 or an increase of nearly 6 per cent over the present formula. However, in order to achieve this result, the present personal income tax percentage accruing to the province will have been increased from 13 per cent to 16 per cent, which means an increase of over 23 per cent in total amount. The same tax increase in Ontario, for example, would raise their revenue by over 14 per cent, or more than twice the rate of 6 per cent allowed to New Brunswick.

This indicates why New Brunswick has stressed the fact that increased emphasis on the yields from the standard taxes discriminates against the poorer provinces with lower tax yields. If we take into consideration the equalization payments under the present formula, the low tax yields of the standard taxes are to a great extent offset by equalization payments which increase in proportion to the increase in the tax yields of the two wealthiest provinces in Canada, namely British Columbia and Ontario. By reducing this growth factor to the national average and by introducing natural resource revenue the new formula produces a decrease in equalization payments, as I stated earlier, of $2,786 million, and reduces the growth potential. Therefore the premier of New Brunswick was right in saying:

> This latter statement is axiomatic since it is impossible for this type of "average" to grow as fast as the highest numbers which are included in it.

What are the bases for the new formula which will be applied following the passing of this bill? The federal government is taking into consideration the natural resource revenue by provinces, and according to figures produced by the dominion bureau of statistics, the revenue for the province of New Brunswick, if the average is taken for the years 1956 to 1958, amounts to $3,978,000, or $7.03 per capita. If the same figures are used for the province of Ontario they amount to $31,381,000, or an average of $5.59 per capita.

Therefore under these new criteria New Brunswick is being looked upon as a province having exceptional revenue from its natural resources, but the fact is that no consideration is being given to the cost to the taxpayers of the province of New Brunswick to maintain and protect those natural resources. This is where there is discrimination.

As the premier of New Brunswick said in his statement, in total the standard taxes, together with the equalization payments, fall short by $2,218,000 of the level that would be achieved under a continuation of the present agreement. It is to cover this shortage that an additional $10 million in grants was awarded to the Atlantic provinces, from which New Brunswick will receive $3 million as its share. Instead of the guarantee, New Brunswick's share of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants will be increased by $3 million, which will be incorporated into the basis for calculating the equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces.

The province of New Brunswick is objecting strongly to this treatment of what was intended as a special and separate payment to the Atlantic region. At the federal-provincial conference and also in letters to the Prime Minister, New Brunswick proposed that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants be kept out of equalization and that the normal guarantee be applied. It is clear that New Brunswick does not receive the full benefit of the increase, since the bulk of it is used to offset the losses resulting from lower equalization payments.

In these objections New Brunswick has been strongly supported by every province in Canada with the exception of Ontario. The representatives of the other provinces made a point of supporting New Brunswick.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. Robichaud: Some of them have indicated their support in letters addressed to the Prime Minister which have been made public. In replying to the letter from the premier of New Brunswick with respect to this point, the Prime Minister said only that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant is separate and "is in no way connected with the basic equalization formula".

I ask how can this be the case when one considers the figures I have quoted and the fact that subclause 4 of clause 4 of this bill, No. C-122, cited as the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements act, specifically says that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants shall be included in determining the tax equalization payment to be paid to a province. There is no question but that the adjustment grant is included, and even less question about the fact that it should not be.

The additional amount provided in this bill is certainly inconsistent with the fiscal requirements of the province of New Brunswick, however measured. Even within the Atlantic region itself there seems to be little relationship between revenue increases and the fiscal needs of each of the Atlantic provinces. I am quoting these figures to give facts, not to complain. I am not complaining about the way the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island would be treated; I am merely giving facts. Based on similar calculations Newfoundland will receive additional revenue, excluding the special grant of $8 million which they have a right to receive according to the constitution, to the extent of $5.10 per capita; Prince Edward Island, $9.31, and Nova Scotia $2.89. I ask, how do these amounts, particularly the $1.25 for New Brunswick compare with an increase of $2.95 per capita for the province of Ontario, the wealthiest province in Canada?

Hon. members on the government side will say there is no discrimination in the treatment being given to the province of New Brunswick. It is true that the Prime Minister has expressed the hope that upon consideration New Brunswick will recognize "the financial benefits of the new arrangements and the greater freedom and flexibility which they afford". After long consideration with many others no such recognition has resulted, and the premier of New Brunswick was right to make this abundantly clear to the federal government and to the people of New Brunswick. The government of New Brunswick has every right to feel that this new arrangement being forced upon the province is a poor deal for the province of New Brunswick, a poor deal for the government of the province and a poor deal for its people, as well as for the other less wealthy provinces. The provinces are being given no alternative. They must now levy their own taxes upon personal and corporation income, and the result will be to the full advantage of those provinces where the great corporations are located and where personal incomes are at the highest levels. The basis of equalization has been thrown out the window, notwithstanding the Prime Minister's solemn promise to the contrary.

The inclusion of the natural resources income factor will definitely work to the disadvantage of New Brunswick, and as a result of the introduction of this new natural resource basis New Brunswick will receive an additional $1.25 per capita as against additional revenue of $2.95 for the wealthy province of Ontario. Is Ontario in more urgent need of financial consideration than New Brunswick? The facts are that notwithstanding the objections of the premier of New Brunswick, and notwithstanding the serious objections of the seven other premiers who have expressed dissatisfaction with the offer, the provinces have been told by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Finance, "Take it or leave it".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is untrue.

Mr. Robichaud: I hear the Minister of Finance say "That is untrue". Those are the facts. When Premier Robichaud and Premier Lesage asked that the conference be reconvened so they could come back to Ottawa and discuss these problems further, they received a definite refusal from the Prime Minister. For these reasons, as a member from the province of New Brunswick, under no consideration can I support such a bill as this, and I will vote against it on second reading.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): It had not been my purpose to take part in this discussion, at least to any great extent, and I should not intervene now were it not for the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Gloucester, especially in connection with the special consideration which I feel has been given to the province of New Brunswick and which he, for some purpose, seems disposed to minimize.

Before continuing along that line, however, I should like to say that I listened carefully and with a great deal of interest, as I usually do, to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I found myself in agreement with him in one particular. I would be the first person to admit that as far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, without the special adjustment grant of $35 million a case might be made that the eastern provinces had a real grievance. In my opinion, however, that provision completely refutes the speech which was made just now by the hon. member for Gloucester, and I think it refutes to a great extent the assertions made yesterday by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on the question of equalization.

With regard to the adjustment of all provinces to the level of the national average, I acknowledge frankly that I took part in some conferences in which we brought to the attention of the government, as it was constituted in those days, our feeling that the Atlantic provinces for one reason or another, partly for geographical reasons and partly because of certain commitments made at the time of confederation, should receive special consideration, and that attention should also be paid to the fact that the average national income was considerably higher than the average income in the maritime provinces. At no time did we suggest that attention should be paid by the federal authority to the adjustment of the eastern provinces' income to the level of that of the wealthiest provinces. Our comparison, generally speaking, was made with respect to the national average. I feel that the government today are perfectly justified in taking the national average as the level upon which to base their grants. It seems to me that the special consideration which has been given in that regard is a proper consideration, and I am satisfied to defend that position at any time.

We come now to the provision for stabilization, which I trust will never have to be used. I may say that the previous administration did suggest at one of the conferences, I believe it was in 1955 or 1956, that the stabilization feature should be incorporated, or in other words that a province should be protected against a drastic decline in the gross national income as reflected in returns to the central government. It would seem to me that this is a protective feature in so far as the eastern provinces are concerned, and I was very happy when it was decided that this would be the basis on which the new agreements would be drawn up.

In presenting this bill to the house on July 11 the Minister of Finance produced tables indicating the effect of the proposed agreements. I submit that great satisfaction was expressed by some premiers after the conference of last autumn. I suggest that the premier of Newfoundland was very well satisfied. I suggest that he was very happy. I do not know how the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is going to justify the statements he made yesterday when he meets the premier of Newfoundland in Newfoundland. I found it difficult to reconcile the attitude he took here yesterday with the attitude he should have as the representative of the people of Bonavista-Twillingate. I say this because the hon. member on many occasions has called attention in his own inimitable fashion to the needs of the fishermen in his own riding.

The hon. member also gave credit to the government for the construction of wharves to facilitate the shipment of pulpwood. All these things indicated to me that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was sincere in his approach, and I had no reason to think otherwise until yesterday. I received a terrific shock when the hon. gentleman addressed us yesterday. I thought he of all hon. members would say that this was about the best thing the government had done for a long time, that this was one of the few things on which he could agree with the government. Instead of that we found the hon. gentleman criticizing the government and saying at the conclusion of his remarks that he found it impossible to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you do so, sir, I wonder whether I might have unanimous consent to ask a purely factual question of the Minister of Finance, which I think might facilitate the debate. The minister will recall that it has been suggested several times that we would like to see a projection over the five year period of the new scheme and the existing law. If the minister could have that available for the committee—at least a few copies so that hon. members could have them for consultation—I am sure it would save us a great deal of time in our deliberations in committee.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for lunch I was discussing in a complimentary way the speech of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday and making some observations concerning the inconsistency of the position which I considered he occupied as reflected by some of his remarks made at that time. I might properly be requested to document to some extent those assertions; therefore I ask the house to refer to page 7916 of Hansard and to the figures appearing on that page with reference to the amounts of grants, unconditional and conditional, which have been received by the province of Newfoundland since 1956. I find a great difference since the present government assumed office, and that is the reason I give vent to my sense of disappointment in the observations of the hon. gentleman yesterday. I find that the unconditional grants for the year ended March 31, 1957 were something of the order of $17.8 million. The next year they were $19,244,000; but in 1958-59 they immediately rose to $40,847,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question at that point?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Yes, indeed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman is adding in his figures the $8 million which Newfoundland receives as a constitutional right and which has no business to be in those calculations at all.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): My answer to that is that I am simply reading the figures as reflected on that page. If my hon. friend disputes the figures, then he will have to have his quarrel with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an old quarrel.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): I am quoting the figures of the Minister of Finance which I believe are entirely accurate.

I go on to the next year, 1959-60, and I find that the unconditional grants went down to $37,263,000. The next year they were $37,658,000, and the following year, which is the current year, $38,032,000.

I agree that there may be some explanation of this large increase, but nevertheless it seems to me it is hardly fitting and proper that the government, under whose administration the province, of which the hon. member represents an important constituency, received more than twice as much money as it did under the administration of which he was a member, should be portrayed as public enemy No. 1 in that province.

With respect to the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant, perhaps some hon. members will recall that during one of the debates last winter when a motion of lack of confidence was moved by the opposition in connection with federal-provincial relations I made some rather extended remarks concerning my own association with governments, the present government and the previous government, with respect to representations made at conferences of which I was a member of a delegation from New Brunswick. I quoted my own remarks on many occasions and I also said that at the conclusion of each conference prior to June 10, 1957, all we received from the old administration was careful attention, some courtesy and no money. Now, Mr. Speaker, we could not finance on courtesy. It was impossible, and I speak now in order that I may make myself perfectly understood. I am referring now to financial recognition of the special situation in the east and not to any moneys that might be due to us as part of the regular uniform grants.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to say it is quite a difference.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): We could not make a dent in the administration of those days and I have no way of knowing whether the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said anything to help their native provinces at that time, but if they did, then their words fell on deaf ears because no attention was paid to them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the ears of Bonavista-Twillingate also.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): But on June 10, 1957, a new dispensation was ushered in in Canada as far as the Atlantic provinces were concerned. There is no question about that. Under that new dispensation, early in 1958 or possibly in the fall of 1957 a good deal of legislation was introduced in the House of Commons. I will not go into that legislation in detail because I do not need to do so but I do say that it was designed to be, and was, of tremendous benefit to the eastern provinces. There was the Beechwood loan. We had not been able to get the former government even to lend us the money at the prevailing rate of interest. That was put through by the new administration at an interest rate of 3⅞ per cent. The money is now being paid back by the province and will be paid back.

Mr. Robichaud: In eight years.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): In eight years, yes. What is wrong with eight years? We could not get anything from the administration supported by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud). He says eight years—

Mr. Robichaud: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Of course.

Mr. Robichaud: Is the minister aware that the province is having to borrow money at 6 per cent in order to repay this loan because the term was too short?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house is not interested in our entering into a debate on New Brunswick problems, but may I say for the benefit of the house that the New Brunswick power commission considered that eight years would be sufficient to earn nearly 50 per cent of the money required to pay the whole loan, and in my opinion that is a tremendous thing.

We have the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants which were initiated with the advent of the administration of which I now have the honour to be a member. I said last winter and I repeat that, so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, June 10, 1957, is a more important date than the date of confederation in 1867 because it was by reason of the legislation introduced by the present government that the people of the Atlantic provinces first got a glimmer of light, a glimmer of hope for the future.

I should like to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) in concluding his remarks. I have a note of it here. I hope I have it right because it was my intention to have it right. He said, "I cannot possibly support the measure".

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): That is what causes me a great deal of disappointment. I hope that his colleagues from Newfoundland will not be influenced by him to vote against the bill. To me that will be a terrible tragedy.

This morning we listened to some remarks by the hon. member for Gloucester in the course of which he referred to the situation in New Brunswick and New Brunswick's share of the moneys to be received under the bill now under consideration. To begin with, I can only repeat that many of the things I have said in connection with Newfoundland apply equally to New Brunswick. I do say, however, that I cannot fancy the hon. member for Gloucester in the federal election which is to come finding too much fault with a government which brought into being the special adjustment grants for four years under which the Atlantic provinces received $100 million and which under this legislation is asking the House of Commons for authority to pay another $175 million over the next five years or a total of $275 million over a nine-year period. I cannot imagine him asking the people of his constituency to vote against a government under which the people of the Atlantic provinces will receive $275 million over a nine-year period when those same people could not get one bit of recognition from the government which he supported previous to 1957.

That is the question which I think he has to ask himself. I give him full marks for being interested in his native province. So am I. But I do not give him any credit for some of the things which he said from his place this morning. Quite the opposite. Some of the things which the hon. member said, particularly with respect to the previous administration in the province of New Brunswick, possibly were uncalled for but that makes no particular difference to me. However, when he says, and expresses it as his opinion, that the present administration in the province of New Brunswick has done more in 15 months than the previous government did in eight years, then in my opinion he is expressing a politically partisan opinion which is properly attributable only to the backwoods of Gloucester county and not to a member of parliament.

Mr. Robichaud: The facts are there.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): He has every right to his opinions but he should not voice them as a member of parliament in this chamber because they are not correct. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that many people in New Brunswick consider that the main activity of the present government has been to cut the ribbons on projects started by the previous administration. That is what most people think. The hon. member cannot name one project that they started and completed, not one. He laughs, but he cannot name one. I challenge him.

Mr. Chevrier: That sounds like the Prime Minister's speech.

Mr. Robichaud: What happened in New Brunswick in June, 1960?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): I am not talking about June, 1960. If the people of New Brunswick made a mistake in June, 1960, we are not going to hold it against them forever. Why should we?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just for five years.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): May I say to the hon. member that in my opinion the majority of the people of New Brunswick think today that they made a mistake in June, 1960. There is no question about that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Of course.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman said that he would not hold it against the people of New Brunswick forever. Does he mean that this five year sentence is a long enough one?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): You mean the five year sentence they have under the present government in that province.

Mr. Pickersgill: The five year sentence under this new bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Your speech yesterday was a long enough sentence.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): The five year sentence they have had imposed on them by reason of the present provincial government in that province is a long enough one. I would say to members of the opposition and the Liberal party in general that they should avoid mentioning the words "dominion-provincial relations" as though they were the plague because their party will not get any benefit from talking about them. They say they are going to vote against the bill and that is quite all right but they will not be able to live it down as far as the eastern part of the country is concerned.

The hon. member for Gloucester also quoted from some remarks I made which were reported in the Gleaner and in which I said the province would receive $2 million more than it is now receiving. That is what I said. I have here the estimates of the province of New Brunswick passed at last winter's session and applying to the fiscal year ending on March 31 next. Here are the amounts for which they have budgeted. With respect to revenue under the federal-provincial agreement the amount is $26,548,000. Then there is $7½ million under the Atlantic provinces grants. The total of these two figures is $34 million odd. I should like the hon. member for Gloucester to keep that figure of $34 million in mind for a moment, so I would ask him to turn to page 7927 of Hansard. The amount that it is contemplated the province of New Brunswick will receive in the first year of the new agreement, as listed on that page I have mentioned, is $36,265,000.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: Is that difference of $2 million due to the new formula? Is the minister not aware that every year the amounts payable to the province, even under the old formula, were increasing?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I said nothing about formulas. In the course of my public remarks I said that the province of New Brunswick would receive $2 million more the first year of the new agreement than it is receiving in the last year of the old agreement. Those are the facts and figures I have just quoted and I have the documentary proof here. The hon. member starts out to say that now he wants to clarify this matter. No clarification is needed. We just examine the record. I gave the record. That is the amount. Those are the places where the figures are found. Those are the figures which I quoted in the course of a public address in New Brunswick which was referred to by the hon. member for Gloucester. Hon. members can judge for themselves who is trying to deceive whom.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak at any greater length at this time. There are many things I should like to speak about in connection with this bill, as it is an extremely important one. It is most important because, as I have just said, it contemplates the payment of $175 million by way of special adjustment grants for the Atlantic provinces for a five year period. To me that is an extremely important feature of it. I try to reconcile my duties as a member of the central government with my loyalties to the province that I have the honour to represent. In the course of that reconciliation or attempted reconciliation I have not the slightest hesitation in saying to this house that I am prepared to defend at any time and in any place this agreement that is now before us for consideration. I think it takes into consideration all of the needs, angles and situations which apply to all parts of this great country of ours.

Having said that, having mentioned that we are protected by equalization grants and that we are protected by stabilization grants, and that all the protection that small provinces and poorer provinces, if you like, need are embodied in the bill—all of these things and many others too that I will not mention at this time make me feel that as a group of men and women inerested in the progress of this great country of ours we should vote unanimously for the bill. There should not be any division on it whatsoever.

Mr. J. Edgar Fournier (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this moment to make possibly the shortest speech in my life. I should just like to refer to two things that were mentioned this morning.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, since Bill C-122 was introduced in the house, I listened closely and with pleasure to the arguments set forth in the hon. members' speeches. It is most obvious that our friends in the opposition are embarrassed by this bill. The howling we have heard from that side until now, clearly indicates their despair.

I know it is most humiliating for our friends in the opposition to see the government take steps which will be beneficial to the provinces of the dominion, which steps the central administration cruelly refused to take for such a long time.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a while ago, I shall only take a few minutes of the house's time.

First of all, I should like to draw the house's attention to the insult cast on Acadians and French Canadians, before recess, by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) who claims to be the champion of the Acadian faith, and who is the idol of New Brunswick's French newspapers, l'Evangéline and Le Madawaska.

I hope it was through nervousness that the hon. member for Gloucester did not deliver a single part of his speech in his own language, French. I hope that is only an oversight and not indifference and that, in future, he will practise what he preaches either through conviction or hypocrisy.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, what I want to mention here in a few words—

Mr. Denis: In French, please.

Mr. Fournier: The hon. member understands very well. This morning, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gloucester said that the Robichaud government has done more in 15 months than the Conservative government did in the last eight years in which I was a member. I want to straighten out the record in this house. That was a true statement. I agree with it. The only difference is that he did more but in the wrong direction. I wish to point out what he has done and I will take only half a minute. First he increased the provincial debt from $83 million to $103 million. He has borrowed $35 million. He has cut the public works program almost to nothing. He has reduced many public services.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should remember that we are dealing with federal-provincial fiscal relations and it is only the acts of that government to which he is now referring which have a bearing on this bill which should occupy the time of the house.

Mr. Fournier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am just trying to keep the record straight. I hope at some other time to have a chance to come back to this matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On the point of order you raised, Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully draw your attention to the fact that what the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is now proposing to do is to put on record an answer to an assertion made this morning by the hon. member for Gloucester on this precise point. He is not proposing to go beyond the statement which was made this morning and with which he is now taking issue. He has indicated that he proposes to be quite brief in doing so. As we are dealing here with the subject of dominion-provincial fiscal relations, I would respectfully submit that the point is quite relevant to the debate now in progress.

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to speak on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, as my name has been mentioned and as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is referring to a statement which I made this morning. May I say that the statement I made in the course of my remarks this morning was in answer to remarks made last evening by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Creaghan) when he said that the government of the province of New Brunswick was trying to get more money from the federal government in order to keep its election promises.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I might say a word on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, as it is a very unusual intervention that has been made by the Minister of Finance. We have had many occasions on which the Minister of Finance has sought to maintain the narrowest limits of debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He does it all the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: However, this is the first occasion in my recollection on which he has taken the view that something which was totally irrelevant was relevant. I hope the same rule that is going to be applied, will be applied to both sides.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Pickersgill: So am I.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member for Gloucester has just said, one thing leads to another. It is quite true that in debate it is relevant to answer arguments that have been admitted as relevant. In so far as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska was replying to the hon. member for Gloucester I did not intervene. But on the point or the illustration on which he was embarking, he could go very far afield. I do not wish to proscribe the hon. member from talking about anything that relates to federal-provincial financial arrangements, but there are many things which the province of New Brunswick does in the course of its administration which have no relation to this bill. It was just a caution in that respect which I wanted the hon. member to have in mind as he proceeded.

Mr. Fournier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, I was at the end of my remarks. I am very pleased to see that I have touched my opponents in a very sore spot, because they do not seem to be able to accept it when I give the facts. There are many things which they have done in the wrong way and in the wrong direction. I hope that in time I will have a chance to express my feelings on these matters and come back to this subject.

(Translation):

Mr. Robert Lafreniere (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to deal with all the points relating to Bill C-122. However, there is a problem which is of particular interest to me and on which I had the opportunity, in April 1959, to voice my opinions in this house. As you must have already guessed, it is obviously the problem of university grants and the general problem of education.

In April 1959, when a discussion took place on this subject, several members had put forward their views in the house and each one had expressed his satisfaction to see that the government was proposing a new formula to let the provinces collect 1 per cent of the taxable income of corporations and to allocate those revenues to the universities themselves. Amendment 9A had been included in Bill C-56; but now, in Bill C-122, this necessary formula completely disappears.

In 1959, when we supported this agreement, which I had said was not perfect but acceptable, we had the impression of taking one more step to consolidate with section 93, which places education under the exclusive jurisdiction of legislative assemblies.

Without repeating the speech I then had the pleasure to make, I should like to recall to the house that I firmly believe that education is exclusively the responsibility of the provinces up to university level, if not beyond that.

I very much regret that Bill C-122 does away with the agreement which we had found satisfactory in April, 1959.

However, I hope the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will make definite plans on this education problem concerning the whole nation, which problem comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. It might be necessary in cases of emergency to set up national organizations subsidized by the central government, but that day has not come yet and I am still of the opinion that we should do everything possible to leave to the provinces their exclusive jurisdiction in the field of education.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I must state quite frankly that I am displeased to see us abandon the formula we had accepted in April, 1959 and I say again that being aware of the broadmindedness and the sense of justice that have always animated the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I hope that they have definite agreements in mind, so that we may revert to the full observance of the confederative pact.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we are opposing this bill and voting against it because we think it is a retrograde step and moves Canada's federal-provincial relations away from some very valuable and important principles that had been established over the years.

It has been recognized by successive governments in Canada in recent years that in order to provide for the general prosperity and welfare of the nation; in order to provide greater equality of services to Canadian citizens within the various provinces, it was necessary for the government to give leadership in bringing about federal-provincial agreements and arrangements that would stabilize the economy, that would provide certain additional revenues to the so-called "have not" provinces and would give the federal government greater opportunity to deal with fiscal measures in such a way as to mitigate widespread unemployment and provide for the general prosperity and expansion of the Canadian economy.

While we in this party have always supported the federal-provincial agreements of the past, we have not hesitated to point out weaknesses that existed and improvements that could be made. We feel that the old agreement was lacking in that it set as the standard for equalization the income from the taxes within the two provinces with the highest incomes, rather than taking the highest income. We think it would have been preferable to attempt to provide the citizens in each province with the services that would flow from the use of revenue in the province where there was the highest income.

Instead there is a retrograde step in this bill before us when it provides that we shall go from a standard of the average within the two highest provinces to the national average. This is a general downgrading of the whole concept of equalization. We think this measure is inferior to the existing system because it is forcing the provinces to go back into the income tax field themselves. This will mean an increase in the variations of income and corporation taxes as between the provinces. This is a return to the tax jungle of bygone days. Also, at least to some extent it does lessen the general effect of federal measures, certainly in the reduction of income tax, to stimulate purchasing power and employment by making certain through this particular measure that provinces have every opportunity, not having signed tax agreements on the original basis, of moving in and taking up, by increasing their own income taxes, any reduction that might have taken place in federal income taxes. This is a backward step, this is retrograde step, this is a piecemeal deal. It is neither fish nor fowl. It does not satisfy the aspirations of the people of any province but it appears to be designed to help, at least in some measure, those governments which are sympathetic to the present administration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Except Manitoba.

Mr. Argue: Except Manitoba, and I suppose Manitoba happens to be caught up with the province of Quebec and the province of Saskatchewan, so it is just a victim of circumstances. I am sure if the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) could have found any formula to add to the formulae which are already in this bill, that would have been done, but it must have posed a problem which could not have been solved.

Over the years in this house the Prime Minister has been a very staunch advocate of measures to help the municipalities and to help the provinces discharge their responsibilities. This is not a measure which will help the provinces to discharge their financial responsibilities. It is not a measure which will assist the provinces to pass on, in turn, aid to the municipalities within their jurisdiction so that the municipalities can discharge the functions for which they are responsible. I listened with interest to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming). He made a very spirited defence of the government but I was amazed that he should go along with this downgrading of the equalization principle from the level of the two highest provinces to the national level. His excuse for this seemed to be that there were additional grants going to the Atlantic provinces. That may be the excuse with respect to the Atlantic provinces but it is of no value as applied to the other provinces which are not eligible for those grants, though, of course, we all felt that something should be undertaken to overcome some of the disadvantages felt by the Atlantic provinces.

Ontario gains a little by this arrangement. Some of the Atlantic provinces stand to gain a little. But there is a group of provinces which stand not to gain at all. I refer to the four western provinces and, of course, to the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister has complained bitterly in this house over the years—and some of us have helped him—about the unjust deal given by the former administration to the prairie provinces, as well as to other provinces, of this nation. What is in this deal for Saskatchewan? What is in this deal for Manitoba? I ask the Prime Minister where, in this measure, the province of Saskatchewan has a chance to overcome some of the disadvantages imposed on it under the former agreement about which he complained so much? In a speech in the 1957 election campaign, the Prime Minister had this to say:

> We believe there can be no national unity in this nation until there is a realization that the federal-provincial matters have handcuffed the provinces of this nation; have denied the municipalities adequate sources of revenue; have placed the provinces and the municipalities in a position where they cannot discharge their constitutional responsibilities or permitting the necessary development in their own territorial confines of the natural resources that there are.

Where the provinces have been developing their own natural resources, the income obtained will be used to weight the advantage from this legislation against them. Look at the table on page 7927 of Hansard. Learn from that table, placed there by the Minister of Finance, what some of the provinces stand to gain. The provinces I have been speaking about have nothing to gain. The province of Saskatchewan has co-operated with this federal government and with other federal governments in joint projects of benefit to the people of the province and to the people of this nation. No difficulties that I know about have arisen with regard to relations between the federal government and the government of Saskatchewan. I am not saying there has been trouble about relations with other provinces. But why should the people of Saskatchewan be discriminated against in this measure when the Prime Minister complained so bitterly in the past that a raw deal had been given to that province by the former Liberal administration? Yet the best he can do for Saskatchewan in this bill is to say:

> In addition, two equalization guarantees are provided. First, for provinces below the national average in the yield of standard taxes and 50 per cent of natural resource revenue, the equalization will never be less than enough to make them at least as well off as they would have been under a projection of the present arrangements.

What a wonderful deal for Saskatchewan for this government. In effect, the Prime Minister says: Don't worry, you are all right; you are not going to be any worse off than you were under the Liberals. And he thinks this a reason why people in Saskatchewan should stand up and cheer.

Mr. Jones: Thirty three million dollars in 1956 and $70 million in 1960. Laugh that one off, my friends.

Mr. Argue: There has been no change, according to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). The only change the government has made in the last few months is to deny the farmers of the three prairie provinces the $40 million they used to get.

Mr. Jones: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: In this legislation the government is saying: We shall not do anything more for the people of Saskatchewan, for the people of Manitoba or for the people of Quebec.

Mr. Jones: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Saskatoon can make his statement when I have concluded.

Mr. Jones: I am asking a question: what is this $40 million?

Mr. Argue: The $40 million is the money the farmers did not get this year on an acreage payment we have been asking about for weeks—

Mr. Jones: You said it was peanuts.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister giggles. Even peanuts have their place.

Mr. Jones: You said you were opposed to that.

Mr. Argue: That is not true. That is a false statement. That statement is completely false and inaccurate.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon may have the floor later if he desires. If he asks any more questions he will not have the right to speak as he will already have spoken.

Mr. Argue: It might be the intention of the hon. member for Saskatoon to speak later but I do not think he is going to make a speech. I wish he would. I wish he would stand up and defend a bill which gives the same deal to the people of Saskatchewan as they have had in the past.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Saskatchewan do not want to stay where they are. They want to go forward. They do not like to be condemned as they are under this legislation to the same kind of deal in the next five years as they have had in recent years.

We do not know when the election is going to be, but this will be an election issue. It will be an election issue and we shall take this election issue to the people of Saskatchewan to demonstrate that this government has overlooked them, forgotten about them, and that when the Prime Minister, in all those campaign speeches of his in years gone by, was advocating a new deal in federal-provincial fiscal arrangements he meant a new deal for some and the same old deal for others.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not have the house believe that I rise because of the vociferous ejaculations of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I do not rise for that purpose although he has touched upon a number of matters with which I shall deal. I intend to say something about Saskatchewan. I observed that the hon. member said Saskatchewan does not wish to stand still. I could not be more in agreement with that for under the rule of the C.C.F. in that province—and I use a name that is now an anathema in this house; it is now to become the New Democratic party—extending over a period of 17 years, the province of Saskatchewan has witnessed under socialism a decline in population, compared with the population growth of other provinces in western Canada whose governments follow the principles of free enterprise.

The hon. member asked what Saskatchewan has received and then he indicated that he rose to give support to the need this year of a $40 million payment for the farmers.

Mr. Argue: Oh, much more than that. That is not nearly enough.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member has been strangely silent in the last couple of months within his own group.

Mr. Argue: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman was not listened to within his own group with that degree of attention we accord him in the house.

Mr. Argue: Pretty cheap.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did I say something the hon. gentleman did not like?

The hon. gentleman pointed out that something should be done for the farmers of western Canada. This government provided $40 million over a two year period. This is the hon. gentleman who said it was peanuts. This is the hon. gentleman who criticized the government for the assistance it gave to western farmers assistance that has been of benefit to every small farmer in that part of the country. It may not have helped the big farmers like the hon. gentleman who farms on a large scale in terms of acreage.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman is seeking the floor for the purpose of raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister has referferred to the size of the farm I operate, describing it as a large farm.

Mr. Matthews: Like the hon. member's head.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister is wrong again.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege there. Whether the farm is large or small does not give rise to a question of privilege. There may be an explanation which could be offered if the hon. member has been misinterpreted or if something has been said which reflects on him, in which case I shall give him an opportunity at the conclusion of the remarks of the present speaker to offer his explanation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to argue with the hon. gentleman. I mentioned that he operated a large farm in terms of acreage. But if the hon. gentleman is a small farmer then surely he benefited. That is the point I am making. Apparently, having benefited, the hon. gentleman in retrospect over the last couple of years has some reason to question the accuracy of his designation of this assistance as "peanuts". The small farmers were able to benefit, and if he qualified to receive assistance perhaps he found it advantageous because he has asked once more that the government give assistance.

Mr. Argue: That is pretty cheap stuff from a prime minister.

Mr. Ricard: He is dealing with the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Pickersgill: What has this to do with the bill?

Mr. Ricard: The proper time to raise these questions is when the hon. member who has the floor has completed his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are supposed to be debating a bill concerning the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. It does not seem to me that the size of the farm of the hon. member for Assiniboia bears much relationship to the legislation before the house. It seems to me that the leader of the house should set an example to the house by obeying the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall be dealing with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in the course of my remarks. Perhaps I might be permitted to make a reference to him immediately. I am awaiting publication of that portion of the history of the life of Mr. Mackenzie King from the year 1925 forward in which period the right hon. gentleman used an expression with which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as not yet seen fit to deal, except in a general way yesterday when he stated that the policy of this government was to act in a manner detrimental to the welfare of the provinces where the governments were of a political faith different from the federal government. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the days of the "five cent" speech are over, and as far as this government is concerned all provincial governments will receive equal consideration regardless of their political stripe.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Pickersgill: We shall see about that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can understand the hon. member for Assiniboia becoming aroused. He loves to make speeches concerning what this government has not done for Saskatchewan. Let me remind him that the assistance given in connection with the South Saskatchewan dam is a tremendous advance of public money for the benefit of the people of the province of Saskatchewan and I have yet to hear one word of commendation or approval of that action from the lips of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Argue: Wrong again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In my opinion conduct of that type merits the designation "cheap".

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is in order for the Prime Minister to disregard the record of the House of Commons and misinterpret the position I have taken in this house over the years without my being given an opportunity to reply at the time to the misleading statement made. I say to the Prime Minister that my record of support for that project in this house is clear. I have commended this government and the government of Saskatchewan for having jointly undertaken this project.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising to make a personal explanation as he did before. Unless the hon. member who has the floor yields it, that is more conveniently done at the end of the remarks of the speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to have from the hon. member that commendation of what this government has done by way of assistance to Saskatchewan. Anything of that kind was strangely wanting a few moments ago when the hon. gentleman said that Saskatchewan had been discriminated against.

Mr. Argue: Under these agreements.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member maintain the type of silence he has shown in recent months except for those frequent occasions when he has sought to interrupt for the purpose of making self-exculpatory statements which commonly have no basis in fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister seems overwrought.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall return to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in due course and accord his remarks the attention they deserve.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could make a request of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not entitled to interrupt unless the hon. gentleman who has the floor yields it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister would wish me to make this interruption. I wished to say to the Prime Minister that I regret very much that at ten minutes to four I have to leave the chamber because of a long-standing engagement and if he could make the remarks about me while I am still here I would be awfully grateful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have at all times followed that practice and the hon. member has been very proper in his observance of it too, although there are some hon. gentleman who sit not too far from him who do not follow that course. If perchance we are going to lose the benefit of the hon. gentleman's presence at ten minutes to four, some of the comments I wished to make in their proper order may have to remain unsaid until another occasion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not mind if they are said in my absence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently an attempt is being made through these frequent interruptions to prevent me from saying a number of things I should like to say. As I stated earlier, I did not rise because of the effusions of the hon. member for Assiniboia but I thought some slight reference might be made to his contribution and apparently I made pertinent references because they aroused the hon. gentleman.

I return now to deal in general with the bill before the house and to speak briefly to emphasize certain major points. I shall not recapitulate the history. An explanation of the various items and also of the course followed by the government in this connection was given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the month of July. Taken together with the publication of the correspondence on this subject, which has been appended to Hansard, and the numerous tables that have been furnished, the Minister of Finance has set forth the whole situation regarding the government's proposals so that they could be understood and judged.

I want to say at once that the purposes of the changes made were to restore once more to the Canadian people the institution upon which confederation is built; in other words, to restore the basic principles of the British North America Act and to assure that the days of centralization in Canada are over. Hon. gentlemen opposite, those who still remain on the front bench, and the governments of their day took under the provisions of the War Measures Act and the powers having to do with war, rights belonging to the provinces that were outside of the field of dominion-provincial relations. What they did in this connection was similar to their conduct of invading provincial rights on every possible occasion during the days of war and immediately thereafter. We have decided that the time has come, as I said in 1957, to restore the spirit of the constitution and to return to the provinces their freedom and responsibilities with respect to the imposition of direct taxation on income.

The hon. member for Assiniboia objects strenuously. Those were the happy days, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benidickson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. member will wait until the conclusion of the sentence I will wait for the applause at that stage. Those were the days when provinces like Saskatchewan could secure necessary funds from the federal government by having the federal government impose the taxation and accept the responsibility for it so far as the people of the several provinces and of Canada were concerned. I can understand why the hon. member for Assiniboia is disturbed. From now on when the government of Saskatchewan wants to impose taxation it will impose its taxation within the limitations of this legislation instead of leaving it to the federal government to impose taxation, pay it over and then allow the responsibility and condemnation for taxation and deficits to rest upon the federal government. We are going to restore as far as it is possible the inherent principles of the constitution.

Mr. Pickersgill: There were no deficits in our day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought the hon. gentleman said he had only 10 minutes. Would he allow me to proceed? We are going to restore to the provinces as far as possible their constitutional rights and their responsiblities.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which they have always had.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman can favour us with his presence for only 10 minutes but he keeps up a persistent line of low voiced interruption. He says they have always had that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course they have.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nothing of the kind. From the day the tax rentals began the provinces were not in that position excepting as they might choose to impose what in effect would be double taxation. There is going to be no harm to the provinces in this.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are forced to do it now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there nothing that can quiet the ebullient individual?

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister has asked for that to which he is entitled. I trust hon. members will act accordingly.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I really feel, sir, that I owe the Prime Minister an apology and I willingly give it to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have restored the inherent principles of the constitution, and this is something we undertook to do. We are ending centralization. We are putting in its place co-operation within the principles of the constitution. This bill represents not merely certain grants to the provinces, or the sharing of tax revenue. It follows in consequence of a series of dominion-provincial conferences; it follows long deliberation and a spirit of give-and-take on the part of both.

We had a number of those conferences. The question was raised whether or not, if the provinces imposed their taxation, there would not be too great an administrative responsibility and cost. We undertook to collect the taxation for the provinces if they chose, and to do so without appreciable cost to them. What we have endeavoured to do in this measure is, I think, tangible evidence of the aspirations of a growing Canada and of the inevitable competition which that brings about between the two levels of government in the use of the basic sources of revenue which are common to them. It reflects, as I see it, the efforts at co-operation between these two levels of government.

I reiterate that we are endeavouring to apply the spirit of confederation, with the sharing of responsibilities and concern for the service and the betterment of the lot of all Canadians wherever they live in this land.

I enunciated our views in this regard at the dominion-provincial conference of 1957, when I said at page 9 of the proceedings:

> We believe that this federation cannot thrive in a climate of glaring disparities in levels and standards of service and development as between the several provinces from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Believing in a positive policy, this government intends in co-operation with the provinces to co-operate actively in promoting the development of Canada and all its regions.

This we have carried out by our system of assistance to the provinces under the roads to resources program. This is an example of co-operation to the end that the federal government will assist the provinces and the provinces will co-operate with the federal government in the development of those areas which otherwise would not have been developed for years. I continue:

> It is our opinion that positive government is necessary both at the dominion and provincial levels in assuring national development and we are prepared to assist provinces in carrying out their functions where we agree that is necessary and when parliament approves. We are prepared to consider on their merits major projects which will contribute to national development and which are beyond the capacities of any of the provinces.

The example I gave earlier was one of those, the South Saskatchewan dam and others that I mentioned yesterday that I will not repeat now. I went on to say:

> In that connection I might refer to three examples. In pursuance of that general plan we have announced a program in respect of power in the maritime provinces. In the speech from the throne reference was made to this government's willingness to recommend to parliament participation with the government of British Columbia in a joint program for the development of the immense potential of the Columbia river.

We do note that the co-operation is not as complete as I would like to see it.

Then I went on to mention the South Saskatchewan dam. I proceeded to outline the general principles in which we believe and the necessity of raising standards in all parts of Canada. I mentioned particularly the Atlantic provinces. When I hear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), the expatriate from Manitoba and now the proponent of everything for Newfoundland, it surprises me that all during the years that he had this affection he did nothing to bring about anything equivalent to the Atlantic provinces grants to which the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) referred a moment ago. These are the steps that we have taken to elevate standards. I said at that time, as found on page 12:

> I believe that we all recognize ... that the Atlantic provinces as a group are confronted with greater difficulties in public finance than the rest of the nation, if they are to maintain the sort of provincial and municipal services that Canadians generally expect. The taxable capacity of the Atlantic provinces, even in the best of times, is significantly lower than that of the other provinces.

Then I said later:

> Recognizing these principles, we are prepared to examine their application and to that end I invite the expression of your views.

In other words, throughout, there was a desire and a declaration in favour of bringing about something that is now being achieved under the policies of the government—the equalization of opportunity in the various parts of Canada and the raising of levels in provinces which did not enjoy the same economic development and present potential as some of the other provinces.

The bill reflects the efforts at co-operation, as I said, in the spirit of confederation. The fiscal arrangements emphasize the government's desire to make clear both the rights and obligations of all levels of government in Canada as well as to provide through equalization a system of redistributing the fruits of our production on a more equitable basis than would otherwise result.

I am going to refer to the tables to which reference has already been made in order to answer the statement of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) to the effect that what is being done does not improve the situation of the past and does not carry out the promises of 1957. The statistics answer such loud-spoken statements which are not based on fact and are not borne out by the evidence. I believe that the pattern of the past 15 or 20 years must give way to the requirements of the present. Restore the constitution. Is there any offence in doing that? Are we to alter the provisions of the basic principles of confederation through the medium of tax agreements and the like? Are we to evade those things in the constitution that have been acceptable since 1867? Are we to bring about changes? I agree that changes in the constitution may be necessary, outside of those things that are basic and are constitutional rights possessed thereunder by the province of Quebec and minorities in general which cannot be attacked in any way.

We have endeavoured to bring about a change in the constitution or at least a basis for a change. We have endeavoured over and over again through meetings to ascertain whether it would not be possible, as it should be, to amend Canada's constitution in Canada instead of having to go abroad to the parliament at Westminster. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has done a great deal in this connection. I would point out that, if I understand the record correctly, the one province that stands in the way of this in very considerable measure is the province of Saskatchewan, the leadership of which during the years has spoken of the necessity of having our constitution amendable in Canada. Yet when we are in a position where most if not all of the provinces, I think, are willing to agree, it is the government of the province of Saskatchewan that stands against the fair and reasonable right of amendment as agreed to generally by the other provinces.

I believe there is need for a revised approach to the asumption of responsibilities while maintaining the constitutional distinctions. We want to give the provinces every right to carry out their constitutional responsibilities. It has been nice for some of them to be able to come to the federal government and say, "Give me, give me", while at the same time criticizing the federal government for increased expenditures, and that is particularly the case with regard to expenditures by this government which have been brought about in order to improve the position of the provinces.

It was with these realities and this desire in mind that I proposed to the dominion-provincial conference that the federal government restore to the provinces the freedom to impose and collect taxes on personal and corporate incomes. In order to do this and yet retain the economy and simplicity of a single collecting agency and uniformity in the manner of determining the tax, the bill proposes to authorize the government to undertake on behalf of the provinces the collection of these taxes on personal and corporate incomes provided the tax base in each case is identical with the federal definition. In designing these tax collection agreements, freedom for the provinces to vary their rate of taxation was a prime objective. This freedom provides them with the flexibility to adjust their revenues from year to year in accordance with their needs, and also underlines their independence and direct responsibility.

There has been a great deal said about the promises made by this government. Maclean's magazine has never shown itself to be one of our inveterate friends. Yet I read in the issue of September 23 these words by one of its commentators which I am prepared to accept:

> Out of 62 specific pledges made by the Prime Minister during the 1957 and 1958 campaigns, 50 have already been kept or are in process of being discharged.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benidickson: Through royal commissions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have again struck home, Mr. Speaker. I deeply regret the necessity of the departure of the hon. gentleman because he always attends the house with regularity. I know that we do not have to miss him for long because the house is about to prorogue, and I will desist from any personal references to him until he again graces the chamber.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the Prime Minister. My regret is far greater than his.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The second point to be noted in regard to the new fiscal arrangements authorized in the bill is that they retain the vital principle of equalization. Over and over again I have referred to the question of equalization and the necessity of its preservation. I endorsed the principle of equalization.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) did not until forced to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat that. I have endorsed the principle of equalization at all times, as has the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And carried it farther than ever before.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And, as the hon. gentleman says, with modesty, "carried it farther than ever before". We preserve the principle. We altered the form in order to ensure that the principle would be more generally effective and would carry out the intention of equalization. The principle was a valuable one. The question of its retention was never in doubt for throughout I have consistently stated that it was basic. Although differences have existed and are bound to exist in the methods or formulas by which the principle is to be applied, the purpose or spirit of the principle is not now and has not at any time been in issue. I have made it clear that the principle of equalization is basic. Because a certain formula was evolved some years ago by the former government we do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that such formula is, like the law of the Medes and the Persians, unchangeable. We believe that changes must be made in order to secure its full power and effectiveness, and those changes we have made. In these arrangements we are proposing a revised application of the principle that lays more emphasis upon fiscal need and takes into consideration the prolific revenue derived by some provinces from natural resources as well as the fields of direct tax revenues which have been taken into account previously.

We consider that the present system, based on the three standard tax rates and equalization to the average of the two top provinces, is neither logical nor practical. In some cases it has led to larger payments than could be justified on the basis of fiscal need. It ignored an important source of provincial revenue from national resources. It aimed at an impractical goal in seeking to equalize all to the exceptional top provinces. On the other hand—and I come back to this matter and I will come back to it from time to time—it did not give the needs of the Atlantic provinces in particular sufficient recognition. As the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) pointed out, this was basic to the promises and undertakings of this government. This government, from the very beginning, had a special concern for the fiscal needs of all provinces and, because of the situation in the Atlantic provinces, a special concern for them. We introduced the adjustment grants during the first year of office. It was the federal government that brought this matter before the conference of 1957. In the current proposal these grants will be increased by 40 per cent. The grants of 1957, which we undertook and brought before parliament and which were passed, are being increased by 40 per cent as part of the broad program. The effect is illustrated in the table by the Minister of Finance on page 7927 of Hansard to which reference has been repeatedly made.

One or two hon. members have played over the same old gramophone record, the same speeches they gave in July last. They gave expression to the same ideas about inadequacy, saying that this government had done nothing to carry out its promises in this connection. I would have thought that the tables themselves would have been sufficient to answer this argument but apparently it is necessary to repeat them. As a whole—and it is always well to take the picture of Canada as a whole—the unconditional grants in Canada in 1956-57 amounted to—and I am speaking always in round numbers—$552 million. I make allowance for the fact that changes were made in the parliament of 1957, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) indicates, in the manual manner. The amount in 1957-58 was $658 million. They say we have done nothing for the provinces. May I say that the amount in 1960-61 was $841 million and the amount for 1961-62 is $875 million.

If you take into consideration the figures for 1956-57, there will be some who will argue that changes were made by the previous government. But taking the figures at their worst in 1957-58, the result is that there has been an increase of unconditional grants to the provinces of $200 million. When I hear the expressions of some hon. members to the effect that we have done nothing to assist the provinces and to make it possible for the provinces to give greater assistance to the municipalities, may I say the answer is there in the computations as to unconditional grants.

What about conditional grants? As to conditional grants there was no legislative change that I know of in the session of 1957. Therefore we take the figures for 1956-57. In that year there was paid to the provinces in conditional grants an amount of $110 million. The amount in 1960-61 was $430 million, an increase of $320 million. In 1961-62 the amount will be $550 million or, since this government came into power, an increase in assistance to the provinces in the way of conditional grants of $440 million.

Mr. Benidickson: Who introduced hospital insurance?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly five times the amount that was paid in the last year of office of the Liberal government. This seems to be part of the pattern. They go around and they say things like this: "There has been no assistance given to the provinces" because they exchange their prejudices and they think they are thinking. They exchange ideas which they must know are not in accordance with the facts for the purpose of bringing condemnation on a government which has multiplied by far, so far as these grants are concerned, the amounts paid in the last years of the Liberal administration.

Mr. Benidickson: Hospital insurance is overlooked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One hon. gentleman mentioned hospital insurance. Yes, it is true that the Liberals brought it in but we pay for it. There is no doubt about that fact and it has to be included in that amount.

Now for the payments to provincial institutions. The amount payable to provincial institutions in 1956-57, for university grants and grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property in 1956-57, was $25 million. In 1960-61, it was $43 million and for 1961-62 it will be $44 million. Again there is a tremendous increase.

In the face of these tremendous increases these hon. gentlemen opposite, by simply repeating statements which they must know are not borne out by the facts, believe that the Canadian people can be fooled into believing that we have not improved the position of the provinces very greatly since 1957.

I am not going to go over all of the provinces but I must mention Newfoundland even in the absence of the hon. member, although there are others who have a representative position here from that province and therefore it will permit me to refer to it. Newfoundland, which was spoken of in lachrymose tones by an hon. gentleman now not with us, in 1956-57 received $17 million, in 1957-58 received $19 million and in 1961-62 the estimate is $38 million. Those amounts are in connection with unconditional grants. In conditional grants it received $6,500,000 in 1956-57 and the amount for 1961-62 is $23 million. He said, "Well, we have not got anything. We have not received that consideration which we should have received". I simply point out those facts, Mr. Speaker. In addition to that, there are payments for the benefit of provincial institutions. These were $415,000 in 1956-57 and today the estimate is $780,000. So I could go on through the record.

I now come to the province of New Brunswick, to which some reference was made. However, I do not think I have to cover the figures there because they were dealt with amply and carefully by the Minister of Foresty (Mr. Flemming).

Then I come to the province of Saskatchewan. After all, I could not but be touched by the words of the hon. member for Assiniboia. He spoke with everything but authority.

An hon. Member: How true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He said this is how serious the situation was. I have his exact words here. He said, "This is a retrograde step, a backward step and it is most unfair to the province of Saskatchewan."

Mr. Argue: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me read the record. Unconditional grants for 1956-57 were $29½ million; for 1957-58, $35 million; for 1960-61, $42 million; and approximately the same for the present year. Conditional grants were $7,700,000 in 1956-57, and in 1961-62 they are $27 million. I do not understand the mentality of anyone who, knowing those figures, would make the type of suggestion that the hon. member made here today, that Saskatchewan for some reason was being penalized and we had done nothing to improve the situation of Saskatchewan since 1957 over what had been the prevailing condition during the years prior to 1957. In the field of payments for the benefit of provincial institutions the figure was $1,165,000 in 1956-57, and in 1961-62 it is a total of $2,140,000. I place those figures on the record simply for the purpose of having objective consideration given to the rather—and I understate the situation when I say this—distorted view given by the hon. gentleman.

There was another province that was being discriminated against, as I remember. I have dealt with Newfoundland; New Brunswick was dealt with by the Minister of Forestry and I have covered Saskatchewan. Then Alberta and British Columbia were mentioned. As far as Alberta is concerned, the total amount of unconditional grants, conditional grants and payments for the benefit of provincial institutions amounted in 1956-57 to $49 million; in 1957-58 it amounted to $62 million, and in 1961-62 the figure is $103 million.

Mr. Benidickson: How much under the new agreement?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find it difficult to understand that the hon. gentlemen would make these kind of loose, idle and disorderly statements. Certainly they are vagrant observations which have no foundation in fact.

Now we come to British Columbia. I think it was the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), the financial man, who dealt with this during the month of July.

He spoke, too, of how British Columbia was another of these forgotten provinces. The total amount paid to British Columbia in 1956-57 in unconditional grants, conditional grants and payments for the benefit of provincial institutions was $77 million; for 1961-62 the figure is $150 million.

These are the increases that have taken place during a period of four years. I think they emphasize that this government has carried out its promise to give the provinces a new deal; to give to the provinces moneys which they in turn may pass on in whole or in part to the municipalities. We have made that very clear.

Besides this type of thing there are the other plans that we have announced and which are in effect. There is the assistance to technical education. That is something that affects every part of this country. This is a tremendous benefit. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) brought this measure into being whereby we give to the provinces 75 per cent of the costs of building technical schools and providing the equipment.

These hon. gentlemen say there has not been a new deal. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to hear them argue that question any time when the opportunity is at hand and I will give even greater detail than I have given up to now. This table shows strikingly how the total of the grants to the provinces under these new arrangements and the revenues they can procure by utilizing the room to be left to them under the new plan—I refer to the table at page 7927 of Hansard—exceed very substantially the benefits they would have secured under a continuation of the position under the 1957 act before the amendments this government put forward. Moreover, in addition to the improvement reflected in this table for the year 1962-63, there will be further improvement in the following years due to the increasing federal withdrawal from the individual income tax field.

Mr. Speaker, there are other matters that I thought I might put before the house, but I will leave them to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to deal with. I did feel, however, that I had a responsibility simply to place the record before the house; not the expurgated record, not the self interpreted record, but the facts. On the basis of facts and on that record I think all of us have reason to agree with the summary made by the Minister of Forestry, with provincial experience behind him, that this government has indeed been serious, and more than serious, has been effective in raising the standards of the provinces, and in the years ahead under the new plan as I understand it, no province will receive less than it is receiving today.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Does not this reveal the actual facts of what we have done? There are some who believe that because this rental plan was evolved in the fertile mind of one who is not now with us—at least he has been given the honour of having produced it—that therefore it should be unchanged. The changes that have been made hurt no one. The changes that have been made will actually assure to each of the provinces at least the amount they are receiving today; that amount, as I have shown, being tremendously greater—two, three, four, five times greater—than the amounts that were being paid to the provinces either conditionally or unconditionally in 1957.

On examination it will be seen that the total of federal contributions to the provinces, certain payments to institutions normally the responsibility of the provincial governments and tax abatements made to facilitate the raising of provincial revenues, has risen—and I summarize—from $689 million in the fiscal year 1956-57 to an estimated $1,470 million for the current fiscal year. This is a prodigious increase in the amounts granted from the federal budget to the provincial budgets of this nation. It is not going to be lower under the new plan. Had it not been for the change of government, where would the Atlantic provinces have been? Where would have been several provinces which have received assistance to provide for policies of expansion and development? Where would they be in reference to the development of power in the maritimes, the potential power and irrigation in the province of Saskatchewan and the possibilities of the province of British Columbia, if agreement can be secured, as apparently it had been verbally secured prior to the signing of the Columbia treaty in 1961? These increases, as I have pointed out, have been related to a much better assessment of the fiscal needs of the provinces than ever before as well as to the needs and desires of the Canadian people for various worth-while services in respect to which payments and grants have been made to provincial institutions.

I shall not try to describe the variety and scope of this program, ranging as it does from such small but important items as assistance toward the construction of fishing vessels, which has recently been substantially improved, to such huge programs as those for hospital and diagnostic services. All these programs, as well as the fiscal arrangements themselves, are designed to assist all the provinces in providing for their citizens the best services and facilities which Canada can afford and the Canadian people will support.

I think that no one who is fair minded, no one who is not blinded by party prejudice or local considerations, can fail to appreciate that the burden on the federal treasury has been very heavy indeed as a consequence of these programs to assist the provinces. When people speak about deficits, due regard should be paid to the increases which have been made in other fields, realizing that those deficits have in large, in overwhelming measure, been the result of the fact that for too long the people have waited for action. They demanded that there should be action and we have tried to carry out that action to a degree which, I think, the Canadian people will appreciate. The Canadian people, whenever the opportunity comes will not, I am sure, listen to the whiners and the wailers but will realize that here has been solid achievement on behalf of all Canadians.

I believe that this bill, which provides for a considerable increase in the provincial sharing of the personal income tax in addition to an improved equalization formula and increased Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, constitutes a generous arrangement with the provincial governments.

An hon. Member: They want more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Somebody said "They want more". I can understand that, Mr. Speaker. Did you ever know of anyone to whom something had been given who did not want more? That is human nature. When the opposition was in power, the provinces said they were not getting enough. We increased the amount, two, three, four times, five times. And, naturally, they said: Don't we get more than this?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Frost, particularly, complains about this government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So far as Mr. Frost is concerned, I am glad to see some recognition today. That is the Liberal way—always to recognize ability when a person is about to give up office. Those were not the hon. gentleman's words a year or two ago; but reformation, however late it comes, always means forgiveness.

The proposed agreements to collect taxes for the provinces without charge, thereby safeguarding the simplicity and uniformity of our tax system means that greater freedom will be left to the provinces to set their own rates of taxes. I am sure this is something which serves the interests and convenience of the taxpayers. I am confident that the new arrangements will make it possible to meet the problems of disparity in provincial revenues more fairly and realistically than in the past. Greater recognition has been given to the persistent fiscal disabilities of the Atlantic provinces. The preservation and extension of the fundamental principles of freedom for provinces to tax as they see fit, of equalization based on broader determination of fiscal need and the fuller recognition of fiscal disabilities peculiar to the large eastern segment of Canada will contribute to the financial strength and independence of the provinces and to equality of opportunity for Canadians throughout Canada. It will lead to a restoration of the constitution to its basic concept, to the maintenance of provincial rights; to the assurance, by federal aid, that those who live in provinces which are underprivileged economically by comparison with others will have their standards raised. It is in the spirit of fair and equal treatment, within the framework of our constitution, that this bill has been presented, and I hope it will receive the support of the house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): This debate began very quietly with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) saying very little, contrary to his habit in the house. I understand that he had made a long trip, and perhaps that had something to do with his reticence in the house when this matter came before us.

However, during the course of the afternoon the debate seems to have warmed up, particularly since the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) and then, later, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) decided to enter the discussion. The hon. member for Royal objected to a statement made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) to the effect that the Robichaud government had done more in 15 months than the former provincial administration had done in eight years. I do not know whether that is the case or not, because I am not familiar with New Brunswick politics, but I do know that if this was the language used by the hon. member for Gloucester he was using precisely the kind of language which the Prime Minister and his followers use consistently when they say that in the last three or four years they have done more than was done by the previous administration in 22 years.

The hon. member went on to say that in New Brunswick, now, they are cutting the ribbons in connection with projects started by the former administration. Well, for the last four years that is all hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house have been doing. They have been cutting the ribbons of a multifarious number of projects started by the former administration and, very often, they have not even had the courtesy to invite those who had something to do with those projects—

An hon. Member: The public paid for them.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I thought the house had composed itself with its usual courtesy to listen to argument. I hope it will not depart from that attitude.

Mr. Chevrier: But when he started his remarks this afternoon I felt, rightly or wrongly, that he was not abiding by the rules so far as references to personalities are concerned. I shall certainly try to keep away from any such references whether they be to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

As I listened to the Prime Minister, particularly toward the middle and the end of his speech, the feeling grew within me with increasing intensity that perhaps there is an election in the air.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. gentlemen opposite have been predicting that for six months.

Mr. Pugh: You had better read Maclean's.

Mr. Chevrier: Here there was "a repetition"—to use the expression the Prime Minister likes to use—of speeches that he and many of his followers made in the 1957 and 1958 campaigns. I tell the Prime Minister that if there is to be an election on this or any other issue, we on this side of the house are ready for it.

Mr. Benidickson: This would be a dandy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is not ready.

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister in his statement said that all provinces will be treated alike, that there will be no difference in the treatment accorded the provinces. Well, Ontario will receive $18 million and Quebec nothing additional under the new bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nothing?

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister went on to say that this is the end of centralization, that we are concluding centralization and substituting co-operation. I should like to remind the Prime Minister who dealt at some length with the matter that there were no taxes imposed under the War Measures Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1948?

Mr. Chevrier: There was no centralization in the tax rental agreements. Even during the war they were voluntary. Quebec never accepted after the war. When in the early 1950's Quebec introduced double taxation the St. Laurent government provided for a deduction from the federal tax the same year and then introduced equalization which removed any shadow of disability between the agreeing and non-agreeing provinces. Again in 1957 the equalization system increased payments to the provinces by $100 million, more than anything yet done by the present government in the tax sharing field.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I wish to remind the Prime Minister that during the campaign of 1957 he and his followers claimed that under the tax sharing agreements negotiated by the former administration which will expire on March 31 next the provinces had been "forced into a starved condition". Those were the words the Prime Minister used. He promised to assure fairness to all.

As the house knows, during the campaign of 1957 Mr. Frost supported the Prime Minister's policy, as did the Frost government in Ontario, and said that if the Conservative party was elected Ontario would receive an additional $100 million annually out of the federal treasury. What is happening now? As I said, Ontario will receive $18 million more and has to impose a tax of 3 per cent in order to meet the difference.

Here is the situation. The government pretends that this is a better scheme than the one which existed before. Mr. St. Laurent in his statements in the house and outside never pretended at any time that the formula which he brought forward was perfect. He said it could be improved but he also said that under the circumstances it was the best formula that could be found. I am convinced that the formula contained in this legislation is not as equitable as the previous one.

What are the facts? The government pretends that the formula contained in this legislation is a better one. It is better for Ontario, by $18 million—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Far short of what Ontario expected.

Mr. Chevrier: As my hon. friend has said, it is far short of what Ontario expected and had a right to expect.

Mr. Benidickson: They thought they had a wink for $100 million.

Mr. Chevrier: But what is the situation in Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan? All three are in the same position. The government's formula is so bad it did not dare apply the formula to those provinces. Instead of applying this fine new formula to those provinces the government will have those provinces remain under the existing law. In other words for those three provinces the present law is better than the government's new scheme, as is clearly demonstrated in this bill.

For British Columbia and Alberta there is an actual reduction and those provinces will be worse off under the new scheme than under the existing law. As the Minister of Forestry said before the luncheon adjournment, the Atlantic provinces would have been so much worse off under the new scheme that the government had to add another $10 million to the Atlantic provinces grants to make up the difference. But this device created new inequalities within the Atlantic provinces themselves as the hon. member for Gloucester so clearly pointed out this morning.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): So erroneously.

Mr. Chevrier: To sum up, there is no improvement whatever in the new equalization formula for nine of the ten provinces. I ask, Mr. Speaker, whether this is the way to promote the national unity and harmony which the Prime Minister promised in 1957? So far as Quebec is concerned there is absolutely no improvement. The minister has refused to indicate whether there is any prospect of improvement as he did by not answering the question put to him by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in which the minister was asked to produce in this house a comparative table which would illustrate the situation under the new formula as compared with that under the old. Obviously such a comparison would not be helpful to the government.

This is the great new deal for the provinces and municipalities which the Prime Minister promised in his opening campaign speech at Massey Hall on April 26, 1957 when he said:

> We believe there can be no national unity in this nation until there is a realization that the federal-provincial matters have handcuffed the provinces of this nation; have denied the municipalities adequate sources of revenue; have placed the provinces and the municipalities in a position where they cannot discharge their constitutional responsibilities or permitting the necessary development in their own territorial confines of the natural resources that there are. We believe the provinces and municipalities must have the financial resources to carry out those responsibilities. We believe in the federal system of government. We believe that its preservation is essential to Canadian unity. We believe the federal system is today being challenged by the centralization complex of the St. Laurent government and that a healthy division and balance of revenues as between the federal and provincial governments must be assured.
> We intend to form a government to immediately convene a dominion-provincial conference to bring about a settlement of these problems, not in the spirit of arrogant domination as displayed by the present government, but in the spirit of unity and amity and with mutual tolerance and respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister nods in affirmation of what he has said. I ask if it was evidence of national unity when, following the conference here, practically all of the premiers, except perhaps one, declared their inability to abide by the proposals put forward by the present government and voiced their dissatisfaction.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What a gross exaggeration.

Mr. Chevrier: I state, in the light of what is being said here and what has happened in the form of this legislation, the federal government puts forward this proposal which was set out at the conference last February and in a spirit of, I say to you, "arrogant domination" they have refused to change at all, and what is more, they have even refused to confer again with the provinces that have asked for a conference. They have refused to confer even though seven premiers expressed strong opposition to this scheme and several of them, including the premier of the province of Quebec, have asked for another conference.

In order to support that contention I intend to put on Hansard portions of the letter which the Quebec premier wrote to the Prime Minister. The letter from Premier Lesage is dated July 13, 1961, and reads as follows:

(Translation):

The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, P.C., Q.C.
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear sir:

My colleagues and I have dutifully given close consideration to your letter of June 16, 1961, in which you set forth the federal government's intentions with regard to the questions raised during the recent federal-provincial conferences and, more particularly, the one which was held in Ottawa on February 23 and 24 last.

The province of Quebec has passed its own laws in the matter of personal and corporation income tax. I have no intention of proposing to the legislature that the care of collecting those taxes be entrusted to the Department of National Revenue. For that reason, I shall refrain from commenting on the collection agreements suggested.

With respect to the equalization formula, the guarantee offered and the gradual widening of the taxation field reserved to the provinces in the matter of personal income tax, I must point out once again that the effect of widening the taxation field is illusory for us, to all practical purposes, since what is given to us with one hand is taken away with the other, due to the decrease in equalization.

Personal and corporation income tax is already a heavy burden for our taxpayers. Therefore, our government will not be able to avail itself of a freer hand in the taxation field without maintaining or increasing double taxation.

You will understand that my colleagues and myself were bitterly disappointed by your letter. As I pointed out in Ottawa, the province of Quebec is in full expansion and needs additional revenues. In order to reach the national average, its expenditures, according to D.B.S. figures should be materially increased in the important fields of education, health and communications. Those are priority requirements and only through an increase in the revenues at our disposal shall we be in a position to carry out our obligations under the constitution.

(Text):

I jump over several paragraphs to come to this concluding one.

(Translation):

Under the circumstances, it is urgent that another conference be held in order to seek an agreement and to see that no such serious misunderstanding be allowed to subsist.

I have no objection to quoting the answer given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in his letter; the only thing to which I would object is what I have noticed going on between the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I am not saying this to be at all mean toward the Prime Minister.

However, I do congratulate him for his contribution at that time and, with his permission, I should prefer not to read his letter, first because it is long and second, because it is printed in Hansard where he can easily find it.

Mr. Deschatelets: It has no meaning, anyway.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: But the point is this, sir, here is one of seven premiers of the various provinces who demanded that this matter be reconsidered. Apparently the answer has been a positive negative, a positive no.

In so far as the premier of the province of Quebec is concerned, this is not a good agreement for that province. It is certainly not as good as the one that had been submitted by the previous administration. As the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) said last night, if a careful view is taken of the proposals it looks very much as if those provinces which decided to vote in favour of a Conservative administration received better treatment than they otherwise would have received, and those provinces which support a Liberal administration or administrations other than Conservative seem to have lost considerably under the proposal.

Mr. Benidickson: Pretty shrewd.

Mr. Chevrier: In any event, the answer to the request made by the premiers of the provinces has in effect been this, take it or leave it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: That is why we are going to vote against this measure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, before the Minister of Finance takes part in this debate, I should like to supplement what members on this side of the house have had to say about this measure. I join with my colleague the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) to put in perspective some of the things which have been put improperly in attempted perspective today by the Prime Minister.

It must not be forgotten that one of the assurances given by the Prime Minister in the election of 1957, as we were reminded today by the hon. member for Laurier, was that if his party was elected to office and he was made Prime Minister, he would end once and for all the unfair situation that prevailed in fiscal matters between the federal and provincial governments. It will be recalled that he associated that promise with the statement that not later than the month of September, 1957 a conference would be held with the provinces to resolve this question. Well, parliament was called together in the fall of that year. This government sat to your right, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the autumn of 1957. No conference had been called, as was promised by the government of the day. Hansard records persistent interrogation of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance asking when a conference of the provinces was going to take place. Well do I remember particularly reminding the Prime Minister of the promise he made in that regard at St. Patrice de Beaurivage in the province of Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, no conference took place until after prodding by members of the Liberal party. At the end of October we were told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Flemming) that the provinces were going to meet with the federal government some time in the month of November We all remember what took place then. The conference met, it is true. Every provincial premier made his declaration of policy and intention and made his requests to the government, a government that had promised to resolve this question for all time.

After the provinces had stated their case and the Minister of Finance his preliminary statement, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had expressed solicitous phrases of welcome to the capital of our country, the conference adjourned. No action was taken, no policy statements were formulated, no agreement was entered into between the provincial and federal governments in November, when they first met. The communique issued after that conference clearly indicated that it was understood that the conference would be reconvened in the month of January. We were told that in this house by the Minister of Finance. Well, what happened? Before many days in the month of January had expired the Minister of Finance rose and.

instead of announcing the date that the conference would be reconvened, gave to the house the terms of a telegram which had been dispatched to the provincial premiers and in which the government, a government that was going to sit down at the table and have joint exchanges with the provinces on these complicated and highly important matters, laid down to the provinces its policy: "We are going to give you so much money; these are our terms and this is the situation whether you like it or not". Those were not the elegant words used by the Minister of Finance but I am paraphrasing the thought.

We all remember too that the amounts of money set forth in the telegram were later proven to be erroneous and not in harmony with the facts. In other words, the mathematical calculation of the minister in that telegram was proven to be erroneous. I later charged, and I repeat the charge now, that that telegram sent to the provinces was prepared by an official in the treasury of the government of Ontario and not by an official here in Ottawa.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Your charge is just as false today as it ever was.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one has disproved it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a false charge.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says it is a false charge. I say to the minister, as I said on another occasion, that the telegram was prepared by Mr. George Gathercole—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And I tell the hon. member that his charge is false.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —assistant to the premier of Ontario. I have made that statement on three occasions in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has been false every time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, why did the minister not take issue with my statement on the other occasions? Under the rules of the house I am bound to accept the statement of the Minister of Finance but only because of the rules do I have no other recourse. I repeat that on three former occasions I made this charge and only now are we receiving a denial from the Minister of Finance.

In any event, the fact is that the provinces were not called back and every premier expressed his indignation in public. Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia did so as did Premier Roblin of Manitoba and all the other premiers joined these two to express their displeasure and indignation at the high-handed manner in which federal-provincial fiscal relations were being treated by a government that was going to resolve this problem once and for all.

We know what took place then. An election took place. That was the reason for the telegram. It was not because the government was anxious to make a deal. It was because they were on the verge of an election. They knew that if the Prime Minister went to western Canada, particularly to Manitoba, the Prime Minister, in the face of the negative attitude taken by the federal government in November, would have been greatly embarrassed, especially in Saskatchewan and Manitoba by the state of federal-provincial fiscal relations at that time.

We talk now about the principle of equalization. Let us not forget the attitude of the government including the Prime Minister and more particularly the Minister of Finance. We know that the former government under the leadership of Mr. St. Laurent, having in mind the unequal conditions that prevailed with regard to tax revenues available to the provinces, embarked upon the principle of equalization based upon the direct tax revenues of the two wealthier provinces. That was a principle which the provinces recognized as a satisfactory way of providing for the inequities existing under our federal system, so far as a number of the provinces were concerned in relation to the two wealthier provinces. When we came back after the election of 1958—

An hon. Member: You were sad.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend says that I was sad. Yes, I was very sad, as are the people of Canada today. That was one of the saddest days in Canadian history because it put into office the most incompetent government we have ever had in our history, a government that has been unwilling to meet its obligations and its problems and instead has assigned them continually almost day by day to royal commissions. Yes, it was a very sad day. I agree with my hon. friend. When we came back we asked the Minister of Finance if he would commit himself to the principle of equalization. The record of Hansard is there to show that the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the statement made by the Prime Minister on equalization in Winnipeg during the course of the election, would not commit the government to the principle of equalization beyond 12 months, beyond one year. I had no intention of speaking today—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was aroused only after listening to the Prime Minister.

Otherwise I would have my finger-tips on the very remarks, admissions and statements of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You certainly have not got them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I challenge him to deny that in this house he refused to commit the government to the principle of equalization beyond one year. That is a fact.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was only when the Prime Minister realized what the attitude of the province of Manitoba was, particularly with regard to the failure of the government to commit itself to the principle of equalization for all time, that pressure was brought to bear on the Minister of Finance by the Prime Minister. No other conclusion is open.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is untrue. You are dreaming.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister keeps interrupting my remarks and saying, "That is untrue". That is his view. It certainly is not my view and my view is borne out by the facts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): By your dreams.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is true that the government has recognized the principle of equalization only because of pressure brought to bear on the government and the Prime Minister by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and others.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about Essex East?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will have to leave to the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Don't be so modest.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the assessment of the amount of influence which the member for Essex East has on the minister. My judgment is that my influence on the Minister of Finance grows more and more negligible in proportion to the esteem that the Canadian people have for this government. In any event, the fact is that this government did not affirm its belief in the principle of equalization until pressed to do so, something that was essential for the poorer provinces particularly. No amount of histrionics today, September 27, 1961, will change the record and the provincial governments are aware of this fact.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are changing it in your speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says I am changing it. If I am changing it, that is something my hon. friend ought to recognize, namely that there is a value in changing one's position from time to time, particularly if it is wrong.

The Prime Minister today made much of the conditional grants given to the maritime provinces. My hon. friend can point right now to an increase, dollarwise, in current grants to the provinces. But this is not the test. The test of this legislation and of the principle behind it is this: What is the permanent structure on which will be based future grants to be made to the provinces by the federal government? To say that this particular year there is being given to the Atlantic provinces the sum of X dollars more than was given three or four years ago does not in any way meet the issue that is involved in this discussion. Of course there are increases but those increases, based on the present principle of grants made to the provinces, will in ensuing years result in a financial situation to the provinces less favourable under the present formula than would have been the case under the formula for which the present bill provides a substitute. That is the incontestable fact.

For instance, let us consider the province of Newfoundland and the maritime provinces generally. They are not treated as generously as the Prime Minister seems to suggest. We must not forget that Prince Edward Island, as well as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are full partners in confederation as of course are the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The government talks of equal treatment because of its forced adherence now to the principle of equalization. That principle of equal treatment is not observed in the tax arrangements as far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, for instance. Under the new proposal the total increase in revenues to be received in the province of Prince Edward Island will be $3 per person. The annual increase to my own province of Ontario in the same period will be $6 per person. In the face of this how can the Prime Minister talk about fairness to all the provinces?

A moment ago I was talking about the principle of equalization. The application of the principle of equalization ensures, I repeat, that the direct tax revenue from the three sources of taxation for every province, on a per person basis, would equal the direct tax revenues of the two wealthiest provinces. That principle is vital, I repeat, to Prince Edward Island and to all the provinces that are economically less well endowed. But I repeat that it has been jeopardized by the new arrangements now being embodied in the bill, the principle of which we are now discussing, because the national average has been substituted for the average of the top two provinces.

I say that does not fully give to the provinces—the so-called have not provinces, the so-called less developed provinces—the same benefits as those given under our application of the principle of equalization. If our application of the principle of equalization were to be applied the treasury of the province of Prince Edward Island would receive an additional half million dollars per year on top of the moneys now extended to it. That is the situation. Yet we have the Prime Minister repeating words which the Minister of Finance has put in his mouth and which we know do not represent the true situation.

However, we have not had the whole story. It is connected with one of the most important political personalities in our country. I refer to Premier Frost. In April 1957, in the opening campaign meeting in connection with the elections of that year, Premier Frost appeared on the platform with the present Prime Minister. We all remember the assurance given by those two hon. gentlemen to the people of Canada and to the province. On that occasion, Mr. Frost put his hand on the shoulder of the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, and said, "This is my man. Elect this man and Ontario will get from the federal government what Ontario has not been able to get from the St. Laurent government. We want at least another $100 million in order to discharge our obligations. This amount we cannot get from the present federal government. Elect this man, my friend John, and Ontario will get a new deal". That was an assurance given by the premier of Ontario. The Prime Minister did not say, "Oh, I cannot commit myself to assurances like these. This is a very large sum of money. I must take into account the situation in Manitoba and the situation in Saskatchewan. I must realize that if I am elected I am going to be the prime minister of all of Canada."

Mr. Pallett: For a long time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says, "For a long time". All my hon. friend does is to make interjections like that. Because of this he will not be here for a long time.

In any event, that was the promise made by those two gentlemen. What is the situation? After the election of 1957 Mr. Frost wore out the red carpet from Toronto to the east block with his visits in an attempt to get a new deal from the Prime Minister, his friend John, the man whom he had recommended to the people of Canada. He could get nowhere with the Prime Minister because the Prime Minister could get nowhere with the Minister of Finance. That was the reason. It was not until two years had elapsed that the premier of Ontario, his patience exhausted, said that his first responsibility was to the province of Ontario and that because he could not get what he wanted out of the then federal government, now headed by the present Prime Minister, he would have to change his formula. We know what that change amounted to. Instead of the premier of Ontario asking for $100 million or $118 million, when he came here to Ottawa on the second last occasion he raised his ante and he said, "Since I was not able to get my original amount,"—and, he might have added, at least in parenthesis, what had been promised at that Massey Hall meeting in April of 1957—"I now must ask for $500 million. In no other way can I, as premier of Ontario, discharge my responsibilities and see that schools are built, provide for the building of highways and the like". As a result of that last conference Ontario did not get what it wanted, of course. Ontario got much less than the $500 million, and not anything like the full amount of the $100 million originally asked for.

What is the result? The result is that in the province of Ontario today there has been imposed a sales tax which has aroused the people of Ontario as very few tax imposts in that province have done.

Mr. Pallett: A tax fully supported by the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend may make whatever objections he wishes from his seat but the fact is—and this is the place in which to say it—that Premier Frost has said he was forced into this situation because of the intransigent position taken by this government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what he said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): So when we are now confronted with criticisms of this sales tax which has been imposed in the province of Ontario we must bear in mind that we have as our witness—and indeed he is an unimpeachable witness—the premier of Ontario, who says, "Do not blame me for this sales tax, you grocers, retailers, purchasers of commodities, and the like". He does not say, "Blame the Minister of Finance" in these words—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what you said a moment ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but everybody knows that on the shoulders of the Minister of Finance and this government must rest, according to the premier of Ontario, the primary responsibility for the imposition of this sales tax in Ontario at this time.

I am not in the know of the councils of the Conservative party, and I must say that as the years go on they become less and less communicative to me with regard to matters that go on in the councils of that party. You will therefore understand, Mr. Speaker, how helpless I feel in the matter—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And you look helpless.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but I am entitled to draw certain deductions. It is not without some significance that Premier Frost, who has had a very long and distinguished sojourn as head of the government of Ontario, has decided in his moment of glory at the moment when everyone is giving him accolades, bowing to him and acknowledging his contribution to the public life of Ontario, to suddenly leave the government of Ontario and public life.

It has been suggested that the foremost reason for that decision is his inability to extract from this government a fulfilment of the assurance it gave—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is utter rot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —with regard to this matter of federal-provincial fiscal relations.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Fantastic rot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance says it is all rot.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said it is more than that; it is fantastic rot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been away for a long time. He has been visiting several countries of the world and he has been on several continents. He is perhaps unaware of some of the things that have been taking place in the innermost recesses of the councils of the Conservative party. But I hear on the best authority—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that Mr. Allan, the provincial treasurer, one of the candidates for the leadership of the Conservative party in Ontario, feels just as Premier Frost does, that perhaps they had better give up—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martineau: Is that why he is seeking the leadership?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —expecting any assistance along the lines promised by this government in the election of 1957. However, someone some day will write the history of the premier of the province of Ontario, and we hope the real reason for his resignation—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We hope it will not be written by Pickersgill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —will be made known. We hope we will learn the nature of the conversation between the premier of Ontario and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) on the day before the premier of Ontario announced, with understandable reluctance, his decision to leave Ontario politics. Some have even suggested he is not going to leave politics, that he is going to come to Ottawa and take up an appointment in another institution of this parliament. It may be that he hopes in that capacity to exercise a greater influence on this government than he did as premier of the province of Ontario.

The government is confronted with this background to this bill. It must not be forgotten that this government's policy in this particular is most regressive. When one thinks of the complicated financial structure that exists in this confederation of ours, with ten provincial governments and one federal government, a government which since the war has rented certain tax fields from the provinces, corporation taxes, income taxes and succession duties; when one realizes the confusion that prevailed before the present arrangement and the demands made by responsible people of all classes in this country almost since the beginning of this century up to the Rowell-Sirois report in 1941, and what followed that report; and the decision of a former minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, to bring about this new formula in connection with these tax fields, all one can say in the light of all this history is that we are now embarking legislatively on a program that is most regressive. Some day this government will regret the step it is taking.

It may relieve the government of political embarrassment. They may now more successfully resist some of the requests and demands being made by the provinces, but as a result of this bill which we are shortly going to discuss—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Discuss?

An hon. Member: We are discussing it now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As a result of this bill, the details of which we are shortly going to discuss, this government has embarked on a course that is regressive and is going to encourage provinces to enter fields of taxation—which it will be within their right to do—which will place on the Canadian taxpayer a serious burden. After all, all the moneys that come to governments on all levels originate in only one source, and that is the Canadian citizen who, out of his hard work provides governments on all levels with the financial resources to carry on the projects of government.

Premier Robichaud announced yesterday in New Brunswick that as a result of this bill he is going to have to go out and get $2½ million more. There is talk now of the provincial legislature being called for the purpose of enabling that body to consider additional forms of taxation to be imposed on the people of New Brunswick, just as a similar situation has developed in the province of Ontario and as it will develop in other provinces.

The federal government has obligations in national defence, social welfare and the like. In the latter field we have not stopped. There is still a great deal to be done. But I say that this government, by the regressive step it is taking, in this measure, is putting one of the greatest halting blocks to further social reform in this country, because it is imposing obligations on the Canadian people that will come from further imposts by the provinces, and which our people will find it increasingly difficult to bear.

The Prime Minister did not say a word about that. He simply referred to the increases in the conditional grants since this government came into office. Incidentally, these increased conditional grants were based on grants originally provided for by Liberal governments under Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. St. Laurent. The Prime Minister referred to the increases in hospital insurance payments and to other conditional grants. Let it not be forgotten, that long before this government came along, and sometimes against the opposition of its supporters in this house, grants were made to the provinces in the field of social welfare by the former government in a wide area of social interest. When we compare what was paid out in old age pensions, old age assistance, blindness allowances, family allowances, unemployment insurance and disability pensions, and the like, by the former government with the allocations made during the past four years, it is no wonder that we marvel at the daring of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in suggesting today that the increases in the social services represent the unique interest of this government in social welfare. Of course, these are obligations which would have to be continued by this government. But the Prime Minister said nothing about the authorship of these measures; he said nothing about the antecedent situation and how the structure on which these measures are based was provided.

While this legislation will relieve the government of certain payments for a period, in taking this step the present administration has embarked on a negative and regressive course—a course which negates the work of men such as John W. Dafoe, and the late Newton Rowell, of men like Frank Scott, Dr. Skelton and others who over a period of many years laid the groundwork in this country for the principles embodied in the recommendations of the Rowell-Sirois report, which was later carried out in part under the former administration when Mr. Ilsley was prime minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When was Mr. Ilsley ever prime minister?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I meant minister of finance. Whether he was prime minister or not the contribution made by that right hon. gentleman as minister of finance was such that he certainly would have made a great prime minister. I must say that as I look at the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who has been engaging in long extended peregrinations outside our country over many continents, as I look at him now, happy to see him back in his place, it is understandable that I should naturally become confused sometimes, and that is why today I look toward the chair rather than be diverted by his happy presence.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are confused most of the time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says I am confused most of the time. I simply want to say this to the hon. gentleman. He has been in this house for a long time, and he has been a student of government in this country for a long time. He knows that what I have said is true. He knows that this legislation is putting back the clock of progress in the matter of federal-provincial fiscal relations. He knows that it is undoing all that was done after a previous government accepted the recommendation of the Rowell-Sirois report. The minister and his friends have undone the basic and important decisions arrived at by the federal government and the provinces in the many conferences which took place in those days, and particularly that which followed the conclusions of the green book in 1945. The hon. gentleman has been made an unwitting instrument of negative action. He should be the last to rise and say that as a result of this measure the Prime Minister can boast with Maclean's magazine: "We have fulfilled our promises."

This bill is a demonstration that the Prime Minister—who now comes in at the end of my speech—has failed, together with his government, to live up to any serious percentage of the hundreds of wild promises which were made to the people of this country during the course of two elections. This bill will be judged for what it is. Like other unfulfilled promises it will be taken as a reason for throwing this government out of office and putting someone else in who can govern.

Mr. Speaker: I repeat my injunction that if the Minister of Finance speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman has just regaled the house with a speech which was put before us as an impromptu performance, though it was obviously a well rehearsed repetition of a performance we have seen on his part on many previous occasions. He talked about wild promises. Well, I do not think any member has heard in half an hour in this house as many wild statements as we have heard from the hon. member for Essex East this afternoon. In that respect, the hon. gentleman was at his peak. He was all over the horizon today.

Let us see what there is in substance in these criticisms. We are told that there is some discrimination in the formula which has been put forward in this bill, that there is an attempt being made to favour provinces with Conservative provincial administrations and to give less than equal treatment to provinces with administrations of another political stripe. That statement just is not true. This is a formula which applies to all the provinces. We have not doctored the formula. We have not put forward a formula which applies to some while another applies to others. This bill contains one formula applicable to all the provinces.

I shall make a qualification as regards favouritism. It is that this bill favours four provinces, and those are the four Atlantic provinces. It does favour them. We admit that. It favours them to a degree that no fiscal legislation in the history of this country has ever favoured any province. When it comes to a charge of favouritism in that respect, we plead guilty and we put our case before the house.

This is definitely a Conservative measure. Atlantic provinces adjustment grants were never heard of before this government came into office. This afternoon we heard from the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). We heard from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). We heard at great length yesterday from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). These were all members of the former administration. Their formula, the 1956 formula which came into effect in April, 1957, was: 10 per cent of the individual income tax for the provinces. These are the 10 per cent men. Look at them —10 per cent written all over them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Look at the 3 per cent Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There were no Atlantic provinces adjustment grants in their minds then. But it did not take this government very long to introduce them—the greatest measure of fiscal recognition that the Atlantic provinces of this country have ever received. There has been nothing like it in Canada's history.

We did not stop there. We moved swiftly to increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent the provincial share of the yield from personal income tax. The 10 per cent men opposite did not think of that, and they did not give any place to that in their comments today about the fulfilment of promises.

In 1957 when the electorate passed upon the record of the former government and the policy which was offered to them by the present Prime Minister, the people made their choice and hon. members opposite know perfectly well in their hearts, notwithstanding their hollow blustering today, that the promise made by the present Prime Minister before that 1957 election was carried out within a matter of months of his taking office. This course of aiding the provinces was not concluded then. It has been the policy of this government to increase progressively out of the federal treasury provisions for the provinces, whether in the form of conditional or unconditional payments, on a scale never dreamed of by those 10 per cent gentlemen opposite. The 10 per cent tag is firmly stuck on them and it will remain so. For them to try to appear now before the Canadian electorate as the champions of the provinces is a pose that will not delude the sound, intelligent Canadian electorate. So much for the change of favouritism.

It will be remembered that of those four Atlantic provinces two happen to have Conservative administrations and two happen to have Liberal administrations. It is quite obvious that the government has not attempted to draw political lines in this very greatly increased aid that it is providing under the present measure, just as no political lines were drawn in the substantial increases made in aid of the provinces in the years since 1957.

An hon. Member: That was a five cent speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There has been no five cent thinking on the part of this government at any time. That is a tag that belongs exclusively to hon. members opposite.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought it was 10 per cent?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As might have been expected we were told this afternoon by the hon. member for Laurier that there is no improvement. He complained that the province of Quebec is not getting enough.

Mr. Chevrier: What improvement is there?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The premier of the province of Quebec is a gentleman who was a member of the former government back in 1956-57. At that time it was evidently his conviction that 10 per cent was a sufficient proportion for that province to receive from the personal income tax yield, not 13 per cent as it has been since 1958, not the 16 per cent that it is going to be in the first year after this bill comes into effect, moving up to 20 per cent five years from now. No, Mr. Speaker, it was 10 per cent, another 10 per cent tag attached to hon. members opposite. These hollow words from hon. members opposite do not strike a very convincing note. The record is all too plain in their case. The people know their record, the 10 per cent record. These are also the "six dollars a month" men.

What are the facts in relation to the province of Quebec? If we look at page 7920 of Hansard of July 11, 1961 it will be seen what happened in the case of Quebec since this country was emancipated from the ramshackle Liberal government that was defeated in 1957. The payments to the province of Quebec are to be found at that page of the record. In the fiscal year 1956-57 when hon. members opposite were in office for the full 12 months, the total of payments—unconditional grants, conditional grants and payments for the benefit of provincial institutions was $17,463,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give the total for the whole period.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In 1957-58, the year when the two governments shared responsibility, the total paid was $204,757,000. This year, 1961-62, it has moved up to $390 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give the total for the whole period.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Quebec—

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Quebec—

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, must be very thankful indeed that a change of government was brought about on June 21, 1957 so that the province instead of receiving the $200 million, in round figures, is now receiving just about double that sum this year. That is the record of this government.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question? Will the minister put on the record alongside these tables a table which would indicate what the provinces would receive under the new tax sharing agreement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman evidently does not read Hansard. This information will be found at page 7927.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not on record.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, it is on record. I will tell the hon. member that I was going to come to that because there are some interesting things to be found in that table. We have at page 7927 given to the house three tabulations. We have shown what will be available in the coming fiscal year, 1962-63 under the new formula, the formula under this bill. This shows Quebec receiving $241,500,000. It shows also in the second table what the present formula under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Agreements Act would yield to the provinces if there were no new legislation and if we simply continued the existing legislation. That shows that the province of Quebec would receive in the next fiscal year the same amount. But we have also given here a third figure which is what the yield to the provinces would have been in the year 1962-63 if the old government were still in office with its old 10-9-50 formula. This is the Liberal, 10 per cent formula. This shows that if hon. members opposite were still in office with their old 10 per cent formula the province of Quebec next year would receive $217,284,000. The province of Quebec, in round figures, is $25 million better off next year by reason of the defeat of the Liberal government in 1957, not to count the cumulative effects that I have pointed out in the earlier table which show the over-all increase over the five year period to be $200 million per annum in round figures.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think some of these questions might be more appropriate in the committee stage, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps they would be, but the minister was kind enough to allow me to interrupt a moment ago. Would the minister, in order that there will be no misunderstanding about what I ask, put on the record a hypothetical illustration of provincial revenues for the years 1962 to 1967 under the new agreement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, we will deal with facts here and not hypotheses.

Mr. Chevrier: That is exactly what the minister's table is. It is a hypothetical illustration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh yes, it is.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman can be wrong perhaps more chronically than most people would wish. The fact is that the figures shown in the table which I invite the hon. member to examine for the first time demonstrate very clearly that these tables are based on the 1961-62 estimates of 1962-63. That is as close as any experts can come to next year's figures, the figures for 1962-63.

Mr. Chevrier: Give us the calculation for five years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Something was said about New Brunswick. The Prime Minister has put on the record the figures in relation to New Brunswick. Here is a province that in terms of its sharing in the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants is going to receive the $7.5 million it has received in each of these last four years from that source and an additional $3 million per annum out of the $10 million per annum increase which this measure will offer the provinces in the Atlantic area.

I wish now to touch briefly on the subject of what have been called the guarantees. It is an essential part of the formula in this bill that, in the first place, no province shall receive less, in dollars, than it is receiving this year, 1961-62. It is equally a fact and a provision of this bill that no province in which the yield from the standard taxes and the revenues from resources is less than the national average will receive less than it would have received if the present formula were continued into the new period.

There are firm guarantees that undergird the fiscal position of the provinces. These are an essential part of the formula presented in this measure. This undergirding of the fiscal position of the provinces does not stop there because this bill, in compliance with the earnest pleas made by the provinces, does write into the arrangements a provision in relation to the stabilization of revenues on the 95 per cent basis that has been requested by the provinces. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there are guarantees of the firmest kind here, and we have here the most generous provision that has ever been made or that any parliament in this country's history has ever been invited to make for the assistance of the provinces and the buttressing of confederation in this country.

We are asked, sir, to confer again, to call another dominion-provincial conference. This request is echoed in this house by hon. members who have been busying themselves for the last several years in deriding the numerous dominion-provincial conferences that we have called. There have never been as many dominion-provincial conferences at any time as there have been in the past several years. The present formula is the outcome of three dominion-provincial conferences.

Hon. members opposite have been asleep. The first of those conferences was held, July 25 to 27, 1960; the second from October 26 to 28, 1960, and the third on February 23 and 24 of this year. There have been three plenary conferences with relation to this coming period and the fiscal arrangements that are to govern in this period.

Hon. members opposite have engaged in such exaggerations. Actually the requests in this respect have come from only three provinces. We have heard the views of those provinces on every feature of the present proposals. There is nothing in this bill that has not already been discussed in one form or another at the conferences, so there is nothing that can be accomplished by another conference except repetition. Therefore a conference, as the Prime Minister has pointed out in his very courteous and understanding letters in reply to those letters from provincial premiers which are on the record of Hansard, would serve no useful purpose. It is clear that no useful purpose would be served by calling another conference.

This legislation is required now in order that the provinces may be in a position to know what their fiscal positions are going to be and so that the provincial treasurers will be able to guide themselves accordingly in making their plans for the approaching fiscal year.

In conclusion, may I draw attention to some of the things that hon. members say they want to vote against? On this matter of the firm guarantees that I have spoken of, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is the kind of provision which apparently did not occur to hon. members opposite in 1956. The fact is that if the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act of 1956 had not been amended by parliament in 1958 five provinces would in one or more years have received less under the former government's 1956 proposals than those provinces would have received under a projection of the 1952 tax rental agreements.

In the years that I have mentioned the following provinces would have received a greater payment under a projection of the 1952 proposals than under the 1956 Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act before we amended it. The deficiency of the 1956 arrangements over a projection of the 1952 tax rental agreements I can indicate briefly, Mr. Speaker. In the fiscal year 1957-58, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, are in the class I have mentioned; in 1958-59, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and British Columbia; in 1959-60, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia; in 1960-61, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia; in 1961-62, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. The house will then be able to appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the value of the new formula that is contained in the measure now before the house and the very great benefit that it will bring to the provinces as compared with the inadequate treatment provided for the provinces in the 1956 legislation sponsored by the 10 per cent government.

It must have surprised hon. members who are aware of the terms of this measure and of the welcome that was extended to the proposals of the present government by the premier of Newfoundland to hear the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate announce at the end of his 80 minute tiring discourse yesterday that he was going to vote against the measure. We heard one or two other members say they were going to vote against the measure. This applies to the hon. member for Essex East and one or two others.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did I say?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What then are they going to vote against, Mr. Speaker? In the first place they are going to vote against withdrawing from the provinces the shackles that have been imposed on them in times past under the kind of arrangement that the former government imposed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order Mr. Speaker; I suggest to you that the Minister of Finance is now embarking on a line of argument contrary to our rules. No hon. gentleman has the right to attribute reasons with respect to voting on the part of any member. My hon. friend is now imputing motives and going away beyond the kind of argument permitted. He may say that we propose to vote for reasons that he does not accept, or things of that sort, but to say that we are going to vote for the reasons that he has in mind is absolutely contrary to the rules, and no one knows it better than the Minister of Finance. He ought to stop indulging in this violation of the rules in his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what the minister has in mind but what he has said so far, as I heard it, is not contrary to the rules.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know what he is going to do.

Mr. Speaker: He is referring to the consequences of a vote against the bill. It seems to me that that is perfectly in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Exactly; it is the consequences of the vote of hon. members opposite to which I was referring. I do not know anything about the reasons of the hon. member because he has not any—no good ones, anyway.

This measure will remove the strait-jacket that the previous arrangements have imposed on the provinces. In that way, as the Prime Minister pointed out this afternoon, it will restore the proper constitutional relationships between the provinces and the dominion and also beween the provinces and the taxpayers in the provinces. It will place responsibility where it ought to be borne. Hon. members opposite wish to vote against this very necessary and desirable improvement.

Next, we, the federal government, today in this formula, offer without charge to collect for the provinces the personal and corporate income taxes that they may choose to impose. Hon. members opposite wish to vote against that. In his speech today the hon. member for Gloucester had a good deal to say about this. We do not ask any province to turn over to us the collection of its own taxes; it is completely free under the constitution to collect as well as levy its own. What we say is, if you wish us to collect, then there must be a common tax base. This is absolutely necessary. Anybody who knows anything about tax collection knows that, Mr. Speaker, but it was not clear to the hon. member for Gloucester today.

Therefore, I say, in the second place, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members who are going to vote against this bill will be voting against an opportunity given by the federal government to the provinces at the expense of the federal government to provide this service to the provinces, to collect their personal and corporate income taxes for them.

Next, Mr. Speaker, a vote against this measure is a vote to restrain the federal government from withdrawing progressively from the field of personal income tax, to leave that field more and more to the provinces in aid of their revenues.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A vote against this measure, Mr. Speaker, is a vote against the progressive withdrawal that this bill provides for the benefit of the provinces. We move up this year from something under 14 per cent to 16 per cent next year, 17 per cent the year after and progressively 1 per cent per annum until in the last year of the new five-year period the federal government will have withdrawn to the extent of 20 per cent from the personal income tax field. In that way, Mr. Speaker, the share of that tax accruing to the provinces simply on the basis of withdrawal will have increased in the five-year period by 40 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It relieves the federal government but not the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I say to those hon. gentlemen whose words are more profuse than their knowledge of this subject, and who say there is no benefit to the provinces here—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that they can contradict facts but they will not change facts.

Next, in relation to equalization a vote against this measure is a vote against the most progressive and far-reaching application of the principle of equalization that has ever been put before the Canadian parliament in legislation. This measure means and offers the application of the equalization principle to give more effect to the principle of fiscal need in the case of the provinces than has ever been the case before in any proposal put before parliament. We are proposing to take into this calculation one half of the resource revenues in the interests of equalization. When we talk about equalizing revenues among the provinces we should not simply confine it to the yields from the three standard taxes but we should have some regard to the yield from the resources as well, so that for this purpose decisions will not be made without regard to the fact that in one province the average per capita yield from resource revenues is 18 cents today and in another province $112.17. So, Mr. Speaker, if you are talking about equalization in terms of the true principle of helping out by federal resources to meet fiscal need in the case of the provinces, I say that this measure goes farther than ever before.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Then there are the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants which have been moved up to $35 million. Newfoundland gets its $8 million. It gets its increased share of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. These are reasons why any member from Newfoundland should welcome this measure and should give it his support.

How did the premier of Newfoundland react to this proposal? You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that at the conference where these proposals were put forward the premier of Newfoundland indicated how much he welcomed them. What is going to happen today in the face of that assessment of these proposals? What is the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) going to do? What is the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger) going to do? What is the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Tucker) going to do? What is the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten) going to do? Are they going to follow the lead of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) and vote against this measure that brings so much assistance to Newfoundland? Are they going to say in that way that Premier Smallwood did not know what he was talking about, did not properly represent the interests of Newfoundland?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What a deceptive argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They have their choice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What specious reasoning.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Likewise all hon. members opposite will have their opportunity to say today whether they want the improved deal for the provinces that this measure offers, whether they want this vastly improved measure for the next five years or whether they want to deny to the provinces the benefit of these features of this new measure. This is a measure which is put before the house, Mr. Speaker, not by a government with a 10 per cent tag on it but by a government which has shown itself more responsive to the needs of the provinces than any government in Canada's history.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house will agree to revert to motions I should like to make a statement regarding the bill on class or kind. A question was asked the other day in this regard. If the house would agree, I could now make a statement on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Prime Minister to bear with me just a moment until I get an order about the committee stage of this bill. When shall the said bill be referred to committee of the whole? Next sitting of the house; agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the house for its courtesy.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, item No. 1 on the orders of the day reads as follows:

> Consideration of a message from the Senate insisting upon its amendment to Bill C-72, an act to amend the Customs Tariff.

On July 6, as reported at page 7626 of Hansard, I stated the view of the government with regard to this matter in these words:

> We shall not, as the Minister of Finance has said, accept the authority or right of the Senate to make this amendment. I hope the house will agree with that stand. The bill will be sent back to that body. If they choose to stand on what they have done this legislation, beneficial to the Canadian people, legislation that has universally been requested, can only pass out of existence, for we on our side will not accept the amendment.

The house overwhelmingly endorsed this stand in voting on the motion made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to this effect. In the circumstances I see no need of reiterating the arguments that were clearly set forth at that time. Those in the Senate who have insisted on asserting that which we regard, on the basis of constitutional practice, as an untenable constitutional position must accept responsibility for the economic consequences of their action—

Mr. Hellyer: Because of the bill of rights.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And they must accept the blame for the thousands of jobs which, because of the action they have taken, will remain uncreated.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the house first of all that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked for leave to revert to motions, to which we agreed. This was not the kind of statement that is ordinarily made on motions but is a statement which is made under other circumstances. However, in the light of the importance of the statement I do not think I should say anything at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this is a strange attitude for the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to take after having threatened the Senate earlier this year and having led the nation to believe that a particular course would be followed in the eventuality that the Senate insisted on its amendment.

Mr. Speakman: Irresponsible.

Mr. Argue: While the other place has taken this action, we can only say that we feel it is right that Canadians should have the right to appeal from a minister's decision. We think that the government itself is unable to slough off the responsibility for unemployment on the Senate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: —even though the Prime Minister has tried to do that.

Mr. Benidickson: Passing the buck to the Senate.

Mr. Speakman: An irresponsible statement from an irresponsible source.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EQUITABLE GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Robert Lafreniere (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring before the house Bill No. S-30 which is a bill to incorporate the Equitable General Insurance Company. I admit the bill has arrived late from the other place, but since this session might be prorogued at any moment may I ask that with unanimous consent we pass now to the second reading of this measure?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I have looked at this bill. It is the usual kind of bill which would be brought forward in the circumstances had it been introduced in this house first rather than in the other place. If it is the intention of the hon. member to get second reading only, there would be no objection from this side. If, having got second reading, he wishes to go into the committee of the whole on the measure, I think, since it is now 6.15 or almost that, that we should leave the subject matter over until tomorrow when I feel sure in the light of the terms of the bill that there would be no objection from this side of the house.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I believe the position taken by the hon. member for Laurier is a sound one. I believe this bill has been recommended by the superintendent of insurance, so we have no objection at all to the contents, and I think the procedure which has been suggested is satisfactory to us.

Mr. Speaker: I take it, then, that the house is willing to accede to the request of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency and to read this bill the second time, waiving the rule which stands in the way of having it then referred to committee, and that it be proceeded with tomorrow.

Mr. Benidickson: Will it not appear on the order paper tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: The bill must go before the committee on banking and commerce unless, of course, the rule is suspended.

Mr. Chevrier: Could we not dispose of it in this manner? The bill might be read the second time and tomorrow we shall deal with it in committee of the whole. We wish to assist the hon. member in connection with this measure. I understand there has been some discussion on it in the Senate and that it has been approved. However, I do not think we should spend another 10 or 15 minutes in committee of the whole on the measure at this time, though there would be no objection to proceeding with it tomorrow in committee of the whole if that is the wish of the hon. member.

Mr. Lafreniere moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order 105, the said bill stands referred to the special committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Churchill: To the committee of the whole house, I think.

Mr. Benidickson: We were prepared to go a step further than that for the assistance of the hon. member, by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house, then, that the rule with regard to reference to the committee on banking and commerce be suspended and that this item be ordered for consideration tomorrow by the committee of the whole house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: The business for tomorrow will be a continuation of what has already been outlined—a continuation of consideration of Bill No. C-122 and of the estimates of the Department of Finance and of Transport.

It being 16 minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 28, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NIGERIAN MINISTER OF DEFENCE

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): By leave of the house, may I be permitted to refer to the presence in the gallery of the Nigerian minister of defence and deputy prime minister Alhji, the Hon. Mohammadu Ribadu. Mr. Ribadu has been visiting Canada during the last few days, and I and other members of the government have had the opportunity and pleasure of meeting this distinguished representative of a commonwealth country which has only recently achieved independence.

Mr. Ribadu has given many years of service to the welfare of the people of Nigeria. Following his appointment in 1951 as northern region minister, he joined the federal government in 1954, being in turn minister of lands, mines and power; minister of Lagos affairs and, since independence, minister of defence. This is his first visit to Canada since assuming his important office, and on behalf of all hon. members I should like to extend him a warm welcome.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the acting leader of this party has suggested that in the absence of the hon. member for Trinity I might join with the Minister of National Defence in extending a sincere welcome to the minister of national defence from Nigeria. The words of welcome which the minister has used are words with which we would want strongly to be associated.

This is not the first visit that we have had in recent months from a distinguished member of the government of Nigeria. This, I believe, is the second occasion within the course of the last few months when we have been honoured with a visit to this country by a member of the government of that country. This affords us an opportunity to say to this representative of Nigeria how honoured we are to have him in our House of Commons and how pleased we are to be joined with Nigeria in the pursuit of great objectives, which we sincerely trust will lead to peace among the nations.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be associated with the welcome expressed to our distinguished international guest who sits in the gallery. I think Nigeria personifies the hope of the commonwealth for the future. We are confident that Nigeria will play an important role in the days ahead in strengthening the commonwealth and assisting like nations of the world to strengthen freedom and peace.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

FURTHER STATEMENT ON FALL-OUT RESULTING FROM RECENT TESTS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have some further figures on fall-out that I would like to have tabled, with the permission of the house. These cover the period September 11-17 and represent final results for that week.

It will be noted that there are differences as compared with the preliminary figures I gave the house on Wednesday, September 20. Such differences are to be expected and result from the fact that a first reading is merely indicative of the general range of levels whereas subsequent readings over a period of a week or so afford a more accurate result.

As to the significance for health of these latest readings, I would simply repeat what I have said in previous statements to the house. In our judgment the levels so far recorded do not represent an immediate threat to health. At the same time, we feel that if very high levels were maintained over a long period of time, a threat to health might very well result.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we thank the minister for his further report. We hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been able to transmit these readings to the United Nations, and trust that as a result of such transmittal some progress will be made in the effort to arrive at a test ban on nuclear weapons.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister permission to table the statement containing the figures to which he referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

WEST INDIES—STATUS OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the decision made by the island of Jamaica to withdraw from the West Indies federation, will this affect the technical assistance program provided for in the estimates of the minister's department?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the five year assistance program for the West Indies in the amount of $10 million was announced some time ago and was to begin in the fiscal year 1958-59. Each year since then, including the present session, parliament has appropriated funds for an item which is described in these words, "Canada-West Indies assistance program". Since those moneys have been voted for assistance to an area and not to specific countries, the withdrawal of Jamaica from the federation would not affect our program.

As of this date about $2.45 million of the $10 million total remains unspent, although $1.1 million of that amount is earmarked for projects which have already been approved. It is probable that most of the remaining $1.3 million will be spent for assistance to the smaller islands of the federation on projects now being discussed with the government of the federation.

The two ships supplied by Canada under this program were recently transferred to the central government, and they will remain the property of any continuing properly constituted central government in the West Indies. As in the case of all grants under Canadian external assistance programs, there were no strings attached to the gift of these two ships, and there would be nothing to prevent them from continuing to ply between Jamaica and the other islands in the area, if that were the wish of the central authorities.

Canada has undertaken no capital projects in Jamaica, and under our technical assistance program there are at present three teachers in that island.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would comment on a press dispatch of a speech he made in which he was reported as saying that the United States is crowding Britain to join the common market. In view of his rather serious accusation, can the minister give us a further explanation and say whether the Canadian government has discussed this question with the United States in the hope that the pressure would be removed.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made an oration in Timmins on Tuesday evening. The air up there is rare and very beneficial. However, I think it affected the reporter more than it did me. I did not use the word "crowding" at all, though I see it is in quotation marks in the heading and also in the body of the dispatch. I was pointing out to the Canadian club that this question of the United Kingdom joining the common market involved not only trade and economic questions but also an extremely serious political question, namely whether the United Kingdom would become part of the new European amalgamation constituting a third great force similar to the standing of the United States and the Soviet union, and pointing out some of the results that might follow in the commonwealth if such a move were to take place. I did explain that the United States was in favour of the United Kingdom joining the common market for the reason that she hoped it would help to build up one big Europe, and also because they do not like the commonwealth preferences and would be very happy to see an end put to such preferences.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the minister would comment on that part of my question wherein I asked if the government had discussed with the United States the implications for Canada of Britain joining the common market, and whether Canada had asked the United States to modify some of the pressure.

Mr. Green: The views of the United States government on this or any other issue are their own views. If they feel this way about the United Kingdom entering the common market, that is for them to decide, and on questions of that kind I doubt that it would be proper for Canada to start making representations to the United States. They know very well how we feel about their views. We do not always agree with the views of the United States, and sometimes they do not agree with ours.

Mr. Argue: Maybe you should tell them in Washington instead of Timmins.

Mr. Green: Maybe we have.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a supplementary question. Was he correctly reported when the dispatch went on to say that the minister observed that one of the objectives the United States had in support of the common market was that it regarded the latter organization as an effective way of resisting potential economic aggression from the Soviet union?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Essex East is a good deal worse than the reporter. He has added a lot of words to those found in the newspaper dispatch.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

PORTLAND—INQUIRY AS TO POST OFFICE SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I regret that I have not been able to give him notice, and if he does not have the information perhaps he can treat this as notice. Has the government yet decided upon a site for the new post office at Portland?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I will be very happy to accept that question as notice.

COMBINES

FEDERAL POLICY RESPECTING MERGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. R. Webster (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. There is an article in the Montreal Gazette this morning on the problem of mergers which leads one to believe that the Department of Justice has changed its policy in this respect following a meeting of the productivity council. Would the minister care to comment?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Acting Minister of Justice): In reply to the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount may I say that I have had the opportunity of reading the article referred to, and I wish to point out that there is no change in policy or a new policy as the article would lead one to believe. In a speech delivered to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on January 10, 1961, the Minister of Justice invited manufacturers and exporters to submit their ideas to the director of the branch. He said:

> My director under the combines act has stated publicly on several occasions that he believes that as a director he should be available to individuals and representatives of industry who wish to discuss their problems with respect to the application of the anti-combines legislation. While, of course, he cannot become a sort of government uncle to anyone who seeks to avoid prosecution, and while he cannot take the part of private solicitor, he can, and I know he will, describe to anyone interested how he views the application of the legislation to any projected set of circumstances so that those who may come to see him can apply his general indication to their particular case or plans.

From this three points should be retained. First, this is not a new policy. Second, it must be remembered that the director can only apply the law and assess the legality of a project.

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Walker: Third, and finally, the industry—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Walker: —with a few exceptions, has not taken advantage of the invitation.

Mr. Chevrier: —I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Walker: My reply is finished.

Mr. Chevrier: Yesterday I posed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce which had to do with this very matter. It arose out of an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette, and Your Honour prevented me from pursuing the question further. Now the Minister of Public Works rises and reads a long statement, which is contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I recall that yesterday the hon. member did seek to raise a question about the policies respecting administration of the combines act, but in my view what he was asking for then was a comment on the opinion expressed in an article in general terms. The question which was asked today was a precise one and I therefore allowed it to go. I agree with the hon. member that the answer has been rather more extended than is necessary to indicate simply that there has been no change in policy. It amounts to a statement, and if the hon. member for Laurier wishes to ask a supplementary question or to comment on the statement, I would not object.

(Translation):

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAID HOLIDAYS FOR PART-TIME EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on the orders of the day, the hon. member for St. Denis put a question concerning part-time government employees.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since the Secretary of State is unavoidably absent, I shall answer this question in his place.

Under the present system, part-time or seasonal employees are granted leave with pay like the regular employees. However, those who work part-time get only half the pay they would have earned if the holiday had been a working day.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to observe that my question had no reference to statutory leave but rather to the annual leave that permanent civil servants are entitled to, for instance, two weeks each year. I was thinking in particular of post office employees—

An hon. Member: Order. Question.

Mr. Denis: —who work only four hours a day, year in year out, and who never get annual leave. I was referring to holidays, not statutory leave like on Christmas, New Years, Easter, etc.; I mean the annual leave to which full-time civil servants are entitled.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation given by the hon. member for St. Denis, I will pass on this new question to my colleague immediately on his return.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO DISPOSE OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In view of the statements that are being made by certain commercial interests having to do with the manufacture of butter, that butter prices should be reduced, I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could inform the house what steps the government has taken to dispose of the very large surplus of butter that now overhangs the market.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, naturally with the surplus of butter on hand the government would follow a course of trying to ascertain what it could do to put this butter into circulation without destroying the market for the producers of butter. There have been stories in the press about the various efforts we have been making to distribute this butter surplus, but no announcement has yet been made by the government. Until such a decision is made, there will not be any announcement.

CONSIDERATION OF BILL NO. S-30 LATER THIS DAY

Mr. Speaker: If the house will permit, before the first order is called may I inquire what is the intention of the house with respect to an order made yesterday that private Bill S-30 be considered today in committee of the whole? Perhaps the house leader has a suggestion to make, since there is no time allotted for private bills today, yet the house has ordered that the item be considered. It is a question of deciding now when it will be taken.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I would think later in the day. If a debate on a private bill were interposed now it would upset the normal process with regard to government business. I think by arrangement we can get it before the house later today.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the house leader and others could agree as to what time it will be taken.

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING TAX COLLECTION, ANNUAL GRANTS, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-122, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into tax collection agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there is one matter which I had thought was not relevant to the measure under consideration, but reference has been made to it in the course of the debate and some attention has been paid to the matter in comment outside the house. This concerns the subject of federal university grants. Perhaps I should say a word about this in the hope of clarifying the subject, because the present bill does not change the existing situation in that regard.

Federal grants to universities from their outset had been on an annual basis, until two years ago. They were simply provided by an item in the estimates each year; they had no continuing effect otherwise. In the 1960 session steps were taken by the government to introduce a measure to put the university grants on a statutory basis for the two remaining years of the present five year period under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. Therefore the provision made under existing legislation for the payment of university grants continues to March 31, 1962, and any provision of university grants from federal sources beyond that date will require a new provision of supply for the purpose by parliament.

The bill now before the committee does not touch on that question. I want to make that very clear. It will remain for the next session of parliament to make whatever provision is to be made in regard to federal grants to universities for the period commencing April 1, 1962, whether it be for one year or more.

Mr. Chairman, in case a question exists in the mind of any hon. member as to why this subject of university grants and the tax arrangements introduced in regard thereto in the 1960 session have not been carried forward into the present bill, let me endeavour to clarify that matter. After long years during which the universities of one province received no benefit from the federal grants to universities, the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec a year and a half ago arrived at terms of understanding so that a way could be found under which these benefits would no longer be enjoyed by the universities of only nine provinces and no benefit accrue therefrom to one province which pays a quarter of the federal taxes of this country and has one third of the university students of Canada. Legislation was accordingly introduced and was passed by this house. It is to be found in the 1960 statutes, chapter 13, clause 2.

Without delaying the committee by reviewing the details of that enactment, let me simply remind the committee that it made it possible for any province which chooses to be a prescribed province under this legislation, and which provides by special grants comparable aid to the universities of its province, to obtain for the federal corporate taxpayers in that province an additional abatement of 1 per cent on the corporation tax. With regard to the federal corporate taxpayers in other provinces—that is to say, provinces whose universities receive the benefit of the federal university grants—the abatement in respect of corporate tax is 9 per cent, and that rate in the case of a prescribed province was advanced to 10 per cent.

In the course of the discussion I gave the house figures to show the relationship between the 1 per cent abatement on corporation tax compared with the federal university grants accruing in any province, and provision was made in that legislation—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would permit me to raise a point of order, not in a contentious spirit. The minister pointed out in beginning his remarks that he was talking about something that was not in the present bill—

An hon. Member: Don't you want to hear it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I merely like to observe the rules. If we are to have a debate on this subject, that is fine. If we are to obey the rules of the house and debate the bill that is before us, I have no objection to the minister stating what the future intentions of the government are with respect to this matter. However, I think it is rather an abuse of the privileges of hon. members for him to be going over the explanation of what happened in the past. We were all here when that took place, and we are quite familiar with what happened—

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Ask Mr. Lesage—

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: —and if the minister would like to take advantage—

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Ask Mr. Lesage—

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: —of this opportunity I have not the slightest objection; in fact I would be most anxious to hear any advance indication of the government's intentions with respect to what they are going to do in the future. But I do not think we ought to enter into a debate about something that was done a couple of years ago.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I think it is the mood of the house that this, the longest session in parliamentary history, should be wound up at an early time, either today or tomorrow. I think it would be an error on the part of the Minister of Finance if he should insist upon being out of order just to generate a debate on the government's policy toward university grants.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, you will recall the words with which I introduced my remarks on this subject. This subject was referred to in the debate on second reading—

Mr. Argue: That does not make it in order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and no objection was taken to the reference to it. To my surprise that intervention has evidently attracted not a little attention outside the house; I am speaking of both press and radio. I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and I made it quite clear in my opening remarks that I thought that subject was not raised by the bill. The bill does not make provision for it, but some question was raised as to why provision was not made in the bill in relation thereto.

Perhaps my remarks are really related to a point of order with regard to relevancy. I was simply explaining why that subject is, in my respectful submission, outside the scope of this legislation. I am giving an explanation of why in this particular legislation the subject of the university grants is not involved. It is covered by other legislation, and this matter must be dealt with at some time with respect to the new fiscal year commencing April 1, 1962. Far be it from me to wish to generate a debate on this question. I am emphasizing my view that the subject was extraneous to the bill in the first place.

As to the intention of the government, I shall content myself with the previous statement made in this regard. There will, of course, have to be legislation on this subject at the next session. It would be premature for me to indicate now what the government will propose in relation to university grants. Certain it is that whatever is proposed in that regard will take due note of, and make proper provision for, the situation in relation to any province whose universities do not receive the benefit of the university grants. This is what was done in 1960 in the legislation of that time, and no person need have any doubt whatever as to the will and intention of the government in this regard. We indicated clearly at that time that we cannot support the continuation of a situation—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is going back to history again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —in which the benefits of that legislation were enjoyed by only nine provinces while the taxes were paid by ten. That continues to be the position of the government. I hope this subject can be dismissed with this clear assurrance that in any provision which parliament is asked to make with regard to these grants, parliament will be asked to make provision for any province whose universities do not choose to receive these grants directly. I draw attention to the letter written by the Prime Minister to the premier of Quebec inviting a statement of his views and wishes in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to enter now upon the discussion of this subject, apart from making one observation. The minister will recall that at the time this measure was brought in as an amendment to this legislation, that was the view which we took. We took the view that this was an extraneous subject and that there should have been legislation dealing exclusively with university grants. Notwithstanding all this information, that is still our view and I am glad the minister shares it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member would permit me I should like to make it clear—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is very hard to understand the hon. gentleman. He is the most misunderstood man in Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought we were trying to clarify the situation. Whatever provision is made, accompanying legislation will be required. If the arrangement takes a form similar to that of 1960, obviously there must be provision in the Income Tax Act. It will depend on the form the proposed solution takes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course it will. That is what I was saying. I did not misunderstand at all. The minister has become so accustomed to being misunderstood that even when he is clearly understood he still thinks he has been misunderstood. However, I do not intend to take any more time discussing what is not in the bill, because there is plenty in this bill which needs time spent on it during this committee stage.

I intend to avail myself of what I refer to as the Howard Green rule or convention in order to make several observations on this first clause about specific matters, not by way of general debate. I intend to refer to matters which were raised after I spoke in the debate which directly refer to things I had said. I want first of all to make a few observations about the speech which was made in his usual amiable and earnest manner by the Minister of Forestry. The minister said yesterday, as recorded at page 8992 of Hansard:

> I submit that great satisfaction was expressed by some premiers after the conference of last autumn.

I think it was not the conference of last autumn which the hon. gentleman had in mind but the conference held in February, because the conference last autumn brought a universal chorus of dispraise which, the minister may remember, was recorded in graphic form in the Toronto Star. Every premier was against what was proposed in October. I think the minister was just mistaken as to the date. It was the February conference he was referring to because of the conditions—

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Perhaps it was the conference in February.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was after the proposals were made which, substantially, are the ones in this bill which we are considering. It was not that $220 million freeze which was the first proposal made last October.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not a proposal.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not a proposal, it was a suggestion. I had forgotten. I am accustomed to plain language, and these euphemisms and hair splitting distinctions are something which a simple mind like my own finds it difficult to grasp. The difference between a suggestion and a proposal is the difference between telephoning a reporter saying "I don't like that story" and writing him a letter saying "Don't write that kind of story".

As I was saying, I believe the Minister of Forestry was referring to the February conference, and the hon. gentleman seems to agree.

Mr. Flemming (Royal): The important thing was, they were pleased.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman said, in fact:

> I suggest that the premier of Newfoundland was very well satisfied. I suggest he was very happy.

I think it is true that the premier of Newfoundland was exceedingly reassured to find that the government was going to recommend that parliament should vote for an additional five years the $8 million which was to go on indefinitely according to the McNair award and which ought to have been voted indefinitely in exactly the same way as the constitutional subsidies to other provinces. I am sure he was greatly relieved. However, I am sure he would have been a great deal happier if the proper course had been taken with regard to that matter and the payment had been treated like the other constitutional subsidies, as it should have been and as it will be when there is again a Liberal government.

I do not intend to say any more about that subject, because that is another subject which we on this side consider extraneous to this bill. It should have been dealt with once and for all in the proper manner after the McNair award was made. It so happened that under the arrangement which was proposed in February, apart from the constitutional aspect, the additional $10 million to the four Atlantic provinces was relatively attractive to Newfoundland as compared with some of the other provinces, and notably with New Brunswick. The point in the hon. member's speech to which I was going to refer particularly is found in the next sentence. As reported at page 8992 the hon. gentleman said:

> I do not know how the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is going to justify the statements he made yesterday when he meets the premier of Newfoundland in Newfoundland.

I can tell the hon. gentleman how I am going to justify them, and I shall do so in his own words. Speaking for himself the hon. gentleman said, as reported at page 8995:

> I try to reconcile my duties as a member of the central government with my loyalties to the province that I have the honour to represent.

I am not a member of the central government, but I am a member of the parliament of Canada. In the very felicitous phrase of the hon. gentleman I try also to reconcile my duties as a member of the central parliament with my loyalties to the province I have the honour to represent, and I find no difficulty whatever in doing that.

Mr. Smallwood is the premier of a province, and the hon. member for Royal was premier of a province. When he was premier he recognized that it was his duty in his dealings with the government of Canada to represent the interests of that province. He did not do so against the interests of Canada, but it was not part of his duty to consider the general interest of Canada, which was the duty of the government of Canada and of the parliament of Canada. The same situation still applies to the premier of Newfoundland. When he comes here to a federal-provincial conference he does not come to solve the nation's problems but to look after the interests of Newfoundland, as he properly should.

I was elected just as the hon. member for Royal, the Minister of Forestry, was elected as a member of the parliament of Canada to represent an important constituency, but also to act in the interests of all the people of Canada. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not disagree with me in the least. It is not because of any aspect of this matter relating especially to Newfoundland but because it seems to me that this bill as it now stands is not in the national interest that I feel it is my duty to oppose it. For that reason I am opposing it. If the hon. member for Royal thinks it is in the national interest and that he should support it for that reason, I do not quarrel with that view. We just happen to differ about the bill itself.

The hon. gentleman also made some reference to the extraordinary increase in the amounts paid to Newfoundland at a particular time, and to the fact that the amount was over $40 million in one year and went down, I think, to $37 million. These distortions result from the fact that the $8 million McNair award was included in the statistical table. Other distortions would have been apparent if the constitutional payments to the other provinces had been included, too. My point is simply that these amounts should not be included.

The hon. gentleman also suggested, although he was rather careful to correct it at the bottom of page 8893, that all he got as premier of New Brunswick from the legislation of 1956 was courtesy. Well, the courtesy in that particular instance was $5 million by way of an additional payment to the province of New Brunswick. It has been the tendency, and the hon. gentleman is too honest not to admit it, as he did when he was confronted with it—

Mr. Flemming (Royal): I was not confronted with it. I gave it voluntarily.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman did give it voluntarily, as I think he would always do in these matters. I would never suspect the hon. member for Royal of deliberately distorting anything. I suppose, like the rest of us, he would put the more favourable features in the front and try to keep the less favourable ones in the back, and I would not criticize him for that either. From that point of view I think the observation I am going to make is just as relevant, and that is, as I even got the Minister of Finance to admit once in an incautious moment, that under the proposals embodied in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act of 1956 that came into effect on April 1, 1957, the increase in payments and advantages to the provinces was something in the order of $100 million in the very first year of the new arrangement. I use the word "advantages" because in the case of some of the provinces it was merely a matter of withdrawing from the field and letting the province collect the tax itself. Therefore, as I say, the increase in payments and advantages added together was approximately $100 million in the very first year.

According to the tables the minister himself has put before us, all the additions that have been made including those in this bill will, in the first year under this new arrangement, not reach the amount of Mr. Harris' increases in one single measure. When we hear about the new era and the great generosity of the present government, this must be borne in mind. This is a hard fact shown in the minister's own statistics. In other words, what was done by the St. Laurent government in 1956 for all the provinces of Canada in the aggregate was to increase the payments or advantages to them by approximately $100 million in the first year. That has increased since; the result has had an increment in every year since that time.

What hon. gentlemen opposite did in 1958 and what they are proposing now to do, which as I pointed out is in essence merely for Ontario, when you take out the pluses and minuses in the other provinces, will be still less in the first year that the Liberal increase between 1956 and 1957.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister is able successfully to refute that statement he will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I invite the hon. gentleman to look at page 7927. He has said that the increase that was provided in 1958 and the increase now provided by this government do not equal the increase in 1957 over the previous time, but he has an opportunity of comparing this with the first year of the new five year period by examining the table to be found at page 7927 of Hansard, which shows very clearly that the increase for the next fiscal year will be $128 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the minister is forgetting that in order to achieve that increase he has to stick with Mr. Harris' formula for three provinces, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, because his own new formula would have such a bad effect on those provinces that he could hardly take something that would not even work in the case of those provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is only part of the new formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: But even on the minister's own figures all he has achieved in the four years he has been in office is to provide $118 million, of which $18 million goes to Ontario under this bill. Mr. Harris in one measure in 1956 which came into effect in 1957 increased the payments by $100 million. The minister is well aware that in the propaganda literature that is spread across the country by his party they always give the figure for 1956-57 instead of 1957-58 so as to give the false impression that everything that was done in the last budget of the Liberal government was done by the present administration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. member for Royal has had any part in preparing that kind of fallacious propaganda. It has been exposed a number of times in this house but it continues to circulate throughout the country and is, I must say, rather like other forms of inflation indulged in by some members of the government.

I wish now to turn to one or two things which were said yesterday afternoon by the Prime Minister. I am sure the Minister of Finance must have trembled when the Prime Minister ventured into the field of arithmetic; because while the minister has a little difficulty in adding, the Prime Minister never adds but always multiplies and some of the results he achieved by his multiplication are really fantastic.

Of course it would take far too long to correct all the arithmetical errors in the Prime Minister's speech of yesterday, and it would be profitless because undoubtedly he would just make another speech in which astounding errors would be made. I do not want anyone to think I am suggesting anything in saying this except that the Prime Minister is not interested in details; he is interested in the broad picture, but even his broad picture sometimes gets a little out of focus, and it certainly did yesterday. At page 9004 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as having said:

> We consider that the present system, based on the three standard tax rates and equalization to the average of the two top provinces, is neither logical nor practical.

Now, that is the right hon. gentleman on September 27, 1961, but I think the house ought to recall what the Prime Minister said on July 25, 1960. He said:

> I want to make this abundantly clear on behalf of the dominion government that whatever the ultimate decision may be the principle of equalization must be preserved.
> Equalization, the second component, is a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

On September 27 he said:

> We consider that the present system, based on the three standard tax rates and equalization to the average of the two top provinces, is neither logical nor practical.

Well, now, if that was the view of the Prime Minister why did he not say so on July 25 instead of giving this pledge, which he gave then and which was echoed by the Minister of Finance, to maintain the equalization on the basis on which the Prime Minister then defined it? Here is what the Minister of Finance had to say about equalization at that time. This is at page 112 of the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference of 1960.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is a difference between formula and principle.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister gave the principle here. The formula is surely the number of points to which you equalize, but the principle is the basis of the equalization, and the basis of the equalization was clearly and unmistakably defined by the Prime Minister on July 25, 1960. I do not think there is any doubt that at that time the government did intend to carry on with that principle. Something happened afterwards to change it, but let us see what the Minister of Finance had to say at that conference. This is at page 112. He said:

> I think all of us were delighted to hear the virtually unanimous expressions of opinion in favour of a principle of equalization, upon which the Prime Minister made such a clear and forceful statement yesterday. I simply remind the conference that the equalization payments, whatever they may be, will not come from any joint proceeds earned from taxes jointly collected, but will come from the federal treasury, and it is evident that there are requests for increases in the equalization payments.

There was no request for a change in the principle or for a change in the formula.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There were requests for changes in the formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: But not in the principle.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What you call the principle; I do not call it the principle.

Mr. Pickersgill: The principle is clearly defined by the Prime Minister, and I repeat it because it seems very hard to penetrate the mind of the minister. I read from page 10 of the proceedings:

> Equalization, the second component, is a payment by Canada to the provinces to bring the per capita return from the three taxes at standard rates up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces in which per capita yield is highest.

That is the principle. It is the principle that the Prime Minister defined and pledged himself to carry out. It is the principle that the minister said—after the premiers had all spoken—the premiers accepted. It is true that Mr. Frost wanted a lot more points than he was getting. Some of the other provincial premiers were a little more modest, though they all wanted more; that is quite true. I believe Mr. Manning came along with his usual theory which is rather different from this.

As I recall the proceedings of that conference, which I have read with great care, and most of which I listened to, with the exception of Mr. Manning, I think there was no dissent whatsoever about the principle except the premier of Manitoba in particular said that it should be to the top province, not the top two. He said so again the other day in one of the letters printed as an appendix to Hansard. Of course the premier of Manitoba has had no choice but to accept the views of the Liberal party of Manitoba on this matter, and he has accepted them wholeheartedly because he knows they are the views of the people of Manitoba. That is the root of my objection to this whole bill, and that is where I quarrel with the Minister of Forestry.

I say, and I said earlier, that when the Atlantic provinces grants were established we were told they were to be in addition to equalization, not in substitution for equalization, and in 1958 they were in addition to equalization. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland all got the same increment of equalization, the same three points that the minister talked about yesterday in his speech. They got that just as did all the other provinces, but they got this other in addition. What the government has done this time has been to change the principle of equalization for something which is not equalization at all but an averaging down of the poorer provinces. That is not equalization. Equalization means to make something equal, not to make it unequal, and the whole device here is to make the thing unequal. Because it was so unequal for the Atlantic provinces $10 million was added to the Atlantic provinces grants in substitution for, not in addition to, the equalization which they were losing by this new and disadvantageous formula.

That is the point. Now, it just so happened that that formula was much more disadvantageous to the province of New Brunswick than it was to the other three Atlantic provinces. It just so happened that it was and is, and that is what my hon. friend from Gloucester was complaining about; that is what the premier of the province is complaining about. In the light of the Prime Minister's pledge, it seems to me this is what every citizen of New Brunswick has a right to complain about. Every citizen of Manitoba has a right to complain about the deal that province has received compared with what the Prime Minister said in July would be the foundation of this whole system.

I could not argue against the additional $10 million for the Atlantic provinces grants. According to the minister's tables, the total payment is increased by $18 million, which is all to go to one province. That is all this bill does; it increases the payments by $18 million over what we are paying this year. It is true that British Columbia and Alberta lose absolutely, and what they lose the four Atlantic provinces gain. It just happens to add up to about the same amount. What I am saying is that the right thing to have done was to carry out the Prime Minister's pledge of July to increase the equalization on that basis which was fair to everybody, and which was genuine equalization. If the government felt that all it could afford was $18 million as an increase, that could be another $8 million distributed among the provinces when they felt the Atlantic provinces should have this $10 million. In other words, what should have been done was to keep the Atlantic provinces grants separate for the purpose for which they were established, the purpose which I have always supported, and the purpose which I have always given the government credit for; to meet the additional need that could not be met by equalization. It is surely prostituting them to use them as a substitute for equalization because you make the so-called equalization formula so bad.

That is the real trouble. It also makes it so unequal as between New Brunswick on the one hand and Nova Scotia and Newfoundland on the other, no one can help but feel that it is not just unless the previous system was not just. I do not think anyone would argue that New Brunswick was getting too much under the previous system; at least I would be very surprised if anyone would so argue.

That is the basic criticism that I have to make on clause 1. There are a couple of other things, of course, that the Prime Minister said which I do not think can really be overlooked. I will leave the question of Saskatchewan to others, beyond saying that Saskatchewan is apparently going to have to be content with the old system throughout the whole period.

That brings me to a point at which I should like to repeat my request of yesterday, which was echoed by the hon. member for Laurier; namely, that we should be given a projection over the whole five years of the old system and the new. We are being asked to pass what is in many ways the most important statute this parliament could possibly pass, and we are entitled to all the information available to the government to illuminate this matter. We are entitled to know just what the relationship of each province would be between a continuation of the present system and the substitution of the new system. Otherwise we cannot determine whether what we are doing is fair or not fair.

I cannot understand the reluctance of the government to do this. I do not know because I have seen such tables, but I have had enough experience in these matters to know perfectly well that they exist. Nobody is going to expect the end results to turn out to be exactly the same as the estimates in these tables. We are grown men and women. We all know these are estimates, but we are entitled to those estimates. This parliament, which is being asked to make a decision, is entitled to the information on which the government made a decision to upset the principle of equalization which the Prime Minister promised and substitute this melange for it. I appeal again to the minister to let us have these tables.

The Prime Minister made this statement, as found on page 9907 of Hansard:

> The preservation and extension of the fundamental principles of freedom for provinces to tax as they see fit, of equalization based on broader determination of fiscal need and the fuller recognition of fiscal disabilities peculiar to the large eastern segment of Canada, will contribute to the financial strength and independence of the provinces and to equality of opportunity for Canadians throughout Canada.

All I want to say is that what this measure is going to do, as I am sure we will be able to show later in the committee, is to contribute to inequality throughout Canada rather than equality. I suggest that the minister show us any provision of the bill that gives any province more right to tax than it has now. I should like to see it. A great deal was made of that by the Prime Minister, and I suggest that we be given that information in black and white.

I believe I am finished except for one observation I wish to make with respect to the remarks of the Minister of Finance, which I had to read so hastily that I am not sure I have them clearly in my mind. I think the only thing I want to say anything about is the extraordinary argument that the minister made toward the end of his speech about what we would be doing in voting against this bill. He suggested that one would be voting against this or that benefit to this or that place, and that it was particularly ungracious of the members from the province of Newfoundland to vote against the bill.

I might remind the minister, whose memory in these matters is often a little short, that in the year 1956 he voted against a bill that increased the payments or financial advantages to the provincial treasuries of this country by $100 million. He voted against that bill, and I do not think anyone suggested at that time that in doing so he was hostile to such advantages as might come from that measure. He voted against it, according to him, because he was opposed to the principle of that bill, and he gave very strong arguments in his opposition to that principle. It would not be proper for me to enter into those arguments now, but I think they were accepted at that time in good faith.

It is, it seems to me, a kind of perversion to suggest, because a member believes a measure is bad and a better measure could be substituted for it and therefore votes against it, that this means that he is opposed to such advantages as there may be in the measure for certain sections of the country. After all, it is our duty here to make good laws. It is our duty to criticize defects in laws. If we think there is a fundamental defect in a law, as I think there is a fundamental defect in this law in the abandonment of the Prime Minister's pledge, in the abandonment of the real principle of equalization, surely it is our duty to vote against it. Although I am not taking exception because I know the Minister of Finance, I do not think we add to our debates by attributing other motives than those which exist.

(Translation):

Mr. Lafreniere: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the statement he made a moment ago, namely that a special bill will be introduced with respect to university grants, and especially for stating that the government will take into account that certain provinces cannot accept direct grants from the federal government for education purposes.

I trust that the hopes I expressed yesterday when I spoke in the debate, will then become a reality.

Mr. Robichaud: In the course of his short contribution to the debate on the second reading of this bill, yesterday, the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Fournier) referred to the "howling" of some members during this debate.

According to Larousse, "howling" is the peculiar cry of wolves and dogs. I hope the hon. member had not in mind the speeches that were made yesterday, for instance, by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Diefenbaker).

The hon. member also charged that I had cast insult on Acadians and French Canadians, because I ventured to make my speech in one of the two official languages of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I need not be ashamed of my attitude and patriotism, both in and out of this house; I am not ashamed of my mother tongue, but that will not prevent me from respecting, as I have always done, both official languages in this country.

In those fields, Mr. Chairman, I have no lesson to take from the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska. As a matter of fact, I hold in my hand copy of a speech made by the hon. member at the Star theatre of Edmundston on August 31, 1961. Unfortunately, the rules of the house do not permit me to put on record what the hon. member said in that speech, which was a most violent charge against all Acadian patriotic organizations in the province of New Brunswick, including SONA which is launching a drive for funds in favour of national societies in Acadia.

(Text):

Now, Mr. Chairman, yesterday the Minister of Forestry said I could not give one project that the new provincial government had started and completed, and he challenged me to name one. The minister knew then that under the rules of this house I had no right to reply. The minister should also know that the present government of New Brunswick has only been in power for 15 months, and the type of project that is being undertaken by the present government will take more than 15 months to complete. If the rules in this connection would allow me to enumerate what has been done by the present government of New Brunswick in the short time it has been in office, I think the Minister of Forestry would have a reply to his challenge. May I mention in passing the abolition of hospital premiums which his government introduced, and which were abolished within a few days after the present government came into power.

In so far as new industries are concerned, the present government of New Brunswick has guaranteed more financial loans to new industry in New Brunswick in a period of 15 months than the previous government under the leadership of the Minister of Forestry did during its eight years in office.

I have one question I should like to ask the Minister of Finance. If he looks at table 3 on page 7927 of Hansard he will see that under the new formula New Brunswick will receive for the year 1962-63 approximately $36,265,000. Then if he looks back at page 7919 of Hansard, table 4, he will find that New Brunswick under the present formula will receive for the year 1961-62 the sum of $36,334,000. According to the figures which have been released by the Minister of Finance, therefore, under the new formula New Brunswick will receive $69,000 less in 1962-63 than it would under the old formula.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is comparing two different things, Mr. Chairman. If he will look at the table on page 7927 he will see that the amount of $36,265,000 is the provision under this bill in relation to standard taxes, whereas the table on page 7919 includes such other things as statutory subsidies, which in this present year amount to $1,754,000, and as well, the public utilities taxes which, in the present year, amount to $164,000. These sources of revenue are not included in the figure $36,265,000 for the fiscal year 1962-63 under this bill and indicated in the total on page 7927.

Mr. Robichaud: I thank the minister for the information.

Mr. Chevrier: Yesterday the Prime Minister in the course of his remarks made a great deal of the fact that the government claims this new proposal is a return to the spirit of the constitution, and that it gives to the provinces their complete rights in the field of direct taxation. Well, of course, we all know that is not so. I would not want to qualify it with the word "nonsense" that we often hear from the other side of the house, but that statement certainly is not a fact. The present system, which has been in existence since 1957, gives three options which were offered to the provinces. They could levy and collect their taxes at whatever rates they wished to determine, as in the case of one province. They could simply rent the three direct tax fields, or they could levy these taxes and the federal government was willing to collect, provided the provincial rates did not exceed the standard rates. Under the new system the rental option would cease to be available but the federal government would be willing to collect provincial taxes at any rates.

While this last change may be an improvement in certain rich provinces, it could hardly be described as a revolution or a return to the spirit of the constitution. It may well lead, as has been stated by several premiers who took part in this conference, to a return to the tax jungle of the thirties. However, to the extent that the provinces will have to depend on additional direct taxes without equalization for their financing, I have no hesitation in saying that great financial inequalities and great regional inequalities will take place across the country.

This leads me to ask the minister one or two questions. I think the government and the minister should state clearly and unequivocally what the province of Quebec will receive under this legislation as compared with the old scheme. Perhaps the minister might reply to that now in order that we may avoid repetition.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the interests of orderly procedure there are some things I wish to say in reply to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and the hon. member for Laurier has just said some things I will have to comment upon, however briefly. I wonder which would contribute best to orderly procedure, Mr. Chairman; that I dispose of the questions and then deal in general terms with the remarks that have been made, or reverse the order? I had assumed the latter.

Mr. Chevrier: Then perhaps I can continue with the questions which I have and the minister can deal with them all when he gets to them. My first question was, what additional amount will Quebec receive under this scheme as compared with the old scheme? I think here I should repeat what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked the minister yesterday and which I too interjected during the course of his remarks; namely, a request for a projection over the whole five years of this new legislation as compared with the old. I may be mistaken in this, but my understanding is that the province of Quebec will receive over the full five year period about $2.5 million more than before. The minister will correct my impression if it is wrong, and I should like to have on the record the exact amount. I should like also to have that projected under this scheme for the province of Quebec over the whole five year period. For instance, I would like to know what Quebec will receive under this legislation in every year from 1962 to 1966. Then I would like the same information for the province of Ontario. I would like to find out from the minister what the province of Ontario will receive under the new scheme for the first year. I made the statement yesterday that this would be $18 million, and if that is inaccurate the minister will probably comment on it. Then I think I should obtain the same information for Ontario during the period from 1962 to 1966.

The next question that I would direct to the minister is this. What are the changes included in this bill which will improve the right of the province of Quebec to levy and collect direct taxes? What is there here which gives Quebec greater constitutional freedom than it before? I hope the minister will answer these questions when he has disposed of the other matters that have been raised on clause 1.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps it will contribute to orderly discussion if I review the points that have been raised this morning largely in the order in which they were put forward by hon. members opposite.

First of all, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate invited the committee to compare the result of the legislation in 1957 in increasing the payments to the provinces in the preceding five year period with the increases brought about by the combined operation of the 1958 increases and those that will come into effect under this bill. Let me clarify this.

The table on page 7927 I think gives the complete answer as applied to the year about which the hon. member was speaking. He says, "Compare this in the first year with the new five year period", that is to say the next fiscal year, 1962-63, commencing April 1, 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which table is that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is table No. 3 on page 7927 of Hansard. This table shows this very clearly. The line at the bottom of the page gives the projection into 1962-63 of the formula that was legislated by parliament in 1956 under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act for the five-year period commencing April 1, 1957. If that formula had continued into the fiscal year 1962-63, the total paid to the provinces would be $771,936,000, according to the best estimate that can be made to date.

The effect of the combination of the 1958 changes and those provided for by this bill —because this bill carries forward and extends the increases that were made by the legislation of 1958 and later years—shows that on the same calculation for the same year, with the benefit of this bill and the changes it makes and continues, the total paid to the provinces is estimated to be $899,414,000. So the increase brought about is of the order of $128 million. I think the hon. member realizes now that the statement he was making in relation to the comparison does not hold water.

He is also overlooking the fact that this table is based upon the year 1962-63, in which year the federal withdrawal from the income tax field in favour of the provinces will be 16 per cent; that each succeeding year there is to be an increase of 1 per cent in the extent of the federal withdrawal until in the last of the five years the withdrawal will be 20 per cent. So I think the hon. member will realize now that his comparison and the conclusions he was drawing are quite unsound.

Next, Mr. Chairman, I cannot let pass his comment on the figures used by the Prime Minister yesterday without taking issue with it. He says the Prime Minister's arithmetic was not right, but he did not follow that up by taking issue with any figure at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the minister seems to forget this fact. I did not go into the Prime Minister's figures, but I did take one general statement about the figures, and I pointed out that when the Prime Minister said this government had done more than the previous government—before this bill, that is to say—that just does not happen to be so, as the minister's figures show. The increase that Mr. Harris made in 1957 was approximately $100 million and, as the minister's own figures show, if he continued his own scheme it would not be until next year, not this year, that $100 million more would be given to the provinces. So the Prime Minister was quite wrong in what he said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister was not wrong at all. The hon. gentleman has chosen to make broad, general assertions without supplying the evidence. The fact is that the benefit of the increases that have been made commencing in 1958, after the change of government, is as follows. Here I am confining my remarks to the increases brought about in the unconditional payments. The increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent in the provincial share of the yield from personal income tax and the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants—

Mr. Pickersgill: And the grant to Newfoundland, which I do not admit should be in this at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I set this out in my remarks of July 11, at page 7914 of Hansard. I said:

> In 1958-59 this increase was worth $55.9 million to the provinces, in 1959-60 $67.2 million, in 1960-61 $68.3 million, and the estimated value for 1961-62 is $72.6 million or a total of $262 million for the four years.

On the same page I also pointed out that the benefit of this progressive withdrawal of the federal government in favour of the provinces in the personal income tax field will result at the end of this coming five year period in—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the minister does not need to talk about the future. I was talking about the effect up to the present. All the minister is doing is confusing matters.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the minister is seeking to clarify the confused approach of the hon. member to the statements of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was speaking yesterday of the tremendous increases in the federal payments to the provinces. The Prime Minister drew the attention of the house to the very large increases in payments that had been made out of the federal treasury to the provinces, including the unconditional grants, conditional grants and payments for the benefit of provincial institutions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not in the passage I am referring to.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The payments he dwelt upon are set forth on page 7915 of Hansard. Without going over the ground again, the Prime Minister in this respect was drawing the attention of the house to the fact that the payments under these various headings for the benefit of the provinces in 1956-57 totalled $689,352,000; in 1957-58, $837,136,000, and in this present fiscal year these payments will total $1,470,139,000.

The next point put forward by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is one that the house has heard him refer to very frequently. I suppose if any subject is worn threadbare it must be this one. It is the subject to which the hon. member refers constantly. I refer to the subject of equalization and the remarks of the Prime Minister at the dominion-provincial conference in July, 1960. We have discussed this before. The interpretation the hon. member has put on the words of the Prime Minister is not the correct interpretation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never interpreted them; I have always read them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He comes back to it again and again. His interpretation, I say, as I have said so often, is not the correct interpretation, but as he has stated it again this morning I am obliged to set the record straight again. In his remarks which have been quoted by the hon. member from page 10 of the report of the dominion-provincial conference of July 25, 1960, relating to this question of equalization, the Prime Minister was placing himself and the government firmly on record in favour of the principle of equalization. The hon. member then goes on to identify the principle of equalization with the formula in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act by which the government of that day proposed to meet the problem of equalization.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not do it. The Prime Minister did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We take issue with the hon. member as to the interpretation he places on the words of the Prime Minister. We say he is misinterpreting them. We have said that before. I suppose the hon. member will go on giving his interpretation to the house until kingdom come or until there is a change of representation. We, on the other hand, will continue to deny the interpretation he is putting on the words of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, I have never interpreted the Prime Minister's words. I have only read them. They speak for themselves. I am not surprised that the Prime Minister is sensitive, because he knows this is a repudiation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That last sentence is utterly false. There has been no repudiation at any time by the Prime Minister. The hon. member says he reads the words of the Prime Minister, but he always goes on to put his own interpretation on them. I say it is not the correct interpretation, but the hon. member goes on doing it and will go on doing so, I suppose, as long as he is a member of this house. We, for our part, will go on correcting that interpretation as long as we are here.

The Prime Minister was talking about the principle of equalization. The government has taken a firm position in relation to the principle of equalization, and this bill provides a more effective formula for meeting the problems of equalization and fulfilling the government's views in recognizing the principle of equalization. Surely the principle of equalization is the principle that it is proper to draw on federal resources to seek to bring about the strengthening of the fiscal position of those provinces which by reason of geography and less plentiful natural resource development are in a weaker fiscal position than other provinces.

Now, it happens that the formula applicable from 1957 to 1962 under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act proposed to meet the problem of equalization by equalizing the yields from the three tax sources to the average of the two provinces with the highest yield. But there is nothing sacrosanct or immutable about that. That was not a question of principle. That was the particular method or formula which was applied. Those who heard the words of the Prime Minister on July 25, 1960 did not interpret them as meaning that the government was committed to the particular formula or method which was written into the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

As a matter of fact the hon. member is altogether wrong in the interpretation he put on this subject, because the matter continued to be discussed at the conference and members of the conference asked for a revision of that formula. Of course they were asking for it in terms which would favour them. Naturally they wanted to see the formula changed so there would be equalization based on the province with the highest yield, not on the average of two or more.

I think I am safe in saying, then, that nobody placed on the statement of the Prime Minister the interpretation which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate insists on putting on it at every opportunity. We could argue this subject until kingdom come, but as long as he is in this house the hon. member will go on putting his interpretation on the words of the Prime Minister and, as I say, as long as I am here I shall put the correct interpretation upon them and say that the hon. member is misinterpreting what the Prime Minister said.

As we have pointed out on several occasions, the formula which this bill proposes as a means of giving effect to the principle of equalization is a much improved formula, a formula which goes much further to meet the problems of the provinces which are in the weakest fiscal position. It will do very much better work in that respect than the formula written into the bill of 1956. It does this in two ways—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question? He said, if I understood him correctly, that the formula was designed to help the provinces in the weakest financial position. In view of the fact that the total additional outlay is $18 million and Ontario gets an advantage of $18 million, does the minister mean that he thinks Ontario is in the weakest position?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is not dealing with the matter of equalization now. He is talking about total payments. I am talking about equalization. The hon. member knows perfectly well that Ontario derives no equalization payment under this legislation. It derived none under the legislation of 1956, and it does not qualify under the bill now before us. So the hon. member is simply drawing red herrings across the trail. That is typical. He puts his own definition on his own terms and then argues from that, regardless of what the facts are or of what the legislation says.

I was pointing out to the committee before the hon. member's latest intervention that the equalization formula in this bill will serve the principle of equalization more effectively in two respects. We are dealing now with equalization to the national average instead of to the level of the top two provinces. This change means that the bulk of the equalization benefit goes to the provinces which are in the greatest need. It is not disbursed so widely in terms of the number of provinces, but that money will be distributed in those provinces whose revenues are below the national average; there will be a concentration of it among the provinces which are in the greatest fiscal need. This was not the case under the formula in the earlier legislation.

The other change which has been made in aid of the principle of equalization is that now we are equalizing not merely in terms of the yield from the three standard taxes, but we are equalizing in terms of this yield plus 50 per cent of the yield from resource revenues. That latter element is of great importance. Why the principle of equalization should have been limited to the three standard taxes is something which hon. members opposite will have to defend, because they themselves so limited it. We want to extend it more widely and to take into account 50 per cent of the yield from resource revenues. This will be a factor of great importance in serving the principle of equalization. I pointed out yesterday that disparities in the yield to provinces from resource revenues ranged all the way from 18 cents per capita to $112 per capita. The 1956 formula completely ignored this disparity. We propose to include this element and to apply the principle of equalization in this regard at least to the extent of 50 per cent from this source.

The next point which was made related to future projections. In table 3 which appears in Hansard at page 7927 we have sought to give the house the benefit of our best calculations for the fiscal year 1962-63. Both the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Laurier have asked for a table giving projections beyond that date. Any projection beyond that date is necessarily hypothetical. It will depend upon many factors.

Mr. Benidickson: This one is hypothetical, too, as the heading of the table indicates.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, but we are much closer to next year; and while we have taken very great care to point out that this is hypothetical in that sense, it is the best we can do right now in making a calculation for a fiscal year the commencement of which is now some seven months removed. To go beyond that and ask the government to put on the record of the house tables of projections beyond that date is not, I think, a proper request. Any figures in that respect will depend upon a variety of circumstances. They will depend on the rate of yield from these various taxes. They will depend upon the element of growth of the gross national product. They will depend upon the number of wealthy persons who die leaving estates, and matters of that kind. The projection into the coming fiscal year is as far as I think it is proper to ask the government to go in putting figures before the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, we are denied the information.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. The hon. member can make up his own tabulations as he wishes. In the department we have made up many tabulations. These all depend upon circumstances. There is a great variety of permutations and combinations depending upon the weight you are to give to growth factors here and there. We did not put forward at the dominion-provincial plenary conference any projections beyond 1962-63. The table we have put before the house at page 7927 is the table that was put before the conference. We did not put before the plenary conference projections beyond that date. Every province makes its own calculations for future years depending upon what weight they give to these different factors. I believe I have made my position quite clear in that respect, and I feel it is a sound position.

The hon. member for Laurier came back to the question of the constitution, and challenged the argument that the Prime Minister made yesterday. An important advance that this legislation makes over the 1956 legislation under which we have been operating in this regard for the last five years is that under this new legislation each provincial legislature will assume its proper and constitutional responsibility for determining what shall be the taxes levied in the province.

Mr. Chevrier: The provinces had the option of doing that before.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ah, but the pressures were such that that was chosen by one province with respect to three sources of tax and by one other province with respect to one source. For that reason we say that the tax rental system, whether you put it on an optional basis or on any other basis, was a system which put the federal government in the unconstitutional position of standing between the needs of the provinces in relation to revenue, on the one hand, and their proper constitutional responsibility in regard to determining what revenues should be raised on the other hand. This new legislation restores the responsibility precisely where it belongs under the constitution. Each legislature will take responsibility before the electorate and the taxpayers of the province to determine what revenue shall be raised to meet what are considered to be the proper fiscal needs of the province.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was hoping to finish my remarks by one o'clock, and I will not be able to do so if I accept questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I feel this is relevant. I should like to ask the minister whether any provincial government that now has a tax rental system has asked the federal government to stop it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Several of the provinces indicated that they were quite prepared to have the new system.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not my question at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They did not indicate opposition to the new system at all. They were quite prepared to accept the responsibility for the new system, but they did express the hope that the federal government would collect their taxes for them because they have not the tax collecting machinery—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister mind answering my question? My question is this. Did the premier of any of the eight provinces that now have tax rental systems ask the federal government to drop that option?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not recall that any of them asked us to do so—

Mr. Pickersgill: In fact most of them asked you to keep it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —but several urged the continuation of the tax rental system. There is no secret about that. They wanted the federal government to go on taking the responsibility of levying and collecting these taxes and sharing the proceeds with the provinces, for very obvious reasons. Some had grown accustomed to a system under which they had not taken the responsibility before their own electors and provincial taxpayers of levying and collecting taxes. Under that system when they found that what they were receiving was not adequate, what did they do? They came to Ottawa and pleaded for more money, blaming the federal government if more money was not forthcoming. That is not a constitutional position.

Mr. Pickersgill: This has nothing to do with the constitution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The new system will restore the constitution and place responsibility where the constitution puts it, namely on the shoulders of the federal government with respect to federal levies and on the shoulders of the legislatures of the provinces with respect to provincial levies.

Mr. Pickersgill: Rubbish.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The argument about the return to the tax jungle was also advanced, but I see that it is one o'clock and therefore I shall have to reserve my comments in this respect until we resume.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is in the jungle.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This morning the hon. member for Laurier referred to the expression "tax jungle".

Mr. Chevrier: So did the premiers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As a matter of fact, the hon. member went further and said that this subject had been referred to in those words by many persons at the conference.

Mr. Chevrier: By several premiers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): His expression was "by many persons"; I made a note of it at the time. It was not referred to by many persons; it was referred to by one or two premiers. This is a subject in which the premier of Saskatchewan has shown some special interest. Whatever may be said about the condition of tax collection in this country in the 1930's, whatever may then have been the differences in tax rates applied by different provinces in the field of income tax, it is a fantastic inaccuracy to talk about a return to the tax jungle and associate that lurid expression with a measure of this kind.

This bill has two important provisions. In the first place it offers to the provinces the services and the facilities of the federal government in collecting their taxes. The only requisite in this respect is that the definition of income under provincial legislation should be the same as that contained in the federal legislation. It would be quite unreasonable to expect the federal government to undertake this service, particularly as it is being offered gratis, if the provinces were to create a diversity of definitions of income. This is a very necessary condition; but, subject to that one condition, the provinces are at liberty to impose whatever rates they choose with respect to the personal income tax and the corporation tax, and the federal government will collect their taxes for them and will do so without any charge whatever.

It is a substantial undertaking on the part of the federal government to assume the cost of collection. This will mean a service costing some millions of dollars offered by the federal government to the provinces. It is not necessary that the provinces confine their tax rates to the extent to which the federal government is withdrawing from the income tax field. That is not necessary; the federal government will provide the tax collection machinery and service regardless of the rate established by the province, provided the definition of income is the same.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, taxpayers will be called upon to complete only one income tax return in the case of provinces that choose to take advantage of this free federal service. Therefore the individual taxpayer has no reason to fear that he is going to be called upon to make two returns. In these cases he will be required to make only one return, and we are doing everything in our power to simplify that return and the division of the tax between the federal and provincial governments.

The argument that there should be only a federal tax in this field has been put forward with some degree of ardour in the past by socialists who see in this element a means of centralizing power in the federal government and concentrating power at Ottawa. I am glad this bill gives us an opportunity to provide an effective bulwark against that kind of attempted centralization. So I think it is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that these attempts to frighten people by talking about a tax jungle have no basis whatever.

The other point that has been put forward previously in this regard, particularly by socialists, has been that the federal government can maintain greater fiscal control over the economy if it has within its power the exclusive right to impose taxes and to reduce or increase them according to the economic conditions prevailing. These arguments may possibly have had some validity years ago, let us say 20 years ago, but they have not nearly as much validity today when tax rates both in the personal and corporation tax fields are as high as they are. That argument flourished years ago when the corporation tax was only a fraction of what it is today, and the same is true of the personal income tax in those days.

However, be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, it should be borne in mind that this progressive withdrawal of the federal government is in the personal income tax field. The federal government under this proposal extends to the provinces the same abatement in relation to the corporation tax that has applied during the past five years.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier asked me certain questions with regard to what the provinces of Quebec and Ontario would receive both in the first year and in succeeding years. As to the succeeding years, Mr. Chairman, that will depend entirely, of course, upon circumstances. It will depend on the tax yields, and this in turn depends upon the incomes that persons and corporations will earn in those succeeding years. It will depend upon the rate of growth in the economy. It will depend upon the size of the gross national product. Therefore this will have to be a matter of estimate and the farther away from the particular year concerned the more difficult it will be to put forward a reliable estimate. However, in table No. 3 on page 7927 of Hansard we have put forward the best estimate we have been able to make as to the yields to the provinces in the fiscal year 1962-63. If the hon. member will examine that table he will see the answers to his questions.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Chevrier: Is the Minister of Finance not in a position to give in dollars and cents the amount of money that the province of Quebec will receive under this scheme in the first year and then over the succeeding four years?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already given the information with respect to next year. It is there on page 7927. I also dwelt on this subject at some length yesterday. My remarks as found on page 9017 will indicate that I dwelt on this subject with respect to the figures for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: I remember what the minister said, and he has repeated it today in answer to my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. But the point I want to make to the minister is this. Table No. 3 page 7927 of Hansard for July 11, 1961 is a hypothetical illustration of provincial revenues for the year 1962-63 under the new formula. If the minister is able to do that for the first year under the new formula, why can he not project it over the full period until 1966 under the new formula?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already said that the farther away one is from the year concerned the more difficult it becomes to project. We have gone as far as we prudently can in offering this projection for the year 1962-63. It must be taken subject to the obvious limitations. We have done the best we can to calculate what this might be in the light of what might reasonably be expected to be the tax yields next year. But if you go beyond that you are getting farther and farther away from the present time, and any projection of that kind has less and less validity the farther you project it into the future. I do not wish to be in the position of being accused later on of misleading the house if the actual figures should be higher or lower than those put forward in any projection that we might attempt to make now. Table No. 3 on page 7927 is the best estimate that we have been able to compile for the fiscal year 1962-63 and, as I say, it must be taken subject to the obvious limitations of the situation.

Mr. Chevrier: I am familiar with table No. 3. I have glanced over it several times, and I am not satisfied that it gives the information which I seek. I come back to the preamble to my question this morning. Am I correct in assuming that under this new scheme the province of Quebec will receive $2½ million more over the period of five years? Is the minister able to answer that question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If I had the gift of prophecy, if I had a crystal ball and could look into it and read the future, I would be happy to answer the question; but I cannot be expected, I am sure, to answer as to what may be the gross national product or the tax yields from the personal income tax or the corporation tax or the succession duty in the province or the federal estate tax in those succeeding years. I think I have been quite reasonable about this. We have put forward our best calculation for the next fiscal year which begins just six months from now. It is a very different matter to be called upon to carry the projection farther into the future. I do not profess to have the gift of prophecy. I think we have gone as far as it is reasonable to expect us to go in connection with this forecast.

Mr. Chevrier: I suppose we shall have to take that for an answer, but I would have thought that if the minister could project it for one year he could project it for the remaining four years as well. I come back to the preamble to my question having to do with the province of Ontario, and I ask the minister whether it is a fact that under this new arrangement the province of Ontario will receive in the first year $18 million more under this agreement than under the former agreement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This table indicates that according to our best estimate at the present time the province of Ontario will receive $314,480,000 in the fiscal year 1962-63 under the new legislation, whereas under the present legislation it would receive $296,170,000, that is to say if the present scheme were carried forward into the fiscal year 1962-63. It should be borne in mind that this is a calculation of what will accrue to the provincial government if they occupy the tax fields to the extent to which the federal government withdraws from them or allows an abatement.

Mr. Chevrier: If this table were projected over the full term of the new agreement, is it a fact that the province of Ontario would receive $180 million over the whole five year term as opposed to the province of Quebec receiving $2½ million?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I cannot say that. No one can answer that question. It is completely hypothetical. The hon. member is making guesses at figures and asking me to say whether they are right or wrong. I have already said that I do not profess to have the gift of prophecy, and the answer to any such speculation will depend entirely upon conditions. It will depend upon the extent of income, both personal and corporate; it will depend on other factors related to growth and yield. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have gone as far as I can, and I think I would be rendering the committee no service by attempting to speculate.

Mr. Chevrier: Like the song in "Oklahoma".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Which one?

Mr. Chevrier: "I've gone about as far as I can go".

Mr. Pickersgill: Here is the minister asking us to agree to a bill that covers a five year period, not one year. If he were asking us to make arrangements for the next year only, then his answer would be quite reasonable. He is asking us to substitute for the existing law, which we on this side of the house say in so far as equalization goes is better than what he is suggesting, something which he will not compare with the old law. He will not tell us how the two compare over the whole five year period according to the best computation.

Now he creates a smokescreen by talking about being unable to estimate the gross national product and various other factors. We know that he cannot be certain about these things, but he can use the same factors in both projections and they will then both be equally accurate or inaccurate and the gap between them, if there is a gap, will be on the same basis. That is all we are asking. He did it in one case. I know, and the minister knows I know, it was done for the whole five years, because this minister would not have been so irresponsible as to introduce this bill if he had not had a projection for the whole five years. He seems to regard it as a strategic secret that should not be revealed to the representatives of the people who are asked to vote this money; that is what he is saying.

I say to the minister that if at some stage the province of Quebec—and this applies equally to Manitoba and Saskatchewan—is to get any advantage under the new formula, there must be a point when that happens. It does not happen in the first year. In the first year Quebec is worse off under the new formula and is therefore allowed to continue under the old formula. Is the reason for the minister's reticence the fact that Quebec will never get any additional benefit and therefore will be under the old formula for the whole five years? Is that why this is being kept a secret? I ask the minister that question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member, if he knows as much as he claims, will know the answer to that question. It is a question of growth. If the growth is sufficient, Quebec will reap benefits in increased yields from the growth. The hon. member has no right, Mr. Chairman, to start imputing dark motives for the position I have taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: Give us the information, then.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not a matter of information. Hon. members opposite are asking me to engage in a high degree of speculation in regard to the future. I have already said I would not be rendering a service to the committee by engaging in that kind of speculation. Or course we have made forecasts. We have made all kinds of them, depending on all the factors that are involved in any particular year. The year 1962-63 was given to the provincial conference in this form.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was asked for though.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Table 3 was given to the conference. Yes; although the proceedings are secret, the hon. member is aware that a request was made for that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I know that premiers are intelligent men and of course they would ask for it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not the premiers; it was one premier who asked for that, and evidently the hon. member has been having some discussions with the one premier who asked for that projection. I give the hon. member the same answer I gave to the premier who asked for this, and that is that it would involve entering into the realm of speculation. The answer depends upon hypothetical factors, and I do not think it would add to the knowledge of anyone, Mr. Chairman, to attempt to engage in that kind of speculation. The provincial premiers make their own calculations. They were in a position to assess what they considered to be the merits or demerits of the proposal, and they arrived at their own conclusions and based their arguments on those conclusions.

The hon. member knows, I think, that he already has adequate information to draw enough conclusions to enable him to take his position on this matter. It is interesting to me to hear him now requesting information when yesterday he denounced the bill and announced his intention of voting against it. Now he says he needs some more information but, presumably, no matter what this information might be it is not going to affect his attitude toward the bill. I do not question the right of any hon. member to obtain information. I know when I was in opposition I did not desist from efforts to obtain information that was available and was necessary to a proper understanding of the provisions of any bill, whether or not I favoured the bill. I do not question the right of any hon. member to ask for whatever information may be available.

It is one thing, Mr. Chairman, to ask for information and quite another thing to invite a minister to indulge in speculation. I must say that I shrink from engaging in speculative or hypothetical pursuits.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course in 1955-56, when the new scheme was proposed for tax equalization, these projections were given over the whole period and a comparison was made between the new scheme and the old so the premiers would be given the best information that could possibly be given. The minister dared, a few years ago, to refer to Mr. C. D. Howe as arrogant. After seeing the attitude the minister has taken with this committee this afternoon I say there has never been such an example of arrogance. He says, we were so arrogant we told the premiers they had no right to know. We know they told the premiers that. We know they told them, you take it or else; but you do not even know what you are taking. You are not allowed to know.

However, we are parliament and the minister is the servant of this house, or he is supposed to be. This seems to be the idea that is most difficult to get through his head. This committee is entitled, especially in financial matters, to know the best projections on which we are asked to vote money. This is what we are being asked to do here, to vote money, and we are entitled to know to whom it is going and in what proportions.

It is obvious that in so far as Manitoba, Quebec and Saskatchewan are concerned, there is going to be no change in 1962-63. If, as the Prime Minister claimed yesterday, this is a more generous provision for all the provinces than the other, which I do not believe, there must be some point between now and the end of the five year period when Quebec will do better under the new formula than it will do under the existing formula. Surely it is reasonable to be told when, in the opinion of the government, that point will be reached, and approximately how much better off Quebec will be.

The minister says calculations have been made. Certainly calculations have been made. It should not really be necessary for us in parliament—and nobody should know this better than the minister—to have to engage people to make these calculations. They should be equally available to both sides of the house once the government has made up its mind. We are not asking the government to give us any of the information they used in these various projections for schemes they did not employ. We are only asking the minister to continue table 3 on page 7927 of Hansard for the whole period, and to make the assumptions that are made for the whole period. We know it will be hypothetical but it will give us the best possible information, as the government had, on which to base a decision.

I do feel the hon. member for Laurier is probably right. I think it is probably true that perhaps in the last year, as the hon. member suggested, Quebec might get a little something out of the new arrangement. As for Manitoba, I am not sure that they will ever get anything out of it; and I think it is pretty certain that Saskatchewan will not. In no circumstances that we can readily envisage would Saskatchewan do as well under the new formula in the next five years at is does under the existing formula. So Saskatchewan is apparently to be kept screwed down with the existing formula even if there are improvements for others. That is the new concept of equalization.

The minister suggested that the premiers thought this was a better scheme. I think I ought to read what the premier of Manitoba said about it, and I would like to put this on record from the premier's letter to the Prime Minister dated August 23 last. It is already in the appendix to Hansard of September 22, 1961. Mr. Roblin said this, and I am not reading the whole letter but the parts that relate to equalization:

> It must be acknowledged that there are aspects of your announcement which represent a decided improvement over the federal-provincial agreement of 1957, and indeed it is estimated that Manitoba will likely benefit financially at least to some extent—

I stress those words "at least to some extent". The letter continues:

> —during the course of the new arrangements even after the amendments of 1958 are taken into account. Nevertheless, I must again draw your attention to the fact that Manitoba is not to receive under the new proposals that proportion of the shared tax fields for which we believe we have made a convincing and logical case.

That was the case that the Prime Minister said yesterday was not logical. The letter continues:

> Further, I must refer particularly to that portion of the equalization formula based on Canadian average yields. Manitoba reaffirms—

I think here the premier is speaking for all Manitobans regardless of party, because this is the Liberal position, not the Tory position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it is not the Liberal position.

Mr. Pickersgill: The letter continues:

> Manitoba reaffirms its proposal to equalize to the highest Canadian province—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not the Liberal position.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the Liberal position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Since when?

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been the Liberal position since the convention of 1958. It was not the position taken by the St. Laurent government in 1956, and it was not what was promised by the present Prime Minister in 1960; but it has been the position of the Liberal party, which has changed its position on certain matters just as hon. gentlemen opposite have changed theirs. But we think we have changed for the better, whereas hon. gentlemen opposite have palpably, in this bill, changed for the worse. I am just drawing attention to the fact that Mr. Roblin has embraced in toto the Liberal position, because he would not dare to take any other course in Manitoba. He says:

> Manitoba reaffirms its proposal to equalize to the highest Canadian province and we shall continue to work for its implementation.

I hope Mr. Roblin will get behind the party in this house that is working to that end and not working to thwart it. His letter continues:

> This we regard as more in keeping with the basic principles—

He does not say "formulae"; he says "principles", the minister will note. He continues:

> —on which these arrangements have been founded.
> Under present circumstances, however—

I think this is pretty significant of the new harmony and the new spirit of good will, cooperation and agreement which is said to exist. Hon. members will remember that in 1957 the provinces were not going to be coerced into doing anything; nothing was going to be forced on them; they were going to agree. Mr. Roblin's letter continues:

> Under present circumstances, however, there is no alternative but to take the steps necessary to implement the most advantageous of the options open to us under Bill C-122—

In other words, "We have to take it; we dare not leave it". There is just one other point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, and it is this.

An hon. Member: You haven't made one yet.

Mr. Pickersgill: A good deal was made of the views of the premier of Newfoundland, and the minister just said that only one of the premiers had said anything about the tax jungle. I have in my hand a clipping from the St. John's daily News of September 14 this year. The article is entitled "No Change With Provincial Income Taxes" and it reads:

> Corner Brook. Premier Smallwood says there will be no change in the scale or method of corporate and income taxation when it becomes a provincial responsibility January 1 next year.
> Ottawa will continue to collect taxes imposed by the province, the premier said in an interview Tuesday night.
> Premier Smallwood said the federal government's decision to abolish the tax rental agreement with the provinces "sets us back in the tax jungle".
> He preferred the present tax rental system under which Ottawa imposes and collects income and corporation taxes and, under an agreed formula, shares the proceeds with the provinces.

I suggest that the position taken by Premier Smallwood was taken by almost all the other premiers who had tax rental agreements. The Prime Minister and the minister have talked about restoring constitutional rights. There were no constitutional rights to restore; the constitutional rights were there. What they are doing is terminating a fruitful field of federal-provincial co-operation; and they are terminating it unilaterally.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are terminating it unilaterally and forcing on several of the provinces a system which they do not want. That is what this restoration of constitutional rights really means.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we are engaged in a repetition of things that have been said again and again. Evidently I have not succeeded in changing the mind of the hon. member; nor has he by his repeated arguments, I must tell him, made very much impression on me. I think I may best answer some of his flights into the realm of fancy in his last intervention by reading this Canadian Press dispatch. I will leave one name blank while I am reading it and I will give the name when I have finished reading the extract.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't be so dramatic.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The article reads:

> The federal government's tax sharing offer to the provinces stands today as take it or leave it.
> Premiers at Friday's one day federal-provincial conference were hit bluntly with this information after they had spent much of the day outlining a miscellany of proposed changes favourable to the province from the federal offer.
> Finance Minister—
> —blank:
> —said flatly that the central government's plan goes "as far as we can go at this time" in money terms.
> His statement, given at a closed meeting and made public later, means the premiers are going away empty handed from a conference from which several had hoped to get a better split on taxes with the central government.

The date of that Canadian Press dispatch is March 10, 1956.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the name is Harris.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The finance minister concerned was Mr. Harris.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the minister in replying to my question in which I sought to obtain from him a hypothetical illustration as contained in table 3 projected from 1962-63 to the end of the term in 1966, stated that it was difficult to do that for many reasons, one of which was growth, which he said was impossible to predict and prophesy. The minister said it was impossible to predict what the growth would be in the province of Quebec, and in other provinces for that matter.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister this fact. If there is any growth it will apply to both formulae, the present one and the new one as well. Therefore growth certainly cannot prevent, by any stretch of imagination, a comparison between the two. I make that point because I do not think, the minister's argument was a valid one, having regard to what I have just said.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there are a good many questions on clause 2. A few minutes ago the minister said something and I want to be absolutely sure about this. I raise this matter under the definitions section because, to be quite frank about it, I have not had time to reread the definition since we started our proceedings today. I would like the minister to tell us whether I was right in my assumption that the provincial governments may impose any rate of taxation, either corporate or personal, that they choose so long as all the rest of the scheme is exactly the same as the federal scheme.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It depends on what the hon. member means by the word "scheme". I have already said this afternoon that a province may set its own rate. It is a matter entirely for decision by the provincial authority what the rate of taxation should be in respect to both personal and corporate income. But the definition of income must be the same as it is in the federal legislation if the federal government is to be asked to collect these taxes on behalf of the province.

Mr. Pickersgill: Must the exemptions be the same?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. You must arrive at the same taxable income. That assumes the identity of the definition, including exemptions.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I am really asking is this. If a province is to avail itself of this offer, their law must be identical with that of the federal government except as to rates?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is broadly correct.

Mr. Benidickson: What freedom is there in that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province is not obliged to ask the federal government to collect taxes on its behalf. It is presently within the power of any province to decide to collect its own taxes, and one province has informed us that it is its intention to do so. It rests within the power of the provinces to vary the rates, vary the exemptions, change the definition of income or anything else in that field. We only say that if they wish the federal government to collect the taxes we can only operate when we are working on the same basis as to the taxable income.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not disagree with that at all. I think the minister is right. It would not be feasible to collect it if you had two different schemes; and besides, there would be no advantage to the taxpayers anyway because they would have to make separate calculations.

I should like to pursue further the question asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. It has always been true, of course, that any province had the right to impose any taxes it liked. That right has never ceased to exist at any time since confederation. I agree that there was a disability on the provinces which did so between 1947 and 1957, but there has been no disability on any province since 1957, as the minister well knows, and the province of Quebec, which has been collecting taxes of its own kind in its own way, has been getting equalization on exactly the same principle as any other province. So there is nothing new here as far as freedom is concerned. The only thing is that under the existing law a provincial government has the freedom, if it wishes, to make a tax rental agreement. That is a freedom which is now being taken away. Nothing whatever has been added, but something has been taken away. That is all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have been over this time and time again. The hon. gentleman makes these categorical statements which just do not gibe with a proper interpretation of the measure. He can go on reiterating these statements of his if he likes, but that does not bring us into agreement as to whether they are correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I put one simple question to the minister. Is there anything whatsoever which the government of Quebec can do now in the way of levying income tax that it could not do under the existing law?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With regard to levying, once the province of Quebec decided not to rent tax fields the positions are similar, with this exception. Previously the province of Quebec had no opportunity of having its taxes collected gratis by the federal government. Now it has that opportunity if it chooses to use it. However, I think the government of that province prefers to collect its own taxes.

Mr. Benidickson: I see that in subclause (c) of clause 2 provision is made for the acceptance of a practice which has been developed by the dominion bureau of statistics. I assume that this was presented to the provinces and they agreed to it. Is that correct? Then again, with respect to subclause (f), if we are allowing the provinces full freedom in this matter it should be borne in mind that from time to time there may be negotiations with other countries with respect to tax claims. To what extent has this been discussed with the provinces at the conferences?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Both these matters were brought before the representatives of the provinces at the conference. The hon. member asked me if the provinces were agreed in relation to the natural resource revenue. I would say that some provinces expressed their approval while others prefered not to see natural resource revenue taken into the equalization formula. It very much depends where the benefit lies in a particular case. The inclusion of natural resource revenue in the formula benefits some provinces, and naturally, they would welcome it. To the extent that some provinces would not benefit, it would not be natural to expect them to enthuse over it. With regard to succession duty, there was very little discussion on the part of the provinces of this particular proposal.

Mr. Benidickson: I see that 2(1)(c) defines what natural resource revenues are to be. Coming back to my first point, would the minister tell us which provinces will actually receive less as a result of the inclusion of this provision in the agreement? I think, of course, of Alberta and perhaps British Columbia. Which other provinces actually lose in comparison with the old agreement as a result of this definition? I want to know how many members of parliament from those provinces will vote for this amendment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As the hon. member is aware, Alberta and British Columbia lose something under the new equalization formula. The province of Saskatchewan opposes it because, as the hon. member is aware, that province has substantial resource revenues.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was this not also opposed by the government of New Brunswick?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I believe so. I do not recall it personally.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the correspondence which has been tabled shows that it did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought the hon. member was asking about the positions taken at the conference.

Mr. Benidickson: I wonder whether all the members from the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta are happy about approving this particular clause of the agreement, which seems to have a very severe and adverse effect upon the revenues of those provinces, and perhaps those of New Brunswick, too.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is wrong, I think, in saying it has a severe effect on those provinces. I do not think the effect could be said to be severe having regard to the guarantees which are given to all the provinces. Alberta and British Columbia are both provinces where the yields from this source are higher than the national average. But, of course, they are protected by the guarantee that they will receive in any year not less than they receive in the fiscal year 1961-62.

The hon. member's reference to the position of New Brunswick is not accurate, because although that province now appears to be objecting to the inclusion of resource revenues my clear recollection is that New Brunswick does derive benefits under the new formula from the inclusion of resource revenues.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Payments to provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, since the minister refuses to give the projection over a five year period, for which we have asked on several occasions, I should like permission to table a hypothetical illustration of provincial receipts for the period 1962-63 to 1966-67 under the new system and under the present system. This table shows the difference between the two systems in relation to the 16-9-50 formula and the 20-9-50 formula.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

The Deputy Chairman: I should advise the hon. member for Laurier that nothing can be tabled while we are in committee. He might wish to have this table included in Hansard as part of his speech at the point at which he has offered the table to the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: That would be quite satisfactory.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the printing of this table in Hansard at this point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think we must know a great deal more about the nature of the table before it is placed on the record. The hon. member has not given the sources or the terms of the projection. We have had a great deal of discussion this afternoon about the matter of projection. The statement was confidently made this afternoon, I think by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or if not by him by the hon. member for Laurier, that in 1956 Mr. Harris, the then minister of finance, placed on the record a projection, year by year, over the five year period 1957-62. That assertion was made.

I thought there was something in that statement that did not ring true. I took an active part in the debate on the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act in the summer of 1956, and I had no recollection of Mr. Harris having given any such projection. I have been making inquiries since, and I am told that he did not place on record any such projection. I am told further that he was invited to do so and said that he could do it for only one year. In other words, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Harris at that time followed the course of giving the house a projection for the first year of the five year period according to the best calculation that the Department of Finance could make at that date, and we have done the same thing now.

I say that anything beyond that is hypothetical and speculative, and with great respect I think we should not be asked to place such information on the record. Certainly if the hon. member asks for consent to put it on the record without reading it we must be told a great deal more about the sources of the table he is dealing with and the basis of his projection, because this will involve a number of assumptions and we should be told about those; otherwise the figures he is proposing to present to the committee have no validity whatever.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, there would be no request such as I have made to place these figures on Hansard if the minister had shown any co-operation in projecting the table appearing at page 7927. The minister inquires about the source of the information. This information has been prepared at my request by those who assist the Leader of the Opposition and those who sit with us on this side of the house.

Mr. Balcer: Professor Lamontagne.

Mr. Chevrier: These are figures which are comparable to the figures tabled by the minister. I believe there is sufficient authority to allow me to request permission to place this table on Hansard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously if the hon. member takes personal responsibility for the calculation he would be entitled to read this table into the record and there is no point in delaying the committee in that respect. But I think the hon. member should tell the committee the assumptions upon which this table has been constructed. This is the whole basis, after all, going to the root of the validity of any such calculation.

Mr. Chevrier: The assumptions are all set out in this table. The table sets out in detail what each province receives under the 16-9-50 formula and under the 20-9-50 formula, together with the totals.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What is the assumption with regard to growth factors?

Mr. Chevrier: The assumption in regard to growth factors is the same as that contained in table No. 3.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does that mean that the hon. gentleman has taken 5 per cent all the way through the period?

Mr. Chevrier: In so far as the new system is concerned it deals with equalization on the national average, $35 million of grants for the Atlantic provinces, and the two special guarantees. So far as the old or present system is concerned it deals with equalization on the basis of the top two provinces and $25 million for the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That does not answer my question at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What about the growth factor?

Mr. Chevrier: The growth factor is the same as that contained in table No. 3.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But has it been continued through to arrive at the calculation for the five year period? Was it taken as a flat rate or was it pyramided?

Mr. Chevrier: The minister asked me if I would assume responsibility for this table, and I have said I would. I have been cross-examined at some length on the nature of this table. This is unusual, either in committee or in the house.

An hon. Member: Indeed it is.

Mr. Chevrier: If there is any objection to having it tabled I shall read the whole thing.

Mr. Churchill: There certainly is objection.

Mr. Chevrier: However, in order to save time and at the minister's request I do not propose to read the table. I say this is an unusual procedure, because it is the practice to accept material of this kind, particularly if the hon. member who seeks permission to place it on Hansard takes responsibility for it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says he is taking responsibility for it. He said there is no point in taking the time of the committee to read it and that it should be put on the record without being read. If the hon. member accepts responsibility for this document he ought to be able to offer the committee some illumination as to the basis of this table. I have asked for some information. My question refers to an obvious matter. It goes to the whole root of the projection. I have not received an answer to my question. I will not object to the hon. member putting the table on the record, but I do point out that we have not been given information about this table which would enable us to determine its validity, and in the meantime we can accept it only as a speculative exercise on the part of whoever prepared it.

Mr. Chevrier: Notwithstanding what the minister has said may I point out that when he put his tables on Hansard we did not ask him all these questions.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is very different.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, that information is given in the headings of my tables.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I now beg leave to table this hypothetical illustration of provincial revenues over the projected period 1962-63 to 1966-67.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member for Laurier the unanimous consent of the committee to have this table printed as part of his speech at this point in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speakman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member has sufficient experience in this chamber to know he must either identify the source or assume responsibility.

Mr. Robichaud: He did both. Where were you?

Mr. Speakman: He referred to an anonymous source.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member has been asleep. I indicated the source of the figures and said that I accepted responsibility for them which is, I think, all I am required to do under the rules.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: The committee refuses to give unanimous consent, which is neither courteous nor the usual procedure. Under the circumstances I propose to now place on Hansard what has been compiled in this statement.

The table reads as follows:

Hypothetical illustration of provincial receipts for 1962-63 and 1966-67 under the new system and under the present system with the new rates.

[1] With equalization on the national average, $35 million in grants for the Atlantic provinces and the two special guarantees.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All I have to say is that these figures are utterly weird. As I followed the hon. member in his reading I will have to take issue with at least half of them. He is trying to show somehow or other, by what weird reasoning no one dares say, that under the new formula proposed in this bill at some stage the provinces in the aggregate would receive less than they are receiving at the present time. Mr. Chairman, that is an impossibility.

Mr. Chevrier: If it is an impossibility why did the minister not allow the table to be put on Hansard in the first instance and then reply to it in due course? In other words, the minister forced me to read it; whereas if it appeared side by side with the other table it would be possible to compare the two and then we would understand his argument. As it is now we are not able to do that because I was not able to get unanimous consent. I was not allowed to put the tables side by side, the one which has been prepared by the minister's officials and this one for which I said I would take responsibility.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: No. Clause 3 has the heading "Payments to Provinces". Yesterday we received some figures from the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance refers to weird figures. Well, let us look at page 9004 of Hansard, where the Prime Minister suggests that conditional grants to the provinces had increased by $440 million. It was pointed out yesterday that this was simply a propaganda figure because if one looks at the figures which the minister tabled, and which I do not think he will call weird, and to which he has referred several times—they appear at page 7915 of Hansard of July 11—one will realize, after this boasting by the Prime Minister yesterday, that the biggest item in the increase has to do with hospital insurance. Indeed it refers to $274 million. When he was checked yesterday the Prime Minister confessed that that was so, and at page 9005 of Hansard he said:

> One hon. gentleman mentioned hospital insurance. Yes, it is true that the Liberals brought it in but we pay for it.

Well, I suppose the present government is taking credit for paying old age pensions, unemployment insurance and some of the other things that were introduced by its predecessors. I have heard so many members of the present government say they brought in hospital insurance that I was very glad to have these concrete words from the Prime Minister yesterday:

> Yes, it is true that the Liberals brought it in.

This involves $274 million out of $406 million in additional grants relating 1957-58 to 1961-62. While the Prime Minister did not say so in his remarks yesterday, I know that he was referring to the table provided by the Minister of Finance which is found on page 7915 of Hansard.

In addition, with respect to conditional grants one will find substantially increased expenditures by the present government for such items as winter works and welfare. If one analyses both these categories and some others, one will find that these increases are directly attributable to the fact that under this government our economy has gone down and there has been unemployment with the result that it was certainly necessary to rescue the municipalities and the provinces through measures of this kind.

I admit quite freely that there is also another item of some consequence, the increase in vocational training grants to the provinces. I think this perhaps involves a new program but it again was stimulated by the fact that under the present regime the economy of Canada has fallen behind. However desirable the need because of economic circumstances, this provision is accountable for some $23 million of the increase in the table. When one looks at these things he realizes that the use of these figures yesterday had a certain propaganda element in it that is not worthy of very much consideration.

We are considering clause 3, payments to the provinces, and if we refer to the same table on page 7915 we find that in connection with unconditional grants there was again a grandiose utilization by the Prime Minister of a sum involving many millions of dollars in comparing the increase from one year to another. But I find that the big item in that bragging had to do with tax abatements and tax rentals and more particularly had reference to the so-called equalization. The sum of $190 million refers to equalization.

We have had a debate about equalization and I think members of the committee, so far as equalization is concerned, will find proof of the lack of substance in the new agreement in the fact that the government cannot point to anything equivalent for the next five years. The sum of $190 million for equalization was, of course, equalization provided by the former administration. At that time the minister of finance was the Hon. Mr. Harris and I had the honour of being with him at the federal-provincial conferences leading up to that agreement. The result is that, so far as unconditional grants are concerned, the government is prepared to boast that $190 million more than in 1957-58 has been provided to the provinces, but the heading is equalization. Under the new bill, what have we got that is equivalent to $190 million in equalization?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the intrinsic merit of the hon. gentleman's demagogic intervention can be judged by the accuracy of his references to hospital insurance. It is quite true that a measure for hospital insurance in Canada was introduced by the former government, but that measure had a typical joker in it, that no such legislation should come into effect and no contributions should be available to any province under it until a majority of the provinces representing a majority of the population set up plans in conformity with its terms. It will be remembered that after the change of government this joker was removed by parliament at the invitation of the new government and then there was an opportunity for the plan to proceed province by province. The old government left a not too creditable record in that regard.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Tax equalization payments.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is one question I should like to put on clause 4. I should like to ask the minister if it is the present expectation of the government—in using the word "expectation" I am not asking for anything more than that—that Quebec or Manitoba or Saskatchewan at any time during the next five years will move from the guaranteed equalization, which they will be under in the first year according to his projection, to the basic equalization?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Again, Mr. Chairman, that would invite me to engage in prophecy and I do not think I would be serving the house by attempting to do that.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister, in other words, is saying that he is not at all sure that at any time in the five years any of these three provinces will have any financial advantage whatsoever under the new legislation compared with the old.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, that is obviously not what I said.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps that is not what the minister has said but he has given parliament a table which indicates his forecast for one year. We would prefer a projection for a longer period, but the hypothetical conditions involved in the table he has given us include, of course, a 5 per cent growth in income. I have indicated that while the present government has been in office this country vis-à-vis most other countries of the world has fallen behind and that must be contrasted with a growth of perhaps 20 per cent in the years prior to the election of the present government. The minister has chosen to assume a hypothetical growth of 5 per cent and to give us certain figures. Based on those figures it would appear to be clear that Quebec will stand still, Manitoba will stand still and Saskatchewan will stand still. We also know that as a result of the ingenuity of the minister and the government they have somehow contrived to make worse in a relative way the position of Alberta, British Columbia and New Brunswick with respect to tax-sharing agreements. The minister says that he declines to make any further speculations as to what the provinces will get out of the new five year agreement. However, he also denies that certain provinces will not improve and will stand still as I have suggested. I take it that they stand still simply by reason of the fact that they finally fought for a stabilization clause in the new five year agreement under which they would not get any less than had been provided under the agreement which they negotiated with the previous government. Perhaps that is why table 3 on page 7927 of Hansard gives dollar for dollar figures with respect to income for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and some of the other provinces for the first year of the new five year agreement. The income they receive will be the same as the income they received during the last year of the old formula which they negotiated with the previous government in 1956.

The new formula includes a growth of 5 per cent per annum. How many people in the province affected will think that this represents any progress, having regard to the various extravagant proposals that were made by the present minister when he looked at these matters when the last five year agreement came up for debate in 1956 and, in particular, when so many of the people in these provinces remember what the Prime Minister said in the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958. In other words, this represents a standstill for those provinces. The figures seem to indicate that. Am I right in assuming that the fact the dollar figures are identical is due to the stabilization clause in the agreement? In other words, there is a floor but apparently the floor is going to be the best that those people in those provinces I have mentioned are likely to get in this next agreement, as opposed to the fact that in the agreement negotiated in 1956 when Mr. Harris was minister of finance, there was an over-all increase of many millions of dollars in the amount the provinces received, and in no case did a province fail to go forward.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is getting the terms mixed up. He has been talking about stabilization, and I think he means the guarantee. As a result of the operation of the guarantee feature in the new formula, the provinces he has mentioned, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, will not fall below what they would have received under the present formula. These are all provinces with incomes below the national average and therefore they have the benefit of both features of the guarantee. In other words, they are assured not only that their receipts in any future fiscal year will not fall below those in the present fiscal year, but they are also assured that they will not receive less than they would have received had the present formula been carried on into the future throughout the five year period.

Then, by way of comparison, if the hon. member will look at table 3 on page 7927 of Hansard, he will see that in the case of Quebec, had it not been for the change, next year under Mr. Harris' formula Quebec would have received $217 million whereas under the proposed formula they will receive $241 million. The province of Manitoba under Mr. Harris' formula would receive next year $38 million, and under the formula proposed by the present government will receive $42 million. The province of Saskatchewan, under Mr. Harris' formula would receive next year $38 million and under the formula proposed by the government in this bill will receive $42.5 million.

The hon. gentleman talks about increased benefits, but he is overlooking the fact that the benefit to the provinces is not static. It is a substantial benefit now and it increases year by year over the five year period as the federal government progressively withdraws from the personal income tax field in favour of the provinces.

On clause 6—Tax collection agreements.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is an amendment to clause 6 to which I referred two days ago by which subclause 3 would be added. I would ask my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs to move this amendment. I sent copies of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, to hon. members opposite when I referred to this matter on September 26 as reported at page 8941 of Hansard, and I set forth the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. Churchill: I move:

(3) Where the law of a province that imposes a tax on income as described in subsection (1) contains provisions requiring every person making a payment of a specified kind to another person to deduct or withhold therefrom an amount and to remit that amount on account of such tax, effect may be given to those provisions, in accordance with the regulations, in relation to persons to whom such payments are made out of the consolidated revenue fund or by an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall this bill be read a third time; now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Chevrier: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE WITH REGARD TO PRIVATE BILL

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I wonder if at this stage the house would give consent to dealing with the private bill which we mentioned this morning, Bill No. S-30, an act to incorporate the Equitable General Insurance Company?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Does the house give unanimous consent to proceeding now with the private bill which was the subject of discussion earlier today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EQUITABLE GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Robert Lafreniere (Quebec-Montmorency) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. S-30, to incorporate the Equitable General Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, with respect to this bill which was read for the second time in this house yesterday, I must say, first of all, that we, on this side of the house, readily agree that the standing orders be set aside in order that this bill may be passed today.

I understand the upper house has considered this bill in its three stages and has stated its approval. So that the adoption of this bill be not delayed, I would just ask the hon. member if he could tell us whether Mr. MacGregor, who is the expert in this field, has declared himself satisfied at the other place, not only with the bill in its present form but also with the statement of assets of the company, as far as both federal and provincial statutes are concerned, because I understand that in bills of this nature, it is necessary, under federal legislation, for the company to declare a certain amount of assets.

Mr. Lafreniere: Mr. Chairman, in order to relieve the moral responsibility of the members of this house, I must say that the wording and the provisions of this bill have been approved by the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. Chevrier: I simply wanted to ask the hon. member whether the superintendent had declared himself satisfied with the federal requirements with regard to this bill.

Mr. Lafreniere: He did, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, our procedure in this particular case is somewhat unusual. However, I wish to express on behalf of this group our complete confidence in the superintendent of insurance, Mr. MacGregor. This group has been advised that this bill in all respects has the endorsement of Mr. MacGregor. I wish to take this opportunity to say that, while we have tens of thousands of federal civil servants, very few of them have the confidence of the hon. members of this house to the extent that Mr. MacGregor has. It is on the basis of the assurance that we have received that Mr. MacGregor wholeheartedly approves of this bill that we are willing to agree to these unusual proceedings and allow the bill to pass.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

111. Departmental administration, $1,911,211.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think we all thought the other day that the Minister of Finance would introduce his estimates by making a statement, particularly with respect to his representations on behalf of this country at two very important international assemblies. I of course refer to the conference at Accra and the conference of the international monetary fund at Vienna. Is it the intention of the minister to introduce his estimates with a statement? If it is, I know the committee will give him the opportunity to speak prior to any other hon. member of the committee. Does the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance have anything to say in this connection?

Supply—Finance

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance will be back in his seat in just a moment.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, on this first item in the estimates of the Department of Finance I am very glad to have an opportunity to make a statement to the committee, particularly in relation to the recent meeting of the commonwealth economic consultative council at Accra. I say I particularly welcome this opportunity because of the extent of the error and confusion which has been created by reports and editorial comments that I have observed since the conference. It seems to me that never in my experience in public life have I seen so much inaccuracy and misunderstanding in regard to any conference or positions taken at it or the results of the conference.

What we have been witnessing in Canada, and indeed elsewhere, in the past fortnight is something of a welter of speculation, very inaccurate speculation, on the part of persons who obviously were not present at the conference, for it was a conference that was held behind closed doors. A great deal of misinformation has been spread about. I welcome, therefore, an opportunity of correcting in so far as I can the gross inaccuracies which have been evident in this connection. The latest one to come to my knowledge was uttered on "Preview Commentary" yesterday morning when the spokesman took it upon himself to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I at the Accra conference took what he called "an anti-British line". I do not like to use harsh terms but I have to call a statement of that kind by its proper name. I have to say that that statement is a blatant lie. It is a downright falsehood. Why people should make irresponsible statements of that kind I shall never be able to understand.

I think that as far as all hon. members of this house are concerned it is unnecessary for me to make any such statement as this, but in view of that kind of misstatement let me make it very clear that when the time comes when Canadian ministers at a conference of that kind, or at any conference, take an anti-British line, I will not be a minister. I am sure the delegates attending that conference on behalf of the other commonwealth countries would have been utterly amazed if they had heard such a misstatement.

The commonwealth economic consultative council was established pursuant to a decision taken at the Montreal trade and economic conference of 1958. Clause 18 of the report of that conference reads as follows:

> Commonwealth consultation and co-operation in economic matters are of primary importance in achieving our objectives in the economic field. We are agreed that the present machinery for consultation is working well; it is flexible and informal and well fitted to the family character of the commonwealth relationship. We decided that the existing arrangements should be co-ordinated under the name of a commonwealth economic consultative council. We welcomed an offer by the United Kingdom government to provide a commonwealth house to be available for the constituent bodies of the council and for other commonwealth meetings.

The commonwealth economic consultative council has now held three annual meetings. Those of 1959 and 1960 were held in London, and this year's meeting was held in Accra. It was the first time that a commonwealth meeting at government level has been held in Africa, and the significance of Africa as a continent on the world's stage as well as the significance to the commonwealth of the African countries of the commonwealth was recognized in the acceptance of the invitation of the government of Ghana to hold the convention in Accra.

Numerous matters were discussed at the conference. The meeting itself lasted three days, and the days were fully occupied by discussion. This conference was attended for the first time by Nigeria, Sierra Leone, and Cyprus in self governing capacities. I shall not delay the committee by reviewing the other subjects discussed, in view of the absorbing interest which has been attracted to one subject in particular. However, I have put this matter in its setting in order to show that this was one of a number of subjects which were discussed. I refer in particular to the question of the approach of the United Kingdom to the European economic community with a view to negotiating possible terms for joining that community.

Let me make it clear at the outset that the decision in this matter is, and always has been, recognized by all the commonwealth countries as one for the government of the United Kingdom. There can be no question about that. There never has been any question about that. In the communique which was issued here in Ottawa on July 14 following a meeting of Canadian ministers with Mr. Duncan Sandys representing the government of the United Kingdom to discuss this subject, the following sentence appears:

> The Canadian ministers recognized that this is a matter for decision by the British government.

That continues to be the position. No one has ever questioned that. Why, then, has this subject become a matter of commonwealth consideration? Well, this is a subject of great concern to the countries of the commonwealth and, broadly speaking, for two very good reasons. First of all, if the United Kingdom accedes to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome, which is the treaty which has brought the community into being and which keeps the six in community relationship, there would be changed political relationship involving the United Kingdom. In the second place, there would be changes in the terms of trade between the commonwealth countries and the United Kingdom.

My next observation is that this discussion came about because an item had been placed on the agenda involving consideration of this subject. Here is the item which appeared on the agreed agenda. It reads: "European Economic Problems". This agenda was drafted, at least in part, by the United Kingdom. The ministers representing the United Kingdom at the conference expected a full discussion of the matter and were well aware of the importance attached to it by the commonwealth countries assembled there. At the meeting of heads of delegations prior to the opening of the conference it was agreed that, having regard to the importance of this subject, one complete day should be set aside for it. The second day, by agreement, was therefore set aside. The discussion occupied the whole day and was concluded at the end of the day.

A communique was issued at the conclusion of the conference, and hon. members have had an opportunity of perusing that communique. Therefore, when the Leader of the Opposition intimated to the house, as recorded at page 8407 of Hansard, that Canadian ministers at that conference were squealing before they were hurt, he completely overlooked the fact that this item was placed on an agreed agenda and that the United Kingdom ministers came to Accra expecting a full discussion of the subject.

It is now said in some quarters that the decision recorded at that conference and set down in the communique was what is called "a Canadian decision". It was said here in this house two days ago by the hon. member for Laurier that Canada led "a ganging up on the United Kingdom." There is no shred of truth whatsoever in those charges—not the slightest. They are based upon a complete distortion of the facts. Here is the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate adding to that by a statement he made in Toronto last evening. I have in my hand the Ottawa Journal of this afternoon which contains a Canadian Press dispatch. The Journal has surmounted it with a headline reading, "Pickersgill Charges Tories Anti-British". The opening paragraph reads:

> Toronto (CP)—Liberal member of parliament J. W. Pickersgill accused the Conservative government last night of being "consistently anti-British"—

Those charges of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate are false in all particulars. I hope I have made myself quite plain. He has been playing his old game of cheap politics.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister does that pretty well.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the communique reveals very completely the unanimity that was reached at this conference. It is a report of agreement on the part of the commonwealth countries. Indeed, a quite extraordinary unanimity was achieved at the conference of the views of the commonwealth countries in relation to this issue. A great injustice is done to the other commonwealth countries by those who pretend and mislead by saying that this was a Canadian decision. Canada played her proper part at this conference. My colleague and I would be open to censure if we had not played a proper part at this conference. However, as the communique shows, the decisions were unanimous decisions on the part of the commonwealth countries in expressing their opinions to the government of the United Kingdom.

The opinions which were expressed by Canadian ministers were government policy, the same policy that was indicated to Mr. Duncan Sandys when he visited Ottawa on July 14 and which are reported in the communique of that date.

The Canadians were not the first to open up this subject at the conference. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, so great was the interest in this subject that in the public session of the conference which preceded our going into private session the Right Hon. Harold Holt, the treasurer of Australia, made reference to the subject. Here is a passage from his remarks in his speech in the public session. He said:

> A decision by the United Kingdom to join the community would be a step of such tremendous historical importance that it must, my government believes, affect the commonwealth to some degree. We in Australia recognize that the question whether the United Kingdom should or should not join the community is one which the United Kingdom government alone can decide. But we have been concerned at the weakening effect that a decision to join might ultimately have on the commonwealth reloaionship. None of us wishes to see that happen. The United Kingdom has told us of the great importance it attaches to maintaining the commonwealth relationship unimpaired. We have welcomed the assurances the United Kingdom government has given us on this point. This is more than a matter of trade and financial relationships, but these aspects are of far-reaching importance also. It would be a most unhappy outcome if the long established trade within the commonwealth were not fully maintained and, indeed, given adequate opportunities for expansion.

We are sure that the European nations appreciate the significance for the world, and for themselves, of a strong and prosperous commonwealth. We, for our part, fully understand what European unity means for peace and economic advancement of the world at large. We are taking no narrow nor unimaginative view of this matter. But we feel that it would be a tragedy if gains made in this direction were secured by impairment of the strength of the commonwealth either as a whole or in any of its constituent parts.

That was the opening reference to the subject. Of course, there had been a debate in the house of representatives in Australia prior to this conference and statements were made in the course of debate there by the prime minister, Mr. Menzies, and the minister of trade, Mr. McEwan. Those are a matter of record and very strong statements they are indeed, drawing attention to the tragic consequences which might result for Australia and the commonwealth.

In the discussions at the meeting at Accra all of the fully self governing countries of the commonwealth spoke through their ministers and as well we heard the views of several of the dependent or emerging territories. My colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, put Canada's position before the conference and I would be doing less than my duty if I did not pay tribute to my colleague for an admirable presentation of the subject in relation to the trading and economic interests of Canada and the United Kingdom.

I may say that the United Kingdom opened the discussion and then the other delegates followed with their remarks. It fell to my honour to speak after the other commonwealth delegates had all spoken, and then the delegate for the United Kingdom, the chancellor of the exchequer, closed the discussion.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister permit a question? Would the minister include in his very laudatory remarks with reference to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the decision of that hon. gentleman to release the text of his speech to the United Press?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman, if he had paid attention to what my colleague said in this house two days ago, would know very well that my colleague said he did not release that statement to the press and that it was done without his knowledge.

Mr. Benidickson: Nevertheless it was said.

Mr. Chevrier: He didn't, but he did, you mean?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not mean that. I mean exactly what I said. One would have thought that by this time due note would have been taken of what had been said recently in this country by Right Hon. Reginald Maudling the president of the board of trade of the United Kingdom. Mr. Maudling was one of the two ministerial delegates of the United Kingdom to this conference. He has been associated with this question for some years, for it was when he was paymaster general in the British government in 1957 and 1958 that he was responsible for carrying on the negotiations of those days for British adherence to the old industrial free trade area plan in Europe. Mr. Maudling has been through this matter for years and is fully acquainted with all features of it. Speaking in Toronto within the last two days Mr. Maudling has made a statement in this connection which ought to be a sufficient answer to any who have been engaged in making misleading statements in regard to this matter and in regard to the Canadian attitude at this conference. The Canadian Press dispatch of September 26 from Toronto reads as follows:

If the price of joining the European common market is to disrupt the commonwealth, then the price is too high to pay, Reginald Maudling, president of Britain's board of trade, said today.

However, he believed it would be possible for Britain to enter the market without incurring the commonwealth penalty that some feared.

"This is what we are trying to find out", he added, referring to Britain's prospective negotiations with the market countries.

Mr. Maudling, whose position in the British cabinet is similar to the Canadian portfolio of trade and commerce, made his comments at a press conference which followed his address to the current three-day annual conference of the Canadian institute of chartered accountants. Stating that one quarter of Britain's exports are within the commonwealth preference set-up, he said the preferences are more important than some people seem to think. Asked if they could be maintained if Britain enters the European market, he replied: "It is wrong to anticipate what may or may not be done before negotiations start. The preferences we enjoy are very important and I hope to see them preserved as much as possible."

He described the recent meeting of commonwealth ministers at Accra, Ghana, as "the best discussion we ever had". He didn't agree with all that was said but he considered that everything said was reasonable.

Concern was expressed, he continued, "but no one went as far as to say it was impossible for Britain to enter the common market and still maintain the Commonwealth, though there was a feeling that it would be difficult to achieve such a situation."

Britain's position was that she was not prepared to enter the market unless there were proper safeguards for the commonwealth. Other representatives expressed worry that Britain might not be able to achieve such safeguards and that the negotiations might break down, causing harm all round.

There is the authentic statement of Mr. Maudling, one of the two ministers representing the United Kingdom government at that conference.

So far as the position of the United Kingdom is concerned, nothing new emerged at the conference beyond what had already been indicated to the government by Mr. Sandys when he was here on July 14 and what had been said by Prime Minister Macmillan in the parliament at Westminster in the debate there in midsummer.

The position of the United Kingdom was that no decision has been taken by the government of the United Kingdom to join the community, but that the negotiations were necessary in order to ascertain upon what terms it might be possible for Britain to be received into membership in the community. In other words, it was emphasized that the purpose of those negotiations was to ascertain what terms would be possible for Britain to adhere to the community. The statement of Mr. Macmillan in the Westminster debate was reiterated, namely that the British negotiators would do everything possible to defend the interests of the commonwealth, Britain's partners in the European free trade association and British agriculture. It was only after all of these matters had been taken into account that the decision would be taken and also that a commonwealth conference would be held before a decision was arrived at.

The tenor of the discussion, I think, is worthy of mention, particularly in view of the gross misrepresentation that has been carried on since. The discussion was serious. The contributions were marked by a high sense of responsibility and by such restraint that comment was made on the restraint with which all members spoke. The discussion was frank; it was realistic having due regard for the gravity of the matter, and for the future of the commonwealth. There was no such thing as lamentation, as it has pleased one of the newspapers in this country to state. On the contrary, there was an amazing degree of unanimity of feeling indicated. There can be no doubt that the degree of concern and apprehension felt by the governments of all of the commonwealth countries has been underestimated by all; that means underestimated, I think, by all of the commonwealth countries, including the United Kingdom, underestimated by the press of those countries. I am quite prepared to say for myself that I had underestimated the strength of the feeling entertained by the other commonwealth governments in regard to this question and the apprehensions they feel over it.

This was the first opportunity that there had been for a collective expression of commonwealth sentiment in regard to the matter. There had been bilateral consultations in the summer; there had been a somewhat preliminary discussion of the subject at the last annual meeting of the commonwealth economic consultative council in London a year earlier; but since this became a matter of active decision on the part of the United Kingdom government this was the first opportunity there had been for a collective expression of opinion.

I think it would have been better if this conference had been held earlier, or a conference at which a collective expression of commonwealth opinion might have been heard. I think it would have been well if the suggestion of our Prime Minister had been acceded to earlier so that the collective views of all of the comonwealth countries might have been made known to all of them; for the danger of miscalculation as the result of underestimating concern and feelings of this kind is obvious.

I said there were two aspects to this question and to the changes that might be brought about by British adherence to the community. The first is political. I think that in all of the discussion in newspaper columns in this country and in speeches this feature has been largely overlooked. The treaty of Rome, it should be borne in mind, creates a new authority. The countries concerned did part with some portion of their sovereignty and therefore any country joining the community on the terms of the treaty of Rome necessarily submits to some modifications of its sovereignty. This is inevitable under the terms of the treaty itself. That fact has never been denied. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, it was discussed at some considerable length by Mr. Menzies, the prime minister of Australia, in his speech in the house of representatives at Canberra recently. Mr. Menzies is a very eminent constitutional lawyer. Quite apart from economic questions, in his speech Mr. Menzies was much concerned about the prospect of changes in political relationships between the United Kingdom on the one hand and other commonwealth countries on the other if Great Britain adhered to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome and consequently submitted to a modification of sovereignty.

I think it would be well, Mr. Chairman, if I placed on the record some of the observations of Mr. Menzies. The date is August 16, 1961. He said:

> We cannot as yet anticipate the result of the negotiations. We can, I think, reasonably assume that Great Britain will not accede to the Treaty of Rome, unconditionally. Such an accession would bring to an end the commonwealth preferential system which has endured for many years. It would be highly damaging to Australia, and could be disastrous to our neighbour and friend, New Zealand. As the preferential system operates both ways, it could mean the end of British preferential tariff rates in our tariff schedules.
> On the other hand, it may be too much to hope at this stage that Great Britain will be allowed, by the necessary unanimous agreement of the six, to maintain the commonwealth preferential system completely unimpaired. Some compromise will no doubt be sought. We shall, of course,—

Please note these words, Mr. Chairman:

We shall, of course, battle for the best possible arrangements for the protection of our traditional and legitimate interests.

Further on in his speech Mr. Menzies said:

The decision that will ultimately be taken by Great Britain, to enter on the negotiated terms or to stay out, will be the most momentous peacetime decision in living memory. Upon its wisdom and success probably the future of the free world and most certainly the future of our own family of nations will turn. It follows that Australia will bring to her own negotiations with Great Britain and, as we venture to hope, with the six, not only the most powerfully presented exposition and defence of our own interests, for her own future is our special care and responsibility, but also a strong and wide sense of common responsibility. It will have been observed, sir, that Great Britain has put the six on notice of these complexities. She has told them that Great Britain must take account of the special commonwealth relationship as well as the essential interests of British agriculture and of the other members of the European free trade association.

I now turn to the broad political issues. We believe that the entry of Great Britain into the European economic community would have far-reaching political implications.

Then Mr. Menzies—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Benidickson: I am sure all would be agreeable to allowing the minister to continue on this very important subject.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thank the committee, Mr. Chairman. Further, Mr. Menzies said with regard to the political implications and what they would be if Britain entered the community:

Common domestic policies will cry aloud for common external policies to protect them. If Great Britain joins, and other western European nations with her, and Europe becomes, step by step, a great power, or a cohesive agglomeration of power, Great Britain will become, we would hope and expect, a most important integer in that power. But she will, ex hypothesi, cease to be completely independent in relation to European affairs. This is why the decision which she must make after the proposed negotiations is so politically momentous.

And further, Mr. Chairman:

As a senior commonwealth country, we have felt bound to say that we do not think that the commonwealth as a political organism would be strengthened. Great Britain, as the centre of the commonwealth, has in the past spoken for herself at commonwealth conferences. After entering the new Europe, with its common policies and institutions and rules, she could no longer speak with detachment. The treaty of Rome cannot be approbated and reprobated at the same time. Nor could a growing interest, and, more than interest, involvement in Europe, be calculated to leave completely untouched the present British position in and around Asia and Africa.

And further:

But it would be a mistake to pretend that there was no change when in fact there had been a great one. We have not based our opinion upon any narrow ground of the importance of absolute sovereignty. All international pacts, from the United Nations to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, involve the exercise of sovereignty to limit, by free choice, liberty of individual action. But neither United Nations nor NATO nor SEATO is a super-state. Parties to the agreement may leave as they think fit, in the exercise of the very sovereignty by which they joined. The treaty of Rome, as I have pointed out, is different. There must be unanimous agreement for the joining and the leaving. Complete independence of action no longer exists.

We pronounce no dogma. We do not seek to turn back the great tides of international affairs. We do not say that the British view of the effect upon the commonwealth of a decision by Great Britain to go into Europe is demonstrably wrong. In the present state of the world, with bullying and bluster our daily diet, it may be that the commonwealth must once more change, for the common good. Our belief is that a change is, in fact, involved. That being so, we feel bound to state our belief with firmness but with good will.

I think that is a statement by Mr. Menzies of the Australian position which is worthy of the highest respect and, if I may say so, the concluding words in which he summed up the position of the government accurately describe the position taken by the Canadian delegation at the Accra conference. We recognize that if Great Britain adheres to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome or something much like it, then unquestionably a political change is involved, as Mr. Menzies has said. That being so, Mr. Chairman, if I may appropriate his words, we felt bound to state our belief with firmness but with goodwill. There was a great expression of goodwill at that conference, Mr. Chairman, and let no one deny that fact. Everything that was said there was said in the deepest spirit of goodwill and mutual understanding.

So, Mr. Chairman, we begin with this fact, that if there is adherence by the United Kingdom to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome or something close to it there will necessarily be far-reaching political implications and changes within the commonwealth. It cannot be otherwise. The view was expressed by all of the countries at that conference that British leadership in the commonwealth is needed. It is necessary for the full effectiveness of this commonwealth which has such a beneficent and unique mission in the world as a multiracial society or family of equal nations. That is why the countries of the commonwealth recorded their apprehension as to the results that might follow British membership in the six on the basis of the treaty of Rome or something resembling it.

Mr. Regier: Is that a threat to the British commonwealth?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This was an expression of opinion on the part of all of the commonwealth countries. There were no threats uttered at any time by anyone. Apparently the only threats that exist are in the minds of some people who are malevolently determined to misrepresent what occurred at Accra. I want to make it very clear that correction is needed of some of the statements I have seen as to remarks attributed to me. It is said that I warned the ministers at Accra that if Britain made this move the commonwealth could never be the same again. What was said, Mr. Chairman, not only by Canada but by others, was that if the United Kingdom adheres to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome or unless there is a very substantial change in the terms of the treaty of Rome, there will inevitably follow a change in political relationships. That is the inevitable consequence of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister quote from the text that he used at that time?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not use a text. I have the clearest recollection of what I said. I had notes but not a text.

The other aspect of this matter is the trade and economic aspect, and I shall not deal with it because my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has already made a statement to the house two days ago and will be here to deal with that subject further. The communique draws attention in this respect to several things of which I trust all hon. members are now aware. The first is that adherence by Great Britain to the community under the treaty of Rome will involve a change in the terms of trade. Next, it will not affect all commonwealth countries equally. Some could be affected disastrously, some seriously, some not so seriously. This inequality of effect may, as the communique points out, have a divisive effect within the commonwealth.

The role of these emerging countries and of the newly self governing countries as primary producers is a matter of very great concern to them. They do not wish to be condemned to a continuation of the role of being simply primary producers. They do not see much economic security for their future if they are so confined. That is one reason why they have expressed very great concern about losing the benefit of the British market and, in order to reach the British market, having to hurdle the kind of tariff barriers that now prevent their goods from entering the markets of the six, or restrain that entry. So, Mr. Chairman, on both of these grounds, the political ground and the economic and trade ground, important changes are involved and they will inevitably follow if Great Britain, as I say, adheres to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the minister would permit a question at this point. On the day that European common market matters were being discussed, and since the direct and immediate effect of them had to do with commonwealth preference, was there any representation from South Africa who still receive preferential treatment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, South Africa was not a member of this conference.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I understand that; but on this particular point, they still receive commonwealth tariff preferential treatment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, there were no views expressed on behalf of South Africa.

Let me clarify one matter in passing. It has been said in some quarters that some of the commonwealth countries would be glad to take advantage of the provision in the treaty of Rome that permits the adherence to the community of associated overseas territories of the parties. The commonwealth countries, the self governing countries, made it abundantly and emphatically clear without exception that they would have nothing to do with any such status. Indeed, one delegate said he would not touch it with a barge pole. All were concerned that this would put them in a second-class position as regards sovereignty. I wish to say, in all fairness, that the United Kingdom disclaimed any thought whatever that any of the self governing countries of the commonwealth would adhere to the community as associated overseas territories. Some of the dependent countries might wish to do so, but those who were heard from indicated that they would attach very stiff conditions to their association with the community in this capacity.

So, Mr. Chairman, as the communique makes quite clear, this question was viewed as one having all the elements of gravity about it for the commonwealth. Let me take up some comments that are being made, and being made rather loosely, in regard to Britain's forthcoming negotiations with the six. It is said in some quarters in this country that the United Kingdom is compelled to join the six; that there is no future for her unless she joins the six. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me say for those who are trying to make Canadians believe today that it is inevitable that Britain shall join the six, that is not what the government of the United Kingdom says. They do not at all accept the idea that this is inevitable and they have made it very clear that the purpose of these negotiations is to ascertain terms upon which it may be possible for Great Britain to join the six.

Then, it is said the commonwealth countries have no right to try and restrain the United Kingdom from adhering to the community, also that if they have anything to say, they should be putting forward an alternative. This conference, Mr. Chairman, was not called for the purpose of discussing any particular alternative to this proposal; that was quite beyond its scope and agenda. Anything of that nature would require a conference called on due notice.

Mr. Benidickson: Surely, you knew that this was the major item coming up?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This agenda was made known a few days before the conference, yes. However, there was no thought that this conference was called for the purpose of discussing some particular alternative plan. Let me make that very clear. No one expected that at all, and no one looked for it at the conference.

In so far as the subject of an existing alternative is concerned, let me draw attention to some figures that ought to be borne in mind by some people who have been writing very freely on this subject and who seem to have overlooked the importance of commonwealth trade. It is true that the exports of the United Kingdom to the six have declined moderately in percentage terms, but the same is not true of volume or value terms. The fact is that Britain's exports to the commonwealth are three times what they are to the six. Much has been made about the large population that is available in the six as a market. Well, the population of the commonwealth is several times that of the present population of the six. I point out this fact, and it was discussed by the various ministers at Accra, that the potentialities of trade within the commonwealth are not exhausted; indeed they have not yet been fully developed.

I think it is not unfair to say that most of the countries of the commonwealth are looking for opportunities—this is certainly true of the Canadian government—for enlarging trade within the commonwealth, certainly between the United Kingdom and the other countries. Trade relations within the commonwealth are constantly under review. Of course, much of the trade in the commonwealth is now governed by agreements under GATT. They are a matter of contract; they represent concessions that have been bought and paid for on the basis of exchange. The principle that the commonwealth countries declared for at the Montreal trade and economic conference in 1958 was the principle of multilateralism in world trade. This is the policy that was declared at Montreal. It was not a restrictive policy. This is the policy to which the Canadian government adheres.

Let me remind the committee, Mr. Chairman, of some of those provisions in the report of the Montreal conference of 1958, a unanimous document adhered to by all the then members of the commonwealth. Article 7 reads:

> It is our firm belief that commonwealth countries should continue to work in no exclusive spirit towards a multilateral trade and payments system over the widest possible area. We are also convinced that there are many things which can appropriately be done to increase trade between one commonwealth country and another. Commonwealth participation in the preferential system has proved to be of mutual benefit and we have no intention of discarding or weakening it. Some of the trade agreements between commonwealth countries now require review, and work has begun on renegotiating them. It is our intention to work towards an expansion of commonwealth trade by all practicable means, and we have explored a number of these.

Then, Mr. Chairman, here is article 21:

> About half of the total trade of the commonwealth is exchanged within the commonwealth and half with the rest of the world, and it must be the aim of every commonwealth government to foster trade within and outside the commonwealth. The conference reaffirmed the policy that commonwealth countries should work to achieve a multilateral trade and payments system over the widest possible area.

Then, article 28 reads:

> The conference reaffirmed the importance of the role that preferences have played and continue to play in commonwealth economic relations. Commonwealth countries have continued to adhere to the preferential system while adjusting their policies to the requirements of changes in the scope and character of world trade.

There was an emphatic declaration in favour of continuation of the commonwealth preferential system, a system that has been of great advantage to commonwealth countries. This was the unanimous expression of the commonwealth countries in 1958.

Article 31 reads:

> The United Kingdom government confirmed its intention of maintaining as an important element in the preferential system the free and unrestricted entry of nearly all goods imported from the commonwealth.

If there is adherence by the United Kingdom to the community on the basis of the treaty of Rome, it will no longer be possible to carry that policy into effect.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the last quotation I have is from article 40.

Here let me remind hon. members that in the years 1957 and 1958 Great Britain and other countries were engaged upon plans and negotiations for the formation of a free trade area in Europe. It was to be an industrial free trade area. It was to embrace the six; it was to embrace the other countries that are now members of the European free trade organization; but it was to be, so far as Great Britain was concerned, an industrial free trade area, and there was to be no interference whatever with Britain's trading relations in agricultural products. This was very reassuring to Canada and other commonwealth countries because it carried with it the assurance that there would be no interference with the preferred position of Canadian agricultural products in the market of the United Kingdom.

Here then is article 40:

The conference considered the influence which the European economic community might have on commonwealth trade interests and reviewed the progress of the negotiations for a European free trade area.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may interpose and say this was before the plans and negotiations for the creation of the industrial free trade area came to nought at that meeting in Paris on December 15, 1958, when the efforts that had been made failed completely, and from that time on the six went their way and the other countries who were not members of the six proceeded to form the European free trade association. This reference to the European free trade area is to the proposed industrial free trade area at that time. I continue:

It reaffirmed the conviction of commonwealth countries that an outward-looking free trade area in which trade would be increased rather than merely rechannelled would contribute to their common objective of an enlarging world economy. It was the belief of the conference that the European countries could make an important contribution of their own to the freeing of world trade and payments, the removal of discrimination and the expansion of world trade. Many delegations expressed anxiety lest arrangements for closer economic association in Europe should result in a narrowing of the trading opportunities for outside countries, or in the extension of protection especially in agriculture where they feared that existing protectionist tendencies might become reinforced and entrenched. The United Kingdom delegation recognized the importance of making the provisions of the free trade area such as would ensure the widest possible trading opportunities and reaffirmed the undertaking about the safeguarding of commonwealth interests in the United Kingdom market for foodstuffs including drink and tobacco. The conference reviewed the arrangements made to ensure effective and continuing consultation on these issues among commonwealth countries; and noted the progress of consultations in the GATT with the members of the European economic community.

I shall not detain the committee, Mr. Chairman, by further references to the report of the Montreal conference or the unanimous agreements entered into there as recorded in this very extensive report. In summary, in 1958 all commonwealth countries reaffirmed their belief in the value of the commonwealth preference system and reaffirmed as well the importance of ensuring the preferred access of foodstuffs from the commonwealth into the market of the United Kingdom, and that there should be no interference with that in any developing new trade arrangements in Europe.

This remains the policy of the Canadian government. We have subscribed to and have wholeheartedly upheld the principle of multilateralism in world trade. We have sought the continued expansion of Canadian trade in the world. My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce has pressed as hard as any minister of trade and commerce could press for the extension of Canadian markets and Canadian efforts to sell abroad. It is government policy to seek to promote our trade on the multilateral basis that is enshrined in the GATT.

These policies we believe to be important We believe they have lost nothing of their importance. Those reservations that were expressed in 1958 concerning even British adherence to the industrial free trade area apply with infinitely reinforced effect in relation to proposed British adherence to the European economic community, because in the light of the protectionist agricultural policies that are being pursued by the six today I do not think anyone well informed on this subject thinks it is possible to negotiate with the six such terms of adherence of the United Kingdom to the European economic community as will preserve the preferred position of Canadian foodstuffs in the market of the United Kingdom. Certainly no one could possibly expect that the preferred position of Canadian manufactured exports in the United Kingdom market can be preserved in the light of the policies of the six.

An hon. member a moment ago used the word "threats". Let me make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that at all times, whether you are speaking of the meeting of this commonwealth consultative executive council in London a year ago, or the Accra meeting this year, there never has been any threat. We do not talk in those terms at these meetings. We talk at these meetings as friends. We talk frankly and with a due sense of responsibility and a due acknowledgment of our very great common interests.

Mr. Chevrier: You talk as amicus amici.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is well known to all of these commonwealth countries, and the kind of statements that have appeared in some quarters in Canada would shock any delegate from any country who attended this conference, because they have given such a completely misleading impression of the conference, what was said there and the spirit in which it was carried on.

It is acknowledged by all the commonwealth countries that if they are shut out of the market in the United Kingdom for any of their products as the result of terms made with the six, these commonwealth countries will have to look for markets elsewhere. These advantages are a matter of exchange; they are a matter of contract. These advantages are bought and paid for in terms of reciprocal exchange of advantages, and this is the way that in the world today countries exchange trade opportunities.

Our effort has been to preserve for Canadian producers all of the markets that they have had. I say this, that if my colleague and I had not taken that position there—as did other commonwealth countries on behalf of their producers—we would have been failing in our duty to Canadian agriculture, Canadian primary producers and Canadian producers of manufactured goods for the United Kingdom market.

The communique has been said by some to be a strong document. Well, Mr. Chairman, it was an accurate document. It correctly reported the views expressed by the numerous countries that attended that conference. The views recorded there—and that communique, of course, was an agreed document and every phrase in it was carefully weighed—properly express the consensus of views. It was written by those who have a high appreciation of the importance of the commonwealth and the contribution it makes to the world.

We make sacrifices because of our belief in the commonwealth, because we believe that the commonwealth should be strengthened. Canada has provided substantial assistance through the Colombo plan. It has been axiomatic in the policy of this government that practically all of our Colombo plan aid goes to commonwealth countries. Look at the other things that we have done with a view to bringing aid to other commonwealth countries, particularly those that are seeking to develop their resources. We do this because we believe in the commonwealth as an institution. We believe that it has a mission in the world that no existing international institution has. As the communique of July 14 points out, we would view with grave concern anything which would weaken the commonwealth, so high a value do we attach to it and to its mission in the world today as a multi-racial group or family of self governing nations bound together by ties which are really indefinable.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

An attempt has been made to play down the Canadian government's interest in trade with the community. This does a grave injustice to the government's efforts to expand trade with the six and to strengthen our trade and economic interest in that quarter. Canada has played a leading part in the reorganization of O.E.E.C. into the organization for economic co-operation and development. We are their fellow-members with all the members of the community. Indeed, we are allies, in NATO, of all these members of the community. We have a very close relationship with it. It is not as close as our relationship with the commonwealth countries, but we value our relationship with these countries of the six and look forward to expanding our trade with them. That has been government policy and it continues to be our policy.

Because of our relationship with these countries we have been able to impress upon them, I think, the importance which we as a great trading nation attach to the pursuit of their goals by outward-looking policies and not by inward-looking policies which would have the effect of restricting trade between the community and the rest of the world.

On the subject of the attitude of the United States to this important question, I simply draw attention to the fact that at least one member of the United States cabinet has recently declared publicly that the United States would not wish the United Kingdom to adhere to the community on a basis of a continuance of the commonwealth preference system. While we were still in Accra my attention was drawn by telegram to remarks made by the secretary of agriculture of the United States, as reported in the New York Times of September 8, that if the United Kingdom were to join the community it would produce an intolerable situation, in the view of the United States, were it to result in a continuance of the preferential trade system of the British commonwealth on its present basis. It is the policy of the Canadian government to seek to preserve to Canadian producers the opportunities and advantages which they enjoy under the commonwealth preference system. At the Montreal conference of 1958, all the commonwealth countries reaffirmed the value of that system to them. The Canadian government also reaffirms its belief in the advantages of that system to its producers, regardless of the views other nations may have toward the preference arrangements.

Finally, may I say that I think this conference has produced very beneficial results. All the countries of the commonwealth now know fully what the views of all other countries of the commonwealth are in relation to this subject of such far-reaching importance. There can be no possibility now of any of the commonwealth countries underestimating the views of other commonwealth countries in this regard. United Kingdom delegates are reporting back, of course, to their own colleagues just as the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I are reporting to this house.

Let is not be thought, as has been erroneously asserted in some United Kingdom newspapers, that the views of Canada were different from those of Australia or India or the other countries. There was a complete identity of views among these leading countries of the commonwealth. Indeed, I would say there was an extraordinary unanimity of view among all countries of the commonwealth. On this question we see eye to eye with the countries I have mentioned.

I close on the note on which I opened. Everyone recognized that this is a decision for the government of the United Kingdom. It is a decision to which a very great responsibility attaches because of the far-reaching consequences which would follow. As Mr. Menzies pointed out in the statement from which I have read, all commonwealth countries must sympathize with the government and the parliament of the United Kingdom in the responsibility which faces them in this regard. It is a very difficult decision for any government to make. The views expressed by commonwealth countries at Accra were not unsympathetic. They were not unmindful of the problem which faces the United Kingdom government. They fully recognized it.

Perhaps I might close by using in this house the words with which I closed my remarks at that meeting when I reviewed what had been said by the other commonwealth delegates. I pointed out that in an uneasy world we had an existing reality which we believe to be vitally important for all the world. I said we did not want to see any of the commonwealth values in this world weakened. Before this institution is in any way modified, we must be sure that we were giving up substance for substance, not substance for shadow. Having regard to the fears, the forebodings and the apprehensions which were expressed at that meeting—expressed with restraint, expressed with responsibility, expressed candidly, expressed in the most friendly way by all countries, I said: "These are not the fears of the indifferent; these are not the forebodings of the unsympathetic; these are not the apprehensions of adversaries. These are, rather, the fears, the forebodings and the apprehensions of the best friends that Great Britain has in all the world."

Mr. Chevrier: I desire to raise a point of order, and the point of order is this. According to the minister himself, the hon. gentleman has read from a part of the speech, or the concluding remarks of the speech which he delivered. I think it is the usual practice in those circumstances for him to produce the rest of the speech—in other words, the whole of it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can assure the hon. member that nothing would give me greater pleasure than to repeat the speech I gave there.

Mr. Chevrier: I have listened to one, and that is enough.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It occupied 50 minutes. I was shocked to be told that after it was completed. I have not the text of that speech, but I have my notes. As I say, it would give me great pleasure to reproduce that speech, to repeat it here if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not the point of order. The point of order was that the minister, having read part of his speech should now table the whole speech.

Mr. Green: Perhaps I might point out, on the point of order, how ridiculous that suggestion is, Mr. Chairman. For example, I understand the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made a speech in Toronto yesterday. Suppose he were to get up today and quote one sentence from it. Would some Liberal be entitled to demand, on the strength of that, that he could table the whole speech?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the Secretary of State for External affairs that I should be very happy to reproduce it.

Mr. Green: Yes, but nobody would be very happy to have to listen to it. I suggest it is going from the sublime to the ridiculous to try to introduce in this house the practice of the wholesale tabling of speeches.

Mr. Chevrier: I like the way in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs waives aside any point of order as being ridiculous—as going from the sublime to the ridiculous. I submit to the committee that not only did the minister read a part of the speech he made at Accra but that he read lengthy portions of the speech made by Mr. Menzies. Having done that, surely he should have no objection to producing the speech he made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The speech Mr. Menzies made was made in the house of representatives at Canberra, Australia and presumably is reproduced in the records of the Australian parliament. It is one thing to reproduce the closing sentence of a speech, but for the hon. member to ask me to table the speech is to ask the impossible because there is no text. I can assure the hon. member that I made that closing statement and if on some occasion the house had 50 minutes or an hour to spare I will be very happy to repeat the speech I made at Accra.

Mr. Chevrier: Just let us have it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think I can do it almost verbatim. I have my notes and a clear recollection of everything I said. My colleague who was at my elbow on that occasion will be able to correct me if I depart from the course of the speech. I will be very happy to make that speech any time the house has an hour to spare.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I request permission of the committee to have included in Hansard at this point a table showing the effects which the United Kingdom acceptance of the European common market tariff could have on our principal exports to the United Kingdom market.

Mr. McIlraith: That is an interpretive document.

Mr. Chevrier: There is objection to that statement.

Mr. Benidickson: It is not based on any known government records, is it?

Mr. Hees: Yes, it is.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the minister assist the committee by giving the sources of these figures that make up the table to which he has referred?

Mr. Hees: I shall be very glad to do so if the committee wishes. The table consists of five columns which, in consecutive order, are headed: (1) commodity; (2) dollar value of Canadian exports to the United Kingdom market 1960; (3) present United Kingdom tariff on commodities; (4) final common market tariff which would be reached in stages in the next ten years and (5) commonwealth preference which would be lost. Those are all facts.

Mr. Chevrier: I object to this table being produced. A table I attempted to introduce this day was objected to and I object to the tabling of this on the grounds that it is not unlike the table I sought to produce.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the statement which my colleague is offering to the committee is drawn from official government sources and was prepared for the information of hon. members. That is a status different from that of documents that are privately prepared which any individual private member of this house chooses to bring forward. This is information compiled from government records which has been prepared for the use and information of the committee.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. McIlraith: As I understood the Minister of Trade and Commerce, this document represents the interpretation the minister places on events that might happen in the future. He is now asking the committee to accept his interpretation rather than the actual facts as they are recorded.

Mr. Hees: My whole objective in presenting this table was to give hon. members information which I believe will make it possible for them to better study this whole question which I think the hon. member for Ottawa West will agree is a complicated one. The figures I have here were prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce and are factual. The whole intent is to make it easier for hon. members to understand what is a very complicated matter but if the hon. member does not wish to have this information tabled I shall be very pleased to follow the course of making copies available to all hon. members and to members of the press and handle it in that manner.

Mr. McIlraith: My remarks have been misinterpreted by the minister who persists in stating that these are facts. If he would examine the record he will see that he is dealing with his interpretation of future events. That is the point.

Mr. Regier: I have no objection to the tabling of any facts but I strenuously object to the tabling of expectations either on the part of the minister or his officials. I feel that his request is entirely uncalled for, unprecedented and out of order.

Mr. Hees: That is perfectly all right with me, Mr. Chairman. Obviously hon. members are not interested in discussing this matter in an intelligent way. They wish to speak on a prejudiced political basis in an effort to confuse the people of Canada in any way they can. Understanding that, I can appreciate their position. I shall deal with the table in the way I have outlined. I will make copies available to all hon. members of the house and to members of the press and in that way the members of the house and the people of Canada can become a little better acquainted with this very difficult subject.

Mr. McIlraith: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has put himself in the position of having imputed motives to all hon. members who disagree with him, in addition to which he has cast reflections on the characters of all hon. members. On both counts the minister is in breach of the rules of the House of Commons. I ask, therefore, that he withdraw his remarks including his imputation of motives to all hon. members.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have imputed motives to nobody.

Mr. Chevrier: No; you have congratulated us.

Mr. Hees: Perhaps I might be permitted to proceed.

Mr. McIlraith: I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hees: Oh, don't be so precious.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. As I heard his remarks the minister probably transcended the bounds of good taste to some extent and perhaps he would modify what he said previously to assist the mood of the committee.

Mr. Pugh: Bring out the modifier.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if I have offended the feelings of any hon. members I hasten to withdraw any remarks that could possibly have offended the sensibilities of such hon. gentlemen.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Hon. members opposite are pretty sensitive about this subject.

Mr. Regier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I wish to know who has the floor. I thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose to table a document. Our normal custom is to have a member of the official opposition speak after the minister introduces his estimates. We allowed the Minister of Finance an additional hour in which he made a highly political speech—

Mr. Pugh: A very good one.

Mr. Regier: —and we were understanding and sympathetic. But I am now interested in hearing what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has to say. I think it improper for one minister to follow another.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not wish to use up any time I may be allowed in this debate but may I point out that the other day the hon. member for Laurier, the acting leader of the opposition on that occasion, was not allowed to continue certain remarks in reply to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Finance indicated that he proposed to refer to the Accra conference. He dealt exclusively with that. In view of the circumstances I wish to relinquish, in favour of the hon. member for Laurier, the normal opportunity accorded a member on the opposition side to speak at this time because the Minister of Finance did not deal with the over-all nature of his estimates but confined himself to one aspect of his own personal activities connected therewith.

The Deputy Chairman: Inasmuch as the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not get launched on what he had to say, we will follow the practice normally followed in committee and call on the hon. member for Laurier.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), for giving me the opportunity of making comments on the speech which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has just delivered.

I listened closely to the minister who was long-winded as usual—that is his privilege.

Mr. Chairman, it is quite remarkable that every time a senior member of this government attends a conference, he is always in the embarrassing position of having to explain his statements in the house on his return.

For instance, when the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Churchill) came back from his trip to Hong Kong, he complained rather bitterly about the way newspapers had treated him. The main victim of his criticism at the time was an American newspaperman. Today, we are witnessing a somewhat similar situation following the statements made by the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). In fact, both of them have claimed that their statements were misinterpreted not only in press or radio reports but even by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson).

The Minister of Finance was quite peeved at the radio commentators who yesterday morning and yesterday evening openly condemned the government's policy at the Accra conference. The commentators strongly criticized the stand taken by those two ministers. So it was with the Leader of the Opposition. The Minister of Finance feels that the latter lacked courtesy when he asked a question and made certain comments during a discussion on that subject in the house, on the orders of the day.

The Minister of Finance complains that the Leader of the Opposition has said about him that he was squealing before being hurt. And what is more, he finds fault with the statement made by my colleague from Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) in Toronto—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was not a statement; it was a false charge.

Mr. Chevrier: Once again, the minister is saying that it was a false charge. In that case, I would ask him to make known the contents of his speech so that we may know whether or not the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have actually made the statements they are reported to have made—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have stated that I would be glad to deliver again in the house the speech I made in Accra, if the hon. member would give me the time to do it.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to listen to the minister for another hour. I listened to him long enough a while ago. If he can repeat the speech he made over there, why not write it down and hand us a copy so that we would know exactly what he said because, as I stated at the outset of my remarks, it seems quite strange to me that every time the Canadian ministers take part in an important conference, they are always misquoted either in the press or elsewhere.

Mr. Valade: They are simply misinterpreted by the Liberals.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not the reports—

Mr. Chevrier: As regards the common market, this government has no positive policy. On the contrary, it seems to have adopted a negative policy for it is saying to the member countries of the common market: "Do not belong to that organization lest you harm us," whereas it should consider carefully and thoroughly the respective situations of the nations of the Inner Six in order to see whether it would not be possible to come to some agreement or association with those nations.

We on this side of the house believe that the stand taken by the government on this question is wrong.

We believe more than anything that in view of the serious situation of our times, we should do all we can to unify the commonwealth instead of dividing it. We should not try, as I said a moment ago, to cause a division among the nations of the commonwealth, thereby weakening the free world.

We must obviously protect Canada's interests before and above everything else, but is there no other way to protect those interests beside the one adopted by both ministers?

Do I have to say here that it is within the inner six that the current expansion is the most dramatic? And this is why, in my opinion it is in those countries that tariffs should be reviewed.

By the extraordinary economic evolution, the gradual reduction of customs tariffs, in conjunction with the wide opportunities of a competitive market of 180 million people—which is comparable to the American market—there has been achieved a real economic revolution within the inner six: France, West Germany, Italy, Luxemburg, Belgium, and the Netherlands. The results—as the minister probably knows better than I—of that European structural reconversion were soon felt. Today, the productivity of large European industries is comparable to that of the United States and Canada. Living standards are rising. The expansion rate of the six is the quickest in the world except, perhaps, in Japan. All productive potentials, manpower and equpiment, are fully used. Unemployment is virtually unknown there. In 1960, production has gained 8 per cent in the countries of the common market. The manufacture of steel, which is a significant index of industrial activities, has increased by more than 15 per cent, as compared to 8.5 per cent in the Soviet union and 5.3 per cent in the United States.

Now, in spite of that rapid growth, prices have remained firm. The cost of living has not risen excessively. In short, the economic prospects are so attractive that it is not surprising if American, British and even Canadian capital is migrating to those countries.

For instance, Polymer Corporation Ltd., of Sarnia, Ont., is going to build a synthetic rubber plant in Strasburg, France; Massey-Ferguson is expanding and converting its plants in that country; and, also in France, Seagram's is taking an active part in the wine industry. Those are facts, which goes to show very clearly that, as a result of the expansion going on there, Canadians, Americans and British are considering the possibility of establishing themselves there while we, on this side of the ocean, are more and more inclined to move away from there.

We have to admit, Mr. Chairman, that North America does not strike a very brilliant figure in comparison with what is going on over there. In the last four years, the expansion rate of our economy has been very slow. Investments in industrial equipment are declining. We had a recession in 1957-58, and another one in the spring of 1960. Unemployment in this country has now reached disquieting proportions. In 1960, our per capita production was 5 per cent lower than in 1956. The upward trend in our exports is slowing down and, although they were satisfactory last year, they fell off these last few months, which causes some concern for 1961 and 1962. Our balance deficit is getting worse and the United States are not in a better position than we are, as the deterioration of their balance of payments is marked by an alarming outflow of gold and a threat to their dollar. Most of our industries suffer from a surplus of unused potential. In short, our economy is far from working at full capacity.

I therefore reiterate the question: What is the Canadian government doing in view of this situation? Unfortunately the government does not have a definite policy in connection with the common market situation. On the other hand, the government is worried, as it should be, about what would happen if we lost our British markets, and the government voices protests and threats. The Minister of Finance may well complain. Here is what a European leader recently said in Brussels, with regard to this whole matter, to a correspondent of the Financial Post:

> You should explain to Canadians that, even if we understand their problems, Mr. Fleming's threats cannot intimidate us... If our actions fail to please you, you are free to take any steps which your government thinks necessary.
> We like Canadians very much. But do not think that a market of 18 million people could, by any protests, bring about a change in our basic policies. You should keep a sense of proportion.

And he concluded by saying:

> If, out of sheer spite, you draw back into a protective shell, you will only complicate and multiply the troubles facing your economy.

I should now like to read into the record the words of somebody who was at the conference, somebody you never failed to quote here in this House of Commons, because he writes in the Gazette; the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) among others quoted him with glee the other day, when his estimates were being discussed. I am thinking of the financial columnist of the Gazette, Mr. John Meyer, who, on September 13, wrote the following paragraph during the commonwealth economic conference:

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He wasn't there.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier:

> The Canadian government delegation at Accra is wasting its time trying to impress the British, and thus contributes to strengthen the view that Canadians are not able to look after their own business. For the last two years, the Canadian government did nothing to anticipate the effects of London's participation in the common market. All it did was threaten—
> That conference, like the previous ones in London and Ottawa, shows that our policy has failed.
> We are creating the impression of wanting in vain to oppose the rising tide of European economic expansion.

Mr. Martineau: Has the hon. member said that Mr. Meyer attended the conference at Accra?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I said that, but I accept the correction of the minister that he was not there.

All the same, the fact is that the Gazette's columnist, a financier working for a paper quite sympathetic to this government, has written what I have just quoted.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has written nothing from Accra on this subject, I assure you.

Mr. Chevrier: He wrote what I just quoted and this shows clearly the views of his newspaper recognized in Canada for its Conservatism.

But I have another quotation to add to that one, from Mr. Olivier Moreau-Neret, who addressed the French chamber of commerce in Montreal only a week ago. He spoke on the French economy, the common market and Canada's stand concerning the common market.

Mr. Moreau-Neret, whose remarks have been reported in Le Devoir, Le Nouveau Journal and La Presse of September 21 said:

> Why are Canadians so concerned with the common market? We had the same concern in France about the common market, we were afraid of it, we joined it with apprehension but we joined and we are quite happy because our industries have been greatly revitalized.

Those are the very words reported in La Presse of September 21, 1961.

Incidentally, this French banker, who is chairman of the "Credit-foncier franco-canadien" and, through his corporation, is greatly interested in Canada as a whole, said:

> The common market may be the factor that did the most to rejuvenate France. We used to live in an atmosphere of extreme protectionism that was perhaps justified at one time, but that crystallized old habits and caused a lazy ageing of economic structures.
> In America, when nylon was killing flax, that was too bad for flax. We, in France, were subsidizing flax growers! With the common market, those methods are no longer admissible.
> And that is why, since we joined the common market, he added, the French economy has become young and strong once again.

A while ago the minister had American statements to put on record. Is he aware that a great number of important American people are in favour of an association between North America and the countries—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not in the interest of Canada or of the commonwealth.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, then listen to this. The suggestion and proposal of a common market were put forward by leading statesmen like Mr. Ludwig Erhard, Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, Mr. Kampmann, prime minister of Denmark, ex-secretary of state Dean Acheson, one of the promoters of the Marshall plan and NATO, Mr. Faure, French minister of economic affairs, and the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Macmillan, during his recent visit in Ottawa.

Of course, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) advocated that idea time and again in this house.

An Atlantic economic community would give real economic meaning to the Atlantic alliance and strengthen its political cohesion where there is very much room for improvement. It would give more strength to free world unity against communist expansion. It would increase our trade with Europe and consequently reduce our dependence on the United States.

And I stop here to say that if the minister maintains his stand, he will have no alternative but to advocate economic union with the United States. But we on this side of the house would object and muster all our efforts against an economic union with the United States which could only lead us to a political union.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you still a Liberal? Your policy has changed.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not advocating a new policy; this is the policy of my leader, it is the Liberal policy that I am recalling here, and it is the policy that I would have liked to put on record the other day when I was interrupted by Mr. Speaker, who was obviously acting in accordance with the rules of the house.

Finally, I submit that such a step on our part might solve the difficult problem arising from the relations among the six and the seven, for it would entail, a far-reaching decision.

Mr. Chairman, Canada should take the lead and extend the European accomplishments to the Atlantic area so as to form a larger association, out of the existing groups, by establishing an Atlantic economic committee on which we would sit, and we would then take advantage of the economic integration of free trade and of a large competitive market.

This is how we must meet the challenge of the success attained in Europe, that I—

I shall put on our official record a sentence which expressed my thought: "If you can't fight them, then join them".

Then, instead of fighting against this movement, as did the two ministers who represented us over there, it seems that we should have tried another strategy. The situation would be altogether different if a definite policy, that we could have discussed in this house, had been suggested.

I shall close my remarks by saying that we condemn the stand apparently taken by the two ministers and that we—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The stand was not taken by the two ministers and you know it very well.

Mr. Chevrier: I said "apparently taken by the two ministers". And, along with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. George Hees), as long as you do not produce the statements which you have read and used over there, we on this side of the house, have the right to—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I already said that I had no written statement; there is nothing that I could possibly read.

If the hon. member (Mr. Chevrier) continues to ask me to read a text—

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, if it is true that the hon. minister has no text, he could at least write down what he said. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce has a text; let him produce it. He said that he had inadvertently handed it to the reporters over there. I therefore believe that we should see this text, for the newspapers have, apparently, interpreted that text in a manner which was quite unfair to those ministers.

I pity the ministers for the injustice they have to suffer from the press, radio, the Leader of the Opposition and some of my colleagues. What injustice. They always complain when they come back from long trips. I was just about to say: Travellers from afar can lie with impunity, but I will not do so because that would be contrary to the standing orders. Yet, Mr. Chairman, I should like to conclude my remarks—

An hon. Member: Read a text.

Mr. Chevrier: If I did have the minister's text, I would certainly read it, but I only have extracts. I shall not press this matter any further.

I should like to conclude by reading into Hansard part of a document which is prepared regularly by the government's information service at Canada House, in London, a service which is well known to any member who travels a bit. Here is what that document issued by Canada House, in London, said about the conference. The comments, which are taken from the Sunday Telegraph of September 24, read as follows:

(Text):

But we would do well to pay far more attention to the implications of the commonwealth finance ministers unqualified disagreement of the week before.

Even now, I am not, repeat, not sure that the burden of the Accra communique has been fully understood here . . . Recording that all other commonwealth representatives expressed grave apprehension and concern at the British application to join the common market, it doubted whether we would, in fact, be able to negotiate adequate protection for commonwealth interests, and implied the complete collapse of the commonwealth as a political entity without such protection.

But behind this lies something new. Until Accra, it had been commonwealth policy to insist on the need for its various economic interests to be accommodated in an U.K.-common market agreement. The Accra communique represents, for the first time, a deliberate attempt to sabotage British entry altogether.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): An utterly false statement.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, you had better get it straight at Canada House; this is your own document.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not a statement from Canada House. The hon. member is quoting now a statement from a United Kingdom publication and he is trying to drag in Canada House. All that Canada House does is to gather together these statements appearing in the United Kingdom newspapers, so let us not have any misrepresentation about Canada House.

Mr. Chevrier: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is a false statement in a British newspaper.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister likes to interrupt me, but whenever I interrupt him he calls on the rules of the house to be put into effect.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is quoting a false report.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to continue with this report.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a false report.

Mr. Chevrier: It emanates from Canada House, London.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, it does not.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, it does, and I continue with the last paragraph.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, on a point—

Mr. Chevrier: I quote:

At present, this is the policy—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chevrier: I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Finance, on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is reading a document which he says comes from Canada House, and he is trying to put the authority of Canada House behind it. That is not a document, Mr. Chairman, that has the authority of Canada House behind it any more than the post office of this country is responsible for the accuracy of the texts it may carry through the mails.

Mr. Benidickson: Canada House sent it out.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member is pretending that Canada House stands behind this, that is a misrepresentation. This is simply an extract from a British newspaper, and the article was written by someone who was not at Accra. It is not an accurate interpretation of what happened at Accra.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is annoyed by what I have said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Because it is a departure from the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: I have not departed from the truth. I said at the outset of my remarks, if you had listened or if you had understood, either one or the other, that this was prepared by the information office at Canada House, and I submit I have the right to read the last paragraph. I quote:

At present, this is the policy only of the Canadians, whose eloquent finance minister, Mr. Fleming, drafted the document. Mr. Fleming, a political to his fingertips,—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can help the hon. member with what was said.

Mr. Chevrier:

—is well aware of the value of the appealing over the heads of the British government to the profound fund of commonwealth sentiment that exists in this country.

(Translation):

In concluding, I should like to say that I understand now why the minister did not like the last part of that statement. He did not like it because probably—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That report is false.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister says that the report is false. Then, everything I said since the outset of my remarks must be false or inaccurate.

I should like to tell the minister that since neither he nor his colleague will consent to show us the text of what was said over there, I will accept the report which appeared n the Canadian newspapers.

Mr. Chairman, it is six o'clock—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You would rather believe what is not true.

(Text):

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, a very long report was given to this committee by the Minister of Finance as to what had happened at the Accra conference. I remember the last election only too vividly. At that time I had been given to understand that the Conservatives, if they received the confidence of the Canadian electorate, which they did, were going to end the days where we had all our eggs in one basket, as the saying is. They were going to transfer much more of our trade away from the U.S.A. and there was going to be a great enhancement of our trade with the commonwealth and especially with the United Kingdom.

I have also been in this house long enough that I remember only too clearly the day when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs accused a former government of giving Britain a stab in the back. This had to do with the attempted invasion of Egypt by Britain. I feel that at this particular time this government is giving the government of the United Kingdom a stab in the back, a much worse kind of stab than the St. Laurent government might ever have inflicted upon the motherland.

We have had a number of debates in this house on the importance of the European economic community. Members of both opposition parties have repeatedly urged this government to ally our economy more closely with the economy of the United Kingdom. I remember very well the day when the hon. member for Ottawa West introduced a resolution in this house advocating a free trading arrangement between Canada and the British West Indies. The government has paid no heed to these recommendations, and now a goodly number of us are afraid that we are about to see the end of the British West Indies Federation. I am sure no member of this committee would like to see the disintegration of the British West Indies Federation. I should like to read from the editorial page of the Financial Post of September 30. The editorial states in a concluding paragraph:

> Is there no commercial bargain Canada could afford which would make confederation attractive to Jamaica? Their vote was not so decisive as to be irreversible.

I should like to pose this question to the government of the day. If they had paid any heed to the proposal which was put before this house in a resolution brought forward by the hon. member for Ottawa West, the vote in Jamaica might well have been different.

I believe that the Canadian government at the present time is guilty either of asserting its desire to supplant the United Kingdom in its traditional role as the leader of the commonwealth or, for other reasons which I shall not enumerate, of attempting to sabotage the whole concept of the commonwealth. Many articles have appeared to the effect that the Canadian government is attempting to take over from the United Kingdom the role of leadership within the commonwealth. I was amazed when the Minister of Finance this afternoon used the phrase "commonwealth values will weaken". That is the substance. I had never imagined that commonwealth ties were based primarily on dollars and cents, but apparently the government of the day places a greater value on immediate and selfish Canadian commercial interests than on the traditional and historic values which so many of us have always associated with the concept of the British commonwealth. The minister's own words were "commonwealth values will weaken". That is the substance. If the financial loss to Canada is the substance of our loyalty and love for the commonwealth, then I say that this Tory government is not a Tory government in any sense of the word but a purely selfish government. If commonwealth ties will weaken because we will lose money, then I say that this Tory government is being disloyal to its own name.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are not telling the truth.

Mr. Regier: It is a wrecker of the commonwealth if it has that kind of attitude.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was not the Canadian attitude.

Mr. Regier: A year ago I said that the Minister of Finance was marching around western Europe like the abominable snowman with a club over his shoulder. He has not foresaken that club, and his speeches and the reports we have had out of Accra show that he is still marching around with that club over his shoulder attempting to dictate to the United Kingdom. Despite all the bland assurances of the minister this afternoon that this decision is one for the United Kingdom to make, we cannot forget that this government is attempting to enlist as much support as it can in the rest of the commonwealth in order to prevent the United Kingdom government from looking after the interests of its own population.

I was pleased that the minister at no time attempted to deny that the immediate best interest of the United Kingdom is to ally the economy of the United Kingdom with that of the European community.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Evidently you did not listen to me.

Mr. Regier: All we are saying is that this government ought to be aiding and assisting and joining with the government of the United Kingdom, not only so that there might be a greater interchange of goods between members of the commonwealth themselves but also between nations belonging to the European economic community and commonwealth nations. That would be an approach which, in the long run, would really be worth while and one which would be worthy of the interest and the sentiments of the Canadian people. I can only recall, in conclusion, the words used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as he now is, at a time when Great Britain was in difficulty in the Middle East when he said: "This government is, really, pushing a knife into the back of our mother country."

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a malicious untruth.

Mr. Regier: It is not a malicious untruth, and the minister is well aware of it.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, the minister has no right to say that it is a malicious untruth. That is a reflection on the hon. member. He may say a statement is untrue but to say that it is malicious is contrary to the rules which govern this committee. The minister should know better than that.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Regier: I am very happy to let the record speak for itself. If the Minister of Finance wishes to leave that on the record it is up to him. He has often made retorts in the heat of the moment. As I say, I shall leave it up to him.

I had expected that this debate would have been concerned with the estimates of the department. I wish, now, to return to those estimates. I know that we have concluded the debate on the dominion-provincial tax arrangements. However, I do want to add one statement to what has been said, and I think it is appropriate at this time. Even though I come from British Columbia, one of the wealthiest areas of the dominion, and even though our premier continuously rants and rails at the hard deal he pretends he is getting from the federal government, I should like to say that I am a Canadian first and a British Columbian second. Despite the legislation which was approved yesterday, I hope this government will give serious consideration to doing much more on behalf of the "have not" provinces of Canada than has been indicated up to now. I realize that in terms of the legislation which has been passed today, in the long run my own province of British Columbia is going to lose. However, despite that, a decision has been made and I am not referring to that decision. I do hope that many times the aid which has so far been given will be made available to Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

It almost breaks your heart to walk into a school house in rural Nova Scotia and see how little those people who have always loved education so much are able to offer their children compared with what we in British Columbia are able to offer ours. I hope the day is not too far distant when the government will appeal to the Canadian people as a whole to make many more tens of millions of dollars available in order to enable the boys and girls of eastern Canada to enjoy the same opportunities and rights that are presently enjoyed by the boys and girls of Ontario and British Columbia.

I fail to see in the estimates any indication that the present government is aware of the fantastic discrepancy that exists in the opportunities that are available to Canadian children in one part of Canada as opposed to another. I assure the government that when it decides to spend not $25 million but $250 million annually in order to ensure equality of opportunity among Canadian children I shall go out on the public platform in British Columbia and defend the action and attitude of the government in that regard.

I turn now to the subject of interest rates, a major item in the estimates. I wish to underline the importance of a reduction in prevailing interest rates to our prosperity and national welfare. This government proposes to spend no less than $747 million on interest on the public debt. This is roughly ten times as much as we propose to spend on the C.B.C. which offers so much of value to the Canadian public.

Mr. Benidickson: Three million dollars more on interest than Mr. Harris spent.

Mr. Regier: The government proposes to spend through the Department of Agriculture an amount that is roughly one fifth of the amount the minister proposes to spend on interest on the public debt. The Department of External Affairs intends to spend only $88 million. Our contribution to world peace totals $88 million but our homage to the money lenders will represent an expenditure ten times as great. This levy will be hard on the taxpayers and I appeal to the minister in the interest of the welfare of our Canadian economy.

I have in my hand the September 30 issue of the Financial Post. In another editorial I notice a report to the effect that Canadian manufacturers now must invest $13,377 per employee in equipment and facilities. I hope the government realizes that a lowering of interest rates by 2 per cent in relation to the total working force and the investment I referred to would make possible an increase in wages of $22.30 per month. I used the figure of 2 per cent deliberately because since this government took office interest rates not only to governments but to individuals and corporations have increased by more than 2 per cent. A lowering of interest rates by some 2 per cent would make possible an increase in wages or a reduction in the cost of production and would make us more competitive in the world, involving an amount of $22.30 per month for every individual employed in industry.

Not many Canadian realize the important role the level of interest rates plays in our cost of production at this time. I feel the minister does not appreciate it nor did the former governor of the Bank of Canada. Incidentally, I was happy to observe that at long last the minister has assumed responsibility for the monetary and fiscal policy of this nation. I believe all Canadians breathed a sigh of relief when the problem was resolved at long last.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was possible only after there was a change of governors.

Mr. Regier: If the minister now wishes to reverse himself I leave that up to him. I read carefully the statement released by the new governor and that released by the minister at the time of the appointment. If the minister wishes to reverse himself in this regard that is strictly up to him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said that that was possible only after a change of governors.

Mr. Regier: I did not agree with the policy of the former governor that interest rates have to be left to find their own level. If he wants to I believe the minister can do much toward reducing the level of prevailing interest rates paid by all governments, individuals and corporations.

[Mr. Regier.]

While on that subject I wish to present an idea to the minister. The hon. gentleman has been visiting in many parts of the world and has met many new people. I hope he has acquired many new ideas. If that is so he may not be very receptive to a proposal. However, I believe it would be in the national interest if at least once a year there was a meeting of the federal government and of provincial governments at which they would express opinions on and assess all their borrowing needs for the ensuing 12 months including the borrowing needs of all municipalities, hospitals, school boards, etc. I understand this has been done for a number of years in another commonwealth nation where the central government meets with the governments of the state once a year and makes a survey of all their borrowing needs. They then obtain information concerning how much investment capital might be available within the nation for the purposes of government and agencies of government. As I understand it, once the formula has been agreed upon, then the federal government does all the borrowing on behalf of the provinces, the municipalities, the school boards, the hospitals, and so forth, and it allocates the money that it has been able to borrow on a previously agreed upon formula. This would bring about a tremendous lowering of the interest burden that now has to be borne by us when we pay our school taxes, our hospital levies, our municipal taxes and our provincial taxes. All the borrowing is done by the federal government on a mutual understanding with all levels of government. I believe this would be a great improvement upon the existing situation where there are levels of government of all kinds and government agencies competing with each other on the money markets in order to obtain their required funds.

While I am on my feet may I say I hope that before these estimates are concluded the minister will express the attitude of this government in regard to what I believe is the issuing of money on the part of provincial governments. Our government in British Columbia has been issuing bonds payable on demand with interest. In my books this in effect is no different from a dollar bill. Once a government issues a bond payable on demand with or without interest it is the same as issuing money. I might warn the minister that unless this government takes a position on what is happening in this regard he may find 10 provincial governments issuing currency of this kind and his whole monetary and fiscal policy will go out the window. I believe that the right to issue currency is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. I hope the federal government will take a look at this business and will assert its rights in this regard, as it had to do on another occasion many long years ago with respect to the activities of another western government.

I know the government is most concerned about its deficit. I am sure the Minister of Finance is not happy at having to record his fourth or fifth consecutive deficit. The forecasts he has made have been so wrong. The newspaper world is encouraged to report a 3 per cent increase, I believe it is, in our gross national product. I should like to analyse that report and to see what it means in terms of our dollar today and of our per capita production, because the minister is aware of the fact that there has been a decline in the per capita production of goods and services ever since this government took office. Percentage-wise the decline has been considerable. I believe the minister also knows that our economy needs a 6 per cent per capita per annum growth in order to supply the employment opportunities that the country needs.

I would suggest to the government that this is its responsibility, if it wants to balance the budget and bail out the minister before he gets appointed to some other place. The way to do it is to get the economy going again, and to get it rolling at least to the extent of a 6 per cent increase per capita per annum in real wealth. If the government will take measures that will enhance and boost the economy to that extent I shall have no quarrel to find with a deficit if it is designed to fulfil that purpose. But the deficit was designed only to patch up the immediate situation; it was not designed to give our economy the boost that it needs. If the government is going to give our economy that boost, then the day is not far distant when the minister will no longer have to report a deficit; he will be able to report a surplus instead. You cannot report a surplus when you have a million people unemployed.

I hope the government is going to do much more in the months immediately ahead than it has done in the past to get Canada on to a rolling start. Among other things there is need to associate ourselves with the economies of western Europe and of the United Kingdom. If we intend to bury our heads in the sand and think that we can continually live off the little bit of the spillover of prosperity that may come to us across the 49th parallel we will be hurting not only our own Canadian welfare but we will be also very seriously damaging the cause of western unity and of world peace.

Mr. Hees: When I rose before the dinner recess, Mr. Chairman, as you know, I asked permission to have a table inserted in Hansard which I thought would be useful to hon. members and would enable them to study the important question that is of so much interest to the committee, namely the possible entry of Great Britain into the common market. That permission was denied by the opposition. That, of course, is understandable because they do not want to be confused by knowledge or facts; they would far sooner go on approaching these matters from the point of view of ignorance and not know the facts about the matter they are discussing. However, as I said, I have arranged to have that table distributed to hon. members. I know members of the opposition will not look at it because they do not want to be informed, but I know that the Conservative members of parliament, who are good members of parliament, who want to be advised about important matters of the day, will study it with great interest. They will see it shows the effect which the United Kingdom acceptance of the European common market tariff could have on our trade with the United Kingdom market. After studying it, I feel that hon. members will understand why I took such pains at Accra to point out to the United Kingdom government the importance to Canada of maintaining our present trading arrangements in that market.

We are convinced that when another government is contemplating action which we believe could seriously affect the welfare of Canadians, it is our duty to bring that matter to the attention of the other government well in advance of the contemplated action being taken, and this we have done. The official opposition objects to our having done this, as shown by the words of the Leader of the Opposition when he said in this house on Friday, September 15, as recorded at page 8407 of Hansard:

> May I ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of what he has just said. In view of what he has said, will the right hon. gentleman instruct the ministers concerned to stop their public squealing before Canada is hurt.

I can quite understand the Leader of the Opposition saying this, Mr. Chairman, as the government of which he was a member never did have the courage to speak up to another government about matters concerning the welfare of Canadians until after action had been taken, and it was then too late to do anything about it. The former government would then squeal piteously, but, of course, it was too late.

The leader of the C.C.F. party took a different and much more objective view of this whole matter when he commented on it last Tuesday. He suggested, if I interpret his remarks correctly, that Canada should make application to join the European common market, and I should like to comment now on that suggestion. The countries which form the European common market are steadily reducing the tariffs which apply against each member country until they disappear and there is free trade among the countries which form the group. By the end of this year these internal tariffs will have been cut approximately in half.

Manufacturing industries in the European common market countries have a high degree of efficiency and a great deal of technological skill. They also have lower wage rates than we have here in Canada. The result is that they produce products of good design and quality at prices which are usually lower than those at which similar Canadian products can be offered for sale. The result is that if our manufacturing industries in Canada are faced with competition on a free trade basis with the industries of western Europe, they will, in most cases, come off second best, with the consequent loss of production and employment.

More than one quarter of our people in Canada are directly employed in manufacturing industries, and a great many more are employed in industries which service manufacturing, such as transportation, production of power, and so on. I would estimate that somewhere between one third and one half of our people are directly affected by the level of manufacturing activity in this country, and many more, such as the shopkeepers in the industrial areas, are indirectly affected.

Although the need for maintaining a strong and healthy manufacturing industry is particularly important to those areas in Canada where manufacturing is concentrated, it is equally important for the future in those areas where secondary industry must be developed so that the economies of all parts of the country may become diversified, and not be dependent on one or a few primary industries. The past summer, Mr. Chairman, has given us a prime example of how the weather can affect the income of large numbers of our people living in areas which depend largely on agricultural production. The new manufacturing industries which we must develop in all parts of the country cannot be developed if they have to face free trade competition from the industries of western Europe.

These are matters which must be kept very much in mind when we are considering the desirability or otherwise of joining various trading groups. I can assure all hon. members that these questions are being intensively studied by the government, to make sure that the best possible arrangements for our country as a whole are worked out.

[Mr. Hees.]

In speaking for the official opposition, the hon. member for Laurier was less specific than the leader of the C.C.F. in his suggestions as to the action the government should take. He contented himself mainly with protests against the approach which the Minister of Finance and I took at Accra on behalf of our farmers, our fishermen, our lumbermen, our miners, our other primary producers and our manufacturers. He objected on behalf of his party—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The member for Laurier made no such affirmation and the minister either was not listening to the speech which the member for Laurier made or he did not understand it because I made no such affirmation, nor do I recognize the language the minister has just quoted.

Mr. Hees: I am referring to a speech by the hon. member for Laurier which I listened to with great attention this afternoon, wherein he found great fault with what the Minister of Finance and I did at Accra, where we put forward very clearly and incisively the position of Canadian producers of all kinds, our farmers, our fishermen, our lumbermen, our miners, our other primary producers and our manufacturers.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not so.

Mr. Hees: That is what we did, Mr. Chairman. I claim that is what we did. I was at Accra and so was the Minister of Finance. We both know what we said and we put forward on behalf of Canada—

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Creaghan): We have had two points of order on the same subject. I listened to most of the debate this afternoon and I am more or less in agreement with both hon. members. It seems to me that the fault, if any, is brought about by the fact that we have had two types of allegations. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce legitimately has the floor and if the hon. member for Laurier will permit him to proceed I am sure more progress will be made.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the house I am not going to allow the minister to proceed if he is stating things that I did not say. What he is trying to do is to take words out of context and put them into a text which has been prepared for delivery for him here. I will not stand for that because that is contrary to the rules of the house. What I did today was to complain bitterly about the attitude that had been taken by these ministers as reported in the press, and unless they produce the documents containing the statements they made there they have no right to complain about my statement in the house.

Mr. Hees: The Minister of Finance and I have made very clear what we said at Accra. As the spokesman for the C.C.F. party said quite rightly, when an hon. member states that he did or did not say something, it is considered proper procedure for other hon. members to accept what he says. I have said, and the Minister of Finance has said, that when we were at Accra we put forward very sincerely the reasons why it is necessary to maintain our present trading arrangements in the British market, arrangements which benefit our fishermen, our farmers, our lumbermen, our miners, our other primary producers and our manufacturers.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not in the minister's text.

Mr. Hees: The Acting Leader of the Opposition has objected very strongly to the attitude that we took, and the fact that we put forward these views strongly and clearly. The Minister of Finance pointed out that the Right Hon. Mr. Maudling, who was at that meeting, said that the views that had been expressed had been put forward in a moderate and constructive way.

Mr. Chevrier: There are many others who state the contrary.

Mr. Hees: I would think that the hon. member for Laurier would accept the view of an independent British minister who was there, and has said what he heard, instead of what the hon. member for Laurier thinks he would like to believe was said there.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Hees: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister if he said at Accra: "And so we in Canada are convinced that we are considering not only an economic problem which has far-reaching implications for all of us but also a problem which involves the future of the commonwealth itself"?

Mr. Hees: That is correct. I said that, and expressions of that kind were made by virtually every delegation that was there.

Mr. Pickersgill: The slippery slope.

Mr. Hees: What is bothering the hon. member is that he and his colleagues were not representing Canada at that meeting, for the very good reason of what happened on June 10, 1957.

Mr. Chevrier: Old stuff.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And because they are not representing Canada they are misrepresenting Canada.

Mr. Hees: By their attitude and their objection to the point of view that the Minister of Finance and I expressed at Accra so forcefully and sincerely on behalf of all Canadian producers, the opposition has made it very clear, in this exhibition of great world statesmanship or whatever it is that they have in their minds, that they are perfectly willing to see these important trading relations diminished even though it would make a great deal of difference to the production, livelihood, and standard of living of our producers in Canada. That is what they are saying. We put forward a sincere point of view on behalf of those producers. They object to our having done so. Therefore they are saying, "You should have sat back and kept quiet; you should have been good little boys and have done what we did when we were in office and attending meetings of this kind". All they did was to mouth platitudes which meant nothing, and let the other governments go ahead without knowing what Canada's views were.

Mr. Chevrier: Take a look at the standard of living over there.

Mr. Hees: We felt it was our responsibility to let the British government know exactly how Canada felt about this matter. The other commonwealth delegates at that meeting did exactly the same thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I were the Minister of Finance, I would say that was false.

Mr. Hees: Now, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we heard nothing but protests, and we have heard nothing but protests ever since we were at Accra. It remained, however, for that other leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Essex East, to advance a positive suggestion on behalf of his party. This he did in Charlottetown, and it is reported in the Ottawa Journal of September 27 by the Canadian Press. I should like to read exactly what the Canadian Press, a reliable news agency—

Mr. Pickersgill: Except at Accra.

Mr. Benidickson: That was British United Press.

Mr. Hees: I have had no comment to make on what any particular newspaperman had to say.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your colleague had, the other twin.

Mr. Hees: We are talking about what I am saying. This is what the other leader of the opposition had to say at Charlottetown, as reported by the Canadian Press. If anyone would like to have the article, here it is:

> The Canadian government's approach to Britain's participation in the European common market is mistaken and negative, Liberal Paul Martin told the Prince Edward Island Liberal leadership convention Monday.
> The former Liberal cabinet minister said the Diefenbaker government should try to unite Britain, the United States, and Canada with the European trade group in a North Atlantic community, rather than lecture the United Kingdom on its trade policy.

Mr. Benidickson: What is the matter with that?

Mr. Hees: I am very interested to note that all the members in the Liberal party present in the house applaud that statement. They are in favour of entering into a trade group comprised of Britain, the United States, Canada and Europe. Now, Mr. Chairman, this involves nothing less than free trade with those countries, including the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the Minister of Finance what his interpretation was.

Mr. Hees: That is exactly what the hon. member for Essex East was putting forward on behalf of his party, and all the Liberal members present in the house applauded this suggestion.

This is an interesting suggestion, free trade, because it takes us back to the election of 1911, the reciprocity election. In making the suggestion, the hon. member for Essex East seems to forget that United States industrial plants, with a market ten times the size of the Canadian market, can usually produce on a much larger scale and at a lower cost than can corresponding Canadian plants. On a free trade basis with Canada, which is what the Liberal party is now advocating in this house, the United States plants would simply increase their production by 10 per cent, at very little extra cost, and pour their cheap goods into this country. The effect on our manufacturing industries would be very serious indeed.

It is very interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, where the hon. member for Essex East made his speech. It was down in Prince Edward Island, a province which is primarily interested in agricultural production, a province which could be counted upon to be interested in free trade ideas. I would suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that he make the identical speech, urging free trade with the United States, in his home city of Windsor. I ask him to go there and make his speech to the labour unions and workers of Windsor, and explain to them what he thinks would be the result in his own city if we had free trade with the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is nothing about free trade with the United States in that at all.

Mr. Hees: That is exactly what a trading area, including the United States, would mean and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate knows that quite well. If it does not mean that, what does a trading area mean?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will answer the hon. gentleman, since he has asked me a question.

Mr. Hees: I will answer the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has asked me a question—

Mr. Hees: I have the floor.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman asked me a question and I propose to answer that question unless I am denied the opportunity.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hees: I have the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: Keep it; you don't want an answer.

Mr. Hees: I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that the European common market is a trading group which is moving towards free trade within that group, and the same kind of association, including Canada and the United States, which is being advocated in this house by the Liberal party, would include the United States and Canada in a free trade area. I should like them now to go out across the country and explain to all our manufacturers, all our industrial centres across Canada—

Mr. Pickersgill: Let me explain it now.

Mr. Hees: —what they feel would be the effect of free trade with the United States. As I say, United States plants have a far bigger market—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order—

Mr. Hees: There is no point of order. The United States plants have a market ten times the size of our market—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rises on a point of order, and in that situation the minister should yield the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order, sir, is a very simple one. We are debating the estimates of the Department of Finance. It was understood in debating them that we would discuss the government's conduct at Accra. However, it was not considered that we would have an academic debate—

Mr. Hees: It is beginning to hurt a little now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —it was not considered that we would have an academic debate on the policy of the Liberal party which, unfortunately for this country, does not happen to be in office now. I suggest that if we are going to have that debate, and I would have no objection to it, a Liberal spokesman should be allowed to expose Liberal policy—

An hon. Member: It has been exposed now.

Mr. Pickersgill: —instead of the extraordinary farce to which we are listening now by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: This is not a point of order, this is a speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: I entreat the chairman—

Mr. Hees: This is not a point of order, it is a speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am still on the point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: My earlier advice was that there was a consensus ad idem among all parties in the house that we might close the session this evening and, in that spirit, we might move along with the debate. Perhaps I was allowing a little more latitude than might otherwise have been the case on the understanding that there would be comment on the visit of the two ministers involved abroad. I would ask the indulgence of the committee, if I may, with the end in view that we might conclude the session this evening. Perhaps we could get on with the discussion of the first item of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Hees: I am, as always, only too glad to conform with your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to discuss for a moment the administration of the government with particular reference to items coming under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. At this stage in our proceedings, I should like to address myself to that part of his duties connected with responsibility for tarriffs and foreign trade negotiation. I think it is clear that is squarely within his responsibility and can be discussed at this time on item 1. I have particular reference, of course, to his attendance at the commonwealth conference at Accra and to the attitude taken by the Canadian government there. It is a matter of regret to me that a subject as important as this should have been treated in the way it was treated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce tonight. It seems to me that the matter is of major importance to all Canadians and I should have thought that the government would have wished to treat it responsibly and have their policy exposed and defended, or varied, as they see fit.

However, it seems that the exuberant feelings of the Minister of Trade and Commerce led him into every irrelevance that one usually associates with someone a great many years his junior—many decades, perhaps I should say. The Minister of Finance in his remarks this afternoon started out by applying very strong language to the newspaper reports of his speech. He said that the newspaper reports contained many gross inaccuracies and he expressed himself in language of that sort.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say reports; I said articles and editorials.

Mr. Pickersgill: Muttering again.

Mr. McIlraith: He generally questioned the treatment of his conduct at this conference as reported in the newspapers. He referred to the radio commentators' remarks on this subject as a blatant lie. Then he went on to say, when he was dealing with that part of the newspaper stories which indicated that the policy of the government had the effect of being anti-British and anti-commonwealth, as I have noted his remarks, "When any government takes an anti-British line, I will not be a minister". I copied the remarks down and I think that is a precise indication of his feelings, and I agree with them. I think that is an accurate expression of his feelings.

The point I wish to deal with tonight is the policy of the government, as best we can get it, in spite of the minister's attempt to quote verbatim from a speech he delivered in Accra and then not tabling the speech. His colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce pulled another of his famous booboos and inadvertently distributed his speech to the press. We have only the text of the press report of the copy delivered to it, together with all these other comments in the newspapers which seem to concern the Minister of Finance so much.

The release I have is one by a press gallery correspondent of some three decades, Mr. Norman MacLeod. It is a U.P.I. press dispatch which is headed:

> Informatively, following runs to around 2,000 words. It includes most of the text of a major speech by trade minister George Hees on Britain's proposed entry into the European common market.

That is the only document made available for public circulation, and the newspapers. That document having been made available to the press, even although by mistake, clumsiness or what have you, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I asked that the actual text covering the parts of the speech that are dealt with in this press report be made available so there should be no confusion as to just what was said, because I think it is of the utmost concern to the country that there be great accuracy in this matter. The minister refused this request.

I have made reference to this matter in earlier debates. Indeed on April 24, the opposition moved an amendment to a supply motion in these words:

> This house regrets the protectionist and inconsistent trade policies of the government and its failure to develop a long term foreign economic policy to enable Canada to participate fully in the challenging new opportunities in the field of international trade by implementing a vigorous program to promote the expansion of our secondary manufacturing industries and by encouraging the development of an Atlantic economic community.

In that debate on April 24 and 25 reference was made to the European common market and a good deal of the debate turned on the positions of the parties concerning the European common market. I do not propose to repeat the arguments made at that time but I want to make passing reference to the fact that this subject matter was dealt with and I charged the two ministers concerned with threats of retaliation to the United Kingdom if she joined the common market, and that their negative and threatening attitude was only harmful to our interests.

The Minister of Finance is on record as denying the newspaper stories which I quoted on that occasion. I think he will recall that he denied them quite strenuously, using such terms as "nonsense" and terms of that sort.

Mr. Chevrier: His usual epithets.

Mr. McIlraith: I can give the minister the exact reference if he wishes. The point is that, having taken that position with regard to stories that were mild compared with the current stories of the positions of the two ministers, he now comes along and is again in the position where he takes the offensive in repudiating the newspaper comment and reports of the position taken by the ministers. But this time we have the actual text of the speech, or part of the speech delivered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I take it to be admitted that the part of the speech the U.P.I. put out is accurate. I refer to that part of the text which supports the stories, and the release seems to form the basis of most of the stories. It is with this matter that I wish to deal tonight.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

I think this whole subject matter has got out of context in the argument of the Minister of Finance this afternoon. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, in the United Kingdom House of Commons on July 31, had something to say on this subject. I think it should be quoted for the purpose of getting the atmosphere in which the conference was held.

The part I will quote can be found either in the United Kingdom records of the House of Commons, or it is reported in the European free trade association bulletin for August and September, 1961, page 7. The excerpt I wish to quote is this:

> I believe it is our duty and our interest to contribute towards that strength by securing the closest possible unity within Europe. At the same time, if a closer relationship between the United Kingdom and the countries of the European economic community were to disrupt the long-standing and historic ties between the United Kingdom and the other nations of the commonwealth, the loss would be greater than the gain.
> The commonwealth is a great source of stability and strength, both to western Europe and to the world as a whole, and I am sure that its value is fully appreciated by the member governments of the E.E.C. I do not think that Britain's contribution to the commonwealth will be reduced if Europe unites. On the contrary I think its value will be enhanced.

That was the attitude taken by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom reporting to his parliament before the conference took place. I think there can be no issue that his view about the commonwealth and its being a great source of stability and strength, both to western Europe and to the world as a whole, is the correct view. I think all hon. members of this house would agree wholeheartedly with that proposition. But what has happened now is that the Minister of Finance and his colleague have by their conduct taken a position that is destructive of the commonwealth, and they have—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Pardon?

Mr. McIlraith: I said, Mr. Chairman, that the ministers, by their position at the Accra conference, have done something that is destructive of the commonwealth.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ridiculous.

Mr. McIlraith: They may not have intended to do it, but that is the inevitable consequence of the line of argument they took.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I might be allowed to develop my argument. I am not accusing hon. gentlemen opposite of wilfully doing it. I am accusing them of doing it—

Mr. Pickersgill: Through ignorance.

Mr. McIlraith: Well, I was about to use a somewhat milder term, and say that the damage done is a natural consequence of the position taken and of the method used to handle the situation and explain Canada's point of view. In this connection I invite the two ministers concerned to study the remarks made by Canada's Prime Minister when they were absent from this country and their comments first came before the House of Commons. They would notice a wide divergence in the points of view which have been expressed—a marked difference between what the Prime Minister said on that occasion in answer to questions, though, of course, the right hon. gentleman could only speak briefly on that occasion—as compared with what has been said by the two ministers today.

The bulletin of the European free trade association for August-September, 1961 contains a series of comments on Britain's decision to apply for membership of the European economic community. The opinions of a number of well known newspapers are printed and all of them express approval of the stand taken by the United Kingdom. For example, approval is expressed by such papers as the New York Times, the Paris newspaper Les Echos, the Frankfurter Allgemine and the Journal de Geneve. These comments all show a constructive approach to the problem. The Canadian approach is altogether different, and without repeating the arguments which have been put forward in relation to what should have been done I should like to explore this question a little further.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce used these words in his speech in Ghana:

> There is no substitute for the terms of access we are now afforded in the United Kingdom market.

Hon. members will note that this statement is absolute in its terms. I should have thought there might well be substitutes which would be more to the advantage of Canadian producers of farm products. In any case, it would be seen that the argument advanced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this important subject is a negative, restrictive and destructive one. What was required was a positive approach, recognizing that the great period of prosperity in this country under the former administration during the late forties and fifties took place under a government which was seeking to liberalize trade. The ministers representing this country at Accra should have been putting forward solutions seeking an expansion of trade rather than trying to preserve, in all the circumstances, the identical form of the trade pattern which exists at the present time.

The minister must recognize that the ECM group of countries has in the last two years been enjoying a period of prosperity which may well be without parallel in recent history. Incidentally, I was disappointed that, when the Minister of Finance used an argument this afternoon with reference to the size of the common market, he should have referred only to the number of persons living in that area and compared that number with the population of the commonwealth, making no reference whatever to the volume of trade, to purchasing power or to the other factors which ought properly to be considered in this context together with population. I thought that was not a worthy way of expressing the point of view which, apparently, the hon. gentleman wished to express at that time. A question of this sort must be dealt with on a much broader basis. It is not just the number of persons in a particular market which matters. There are a great many other factors which must be considered including, for example, the potential of that market and its purchasing power.

Then there was another phrase, used at Accra, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Speaking of the damage which would be done if commonwealth preference were to be changed or reduced, he said that in some cases irreparable damage would be done if our present trading arrangements with the United Kingdom were altered. Had the minister been thinking in a positive way he would have put forward constructive proposals calculated to minimize any damage. Such proposals would, possibly, have the effect of bringing about great gains for this country instead of damage. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should recognize some of the facts which apply to trade in the commonwealth, in Europe and in the world as these facts exist today, and that he try to act constructively and responsibly so that Canada may play a full part in working out means of enlarging our trade pattern rather than merely giving an obstructive lecture to the United Kingdom at a time when the country is faced with a very difficult decision to make. I may add that I am sure her government will have the capacity to make that decision. I am disappointed that our own government did not address itself to these problems and come forward with a more constructive solution.

I do not wish to develop an argument on the finance department's estimates which deals with all aspects of trade. I wish to confine my observations as far as possible to the part played by the two ministers at this conference. However, I would point out that in debates in this house, both on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and on a supply motion amendment on April 24 and 25, the nature of such a constructive approach was put forward from this side of the chamber. That is the kind of action which should have been taken. That is the kind of attitude which should have been adopted. Perhaps at this late hour I should not elaborate, other than to say that in my view the two ministers ought to be concerning themselves with getting rid of some of the burdens they are placing on the backs of production in this country. They should be seeking to put both our primary producers and our secondary industries into a competitive position instead of blindly piling burden after burden on their backs as they are now doing.

Somewhere in his remarks at Accra the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the commonwealth was held together by tradition, trust and trade. Though he did not say it in so many words, the theme of his argument at that point was: "And the greatest of these is trade". The commonwealth I think, is held together by many ties other than trade. I am not one to minimize the importance of trade within the commonwealth. I have no desire to do that and indeed, I tend rather to maximize its importance. However as I say, the commonwealth, which has represented such a great force in the world over the years, is held together by other things besides trade. That hideous parody of a biblical quotation was rather ill advised. If the minister wishes I can elaborate.

Mr. Hees: I will take it as read.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister might well do so. If he wishes to develop it he will see that the British press characterized that part of his speech as the Canadian Tory imperialism.

In any event, in complaining about the comment made by the press in this country the Minister of Finance said—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not only the press in this country.

Mr. McIlraith: This and other countries. The minister was very sweeping in his denunciation of press comment. I do not like using his adjectives because it seems to me they are unnecessarily offensive. There is no doubt, however, what he meant. He denounced them in excessive and abusive terms.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce quoted one newspaper with some approval and I wish to quote from this source, too. The source is the Ottawa Journal and I refer to the September 26 issue carrying an article by Duart Farquharson of the Journal's London bureau. The article reads in part as follows:

> The head-on clash between Britain and the overseas commonwealth countries at the Accra finance ministers' meeting was not exaggerated but underplayed by the British press, according to Canadian finance minister Fleming.
> To set the record straight, Mr. Fleming last week called in leading British correspondents covering the international monetary fund meeting in Vienna. With great emotion, he argued that commonwealth countries were unanimous in their condemnation of Britain's attempt to join the common market. They were not merely striking up bargaining postures, but sincerely believed that such a British move was bound to result in the disintegration of the commonwealth.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He was not there and that is a very inaccurate statement.

Mr. McIlraith: It is interesting that the minister should say that the reports written by the press men at the press conference were wrong, that he should take the position that he was misunderstood. I think it unlikely that all the press men in the United Kingdom are wrong or are incapable of understanding the English language as spoken by the Minister of Finance. The minister takes the position that they are all out of step. Hon. members know the story about the infantry platoon sergeant.

Mr. Hees: Tell us.

Mr. McIlraith: It will be recalled that a fond mother came up to him and said that all the men in the platoon were out of step except her little Willie. I am wondering whether one should substitute the name Donald?

The comments on the situation as carried by the United Kingdom press are based on the minister's own statement to the press. This is a very competent press and the minister's violent denunciation today will not favourably impress anyone in this committee or in the country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Duart Farquharson was not there at all.

Mr. McIlraith: I would not think that the minister's statement will favourably impress any of the press men whom the Minister of Finance so wrongly condemned in his interjections a few moments ago while I was speaking.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): His statement does not resemble the facts.

Mr. Benidickson: The Ottawa Journal is wrong again.

Mr. McIlraith: The press comment was founded on the press interview given by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Which press interview?

Mr. McIlraith: The one described as a British press conference at which the minister sought to make clear his position. I think the minister will agree that he succeeded in making it clear on that occasion just as he made it clear tonight.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no report of a press conference.

Mr. McIlraith: It is not at all surprising that the press in this country has adopted as the popular subject matter of cartoons the visit abroad of the two ministers in question. One such cartoon reveals the Minister of Finance in the garb of a hunter returning home to visit the Prime Minister and with him is his gun bearer, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Finance is depicted dragging a lion by the tail, the lion wearing a union jack and a crown. The caption reads: "Hi chief—see what we bagged in Africa!"

The point I wish to make is this. It is time—

Mr. Hees: Time.

Mr. McIlraith: —that this government adopted a policy on this most important subject and presented it carefully and responsibly in language that would not be misunderstood by all newspapers in this country, in other parts of the English speaking world and in Europe and I hope that in so doing the government will realize its responsibility for the development of the potential of this country and take such action as will develop that potential for the benefit of all Canadians so that this nation may once again go forward toward prosperity.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I have not dealt with some of the more important principles relating to the minister's speech. The minister indicated that there was a great desire—an absorbing interest, I think was his phrase—to consider the European economic community. Other hon. members on this side have dealt with that most effectively. Perhaps before the minister concludes his contribution to the debate on his estimates he will recognize that there is also a keen domestic interest in such matters as the Bladen report. We have received one report from the Glassco commission, the equivalent of the former Hoover commission in the United States. It simply indicated that some thirty committees had been set into operation. I feel that the minister should perhaps establish target dates for reporting with respect to the commission as a whole and its subcommittees.

Much interest has been accorded the minister's attendance at the Accra conference. Almost simultaneously the minister attended the annual meeting of the international monetary fund at Vienna. Perhaps he would choose to give us more detail about this before we conclude the debate on his estimates.

The minister and I have sat in this chamber for a number of years and often enjoyed debating together prior to his taking office. He was one who in debate expressed strong objections to a floating fixed rate on our interest. He held out the suggestion to gold mining areas in Canada that he and those associated with him politically would, if elected, be very vigorous in pursuing a change in the price of gold fixed by the United States. This, of course, has relationship to the international monetary fund or the world bank.

Before the minister concludes the discussion of his estimates he should give us his views about the quite substantial increase in the money supply. Since he spoke to us with some preparation on February 20 and 21 of this year the money supply has gone up. I should like to hear from the Minister of Finance about that.

I expect we shall have a new proposal shortly with respect to our national Canada savings bonds promotion campaign. What is the policy with respect to those? What is the policy with respect to savings bond sales for 1961? The minister knows there has been a great turnover of these bonds. This is a bond that one can buy and sell at par. Consequently, if new enticements or advantages are offered, bonds that were purchased years ago are turned over by most of the public or changed for the new opportunities of this year. Can the minister tell us about that?

The minister also knows that as the physician economically for our country at the moment he suggested in December that he had great confidence that we would have an impetus to our economy because of such things as the Columbia power development in British Columbia, the upper Thames development in my province and the Manitoba flood control development in the province in which I was born, and so on. He said these things would be a shot in the arm with respect to the economy of the country. This was part of the baby budget of last December. Can he report on that?

As I recall it, the minister said that Canada was a member, and tried to be a good and law-abiding member, of a new world wide organization related to textiles. He indicated that while we had rather keen competition from Hong Kong, that colony appeared to be a bit of a rebel in connection with its international relations. Can the minister tell us about that?

Perhaps not tonight but on another occasion the minister might tell us about the so-called Japanese voluntary indications of withdrawal in respect of certain trade competition and whether they are realistic.

I do not want the discussion of the minister's estimates to be concluded before we look at his statements which were clear and forthright when he made his budget speech on June 20 with respect to two points: first, interest rates generally across Canada; and second, the foreign exchange rate on the Canadian dollar.

Recently we had a debate on the Civil Service Act which is a responsibility of the minister. Since we might be back in two months time perhaps that will satisfy the committee for the moment. I know the minister is making notes, and I should like to ask him a question as to the exchange reserves, having in mind that he felt that he would take new leadership in this field. The exchange reserves of this country do not seem to be in line with the increase in the gross national product or with most of the other indices of our national growth. Having regard to that fund, does the minister think it should be as static as it has proved to be, or has he any policies with respect to it?

We have had a substantial debate on trade, either free trade or selective free trade. Since we are about at the end of the session I do not want to pursue the matter.

In his budget speech the minister introduced a special fund of $100 million to support long term and immediate term bonds. I say to the minister with very keen conviction that although he reported recently to the house on this, it is not an effective way of changing the cost of money to the municipalities and to the provinces. I say to him he also made another commitment to the provinces and to the municipalities that he hoped to stay out of the money market. We know that we have never had such a federal deficit as we had this year, namely a deficit of $650 million. Of course this has an adverse effect on municipalities and provinces, and equally important, it has an effect on industry which also must get capital requirements from the market. To quite an extent they are the people who pay the taxes to provide the minister with enough money to get along. We have had four years of deficits; we have had the biggest deficit ever in our history, a deficit of $650 million. The minister should tell us about this story, that he directed an investigation into the defence department.

He should tell us whether or not, as a result of that investigation, people employed and paid out of the vote before us, namely treasury board, came to the conclusion that there was waste and extravagance. I should like the minister to comment with respect to the numbers of defence personnel and the efficient use of the money expended under the grants that we have before us tonight.

Mr. McMillan: The estimates of the Department of Finance always seem to come up on the last day of the session when we are in a hurry to close. I want to deal very briefly with interest rates because I think they are fundamental to a good economy in Canada. I saw a dispatch from the Accra conference in which it was reported that the Minister of Finance had said that our economy was lagging behind that of the United States. I have always maintained that one of the reasons for our economy lagging behind that of the United States is higher interest rates. Our interest rates, particularly long-term bond interest rates, are higher by 1½ per cent. This differential has existed practically ever since the conversion loan and the high borrowing following that loan. The differential is now about three times the one half of 1 per cent that it was for a good many years prior to the conversion loan.

I think that this government sets long term interest rates by its policy, and if we look at what is going on now we can see that it sets short term interest rates as well. The government sets the mortgage interest rate on 25, 30 and 35 year mortgages at 6¾ per cent. I say this is too high a rate for any government security. I spoke on housing when we discussed it in the house, and the Minister of Public Works said at that time that he would like to see the interest rates on housing lowered. He said, however, that he did not know what they might do and that if interest rates were lowered, it would discourage the 48 per cent of money going into housing construction from the private sector.

I should like to ask this question. Where else can investment money secure a higher interest rate with government backing? Insurance companies and others with large funds to invest buy these mortgages and from what I have read it costs them about one half of 1 per cent to service them. The fact that mortgages are not as negotiable does not bother these big investment companies because their investment is a continuing and long term proposition. Again, mortgages have certain advantages because there is a gradual return of the principal. When there is inflation some of the principal continues to come back; but that is not true of a bond because the principal only returns at the time of maturity of the bond.

There is a differential of 1½ per cent or more between the mortgage interest rate and the long term bond interest rate. Investment companies are not interested so much in long term bonds if the differential is any less. If the differential becomes less, bids on bonds become thin, and this helps to keep the long term bond market depressed. If the interest goes up on housing the yield goes up on government bonds and the prices of the bonds are depressed. The reverse is true if the interest on housing goes down.

I maintain that our bond market should be a free market, and in effect it is not. When the minister sets a high interest rate on mortgages he is in effect setting a high interest rate on our long term bonds. At the present time high cost mortgage money is depressing our long term bond market. When a man buys a house and pays 6¾ per cent interest, whether he knows it or not he is contributing toward higher priced money required to meet the needs of the federal government and the provinces. He is also contributing toward higher cost money to meet the needs of municipalities which issue debentures to build roads, schools and other improvements. In a sense, therefore, he helps to increase his own taxes.

Because the minister has been unable to sell his long term bonds in volume, he has had to go to the short end of the market. This has had the effect of making more and more of our debt short term. As long term debt becomes due it is refinanced in the form of short term debt, the very opposite of what the minister said was desired at the time of the conversion loan. In fact, he gave as one of the reasons for the conversion loan the desirability of converting some of the short term debt to debt of a longer term.

In addition, all borrowing to meet present requirements goes into short term debt. It costs a lot of money to keep going into and out of the market. Our debt is being turned all the time and we know it costs a lot of money to go into and out of the market, because when he did so at the time of the conversion loan it cost over $50 million. It is little wonder then that in four years time the minister has handed the people of Canada an extra interest and servicing bill with respect to our public debt amounting to $800 million. He is getting set to load us up with more interest at a faster pace in the immediate future.

All of this is not a very good performance and is certainly bringing about much extra taxation for the taxpayer. Big money continues to get a high interest rate on mortgages. I know a number of people who own long term bonds. These bonds are depressed on the market at the present time. These people are just waiting for the bonds to come near par so that they can sell them. However, I do not think they will be able to sell them near par in the very near future because under the fiscal policy of this government the minister is actually pegging these bonds at a depreciated value.

Today I received a memorandum from one of the bond houses concerning the conversion of Canada savings bonds that is going on at the present time. In calling attention to the new savings bonds the memorandum has this to say:

> With the exception of three of the prior years' series currently outstanding and in the hands of the public, this year's bonds carry a higher interest rate and corresponding yield if held to maturity than any of the other prior series.

The memorandum goes on to state that for current borrowing the government is putting out 10-year bonds that are cashable at the bank at any time.

In the first year they will bear interest at 4¼ per cent; in the next six years at 4½ per cent and in the final five years up to November 1, 1971, at 5 per cent. This is what the government is paying now for money in the short-term bond market. According to this memorandum this new 1960 series of Canadian savings bonds can be purchased for cash, on the instalment plan, or outstanding savings bonds can be traded bond for bond. This memorandum recommends that Canadians should do this in order to get a bigger income. It is recommended that Canadians should turn in series 6, 9, 10, 11 and 13. It is recommended also that series 12, 14 and 15 should not be turned in because they are more favourable to the holder.

With the single exception of a limit of $10,000 in bonds per person, all Canadian savings bonds outstanding, valued at close to $3.6 billion, can now be turned in on these new bonds and the holders obtain this interest. The other outstanding bonds, of course will get a little higher rate of interest. I say, therefore, that there is another conversion loan in operation. It has not been advertised and people do not generally know it, but this is a new conversion loan. It is in very large proportions.

Mr. McIlraith: And just as costly as the last ones.

Mr. McMillan: I say that this government is paying a high rate for short-term borrowing. It is a high rate when you consider that a small municipality near Boston, as I reported the other day from the New York Times, put out 25 year debentures for bids and the bids ranged to yield from 3.71 per cent to 3.73 per cent, and this was for a municipality. Our government will be paying close to 5 per cent for short-term money, whereas this municipality was issuing 25 year debentures at 3.71 per cent.

Now unlike the long-term bonds, these short-term bonds have no callable features. The holders can cash these bonds at any time but the taxpayers must raise the money to pay the high interest rate on these bonds right down to the wire in 1971. Again I say in the short-term bonds, just as the minister did in the long-term bonds, he is tying the hands of future governments. If the callable feature were present, a future government could call in these bonds and re-issue them at a lower rate of interest during a period when it was more favourable to borrow. The government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett did this very thing. They called in bonds and saved the Canadian people millions of dollars.

The minister might argue that we cannot expect money to be obtained at the same low rate it was in the thirties. He might argue also that these bonds would not sell as well if they had this callable feature in them. This argument does not hold water because in the early fifties the former government refunded some of their bonds and those bonds had a callable feature. If the former government could do this with bonds at 2¾ per cent, why cannot this government do it with bonds yielding 5 per cent or more? This type of financing has resulted in making the short-term market a high interest rate market while the long-term bond holders, for the most part, have bonds bearing a lower rate of interest. The depressed market for these long-term securities is likely to continue because of the high mortgage rate and because of these new bonds that will soon be issued.

I grant that these new bonds are not negotiable in the sense that they can be sold on the market, but they do continue to depress the value of long-term bonds already held by the public. This new type of financing adds more and more progressively to higher annual interest payments. As I stated a few minutes ago, this interest rate goes up from 4¼ per cent to 4½ per cent to 5 per cent, and our annual interest payments will also go up. In order to give hon. members some idea of what our annual interest payments are, I note that on March 31, 1957 the interest on the matured debt stood at $437 million; on March 31, 1961, it was $628 million, up almost 50 per cent. According to the estimates for 1956-57, payments for other liabilities in connection with debt amounted to $80 million, and in the 1960-61 estimates this total stood at $145 million, up almost 50 per cent. I understand that this item is up somewhat more this year.

[Mr. McMillan.]

Then, if we go to the estimates of 1956-57 again, we find the annual amortization on bonds, discounts, premiums and commissions, amounted to $11.3 million, whereas in 1960-61 estimates it is shown as $33.3 million, up 300 per cent. Now, these are wonderful years for those drawing commissions, but they certainly are not for the taxpayers. The other night the hon. member for Leeds said that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had been in his riding before the last election. They promised help to the provinces and to the municipalities. The hon. member then referred to the fact that the urban municipalities in his riding all had increased their tax rates since that time. I can say that all the municipalities in the Niagara district have had substantial increases in their tax rates since that time. One reason for these substantial increases in tax rates is that they have had to pay a higher rate of interest on their debentures. I know that some money has filtered down to the municipalities through the provinces. The municipalities have received some increased payments, but this has been more than eaten up by the extra interest they have had to pay as a result of the fiscal policies of this government.

Now, the Prime Minister made many promises and I think the ones he made in Welland were probably most interesting from a local point of view. I was told by some people who were there that he spoke very emotionally and said that he could not see why the former government had been so callous as to allow unemployment. He also spoke very feelingly to the farmers and condemned the former government because they had allowed the price of asparagus to fall, because of imports, from 22½ cents to 21½ cents a pound. What has happened since? Unemployment has never been so low as it was at that time. When he spoke feelingly to the farmers he may have meant it, but in their next crop year they did not get 22½ cents or more for their asparagus; they got 14 cents a pound plus a 3 cents deficiency payment from this government, which deficiency payment cost over $100,000 in total to these growers

I suggested previously that if the Prime Minister would come back to Welland he should let us know and we would get out a band and they could play, "O Promise Me".

An hon. Member: Very funny.

Mr. McMillan: Last year the Prime Minister said the underbrush was cleared away and he was almost ready for the tall timbers, or something to that effect. I think the Prime Minister may be in the woods at the present time, but the Minister of Finance is certainly still in the underbrush—

Mr. Pickersgill: He is certainly not out of the woods.

Mr. McMillan: —among the thorns and brambles of debt; there is no doubt about that. Only once or twice has he seen the tall timbers, in December, 1957 and again last year when he predicted surpluses; but these were hewn away. The government tried to rescue the minister and tried to entangle Mr. Coyne so that he could take the blame. The people of this country have not been fooled by this subterfuge of substitution. So the minister, I say, is still in the underbrush.

Mr. Chairman, I intended to deal with two or three other matters but I will not do so in view of the hour. I intended to raise the matter of the minister's responsibility for monetary policy. I know the minister announced outside the house that he would accept the principles laid down by the new governor, Mr. Rasminsky. I saw that in the press, but the minister has never announced it in the house. I think he should announce in the house his idea of his responsibility in connection with monetary policy.

Mr. Benidickson: That was another flip-flop.

Mr. McMillan: I will not deal with that matter further. The minister said recently that we should have lower interest rates. I maintain that he only pays lip service to this matter because when we consider his actions in connection with interest rates we find that the high interest rate of 6¾ per cent on mortgages was actually set by him. In connection with the conversion loan the minister devised a way to pay bonuses to those people who would take a 50 per cent increase on their interest.

Mr. McIlraith: He was ingenious in that one.

Mr. McMillan: On different occasions he also devised a way to sell short term bonds to large investment dealers at a low yield but with a high discount. This would help them and would be of great advantage to them tax-wise.

Mr. Benidickson: Capital gain.

Mr. McMillan: When the provinces started to use this device to get people to buy their bonds, the minister immediately brought in legislation to prevent their doing so. The minister has set these new rates on the present conversion loan on the Canadian savings bonds.

I also intended to deal with the exchange rate, but since the hour is progressing I will not do so. I just wish to say one word about what has taken place at the commonwealth conference in Accra. I think most people in Canada think the minister is at least consistent in his antagonism toward Great Britain, particularly when Great Britain is trying to do something to help her economy in giving consideration to entering the common market. I must say that I was shocked but not surprised when I read some of the articles on the commonwealth conference in Accra. I was not surprised because I remember that at the first commonwealth conference that took place after this government came into power—the conference was held at Mont Tremblant, near Montreal—Mr. Thornycroft, at that time led the delegation from the mother country. Some of the press said that our Minister of Finance used sledge-hammer tactics when softer words would have suited his purpose better.

Mr. Benidickson: A sledge-hammer to deal with a tack.

Mr. McMillan: With regard to the most recent conference, the press has accused the two ministers of ganging up against the mother country. We have heard the ministers' explanations. I saw a cartoon in the Victoria Times. It depicted two valiant hunters, the two ministers, going out and bagging the British lion and delivering it here to their chief. I think the British lion is just hurt. She has been very docile and has not said much in retaliation. This reminds me of a mother who is not willing to correct her defiant child in public. Already the press is reacting in a way best expressed in the words of the London Spectator:

> Having made such a mess of her own economics, it is not for the Canadian government to lecture us on ours.

The press in England and in other countries is now aware of the economic mess in which we find ourselves in Canada. Some portions of the United States press in particular were outspoken in this respect at the time of the Coyne affair and at the time the minister brought down his budget. There is nothing new in all this. We have been telling this to the people of Canada and to this government for a long time. We have continued to say that they are getting us further and further into an economic mess. I would say that today with a continuing and persistent deficit of $2 million a day we arrived there long ago.

I wish to refer to one other matter. This is a matter I raised the other day during the discussion on the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, and it is reported on page 8746 of Hansard. I will not go into the matter in detail at this time, but it is concerned with item 709a of the Customs Tariff Act. Under this item Canadian tires can be sent abroad and brought in duty free on United States-made automobiles and trucks.

It precludes however expensive Canadian equipment being sent abroad and then being admitted duty free. If one piece of equipment is so much as bolted on to a United States component the full duty is charged on the Canadian equipment when it is returned to Canada. I gave an example. I said that in Canada we are making front end loaders to be mounted on tractors. The tractors are admitted free to Canada but if the front end loader is sent to the United States for one-third of the business, the Canadian buyer has to pay $133 duty on each unit coming into Canada. There would be a duty on the Canadian made part of the unit but not on the United States made tractor.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Do go on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that by unanimous consent the hon. member be allowed to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McMillan: It occurred to me that if suitable arrangements could be made it would save Canadian buyers $133 per unit, it would help Canadian business in the United States to the extent of $1½ million a year, it would help secondary industry, particularly steel; and it would give employment to some 40 men. I would therefore appeal to the minister to keep this matter in mind if and when he prepares his next budget.

Mr. Chevrier: There is one matter which I can dispose of briefly if I could have the attention of the committee. It has to do with the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday and it has to do, also, with a matter which falls under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, prior to the announcement of business for the next day, the Prime Minister entered the house and in dealing with an item on the order paper, namely, an amendment to Bill No. C-72, an act to amend the Customs Tariff, he had this to say as reported at page 9022 of Hansard. Referring to the bill he said "they"—meaning the opposition and the Liberals in the Senate—> —must accept the blame for the thousands of jobs which, because of the action they have taken, will remain uncreated.

I wish to say that this statement is not only ridiculous but it is inaccurate and it is untrue. I think it can easily be refuted. In the first place, it can be refuted by the fact that if the Prime Minister and those associated with him were so anxious to have this matter go through, and if it was as important as they indicated it was, the government would not have dawdled over this measure from the month of November until the month of April before getting the bill through the house. If the committee wants to have the chronology I can put it on the record, because I have it here and can substantiate what I am saying. There is no doubt that this measure was delayed for weeks and months—

An hon. Member: By the opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: —so it ill becomes anyone, particularly the Prime Minister, to make such a statement as he made yesterday.

If the government really believes that this measure would have provided so much employment, they should have agreed to the conference which was suggested by the Senate and which would have brought the bill into operation a long time ago. Moreover, if this bill means all the jobs which the Prime Minister has in mind, why did he not call the Senate and the house together? Why did he not do that before he made the announcement yesterday and ask them either to amend the measure or come to some understanding with reference to this so called important legislation which was to provide so much employment for the people of Canada? The right hon. gentleman did not do that because, I am convinced, the statement he made was inaccurate. This bill will not provide jobs on that scale, or any jobs for that matter. The real point is that the government realizes it has made an awful boob and is glad the Senate has taken them off the hook.

Mr. Benidickson: We are dealing still with the first item in the minister's estimates. I regret it, but I feel obliged to direct the attention of the committee to a question which was raised by one of our new members, the hon. member for Niagara Falls. The question is reported in Hansard on July 12, 1961. It is No. 452 and it relates to personal staff in ministers' offices.

In days gone by the Minister of Finance was a great one for talking about economy and saving the taxpayers' money. I am just an ordinary fellow here, though, of course, I was in the office of the minister of finance at one time. However, in order to get acquainted with our senior officials in the ministers' offices I still use what all of us use, namely, the telephone book. The last telephone book I know of put out in the time of the former administration is a red book dated April, 1957. I have the complete list. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs here. Apparently he has been given a very much enlarged job and therefore, according to the comparison of the telephone books, he has a much enlarged staff. I notice also that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has added considerably to his personal staff, and so has the Minister of Transport. I am using, as I say, this red book and comparing it with the latest book which we use when we want to contact the personal staff of a minister. I regret to bring up this subject but I cannot help recalling the present minister's predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Harris. I knew something of his self sacrifice with regard to these affairs. I knew he had the idea that he must set an example of economy when it came to the expenditure of public money. So I wonder now about this business of private secretaries, special assistants, executive assistants, assistant private secretaries, associate private secretaries and so on. When I compare this red book, showing the staff in those years, with the latest directory I wonder whether the Minister of Finance really is doing the tough job he says he is doing as chairman of treasury board. For example, here is the Department of Trade and Commerce and provision for assistant private secretaries in English and French, associate private secretaries and so on.

Mr. Harkness: Is this all from the telephone book?

Mr. Benidickson: Mostly from the telephone book but I am a simple man and I think this is something which would appeal to simple taxpayers across the country. Although I do not have them with me this evening, I have kept civil service circulars relating to the enlistment of editorial and information personnel in the various departments. Despite what the Minister of Finance might say in debate about economy I can understand why he would have no control over treasury board or his associates in the cabinet when his own personal staff has increased and when over the last four years the people in the information division of each department have almost quadrupled in numbers. Hon. members on the treasury benches might say that these people are employed to be of service to the department as a whole, but there is a possibility that their first duty is to the minister of the department and the minister's organization in his own office. I merely raise that question and refer to a biblical phrase the minister frequently used to use in the debate. I ask: what about that mote and what about that beam?

If one looks at the old red-covered telephone book and compares it with the present telephone directory he will find some surprising results without going through the formality of placing a question on the order paper. The public thought they were electing a government that aimed at economy. I would think that the leadership in economy would start at the ministerial level, but that is not the case in this instance. I think the minister should tell us something about that because he presides at treasury board and almost every year when presenting his budget he almost bursts his buttons in talking about the good management and economy that has come about under his guidance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benidickson: Some hon. members applaud. In a return to a question asked by the hon. member for Niagara Falls under date of July 12, 1961 it is indicated that the personal staff of the Minister of Finance numbered ten in the fiscal years 1956-57 and 1960-61. The expenditure in 1956-57 was $35,900 and again in 1960-61 it was about the same. Having served in that department I cannot reconcile the situation I have outlined with what is contained in the current telephone directory. I do not know how many stenographers are required but I shall deal with other employees. In April of 1957 at the time of the issuance of the directory I hold in my hand there was only a private secretary. The current directory issued in February, 1961 indicates that the minister has on his staff an executive assistant, Mr. William N. Allan, a private secretary, Miss A. Hanna, and a special assistant, Mr. G. Hamilton. All hon. members read about him some time ago. He was supposed to sort of "glamorize" the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is overpaid.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps a better way of describing his function is to say that he was supposed to humanize the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: In that case he certainly is overpaid.

Mr. Benidickson: The two other employees whose names appear in the directory for both years are the lady who takes care of phone calls to the department and the lady who takes care of the files of the department. It is difficult to understand why the expenditure would be the same in the two periods I mentioned, especially when one considers that the minister now has an executive assistant, a private secretary and a special assistant despite the fact that he strongly advocated economy prior to 1957. Perhaps the minister might explain this.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I hope I can be more brief in replying to these many matters than hon. members have been in raising them. I shall take the questions in order.

First, the report of the Bladen commission. This matter, of course, continues under study. In response to what was said in the budget speech various interested groups and organizations are now coming forward with their representations. I hope we may be able to receive the remaining ones reasonably soon.

Second, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said, I did attend the annual meeting of the governors of the international bank and international monetary fund at Vienna last week. It was a very good meeting and there were a number of very constructive discussions there.

Third, there is no indication of any change in the price of gold. I dealt with this subject in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River several weeks ago.

Fourth, in regard to money supply, there was an increase over the past year in the money supply, until about a month ago or slightly longer, with some modest decline in it since. At September 13, 1961, the money supply stood at $14,331 million which was an increase of $1,075 million over September 14, 1960 but a decrease of $88 million as compared with September 6, 1961.

Mr. Benidickson: The increase in the money supply for a date a little earlier than the minister mentioned, September 6, had been perhaps as high as $1,175 million beyond what it was the year before, is that correct?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I indicated that there was a modest decline over the past five or six weeks approximately. The bulk of the increase was in chartered bank deposits.

Fifth, with regard to Canada Savings bonds, the campaign has been launched as hon. members are aware. We hope for a good response and widespread support for this important feature of Canada's financial undertakings. This year we are offering an interest rate of 4.6 per cent. It is slightly lower than last year, but the indications are that we will have a good response. I wish to emphasize the importance of that response in relation to our total financial planning.

Next was a question in regard to the attempt to bring about an agreement between the countries which are interested in textile exports and imports, particularly in view of the volume of low cost textile exports from some of the Asian countries. I may say that the agreement which was reached at Geneva in July created a framework in which bilateral arrangements could be agreed upon for orderly marketing. However, it is too early to say whether the principal countries concerned will accept the agreement. Thus far Canada and the United States have accepted it.

Next was a question in regard to the exchange reserves.

Mr. Benidickson: Are there countries other than Hong Kong about which there may be doubt respecting an agreement on this matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. We cannot say yet definitely what the outcome is going to be as regards other countries. Naturally the concern expressed by some of the western countries was related to the exports from Japan and Hong Kong.

The next question was in regard to exchange reserves. I answered a question on this subject several weeks ago. These are reported regularly. The August figure was $1,944.4 million as compared with a figure of $1,960.3 million for July and $1,985.2 million for June. The holdings of gold have tended to rise in this period; the holdings of United States dollars and obligations have declined somewhat.

The next question was in regard to the purchase of securities in the market with the assistance of the special fund that I announced in the budget. The figures of purchases have been announced for each month. Those for July were $11.8 million and those for August $28.1 million, a total to the end of August of $39.9 million. I made an announcement in relation to policy on this subject several weeks ago.

Next was a question in regard to interest rates raised by the hon. member for Welland. The budget indicated the view of the government that interest rates in the country are higher than desirable having regard to our balance of payments position. In the budget I indicated the kind of efforts that would be made to bring about a reduction in the interest rates. I am very glad to say that those efforts have resulted in a modest decline of the interest rates and, what is quite important, a decline in the differential as between interest rates prevailing in the United States and interest rates prevailing in Canada. This, of course, is of considerable importance having regard to our balance of payments.

The hon. member for Welland always argues as though the only time that a rise in interest rates has been known has been since the change of government in 1957. Well, he always overlooks the fact that there was a steady rise in interest rates for two years before the government came into office.

Mr. Pickersgill: You were going to change all that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes; interest rates did decline after we came into office.

Mr. Pickersgill: For a very brief spell.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): For a very satisfactory spell and with some very good results.

The hon. member talks about the decline in market values of the outstanding issues. He fails to say that for the two years before this government came into office there was a very substantial decline in the market values of outstanding issues, and the discounts at which good government bonds were selling at that time were quite substantial, running up to 15 per cent.

He has a great fondness for call features of bonds, and always when he speaks he raises the question why there are no call features, why we do not issue bonds that are callable. Well, for the very good reason that these callable features are not too popular, and if we are going to impose on bond purchasers the possibility of calling those bonds in when it happens to suit the interest of the treasury, well, then we are going to find it that much harder to sell them and we shall have to provide some other inducement; and this means higher interest rates, the very thing the hon. member has been talking against. He cannot have it both ways. He will either have to be content with the issuance of bonds without callable features or he will have to be prepared to advocate some other inducement to overcome the detrimental effect marketwise of adding callability.

The hon. member said "the minister has not been able to sell his bonds in the long end of the market." That is not true.

Mr. McMillan: I said "in volume".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The fact is, Mr. Chairman, we have deliberately stayed out of the long end of the market for some time now for the purpose of assisting the provinces and municipalities with their borrowings. We have left that end of the market clear for them. We have gone into the short end of the market for that very reason.

The next question that was raised, Mr. Chairman, was in regard to the Customs Tariff amendment regarding the class or kind definition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am raising a point of order at this time. Any debate on this subject would be of course clearly out of order because there is another item on the order paper dealing with it. It was mentioned by my friend from Laurier solely because the Prime Minister had gratuitously mentioned it yesterday. I am just pointing out to you, sir, before the minister proceeds, that if the minister wishes to have a debate on this subject I hope both sides of the house will be allowed to debate it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this is a fine example of justice. Apparently the hon. member for Laurier is to be entitled to raise this point but nobody else is to be permitted to make any comment on his observations.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister started it yesterday.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Very well; he made the announcement which he had been asked to make earlier in regard to that question.

Mr. Chevrier: And quite irregularly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all, he made it by consent of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: That may be true. I raise a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier chose to make reference to this. I indicated that I am making a review of the points that have been raised and I have been doing it very briefly. I propose to make a brief comment on this if the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate pleases.

The hon. member for Laurier undertook to make reference to this subject and to comment on it when he tried to lay responsibility for delay at the door of the government. I say this was not the government's responsibility; this was brought up frequently in the house. If he will be fair he will remember that we did debate the measure on nine different days. It was not the government that held it up; it was the opposition that fought the measure. If they want to do that it is perfectly within their rights. They can resist it.

Mr. Chevrier: Why was it not brought down in the early part of the session?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was other business that had to be dealt with, and this measure was brought up on nine different days.

Mr. Chevrier: If it was to provide so many jobs why did the government not bring it forward earlier in the session?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This was brought up not as the minister for Laurier said, in November; it arose out of the budget that was brought in on December 20, and this matter, along with the other job-making proposals in the budget, was brought forward when we reassembled after the Christmas recess, and with those other measures it was brought forward until it was passed. It was brought up on nine different days. That is the record. Therefore, what is the sense of saying that it was not pressed by the government?

Mr. Chevrier: It was not pressed and we will prove that in a moment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was pressed by the government. If the hon. member chose to oppose it that was perfectly all right. That is his right as a member if he chooses to do so, but let him not say that the government did not press this measure. We did. We pressed it for nine different days until it was finally disposed of.

Next was the point raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River who had something to say about the staff in the office of the Minister of Finance. If he will look at the statement I made in reply to his question on July 12, page 7937 of Hansard—

Mr. Benidickson: It was not my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —he will see that the personnel in the office of the Minister of Finance when the former government went out of office numbered ten and today the number is eight. I quite accept the point that the Minister of Finance in matters like this should try to set an example. I will do my poor best to try to set a good example.

I think these are my observations, Mr. Chairman, on the dozen or so points that have been raised in the discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I assume I will now be allowed to deal with the matter with which the Minister of Finance has dealt. I have in my hand a chronology of this famous Bill No. C-72 which I thought it would be useful to bring here because I expected the customary misrepresentation of this matter by the Minister of Finance.

It happened that this measure was mentioned in the speech from the throne on November 17. It will also be within the memory of hon. members that the speech from the throne was disposed of in two days. If this was the most important job-producing measure that the government had—it was about June that the Minister of Trade and Commerce started saying it was, though they did not make any such claim for it in the early days when it was being debated—why did they not bring it in on the 19th or 20th or 21st of November and give it priority, as they did to one or two other measures, and get it through the house before Christmas?

The plain fact is that the government did not attach any special importance to it before Christmas at all. As we know, the Minister of Finance went on one of those junkets of his to Europe and delayed his baby budget until two days before the Christmas adjournment. That was not our fault. That was the fault of the management of the government. There was no reason why that baby budget should not have been brought down immediately after the speech from the throne was disposed of if the government had had its business ready and if it was so important. Therefore the delay from November 17 or say November 20 to December 20, one month, was entirely due to the government.

The resolution never came before the house until February 1. There was a big gap. Day after day we kept asking the government to bring it forward. The hon. member for Laurier and I said, "Please bring it on". We wanted to debate it but the government did not like the debate. They did not enjoy it. It took place from February 1 to February 3 and then for 12 days the government refused to bring the measure forward. After the 15th of February another 12 days went by before it appeared again. The government sets the business of the house, not the opposition. I think at that time the minister had gone on a junket to Vancouver. I think he went out to see Mr. Bennett but Mr. Bennett slipped through his fingers and he had to go off to Chicago or somewhere. On one of these occasions that is what happened.

Then the matter came up again relatively soon after that on March 2 and it was discussed on that day. On that same day the bill got first reading. That was March 2. The debate on second reading of the bill did not come up until April 17, over a month and a half after it was given first reading. That is not the fault of the opposition. The government would not even bring forward this great measure that was to produce all this employment for second reading for a month and a half after it got first reading.

As a matter of fact, it took only two days to get second reading and it was not brought up in the Senate right away. I do not blame the government for that, of course, because that was the time of the Easter recess. The bill we brought forward in the Senate in April, and on June 14 the Senate indicated its views with regard to it. The bill was not brought before the house again until July 6. Again that was no fault of the opposition. That was no fault of anyone on this side. It was simply mismanagement of the business of the house by the government.

In the face of that record I say that for the minister to get up and say that it was the opposition and then the Senate that delayed this thing is just a perversion of the facts. I suggest that it would have been much better if the minister had just left the statement of the hon. member for Laurier and had no more to say about it because, as the hon. member for Laurier has indicated, the government realized, in the light of the almost unanimous opinion across this country about the bill and its arbitrary features, that they had made a dreadful boob and that the bill when compared with the Prime Minister's bill of rights was an outrage. They were so pleased to have an excuse given to them by the Senate not to proceed with the bill that that is the reason we have heard no more about it except in those speeches by the Minister of Trade and Commerce outside the house only in selected places in eastern Canada, and never in western Canada, about all the employment that the bill would provide.

If the government really believed that the bill would have provided employment, if the government had really been sincere and earnest about this thing, they would not have dawdled all session about it. They would have got it through well before Christmas in order to get the employment to show for it, so they could boast about it now instead of this record of mismanagement, delay, procrastination and that final feeble performance of the Prime Minister yesterday.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, we have indeed heard a perversion of the facts by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Why does he not come to the point and be frank and fair about this matter? He knows that he and one or two of his colleagues obstructed this bill all the way through. If he thinks that is justified, all right, but let him not then turn around and pretend that all other business of the house should have been set aside so that he and his colleagues could go on with that obstruction. We tried to bring the bill on. There was a great volume of legislation before the house at that time and the leader of the house was very good in giving time to that bill in the face of obstruction, when there was other legislation that had to be put through. There is the story.

If members opposite wish to argue and fight against the bill, that is their privilege; but let them not turn around then and pretend that the government did not wish to get the bill through. The government did want to get the bill through. I say to the member for Laurier that he was entirely mistaken when he said tonight that the government was glad to be taken off the hook by the Senate. We regret very much that the Senate did not see fit to pass that legislation and we could not possibly, as the Prime Minister pointed out yesterday, accept amendments to tax and money legislation introduced by the other house.

Mr. Chevrier: You dawdled with it for months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There has been no dawdling with this measure. The Senate amendment could not have been accepted at any time because there was an important constitutional principle at stake. We regret that the Senate did not see fit to pass that legislation. We think it would have been very beneficial to the country if it had done so and allowed the bill to become law.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I spoke from the record and the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Regier: What is the attitude of this government towards provincial governments issuing securities that are payable on demand? I have particular reference to a number of occurrences or a number of other payments on the part of provincial governments like British Columbia, in the light of the realization that we may have much larger financial investments that will have to be made and which I am afraid may be financed in a similar fashion. I am afraid other governments might imitate the example set by British Columbia.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The governments of three provinces have issued bonds that are redeemable on demand, like the Canada savings bonds in that regard. It is a matter over which we, as a federal government, have no control. If a province chooses to issue securities that are redeemable on demand we have no right to interfere. I am afraid there is no constitutional right of action under which the federal government can interfere.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if I might ask the minister if the government has considered asking the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion as to whether or not this is, in effect, the issuing of currency? Obviously, the issuing of currency is the prerogative of only one government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Chairman, we have not. If any citizen wishes to challenge the right of the province to do so he, of course, can go to the courts.

Item agreed to.

114. The Bank Act—salaries and expenses of the inspector general of banks' office, $34,330.

Mr. Benidickson: I have a brief request. The Minister of Finance, very prominently in his budget speech of June 20, indicated that we would have a royal commission to review all elements of banking and finance. Very little has been heard of it since. This, perhaps is the prerogative of the Prime Minister in some respects, but can the minister report upon it in view of the fact it was he who, on June 20, made the announcement?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We hope to be able to announce the personnel of the commission and the terms of reference at a very early date.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—

129. Canadian association of consumers, $10,000.

Mr. Regier: I notice that there are grants payable to the universities of Canada. All I want to say at this time is that I see no logical reason, if we were able some years ago to pay 50 cents per capita, then later raised that to $1 per capita and then $1.40 per capita, why we should not raise this grant to at least $3 or $4 per capita to make it a little easier for our young people to get the education they need.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Finance. We have now for consideration the estimates of the Department of Transport.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Air services—

Administration branch—

429. Air services administration, $1,852,117.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Before we proceed with these estimates, I should like to have the leave of the committee to make an announcement. In accordance with the intimation given by the Prime Minister, and with the permission of the committee, I should like to make a statement concerning the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways. The board will comprise the following: Mr. Donald Gordon; Mr. J. R. Griffith; Mr. W. Gerald Stewart, Moncton; Mr. Walter Colquhoun, Sydney; Mr. J. Louis Levesque, Montreal; Mr. Guy Charbonneau, Montreal; Mr. Gilbert Ernest Ayers, Lachute Mills; Mr. Alex McD. McBain, Toronto; Mr. Harry Isaac Price, Toronto; Mr. Jack Sangster, Regina; Mr. Robert Arthur Brown, Calgary; Mr. Walter C. Koerner, Vancouver. Mr. Gordon has also been reappointed as chairman of the board of directors.

In so far as the new directors are concerned, the effective date of appointment is October 1, 1961. The other appointments will be effective as of the date of expiry of the term for which they had previously been appointed. The term of Mr. J. R. Griffith, the labour representative on the board, does not expire until October 1, 1962. The term of office of the new appointments and reappointments is three years.

I might add that a proclamation will issue fixing October 1, 1961 as the day upon which an act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, being chapter 28 of the statutes of Canada, 1960-61, shall come into force. Perhaps the committee would also permit me to announce the appointment of Mr. Campbell Haig, Q.C. of Winnipeg as a director of Trans-Canada Air Lines, effective October 1, 1961. Mr. Haig will fill the vacancy on the board which occurred on the expiration of the term of office of Mr. R. A. C. Henry on October 1, 1960.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make another announcement which will be of immediate interest to the members of this house. Following correspondence with the two presidents of our two major railways, I have been advised that the two railways have agreed to extend indefinitely the passes for wives and dependents of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate.

Mr. Chevrier: It is perhaps unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, in one sense that these remaining important items of the Department of Transport should be brought down at this period of the session. However, I must say in fairness to the minister that he has already had four, if not five, days on them. If we have taken so much time, it is certainly because of the importance of some of the new items that have been introduced. The only comment I wish to make in connection with the first part of the announcement made by the minister having to do with the directors of Canadian National Railways is this: This announcement is made after a whole year of delay. Look at the calendar. If you go back one year you will find that the terms of office of most of the directors expired at that time. Why it was necessary for the government to wait 12 months before making this announcement, I do not know. All I can say is that the administration of the railway must of necessity have suffered because of that, as the administration of any other corporation would have suffered under the circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the item now under discussion is No. 429, air services administration. Before I proceed with my remarks I wish to ask the minister this question. For what reason did he make an announcement having to do with new international air services of C.P.A., because I understand that he did make an announcement while the house was not in session. However, when the announcement was made no reason was given. Many editorials have appeared in the press across Canada complaining very bitterly about the fact that an announcement was made between our sittings this session and no reason was given by the Minister of Transport for this decision. I ask the minister now if he is prepared to give the reason for this decision.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on this decision of the government. There were numerous reasons for the decision of the government to designate Canadian Pacific Airlines as one of the carriers on the service between Canada and the United Kingdom. First of all I should remind the committee that the service in question is between western Canada to the United Kingdom across the northern part of our country.

The international air agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada makes provision for Canada to designate a carrier or more than one carrier for this service overseas between our country and the United Kingdom. One of the main reasons why Canadian Pacific Airlines has been designated is that at the present time from the western provinces, and especially from British Columbia and Alberta, a great many Canadians desiring to go overseas find it preferable, both financially and as far as the time element is concerned, to travel by United States air lines from Seattle. The reason is that the United States air lines give a direct service from Seattle to London. A great many Canadians have been travelling this way because there has been no direct service by a Canadian carrier from our two westernmost provinces to the United Kingdom. This new service means there will be an opportunity for Canadian carriers employing Canadians to offer our people a service that can compete with the United States air lines serving this traffic from Seattle and from the northwestern United States right to the United Kingdom.

There is another reason why the government has decided it is a good thing to give this opportunity to Canadian Pacific Airlines to serve the Canadian public on this route. This is the fact that Canadian Pacific Airlines has at the present time a service between Australia, New Zealand, the Fiji Islands, Hawaii and Canada and then overseas. Unfortunately, because Canadian Pacific Airlines could not serve the United Kingdom all the traffic from Australia, New Zealand and other islands of the Pacific was travelling exclusively on Qantas air lines. These people would cross the United States and travel directly to London. Canadian air lines were not serving this area of the commonwealth and could not provide a service that could compete with the service offered by Qantas at the time.

Canadian Pacific Airlines has pioneered this northern route; this is another reason for the decision of the government. They have established a market in the westernmost provinces of Canada, where they have their headquarters and employ almost 3,000 people. We sincerely believe that this will be an opportunity for Canadian carriers, not to compete so much with one another but to compete with other air lines of the world.

When we look at statistics and observe what happens in our international airports, every Canadian must realize that a tremendous number of our citizens are crossing the Atlantic every day on foreign carriers. I think this is a great opportunity for our own carriers to go after the Canadian market for the overseas route. I think the great majority of the passengers who will travel on this Canadian Pacific Airlines route are people who would not have travelled on our other Canadian carriers.

Mr. Chairman, I have given a few of the reasons for this decision. Of course, I know that Trans-Canada Air Lines are facing a deficit for this year, but I would say that practically every large air carrier in the world is at the present time going through a difficult period. The reason for this is not the decreasing traffic over the long routes, but that all the air lines had to switch from propeller aircraft to the big, new jets which are so expensive. We are right in the period of change-over. I am quite convinced that our two extremely efficient carriers will soon get over this change-over period and make up the deficit of the current year.

Trans-Canada Air Lines is providing extremely good service on all its routes and it can compete with every air line in the world. I must say that Canadian Pacific Airlines, which is a much smaller operation, also gives extremely good service. On both air lines we have the best crews in the world. They have very good equipment and both managements have the will to compete with all the other air lines in the world. Even if there is a great deal of traffic on the Atlantic route I believe that both air lines are well equipped and have the will and ability to compete. The decision of the government will in the long term prove a good one and I am convinced that it will not hurt Trans-Canada Air Lines, which is government-owned.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am not convinced by the answer the minister has given. I will tell the minister why I am not convinced with the reasons he has advanced. In the first place, I think that a decision of this importance should have been announced when the house was in session and not when the house had adjourned. There has been no opportunity to discuss this matter in the house save and except in the dying days of the session. Second, I am not at all convinced by the argument made by the minister that western Canadians desire to go to London via C.P.A. I think that because of the decision the government has made, they will not follow that route. If and when they go, as it is now they must go via Gander. This is clearly set out in the reciprocal bilateral agreement. So the western Canadians are not going to be able to travel any faster via C.P.A. than they can now via T.C.A. So that argument falls to the ground.

Mr. Balcer: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: You can do your talking later—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Balcer: The hon. member cannot convince me that the route is shorter via Winnipeg and Montreal than it is via Edmonton and Gander.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not imagine I can convince the minister of anything, because I am convinced in my own mind that the minister and this government are out to destroy T.C.A.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A shocking untruth.

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Finance says "shocking untruth". That is all he has been able to say to everything which has come from this side. Everything, he says, is untrue or malicious.

At least the former minister of transport, though he talked about competition when he was on this side of the house, did not always put it into effect.

Furthermore what about the terms of the approval of this line. Has that approval come forward? The minister made an announcement without even consulting the United Kingdom, with the result that one government is now dealing with the other by means of aide-memoires. Is this the way in which to proceed on a matter of this consequence—to announce a decision without even obtaining the approval of the other party as should have been done under the terms of the bilateral agreement?

I am not the only one who feels this way about the situation. There have been many editorials across Canada in connection with this decision. I referred a moment ago to the Montreal Star of August 17. It went on to say that the minister had not even attempted to discuss the reasons behind this decision. Then, long after the decision had been made, he makes this announcement in the house. The Financial Post of September 23, 1961, in an editorial entitled "The Wonders of Competition" says that both government owned Trans-Canada Air Lines and privately owned Canadian Pacific Airlines have been sinking slowly but steadily in the red. C.P.A. lost $4.7 million last year, its fifth and biggest loss in five years while T.C.A. had a $2.6 million loss in 1960, its first in a decade. I wonder what the late Mr. Howe would have thought in the light of the establishment of this great government-owned air line, Trans-Canada Air Lines, owned by the taxpayers of this country. He brought Mr. Symington to direct its activities for many years, and Mr. Symington was succeeded by Mr. McGregor. I am just as positive as I am of the fact that I am here that there is no room for two trans-continental airlines in this country. The proof of that lies in the estimates which were presented to the committee on railways and shipping when for the first time, Trans-Canada Air Lines had a deficit of close to $200,000 last year and this year, as the Financial Post said, the T.C.A. deficit amounted to over $2 million. In the light of what is happening all over the world, how can you expect these lines to operate profitably if you are going to take traffic away from one and turn it over to another?

At least the government might have allowed the air transport board to deal with this situation, but it chose to deal with the matter itself and I do not know to what extent the situation was studied. In the United States, air lines are merging. But I do know that the government has been whittling away traffic from the T.C.A. year in and year out. They started in connection with some regional air lines. They have continued with a trans-continental reduction in T.C.A.'s line, and now they are taking additional traffic away from the crown-owned company—the taxpayers' company.

What will be the effect? There can be only one effect—that sooner or later the position will be so bad that it will not be possible for either one of them to carry on, and I hate to see the day when that will happen.

Mr. Balcer: Before we proceed to the next item I should like to re-establish the facts. The hon. member for Laurier made all kinds of statements but I should like to bring the whole thing back to reality. First of all, he says the route to the United Kingdom from western Canada through Edmonton and Gander is longer than by way of Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal. I think the hon. member has only to look at a map to see how completely wrong he is with regard to this.

The hon. member also said we did not get approval in advance of our decision from the United Kingdom. Well, there is nothing in the air agreement which says we must get approval from the United Kingdom before the government of Canada designates a carrier for the trade between the United Kingdom and Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: I asked you in the house and you said it was necessary.

Mr. Balcer: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, you did.

Mr. Balcer: The hon. gentleman further stated that the United Kingdom were not notified before we made the announcement. In fact, we did notify the United Kingdom of our intention. We gave them proper notice of our plan. Then again, the hon. gentleman talked about reports presented to the committee which considered the affairs of the C.N.R. and of the government-owned air line. If he would turn to the conclusions reached by that committee he will see that the committee stated in its report that no testimony was submitted which proved that competition was responsible for the deficits sustained by T.C.A.

According to the hon. gentleman, this matter should have been considered by the air transport board. Well, there is nothing in the act or in the regulations which says that overseas routes should be discussed before the air transport board. I agree that when we offer a domestic permit for an air line to travel over any route the board has authority to decide which air line should get it, and so forth. As to the accusation that this government is trying to destroy Trans-Canada Air Lines, nothing could be further from the truth. The impact on T.C.A. of this allocation of the northern route from western Canada to the United Kingdom will be somewhere between 1 per cent and 3½ per cent of its gross revenue.

The annual rate of growth of T.C.A. has been at a percentage much higher than this, that is between 10 and 15 per cent or more. This indicates that the impact on T.C.A. will be negligible although of course there will be a certain impact.

What C.P.A. is going after and is going to get is traffic coming from the northwestern United States, traffic coming from the Spokane area into Calgary, traffic from Australia, New Zealand and other Pacific islands, and traffic from British Columbia and Alberta destined for Amsterdam.

The ridiculous point has been that Canadian aircraft flying from western Canada have had to fly through the smoke and fog of London to Amsterdam where the passengers were required to board a foreign carrier to be flown back to London. This absurd situation will be remedied in this fashion. I am sure that C.P.A. will not hurt T.C.A. and knowing the management, crew and personnel of T.C.A. I am confident they will continue to work hard joining with C.P.A. in competing with other world air lines, and that our two carriers will soon be out of their deficit situation which has been brought about mainly because of the change-over from conventional propeller aircraft to the new big jet liners.

Mr. Chevrier: I will not pursue the matter in detail. I have said what I wished to say and the minister has not convinced me to any degree by anything he has said. The minister knows that under the Aeronautics Act the responsibility of determining a matter of this kind rests with the cabinet but it is also the responsibility of the cabinet to obtain advice on matters of this nature. There is no better body from which to obtain such advice than the air transport board. That is why I suggested the minister should give some consideration to that.

The last time the estimates of the minister were before the house I dealt with another matter concerning which I wish to make a brief statement now. In the past I have taken considerable exception to the uncalled for and unexplained favouritism shown by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, with the connivance of the Department of Transport, to Autair Helicopter Services Limited. This would be bad enough if Autair was a reputable concern but I have already said enough about the record of Autair including its accident record and insurance record to convince any reasonable person that this government should not have given a contract where the lives of public servants are in jeopardy. In doing so I stated incorrectly that the accidents took place on the polar continental shelf. I have since learned that the accidents took place in the northern part of Quebec. But surely it is the record of the accidents and not the particular place where the accidents occurred that is the relevant consideration. There is no doubt that the accidents did take place nor is there any doubt about the difficulties of this company with respect to its insurance.

Mr. Balcer: To set the matter straight let me say that the last time the estimates of my department were before the committee the hon. member for Laurier made a lengthy speech containing derogatory references to Autair and in which he blamed equally the Department of Transport and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The questions the hon. member raised regarding Autair centred round a contract awarded to that company by another department of government and the safety record of the company. My own responsibility is limited to the regulations of the air transport board and the Department of Transport in the administration of those regulations. I have checked with my officials and with respect to the contract about which my hon. friend complained the last time my estimates were before us I am advised that there is no evidence that Autair violated any of the regulations of the board or the department. The procedures followed in the matter of tariff filing, for instance, were legal. Under the board's regulations it is a fact that the procedure for late tariff filing, while legal, raises questions with regard to timing. This is not new to the board since these questions have come up on past occasions in relation to other carriers as well.

The department subsequently decided that as a result of several cases of late tariff filing just before a contract award it should issue a new ruling regarding tariff filing. It provided for longer term notice to avoid opportunities of unfair advantage. The fact remains, however, that the company did not in any way act illegally in this regard.

My hon. friend mentioned the matter of accidents. Following his previous speech the department inquired into the accidents mentioned by the hon. gentleman. We discovered that none of the aircraft of Autair sustained any damage in the accidents noted nor had any of their aircraft been involved in a single accident in 1961 at the time the letter was written which was on June 12.

Inquiries by our Montreal regional office were unable to establish any accident involving Autair Helicopter Services Limited in 1961. There was an aircraft involved in an accident following the date of the correspondence. The accident happened north of Forth Frances and involved a Bell helicopter. The aircraft suffered a loss of control and sank in six feet of water, but there were no injuries whatsoever.

Item agreed to.

Civil aviation branch—

434. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment with respect to national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities: contributions towards construction done by local or private authorities with respect to such airports, amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current year not to exceed a total amount of $69,893,200, $60,900,000.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give us a brief report concerning what is being done toward developing an airport auxiliary to the Vancouver airport? I have particular reference to the proposed airport at Pitt Meadows. Is there any possibility this might be proceeded with in the ensuing year?

Mr. Balcer: The airport at Pitt Meadows has been approved by treasury board and funds will be requested in the estimates at the next session.

Item agreed to.

Air transport board—

446. Salaries and other expenses including the Canadian delegation to the international civil aviation organization, $550,469.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, will the minister tell the committee when the studies which are being or have been made by the air transport board are likely to be given to the house? I understand that one such study has already beeen made and the minister made an announcement concerning it. Again that announcement was made not while the house was sitting but during a recess. I wish to know when the next study will be completed and I urge the minister to make the announcement when the house is in session so we might have some opportunity to debate it.

Mr. Balcer: If the hon. member means the reports that I have in mind, they are confidential. These reports are made to me. If it is the decisions of the air transport board, following the region hearings, well, these decisions have been rendered as far as the eastern part of Canada is concerned as far west as Windsor. There will be hearings in Regina early in December for the western half of Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: How many such reports will be made by the air transport board at other regions in Canada? From what the minister says I understand that the air transport board reports to him and he makes the announcement, as he did for the eastern regions right up to Windsor. How many other reports will there be?

Mr. Balcer: There will be two more, the prairies and the far west.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister be good enough to make the announcement when the house is in session? Two announcements were made by the minister during the adjournment. It gives us little opportunity to discuss it when the house is in session.

Mr. Balcer: These reports are the decision of the air transport board. It has never been the practice to table those decisions or to announce them in the house.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not asking for that. The minister was talking to his officers and because of that I am sure he was not listening to what I was asking. When the confidential report of the air transport board is made to the minister he makes an announcement. How many such regional reports are to be made to the minister? I understand there are two, one for western Canada and one for the Pacific coast. Will the minister give consideration to making those announcements when the house is in session?

Mr. Balcer: I think my hon. friend is under the wrong impression. As far as the eastern hearings are concerned, a report of the decision was made by the board and I made the announcement. I do not know what other report my hon. friend has in mind.

Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—
447. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,249,433.

Mr. Benidickson: We are dealing with the board of transport commissioners. I recollect that when the Bell Telephone Company asked for an increase in its rates at one time, this government with an election in the offing, decided to use its power to overrule the board. I think that for a matter of two or three months they did overrule the board. Recently another application from the Bell Telephone Company, which affects users of telephones in Canada, has been dealt with. The cabinet has a chance to overrule the decision. Is there anybody on the front bench who can tell us whether the cabinet proposes to overrule the decision of the board because I understand that one member of the board said that the suggestions in the majority opinion were unconscionable and that in connection with long distance tolls they would impose on the economy of the country something that would not be desirable. Is there anybody who can say whether the cabinet is prepared to do what it did some years ago, namely overrule the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the cabinet will follow the legal requirements. At the present time no appeal has been filed against the decision of the board. Until such an appeal has been filed the government does not have to take any decision.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the appeal normally come from some municipality, or since this involves long distance rates, would it come from an individual? What are the possibilities in this regard?

Mr. Balcer: Any interested party can file an appeal.

Mr. Regier: I have a complaint to lodge in this regard and it is against the board of transport commissioners. They have jurisdiction over the rates charged by the B.C. Telephone Company. I contend this is completely out of line with common sense. The B.C. Telephone Company ought to have its rates determined by the British Columbia public utilities commission. By hook or by crook, over a long period of years, the B.C. Telephone Company has at long last finally escaped completely any provincial authority or any provincial jurisdiction. My experience has been that the board of transport commissioners in Ottawa accept holus-bolus any argument presented to them by the B.C. Telephone Company. No community or interest in British Columbia has ever had its arguments given any serious consideration by the board of transport commissioners in Ottawa. Immediately upon receipt of a complaint from British Columbia to the board of transport commissioners a letter is mailed out to the B.C. Telephone Company by the board in which it sets forth the complaint. Thereupon the B.C. Telephone Company mails its reply, and this reply has always been accepted in our history as gospel by the board of transport commissioners.

I do not want to be unfair to the board. They may well be able to supervise the operations of the Bell Telephone Company in Ontario. However, they are completely unequipped and unable to supervise the operations of our own B.C. Telephone Company. The sooner they get out of this particular field and hand over to our province the supervision of the operations of our own telephone system the better it will be, and the happier our people will be.

As I said before, I do not want to blame any one individual, but this company has always been treated as a bit of an orphan. I refer now to the assignment of exercising supervision over the B.C. Telephone Company. We pay in our province twice the telephone tolls that many of the citizens of other Canadian cities have to pay. There is now another proposal to increase rates even more. With respect to public utilities, one of the old lessons that was taught to me was that the more users you have the lower the cost per unit of operation, but this is not so with the B.C. Telephone Company. The more little exchanges they establish, and the more they split up existing exchanges the more the rates go up to the householders and to business.

In conclusion, I contend that not only business but every householder in British Columbia will thank this government if it will relieve itself of the responsibilities of supervising the B.C. Telephone Company and hand the whole of the affairs of that company back to the government of British Columbia where it rightfully belongs.

Mr. Benidickson: In practically no place in Canada have we government ownership of telephones except perhaps in British Columbia. I think the Minister of Transport should take an interest in this matter because if you compare the rate from Winnipeg to Kansas City and from Vancouver to Halifax you will find that the Bell Telephone rates are higher than those that prevail to the south of us in the United States. I hope that the cabinet will consider this matter when there are appeals from the board of transport commissioners with respect to rates.

448. Amount to be credited to the railway grade crossing fund, in addition to the amount to be credited to the fund under the Railway Act in the current fiscal year, for the general purposes of the fund, and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments pursuant to this item for the current and subsequent fiscal years not to exceed a total amount of $10 million, $5,000,000.

Mr. Regier: Would the minister explain why there is a reduction from $10 million to $5 million? All of us regret the number of accidents that are still occurring at our railroad crossings.

Mr. Balcer: There is adequate money in the fund at the present time. It was not foreseen that the whole fund would be used up during the year and if there is a need for more money it will be provided.

Item agreed to.

Board of transport commissioners—

590. Interim payments, related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report, to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1961 of $50,000,000, to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such method of allocation as may be determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, as compensation to such companies for the maintenance of their rates on freight traffic at reduced levels as provided for in the said act, $50,000,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would point out to hon. members that this is a rather important vote. It involves an expenditure of $50 million and I think that there should be some explanation forthcoming. I should like to read the vote and ask the minister if he can clear up the confusion which anyone reading the vote will certainly find. It reads:

Interim payments, related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report—

The royal commission on railway problems has recommended the payment of $100 million divided in four categories. I should like to know first of all how much of this amount will go toward payments as recommended by the royal commission? In its first report the royal commission, as found on page 60, recommended a subsidy for passenger trains in the amount of $62 million. With respect to losses on Crowsnest rates it recommended a subsidy of $22,300,000, as found on pages 65 and 66. Third, it recommended a subsidy of $13 million for the deficit on light density branch lines, as found on page 62 of its report. That makes a total of $97,300,000. I should like to know how much of the $50 million is related to these payments recommended by the royal commission.

Mr. Balcer: I remember explaining this at the time. The $50 million is related, of course, to the MacPherson commission but until the two other reports are tabled and are in the hands of the government the government has decided that all it can do in the circumstances is to consider the recommendation of the commissioners in their first report and the factors behind the three recommendations with respect to the various categories that have been mentioned by the hon. member. As an interim payment while we are waiting for the two other reports the government felt that $50 million would be a fair and appropriate figure in the circumstances, basing its decision on the findings and conclusions of the commissioners. We did not want to present an amount of money covering exactly all the recommendations of the commissioners until we have the other two reports.

Mr. Chevrier: How much of this $50 million is going for one or another of the three categories that I mentioned?

Mr. Balcer: I have not got those details with me at the present time. The amount of $50 million is to be allocated by the board of transport commissioners to both railways. The board bases its judgment on various factors and has in mind keeping rates at the present level.

Mr. Chevrier: If it is a matter of keeping rates at the present level, then it has nothing to do with the report of the royal commission on transportation. Is that not right?

Mr. Balcer: Indirectly it has.

Mr. Chevrier: There is another question I should like to put to the minister. Since the vote starts off by referring to interim payments related to recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems pending its complete report, it is quite clear that no portion of this amount is going for passenger train service, Crowsnest rates or for the deficit on light density lines.

The next point that arises is this. If the money is going to be paid to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act in an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year of 1961 of $50 million, to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such method of allocation as may be determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, as compensation to such companies— this is the point— for the maintenance of their rates on freight traffic at reduced levels as provided for in the said act, is the answer to my question that the full $50 million goes, as determined by the board of transport commissioners, for the maintenance of the rates on freight traffic at reduced levels as provided for in the Freight Rates Reduction Act?

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, this is an interim payment. The members of the MacPherson commission have made a complete study of the whole railway situation in Canada. They were faced with the fact that the railways either had to increase their rates or maintain certain inequalities in the rate structure or abandon various services across Canada. In its report the MacPherson commission has set up a certain pattern by way of solution of the problems of the railways in Canada. As I have said earlier, it is only a first report. The second and third volumes are still to come, and so that the railways would not raise their rates all of a sudden and also to permit the railways to equalize the situation all across Canada the government has decided that it is fair to provide a subsidy of $50 million.

Mr. Chevrier: Then, what the minister is saying is that it is for the reduction of freight rates, am I correct?

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: On June 8, 1961, Bill C-93 was assented to and this was an amendment to the Freight Rates Reduction Act which provided the sum of $20 million. If I understand correctly, the government is going to give $50 million additional to the railways, as determined by the board of transport commissioners, over and above the $20 million that was provided by the Freight Rates Reduction Act. In other words, the $20 million was not enough. The $20 million reduced the rate from 17 per cent to 8 to 10 per cent and now this $50 million is going as compensation to the said railway companies for the maintenance of their rates as set out in the last part of the vote, which rates are at a reduced level as provided in the Freight Rates Reduction Act, is that right?

Mr. Balcer: That is right.

Mr. Chevrier: What provision is there for doing this when parliament passed a statute which says the railways shall get $20 million for the reduction of freight rates? Now, disregarding the statute, an item is put in the estimates to pay $50 million. Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the purpose at all of the $50 million? I hope the minister will tell us frankly what the purpose is. The purpose is simply to carry out the recommendations of the Milvain report, and nothing more.

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Chairman. First of all, the $20 million in the Freight Rates Reduction Act was for the purposes set out in the act. The $50 million, as I said earlier, was based on the MacPherson report, and the only way we could implement that report was by means of an item in the estimates. The wording of the item gives a general description of the purpose and the reason the government is paying this $50 million to the railways.

The two railways faced great problems, and that was the reason the government instituted this royal commission. The commission was to investigate the problems of the railways in Canada and make a report. The commission has partly accomplished this purpose but so far only one part of the report is available. The report gives a good picture of the situation in which the railways find themselves and explains what should be done. Until the other two volumes of the report are available the government cannot make any final decisions, but decided the sum of $50 million would be a proper amount to help the railways carry on until the other two volumes of the report are available.

Mr. Chevrier: The royal commission on transportation made no recommendations having to do with freight rates?

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: No, they did not. I have just put on Hansard the four categories of recommendations which they made. None of them had to do with freight rates. All I am saying to the minister is that the only conclusion to which I can come with reference to this vote is that it is either to pay for the recommendations of the royal commission, and the minister said no to that, or it is to pay for a reduction in freight rates, to which the minister has said yes.

Mr. Balcer: I did not say no, I said the payment is based partly on the MacPherson commission recommendations that the railways should receive subsidies, that the railways should be allowed to abandon certain lines, and so on. There were all kinds of recommendations. The government could not implement these recommendations until the other part of the report is available. The government, in fairness to the railways, decided to give this $50 million subsidy.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not going to pursue the matter indefinitely, but I am certainly not satisfied with the explanation which the minister has given because his comment is divided into two parts; one is related to the royal commission report, and there is no mention in the report of any amount to be paid in reduction of freight rates. We passed a statute under which we gave the railways $20 million. There can, therefore, be no other conclusion but that this item has been put in here in that confused form to implement the recommendation of the Milvain report.

Mr. Benidickson: What relationship would the minister say that this has, not only to the revenues of the railways but to the wages of the employees, pending some consideration of some of the items in the royal commission report?

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, it arises from the royal commission report. The railways were facing great needs and these needs have been met in part by this $50 million.

Mr. Benidickson: Is the minister suggesting that out of this $50 million a substantial portion of it goes to those who work on the railways?

Mr. Balcer: Well, it goes for all the expenses of the railways. Railway expenses have increased in a general way and the operating costs of the railways have gone up recently. This is what I meant by the general needs of the railways and it was in the face of those needs that the government decided to grant this amount.

Canadian maritime commission—

592. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $10,000,000.

Mr. Chevrier: As the committee knows, this item concerns the subsidy policy which the minister announced in the house, together with the regulations which were circulated. Since these regulations have been circulated, I should like to know how many shipowners, how many shipbuilders, have signed contracts on the basis of the regulations which were circulated by the minister and on the basis of the interim regulations announced by the minister on July 7?

Mr. Balcer: At the present time, Mr. Chairman, we have over one hundred applications and the Canadian maritime commission is processing them. At the moment five ships are being built under the new regulations. There has been a tremendous response from shipbuilders, shipowners and future shipowners, and I am quite confident the new regulations will result in a number of ships being built.

Mr. Chevrier: Out of the hundreds of applications that have been made, five contracts have been signed for the construction of ships, am I correct?

Mr. Balcer: Five starts under the regulations are going on at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: That means that five ships are being built?

Mr. Balcer: Five ships under the regulations are being built at the present time. These contracts are being processed and we are quite confident about the matter. The program is going very well and according to expectations.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, in the statement which the minister made in the house and the discussion which followed there was some question of this policy benefiting not only Canadian shipbuilders—that is, Canadian yards—but also Canadian ship operators. The minister went on to say that this would eventually mean assistance to a Canadian merchant navy. The policy as announced by the minister—and I have the announcement in my hand—concerned not only assistance to shipbuilding, as I said, but assistance to a Canadian merchant navy.

Will the minister indicate where in these regulations or in this policy announced by him will be any benefit forthcoming to the operators of Canadian ships on the deep-sea. As I understand it, the measure is one that will give assistance to Canadian yards by a subsidy of 40 per cent, together with the additional 33⅓ per cent over a period of three years by way of depreciation. But how will this policy benefit the operators of deep-sea vessels?

Mr. Benidickson: Canadian operators particularly.

Mr. Balcer: First of all, Mr. Chairman, we are not at the present time paying any operating subsidies, but of course these new regulations will help shipowners, because when they want a ship built in Canada they will have the advantage of this 40 per cent subsidy. When a ship is built in Canada for a Canadian shipowner, this 40 per cent subsidy will give the shipowner the opportunity to compete with ships being built in shipyards in other countries.

Mr. Chevrier: Is that what the minister meant when he said these regulations and this policy would help the deep-sea operators, because the subsidy is one which will assist in the building of ships, not in the operation of ships? I am sure the operators of deep-sea vessels are keenly interested in knowing whether they will benefit from the operation of this policy, as will builders of ships.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, a very interesting development has taken place in the last few weeks. At the present time some Canadians have contacted the Canadian maritime commission—

Mr. Chevrier: I will have to get a loudspeaker in order to hear you.

Mr. Balcer: —in connection with building ships on the great lakes that will be able to serve on the great lakes and on the deep-sea. I think there will be a very interesting development in this way. The purpose of these regulations, of course, is not that of an operating subsidy but to help Canadian shipowners acquire ships from Canadian shipyards at a fair price and one that is competitive with other shipyards in the world.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of Transport.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, the sum of $1,543,443,482.96 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-132, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1962.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

MOTION RETURNING PAPERS TO SENATE

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of moving that a message be sent to the Senate to return to that house the evidence taken and the papers produced before the standing committee on divorce in respect of certain bills?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to reverting to motions for that purpose?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Spencer (for Mr. Mandziuk) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to return to that house the evidence taken and the papers produced before the Senate standing committee on divorce in respect of the following bills:

Bill SD-54, an act for the relief of Frank Grilli.

Bill SD-139, an act for the relief of Ignatz Radakovitz.

He said: By way of explanation I might state that the eighth and ninth reports of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills presented on September 27 were adverse to the prayer of these two bills. This motion is necessary to return the Senate papers and to avoid a message from the Senate requesting them.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FELICITATIONS ON CLOSING OF SESSION

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Since this concludes the business of the house, I should like to pause for a moment and pay tribute to those with whom we have been associated during the course of this session.

I should like to thank the leader of the house for his co-operation always, but more particularly during the last three weeks. I do not say that in any facetious manner. I should like to make this simple statement with reference to the work of the house: if only we could proceed with the work in the same manner as we have done in the last three weeks our sessions would not last nearly as long. I hope it will be possible in the next session so to arrange the work that we shall not begin Saturday and morning sittings until way toward the end, perhaps the second or third week before the end, because I do not think the early sittings and Saturday sittings have been conducive to productive work.

Having said that, I feel I should express one always liked spirited debate in the House of the opposition, our thanks for your courtesy, your kindness, and for the manner in which you preside over the affairs of this chamber. I should like to say that we have for you great admiration. If we do find that sometimes you lean a little more on the right of your chair than you do on your left we shall never hold it against you because we know that when you do that we either deserve it or, again, that you are exercising your discretion, as you, in the chair, have every right to do.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I should not want to forgo the custom of saying a few words about the deputy speaker and chairman of the committees of the house (Mr. Flynn). Unfortunately, he is not here at the moment since he is representing Canada on a mission abroad, according to what I have read in the newspapers.

I wish to thank him for the manner in which he has fulfilled his duties. I am sure he has done as well as he could.

(Text):

Now I should like to say a special word about the chairman of our committee of the whole house. He is not only a new chairman but also a new member. He has had to take over from his predecessor at short notice. In my opinion, a chairman of the committee must have three prerequisite qualities. The first is a knowledge of the rules, the next is good judgment, and the third is a lot of patience. The hon. member who presides now over the committee of the whole possesses those three qualifications. In my opinion he has put into effect not so much the letter of the rules as their spirit and that is, I think, what was intended by those who enacted the rules in the first place.

There are many others in the house to whom I should like to say a word of thanks—to the Clerk and those who sit round him at the table and who perform services for us all; to our Hansard reporters, both in English and in French, who are so accurate and painstaking and who spend a great length of time after the house adjourns preparing transcripts of our speeches. I should like to express our thanks to the translators. This is a new branch of our house. A translator must be extremely efficient. He must have a general knowledge of so many subjects, and more, particularly, of the subjects which are under discussion here. I want to thank them particularly. I wish also to express our thanks to the secretaries and the stenographers of the house, to the protective staff and to the clerks of the committees whom we always seem to omit, and to all others. They perform a commendable task. Committees sit so often now, and the clerks perform most valuable duties. I should like to thank them on behalf of the opposition. Last, but not least, I should like to express our thanks to those page boys who serve us with such devotion, who are so well groomed and well drilled, thanks to those associated with you, Mr. Speaker. We shall miss them in the days that lie ahead.

I think I should conclude by thanking all the members of the house for not having interrupted me and so many others here more often than they did and for their many contributions to the discussions which took place as well as to the general conduct and administration of the House of Commons. To all those hon. members who are here I say "thank you" and look forward to seeing you again in the not too distant future.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On behalf of the members of this group I want to endorse all the sentiments which have been so ably expressed by the spokesman of the official opposition. I especially wish to reiterate the kind words he had to say about the leader of the house. We have at all times experienced his willingness to consult in a manner, I may say, we have not always experienced in the past.

To you, Mr. Speaker, we want to say that we have never noticed you leaning either to the left or to the right. You have always maintained an impartial position, often in difficult situations which we have imposed upon you.

I wish to pay the compliments of this group to the many employees of the house, not only to the clerks but even to our office assistants, stenographers, messengers, page boys and all the rest. I am sure all members of this house regret the necessity at this time of having to appoint a new chairman of the committee of the whole. I am sure that all of us wish the former chairman a speedy recovery and return to this house.

The members of our group hope that all hon. members, as they go home for a month or more of fence mending, will have a very interesting experience.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I thank hon. members of the opposition who have referred so kindly to me and, I am sure, to the great surprise of my colleagues on this side of the house. What the hon. member for Laurier said is very accurate and should be borne in mind. During the last three weeks the house has operated more efficiently than it did in earlier parts of the session. I am quite prepared to agree with him that the early imposition of lengthy hours and Saturday sittings is a mistake and perhaps another year we will not have to do that.

I am constantly surprised how well we do manage in this house year after year and I am impressed by the friendly spirit that prevails despite spirited debate which is of importance in a democratic parliament. I for one always liked spirited debate in the House of Commons either as a participant, an observer or sometimes even as one who interrupts.

I wish to associate myself with the remarks that had been made concerning yourself, Mr. Speaker, concerning the Deputy Speaker, the Chairman, and all the officials of the house, the members of parliament and the members of the staff who look after the needs of the House of Commons. It is impossible to name them all without omitting some who should be named but I wish to include them all in our expression of thanks.

Parliament is a great institution. Although we sometimes appear to falter, nevertheless every hon. member is interested in maintaining the magnificent traditions of this institution and under your leadership, sir, I believe that has been done very ably during this session.

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to acknowledge on behalf of those who have been so deservedly complimented the happy and well justified expressions of appreciation which have come from all sides of the house. The officers, the staff of the House of Commons and the staff of the Department of the Secretary of State have been properly noticed for the service they have given. On behalf of those who are unable to speak for themselves I acknowledge these compliments which I am sure will be gratefully received.

For myself, I am really very pleased at what has been said. It is not possible to walk a tightrope without swinging even involuntarily. I am sure that at times some hon. members have thought I have swung one way when to others it may have seemed that I was swinging in the opposite direction; but it is all the more appreciated that hon. members have expressed themselves as they have and have co-operated so fully in circumstances in which it is not always possible to be right.

I am particularly pleased with the compliments that have been paid to the deputy-chairman of the committee of the whole house. I have not had the same opportunities as others to observe him in action but I am sure that what has been said is well deserved and I know that hon. members will wish him to have an opportunity to speak for himself.

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South): As the house would have expected, sir, you have done very adequately what I had hoped to do, however inadequately, and however briefly. I have found my service in the house a very inspiring experience indeed. Such an experience can be inspiring only if one has the gracious co-operation of all hon. members and particularly the co-operation and assistance of those to whom we look to nurse us through all the difficult pasages that face us as we proceed with the business of the committee.

I must say I was deeply moved by the probably over generous comments made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), the acting leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, and I wish the hon. gentleman to know that I shall be everlastingly grateful.

Mr. Speaker: There is one other item of business not on the order paper. I expect now it is tomorrow's business. When we go to the other place I think it is a reasonable expectation that our duties will not bring us back to this chamber but there are other occupations which I think are appropriate for the termination of the session and I am sure that nourishment will be needed after we have been to the other place.

When we return from the other place I hope that hon. members will come back to the room across the hall and bring their wives or husbands, if they are here. I should also like to include in this invitation the members of the press gallery and their wives.

And the sitting having continued until after midnight.

Friday, September 29, 1961

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, September 28, 1961

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as deputy of the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 11:50 p.m. today, September 28, 1961, for the purpose of proroguing the fourth session of the twenty fourth parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
Col. A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for the relief of Jean George Lipsman.

An act for the relief of Margaret Terese MacDonald Tombs.

An act for the relief of Esther Miller Finkelstein.

Royal Assent

An act for the relief of Matilda Aboud Henrig, otherwise known as Matilda Aboud Levac.

An act for the relief of Charles Malcolm Macdonald.

An act for the relief of Georgette Ginette Richardot Marica.

An act for the relief of Roland Labelle.

An act for the relief of Robert Clair Alger.

[Mr. Speaker.]

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Depuy of the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1962.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In Her Majesty's name, the Deputy of the Governor General thanks her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

After which the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the twenty fourth parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The fourth session of this parliament, the longest in Canada's history, has been particularly significant for the people of Canada, and the number of measures enacted on their behalf has been unusually large.

Mounting international tensions have been a source of deep anxiety, made more acute by the Soviet union's resumption of nuclear tests and the resultant fear of a renewed menace to human health through radioactive fall-out. These and related developments continue to command the vigilant attention of the government.

Berlin is the latest and most dangerous in a series of regional crises precipitated and exploited by the U.S.S.R. In the Congo, in Southeast Asia, as well as in Berlin, Canada has been active in international arrangements to contain conflict and restore stability. At the same time, my government has been energetic in promoting and exploring through the United Nations and in the North Atlantic alliance all possibilities for negotiated settlements of an honourable and lasting nature.

Despite delays and setbacks in progress toward a treaty providing for controlled disarmament, agreement has been reached on a framework to guide future negotiations with the Soviet side. The government has taken its part in formulating a new and comprehensive western plan which offers a realistic basis for early and effective measures to reduce both conventional and nuclear armaments under safeguards and to provide adequate international means for keeping the peace as disarmament proceeds.

At a meeting in London in March, the prime ministers of the commonwealth resumed their discussions of major world crises and reviewed constitutional developments. Far reaching decisions were taken affecting the composition and character of the commonwealth.

The importance of bearing a fair share of assistance to less developed nations continues to be recognized by the government. Established programs of aid were maintained and new emphasis given to educational assistance, drawing upon both of the historic cultures of Canada. Administrative changes were introduced to improve the central direction of all external assistance programs. Canada's diplomatic representation abroad was expanded, particularly in Latin America.

In the face of the increase in world tension it is necessary to maintain the strength of the free world. You have been informed of the measures being taken to strengthen the Canadian forces in Europe and at home, and of the survival training plan to be conducted in all parts of Canada this year.

During the present session you have welcomed and heard in parliament the President of the United States.

Important international tariff negotiations have been in process in Geneva. In these negotiations every effort has been made to meet the trade problems of Canada in a constructive way in dealing with the new economic grouping in Europe. My ministers have taken a leading role at a meeting of commonwealth economic ministers at Accra, convened to consider economic questions of the commonwealth, including the implications of the possible membership of the United Kingdom in the European economic community.

Important conferences with provincial governments have taken place during the session. Three further meetings have been held at which progress was made in finding ways and means of amending the Canadian constitution in Canada. A third dominion-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements was held, and you have approved legislation concerning the arrangements for the five year period beginning April 1962.

My government has been gratified to observe the recent improvement in the general economic conditions in Canada. Although the volume of employment has been at the highest level in the nation's history, the provision of additional employment to re-employ those who have been out of work and to keep pace with the growth in the labour force has remained a cause for concern in Canada as in the United States. Many of the measures passed during the session have been designed to stimulate the national economy and to create more jobs.

You have approved an expanded program of assistance to municipalities for winter works projects. You have amended the National Housing Act to make further improvements in the terms of mortgage lending, to authorize Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make loans on favourable terms to universities for students' residences, to enable the corporation to make long term loans to local authorities for approved projects for sewage disposal and treatment, and to increase the lending authority of the corporation.

To assist in strengthening Canada's competitive position in export and domestic markets, you have authorized the establishment of a national productivity council with membership from the fields of industry and commerce, organized labour, agriculture and other primary production, as well as qualified persons chosen from the public at large and from the scientific agencies of government. You have also approved the creation of a national design council which will be devoted to the promotion of excellence in the design of Canadian products of all kinds.

You have enacted measures to extend the assistance given to provincial governments for technical and vocational training, both within the school system and for the training and retraining of persons who have already become workers, and for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons.

To stimulate the growth of Canadian private enterprise you have approved legislation authorizing government guarantees for bank loans to small businesses. You have passed measures to expand the field of operations and the lending authority of the industrial development bank, and to make broader and more effective provision for export credits insurance.

Authority has been given under the Income Tax Act for accelerated capital cost allowances to assist new industries in areas having a substantial degree of continued unemployment over a period of years, to aid in the development of new products from processing operations not previously carried on in Canada, to encourage the production of new types of goods, and to promote re-equipment and modernization of Canadian industry. Amendments have been made in the Income Tax Act including revisions in the withholding taxes on interest and dividends paid to non-residents. The Excise Tax Act was amended, notably to repeal the special excise tax on automobiles.

You have enacted a measure in the national agriculture program to authorize the federal government to join with provincial agencies and local groups throughout Canada in comprehensive programs of rural rehabilitation and development. In addition, amendments were made to the Farm Improvement Loans Act to raise the over-all limit on guarantees of bank loans for farm improvement, and to the Farm Credit Act to increase the lending authority of the farm credit corporation for direct loans to Canadian agriculture.

A number of further steps were taken in the government's national development program. A treaty was signed with the United States on the international aspects of the proposed co-operative development of the Columbia river, and the federal government has offered, subject to the approval of parliament, to share equally with the province of British Columbia in the cost of the large water storage projects involved. Agreements have also been signed and appropriations made for flood control and conservation projects in the metropolitan Toronto and surrounding area and on the upper Thames river in southwestern Ontario. Legislation has been passed to approve a Canadian National Railway line to the new mining area near Mattagami lake in northwestern Quebec. In addition you have authorized the construction of a railway line from northern Alberta to Great Slave lake which constitutes another important step in the development of the Canadian north.

To accelerate the modernization of the Customs Tariff of Canada, you have enlarged the tariff board and authorized it to sit in two panels, and you have made certain revisions in the Customs Tariff.

Amendments to the Pension Act and to the War Veterans Allowance Act have been passed, including provision for substantial increases in pensions and allowances payable to veterans or their dependents.

A measure of potential significance that you have enacted in this session has been the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, which authorizes the establishment of a national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport and the granting of financial assistance to activities that will promote the fitness of Canadians.

You have enacted a measure to revise the Civil Service Act.

Measures have been passed to improve the law and arrangements for the control of narcotics and of barbiturates. The Penitentiaries Act has been revised to give effect to my government's policies of correctional reform. Important amendments have been made to the Criminal Code on the subjects of murder and the treatment of sex offenders.

To provide for broader representation on the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways, you have enacted legislation to increase the number of its directors.

Amendments to the Canada Shipping Act have been approved.

You have passed the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act.

You have authorized extension of the operation of the Freight Rates Reduction Act to April 30, 1962, and approved a measure to avert a nation-wide suspension of railway operations last winter and the disruption of the national economy that would otherwise have ensued.

The National Centennial Act has been passed, giving authority for the establishment of a national centennial administration and for other arrangements designed to ensure that the observance of the centennial of the confederation of Canada suitably accords with the greatness of the occasion.

The signing of an estate tax convention with the United States has been approved.

A number of less noteworthy amendments were made to various statutes.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the essential public services and payments for the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May divine Providence continue to bless, protect and guide our nation.

This concluded the fourth session of the twenty fourth parliament.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

C.M.H.C. SALE OF MORTGAGES

Question No. 298—Mr. Regier:

1. What is the total amount of the mortgage documents that, as to date, have been offered for sale to the public by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?
2. What was the amount of unpaid principal and the average interest rate of the securities that have been sold?
3. How much was realized from the sale of the above securities?

Answer by: Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works):

Question

1. The total of the two offerings was $32,500,000. However, it was not intended to sell more than $30 million. The balance was offered merely to make a wider choice of location possible to prospective purchasers.

2. Sales were made on the basis of principal and interest and totalled $26 million, including $3¾ million of option tenders expiring October 28, 1961. All loans offered for sale to date carry an interest rate of 6¾ per cent per annum calculated semi-annually.

3. At the present time it is impossible to give an exact figure since some of the options have not yet been exercised. On the first sale, however, an average price of 101.17 was realized and on the second sale the average accepted tender price was 101.35.
