sired a further interview with them to discuss the matter more fully. I had answered, as it was my duty, all the communications sent to me and had arranged for an interview, as I thought with Dr. Haley and Mr. Roche. It appears, however, that there was a misunderstanding, and they wrote me and I answered accordingly. This is all the information I have to give in reply to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that I had in some way, unknown to myself, not complied with the order in this particular and failed to all rules of honour. I may repeat what I had occasion to say once before that I am the guardian of my own honour and do not care to thrust the hon. gentleman between me and my honour.

I now come to the merits of the case. If the position taken by the hon. gentleman be summarized, as it ought to be, it simply amounts to this, that in this matter public interest should have been sacrificed to the private interests of this company. What are the facts? In the last session of Parliament, two companies were given a charter to construct a telegraph line from Vancouver or Victoria in British Columbia to Dawson City. One of these charters is held by the company which has been in question all afternoon, the Northern Commercial Company. The other company interested, is the Dawson City and Victoria Telegraph Company. Here I pause a moment to ask why is it that two companies were chartered to do the same work—to construct a line of telegraph from the capital of British Columbia to the capital of the Yukon. It was not expected that both companies should go on and build the line.

Mr. PRIOR. They were two different routes.

The PRIME MINISTER. Going to the same point. I dare say that the routes were not identically the same, but when I am told that there are two different routes, that is simply playing with words, if the two routes vary from each other only a few miles in distance and are intended to connect British Columbia with the Yukon, I do not know that if one line had been built, the other company would have gone on with this work.

It is said that we are damaging one company because the Government is constructing the telegraph line. Then what would have been the damage to the other company if one company had constructed the line? The ground taken by the hon. gentleman this afternoon was that there was room for only one telegraph line, and two companies were chartered. And why was that done? Because, as we know very well, it takes time and money to float one of these companies, and success is not always sure; and Parliament had no hesitation in giving two charters in the hope that one would be successful. Now, only one company, so far as we know, proceeded with the work of organizing under this charter. The other has done some tentative work but it did not amount to anything. The only one that did anything to be considered here was the Northern Commercial Company. Now, let us see how that company proceeded. It was chartered on the 13th June, 1898. From the 13th June, 1898, to 6th October following, nearly 4 months, not a thing appears to have been done by the company. On the 6th October, Mr. Roche, who represented himself as connected with the company appeared on the scene. He had an interview with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, who gave him a letter which has been read. I take the gist of that letter in the very words given by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and as given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, which was: very well, you want to construct a line; we will favour you, provided you go on promptly with the work. That was the condition the Minister of Railways and Canals laid down upon which the Government would favour the company. Now, Sir, I ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), I ask every gentleman of this House, did Mr. Roche, or the company he represented, comply with this condition; Did they go on promptly with the work? What does the record disclose? It discloses that November, December, January, February passed and March was entered upon and not a thing was done by Mr. Roche or that company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PRIOR. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) pardon.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, not a thing was done from 6th October to the 16th March. Not one tittle of evidence appears that Mr. Roche had done a thing at that time when Parliament was summoned, to redeem the promise which the Minister of Railways and Canals had exacted from him, that he would go on and promptly finish the work.

Mr. PRIOR. That is not correct.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the use in the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) saying that is not correct. He spoke for three-quarters of an hour this afternoon, and what did he show Mr. Roche to have done from the 6th October until the day Parliament was summoned? Not a thing appears in the record, not a thing appears in the speech of the hon. gentleman to show that Mr. Roche did one single thing to carry out the promise that the Minister of Railways and Canals had exacted from him. November passed, December passed, January passed, February passed, and March was reached, five months had elapsed and not a thing was done, and now the hon. gentleman tells us that we were derelict in our duty when, finding the company had not done anything we determined we would not lose another season but would go on with the work and have the telegraph established at once. But there is something more. We have a new doctrine in parliamentary ethics announced to-day by the leader of the Opposition. It is no longer the interests of the country that are to be considered when a public work should be constructed—and I challenge anybody on the other side of this House to rise and say that it was not a work of primary necessity to have, in this year 1899, a telegraph line to the Yukon. No one will rise to say such a thing. It was the work of immediate necessity.

Mr. PRIOR. That is right.

The PRIME MINISTER. "That is right," says the hon. gentleman. We were right in so doing.

Mr. PRIOR. I did not say that.

The PRIME MINISTER. According to the hon. leader of the Opposition, having decided on the construction of the work we should have folded our arms and waited to see what the company was doing, which, for five months had not shown itself. The first thing you should have done, says the hon. gentleman, was to ascertain where Mr. Roche was, what was his address, what he was doing, whether he was moving in this matter or standing still. Had we done this, what would have been the result? More delay and the loss of this work this session. We determined that we would have no more delay. I am as much guardian of my own honour as the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is of his, but I place myself not only in the judgment of the people but in the judgment of the people of England itself, when I say, that having waited for five long months, we were not called upon to wait an hour longer. The hon. gentleman challenges us upon this, and I readily accept the challenge he has thrown across the floor, and I place myself in the judgment of the people of Canada to-day to say whether, after waiting five months to know whether Mr. Roche was going on, to know whether or not his company was ready to carry on the work, we were not right in deciding that we would consult the interests of Canada and not the interest of Mr. Roche and the Northern Commercial Company. Now, we determined to go on with the work. I thought we had passed the Order in Council on the 3rd of March, but I see that my memory was at fault, and it was on the 13th March. Parliament was summoned to meet three days later. And this is the announcement that His Excellency made to the House and to the country:

The returns from the Yukon have so far proved sufficient to meet the heavy expenditure it was found necessary to incur for the purpose of preserving law and order, and it has been thought expedient in the public interest to authorize the construction of a line of telegraph for the purpose of maintaining speedy communication with the people of those distant territories.

That was the announcement, and we determined that we would take advantage of a vote which we had for a telegraph line in British Columbia to commence work immediately.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow me—or will he consider it an interruption—to ask him to point out the votes in the Supply Bill? He said before recess that he could point them out.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I will point them out. Here is an item: "Telegraph line, B.C., $12,000."

Mr. FOSTER. That is the vote my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has taken.

The PRIME MINISTER. We determined that we would take advantage of the money we had in hand to prosecute the work immediately, and I am happy to say that we have a telegraph wire from Skagway to Lake Bennett, and from Lake Bennett now under construction to Lake Atlin, so that news can be had from that section in four days' time. We intend to prosecute the work all summer and to have it completed during the present season. And there is not a man who will question the wisdom of the policy we are carrying out. It was on the 16th March we made the announcement I have just quoted. On 11th of April Mr. Roche, who had disappeared for five months, who had not been heard of since the 6th of October, appears on the scene with a memorial which the hon. member for Victoria has read this afternoon.

Mr. PRIOR. The right hon. gentleman says they have never heard of Mr. Roche. Had he not been in correspondence with the Minister of Railways and Canals during that time?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The hon. gentleman surely is not intending to offer me a wilful and deliberate insult.

Mr. PRIOR. No, I do not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I told the hon. gentleman that I had not been the recipient of a letter from Mr. Roche since the 6th of October, directly or indirectly, or had any communication with him at any time. The hon. gentleman asked me that, and I answered, No. Now, I ask him to withdraw the imputation that he is making.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, there is something more. There are none so blind as those who will not see, and none so deaf as those who will not hear. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) heard this afternoon, and the leader of the Opposition heard this afternoon, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals declare again and again: If Mr. Roche has any scrap of paper from me to him, or from him to me, I ask him to have it produced. He did more, he asked the member for Victoria to communicate with his friend, Mr. Roche, and ask him to produce any other paper that he might have, either going from him or coming to him. Why, Sir, what will convince the hon. gentlemen? The hon. gentleman has the answer of the Minister in his own words, and he has only to communicate with his friend and client, Mr. Roche, to ascertain whether Mr. Roche has communicated with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. He has the answer of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and he will get no different answer from Mr. Roche. Now, as I said, Mr. Roche appeared again on the scene on the 11th of April, after having been lost somewhere, heaven only knows where, from the 6th of October until the 11th of April. He comes here on the 11th of April in the character of a much-injured man, and tells us that he is ready to go on with the work. Ready to go on with what work? Mr. Roche told us at that time that he was not ready to go on with a cable from Victoria to Skagway. When this company was incorporated in the month of June last, he had an option on a double scheme, either to construct a telegraph line by a cable or to construct it overland. Mr. Roche offered for our consideration, on the 11th of April, the scheme for constructing a cable. We considered that proposition, and I do not violate any Cabinet secret in declaring my own conviction, and I believe it is the conviction of everybody else in this House, that the line which we must have to communicate with the Yukon is not a cable which would lie in American territory, but a line on all Canadian territory. Therefore, we did not entertain the offer of Mr. Roche. It is true that Mr. Roche took some precaution at that time, and got Lord Strathcona to wire us, which communication was placed before the House a little later, that the means of the Northern Commercial Company were ample. I do not question their means, they appear to be ample. But the scheme was one that we could not entertain. What we wanted, and what Parliament would sanction, was a line established this year which would connect Skagway with Dawson City, with a spur from Bennett to Atlin Lake, and then down towards Quesnelle. That is the scheme that we have in our minds, and that will be carried into operation next year. Again, I place myself in the judgment of this House whether, in deciding to have a communication with the Yukon by an overland line instead of a cable, we did not serve the best interests of Canada. Now, Sir, these are the reasons which governed our action. What is there, then, in all these charges that have been hurled against us? If ever there was a tempest in a teapot, we have had it to-day. It is not even a tempest in a teapot, but it is an attempt to find fault where there is no fault to be found, it is an attempt to charge the Government with unjust conduct where our action has only tended to serve the best interests of our common countrymen.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has made an appeal ad misericordiam to his followers behind him. He knew very well that this matter was a somewhat serious one, and with that sophistry which he knows so well how to employ, he has endeavoured to stem the tide which he saw was clearly going against him. But this is not a matter for impassioned discussion, this is a matter for cold, keen and deliberate analysis. I propose to analyse this question to a slight extent, and not to take up too much time in doing it. I will take up, first, one point that has been treated, that is the point as to information being supplied by the Government. Either this is a Government composed of Cabinet Ministers, which has a solidarity of its own, or it is simply a set of strands, thirteen in number, having no union one with the other. Day after day we are treated to this spectacle, that when a return is asked for and the Minister brings down the return, it is immediately found to be in some important respects defective, because the other departments than the one presided over by the hon. Minister who has brought it down, has not paid any attention to the order, and, consequently, has not fulfilled its share of it. Well, Sir, I say that when this House passes an order and says to the Government, as this inclusive order does, that they are to produce all copies of letters, when they name the different Ministers, as this one does, and says, also copies of all letters from the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada, when the Ministers sitting together as a Government propose to send that return to this Parliament, it should come as the return embodying the whole information, and it does not lie within the province of any one Minister to get up and say: Oh, I heard nothing about this, I did not know that it referred to me. It is the Government's duty to send in that return, and the Government is composed of all the members of the different departments. Now, when the House in good faith makes an order, and when the Government lays on the Table the return to that order, the House supposes that it has all the information, and goes on to discuss the question. If it had not been the good fortune of the House that in the member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) we had information which otherwise was not open to any member of this House, we would have discussed and passed this whole matter on insufficient information, and we would not have had the right of the case. As it is, we are in this position now, and brought to that position by the Government of the day, that when a return purporting to be full information is laid on the Table of the House, no member of this House is justified in feeling that it has complete information. We do not know it until we have gone to work by a committee, or have ferreted it out for ourselves. The lamest excuse that was ever attempted in this House was the answer my hon. friend attempted to give for not bringing down this part of that return. Why did he not bring it down? His name is mentioned specially. How long has it been in preparation? Four or five weeks. My hon. friend found it in three or four hours when he found that he had to, but up to that time he conveniently forgot to find it, or he had his papers so mixed in such an unbusinesslike way that they were not found, and he took the onus as the head of this Government of putting on the Table of this House his solemn pledge that this was full information when it was not full information, when some of the most essential particulars were left out, more particularly that with reference to the correspondence of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) as well as his own. So that the first point which we protest against is the unbusinesslike, the neglectful, the shuffling way in which the Government does its business, and the total lack that there is of the credit which men can give on the floors of this House to any return that these gentlemen bring down purporting to be information which is asked for, and which has been ordered by the House itself.

So much with reference to that. Now, there is a much more serious point, and it is one which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as a politician of one year's standing, ought not to have fallen into, but which, as the leader of the Government, it is simply a shame and a disgrace that he has fallen into it. He has the effrontery to state, in the presence of this House, that there was a vote for this made and passed in the Supply Bill. I will hazard my position in this House, and I will leave it to-morrow if I am not right, that there is not one dollar bill in that Supply Bill which can, except by malversation of public office, apply to this matter of building a telegraph line into the Yukon. My right hon. friend stated to-night that they had a vote in the British Columbia section of the Estimates for building this telegraph line. They have no such vote. Will the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) say what vote it is?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). A large sum has been voted for this purpose, and if my opinion is worth anything, I think this is an entirely legal and proper application of the money.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will explain to the House and the House will be its own judge. Let us be cool and calm, and not partisans for a while.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. I know it is a difficult thing to ask hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes, but yet I hope they will. In the first place I will take the Estimates for the last year, on which the Supply Bill is founded. That is a vote of $12,000, which the hon. Minister of Finance stakes his reputation, as the Minister of Finance of this Government, is a proper vote to take that money from for the construction of this telegraph line into the Yukon. What is it? It will be found on page 79 of the Estimates. What is it for? It is "Public Works, Collection of Revenues." It is only to pay for the staff and operation of the Government lines at present in British Columbia. "B" gives the details: $12,000 for telegraph lines in British Columbia; staff $9,065—the men engaged by the Government, paid to attend to the telegraph wires that are now in the possession of the Government and who work from December until the next December. Of that $12,000, $9,000 odd is to pay these men their salaries and allowances. $2,935 of this $12,000 to pay what? It goes to pay for the staff and repairs for these same Government telegraph lines which are being carried on and operated in the province of British Columbia. That takes up your $12,000. The hon. Minister of Finance, the right hon. First Minister and the Government of the day had no more right to take that money and divert it from the payment of the salaries of the staff and the repairs of these lines, at present in operation, than they had to take the vote for the Experimental Farm and give it over to the building of a railway into the Klondike. What is the constitutional law? What is essential to parliamentary government? What are the rules laid down ever since responsible government obtained in Great Britain and her colonies? What is the first principle? The first principle is that, in the House of Commons, specified votes must be brought down; the next principle is that the votes, as specified, must be expended, and the third, as a guard to that is, that there shall be an effective audit so as to see that this is done and to see that not another cent is expended except that which is provided for by the appropriations of Parliament. My right hon. friend who leads this House and his Finance Minister stake their reputations that this amount was a vote from which they could take money and devote it to the building of a telegraph line into the Yukon district. Anyway, if they are to take it, I want to know if this line that my hon. friends are building now is in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When we get into Supply we will have these items discussed, and we will furnish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) with all the information.

Mr. FOSTER. That is so, but the hon. gentleman knows that this is British Columbia vote and the very fact that even if it were for the construction of telegraph lines, being confined to British Columbia, in the specification, it would prevent these hon. gentlemen from diverting it to build a telegraph line in the North-west Territories or in the Yukon district.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the expenditure is small, and that all that has yet taken place is in British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose it is. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says "hear, hear," as if he were out of his difficulty. Suppose we take him down to his own island where you have a piece of the Intercolonial Railway. When you have provided a certain amount of money for a part of that railway in Prince Edward Island to pay for station agents, to pay conductors and trackmen, and the cost of operating, does the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries say that they would be justified in taking that money to build a line of railway from one point in Prince Edward Island to another? Exactly parallel. I would like to know, whether if this money has been taken from these operators' salaries and allowances, these men staying out of their money? Are they doing their work and getting nothing for it? Here you are right down to the 21st of June and eleven-twelfths of that money has gone into the pockets of the men for whom it was voted, and who have earned it up to date. Will one-twelfth of that $12,000 serve to build a telegraph line into the Yukon? Is it that they have stolen the money from these men who earned it, who want their pay and who, I believe, have got it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was going to set an example of keeping cool.

Mr. FOSTER. I am, but it is mighty hard to keep cool in the face of a transaction like that. I am in earnest; I am dead in earnest, but I am not mad. If I were mad I would talk different from what I do. Suppose that it is found out that these hon. gentlemen, when Parliament was to meet here on the 16th of March got together in solemn conclave, three days before, exactly, and passed an Order in Council authorising an expenditure to be made of one or two hundred thousand dollars, or more, that they had not struck a stroke, that they had not bought a pound's worth of anything, that they had not done anything at all to forward the operations, but just sat down in Council, in time to anticipate Parliament, and made a prospective appropriation of $100,000 or $200,000 to build a work which had not been discussed by this House; suppose we find that these hon. gentlemen had done, as they have done, with the revenues of the Yukon, which the law declares shall go into the hands of the Receiver General and shall not go out of the hands of the Receiver General until they are paid out under an appropriation of this House; suppose that they have stood between the customs revenue and Receiver General, and before this money dropped from the officer's hands into those of the Receiver General laid violent and illegal hands on it, and expended it for purposes never contemplated by this Parliament and never authorized by this Parliament; suppose it is found that these gentlemen have done this last year, whilst the law and every constitutional principle brand it as malversation of the public funds for any member of the Government to do so—and a member of the Government has no more right to do so than the Whip on either side of the House. What member of the Government has the right to stand in between a custom-house officer collecting the rates at the customs-house, and the Receiver General, or the bank into which the law says he shall deposit that money, and say to this individual officer: Don't you deposit that in the bank; hand it over to me. I have some expenditure I want to make and pay for with that money. That is what these gentlemen have done over and over again. These Liberals, these constitutional rulers, these men who were to teach Canada a new and a brighter way, standing, like brigands and highwaymen, between the officers appointed to collect the revenue, and the majesty of the law, which tells these officers, on the peril of their reputation and their position, to put that money in the hands of the Receiver General, no matter who stands in the way. When a customs officer is on the way to the bank, will he give up the money of Canada to a highwayman with a pistol? No, he will lose his life first. But he must give it up to this Government, who stand before him and demand: Never mind what the law says; you give me that money, and I will spend it just as I like, on matters which were never discussed in Parliament, and for purposes that were never authorized by Parliament. And yet my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will stand up there and appeal to his followers for pity. He needs to appeal to a wider constituency than these men behind him, for he will go out into this country branded as the leader of a Government who has undertaken, himself and his thirteen, to make appropriations out of moneys not voted; not only not voted, but moneys which have not been placed to the credit of the Receiver General, where the law says the money shall be placed. That is what these gentlemen on the Treasury benches have done. Will the Minister of Finance tell me to-night that, out of the $12,000 vote, they have defrayed the expenses they have up to this moment incurred? Granted that you have not paid one of these officers, out of that, $9,000 for salary; granted that you have kept them out of the money all the year, and that you have the whole $12,000; have you up to this date of the 21st of June only expended $12,000? If you have, then I think Mr. Roche was just about as far ahead as you were. But, Sir, these gentlemen in British Columbia got their pay, and the Finance Minister, to save his head, has not more than $1,000 or $2,000 of it, which he might have stopped from them for the month of June or the month of May. Then, the Government have spent only $1,000, or, may be, $2,000, and yet they declare that the reason they went back on Mr. Roche and his company was, because they had not used due diligence, and got wire on the ground, and poles on the ground, and were not ready to complete their work. The men earned their salaries and got it, and the Government have only spent $1,000. But the Government incurred more expense than that. They did not have a Governor General's warrant, and where did they get the money? They took it from the collecting officers again, and coming down a little later for a Bill of indemnity from this House, to save them from the punishment which the law properly provides for brigands who stand in front of an honest man and his duty, and tell him to forego his duty and give them the money.

Now, I think that is an important point. I have treated it earnestly; I have treated it just as strongly as I could, but I have not treated one-thousandth part as strongly as it ought to be treated. I call upon the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and I call upon the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Somerville), these sturdy defenders, in former times, of proper appropriation and proper expenditure; I call upon them to stand by me in denouncing this nefarious operation by the members of a Government who pretend to respect the law and the constitutional practices of this country. Will they?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I hope not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) is utterly demoralized. I did not appeal to him, but I will not yet forego my appeal to these other two gentlemen.

Now then, I come to the next point, and that is, with regard to this private letter business. Nobody wants to misrepresent the Minister of Railways and Canals. No Conservative wants anything better, from a party point of view, than just to let the Minister of Railways and Canals take his own sweet, blundering way in this House. That is quite sufficient for us. If he says he did not mean to say that the two letters were private, we will be perfectly content with him saying that one letter was private. Again I ask the House, and I ask the country, if it is an edifying thing to have the representatives of our Canadian Government, in the department where the charter originated, and where the promoters of this company thought the executive power remained; is it not an edifying thing to have that Minister sit down and write a confidential letter to the promoters of one company, in the terms that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) indicted that letter to Mr. Roche? It was a most unfortunate plea that the Minister urged on the spur of the moment and before he thought of the consequences. He thought it would be a fine thing just to rise in his place and to say: Oh, Mr. Roche is no gentleman; that is a confidential letter. Does the Prime Minister make it a practice to allow his Ministers in the spending departments, with that immense influence they are rightly supposed to have—does he allow them, in all these great public undertakings, to write private and confidential letters to the promoters of one of rival companies, and to pledge their influence, under the confidence seal, to one, rather than the other? I think not; and, if the Minister of Railways had that to do over again, I do not believe he would be so quick to enter the plea that it was a confidential letter. A confidential letter we cannot suppose it to be. It was a letter upon a public matter of great public interest. And what is the purport of this? The Prime Minister has declared that the great plea was urgency, and yet up to the 20th of June, if we are to believe the Minister of Finance, they have not, as a Government, spent more than $1,000, or $1,500 at most.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, they have not spent more than $12,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not care how much they spent; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) must not quote me as saying something I did not say.

Mr. FOSTER. I must make my argument. The Minister of Finance, when he was cornered, and the Prime Minister, when he endeavoured to answer the question, both of them stated they took the money out of that $12,000 vote for British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the hon. gentleman was beginning to ask questions as to the source of the money, my reply was, that if he would wait until the Committee of Supply, we would give him the details.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Did not the Minister of Finance cite that as the vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Part of the money came out of that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Finance tell me what the other part came out of?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In Committee of Supply I will give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) the information.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance is not doing his duty now. We are discussing this question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is travelling wide of the question.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not travelling wide of the question. The Prime Minister tried to settle the question by saying there was a vote for this. I challenged him to name the vote, and he named the vote as "British Columbia, $12,000," and the Minister of Finance, to back him up, also stated that was the vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you not taking it out of that vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will be glad to give my hon. friend all the information in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance knows that a Government that felt strong in its own cause, would not give such an answer to the independent members of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. We are discussing this now, and there is a question of constitutional practice of great seriousness and moment before the House. More than that, there is the word of the Prime Minister at stake. The Prime Minister pledged his word to this House, that he undertook the work with a vote for it, which he named, and the Minister of Finance, to back him up, said: Yes, that is the vote. Now, when I argued it down to show the Minister of Finance that he could not get more than $1,000, or $1,500, out of that vote, says: Well, there may be other votes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say there may be other votes. I said part of it came out of that vote, and I said the hon. gentleman would get all the information in Committee of Supply, when the question is under consideration. It is not under discussion now.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman says it is not under discussion. Is that the appreciation he has of the question before Parliament?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the appreciation he has of the word of his Prime Minister? The Prime Minister says, "We did this on the vote in the Supply Bill," and then reads the item, and it is challenged, and the Finance Minister gets up and backs up the item. And now he says this discussion is not germane. He should make good the word of the Prime Minister and himself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will make it good.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman so little regard for his word or for the position of the First Minister that he refuses now to give the House the information? He is Finance Minister, and he could point out where the rest of this money comes from.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will at the proper time.

Mr. FOSTER. The proper time is now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not.

Mr. FOSTER. Or else these gentlemen stand convicted of quibbling in a way that is unworthy of any Government—stand convicted of more than quibbling; stand convicted of actual misrepresentation before this House. What will happen to-morrow morning? The wires have been at work to-night, and every Grit newspaper in the country will to-morrow morning have the knightly word of the First Minister that the Government had an appropriation for building the Yukon telegraph line voted in the Estimates last year, and put in the Supply Bill; and if the papers would just get the whole of it, they would put alongside of that what comes out in the argument, that out of that vote, which was for an entirely different purpose, they could not get more than $1,000 or $1,500. They would have this additional fact, that when these two gentlemen were cornered, they had not a word to say for themselves, only that by and by when we got into Committee of Supply we will discuss this question. I am satisfied to leave it right there—perfectly satisfied. Now, let us go on for a moment to the letter that the Minister of Railways and Canals declares was a confidential letter. The Prime Minister said that one reason why they did not take the route of the company was because the route of the company was on wrong lines. I hope the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Haley) will just take that into his head. This company wanted to have the line part cable, and the Prime Minister said that he and his Government scouted the idea of part cable. They want an all-land line on British territory. And yet Mr. Blair, an influential member of that Government, in October, 1898, declared this:

The Government is extremely desirous that private enterprise shall take up this work, and that it be prosecuted without delay; and the needs of the district are such that we believe an enterprise of that nature would be found exceedingly profitable. You may rely upon receiving the countenance and approval of the Government in carrying this enterprise forward to a successful issue.

What enterprise? A cable to Skagway, and a land line from Skagway on. Just above that, in his letter, Mr. Blair says:

A telegraph line from the coast into Dawson City, to be followed thereafter with reasonable despatch by the laying of a cable or cables from Vancouver to the point of connection with the land line.

There was the scheme, and there is the endorsement of the Minister of Railways and Canals—the endorsement of the Government on it. In October, 1898, no loyalty so great as to prevent a cable line up to Skagway. Three months afterwards such a growth of loyalty that the scheme is entirely unworthy of the attention of this Government. A disloyal line—you cannot have any cable line. And yet Mr. Roche, Mr. Haley and Mr. Holt for their company, signified to this same Government, led by this same right hon. gentleman, that they were quite willing to forego the cable part of the enterprise, and build the other, making it a land line. My hon. friend's argument can be sized up at its exact worth on that presentment of the case; and to my mind, it is not worth much on that line. The right hon. Prime Minister said that this company had done nothing—that they had unduly delayed. I will ask this House just to take the simple circumstances into account. The Prime Minister thought it was a suspicious circumstance that there were two companies incorporated to go to the same point. But they go to the same point by entirely different routes; that was their proposition. Dawson City is one point, and some point on the coast, which may be a thousand miles from that of the other company, is the other objective point—one for one company and the other for the other company. And yet my hon. friend thinks it was a suspicious circumstance that two companies were incorporated to build a telegraph line over that extensive country, centreing at Dawson City, but on the coast a thousand miles apart as to their points of departure towards the south. And yet he and his Government have subsidized railway after railway to pass from one point to another point within a stone's throw of each other all the way, and did not think it a suspicious circumstance at all. How hard pressed my hon. friend must have been for an argument to support himself and his Government in this matter when he had recourse to an argument like that. But my hon. friend says these men did not show any urgency. I leave it to any business man. They first got their charter in June, 1898—just one year ago. In that time, what have they done? They have organized their company, they have made certain contracts, they have got their subscriptions of money, which is no light thing, they have paid in their proportion to the bank, and they have the cablegram of Lord Strathcona to show that they are abundantly able financially to carry out their undertaking. It seems to me that my hon. friend was not so ex-gent in this House in connection with Mr. Petersen and the fast line. Mr. Petersen was simply a ship broker. He did not build ships; he did not raise the money to build ships. He simply got a contract, and went to the mother country to broker it. My hon. friend allowed him to broker it for one year, then for another year, and then for part of another year; all the time stoutly asserting, against the appeals of this side of the House, that Mr. Petersen should be allowed time. Here is a company which got its charter in June, 1898, to build a telegraph line into a new and unknown country, where there are not settled conditions, and yet that company, within the space of nine months, was organized, and had its contract made for the wire, and its wire shipped and on its way to this side. My hon. friend said that the wire had not got to Victoria, but it is beyond doubt contracted for and on board ship. And then, what did Mr. Roche do? He and his co-directors went to the lord high admiral, the same man they had to bow and cotton to when they were getting their charter through the Railways and Canals Committee, and who they supposed rightly was the man with whom they had to deal in his executive capacity. They came to him in October, 1898, four or five months after they had got the charter, and had a conference with him. He told them in this private conference, and put it down as well in the letter which he wrote to them, that he and the Government approved of this scheme, wished them success, and promised them their co-operation, provided they would use reasonable despatch. In addition to that, fearing that a rival company might strive to make a little capital against this company, he wrote a letter, which he now declares to be private and confidential, in which he warned these men that the other company were trying to get in, but that he had given them the preference and did not propose that this other company should get in ahead of them. On that assurance, given by this Minister for himself and the Government, these gentlemen went home under what idea? Under the idea that it would be impossible for an honest and straightforward Government to cut the ground entirely from under their feet without at least giving them notice. But the hon. Minister says he could not find Mr. Roche. Oh, no. The Minister of Railways and Canals can find a man when he wants to, you may depend upon that. The address of the member for Hants was well known. A telegram sent to the member for Hants would have brought Mr. Roche's address inside of an hour. A telegram to Mr. Roche himself would have got Mr. Roche, who is not an unknown individual.

After having assured them of the co-operation of the Government, as a Government, and after having assured them that, by his watchful assiduity, no rival company should get the contract ahead of him, it surely was not too much for Mr. Roche and his co-directors to think that before the Government would go to work and cut the ground from under their feet, they would at least call on the company to implement their bargain and go on with their work at once.

What more? I suppose that Mr. Roche, being a member of the British House of Parliament, has his own ideas of British constitutional practice. As a member of Parliament, he knew that these gentlemen had no appropriation to carry on the work, and had not submitted a plan to Parliament. The Minister of Railways and Canals told him, over his own signature, that the Government would not form an opinion until next spring—that is, this spring—and yet, Mr. Roche is blamed, as a member of the British Parliament, where things are carried on constitutionally, for believing that in the Canadian Parliament they would be carried on in the same way, and for coming to the conclusion, beyond a doubt, that, as the Minister of Railways has said, even an opinion could not be got until next spring, and that afterwards Parliament had to be reckoned with and a vote got before any expenditure could be incurred.

Relying on all those things, Mr. Roche and his co-directors had plenty of ground for believing that this Government would not undertake the work without at least giving them notice to go and implement their contract at once or else the Government would take it up.

As to the urgency, how much further ahead is the Government to-day, with its $1,000 or $2,000, that it has filched from the hard-working operators of the telegraph line, if the word of a Minister is to be taken to-night, than it would have been if this company had carried out its work, as it was financially and abundantly able to do. What could have been done in the winter months? The Government did nothing in the winter months. They did not make up their minds until the 30th of March, when the Order in Council was passed, and not a stroke of work could be done until after that. They delayed still longer. The matter was brought to their attention in 1897 by Mr. Hosmer's letter, but they delayed the work for a whole year, and not until eight months afterwards, not until the 13th of March, 1899, did they pass the Order in Council. There is nothing in the plea of urgency. The company, if it had been allowed to implement its bargain, would have done so with as much speed and facility as the Government could show, and the line would have been built before the snow flies, as it is to be now. Where was the urgency? Law and order? There is no difficulty about law and order in the Yukon. This Government has to-day hundreds of men and is spending thousands of dollars more than necessary to keep law and order in the Yukon. It was simply a matter of communication, and the company could have built the line by the end of the year, which is all the Government expects to do.

I do not propose to continue the discussion longer, but I do want to emphasize the first, and especially the second, point. With regard to this latter point, it is simply a business matter which business men may very well judge. Any Government must be careful in its governmental dealings with corporations, which it alone can call into existence. It gives the franchise, it makes these companies undertake the responsibility under their franchise, and it must be careful that it does not forfeit the faith which is implied in the granting of a franchise; and the least that could have been done and should have been done by the Government, was to have called upon these gentlemen, after the assurances given them by the Minister of Railways, to implement at once their charter and carry the enterprise to a conclusion to the satisfaction of the Government.

This conduct of the Government will hurt the standing and credit of Canada in Great Britain, there is no doubt about it. Men do not subscribe money and put in their means, on the faith of a charter in Parliament, and have their money rendered useless to them and their enterprise taken away from them on so insufficient a plea, especially when they have the pledge of a Minister and the Government. Without warning, without a call, without a single note, their franchise is completely obliterated, as far as any practical benefit is concerned, and they are left high and dry.

What has taken place? The Government is embarking on an enterprise which will be infinitely more expensive, which will cost this country a large capital sum, and afterwards a large sum for operating from year to year, which will add one more to the works that already overburden the Government of this country, and which ought to be given over to private capital and private enterprise. The Government wants to use this line simply for its governmental messages, which will only be a one-hundredth or a one-thousandth of the number of messages that will be sent in there as the country grows and develops. The franchise that was bestowed on this company would have taken all the trouble and expense of operating away from the Government and would have given the governmental messages at the lowest possible rate—the rate fixed by themselves—and never would have entailed any responsibility on the department. In this matter, there was nothing better to do than to give it into the hands of a responsible company and fix the rate as the Government are empowered to do by a condition of the charter.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I think it would be well to still further investigate the course taken by the Ministers who have had this matter in hand. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) told us yesterday that he did not know that this return was asked for on the 17th of May, five weeks ago to-day. Well, I wonder what the Ministers are doing. I wonder what they suppose their duties to be. When we require information about the Intercolonial Railway, we are told that the Minister is so busy that he cannot furnish the information. When we require any information about any matter the Minister is so busy that he cannot give it. Though it is their duty to appear in this House to answer questions and meet the charges made against their departments, the almost invariable custom is for a Minister to absent himself, so that the speakers on this side, so far as the Ministerial benches are concerned, have frequently to talk to empty benches. This is an affront to the representatives of the people. We come here to discuss public questions to ask for information—and that is one of the most important duties that we, as members of Parliament have to perform. And yet, we are prevented from getting that information. The Minister of Railways and Canals solemnly assured us yesterday—and I presume that for the purposes of this Parliament we have to accept his explanation—that he knew nothing of these matters being inquired for. I have had control of a department of Government, and the invariable rule in that department was, when the Parliament of Canada, the highest court, the greatest authority in Canada asked for information, passed a resolution that the head of the department was to furnish information, why, the whole machinery of the department would stop, if necessary, until that information was procured. But when we ask the occupants of the Treasury benches for information we are told: You asked for papers last session, some of them may be down this session, and some of them may not be down at all. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals is so indifferent, he treats the Parliament of Canada with so little respect, that though an order of the House for him to produce certain papers, the Minister of Railways and Canals being specifically mentioned as one of the parties who had this correspondence in charge, after five weeks, he tells us that he knew nothing about it. What are his officials doing? What was the Minister himself doing that he should treat the Parliament of Canada with such contempt as is shown by such statement as that he made yesterday? The next thing he tells us is that, of course, as he knew and as these gentlemen knew, when this ceased to be a mere general question and became a practical question, when this got away from the committee of this House of Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines where he had control, of course, it went into the Department of Public Works. I think that is news to a good many members of this House. For my part, I have been a member of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for many years, and it is news to me that the Department of Public Works and not that of Railways and Canals has to do with the construction of telegraph lines. But, be that as it may, how is a gentleman coming from England and going before the committee, seeing the Minister of Railways and Canals in full control, directing the affairs of the committee and declaring the policy of the Government to know that, as soon as the Bill passed that committee and was accepted by Parliament it went to a department that was presided over by a different gentleman altogether. Why did he not tell the gentleman that when he was here? Why did he not tell him that when he wrote these letters? What does the first of these letters say? It conveys the impression all through that the Minister of Railways and Canals was in control of these matters:

I am very much pleased indeed to learn—

—Writes the hon. Minister to Mr. Roche—

—that it is your intention, representing the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company (Limited), to proceed without unnecessary delay—

“I” am very much pleased——with the construction of the telegraph line from the coast into Dawson City, to be followed thereafter, with reasonable despatch by the laying of a cable or cables from Vancouver to the point of connection with the land line. The Government is extremely desirous that private enterprise should take up this work;—

Is there any indication there that another department has control over this matter? He is giving them the policy of the Government, and urging them to go on.

—and the needs of the district are such that we believe an enterprise of that nature would be found exceedingly profitable. You may rely upon receiving the countenance and approval of the Government in carrying this enterprise forward to a successful issue.

I will refer a little further on to the “countenance and approval of the Government.” But I refer now to the fact that he was indicating by every means, that he was the Minister in charge of the affairs and that when he spoke of approval and countenance he was speaking for the Government, assuring these gentlemen that all they had to do was to go ahead and they might feel certain that a Government representing the Dominion of Canada would deal honestly and fairly with them. What does the next letter say? He writes this gentleman another letter. He tells him about meeting the opposition company and says he gave them no countenance and support, assuring him that his heart and affections were with the Northern Commercial Company and asks him to go ahead.

Mr. WALLACE.

I mention this so that you may learn what is moving, and as an additional reason which may urge you to such activity in the prosecution of your enterprise as is practicable. I told this gentleman that my department had an understanding with you.

What is the meaning of these words? Did not that say as plainly as words could say it that his department was the one which had control of these matters? Why, he was deliberately misleading this gentleman, if we take the words for what they mean; unless he knew that his department was in control. Every line of this correspondence shows that the Minister supposed and assumed that he had control of the telegraph lines of the country; and if we are not to assume that, but if we are to assume something else it must be something that is not creditable to his honour and integrity, which we should be very sorry to do. He says:

I told this gentleman very frankly that my department has an understanding with you, and we were giving you the preference, at least until we were satisfied that you were delaying in pushing the work unduly.

Very well, they never made an inquiry as to how the work was going on. Did the hon. Minister tell this House when the Order in Council was passed authorizing the construction of the telegraph line?

Mr. FOSTER. It was on the 13th March, three days before Parliament met.

Mr. WALLACE. Has he told the House what steps were taken that led up to the decision of the Government to pass the Order of the 13th of March? Did he tell this rival company what he indicated in his letter to Mr. Roche that he would tell them, because it is laid down here:

We were giving you the preference, at least until we were satisfied that you were delaying in pushing the work unduly, and I said that upon that point we would be in no position to form an opinion until next spring.

He knows that he sent these men to the old country, and he knows that they had to raise the money, that they had to formulate their plans, and buy the material. They had all these things done before the 13th of March, they had the whole business, so far as it could be done in England, completed, and on the 27th of March, Mr. Roche reads in England that the Government were constructing this line themselves. He cables out a protest, because of a gross breach of faith made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, as indicated in these two letters. The Minister says that Mr. Roche is no gentleman, and therefore that he is justified in taking any measures that he pleases. Did he know that Mr. Roche was no gentleman when the Government decided on the 13th of March to construct the line themselves? He tells us that he had not a word of communication with Mr. Roche except writing him those two letters, that he had no letters from him with the exception of a short note indicating that he had received a letter or something of that kind. He says now that Mr. Roche is no gentleman, but Mr. Roche might very properly make a retort of a tu quoque character. After making arrangements in October, with winter setting in, when he was going to the old country to complete his plans, for he was not to make the arrangements until the next spring—then without communication with Mr. Roche, without ascertaining, so far as these returns show, or any information we have received shows, without communication of a single line to Mr. Roche, without a cablegram saying to him: If you do not go on the Government will proceed at once with the construction of this work, without doing anything of the kind, the hon. gentleman ignores the whole arrangement, and goes into the work himself. Mr. Roche and his colleagues in this enterprise had been given the solemn assurance of the Government, they had their Bill passed through Parliament with the honour of Canada pledged that they would be used fairly and squarely, after the Government giving them the charter that they applied for, they find, without a note of warning, that the Government have started a rival line. Sir, I say it was a gross breach of faith, one that they have not justified, and the people of Canada will hold their heads in shame when they look at the course of a Government acting so unfairly.

Then we come to the next question: Was it good policy for the Government to undertake this enterprise? Where there is a necessity for spending a quarter, or half a million, or whatever sum may be required to establish telegraphic connection, constitutional usage requires, and the law of the land requires that the Government should come to Parliament and at least go through the farce of getting the consent of Parliament. Their duty was to come here and to explain their project. Three days before Parliament met they decided upon it. It reminds us of another scheme that came before Parliament when a bargain was made three, or five, or six or seven days before Parliament met, the celebrated Yukon Railway. There is a remarkable similarity in the fact that just before Parliament meets this scheme is passed through by Order in Council. They have the utmost contempt for the views of the Parliament of Canada. Though they have a majority here they do not think it worth while to ask their consent. They had no legal authority for pushing this work on, Parliament had not consented, Parliament had never been consulted in the matter. They had no authority for the construction of these telegraph lines. But what of that? They are getting accustomed to it, they snap their fingers at Parliament.

Last night we saw the Minister of Militia and Defence asking for $274,000 that he must have before the 1st of July, when 95 cents out of every 100 cents of that money was already spent. The money is gone without even a pretext of asking Parliament for it. There is no limit to what these men will do. "Wait till you see what we will do next year," as the Minister of Public Works said, and all the other Ministers are trying to emulate his example. They snap their fingers at Parliament, disregarding public opinion, and disregarding the sentiment of the people of this country. They are going ahead. They say the by-elections show that they have the confidence of the people. They know better than we know, though we have a pretty good inkling into the methods by which they have carried those by-elections. I say, such a flagrant disregard of law, such a violation of the rules which should govern in dealing with men and with corporations, such want of good faith, has never been exhibited to my recollection in this Parliament of Canada, and I am sure it will meet with the utter condemnation of the people of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Excise—Further amount required for preventive service $1,000

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I had occasion to explain, on the main Estimates the necessity under which I was to ask a higher amount for that service. We had been spending $15,000 a year for several years, and last year we reduced it to $12,000. But that was too great a reduction, and I am now obliged to ask for $1,000.

Weights and Measures, and Electric Light Inspection—

Salaries	$4,025
Contingencies	1,000
Electric light—
Contingencies	1,400

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. In 1896-97, the first year I was in charge of the department, the salaries for weights and measures were $56,850. In the following year, 1897-98, we reduced the estimate from $56,850 to $49,000, a diminution of $7,000. Last year we took off again $7,000, so that three years ago it was $56,850, the next year it was $49,000, and last year it was $42,000. We found out that, in our attempt to economize, we had gone too far, and this is why I am under the obligation of asking for this amount of $4,025. It will be seen that we are still asking much less than the average.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, if instructions are being sent to the inspectors of weights and measures in regard to the use of a certain kind of testing machine for testing grain. As I understand, the Bill passed last year brings the old tester into disuse, and provides that in future it would not be permitted to be used. Have any instructions been sent to the inspectors of weights and measures, calling their attention to the new law?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have not inspected the small tester which my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) alludes to, which has a capacity of one-sixteenth part of a bushel, for several years, and I am not aware that we have sent out any instructions to draw the attention of the officers to the fact that in future no test can be applied except by the use of a full bushel. The law is perfectly clear, the tester used formerly cannot now be used, the test must be made with the whole bushel.

Mr. CLANCY. I believe that the department has not thought proper to order an inspection of the tester that has been in use. I imagine, from the discussion that has taken place, that the reason is, that they do not care to identify themselves with the use of it, and, therefore, did not order an inspection. Of course, I am speaking subject to correction, when I make that statement. I need hardly call my hon. friend's attention to the necessity of any device that is being used being inspected. My hon. friend well knows that it is not a proper thing to permit the use of any machine or device for the purpose of determining or weighing, or which may determine the value or weight of any grain, without having an inspection of it made. Since this tester ceases to be a legal instrument for testing the weight and value of grain, I think I may fairly urge upon the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue that a bushel measure, for the purpose of inspection, should come into operation now, and that the inspectors' attention should be called to the change in the law and to the use of nothing short of a bushel.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not aware that any tester has been constructed for a bushel measure, such as the small tester, which only holds one-sixteenth part of a bushel. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) had the occasion of seeing these testers in practical use. We were looking at them in my department last year, and my hon. friend remembers seeing the arrangement that was made to test one-sixteenth part of a bushel; but I am not aware that, since the passing of the new law, fixing the whole bushel as the size of the instrument to be used in future, that any such instrument has been constructed. The old-fashioned tester has not been inspected for several years. We do not inspect it any more; we do not look upon it as a legal measure, and any one who makes use of it in the future, under the amendment of the law of last session, commits an illegal act.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman must see that it is important that instructions be given to the inspectors of weights and measures for the reason which I will now explain. Under the law as it now stands, there is no doubt that every person who uses one of these testers, for testing one-sixteenth part of a bushel, is liable to prosecution; but they can avoid these prosecutions, which are expensive, to those who feel aggrieved, by giving instructions to the inspectors of weights and measures to not permit the use of this former tester in future. That would put an end to it, as the hon. Minister will see, and, by taking the other course, it would leave it open for every individual in the country to be driven to the unpleasant course of prosecuting those who might be using that old tester for testing one-sixteenth part of a bushel. I will venture to say that 99 out of 100 of the people to-day are not aware that it is illegal to use the tester that was formerly used. I think the hon. gentleman will see the necessity of calling the attention of the inspector of weights and measures to the change.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) is quite mistaken as to the law. As I understand the law, it is, that if a dispute arises between a buyer and seller of grain, the testing of it by the use of one of these testers is not a legal decision. You must use a bushel measure, or a half-bushel measure, or some special measure that is authorized by the Government. I presume that a bushel measure, or a half-bushel measure, or a peck measure, that is authorized by the Government, would be legal. But, if the buyer and seller mutually agree to settle the price of grain as the tester designates its weight, I do not understand that the law fixes any penalty. There is no penalty to prevent a man using it, if he likes. It is not legal, but if the buyer and seller mutually agree to accept the test as indicated by the tester, then, there is no law to fine them for doing it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see, by reference to the statute, that it declares, in one of the subsections, that no weighing machines shall be used for the purpose of weighing or determining the weight of any of the articles mentioned in the section—16, I think, of the Weights and Measures Act—of a less capacity than one bushel. That is the law, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary. I appeal now to the Minister of Inland Revenue, if that is not his conception of the law.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The statute reads:

No weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weight of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 of the Weights and Measures Act shall be of less certified capacity than one bushel.

My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) will remember that last year I could not agree with him, and I thought it was scarcely fair to interfere between the buyer and the seller when both of them agreed to use a certain measure by which they could readily ascertain the intrinsic value of a bushel of wheat. According to the arrangements generally made in Ontario there is so much allowed for each pound over 60 pounds and so much deducted for each pound under that. I thought it was a very convenient thing to permit a small measure like the one-sixteenth of a bushel which could be handled by the buyer of grain in his own office, to test not the weight but the value of the whole cargo. We made experiments in the department with regard to this small tester in the presence of several members of Parliament, and we found by it that there was a certain small loss to the seller, but not a considerable loss. Consequently my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) thought he was justified in pressing the matter. During my absence the amendment to the law was inserted in the Senate, by which the use of the small testers of one-sixteenth of a bushel was abolished, and by which the purchaser was limited when testing to a whole bushel. I shall make it a point to ask our officers, as they go along with their inspection of the general weights and measures, to inform the public and buyers of grain that in future they are to use the whole bushel instead of the one-sixteenth measure.

Mr. SPROULE. It is desirable that this should be done, because I know the practice continues of testing grain by the one-sixteenth of a bushel. Many of the millers do it in entire ignorance of the change in the law. I spoke to some of them about it, and they contended it was perfectly legal to test the grain as heretofore by the one-sixteenth of a bushel. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) says that when an agreement is come to between the buyer and the seller it is a legal measure, and if it were a stipulated contract I suppose it would be. But let me point out that the seller has nothing to say about it. The buyer says: I will give you so much for your wheat standard, and the farmer does not know he has any option whatever, but thinks he is obliged to take what is offered him. He does not know he has any redress; he does not know but what the buyer is carrying out the law strictly, and so the buyer assumes all the right without any contract being entered into between the seller and himself. It is not enough for the Minister of Inland Revenue to say that he has not instructed the inspector to inspect these small meaasures, because it is not legal to use them. I know myself that the public and the buyers, many of them, do not know it is illegal to use these small measures and so they continue to use them.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have not inspected them for years past, even before the amendment to the law was passed. I now believe that it would be wrong on my part to refuse to enlighten the public and the buyers through our inspectors, as to the change in the law.

Mr. SPROULE. Even though they are not inspected it was quite legal to use them until last year. I know for a fact that millers are using these small testers yet, and I believe they are doing it because they do not know it is illegal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the Minister of Inland Revenue will consider this matter before he sends out any such instructions. These small testers are used not to weigh the wheat, but only to determine its value. You cannot determine its value accurately by sight or by examination so well as you can by weight. If you take a certain quantity—it may be a quart or a pint, it does not matter what the quantity may be—even if you take a tin pan, and test it by that, you determine the value of that weight. That is what the tester is for. In old times, before the tester was used so universally as it is now, the farmer who bought dirty and poor grain, and was careless in cleaning it, always got more than it was worth, and the man who brought clean grain always got less than it was worth; but by the system of testing, every man gets what he ought to get. There is no better method of determining the value of grain. I have used it invariably during the last five or six years in my own business, and I venture to say that you could not buy grain from the farmers of West York unless you did use a tester. They complained bitterly in the city of Toronto last year when the grain was light and poor because a tester was used, whereas this year, when it is large and plump, it is bought by sight without the tester. What they complain of is that the tester is not used every year. I say that no fairer way was ever adopted for determining the value of grain between the buyer and the seller. If the buyer and seller are both satisfied with it, I think it ought to be allowed to remain.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Kent, Ont. (Mr. Campbell) cannot be a close reader of the press, or he would have seen that last year and the year before several agricultural societies passed resolutions condemning the tester as unfair to them. I myself saw a load of grain sold at 80 cents a bushel on the standard; but it was reported back to be under standard, for it was only fifty-eight pounds to the bushel, and the standard was sixty pounds. That was by the tester; but we took a bushel of the same grain out of the bag and it weighed sixty-one pounds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You did not weigh it rightly.

Mr. SPROULE. It was weighed on scales that had been tested. It is easy to make a mistake with the tester. If the grain is poured into it from a considerable distance above, it will weigh more heavily than if it is poured in lower down, because it packs more closely in one case than in the other. In that case the farmer was cheated out of 3 cents per bushel for that grain. Notwithstanding what the hon. member says, I know that the farmers are very much dissatisfied with the tester. Time after time during the last year and the year before they have discussed the question at agricultural gatherings, and in every single instance they have passed resolutions against it.

Mr. McNEILL. I am very much gratified to find that the Minister has made the change that he has made in the law. I think that change is entirely in the right direction, and it would be very unfortunate if any return were made to the old system of testers. I do not know what the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) means by saying that the testing of grain is the fairest way of selling it. We all know that the weighing of grain is the fairest; but the point is whether you weigh fairly when you weigh in these very small measures. The Minister has informed us that the department have made a careful examination, and have found that the tester did not weigh fairly; and after that statement of the Minister I cannot understand why the hon. member should wish to have this unfair method continued. It is a question in which the farmers are very much interested, and they are undoubtedly not satisfied with the system of using these small measures. If the buyer of grain wishes to test it, let him conform to the law and use a bushel measure, and there will be no complaint.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How can you use a bushel measure? If you take a small measure you can tell how much a bushel will weigh. Then, after you determine what it is worth to the miller, you weigh it on standard scales, of course, and you pay the farmer for the number of bushels as shown by the scales. Here is an absolute and sure test that will tell at once whether the grain will weigh sixty or sixty-one pounds, and the convenience of it is that you can take the tester on a load of grain or anywhere else.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman asks me a question, and he says this is an absolute and sure test; yet the Minister has just told him that it has been determined in the department that it is a perfectly fallacious test. Yet the hon. gentleman, who is a buyer, tries to induce the committee to believe that it is a fair test. I am very much surprised to find that any member of this committee should make a statement of that kind, and more especially surprised that a gentleman personally interested in the matter, as my hon. friend is, should have made such a statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not personally interested and it makes no difference to me. It is in the interest of the buyer and seller both.

Mr. McNEILL. To have a false test used?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not a false test which is used.

Mr. McNEILL. Settle that with the Minister.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You can take four pecks and make a bushel, but you cannot take four pecks and make a bushel out of it unless you are exceedingly careful in weighing it.

Mr. McNEILL. The smaller the measure the more fallacious it is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all.

Mr. ROGERS. From my own personal experience, I have seen a great deal of injustice done by means of these testers. The tester may be in the hands of an honourable man, like my hon. friend from Kent, but, unfortunately, in the hands of a dishonourable man, it is the easiest thing in the world to make a very great margin in the interests of the buyer. Any farmers that I have spoken to are very much pleased with this change. No injustice will be done by it, because every man in business always has a measure, and this stamp measure will be cheaper than the others.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think the hon. member for Kent, Ont. (Mr. Campbell) stated the case quite clearly. He knows perfectly well that even in the hands of persons who desire to do perfectly right, injustice will still be worked. What was the result of the test made by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue? He was good enough to send down in the city and buy a bushel of wheat weighing 62½ pounds. That was tested, and when the tester had been applied sixteen times, it was found that the bushel was 10½ ounces overweight. That represented a loss to the seller in consequence of the very thing pointed out by my hon. friend from East Grey, who showed that by means of loose filling, air spaces got into the grain and the grain appeared lighter, and the result was that the price was lower. Sixteen tests were made, and out of the sixteen only five went 62 pounds. Eleven were less than 62, only 61 pounds. Therefore, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that there is no means of using a tester of a sixteenth of a bushel, which is not entirely erroneous, even supposing that men generally are disposed to do the fair thing, as no doubt they are. I have no hesitation in saying that it is impossible to do the fair thing under such circumstances. The farmers do not desire to deprive any purchaser of grain of the means of determining the value. It is proper to have a tester, but still more proper to have a tester as nearly as possible unerring in its result. My hon. friend from Kent says it is very inconvenient to use a bushel. What is his habit when he goes to a farmer's wagon? He says: If the grain tests 60 pounds, I will give you so much, but if it does not, I will give less, and if it tests more I will give you more. It seems to me it is very far-fetched to say that it is not easy to test a bushel. All we have to do is to fill a bushel measure and set it on the scales, and that will fix the price. Why do the farmers urge that this change should take place? The Millers' Association formed a rule, which the hon. gentleman religiously follows himself, and it is this. I quote it from the Senate "Hansard" of last year. Wheat weighing 60 pounds, or standard, the price per bushel would be 60 cents, supposing that to be the price per standard bushel. If it tests at 59 pounds, one cent would come off, although the 60 pounds have to be given in every instance. If it tested 58 pounds, two cents would come off. If it tested 57 pounds, five cents would come off. If it tested 56 pounds, eight cents would come off. If it tested 55 pounds, twelve cents would come off. If it tested 54 pounds, sixteen cents would come off. If it tested 53 pounds, twenty cents would come off. Yet, although the wheat tests 53 pounds, the farmers would have to give the 60 pounds in every instance, and twenty cents, or 33½ per cent, would come off the price. Whether that be a good or a bad rule I am not going to discuss, because it is not pertinent to this matter. There may be that difference in the value of the wheat, but what the farmers want is that there shall be an absolutely fair test, and they now ask that the wheat shall not be tested by fractions of one-sixteenth of a bushel, but by a whole bushel and nothing else. There is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman, and that is the practice of filling in from a little funnel. That funnel creates air spaces, which will affect the bushel measure, because that was the cause, to a great extent, of the disparities in the bushel measure. Let me show what the effect will be. Here is a table showing how it would work out. For a bushel of 60 pounds, you would get the standard price of 60 cents per bushel. For 61 pounds, you would get a cent added. For 62 pounds, you would get two cents added. For 63 pounds, you would get three cents added. For 64 pounds, you would get four cents in addition. Now, just see how that operates in both ways. If the wheat is four pounds short in the test, eight cents comes off. But if it is four pounds in excess, only four cents is added. But suppose you take a bushel of each, one four pounds short in the test, and the other four pounds in excess, and mix both together, you would have two bushels mixed of 60 pounds each, or standard wheat, yet four cents per bushel would come off the producer in spite of that.

My hon. friend thinks that a tester of one-sixteenth of a bushel is popular. Well, I can say it is most unpopular. The farmers are perfectly willing to have a measure just as fair to the producer as to the seller, and desire to have the present state of things put an end to as quickly as possible.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE
If we have not interfered so far, it is because really we are not called upon to interfere, because, while the duty of the department of weights and measures is to test all the weights and measures, we are under no compulsion to notify the people that they have no right to use a thing like a tester which has not been inspected for several years. At the same time, if by giving that notice we can prevent anybody from being placed in the painful position of being liable to a fine and punishment, I would certainly make a point of sending the information to the officers so that they may give it to the people with whom they have to deal. This is the law, and we cannot do otherwise than observe the law.

Inspection of Staples—To meet the expenses of members of the Grain Standards Board and Winnipeg Grain Exchange who were summoned to Ottawa for consultation in respect of legislation now before Parliament $600

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask if Mr. Smith has been appointed in the Toronto division, and if so, what is his salary? Mr. Smith formerly resided in Orillia.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Smith was appointed Deputy Inspector of Weights and Measures, and his salary is $500 or $600. I cannot give the exact figure at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT. He came from Orillia, and I want to know where he is now stationed.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He belongs to the Toronto division. Each district to be inspected by a certain set of officers covers several counties. Mr. Smith wanted, if I remember well, to reside in Orillia, and we found no inconvenience in his residing there.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the date of the appointment of Mr. Murdoch, who came from the county of Grey ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He is Inspector of Weights and Measures, and was appointed about two years ago.

Mr. BENNETT. The reason I ask is that about two years ago, the Minister superannuated Mr. Bolster, a man in the prime of life and quite capable of performing the duties of his office. The ground given for this superannuation was economy. I see the hon. Minister is keeping up with his colleagues in superannuating one man to make way for another. He has appointed Mr. Smith who practically performs the same duty.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, Mr. Smith replaces Mr. Todd. I did not replace Mr. Bolster.

Mr. BENNETT. Whom did Mr. Murdock replace, then ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not remember at the moment.

Mr. SPROULE. He replaced Mr. Lyon.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I appointed Mr. Smith before Mr. Bolster was superannuated. As my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) reminds me, Mr. Murdoch replaced Mr. Lyon.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister might at least have given Mr. Bolster the preference to succeed Mr. Todd, rather than to place Mr. Bolster on the superannuation list and then make a new appointment. I simply asked the question for the information of the people in my own constituency, where it was well known that Mr. Bolster was discharged in the prime of life, and as well able to discharge the duties of office as Mr. Smith, his successor.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. What was Mr. Bolster's age ?

Mr. BENNETT. I could not say exactly ; I suppose about 57.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When the hon. gentleman knows the age, he will see that I had the right to superannuate him.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these grain men salaried by the Government ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Who pays them ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is only for travelling expenses ; they do not receive a salary.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government appoints them, does it not ?

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And pays them for their services ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The Government pays them only for travelling expenses out of the funds allowed for the inspection of standards. But in this case, I do not know if my hon. friend is aware that about a month or six weeks ago—

Mr. FOSTER. I did not want the explanation on that ; I want to know if these men, appointed, as I understand, by the Government to fix the standard of grain, are salaried ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, they are not paid ; but their travelling expenses are paid. One or two come from Montreal, one or two from Toronto, and some from different parts of the North-west—there are sixteen altogether. They are not paid a salary, but their travelling expenses are paid.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) does not understand me yet. I understand they are not paid a salary. Are they paid an allowance ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, only their travelling expenses, when they meet in Winnipeg to discuss the standard.

Mr. FOSTER. But this vote is not for this.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, this is a special case that arose about six weeks ago when the question came up of amending the law in regard to inspection.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend brought them down for advice.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Customs—Amount required to wipe off old suspense account at the port of Montreal $1,764 30

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) explain this item ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I find they have what is called a Suspense Account there that has been running for years, and it seems very desirable that it should be declared off and not allowed to remain longer on the books. There different amounts running all through all these years represent expenses at that port for which no departmental authority has been given. This account has been running from 1868 to 1890. The collectors under whom the expenses were incurred have passed away, and there is now no way to recover the money. It is better to have the account cleared off ; we do not want such an account on the books.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose this is for bills contracted ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature of them ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are varied. For instance, in February, 1868, cash disbursed in the Spellman case, paid by the Excise Department, $108.44.

Mr. FOSTER. What is my hon. friend going to do with that item of $108 ? Is he going to pay the Excise Department that money ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No ; I am going to get a vote, and wipe out the whole suspense account.

Mr. FOSTER. If he has $1,764.30 put in his hands, he is going to pay that out to somebody.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Pay it to the port of Montreal, that this may be written off.

Mr. FOSTER. Has a bill been running since 1868, and not been paid yet ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has never been paid ; it stands there.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any man living in Montreal to whom the Government owes $108 since 1868, and has not got his pay to this day ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The collector would pay it ; but the collector did not get departmental authority for doing it, and he charges it to suspense account.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, has the collector laid out of it from 1868 to the present time ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He has not paid it out of his own pocket ; he probably paid it out of his contingency fund.

Mr. FOSTER. And he got his contingency fund from the Customs Department ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. It is paid, but the books are not clear. It runs on in that case.

Mr. FOSTER. What runs on ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The suspense account runs on, but we want to have it cleared off. You do not want to keep a suspense account on the book. This represents a great number of items due to the department, and there is no possibility of recovering them.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are you going to pay this money to ? There is nobody it is owing to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will have to go to the port to balance these amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you owe the port of Montreal $108 since 1868 ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, what do you want to pay it for ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The collectors at the port of Montreal would owe this to the department, not having had departmental authority for this expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did they get the money ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They got the money out of the contingencies, which is in their hands.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it is already paid. Why do you want to pay it again ? The hon. gentleman does not understand it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understand it, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman does not understand it, too.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we ought to have more explanation than the Minister has given. Is the present collector responsible for that amount ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Was his predecessor responsible for that amount ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is dead.

Mr. WALLACE. The two previous collectors, before Mr. Ryan, are dead, too. If this has been paid out of contingencies, what is the object of Parliament voting the money ? There is nobody to whom that amount is owing. When the next session comes, we will say : What has been done with that $1,764 ? The Minister, I think, laid down the doctrine, a year or two ago, that you can take money out of one appropriation and use it for another. I think that is a very improper doctrine ; it defeats the purposes of Parliament, which votes the money for a specific object. Suppose the hon. gentleman uses this $1,764, according to the doctrine that he enunciated, for any purpose he likes in his department. We want to know what he is going to do with that money. Would he apply it to the hiring of customs officers that he may think are necessary ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly, I could not do anything of that kind. The hon. gentleman must know that. Here are a large number of items in this account that stand in the Montreal books, and that were there when my hon. friend was Minister in the department. These items were paid without the departmental authority ; they are owing to the department, and we want to have these paid. The collectors under whom these disbursements were made have passed away. We want to clear the books, and, therefore, ask Parliament to make an appropriation of money, so that these amounts may be written off and settled. If the collectors were alive, we might call upon them to pay these amounts themselves, but they have passed away.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister tell us to whom he is going to pay this money and get a receipt?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We will send it to the port of Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. What will the port of Montreal do with the money?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The port will use it to balance these accounts.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where will the money go?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will come back into the Receiver General's hands.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the good of voting money out of one pocket and putting it into the other?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Because you cannot close the account in any other way, and hon. gentlemen are not making themselves look more intelligent than others by asking such questions. I do not think it is well to leave an account of that kind, to leave open a suspense account from 1868 down to 1899 on the books. We propose to close it. We find no such amount in any other port. It must have been allowed under the old régime to run along in that way.

Mr. WALLACE. The more the hon. gentleman explains it, the more he confuses the issue. Suppose a cross entry were made, would not that accomplish the purpose? You take that $1,764, and send it down to the port of Montreal, and tell the collector to do what with it? To wipe off those accounts. Then, with the wiping off of those accounts, where does the money go? The money should come back to the Parliament of Canada then, as a further collection of revenue. But there is no further collection of revenue. Under what heading will that money come back?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It comes back to the Receiver General.

Mr. WALLACE. Under what heading?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, I do not know under what heading you may send it under. I suppose you may send it under the heading of amounts paid in for standing suspense account.

Mr. WALLACE. I humbly submit that there is no such account kept by the Receiver General as a suspense account in regard to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it to go to the Montreal office or the Receiver General?

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. WALLACE. The Montreal office must do something with the money. The hon. Minister says that it is sent back to the Receiver General in Ottawa. The suspense account of the department is money advanced, and which at a later date must be accounted for in the way that Parliament has voted the money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is not there supposed to be this amount of money in the hands of the collector of the port of Montreal which is not in his hands?

Mr. WALLACE. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it must be so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If it is not paid it is in a suspense account. This should have been repaid out of contingencies, but it has not been recouped by the parties who owed it, and the authorities cannot collect from the parties. Therefore, it stands, having been paid out of contingencies, but without departmental authority. As they cannot collect it, they have put it into suspense account.

Mr. QUINN. It seems to me that it is merely a matter of book-keeping. The officers of the port of Montreal have made certain expenditure which have not been accepted by the department at Ottawa, so that these amounts have been placed to the charge of suspense account for the last twenty-two years. The collector at the port of Montreal says: I have had nothing to do with the payment of this money. I found this amount of $1,764. I want that wiped off; I want to have my accounts put straight. If you vote this money the hon. Minister of Customs sends it to Montreal and the collector at the port of Montreal sends it back to Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. Then where will it go?

Mr. QUINN. Then there is no further accounting for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Auditor General has no authority to allow these items now, but when this is passed, he will allow them, and this account is balanced.

Mr. QUINN. So he will if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) brings in an account which will say that the collector at Montreal is authorized, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, to charge this $1,764 to meet this account. What are you voting this money for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not a question of money at all.

Mr. QUINN. You are voting this $1,764 to the Department of Customs to spend in some way. This money is to be spent.

How is it to be spent? I could understand that this House might authorize an entry to be made in the books in order to balance the account, but if you authorize the payment of $1,764 to the collector, or the Minister of Customs, you are authorizing this payment for the purpose of wiping out an account which is dead or which is utterly worthless.

Mr. FOSTER. We want the items of this account.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will give the items:

1868—Cash disbursed in the Spellman case, to be paid by the Excise Department $108 44

Mr. FOSTER. You have to look to the excise department, then? If that is a debt of the excise department the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue will have to bring in a vote to pay it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am getting a vote to authorize the payment of items that comprise this suspense account.

Mr. FOSTER. These are items which have been paid twenty-five or thirty years ago.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am asking a vote to enable the collector at Montreal to wipe out this debt and to do it in such a way as it will be accepted by the Auditor General.

Mr. HAGGART. There is only one way in which these accounts are straightened. They are generally placed before the Public Accounts Committee. The Public Accounts Committee have not the power to discharge them altogether. The proper way is to bring in an account to discharge these accounts.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It can be done in the way that I am proposing. My officers have agreed that this is the only proper way that this can be done, and it is to ask Parliament for a vote that will enable us to clear off the books. We want to wipe this out, but we must have the authority of Parliament to do it, but if Parliament will not do it, it will simply remain a suspense account on the books.

Mr. WALLACE. I remember that some years ago the Public Accounts Committee dealt with a similar matter. The then hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Costigan) brought in a resolution for a precisely similar matter. In that case there were moneys that could not be collected and a resolution was passed by the Public Accounts Committee, after investigation by a sub-committee and a full explanation. The committee wiped off this amount and permitted a cross entry to be made. That is a parallel case to this, and I know that is the way in which it came before Parliament.

In this case this $1,764 goes down to Montreal; it wipes off these charges and is sent back, I presume to the Receiver General at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The money does not go at all.

Mr. WALLACE. Something must be done with the money. Mr. John Lewis, the collector in 1868, disbursed $63.94, and he took that out of the contingencies account and paid himself. Mr. Lewis is dead, and his heirs have no such claims against the Government. Now, the Minister tells us that the money was not authorized to be taken from that account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is only technical.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Railways says no, but the Minister of Customs says yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It is another disagreement amongst themselves.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know which of them to believe. Perhaps I had better ask the Prime Minister about it?

The PRIME MINISTER. Since my hon. friend appeals to me, I am willing to give him an answer. I do not pretend to be a man of figures, but I claim to have a fair share of common sense, and if we apply the rules of common sense to this we can understand it. I remember this case of Spellman. It was an illicit distilling case, which took place in 1869, and there was a lawsuit over it. Mr. Villeneuve took a carter to Laprairie and he had to pay that carter. The proper way to do business was to come to the Government and ask for a special appropriation, but at that time the old Conservative party was in office and they were not very particular, and instead of taking an appropriation the money was paid out of contingencies. Mr. Lewis did not want to pay the money out of his own pocket, and so he charged it to the contingent account, and paid himself. Mr. Lewis paid Mr. Villeneuve, Mr. Villeneuve paid the carter, and Mr. Lewis paid himself out of the contingent fund. Since 1868, the office at Montreal has been the creditor of the Government to that amount, and we simply want to make the books square. We might bring in a special Act of Parliament to cover the matter, but we say it would just be as well to vote the money now. We send the cheque to the collector at Montreal, the collector enters it on his book, and the cheque comes back to the treasury. It is a mere formal transaction and it is the common sense way of doing it.

Mr. WALLACE. That cheque comes back to the treasury as part of the revenue of the port of Montreal, while it is no such thing. It means a false entry and cannot be justified.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is to blame for not settling the matter when he was in office.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know whether it was brought to my attention or not. It comes before the Parliament of Canada tonight, and the Prime Minister tells us the cheque will be sent to the collector at Montreal and will be sent by him to Ottawa. They have no right to include that as part of the revenues at Montreal. Suppose it were a million dollars, would it be proper to add that million to the revenues of the port of Montreal and say: See how much our business is increasing?

The PRIME MINISTER. We are losing too much time over this, and if it cannot be passed let it drop.

Mr. HENDERSON. My difficulty is as to how the Receiver General is going to enter that amount again. Will he enter it as revenue from the port of Montreal, or will he again enter it on the suspense account, and then five years hence require an Act of Parliament to clear it up?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have lost enough time on this, let it drop.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should let the Minister have it just for an experiment, and then let him explain to us next year how he managed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The item is carried.

Additional amount required for salaries and contingencies, Ontario..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a large increase.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is mostly in the city of Toronto, where our contingencies will be something like $3,000 more than we estimated for. There is over $1,000 in cartage alone. Then we had to place two officers at Depot Harbour for supervising the transfer of grain, which is altogether a new service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cartage for?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the large cities the department pays the cartage on goods to the examining warehouse.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister has not yet explained, except in the most general terms. On such large sums he must give us fuller explanations.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot give fuller explanations. In estimating the amount of $300,000 for the province of Ontario, with new services arising and new expenditures, especially in a growing time, it is impossible to give a closer estimate. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) could never do so, and that criticism might come from some one else, but not from him. When I came into office I found that I had to pay some thousands of dollars of the hon. gentleman's debts out of the appropriation then made. I think this is a very close estimate. There is $1,000 required for increased cartage in the city of Toronto. Then it was not known that there would be such an immense traffic at Depot Harbour as to require two men there.

Mr. FOSTER. What are those men getting?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $500 each, I think.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Minister of Customs is inaccurate in his statement when he says he had to pay debts which I had left as controller. I think nine months elapsed from the time I resigned my position till he came in, and I would like to know how he paid any debts incurred by me.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am speaking of the department at the time I came in. I will say debts that were not provided for by the hon. gentleman, because he took an underestimate.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister is wrong. I resigned on the 12th of December, and the Estimates for the following year were not then put in. So that I was not responsible for the Estimates that were made after I ceased to be Controller.

British Columbia and Yukon District—

Additional amount required for salaries and contingencies out of which may be paid additional salaries to permanent customs officers, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $32,085

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I wish to reduce this item to $16,519.68.

Mr. FOSTER. We want a full explanation of this. In the first place, what was the amount voted in the main Estimates for British Columbia and the Yukon district?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the main Estimates $75,915 and in the supplementaries $12,000, or a total of $87,915. We had to bracket them in a measure, owing to the officers being at the White Pass, which though in British Columbia, was where Yukon business was attended to.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman want this large amount of $16,519 for?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is largely in the Yukon district. One reason why we say "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary." is that the department considered it very desirable that in the appointment of officers in the Yukon for the collection of revenue, instead of appointing officers new to the service, whose salaries would be fixed at the time, we should take from the offices at Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster thoroughly trained men, so that they would be in a position to handle that business more effectively than it could be done by new men. These men were taken from the ports I have mentioned. They were on the permanent list with a fixed salary. When we sent them to the Yukon we had to give them larger salaries, and, therefore, these words have to be used.

Mr. FOSTER. Had their places to be filled, where they come from?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. This item provides for their whole salary and the extra allowance.

Mr. WALLACE. The ex-Minister of Finance asked, what were the appropriations for British Columbia and the Yukon last year. The hon. Minister said $95,915, and, in reply to the ex-Minister of Finance, he said that was the appropriation for the two. I see, however, that it is an appropriation for British Columbia alone.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is $75,900 and $12,000; $75,000 in the main Estimates and $12,000 in the supplementaries, for British Columbia and the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. There are $15,500 taken for the Yukon, page 67 of the main Estimates for 1898-99, and $25,000 for the Estimates of next year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would have to be added.

Mr. FOSTER. $91,415 for both?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. What were the receipts from the Yukon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. During the past year we could not get the receipts in regular order, but I will give what we got. In the Chilkoot and White Pass, from the 26th February, 1898, to the 1st February, 1899, the receipts were $317,772.60. At Tagish, from September 3rd, 1897, to June 3rd, 1898, they were $41,797.09. At Dalton Trail, from June 30th to August 16th, 1898, the receipts were $11,205.38. At Dawson, for 1897-98, the receipts were $63,185.39. At Dawson, from the 1st July, 1898, to March 31st, 1899, $200,393.32, making a total of $634,353.77.

Mr. FOSTER. This $16,519 which the hon. gentleman is estimating for, has that amount been all paid to these gentlemen sent to the Yukon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No; part of that will be for the staff at Vancouver as well.

Mr. WALLACE. Then that $634,000 are practically all the receipts you have on record in the two years.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. These are the receipts given me within that time.

Mr. WALLACE. Which commenced about a year ago.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There may be moneys that are not yet received. At two ports there are no collections reported since.

Mr. WALLACE. Dawson still remains a port. Does the hon. gentleman tell us that he does not get returns?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, we get returns from Dawson.

Mr. WALLACE. One would gather that the Minister does not get the money, but they spend it as they go along, at their own sweet will.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The reason I strike the $15,000 out is that there is an item we have to account to the House for by and by. In British Columbia, the following increases have been made. At Kaslo we had to have a new clerk, Mr. Sutherland, at a salary of $900, and a new landing waiter at Nelson.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men are there in the office at Kaslo now?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. According to the Trade and Navigation Returns of 1898 I find only one. Whether the business required another one since—

Mr. FOSTER. Kaslo has not been growing, you know; it is Nelson that has been growing.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister nearly two years ago estimated for two customs officers in Kaslo. At that time he explained the increased demands in British Columbia and mentioned the extra officer at Kaslo as one causing an increase. As he mentions another one, that would seem to be three in Kaslo. The business at Kaslo is not as great as it was three years ago, when one officer did all the work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I see the receipts from Kaslo last year were $9,341. Mr. Sutherland was a preventive officer before. The collector at Kaslo is Mr. J. F. Mackintosh.

Mr. WALLACE. That is only two men, and you had two men before. Why do you want this $900 increase?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At New Westminster we had to appoint a new clerk at $720, also two preventive officers. Then the contingencies have been increased.

Mr. WALLACE. We would like an explanation about Kaslo.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have had to make a number of additions at Vancouver, the business having increased very largely. Chief Inspector McMichael, of that division, went out there and overhauled the books and the office and found that the place was undermanned, and has been for a considerable time. It was absolutely necessary that we should have more help.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men did you add there ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. About ten men. Some of those who were put in the Vancouver office were to replace men who had been sent to other places. One went out to Atlin, I think, one or two to other places. But we had to have considerable additions to the staff.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no man added at Kaslo ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Bostock) tells me there is.

Mr. FOSTER. How many in Kaslo now, then ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bostock) tells me there are three.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not see why that should be ; Kaslo is not one of the growing towns.

Mr. BOSTOCK. As I come from that constituency, perhaps I may be allowed to explain. At the time when the work was done by one officer as referred to by the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), Kaslo was an outpost. Since that time it has been made into a port. Mr. Mackintosh is the collector. There is a landing waiter, a Mr. Vroom, and it is necessary for him doing the work of the outpost to have a clerk. Mr. Sutherland is the clerk. It is true that trade fell off at Kaslo for a short time, but owing to the development of the country at the head of Kootenay Lake the business is increasing there very fast.

Mr. CLANCY. Was this inspector, Mr. Sutherland, appointed on the recommendation of the chief inspector ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In some cases the chief inspector did report names.

Mr. CLANCY. I mean did he recommend the appointment of an additional clerk ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think all the changes made in the district of British Columbia were made on the report of the chief inspector. He made a tour of British Columbia, as well as Vancouver, and gave me a full report of all the ports. I do not know whether I carried out all the recommendations that he made, or whether we are one or two men short. But I may say, speaking generally, that the reports of the chief inspector guided us in the matter. As to the recommendations of the individuals. I have a good deal of confidence in my hon. friend who represents that riding in giving me suitable names.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is asking for $16,500 extra in this vote. Is this amount owing to these men for salaries, or have they been paid ? They have presumably been paid their May salaries, and, if so, the June salaries are all that remain. It seems to me that these men are either waiting for back pay or else they have been paid.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The salaries will amount to considerable for the month of June.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is asking for $16,500 for salaries mainly, I suppose. Well, how much is contingencies and how much is salaries ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot tell you that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let that one be, and go to the next.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is that of any importance ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is of importance.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Then the hon. gentleman wants me to bring a list of the amounts paid for salaries in British Columbia, and the amounts expended in contingencies separately ?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know how much for contingencies and how much for salaries. Suppose there are $14,000 for salaries, are these gentlemen waiting till this Supply Bill passes in order to get their salaries, which is now almost due, or have they been paid from any other source, and this is really recouping it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All right.

Additional amount required for printing and stationery..... $9,000

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total vote last year for the current year in the main Estimates for printing and stationary ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you now ask for $9,000 extra ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is a great deal of expenditure through the preferential tariff. Double books have to be kept now. The account for ten months is $22,339.46, and there are three months of printing accounts to pay, so we estimate we will require that extra amount.

Mr. WALLACE. If the amount of $22,000 for ten months, add one-fifth of that, and you have $27,000 altogether. Then, why is it that $25,000 has been voted ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are three months of printing accounts to pay.

Mr. WALLACE. Does that include the last three months ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would be to the end of the year.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the amount of the three months' printing accounts?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My officer estimates that our accounts will require this $9,000 to bring us out even at the end of the year.

Mr. WALLACE. How much are the three months' accounts?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not got them here.

Mr. WALLACE. Have you received them?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We cannot have received them yet, because this carries us to the end of the year.

Mr. WALLACE. You say $22,339 have been spent in ten months; then add one-fifth for two months, or $4,468, and you have a total of $26,807. But $25,000 are voted, leaving a deficiency of $1,807. Why does he want five times that amount, or $9,000?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There will be more than that, because there are three months of printing.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the amount of one month's printing?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We cannot tell what the requirements of the stationery may be.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister has not demonstrated where the $9,000 are to go. We want to know.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is to go for printing and stationery.

Mr. WALLACE. But the Minister cannot even conjure up where he can spend that on printing and stationery. He says that he has spent $22,339 in ten months. At the same rate, for two months it will make a total of $26,827. But the hon. Minister says that there is one month's printing that has not been provided for yet.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said three months.

Mr. WALLACE. Add $1,000 for one month's printing, and that will make $27,807; $25,000 was voted. That would leave a difference of $2,807. Yet the hon. Minister is asking for $9,000. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what he requires it for?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the accounts here. If you want it you will have to wait.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister's statement is that ten months' printing has cost $22,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are some accounts yet to be paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Ten months' printing cost $22,000. Three months' printing at the same rate does not give you more than $27,000 of a total.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will have to get a better explanation than I have given.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has asked for $34,000. You had better let that stand and take the next item.

Additional amounts required for maintenance of and repairs to revenue cruisers $10,000

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The vote was $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. And this is $10,000 more?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How many steamers does the Customs Department keep up?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have the "Constance," which is considered a Government steamer. We used the "Stanley" for a few months, and we had also another boat hired after the "Stanley" went off. The "Stanley" was too expensive. The "Constance" cost in the neighbourhood of $18,000. The sum of $8,000 has been expended on the "Stanley." There will have to be repairs made to the "Constance." I think it will be somewhere about $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the "Constance" in service now?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, then, there is no use of my hon. friend taking any vote for repairs, because he will only have about eight days to do the work in now, and she is in service.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. She was repaired when she was laid up. The "Gladiator" is the boat that we engaged. She cost about $1,250 a month. The "Constance" cost in the neighbourhood of $18,000; of course, that is an estimate. We have to estimate, because she is running in May and in June. The "Stanley" was used during last summer, and when she was taken off the "Gladiator" took her place. The expenditure has been considerably increased by the demands of the preventive service, but during the year we have had several seizures resulting in a considerable amount of money for the treasury. More than that, all this preventive work has resulted in a large increase to the revenue by way of prevention, but the credit of it does not appear in the customs returns. It appears from the returns of my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not explain why $10,000 is asked, or for what it is to be used. We are all agreed as to the preventive service. What I pointed out to my hon. friend is that he is estimating for $2,000 for repairs to the "Constance," when the "Constance" is in service and it will be impossible for him to do anything with this vote. It will be useless to him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The estimate is made up in this way. The "Constance," to the 31st of December, 1898, cost $12,867.20, then from the 1st of April to the 1st of July, 1899, including half pay for the winter months, say $6,500. For new shaft and repairs, say $2,367.

Mr. FOSTER. Has that been put in? The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That was done when she was laid up?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so. That is $2,367. From the 1st of July to the 1st of October, 1898, $7,836.02. The "Gladiator," in 1898, cost for two and a half months, $2,389.22.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the "Gladiator" a steam vessel?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. A tug?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. How did the hon. gentleman arrange for it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We engaged the tug for so much, and the whole expenses are paid by the proprietor. For the two and a half months it cost $2,389.22, and for this spring we estimate two and a half months at $2,500, making $4,489.22. That is a total of $34,012.44, and the vote being $25,000, it will require $9,000 more.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the "Gladiator" being used?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. On the Cape Breton coast principally. The "Stanley" was used in the Baie des Chaleurs and in the lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend propose to use the "Stanley" again?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not; she is too expensive.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the Minister give us some information about the amount of the seizures, so as to justify this extraordinary increased vote for the "Constance"?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Since the season, the preventive officers have seized seven cargoes of liquor on board, and the vessels and cargoes sold for $13,381.49. The number of seizures made by the staff from the opening of navigation in 1898 to date is 102.

Mr. WALLACE. I find the seizing officers on board the "Constance" only received $950.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I hope her preventive work will show through the increase of revenue in the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister now gives the excuse that the "Constance" prevents smuggling by her presence.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what I say.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, that is a very difficult thing to figure out; you can only guess it. This increased expenditure is quite unjustifiable.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is a question on which we may differ. The increase in excise revenue has been over $1,000,000. But, of course, I do not claim that all that is due to the preventive service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The whole vote stands over, but only for the purpose of considering these small items.

Yukon Provisional District—

Yukon and Lewes Rivers—Improvements, &c., and telegraph lines..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item, together with the item 107, of $2,500 for telegraph lines in British Columbia, has already been discussed to some extent by the House. On the 13th of March an Order in Council was passed authorizing that certain steps should be taken to construct a telegraph line into Dawson. It was felt that it was desirable, even in anticipation of the appropriations for the coming fiscal year, that a party should be despatched to that country, in order that we might do some preliminary work before the year opened, and thus be in the best possible position to take advantage of the present season. I think the public opinion of the country will justify the Government in taking that step, even though they had to anticipate the votes of the coming year, and use an appropriation which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will say was not, at the time it was voted, intended to cover that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Which sums?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I claim that the vote covered the appropriations, although it is quite true, when the Minister obtained them, he did not say they were intended for this service. The amount of money expended up to the present time is comparatively small. The purpose for which the party was sent out was not merely for the construction of a telegraph line, but also for undertaking certain works in connection with the improvement of the rivers on the line of travel from the White Pass into Dawson. Therefore, in considering this matter, it must be remembered that the sums to which I am referring now, were not entirely for the telegraph, but for a service including work on the rivers. The party was under the direction of Mr. J. B. Charleson, who received $13,000 as an advance for the general purposes of the party. Of this sum, $8,000 is represented by a cheque which was issued by the Minister of Public Works and charged against an item of $25,000 which was appropriated for surveys and inspections generally—not for one province merely, but for all the provinces.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is that item to be found?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in the general appropriations of the Public Works Department of last year, chargeable to income, and is under the head of "miscellaneous." He will find the corresponding item for next year in the main Estimates, at page 55.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister tells us that last year that sum of money was voted, and I presume was expended. Will he tell us how it was expended last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to turn up the Auditor General's Report, which is just as accessible to my hon. friend as to me.

Mr. WALLACE. When a Minister claims that that item is applicable to the work of building a telegraph line, he is bound to tell us how it was expended in the past to justify such an expenditure this year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That portion of it will not be applied entirely to the construction of a telegraph line, because the party sent out is not only charged with that work, but with improving the navigation from Skagway to Dawson. How this vote was expended last year is set out in the Auditor General's Report at page Q—209, which covers several pages, and the total amount expended appears to have been $16,887.47.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Minister of Finance state what they did?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot refer to what they have done, because the party has only recently gone out, and the work is now in progress. I can only tell him what the contemplated works were.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that this amount was expended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $13,000 was an advance to Mr. Charleson. I presume he has spent it. $8,000 was charged to surveys and inspections; $2,500 was charged to the vote for telegraphs in British Columbia which has been referred to several times to-night; and $2,500 was charged to dredging in British Columbia. That is all the money that has been paid up to the present time. It is proposed in the supplementary Estimates for the coming year to take a considerable vote for carrying on the work, unless something is done to change the policy of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where have they done the dredging?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My deputy tells me that a letter from Mr. Charleson says that the dredging has been done on Six-Mile River in British Columbia.

Mr. EARLE. There has not been a particle of dredging done in British Columbia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Finance Minister state who the party are that work there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The party are composed of Mr. J. B. Charleson as superintendent—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who is he?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry to say I have not the honour of his acquaintance, but we will have his photograph produced, if necessary.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the Minister, if Mr. J. B. Charleson, at the head of this party, is the Charleson who obtained a very unenviable notoriety in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass investigation, and the appointment of men sent out to the Crow's Nest Pass, and the subsequent history with which his name is connected?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the pleasure of knowing. I did suppose that the officials of unenviable notoriety were entirely under the previous Government. How can I tell as to the particular colour of Mr. Charleson's hair?

Mr. WALLACE. We want to know if the Charleson who is sent out in charge of this party is the man who disgraced Canada—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is safe to say that no person in the employ of this Government ever disgraced Canada. The hon. gentleman has in his mind certain transactions that took place before 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be very smart—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is as smart as the inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. The inquiry is this. The Government has employed one Charleson and sent him out in charge of this party, and the question is a very proper one; it is whether this Charleson is the same Charleson who was mixed up in the Crow's Nest labour business, and with those promises made to workmen in various sections of the country, relying on which they went west, and which led to all the difficulties that occurred.

There are some members of this House who think that Mr. Charleson did not cut a very creditable figure at that time, and they want to know if this is the Charleson who is now employed by the Government. We do not want to know the colour of his hair or to have smart replies, but we want the answer to that question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman does not want the information, because he has given us the information himself.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not given the information. I ask if this is the same man.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. gentleman can ask the Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not propose to ask the Public Works Department.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman means to keep us here—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I mean to stay as long as the hon. gentleman. We may as well understand this at once. I am prepared to give my hon. friend every information, but the question was this, whether Mr. Charleson is the same person who disgraced Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not putting the question whether a man disgraced Canada or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was the question put.

Mr. WALLACE. It was not.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know if Mr. Charleson, who is in charge of this party, is the same man who was mixed up in the hiring of labour in the Crow's Nest Pass?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can ask the deputy of his department who was there, and until that information is given he will not get this vote.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the Minister of Finance, not if the man had an unenviable reputation, but whether the Charleson mentioned there was the same who was mixed up with the Crow's Nest Pass matter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who disgraced Canada, you said.

Mr. WALLACE. I said that on a subsequent occasion and repeat it, and the Minister, with his usual flippancy and impertinence—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member has made an offensive remark, which I ask that he withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of the word 'impertinent'? There may be two meanings. If a gentleman makes a smart reply to a question for information, that is impertinent to the subject, and the gentleman who makes it is guilty of an impertinency. That is perfectly parliamentary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to a discussion on the point.

Mr. WALLACE. If the statement made by the Minister of Finance was not an impertinency, I do not know the meaning of the word.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think you do.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know those "smart Aleck" phrases which the hon. Minister of Finance is so fond of using in this House on every occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, withdraw.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman was not discussing the general subject.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Chairman says that the word impertinency is not applicable and should not be applied to the Minister of Finance in this House, then I say that, in the words of the Speaker yesterday, for the purposes of this Parliament, we will not repeat the assertion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman must take it back, he must withdraw it. It is not enough that he shall not repeat it.

The CHAIRMAN. If my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is discussing a point of order it is my duty to hear it, but I must insist that the point of order be discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have a clear statement of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is whether the statement made by an hon. member in the committee, that the remarks of another hon. gentleman are an impertinency, is out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very well put, and the real point of order. A gentleman discussing a question uses a certain argument. An opponent gets up and says he thinks that in that discussion the remarks of the hon. gentleman were impertinent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am taking the question of order as stated by the chairman, and it was well and fairly put. A remark is either pertinent or impertinent. It is pertinent when it touches the question and impertinent if it goes away from that question. That is what my hon. friend said he meant, that the remarks of the Minister of Finance were not pertinent to the question being discussed, and they were not. When my hon. friend asked if this man Charleson was the man who was mixed up—

The CHAIRMAN. My hon. friend is departing from the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. When the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) asked whether this was the same Charleson who was mixed up in the Crow's Nest Pass business, the hon. member for York said with reference to the remark of the Minister of Finance in reply, that he thought it was impertinent, that it did not touch the question, and it did not. It was not pertinent to it.

Mr. GIBSON. He said with his usual flippancy and impertinence—

Mr. FOSTER. The word is perfectly parliamentary as applied to an argument.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does appear to me that there can be no doubt in the minds of any gentlemen present as to the language used by the hon. member for West York. He was referring to the Minister of Finance and said that he spoke with his usual flippancy and impertinence. That is the expression which I think struck everybody as being entirely out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I take the question as stated by the chairman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I submit whether or not it is a debatable question at all. You, Mr. Chairman, heard the language used, the hon. member admits that was the statement made, and I appeal to you for a ruling on the question now.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister has not stated the case, as I understood it. The hon. member for West York said that the Minister, in his usual flippant and impertinent style. These are the words in "Hansard."

The CHAIRMAN. I will now rule upon the point of order.

Mr. WALLACE. As I am one of the parties interested, I would like to make this statement. I asked the Minister of Finance whether this Mr. Charleson was the one who was connected with the Crow's Nest Pass business. The Minister of Finance stated that he did not know whether he was or not, that he did not know the colour of his hair. I then referred to the unenviable notoriety of this man, and I said that, in my opinion, that answer was flippant. Do you agree with me, Sir, in that? I ask your ruling now?

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. WALLACE. —

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. The answer was flippant, and I say it was not pertinent. When I asked a question as to the identity of the individual, it was not pertinent to say: I do not know the colour of his hair; and, therefore, not being pertinent, it must be impertinent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has said it the second time, and I ask your ruling, Sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling is, that the word "impertinent" is unparliamentary, unless the explanation goes with it, that it was not used in the ordinary sense in which the word is generally used. On this occasion, the word, as used by my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), was unparliamentary.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we shall have to appeal from the ruling of the Chair. The ruling is, that to use the word "impertinent" with regard to the argument of an hon. member—

Mr. McMULLEN. No, with regard to himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman can appeal, but he cannot discuss the appeal.

Mr. FOSTER. I am willing to take "Hansard's" report.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to appeal?

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the grounds of my appeal. The Chairman rose, after the occurrence had taken place, and stated the point of order. He said the point of order was, that the hon. gentleman had applied the term "impertinent" to the Minister of Finance, in his reply to the statement of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). My argument was, that "impertinent" was as parliamentary as "pertinent" would be.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. It is on that point that I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is this—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I have the floor.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have the floor on a point of order.

Committee rose, and Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Brodeur) took the Chair.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, it is my duty to report to you that a point of order was raised by the Minister of Finance to the effect that an hon. gentleman had referred to his observations as impertinent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is making this report?

Mr. FLINT. The point of order was raised, and, after discussion, I ruled that the observation applied was out of order and unparliamentary. From that decision an appeal has been taken by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. And the decision was?

Mr. FLINT. That the use of the term "impertinent," as applied by one hon. member to another, was unparliamentary.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is, whether the decision of the Chair shall be sustained?

House divided on the question:

Motion agreed to, and Chair sustained.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I now ask, in conformity with the ruling of the Chair, that the hon. gentleman who used the objectionable word be asked to withdraw it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a decision from the Chair that the hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression.

Mr. WALLACE. In conformity with your decision, I withdraw the word impertinent, and I hope the Minister of Finance will no longer continue to humbug this committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The observation the hon. gentleman has made is quite in order, which is a very unusual thing for him, but it is not exceedingly appropriate. I now proceed to consider the question before the committee. I was about to read a telegram received from Mr. Charleson when the interruption occurred. It is dated:

Tagish House, Upper Yukon, via Skagway,
Fast Sound Boat and Vancouver,
3 p.m., May 25, via Vancouver, B.C., May 30.
A. Gobeil, Deputy Minister Public Works,
Ottawa.

Telegraphic communication over your own wire from this point to Skagway completed and in perfect working order. Dam, telegraph stations and beacons on batture at Caribou Crossing completed. All obstructions removed from Six-Mile River. Lifting barges at work will follow ice through. First-class building, to be used as office for Crown timber agent and telegraph operator here, completed. Poles distributed to White Horse Rapids, wire and insulators at McClintock. Any telegrams will reach me there. Balance of wire will be distributed on barges. Trail all cut out as far as line is constructed. Everything perfectly satisfactory. Pushing through to keep within very letter of my instructions.

J. B. CHARLESON.

That is the latest report we have from the gentleman who is in charge of this party.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is this Mr. Charleson?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is a gentleman employed by the Minister of Public Works to proceed to the Yukon district in charge of this work.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there more than two Charlesons in the Public Works Department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised there is only one in the Public Works Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he the elder or the younger?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is only one, therefore there can be no elder and no younger.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the person who is out there is the same Mr. Charleson who has been employed by the Public Works for a number of years, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, for several years.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he the same man who was employed in procuring labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Crow's Nest Pass business is not in the Public Works Department, and I am unable to give my hon. friend any information about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Deputy Minister of Public Works will give the information to the committee. I am asking whether this is the same man who was employed at the time in getting labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I really have made legitimate inquiry, and I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information. We have no information in the Public Works Department in relation to the Crow's Nest Pass. I understand that Mr. Charleson, since he was employed several years ago, has not been employed in any other department than that of the Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. While in the employment of the Public Works Department was he engaged in getting labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I really do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he ask the deputy who is there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did, and the deputy informs me that he has no information on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. The deputy does not know! Then I am bound to say that the deputy is a deputy who ought not to be in the service of the country; he shows himself a perfect partisan. Do you mean to say that the Deputy Minister of Public Works, when that matter was discussed here over and over again, when the Minister of Public Works discussed it with us in this House, and it was a matter known all through this country—do you mean to tell me that the Deputy Minister of Public Works, who went through the whole of it, does not know whether it was that Mr. Charleson or another?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is pure assumption.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Here is the Deputy Minister sitting cheek by jowl with the Minister of Finance, sitting within two feet of the Minister of Finance, and it is absolutely impossible that any one in this Chamber will credit the statement that that deputy is not able to give a definite statement on that point. There is not a member in this committee who believes for a moment that the Deputy Minister of Public Works is not able to give an honest statement. I do not hesitate to say that if the Deputy Minister has told the Minister of Finance that he is not able to inform him on that point, he is not giving an honest statement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I listened to the discussion that took place in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass labour troubles. All I remember hearing in the discussion was that some of the men were hired by a man named Charleson. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen are going a long way when they say that the Deputy Minister of the Public Works Department must necessarily know whether Mr. Charleson was engaged in employing men for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The Deputy Minister of Public Works has told the Minister of Finance that he does not know whether it is the same man or not, and it seems to me that this committee must accept that statement as correct. I think it is a most improper thing for any hon. member to give the lie to a prominent officer of the Government who comes here for the purpose of giving information to the Minister. For myself I have been free to accept the statement as that gentleman gave it to me, but I venture to say that hon. members on that side of the House will not approve of a statement of that kind.

Mr. CLANCY. When this question was discussed last year, the hon. Minister of Public Works, as "Hansard" will show, admitted that this was the Mr. Charleson employed in the Public Works Department, but he qualified it by saying that Mr. Charleson had no instructions to hire men, and, therefore, he did not assume responsibility for him. The Deputy Minister of Public Works must have remembered this discussion, and he must, therefore, have known that this appeared to be the same Mr. Charleson. If Mr. Charleson was charged with questionable conduct while in the employ of the Public Works Department, and if he has been put in a position of trust now, is it an unfair question to ask, if this is the same man, and whether he should be placed in a responsible position?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) must see that hon. gentlemen around him are as forgetful as the Minister of Finance, because, if they knew all about it, they would not ask these questions. They have professed to ask these questions for information. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says that the hon. Minister of Public Works said last session, that the gentleman referred to was an officer of the Public Works Department, that Mr. Charleson, who was said to have employed men on the Crow's Nest Railway, is the same Mr. Charleson who is now in the employ of the Public Works Department.

Therefore, the hon. member for Bothwell has answered the question. He has referred to a statement made by the hon. Minister of Public Works. I have no doubt the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works is there, and the Minister could answer the question, if I could not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the attack on the Deputy Minister is most unfair. He appears here, in his official capacity, to answer questions in connection with the department, and I am sure there is not a gentleman in this House, or out of it, who would say that, in regard to a matter of interest that has taken place in this House, a Deputy Minister is called upon, even if he should have some recollection of it, to make a definite statement. We cannot even keep it in mind as to what takes place in this House. My hon. friend says that Mr. Charleson was guilty of misconduct. I challenge that, and I say that there was not a word to prove that he was. I only want to say that he was quite within his rights in doing what he did, and he was only doing, after hours, something in the interest of the workmen of his locality. What I want to say is, that I regret that these hon. gentlemen should have attacked an official of the department. Even if it were admitted that he might have had some imperfect recollection of the newspaper references, and even of the "Hansard" references to this man, that would not justify the attack that has been made upon the deputy. No person would say that an official of the department should come here, and be asked a question like that. Suppose he said that he was the same man, what knowledge has he of the matter in his official position. The question is raised for the purpose of throwing some reflection upon Mr. Charleson and upon the hon. Minister for having employed him. I have listened to-night, since this discussion arose, to try and find out if I could gather what in creation the hon. gentleman was driving at, what Charleson he referred to, but he did not give us any distinct explanation. I know one Mr. Charleson, who was in the employ of the company that built the Crow's Nest Pass road. That was the young man. This young man was never in the employment of this Government, or any other government. He was never in the employ of the Public Works Department, so far as I know. I do not know his Christian name, but I know he was in the employ of the company that built the road, and that he was a son of Mr. Charleson who was sent out in charge of this work. I believe that Mr. Charleson, notwithstanding the fact that his conduct has been criticised by hon. gentlemen, is a competent and experienced man, well able to carry out the duties assigned to him, and I will be very much surprised, after his work is completed, to find that there is any charge proven of misconduct or want of attention against him.

Mr. FIELDING.

I cannot see what the object of this discussion in regard to Mr. Charleson is, except that he was the man whose name was mentioned in connection with the department. I took occasion to make some inquiries from Mr. Haney and others, at the time of another investigation in regard to the trackmen, and the explanation I got was, that Mr. Charleson was assisting men from this district to get employment. I do not think, outside of temper, that any member of this House would so unfairly attack an official of the Government, and ask him questions outside of his department.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) to say that we are doing anything unmanly in speaking of a public official.

Mr. BRITTON. Are you not doing it?

Mr. BERGERON. You do not know what I am going to say.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman should address the Chair.

Mr. BERGERON. I want you to stop these hon. gentlemen interrupting me before you interrupt me. I want to be fair.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Sit down. The hon. gentleman has just declared that I have acted unfairly.

Mr. BERGERON. I have not said so yet, but I am going to say that.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I suppose the hon. gentleman will have no objection to withdraw that statement.

Mr. BERGERON. No, Mr. Chairman, before you do anything to me, you should prevent those hon. gentlemen interrupting me. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) got up, and said I was doing something wrong, before I had said a word.

Mr. BRITTON. I asked you a question.

Mr. BERGERON. You never did.

Mr. BRITTON. I asked you a question.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know, whether we are here to have free discussion.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I suppose the hon. gentleman will withdraw the expression he used, in declaring that I was unfair.

Mr. BERGERON. I think you were. I have not said it yet; I reserve it. I say, before I had said a word, an hon. gentleman got up on the other side. You put me down; this is not the first of it. It is a matter that has occurred very often before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the point of order; let us have it.

Mr. CASEY. The point of order is, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is imputing improper conduct to the Chair, and that the hon. gentleman knows better, so that he is wilfully and maliciously imputing improper conduct to the Chair.

Mr. BERGERON. There is another point of order for you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Brodeur). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) has referred to a member of this House as acting wilfully and maliciously—

Mr. CASEY. If the Chair rules the word "maliciously" is out of order I will withdraw it. I used the word for the reason that the hon. member (Mr. Bergeron) has been a Deputy Speaker, and he is supposed to know the decencies of debate, and ought to observe them. When he is found breaking them one is tempted to express the idea I have already expressed in language which has been ruled to be unparliamentary. My point of order is, that he is covertly casting imputations upon the Chair.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) raised no point of order. He only rose to use an expression which he knew would be ruled out of order.

Mr. CASEY. My point of order is, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) insinuated that the Chair treated him unfairly by ruling that his interruptions were unseemly and unparliamentary.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The hon. gentleman should not use the word "insinuation."

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) pointed out to you, Mr. Chairman, the fact that several members on the other side of the House had violated the rules of Parliament, and that you did not reprimand them. I heard the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) address the hon. member for Beauharnois across the floor personally and he was not called to order. The hon. member for Beauharnois did the same thing later, and he was called to order. I do not say that you heard the member for Beauharnois, Mr. Chairman, but I do say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) simply called your attention to the fact, as he had a perfect right, that hon. members on the other side were violating the rules of Parliament with impunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) declared that I was unfair when I asked him to withdraw some expressions which I considered unparliamentary. Besides that, I heard the hon. member for Beauharnois addressing the members of the committee instead of addressing the Chair, and I called him to order.

Mr. BERGERON. And you never called the member for Kingston to order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order. I am now told that another hon. member did the same thing, but I did not hear him.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I know you are deaf on one side.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. I am surprised to hear the member for Beauharnois use such a remark. I will not proceed further; I will simply ask him to withdraw the expression.

Mr. BERGERON. Which expression am I to withdraw?

Mr. CASEY. The imputation concerning the Chair.

Mr. BERGERON. I said he was deaf on the right and heard better on the left. I will say he hears on both sides and that will settle it. We know the Chairman interrupts any one on this side of the House.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order. We will now proceed with the discussion of the item.

Mr. BERGERON. I say the Chair does not hear very well on the right when any one on this side of the House is interrupted. My hon. friend from Kingston interrupted me, and he was not called to order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will be good enough to proceed with the item.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope it will not be forgotten that you must hear on both sides in future. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) attributed to us unmanly conduct when we speak on public matters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I said unfair.

Mr. BERGERON. We are here discussing public business. I would be the last one to say anything of a man or a Deputy Minister who cannot defend himself in this House. But at the same time, I want to let the Government know that we must have information on these points. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asked a fair question about Mr. Charleson. That is a name we have heard very often in this House. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) does not know as much of that family as I do, but we have heard of the father and the son and the more we hear of them the better it is for us before the country. My hon. friend the Deputy Minister—I may call him so although he is not a member of this House—knows very well what we mean when we ask about the other Charleson.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. J. B. Charleson is his name.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the other one?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. There are two Charlesons in the Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed there is only one in the employ of the Public Works.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, I am asking this question in a fair spirit, and I believe that two of them have been employed by the department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) asked the question in sincerity, and I may tell him that I am informed that there is only one Charleson in the employ of the department. There is a storekeeper in the city named Charleson, but he is not in the employ of the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the initials?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. W. G.

Mr. BERGERON. What I want to say is this, that there are two Charlesons, father and son—most intelligent men, both of them. They were doing business with the local Government for a long time when Mr. Mercier was in power; they are doing business here now, and it was quite natural for the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) to ask which of them it was, because the two of them have been employed by the Department of Public Works.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BERGERON. They have been; we had it from the Minister of Public Works himself last year. One of them is employed permanently—J. B.; he has been since 1896. W. G. has also been employed and paid public money through the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MACKIE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? The Charleson who was on the Crow's Nest Pass was employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway; that was J. B. The young man was never employed by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is entirely astray. J. B. was employed by the Public Works Department.

Mr. MACKIE. Not at that time. He was employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is astray. J. B. was in the employ of the Public Works Department at that time, and he had the purchasing of supplies; and W. G. was the man who engaged men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass, through his papa.

Mr. MACKIE. I know that he was employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has heard of that; I am giving him facts.

Mr. BERGERON.

I am told that W. G. has a store in Ottawa, and he has been employed by his papa, through the Department of Public Works, to choose men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass. Now, I want to say that the son sells goods to the Department of Public Works through his papa.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. And my hon. friend from York asked the Minister of Finance this question. We do not hold him responsible, because he is acting for the Minister of Public Works; but if he wants to get these estimates through, and we will help him to do so, he should give us every possible information from the Department of Public Works through the Deputy Minister. If he had done that, we would have had all this information, and we might have got through with some other items. But until we get that information, and we are entitled to it, we will not make much progress.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The question before you, Mr. Chairman, is the remark made by the ex-Minister of Finance in respect to a gentleman present, an officer of the Government, who is not in a position to defend himself.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. I just wish to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not yet heard what I am about to say. The point we are discussing, and which has given rise to some feeling in the House, is this. This Charleson business, I confess, I do not understand myself. I know there was some talk in reference to Mr. Charleson some time ago. Now we hear of two. The Minister of Finance was asked whether this was the same man or not. I think the Opposition have a right to ask that if they like, as they can ask a great many questions. The Minister of Finance said he did not know anything about it. They said: You can ask the deputy of the department. The deputy of the department is asked by the Minister; and, I understand, that when the deputy of the department is here to give information, it is official information. He is not here to give what he hears through a newspaper or in any other way; and when he states that he has nothing official to give, we are told that a man who will say that is not fit to be in the public service. That was the point before this committee, and it is for hon. members of this committee to say whether that is fair or whether it is not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have listened to the discussion that has been going on for some time, particularly the latter part, and I desire to say a word in reference to the lecture on parliamentary etiquette which we had from the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). It occurred to me to be very remarkable indeed for that hon. gentleman to make the speech he did to-night, when it is in the recollection of this House that within the last 24 hours that same hon. gentleman attacked an official of the Government, a gentleman who, I believe, is in the employ of the Government at the present time, and was in the employ of the former Government, and who is not in a position to defend himself. Last night, the hon. member for North Oxford accused that gentleman of having done something that was unworthy of any man in the employ of the Government, and if he was guilty of it, he ought to be dismissed at once. That official was charged by the hon. member for North Oxford with having accepted blankets for the Department of Militia, although they were half shoddy, a charge which, I think, should not have been made by the hon. gentleman unless he was absolutely sure that it was true. He may have made the statement in the heat of debate, or, perhaps, without due consideration, or possibly he did not intend that full weight should be given to the words he gave utterance to at the time. But in so doing he established a precedent in this House for making attacks on officers in the employ of the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who was the officer ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I refer to Mr. Watson. If it is fair in one case, it is fair in another. I am not saying that there is any justification in either case ; but I think it would have been just as well if the hon. gentleman who made the attack last night had been challenged by the Ministers of the Crown and brought to task, as well as a member on this side of the House, for making a statement with reference to another member of the Civil Service. To my mind, one case was just as bad as the other. The remarks made by the hon. gentleman last night established a precedent, so that there is, perhaps, some excuse for what is said to-night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say that a member of the House had not a right to attack an official of the Government or the Government. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has undertaken to put words in my mouth which I did not use. I did say that the attack made to-night on the Deputy Minister of Public Works was unfair, and I say so still, and I believe every member of this House says so. Now, my hon. friend goes further and says I attacked an official of the department. He will not find one word in my remarks last night that refers to any official of the Government, but because I said that the previous Government did furnish to the volunteers of Canada half shoddy blankets when they had advertised for all-wool blankets, he tried to draw the inference that I cast the blame on some officer. I blame the Government. I do not know the official the hon. gentleman refers to, but if I were aware that any official of the department had so neglected his duty as to accept articles that were not of the proper value, then I say he would be a proper subject for attack, and should be attacked. I never for a moment to-night said that either the Government or an official of the Government could not be attacked, but I do say that to-night, in this particular case, the attack was very unfair, because the gentleman attacked could not reply. I understand that in my absence my statement with regard to the blankets was questioned, although not by any hon. member who is in the force and who has had experience. I can tell my hon. friend that if he wants an investigation, I know what I have said to be true, and every officer in the force knows it to be true. There was an investigation before the officer of the department, and it was proved that the blankets were half shoddy.

Mr. PRIOR. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I say yes. I defy the hon. gentleman to ask for an investigation.

Mr. PRIOR. Where was the investigation held ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. An investigation was held before the Public Accounts Committee, and an examination of the goods was made, in my own presence, in the department, and I saw the blankets.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that ?

Mr. PRIOR. Was there any gentleman present who knew the constituency of a blanket ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know what my hon. friend intends to insinuate by that.

Mr. PRIOR. I insinuate nothing, but I mean what I say.

Mr. GIBSON. You know more about nails.

Mr. PRIOR. I know enough about nails.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the statement in this House, and I appeal to my hon. friend whose corps—he is out of the battalion now—was supplied with the same blankets, to stand up and say whether my statement is not true.

Mr. PRIOR. The blankets we had supplied us year after year I never heard any complaint about.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have answered the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) with regard to the statement he attributed to me, that an official should not be attacked. I never said anything of the kind. All I said was that in my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of the House, the attack made on the Deputy Minister was very unfair.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been trying for the last fifteen minutes to get a chance to say a word. No one feels more strongly than I that an official, who has no representation in this House, ought not to be unfairly treated. He cannot talk back, and he has a certain position which members of the House, of course, should have regard for. We all say things at times in the heat of argument, or on the spur of the moment, which it would probably be well to have left unsaid. For the life of me, I cannot recall just now how strong language I did use, but it is just possible that, in the provocation of the moment, when I was asking for a bit of information that I thought we should have and rather insisting on getting it, and when I tried to get it from the Deputy Minister, and the answer came that he did not know, which seemed to me very unreasonable, I perhaps made use of an expression which was much stronger than I should have used. If I did, so far as I did, I am very frank in saying that I would rather I had not used it. I would be the last person to take an unfair position in criticising an official. I hope that hon. gentlemen on the other side will take this as a fair and frank retraction of any hard words I may have said with respect to the deputy. If the House will allow me, I do not think it is in the temper to sit here and attempt to do much more business to-night, and I would suggest to the Finance Minister and others on that side whether we had not better adjourn now and get back here to-morrow and endeavour to do more business.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In your improved condition, I think we had better go on.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not taken any part at all in the debate for the last hour. I do not know that it has been very creditable to the House, but I am more than pleased with the ample and frank withdrawal which my hon. friend has made of his remarks regarding the Deputy Minister of Public Works. These heads of departments occupy a singular and curious position in the House. They are bound to be here to give information, and ought to be treated with courtesy and respect. They are not able to reply back, and it does appear to me that to say anything against their character or imputing improper motives to them, or say anything, we would not say them face to face, is taking an unfair advantage of our position. There were things said to-night with respect to the Deputy Minister which I thought were harsh and uncalled for, and I am very glad they have been withdrawn. I would say to my hon. friend, in all seriousness, that we have done no work to-day at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the fault of the Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I submit that it is nothing of the kind. We have been here since three o'clock in the afternoon, and have not carried $7,000 of votes yet, and we will be here until next December unless we get on with business better.

My hon. friends opposite know that we have to get on with the business. We do not want to sit here all night. It is not for our health that we are sitting here, and it is not by adjourning every night from twelve to one that we can hope to get through at all. I submit now that we should have a little business done even at the close of this day.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend had better not press the present item, because a great deal of discussion will take place on it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been the subject of discussion since three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will take my suggestion, he will let this item stand over, and let us take up the other, which will not cause so much discussion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What more discussion does the hon. gentleman want?

Mr. BERGERON. The remarks made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries are very unreasonable. He knows that the only chance we have on this side of bringing anything before the House is when the Government wants to go into Supply. As far as this item is concerned, a great deal of discussion took place this afternoon, and my hon. friend will understand that not only do we want to further discuss it, but there are many questions we have to put to the Government concerning it. Since I am here, I have not heard one word of explanation why the Minister of Public Works went and spent $25,000 on building that piece of telegraph line, when there were negotiations between some parties and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways and Canals about the same work. I leave it to the Minister of Marine, who is a very reasonable man, whether we should pass this item hurriedly, and whether we have not every possible right in our position, to ask every possible information about it.

Now, my hon. friend says we have been here a long time discussing this matter. That is quite true, but we have had no reason given by the Minister of Finance who represents the Minister of Public Works why this money should have been spent without the authority of Parliament. I do not blame the hon. gentleman for not having a complete information on the details of this work, for it is not his department. But he will understand surely that we naturally desire to know the reason why this money has been spent without the authority of Parliament?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He will tell you.

Mr. BERGERON. No, we have asked for it, but we have not received that information yet.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You were asking about Charleson.

Mr. BERGERON. That is drawing a red-herring across the trail. Charleson does not amount to much in relation to this particular point.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But the hon. gentleman has not asked for the information he now speaks of. He has a right to it, but he has not asked for it.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will allow me—we have been on this item two hours, and we have not had from the Minister of Finance why this money was spent without asking Parliament. And when we hear, as we did this afternoon, of correspondence between private individuals and the Minister of Railways and Canals in connection with a work of this kind, it seems to me important that we should understand what we are doing. And when my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) asks that the item should be allowed to stand and something else be taken so that we may make some progress, it seems to me most reasonable. I leave it to gentlemen opposite who have been here for years. The hon. Minister of Customs and I have been here for twenty years, and we know that under the late Government, no item of $25,000 was ever voted without the fullest information being given as to reasons for it. Why, my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows that never was an item of $10 voted under the late Government without giving every possible reason why. And to-day we are asked to agree to the expenditure of $25,000, and expenditure which is entered upon without the sanction of Parliament, and we find, moreover, that there is a kind of imbroglio about this work. The Minister of Public Works spends money without the authority of Parliament for this work. The Minister of Railways and Canals, and even the Prime Minister, gives letters to a private company that he will go into agreement with them. We do not know where we stand, and should be guilty of neglecting our duty if we did not ask for information not only as to this expenditure but as to the policy of the Government for the future with regard to this subject. We are told that we ought to vote this item on the ground that we have done very little work to-day. But it is suggested, and very reasonably it seems to me, that we should leave this item aside and go on with something else. Of course, we are quite prepared to stay here as long as the Minister of Finance wishes, but we understand that the members of the Government want to go home, and I am sure that nobody is more anxious to close the sitting and go home than I. Why not leave this item aside and go on with other matters?

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, if we must go on with this, we must. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) kindly separate in his vote what is for British Columbia and what for the Yukon; and if he can divide, will he also say what amount is for river improvements and what for the telegraphs. I do not think the item has been properly expressed, as two different things are confused.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the request of the hon. gentleman is not unreasonable. But the difficulty is that a general authority has been given Mr. Charleson who is in charge of the party, and until we get his returns, we can hardly divide the amount. But as far as we can judge the proportion will be one-third in British Columbia and two-thirds in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The telegraph line has been built from Lake Bennett, to which point the White Pass Railway line extends, to Lake Tagish, a distance of 52 miles. I said Six-Mile River was in British Columbia, and my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) corrected me. I do not pretend to be exactly informed and accept his correction. But Tagish to which the telegraph line has been extended is in British Columbia.

Mr. PRIOR. What did the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) mean when he quoted Mr. Charleson as wiring that a telegram could come over our own line from Skagway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it was from Tagish to Bennett.

Mr. PRIOR. I think he said over our own line from Skagway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would be incorrect. The White Pass Railway telegraph line extends from Skagway to Bennett, and we have made a connection with it at Bennett.

Mr. PRIOR. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the paper he read from, I think he will see that I am correct.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The words used are "over our own wire from this point to Skagway." That hardly describes it. We have a wire from Tagish to Bennett, and from that point we have an arrangement to use the White Pass line.

Mr. WALLACE. The railway would, of course, have a telegraph line alongside of it, and it would be absurd, I suppose, to attempt to build the line parallel with it. Now going back to the other question, the employment of Mr. Charleson on this work, I think that that was not a very good appointment. Mr. Charleson we have ascertained now, after a good deal of beating about the bush, Mr. J. B. Charleson, was the individual who was connected with the Crow's Nest Pass business last year, although an employee of the Government during all that time. A commission was appointed by the Government to investigate the grievance and wrongs inflicted upon Canadian workmen who had been sent out there. The report of that commission, after investigating the matter, condemns in the strongest terms from start to finish the acts of Mr. Charleson declaring that he misled the men who were engaged. The report is before me now. The Minister of Public Works, who justified and defended Mr. Charleson as much as he could, said a year ago :

As for Mr. Charleson, he is not in town now ; as soon as he comes back, I will ask him to give an account of what he has done, and if he is not in a position to give me a satisfactory explanation, he will have to take the consequences of what he has done.

An hon. MEMBER. What Charleson is that ?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. J. B. Charleson.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the papa.

Mr. WALLACE. At any rate, he is the one who is in charge of this construction of the telegraph and the other works that the Government are undertaking. The Minister of Public Works said that he was going to make an investigation as soon as Mr. Charleson returned, and, if Mr. Charleson was not able to give him a satisfactory explanation, he intimated that he would dismiss him. Well, Parliament has never yet received any report of that investigation that the Minister pledged himself to furnish Parliament with regard to Mr. Charleson's conduct. The first news we get from him now is the statement made by the Minister of Finance, that Mr. Charleson is placed in charge of this party, and that he was advanced $13,000, and he is sent out there, with a staff of men, to dredge rivers and construct telegraph lines. That $13,000 will not go very far, and he will require more money. We find here that certain officers have helped themselves, somebody helped themselves, to $106,000 of the customs revenue out there, and to $92,000 of the Dominion lands revenue.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is not fair in saying that the officers have helped themselves, without waiting till we reached the item, and asking for explanations.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems to me that they have helped themselves. But the Minister knows that this $13,000 will not go a long way out there in dredging rivers and building telegraph lines. Then what are they to do ? It occurs to me that they will go on and help themselves to the public funds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where are they to get them ?

Mr. WALLACE. The customs are collecting a large amount there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What has Mr. Charleson to do with the customs ?

Mr. WALLACE. What was done with the $106,000 of customs revenue that was handed over by the customs officers to somebody ? I presume not 10 per cent of it, certainly not 20 per cent, was expended by the Customs Department. That same process may be going on, unless there is a more strict surveillance over the conduct of Government affairs in that country. Could the Minister tell us when these men went out there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The party arrived in Vancouver on the 18th of March. They left on the 11th of March.

Mr. WALLACE. When was the Order in Council passed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the 13th of March.

Mr. WALLACE. That makes the matter still worse. There was no authority, not even an Order in Council, or a Governor General's Warrant, for sending away this expedition. When did they arrive at Skagway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the 30th of March.

Mr. WALLACE. They could not have done very much towards dredging rivers or building telegraph lines before the 1st of April. But the strange thing about it is, that this expedition should have started before an Order in Council was passed, or any legal sanction had been given to this work to be done. We should investigate this matter a little further, and find out why Mr. Charleson was appointed manager of such an important enterprise. We got a telegram to-day, dated the 25th or the 30th of May—which was it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is dated Tagish House on the 25th May, and Vancouver on the 30th.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the distance of the telegraph that they built independent of the railway company ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 56 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. Was there a staff sent from here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About ten or twelve went from Ottawa, while others were employed out there. We have no information as to the number taken except those that went from Ottawa.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the names of those who left here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Charleson, Mr. Richardson, an officer of very great experience on the Canadian Pacific telegraph service, Mr. Taché, an engineer of the department, Mr. Boyer, his assistant, and the chief carpenter, named Lafortune, a stenographer and a type-writer named Gobeil. The other names the deputy cannot recall, but we will get them later.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if this J. B. Charleson has not been for the last few years purchasing agent for the Department of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, Mr. Charleson has been employed as supervisor of labour. There is an officer named Breton, who is the purchasing agent.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did Mr. Charleson purchase supplies for the contingent he took out ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was advanced $13,000 with the liberty to purchase whatever he would require.

Mr. TAYLOR. As a matter of fact, did he purchase a large quantity of supplies here—a car-load of wire ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were some supplies ; we have not the returns from Mr. Charleson, but he did purchase supplies before he left Ottawa.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are there no accounts in the department ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that goods were ordered by Mr. Charleson, but he has not yet returned any of the accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was ordered ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hundred tons of wire.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was that ordered from his son ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some portion of these supplies was supplied by W. G. Charleson.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is he a son of J. B. Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One is the son and the other is the father. I do not know which it is. Wire, W. G. Charleson ; insulators, the Potter Association, of St. Johns, Quebec ; brackets, Firstbrook Bros., Toronto ; poles, J. Y. Rochester, formerly of Mattawa ; spikes, W. G. Charleson.

Mr. BERGERON. Read the prices.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an estimate, which, I presume, corresponds with the prices paid : $9 per mile of 8 BB wire, $2.50 per hundred pounds ; insulators, $86 per 1,000 ; brackets, $26 per 1,000 ; poles, $3, distributed ; spikes, $2.50 per keg—12 kegs.

Mr. BERGERON. Are those the prices for all the goods that were bought ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The prices are given for each of these articles. The prices for food supplies are separate.

Mr. BERGERON. We only want to have the things bought from Charleson.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who were the food supplies bought from ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Messrs. Bate & Co. There are no accounts rendered ; Mr. Charleson purchased them.

Mr. EARLE. Were they freighted by the Government to the coast ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were delivered at Bennett. We purchased them at Ottawa prices and the Government provided transportation.

Mr. BERGERON. All these things were bought without tender ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were no tenders.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the total amount of money spent by Mr. Charleson before he went away ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quotations for wire were asked from several parties and Mr. Charleson's was the lowest. I have no memorandum showing the total amount spent. These are the estimates based on the quotations received.

Mr. EARLE. Have you any prices for the provisions purchased here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Bate & Co. rendered accounts to the department, but as Mr. Charleson has not certified these, they were forwarded to him to be certified, and we have not the accounts at present. We can get duplicates from Messrs. Bate & Co.

Mr. EARLE. I would be glad to have them, because there are some transactions with Messrs. Bate & Co. which should be discussed in this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will get duplicates from Messrs. Bate & Co.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand the Minister to say that wire was bought from W. G. Charleson without tender ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quotations were asked from three parties, and Mr. Charleson was the lowest.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the others ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Lewis Bros. of Montreal, is one, and the deputy cannot recall the name of the other.

Mr. BERGERON. Were any of these prices asked of concerns who make wire in addition to asking them from a third party ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Prices were asked from dealers, not from manufacturers.

Mr. BERGERON. W. G. Charleson keeps a retail store in Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And it is from him the Government got these goods without tenders. How much was spent in Ottawa, before the expedition left ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Deputy says the accounts which have been forwarded to Mr. Charleson to be certified, amount to between $5,000 and $6,000. That will be paid out of this $25,000. These are the accounts which have been rendered to the department, but there may be others which have not been rendered.

Mr. BERGERON. It may amount to double that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Possibly, but not likely. People who have accounts against the Government, are quick to render them.

Mr. BERGERON. Not when they have to be certified by a man in the Klondike. Does this $6,000 come out of the $13,000 advanced to Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The $13,000 was for expenses up there.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the $13,000 placed in Charleson's hands before he went away ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, in cheques, to be accounted for.

Mr. BERGERON. Without any authority from Parliament ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not admit that. I have already explained that $8,000 of that $13,000 came out of a vote of $25,000 for surveys and inspection ; $2,500 from a vote for telegraph service, and $2,500 from a vote for dredging.

Mr. FOSTER. It is absolutely necessary now to distinguish between the amounts taken from river improvements vote, and from telegraph line vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will have to await Mr. Charleson's returns before we can divide them.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot believe that the department would send out Charleson without instructions as to how much he was to spend on telegraph lines, and how much on river improvements.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, yes. The Department of Public Works will do that for Charleson.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Charleson had a letter of instructions. This was only the beginning of what, if Parliament consented, would be an extensive work. The river improvements are estimated at $50,000, in addition to the telegraph line ; but he could only do a small portion of it until Parliament made the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. What did the engineers of the department report would be the estimated cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Government, of course, is only committed to the amount placed at the disposal of Mr. Charleson. It is estimated that there would be about 550 miles of telegraph, at $225 to $250 per mile, representing a total expenditure for telegraph lines about $130,000. Besides that, there were the following works : Dam at Cariboo Crossing, estimated at $6,000 ; removal of rock, Six-Mile River, $2,000 ; removal of Rock, Thirty-mile River, $30,000 ; removal of rocks at Five-Finger Rapids, $5,000 ; removal of rocks at Rink Rapids, $1,000 ; estimated for contingencies and superintendence, $6,000—total, $30,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is that based upon ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The report of Mr. Coste.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this all based upon an exhaustive examination and report by Mr. Coste ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is from Mr. Coste's report.

Mr. FOSTER. Did Mr. Coste also report upon the line of telegraph ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not the chief purpose of his report, but he makes some reference to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the country so clear there that you can locate the telegraph line without a survey, and, if there is a survey, what is the cost of that survey ? I imagine the country there is of such a description that you do not have to make an elaborate survey before you place your telegraph lines.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the contrary, by changing the location, we expect to save distance. There is considerable room for surveying and also for the improvements in addition to what Mr. Coste did.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend kindly give the estimate of the cost of the surveys in this projected work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I am not able to divide the item of surveys from the rest. Until the accounts of these expenditures are rendered, we shall hardly be able to make the division.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that he gave Mr. Charleson $13,000 in a cheque, which was divided into three appropriations, one for surveying, one for dredging and one for telegraph lines in British Columbia. I want to know to what other appropriation he placed the amount to which he committed the Government in the purchase of $16,000 or $8,000 worth of supplies that Mr. Charleson was authorized to make before he went.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be taken out of the appropriation we are now asking.

Mr. TAYLOR. The debt was contracted and the country committed to it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose it was.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is the appropriation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no other than this. It is a fair question whether it should not be divided in the item ; but that has not been done.

Mr. EARLE. Did Mr. Charleson make any purchases on the coast ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that he purchased dynamite, and he might have purchased some other things. We have no other report as to that.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it possible that we vote money in this House for a certain purpose, and afterwards find that that money, without any authority from Parliament, is diverted to other purposes, because that is what we are having now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not admit that there has been any diversion. We claim that this is for the purpose for which Parliament appropriated it in a general vote.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not believe the Minister of Finance intends to divert any ; but the people of this country have been told, and we make it our boast on the hustings, that not a cent of the people's money is voted without our knowing for what purpose it is to be spent. But I am taking the simple fact that moneys were voted last year for dredging purposes, and that the Minister of Public Works is using that money to build a telegraph line without any authority from Parliament and without any authorization from anybody, while there were some people discussing with the Minister of Railways and Canals whether they should build a telegraph line or not at that time, and communication was going on between the Prime Minister and some companies as to whether they could depend on the good faith of the Government or not. I sympathize with the Deputy Minister of Public Works, and I would be the first to rise and vindicate him, because I know him to be an honest man. But I sympathize with him, when he has to come to this House and explain things that have been done by a man who has not the least notion of the duties of a Minister of the Crown, but will take moneys that have been appropriated for other purposes, and, without the authorization of Parliament or anybody else, will give those moneys into the hands of Mr. Charleson. He knows Mr. Charleson. Where are the vouchers to-day ? The hon. Minister knows the humiliating position in which the Government stands. It may be a small amount, but the principle is the same. The Minister of Finance finds that $13,000 has been put into the hands of Charleson by the Minister of Public Works, and he would like to put the accounts before Parliament, but he cannot do it, and I will tell him why. Because he does not know Charleson. But the Minister of Public Works knows him ; he knows his chums ; and he puts $13,000 into the hands of Charleson, and you will never hear of that money again. More than that, you will have to pay accounts for that money except what was paid to his son in Ottawa before he left. Is that the way the people's money is spent ? Yet we are asked by the hon. member for North Oxford to vote nicely and with a smile $25,000. I say that we would not deserve the position we occupy here as a criticising Opposition if we allowed the money to be voted without asking for every possible detail. Whom should we believe, of all the Ministers ? Shall we believe the Prime Minister, who has been in correspondence with a private company which propose to build that telegraph line ? Shall we believe the Minister of Railways and Canals who has been in communication with a private company to build that line ? We had the proof this afternoon, when we found that papers which had been asked for by the representatives of the people, had not come to the hands of the House. We have not been given the papers, but we have them from another source, from the people who have been swindled, who have been deceived, who have been laughed at by the Government. When honest and respectable people thought they were dealing with the authority of the Government, we find that, without the authority of Parliament, and without his colleagues knowing anything about the matter, the Minister of Public Works was having a little discussion with his friend Charleson, in which he told him. "There is a little bit of money to be made for you. I will give you $13,000 cash, which I will steal from the appropriations of Parliament voted for other purposes." You can go to your son's store here in Ottawa and buy $5,000 or $6,000 worth of goods from him before you start and then you will go on to the North-west and do something about starting that telegraph line, and after you are gone we will get Parliament to vote another $130,000." The Minister of Public Works did this job just as he did some dredging at Coteau, when he gave the work to the father-in-law of his son. I can sympathize with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who is obliged to come here and defend things which I am sure he would not do himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what time the goods left for the coast which were ordered by Mr. Charleson?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Shortly after Mr. Charleson left.

Mr. TAYLOR. When were the goods purchased from Bate & Son and from Charleson's son here in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No doubt we can get duplicates from Bate & Son and Charleson of the accounts.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood that other parties were invited to bid for the supplies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were in the case of the wire. The inquiries for the wire were not made by Mr. Charleson, but by the department before he left.

Mr. TAYLOR. At what date were inquiries sent out for these supplies?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It all occurred within a few days of the time Mr. Charleson left.

Mr. FOSTER. Between the 1st and 11th of March.

Mr. BERGERON. Without any authority even from Council.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the department bring down the date?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No doubt.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that Charleson and his party left Ottawa on the 11th and Vancouver on the 18th, and that the first time the Government dealt with the question was when they passed the Order in Council on the 13th.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter was being considered and discussed by the Minister, and the Order was passed on the 13th. Of course, the matter would have to be discussed in Council some days before the Order was passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the 13th March, the Order in Council was passed and the Government decided to go on and build a telegraph line as a Government work, and repudiate the pledge they had given to a private company chartered by this Parliament. But previous to the decision of the Government, the Minister of Public Works appointed an official and started him out and committed the country to an expenditure of $18,000 on supplies, besides giving Charleson cheques. The Government took the money out of three votes for other purposes and started Charleson on the 11th, two days before the Order in Council was passed committing the Government to that policy. If there ever was a job clearly evident it is this. Charleson went to his son's store and purchased a carload of goods at retail prices. If the Government want to purchase them for cash, they can get them for $1.80. On the wire, I am satisfied they could save from 30 cents to 50 cents a hundred by buying it from the manufacturers in Montreal. Mr. Charleson is a friend of the Minister, and his son keeps a store down town; the goods were bought from the son, with a profit to him of $100 or $200. Surely, the Government will not ask, under the circumstances, that this vote should be put through without the papers and the information that has been asked for. Our duty to the people compels us to call for this information. The idea of a Government, entrusted with the people's money, countenancing such a job as this appears to be. But the Government, when they are asked for these votes, say: We must have them; we will sit up all night, and you must vote them. No matter how we may insult you, as the Minister did—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not insult anybody.

Mr. TAYLOR. You certainly did. When my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asked a reasonable question—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend thumped the desk, and I told him that was not going to frighten anybody.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite they will not get their Estimates through in that way. They are not going to bulldoze the Opposition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And we are not going to let the Opposition bulldoze us.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Opposition have treated you courteously, and will not be bulldozed. These gentlemen began declaring that they would sit here all night—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Would it not be better if neither of us were to try bulldozing?

Mr. FOSTER. But it came from the other side first.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Get down to business.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) asks us to get down to business, and I am free to say that if the estimates were in his hands we should get through sooner.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not get through very well when he had estimates to put through.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think he did pretty well. He had no job such as this to defend. I think this is the worst that has come before the House this session. The papers brought before the House by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) included a letter written by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, declaring that he would render all assistance to these people to build their line—and you can read a meaning between the lines of these letters written by the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Public Works. And now the Government repudiates these letters and take up this enterprise as a public work, so that it will cost the country two or three times what it would have cost if built by private enterprise. It will cost the country ten times for interest what it would cost to pay a private company for telegrams. Of course the great point was to give Mr. Charleson and a lot of hungry heelers a job to go into that country as prospectors, all expenses and wages paid, and every opportunity to loot the mines of that country. The Government tried to give away that whole country last session. This is just as bad a job, but on a smaller scale. Talk about this being a business Government, I do not see any evidence of good business management in this.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not carried; my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) has a good deal to say. I think it must be apparent to the hon. Minister that we shall make more progress by leaving this item over until we can get further information required about it, than we can by sitting here all night.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the House, if it were here, would come to the conclusion, as the few who are here, I think must have already come to the conclusion, that the suggestion I made some time ago was a fair and wise one. Surely the Government cannot think it fair that a question such as this should be decided at this time of the morning, and before this small remnant of the Committee of Supply. There is more in this than a mere $25,000. We are really deciding upon a very important question, that is, whether it is better for the Government to build this line or allow it to be built by private parties, by a telegraph company. I have no hesitation in saying that I am entirely opposed to the Government undertaking this work at present, a work which will not only be an expense now, but will involve an annual expense for years to come.

Mr. GIBSON. Will not the Government get their receipts from the line?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, I will go on with my argument. I am not speaking aside from the question; I am speaking directly to the question and to earnest, and I believe honest business men who are here.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Always except the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin). It is a fair question for debate whether this should be undertaken by the Government or left, as most of the telegraph lines are left for private corporations to build. In the first place, a private corporation finds its own money, asks no subsidy, involves no expense to the Government. The Government has control, and, when it gives a franchise, can stipulate a low rate for Government messages, because they are giving a valuable franchise. It would not be too much to ask any company to which we give a privilege of that kind, to send Government telegrams free of expense, and you would find telegraph companies to admit that. It is a valuable franchise, and the Government would have a right to put a fair condition with reference to its own messages. Now, there are two kinds of votes that are taken by the Minister of Public Works with reference to telegraph lines. On page 54 there is a vote for constructing an alternative line connecting Cape Beale with Victoria, by extending the French Creek-Alberni line southwardly to the south-west coast of Vancouver Island, $4,600. That was in last year's estimates; and there is an item for the same in the present Estimates. There is also one to connect Nicola Lake with the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraph system, $3,000. Here is a plain expression of Parliament, it is for building a telegraph line, not for maintaining it. My hon. friend knows that he dare not stand up here as Minister and say that he would be justified in taking that $3,000 and using it for constructing a telegraph line between Tagish and Lake Bennett. Now, you leave those Public Works appropriations, and come on page 79 to the appropriations for a totally different purpose. These appropriations are for the operation of works already built, and not for the building of new works. Such an appropriation is the $12,000 for the maintenance and operation of telegraph lines already built in British Columbia. For instance, it reads: "Collection of Revenues—Telegraph lines, British Columbia, $12,000." Below the details are given, $9,065 are appropriated for operating the telegraph lines which are already built. This amount of $9,065 is for operating these lines, and the hon. gentleman knows that he has no authority to take a single dollar of that money and divert it from the operating of the lines already built in British Columbia. $2,935 is appropriated for repairs and staff and this makes up the $12,000. What is the doctrine that the hon. Minister of Finance and the Government lay down? When Parliament distinguishes between two sets of appropriation, the one amount to build telegraph lines in British Columbia, the other to operate lines already built and specifically states its ground for each, my hon. friend lays down the doctrine to this House that you can divert this money which was voted by Parliament for the staff and operation of the telegraph lines in British Columbia, and that you can build new telegraph lines with it in British Columbia and in the Yukon district. That is a doctrine which I do not believe will be accepted by this House. The hon. Minister of Finance is teaching us the lesson that after the Government come down and get their appropriations which are specifically entered under their several heads for specific purposes as soon as Parliament is dissolved the Government can go to work and turn this vote and that vote and another and all these votes from the purpose for which they were appropriated by Parliament and use them for different purposes. This is the doctrine that is laid down absolutely and in cold blood by the hon. Minister of Finance and the Government, a doctrine which would be scouted in the British House of Commons, a doctrine which no Minister there would think of propounding, which the hon. gentleman knows is not only wrong but is absolutely vicious. He is not only violating the sanction of parliamentary appropriation, misusing money, involving a malversation of public funds, but he is teaching to the civil servants and the spending officials in this country that a vote does not mean anything and that a pledge to Parliament is nothing. The difficulty of the Finance Department from confederation up has been to get officials to pay more scrupulous regard to parliamentary appropriations. The Finance Minister rises now and teaches these officials the vicious and corrupt lesson that they need not be careful at all as to the parliamentary purposes of the appropriations, but that they can divert money from the appropriations and spend it in any channel. It is a trick that argues cleverness and they have a perfect right to do it with the example of their own Ministers and the Government to back them up. How long can you go on that principle without a total demoralization of the whole principle of expenditure and the whole service of

Mr. FOSTER.

Canada. Not one single dollar of money ought to be taken, or can be taken, unless it is illegally and wrongfully taken by the Government, or the Minister, for any other purpose than that for which Parliament has appropriated it. When Parliament appropriated $12,000 to operate lines of telegraph in British Columbia did it mean that $6,000 or $3,000 or $2,000 was to be taken to build telegraph lines in the Yukon? It never meant that. It is a wrenching not only of the meaning of the appropriation, but of the very basis of the principle of appropriation and of expenditure in this country. Now, let me take another example. The dredging vote for British Columbia, was voted for dredging in British Columbia, and when it was voted it was explained in answer to questions that were put across the House, where this dredging was to be done. Now the hon. Minister of Finance says that it is good doctrine and a proper thing to do, when they are in a difficulty and want to do something that they have no authority from Parliament to do, to take a portion of that dredging vote and expend it to do dredging in the Yukon territory. Surely, when they come to think about it, Ministers and Governments and members of Parliament, entirely apart from party, are not going to endorse a course of action of that kind. Year after year we have taken a vote of from $20,000 to $30,000 for surveys and inspections in the Public Works Department. Take the whole course of expenditure of that vote for the last twenty years. Ever since I have been in Parliament it has been there for one single purpose and it has not been taken for construction purposes. What is it for? Some constituency of some hon. member wants a public building or public work. The public Works Department says: We have no appropriation for it, but we will make a survey of the river, or the harbour and we will find out whether it is feasible and what the cost will be. That vote has never been taken for the purposes of constructing telegraph lines or making river improvements anywhere. That is now what is being done. The principle is absolutely and entirely a principle which cannot be denied and when the hon. Minister of Finance and the Government do utter violence to that principle in that way, they are doing an illegal and wrongful thing. They are doing just the same as if they were taking the money out of the treasury which had been appropriated for a special purpose and had used it for purposes which they had never explained to Parliament and which were never authorized by Parliament. These are the three votes out of which the Minister has taken an allocation of $13,000, and gone to work building telegraph lines and improving rivers in the Yukon District. They had no appropriation for that purpose, which means that they never got the consent of Parliament for a dollar for that work. Without authorization, without any discussion in this House, without a dollar of money appropriated, they are powerless to do the work except it is so urgent that it comes under the clause for a Governor General's warrant. The Government entered upon this decision on the 13th of March, just three days before this House met, and without a vote of Parliament, and without a Governor General's warrant, they wrenched the money from an appropriation for an entirely different purpose, and they set this work into operation. Last year they could have got a vote from the House, or else they could have waited to get a vote this year. They have violated the principle of appropriation, and they have gone further and violated the principle of expenditure, where Parliament expresses its will as to what it wants done with the money it entrusts to the Government to spend for it. If this Parliament approves of it, it takes the onus of approving of a thing which no thoughtful man unbiassed by party, and which no constitutional Government on British principles would for a single moment entertain. That point has to be made stronger in a full House, and that is why I assure the Minister (Mr. Fielding) that he is not wise in pressing this matter now. First, there is the question whether the Government shall do this work, or whether it shall be done by a private corporation; then, there is the question of spending this money without authority, and then there is the question of wrenching money from an appropriation which it was never intended by Parliament should be devoted to this work. These questions must all be discussed. And, how did the Government go about the work? They took a man named Charleson who is in the employ of the department. I will not discuss Mr. Charleson's antecedents, but, at all events, he is a sub-officer in the department, and I believe he has nothing of the technical engineering knowledge which one would think would be necessary for such an occupation. The Government have evidently given him some powers which has entirely throttled the department here for the time being, and, with reference to which Parliament is not informed. Before the Minister presses this vote to a conclusion, he ought to bring down the instructions which were given to Mr. Charleson, and under which Mr. Charleson is expending a large amount of the unvoted money of this country; worse than that, of the money filched from the purposes for which it was voted by this House. We have a right to know how much of this money is going to river improvements, and how much to telegraph building. They have a purchasing agent named Breton in the Public Works Department, and it transpires now that he is not the man who purchased the supplies. Charleson is given the full power of purchasing his supplies, and he does it without tender and without contract of any kind. A large proportion of these supplies are bought from his son, who conducts a retail establishment in Ottawa, and I do not know whether it is true or not, but I know it is said that Mr. Charleson, senior, has an interest in that business of Mr. Charleson, junior. The most vicious principle is introduced, that you not only discard tender and contract, but you give to a gentleman whose son runs a retail store the permission to purchase supplies from his son by retail. All this is wrong. Suppose that this Parliament decided that the Government was not to proceed with that telegraph as a Government work. Who would pay for these supplies? The question is asked only to show what a vicious principle it is for the Government, without authorization, to incur bills on the faith that by and by this House will pass a vote for them amounting in all to $160,000. The grave questions which are to be settled in this connection, make it fair to ask that this vote shall not be pressed to a conclusion at this hour in the morning. I do not ask to have business retarded—not at all. There are dozens of items in the supplementary Estimates which we can go on with, which are not of this importance, and which do not involve these large questions. What I did was simply to say that the Minister of Finance would better deal with the question itself and get on better with business, if he would allow this item to stand, and go on with other items which are not so large in regard to the principles involved.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman think he could enforce his view any more clearly or strongly than he has done now?

Mr. FOSTER. I think I could enforce my view in a full House. I do not think that four o'clock in the morning is the best time for doing it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Did the hon. gentleman not enforce his view in a full House this afternoon?

Mr. FOSTER. That was quite a different question. It was not the initial question. When you take a vote for a telegraph line, you make it impossible for the House to debate whether they shall make a Government work of it or leave it to a private corporation; and that is the question which I do not think ought to be forced at this hour of the morning. I am willing to stay here just as long as hon. gentlemen wish and debate these questions; but I simply state that as a fair thing to be done. Before this vote is passed, we ought certainly to see the instructions that have been given to Mr. Charleson, and the division between the amount for river improvements and the amount for surveys and telegraph lines. After that, if hon. gentlemen want to take up other items of the Estimates, I am at their service. Though it hurts me as well as others to do that, still I am willing to do it.

Mr. McMULLEN. One would suppose, to listen to the hon. gentleman, that the Government never constructed telegraph lines in the North-west before, but left them to private companies. Years ago we constructed extensive telegraph lines in the North-west as Government works.

Mr. FOSTER. We have built a Government railway, the Intercolonial; but that does not settle the argument, or imply that the Government shall undertake to build 500 miles or more railway without asking the consent of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is quite true, but the hon. gentleman says that this line ought to be constructed by a company. Why change at this particular juncture the policy that has been followed for the last twenty years? My hon. friend will admit, and I think the entire Dominion will admit, that it was an absolute necessity in the interest of trade that we should have telegraphic communication with the Yukon district as rapidly as possible; and the Government engaged a company that was supposed to be in a position to build that line; but after four months, the company had literally done nothing, and the Government undertook the construction of the line themselves. Now, the ex-Minister of Finance has contended that it is wrong to employ Mr. Charleson, and alleges that the father bought supplies from his son. Now, what is the fact? The Deputy Minister of Public Works states that prices were asked for the wire that was supplied, and that the lowest price was quoted by an American firm. Whether it was got through Charleson of Ottawa, a son, or other relative of this man, we do not care. The Government got the wire at the lowest price quoted by any firm in Canada, England or the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have got the word of the Deputy Minister of Public Works that such is the fact.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not care whether the Minister of Public Works states it or not, he could have got it cheaper.

Mr. FOSTER. He only asked three people.

Mr. McMULLEN. He got it at the lowest price. My hon. friend would also lead us to suppose that Mr. Charleson bought a large quantity of supplies from his son in Ottawa. How much was bought? Not over $40 worth altogether—12 kegs of nails; and there was not much chance of boodle in that. The hon. gentleman has tried to make a mountain out of a mole hill. I do not say that the Government should not see that appropriations are made for carrying out public works; but there are exceptions to all rules. Here was a pressing emergency for the immediate construction of a telegraph line to the Yukon district, and the people of this country will endorse the action of the Government in trying to provide that communication at the earliest possible moment. The wire was bought on the best of terms and a small supply of other goods not amounting to $40, in which there was no room for any boodling.

Mr. BERGERON. It was not $40 but $13,000 that was put in the hands of Mr. Charleson to spend.

Mr. McMULLEN. That will be accounted for, and if not properly accounted for, then will be the proper time to take action.

Mr. BERGERON. Parliament never authorized this in any shape or form. Even if the Government could say: True, we spent this money without the authority of Parliament, but we had to do it, and here are the vouchers, and everything was had at the cheapest rate by tender. But we have not the accounts, and the hon. gentleman himself was much more exacting when on this side, and would not allow the Government to get a cent of public money without knowing where it was to be expended.

Mr. EDWARDS. How is that to be found out at this moment?

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask the Minister of Finance to leave that item stand until we have got the information we are entitled to.

Mr. EDWARDS. It would take months.

Mr. BERGERON. In his own business would the hon. gentleman pay out $25,000 without knowing where it was going. Where would those fine works be at Rockland if he did business on that principle?

Mr. EDWARDS. It is not a parallel case at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course not. Spending Edward's money and the public money is not the same thing. I would ask the Minister of Finance to let the item stand until we get the information the House is entitled to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is asking us to wait two or three months until Mr. Charleson returns from the Yukon and we can get a full statement from him. This expenditure is of a character which must be entrusted to some person. The hon. gentleman thinks that Mr. Charleson is not a proper person, but what is the sense of postponing the vote. All the information which can be had, the Deputy Minister says he has given.

Mr. FOSTER. The letter of instructions ought to be here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The instructions must be to a large extent indefinite—to lay a telegraph line to an unknown country.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman state now how the department have reached the conclusion that $25,000 are needed. He will not contend that it is unreasonable for us to expect that the department should be in possession of sufficient information to guide him in fixing the sum to be expended. And that discussion, as my hon. friend sees, has been entirely fruitless. Nobody seems able to give us the information as to the sum that was necessary. I do not mean that a definite fixed sum should be named, but it should be given within some limit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. From the nature of the vote the amount could not be fixed or definite. The Minister of Public Works could not tell how many miles of telegraph line could be built or how much dredging could be done up to the 1st of July. This money is to pay for work now actually going on. The Minister now, under the advice of his officers, must make the best rough estimate he can, but nothing definite can be known until the work is done. If I thought there is any information that could be brought down at a subsequent time that cannot be brought down now, I would agree to the request. But I know it cannot be done, so what is the use. We have had this long sitting and have passed just three items—$7,000 in all.

Mr. BERGERON. But this $25,000 is only the commencement—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But we must bring down another amount in the Supplementary Estimates for next year, and there will be further opportunities for discussing it.

Mr. BERGERON. But the hon. Minister of Finance has put the case as clearly as possible. We are starting on a large scale and do not know where we are going. We are asked to vote $25,000 without any data from the engineer or anybody. The Minister of Public Works has given $13,000 to Mr. Charleson, a man—I am prepared to say it, if I alone express the opinion—in whom I have no confidence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But the hon. Minister of Public Works has confidence in him.

Mr. BERGERON. That amounts to nothing with me, for I have no confidence in the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) were in office the present Minister of Public Works would have no confidence in him.

Mr. BERGERON. But I would not ask for $25,000 if I could not explain what it was for.

Mr. EDWARDS. But if you could not explain?

Mr. BERGERON. If I were in office I would not dare to come before the Parliament of Canada without being able to explain all about the money I wanted. This $25,000, we are told, is the commencement of some $160,000. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is an old parliamentarian, knows that if we accept this we accept the principle.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not ask you to accept it; you can put yourself on record against it.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman means that we can divide the House. But we know what that means—that we shall be voted down by sixty majority. Hon. gentlemen opposite will vote anything. My hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) will vote $25,000 of the public money without knowing where it goes, but he could not do it in his own concern. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to have a short memory. We remember how my hon. friend from North Wellington kept us here for 48 hours over a vote of $16,000 to build a post office at La Prairie. It may have been a bad vote, but every detail from the first stone of the foundation to the last nail in the roof was before the House. And here we are asked to vote almost double that as the beginning of a much greater expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. And the money has already been spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, and without the authority of Parliament. And we have heard correspondence this afternoon that indicates that the Minister of Public Works, without consulting his colleagues, has taken money from different appropriations, a thing he had no right to do, cheating and deceiving the Auditor General, and devoting that money to a telegraph line, concerning the beginning of which we know a little, and concerning the end of which we know nothing. And the hon. Minister of Public Works puts $13,000 in the hands of whom? An engineer? No, Mr. Charleson is not an engineer. A man who knows about building telegraph lines? No. A man who, in Quebec, where he is known, has not the confidence of anybody; an election heeler; a man who is good in election contracts to go around bribing people; a very intelligent man, but one who does not carry the confidence of the people among whom he is known. Where has that money gone? My hon. friend from North Wellington said that only $40 of it was spent in Ottawa. Where is the rest? And yet my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies), a man of fairness, an honest man, asks us to vote this large amount without further information. I say this is not treating the representatives of the people as they should be treated. And this is done by a Liberal party that claims to be a part of the world-wide Liberal party which plumes itself of having won and defended and maintained the rights of the people. It seems to me the proposition I made is a fair one, and I repeat it—to leave this item over and go on with other business.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Are you opposed to building a telegraph line to the Yukon?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows that that is not the question. We are here to see that things are done in a parliamentary way. Why did not the Minister of Public Works say last year that it was to build a telegraph line from such and such a place?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister of Public Works at that time hoped that the work would be done by private enterprise, and the Government favoured that, and it was not until it became apparent that private enterprise was not going to carry out the work, and that the people of the Yukon were to be left without telegraphic communication for another year, that the Government determined to grapple with this question and put it through; and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) will take the responsibility of attempting to defeat this enterprise. The hon. member for Victoria is more responsible, and his constituents will know it, than any other man in this Dominion for this attempt to thwart the carrying out of that telegraphic communication.

Mr. PRIOR. Have I said one word in regard to this since we went into Supply?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know whether you said anything or not. What has the hon. gentleman been doing while sitting here all night? He is an ex-member of the Government, a leading man of the Opposition, and is he not here among the leaders of the small band who are preventing this vote going through?

Mr. PRIOR. Have I stopped it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What have you been doing here all night?

Mr. PRIOR. Sitting here, like the men behind you.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are you in favour of it?

Mr. PRIOR. No, I am not.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. WALLACE. I am ready to tell the Minister of Customs that I am opposed to this item, and I am opposed to the corrupt principle involved in it. I was a member of the Committee on Railways and Canals that gave the two charters and approved of the construction of that line when the Minister of Customs was not there. I have endorsed the principle of opening up our country in every proper way, but does that mean that I am to endorse every scheme of plunder and all illegal acts that the Government has committed? There is a desire for plunder, and the public mind is being filled with the idea that there are men in that Government, and behind that Government, whose aim and object it is to plunder the people of this country.

Mr. FROST. Give the names of the men behind the Government who want to plunder the country.

Mr. WALLACE. Their name is legion. Does not the member for North Leeds know that there is scarcely one of his colleagues that is not looking for an office of some kind?

Mr. FROST. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has there been any distributions of timber limits?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know that the Government has any timber limits.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was none left.

Mr. WALLACE. But I know there has been a distribution of mining claims that are worth tens of thousands of dollars, and dredging river claims. I know that a prostitute in the Yukon district was given a mining claim for a $10 or $20 deposit, and sold it out for $60,000, and the Government think that is a splendid transaction.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do you speak from personal knowledge?

Mr. WALLACE. I am telling what the records have disclosed in Parliament, and the hon. member will find still further disclosures before many days are past. I say that the country is watching the actions of these hon. gentlemen, men who have been the enemies of this country, men who are trying to smash confederation, the repealers of the union, the men who denounced confederation. They have now got into the citadel, and what are they doing? They are insidiously attempting to break up the fabric of confederation, now that they are inside, the same as they did when they were outside. They are also attempting to feather their own nests. We know that, when we see Ministers of the Crown who were bankrupt the day before they came into the Government, and who are to-day rolling in wealth and luxury. I would like the hon. Minister or the lynx-eyed watchman who was on this side of the House, the hon. member for North Wellington, who has shut his eyes to all the iniquities, because he is looking for a position himself—

Mr. McMULLEN. That is not true.

Mr. BERGERON. That is unparliamentary.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I will withdraw the statement, but it is certainly altogether aside from the truth.

Mr. WALLACE. What are the principal features of this proposition? They require some consideration. The important question is: What is to be the policy of the Government? Is it to be the policy of the Government to start in building telegraph lines? The hon. member for North Wellington said that this was the old policy of the Government, that for the last twenty years they had been building telegraph lines all over the country. I beg to differ with him. The Government of Mr. Mackenzie when they were undertaking, as a Government, to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, built telegraph lines in advance of the railway which was quite consistent, as it was necessary that they should build these lines, but since the time of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway passed out of the Government the Government has ceased not absolutely to construct telegraph lines, but has practically ceased from the construction of these lines. The line to Battleford was built in advance of the railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the Canadian Pacific Railway run from Calgary to Edmonton?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether that is the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WALLACE. That is a baby question; any child ten years old knows that it is not the main line.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend says that they only built telegraph lines for the Canadian Pacific Railway. They built a line from Calgary to Edmonton before the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway was thought of.

Mr. WALLACE. I said nothing of the kind. I said that the Government at the time they were undertaking to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, built telegraph lines in advance of it. They built a telegraph line to Battleford intending that the railway should run to Battleford. The telegraph line was built, but the railway is not built this day to Battleford.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They built a line all the way down towards Labrador.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not a telegraph line in ordinary acceptation of the term. It is a line for the protection of vessels in connection with navigation, in connection with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and not a commercial telegraph line.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are you opposed to the opening of telegraphic communication with the Yukon?

Mr. WALLACE. I say no, I am not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the question involved here.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the question involved here.

Mr. WALLACE. The question is what is to be the policy of the Government? Are they going into the construction of telegraph lines as a commercial undertaking? Have they got a single line in Canada to-day for that purpose?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Where.

Mr. DAVIS. The one running to Battleford. It does not pay for the "grease of the wheels." I mentioned that line that had been constructed in advance of the railway twenty years ago.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was constructed in 1880. What is the use of talking about it. That is the line from Battleford to Edmonton.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not speaking of the line from Battleford to Edmonton.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, the hon. gentleman spoke of a line built from Battleford to Edmonton.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, would you kindly exercise your power and prevent these continued interruptions. This is an attempt to prevent free discussion in this House. I do not think we will permit that. The policy of the Government has not been declared. They have not come before this House to say whether they are going into the business of constructing a telegraph line from somewhere in American territory and running it into Canadian territory. They did not come before us and say: We are going to sink a cable from our northern possessions in the Yukon down to Victoria, or some point on Vancouver Island. They did not come and state their policy, but they sent a man up there without an Order in Council, without the instruction of the Government. Somebody sends him. Who was it? The master of the situation. The man who has left to-day for Europe,—the hon. Minister of Public Works. Before an Order in Council is passed, before a single particle of authority was given by the Government, the expedition is organized, supplies are purchased every preparation is made and they start on their journey on the 11th of March. An Order in Council is passed two days later, and Parliament meets three days later, and there is not a word to Parliament about it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it is in the Governor General's speech.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, I did not read it, and I would like to see it. The Governor General's speech was delivered on the 16th of March, and anyway this expedition started out without the authority of Parliament.

Mr. PRIOR. The Governor General's speech was after they made up their minds to do the work.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is the information we have in the Governor General's speech :

It has been thought expedient in the public interest to authorize the construction of a line of telegraph for the purpose of maintaining speedy communication with the people of these distant territories.

It does not say where this line is to commence or where it is to end, or the means by which this communication is to be given. Even to-day we are vouchsafed no information as to the policy the Government will pursue in respect to it. I should think these gentlemen on the Treasury benches would blush at the correspondence read this afternoon by our hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), and at the violated pledges made by a Minister to the Northern Telegraph Company. The Government tell us now that their object is to give speedy telegraph communication with Dawson, but I do not know that sending out a man with $13,000 is the way to build a telegraph line very speedily. We find that this man Charleson is sent out with nine or ten men, and it is stated that Charleson never built a mile of telegraph line in his lifetime. Can any Minister inform us as to that.

The ordinary business rule to be followed, when you have a certain work to be done, is to give it to a man who understands that work. But this Government, when they want any dredging done, go to a newspaper man in the one case and a tailor in another. They get any and every sort of men to do their work without regard at all to their qualifications, but solely from some political motive. In this case the Government did not even take the precaution of asking Parliament to vote the money, but they took the money out of the appropriations for another purpose altogether, and handed it over to Mr. Charleson to be spent by him at his sweet will and pleasure, and when we ask for some details, we are told that the whole thing was on a grandly indefinite scale and that it is utterly absurd to expect any information whatever. The whole history of this business is very peculiar. We find the Minister of Railways and Canals pledging his faith and the faith of the Government to a private company which had obtained a charter for this work. But after that company had been organized and had made its contracts for the material and was prepared to push the work speedily through, the Minister of Public Works decided to take a hand in the enterprise and he quietly brushed the Minister of Railways aside and undertook to do the whole business between himself and Mr. Charleson. Evidently there is a higher power in the Cabinet than the Minister of Railways and Canals or the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Customs, for I cannot believe that the Minister of Customs, of all men, would be a party to such a scheme, such a deliberate violation of the pledge of the Government, and of the unwritten law of the country, that when we give a company a charter to do a certain work we should give that company a fair chance to perform the work. The Minister of Public Works, however, organized his scheme, equipped Mr. Charleson, furnished him with money to buy supplies, and then, after the money had been spent, gets an Order in Council to authorize its expenditure.

The country will look with alarm upon the record of these transactions in Parliament. They will come to the conclusion that the Government are ignoring Parliament, and showing their utter contempt for their supporters sitting behind them, and these hon. gentlemen are sinking their individuality and their freedom, because they are looking out for offices for themselves and quartering their relatives on the country. The Government know that they do not need to consult these gentlemen. The Minister of Public Works on the 13th of March got his Order in Council passed. He came into Council, and he had an appropriation to get. I can imagine the amazement of his colleagues when he told them that he proposed the construction of this telegraph line; and when they objected and said, "We do not want to engage in the construction of telegraph lines, and Canada has not a dollar to appropriate for that purpose," the Minister of Public Works swept away these objections in a moment by saying, "I have settled the whole matter already; the expedition have gone out under the charge of Mr. Charleson; they reached Winnipeg two days ago, and I now want the Order passed." I would like to see what convinced the members of the Government. I would like to see the instructions given to Mr. Charleson. Were they go-as-you-please instructions? "You start for the Yukon, and all you have to do is to build telegraphs or do anything else you like; but be sure to get a few good mining claims for the boys." I presume that was the instructions that carried conviction to the Ministers. The Minister of Finance complained a while ago that the instructions had not been asked for. Would it be considered an impertinence if I were now to repeat the question in the humblest way, what were Mr. Charleson's instructions?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will you wait for the answer ?

Mr. WALLACE. I will sit down and wait till the document is read.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Sit down, then. The hon. member for York, N.B., in speaking a little while ago covered considerable ground ; and if I did not reply to my hon. friend, it was only because he repeated what had already been said over and over again. The hon. member for Beauharnois, at great length, contended that hon. gentlemen opposite had demanded information, and could not get a particle of information as to where this telegraph line began or ended, or anything else. All that was a freak of the hon. gentleman's imagination. I think I can say that every fair question that has been asked on this subject during the whole night has been answered, and that the only information that was not produced and that could not be produced at the moment was the letter of instructions to Mr. Charleson. I admitted the request for those instructions to be a proper request, although I did not think it could be obtained at the moment ; but one of the officials was sent to the department and got the document, which I have and will read ; and if hon. gentlemen will compare the terms of the instructions with the imaginings which have been indulged in as to their character, they will find the comparison interesting. I may say that the Minister reported to Council on this subject on the 3rd of March, the matter was discussed repeatedly, and the Order in Council was not actually signed till the 13th. This letter, which is signed by Mr. Gobeil, the Deputy Minister, by direction of the Minister, is dated the 10th of March, and is addressed to Mr. Charleson. It is as follows :—

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, March 10th, 1899.

Sir,—The hon. the Minister, having decided upon the construction of a telegraph line to connect with Dawson City, in the Yukon district, and the improvement of the waterways now being used as a route to reach the same city, has directed me to inform you that he has been pleased to place you in charge of the party which is to proceed immediately to undertake the construction of the said telegraph line and execute the improvements recommended to be made on the rivers, &c., forming the water route above referred to.

The report made by the hon. the Minister to the hon. the Privy Council, a copy of which is hereto annexed, describes at some length the steps to be taken in order to achieve the object sought by the Government, and you may consider the report in question as being part and parcel of the instructions sent to you, and utilize the same for your guidance.

In a concise way, the works which you are hereby instructed to undertake and carry to completion, may be summarized under the following heads :—

1st. The construction of a telegraph line from a point on the Canadian territory at the head of Lake Bennett, following the shores of that lake and following the lakes and rivers up to Dawson City.

2nd. The examination for a telegraph line connecting at a point on Lake Bennett, to be selected by you, and reaching through the Atlin district, to the head of Teslin Lake, then going southwards to Telegraph Creek to Hazelton, and connecting with the Government telegraph line at Quesnelle.

3rd. The improvement of the rivers enumerated in the annexed report, and also in the report of the chief engineer of Public Works, a copy of which I have also annexed to the present instructions.

4th. The construction at Dawson City of buildings that may be decided upon as absolutely necessary, after consultation with Mr. Ogilvie, the administrator of the Yukon territory.

5th. The examination, while the line of telegraph is being constructed, of the country lying alongside the water route to Dawson City, with a view to the possibility of constructing a road through that section.

For the purpose of carrying on the works contemplated, the following officers have been detailed to accompany you to assist you in having the works performed, viz. :

For the works to be done in the rivers—Mr. J. C. Taché, an assistant engineer of the department here, with a salary at the rate of $2,800 per year, with, as his assistant, Mr. Aurélien Boyer, at a salary of $150 per month.

For the construction of the telegraph line—Mr. J. F. Richardson, hitherto connected with the Canadian Pacific Telegraph offices, at the rate of $2,500 per year.

The gentlemen above named have been instructed to report to you in order that you may give them the necessary instructions, and they will receive from you from the time of their departure, to-morrow, until such time as they will return after the completion of the work, all the instructions of any nature whatsoever concerning their personal movements, the work to be performed, the materials to be purchased and the men to be engaged, in fact all the instructions which it will be necessary for them to receive.

They will not be allowed, unless previously authorized by you on a proper requisition to purchase any materials, engage any men, fix any salaries, determine any route to be followed or work to be performed, and any expenditure incurred by them under your authority will have to be supported by proper vouchers, which will be duly transmitted to you, certified by you, and, in turn, transmitted to this department to be used as vouchers for the expenditure so made.

By direction of the hon. the Minister, letters of introduction, which are herein inclosed, have been obtained from the hon. the Minister of the Interior to Mr. William Ogilvie, administrator of the Yukon, from the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence to the officer commanding the military contingent in the district, and from the controller of the North-west Mounted Police to the officers commanding the various posts on the route, and those various officials will be expected to render you all the services and give you all the co-operation which you will require for the performance of the work entrusted to you.

For the improvement of the rivers, it is suggested that the engineer, Mr. Taché, will first begin his operations on the Thirty-Mile River, then on the Five-Finger and Rink Rapids, and later on on the Six-Mile River and at Caribou Crossing on Lake Bennett.

For that purpose you will have to provide the necessary dynamite for blasting the rocks that have to be removed, as well as the tools required for the removing of the pieces of rock after blasting.

As there is also a wing-dam to be constructed at Caribou Crossing, it will be necessary that Mr. Taché be equipped with the requisite tools for manufacturing the timber required, should there not be, as perhaps probable, any lumber mills in the vicinity.

While these works shall be in course of execution, and well taken in hand by trustworthy persons, under the guidance of the engineer, it will be advisable for you to direct Mr. Taché, during the course of the summer to examine with attention the other portion of the lakes and rivers where no work is now ordered to be performed, in order that we may ascertain what additional work may be required and may have to be preformed either during next summer or during the succeeding summer season.

As regards the telegraphic construction, as it is desirable that sections of the line be put in operation as soon as practicable after the construction of the pole and wire line, you will please arrange for the necessary material to be forwarded at once, in order that as soon as a stretch of 35 or 45 miles is completed, the same can be operated for the convenience of the travellers and of the Government service on the route of the line. It might also be advisable, should it be found by you that the authorities of the White Pass Railway will not reach the head of Lake Bennett early this season, that you should construct a line of telegraph south-west-erly from the head of Lake Bennett, either to connect with the telegraph service of the railway, at its present terminus, or at Skagway itself, the construction on American territory having been arranged in 1897, as you will see by the annexed correspondence which took place between the Colonial Office in England and the Government of Canada.

As regards the tariff to be fixed for the use of the telegraph line, it has been, after discussion with the superintendent of the telegraph service, decided to fix it on the basis of 50 cents for 100 miles of telegraph for 10 words, and a proportionate rate for the shorter sections, or say, a rate of $2.75 from Dawson to the foot of Lake Bennett and 15 cents per word additional.

This is a point, however, upon which you may have a consultation with Mr. Ogilvie and his Council, as soon as there is sufficient length of line constructed to bring up the question of tariff.

It is the desire of the hon. the Minister that you should proceed to Dawson City as directly as possible, taking, however, the time to arrange for your men, provisions, &c., at Vancouver and Skagway. See at the latter place about arranging for either and interchange of telegraphic messages with the White Pass Company or for establishing our own line to Skagway; arrange there or at Skagway for the transportation of the materials, men, &c.; see that your telegraph superintendent, Mr. Richardson, will be in condition, with the necessary number of men, to begin work within the least possible time at the head of Bennett; see also that engineer is set to work on the Thirty-Mile River, and then proceed on to Dawson.

This course which is mapped out, will naturally be subject to variations which circumstances may appeal to you to make as you may proceed on your journey.

I have been instructed to place in your hands on your departure the sum of $15,000, which will be handed to you by the accountant in several cheques of various amounts, and whatever portion of the same will remain in your hands when reaching Dawson, you will kindly deposit in the Bank of Commerce, now in operation in that place.

Mr. FIELDING.

That is to say after a vote has been given.

Mr. BERGERON. No, that is not it. It means that he can draw for more money whenever he wants it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It means that after the vote has been given money will be provided. That is the understanding in the department and no other arrangement has been made.

The hon. the Minister will arrange that you will be enabled to draw on the branch of the Bank of Commerce at Dawson after the funds now given to you shall have been expended, such further sums as may, from time to time, be required for the performance of the works herein outlined.

It is the desire of the hon. Minister that you should, during the course of your journey to Dawson, as often as practicable, keep the department informed of the progress of your journey and of the work, and that you will use all your energy in having completed, before the season of navigation, the works on the rivers which must be performed on the ice, and have the others completed as soon as possible afterwards.

As for the telegraph line from Bennett to Dawson, communication is expected to be obtained by wire between Dawson and Skagway no later than the beginning of November next, and, if possible, earlier.

Of course, the nature of the work you have to perform is, of a necessity, only outlined in these instructions. It would be idle to go into special details, a great deal of the country to be travelled over being still unexplored, but the hon. the Minister relies on your past experience to see that advantage be taken of everything to ensure the work being well carried out.

If possible, your vouchers for the materials, purchases, salaries of men, &c., &c., should be despatched to headquarters here at least every two or three months, and your reports oftener, if at all practicable.

You will kindly instruct the officials detailed to accompany you on this work that they are not to engage, while under the service of the department, in any speculations, purchase of mining property, mining rights, timber limits, &c., &c., and you will notify them that they will be subject to immediate dismissal from the service of the department if they contravene this order.

I would also advise that you would instruct them that no interviews are to be granted by them to newspaper representatives in reference to the details of the work to be performed by them, or giving any information whatsoever concerning the nature of the duties that they are now entrusted with.

Your salary, as chief of this expedition under the present instructions, will be $4,000 per year.

I have only now, on behalf of the department, to wish you to get safely through the work which you have been entrusted with, and hope that we will all have reason to congratulate ourselves upon the performance of the same.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. GOBEIL,

Deputy Minister.

J. B. Charleson, Esq.,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa.

I beg to say that I regard that as a very admirable letter of instruction, carrying out everything that any member of this House could desire.

Mr. FOSTER. The letter is a long one and most important one and its production now shows how important it was that we should have had it when we commenced to discuss this vote. The basis of the operation is laid down in it. The Minister himself did not know it—of course he could not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I answered every question asked me.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister did not know the plan of operations and could not be expected to, as it is not in his department. But if he had brought that letter—and the department should have furnished him with it—early in the discussion, we should have had much more information than we have been able to go upon. I am not unreasonable in asking for information. When a Minister is asked for information he should bring it down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This information was asked for late in the night.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked for it early. "Hansard" will show that. There is one other piece of information that has been promised by the Minister—duplicates of bills contracted here in the city. I am not going to ask the hon. Minister to produce them during this sitting.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not them, but will apply for them.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to say that this vote shall not pass until you have the return vouchers from Mr. Charleson, that would take a long while. The matter which has been discussed may seem trivial to hon. gentlemen opposite, but these departures from appropriations which we have pretty thoroughly discussed during the sitting we have had are very important in my opinion. Whenever hon. gentlemen undertake to make appropriations for themselves without regard to Parliament and engage in business of this kind in the very teeth of Parliament, they may expect a protest from this side of the House, and it will be a protest which will be determined and long and as sturdy as we can make it. We cannot do otherwise and do our duty. I am not going to prophesy but I take it as a matter of assured fact that the doctrines laid down by gentlemen opposite with regard to the diversion of these votes are such as will not be assented to by this country. You cannot carry on Government if you are going to change these appropriations as you please. The hon. gentleman need not expect that they can make appropriations for themselves and violate these rules and then come to us and say: Pass this, and it will be passed. We have a duty to perform, and we will do it if it takes us a long time. I speak for myself, and, I think I speak for gentlemen on this side, we are not opposing this because we are opposed to the opening of telegraphic communication with the Yukon territory. It is simply folly to put that forward as a serious argument. I take the full responsibility of opposing this vote because of the manner in which this affair has been conducted. Speaking for myself alone without binding others, I am opposed to the Government undertaking this when a commercial corporation is willing to take it up and complete the work without expense to the country, giving the country the benefit of reasonable rates for Government dispatches. I am opposed to the powers given to gentlemen like Mr. Charleson in this matter—but it would take hours to discuss that. It would be necessary also to see in print and properly understand these instructions and know how far they go. So far as I am concerned, and I am sure all on this side, do not propose, further than entering our protests against the method shown in this case, to obstruct this vote. We are not obstructing it and have not obstructed it. We have discussed this matter on principle and as thoroughly as we could. Hon. gentlemen, therefore, can take this vote, and having taken it, I hope we shall be allowed to go and get breakfast and prepare for the day's work. Before the next item referring to this work comes up, we want these full reports of Mr. Coste and the engineers upon which this has been undertaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Are they not down. I think they are upon the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear that. If there are engineers' reports on the plans I think we have a right to have them.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) saw fit to make an attack on me and accused me of being the main cause of this vote being so long in passing the committee. The hon. gentleman said he would take good care that my constituents knew I had done my utmost to prevent the building of a telegraph line into the Yukon. I hope he will do what he can to let every one know that I took part by my presence in the effort to get further information with regard to this matter. Every one of my constituents, I know, will back me up in what I have done in attempting to show up this most outrageous proceeding on the part of this Government. I am not going to say anything further than this. When the hon. gentleman said I had been taking part in the discussion he said something wide of the facts. Since I brought the matter up this afternoon I had not opened my mouth until this moment. No threats of the hon. gentleman will stop me from doing my duty in this House.

Mr. BERGERON. I am ready to submit to the judgment of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), but, I desire to say that I hope this thing will not happen again and that we will not find ourselves in the same position that we are in now. I want to emphasize what my hon. friend has said that it is a pity that we should wait until six o'clock in the morning for the information which the hon. Minister of Finance should have given us if he had taken the pains to get it about five hours ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not asked for five hours ago.

Mr. BERGERON. We have asked for every possible thing under the sun. I think I am covering the ground pretty well. This letter, which apparently satisfied the hon. member for York, N.B., does not satisfy me. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works has dictated that letter, and I know what it means. It seems to me that we should have been in possession of more information in regard to the whole question. I want to get at the facts and to show what kind of a transaction the whole thing is. I will ask the hon. Minister of Finance now, as that letter says that Charleson is to let them know and what he has done, if he can give us any information as to what he has done since he was given this $13,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I read a telegram from Charleson before the hon. gentleman came in.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the date of that telegram?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 25th of May.

Mr. BERGERON. When did Mr. Charleson leave?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the 11th of March.

Mr. BERGERON. You have had one telegram from him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are several earlier reports.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are they?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have not been asked for.

Mr. BERGERON. How can we ask for reports when we did not know until that letter was read that these reports had been made. I am convinced that the whole transaction is a bad one, and I want to find out by the mouth of the hon. gentleman that it is a bad transaction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid it is hopeless to expect me to persuade the hon. gentleman that it is a bad transaction.

Mr. BERGERON. We want these reports.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These reports are on file and I have torn one of them out of the official books and placed it on the Table. I will have copies made and bring them down at a later stage, but I do not think it is reasonable to take them out of the official files.

Mr. WALLACE. When these hon. gentlemen came here and asked for an appropriation of $25,000 they should be prepared to give the fullest information as to the scheme that they have on hand. An Order in Council was passed on the 13th of March after the whole expedition was organized and on its way up there. It is not doing justice to Parliament, or to the country, or to the Ministers themselves, unless there is something, or something that they want to hide behind it, and we are not anxious to have the Government branded with such imputations as that. We have the document read giving instructions to Mr. Charleson. This is the most extraordinary document, I venture to say, in all the records of Parliament from confederation down to the present day. Mr. Charleson is told to dredge all the rivers he can find, almost any place, to remove the boulders, to carry dynamite, to construct a telegraph line from Lake Bennett to Dawson City, then to build a line to Teslin Lake, and from Teslin Lake to Quesnel—hundreds and hundreds of miles of telegraph line. All he has to do is to go ahead for two or three months and see how much money he can expend. He is told that ample provision will be made for him.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Mr. Chairman, do you not think that we might come to some conclusion and adjourn. We are wasting a great deal of time.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. The Chairman is a little ahead of his time, because the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Rosamond) got up to make a statement to which I did not object, and, as I did not object, it was not the province of the Chairman to object. I say that such extreme powers have never been conferred on public officials as those that the hon. Minister of Public Works has given to Mr. Charleson. There is practically no limit to the power of spending money.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why not let the item pass as the information has been produced.

Mr. WALLACE. Producing this document does not give a justification for passing the item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not make a particle of difference whether the item passes or not.

Mr. WALLACE. When the hon. Minister of Finance read that telegram to the House with a triumphant air, we were not expecting that there were other reports beside that. We are told now, that Mr. Charleson has made several reports. Well, we would like to see those reports. Is it wrong to ask the Government to furnish us with the reports they have received as to the progress of the work, how much money Mr. Charleson has expended, how much more money they want, and also the fullest information as to the policy of the Government in the construction of these works? In listening to that document I was unable to find a single limit placed on Mr. Charleson's power to spend money. It gives him the most ample powers in that respect ever given to an official of the Government. I think, after the disclosures made by this document, we require a little breathing spell.

Mr. EDWARDS. In the few years that I have had the honour of a seat in this House I must say that this is the most extraordinary case I have ever known—not so far as the case is concerned, but so far as the Opposition is concerned. We had an all-night sitting in 1889 or 1890, at a time when Sir Hector Langevin, who was Minister of Public Works, refused to give information which was in his possession. We sat till nine or ten o'clock, when Sir John Macdonald was sent for.

Mr. BERGERON. He carried his point, at any rate.

Mr. EDWARDS. He did not carry his point. The Opposition on that occasion carried its point. What have we here to-day? We have had a discussion for the whole night, not for the production of documents which the Government have refused to produce; nothing of the kind, but condemning the principle on which this line is being built. In this case, unusual means are required for the carrying out of this work. From the explanations which we have had from the Ministers of the Crown, I say that the means by which the Government are proceeding to build this line are perfectly justifiable, and the country will justify its construction. Now, what in the world is the sense, so far as the construction of this line is concerned, of asking for information that cannot be given until the line is completed? There is no kind of sense in it at all, and the whole thing is obstruction and nothing else—most disgraceful obstruction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, this is the first time I have been out of order since I have had a seat in this House. I will say it is most extraordinary and nonsensical. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that none of us would go on with expenditure in this way in carrying on our own enterprises. How much do these hon. gentlemen know of such matters? We have to spend tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars on things which are reported on after the expenditure has taken place, and on business such as the construction of this line can be carried out in this way.

Mr. BERGERON. Keep it up; it is good. You are helping us now.

Mr. EDWARDS. This debate takes place all night, and the statement is made that until certain results are shown, the item shall not pass. At a later date the letter of instructions is asked for. The letter is produced, and there is not a line in that letter which changes the situation a single particle. Now, with regard to the qualifications of a man for the building of such a work, I will just say this from practical knowledge, that no man in Canada can be more qualified for it than a man who has a knowledge of the woods and the lumber trade; and so far as any little technical knowledge of building a telegraph line is concerned, it is the smallest thing in the world to get a man with that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a special technical man engaged, Mr. Richardson.

Mr. EDWARDS. A great deal has been said about Mr. Charleson's character. As to that, I know nothing. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to know something; perhaps they have very good reason for knowing something. I do not know anything against his private character; but so far as his qualifications for carrying out this work are concerned, I think he is eminently qualified for it. As to unnecessary expenditure of money and the absence of any check upon him, I will say at once that there cannot be the immediate check on that expenditure that there would be on a work carried on here. But my opinion is that Mr. Charleson will carry out the work as expeditiously as any man in Canada. The hon. member for Beauharnois, in discussing this, put a parallel case before us, and what was it? He took the post office at Laprairie as a sample. There is a case in which you can get estimates, but in this case it was perfectly impossible to get estimates. Now, instead of having this silly nonsense of an all-night sitting, what would be perfectly justifiable on the part of the Opposition, if they thought proper to do so, would have been to move a vote of censure on the Government for the policy they have pursued in this matter. But sitting as we have done to-night is not an example of common-sense or proper parliamentary proceedings, but an exhibition of the greatest nonsense we have ever had in this House.

Mr. BERGERON. We have just had an example of what party spirit will do with a man. My hon. friend who is a man of the greatest common-sense, makes this exhibition simply from his zeal for his party. The hon. gentleman says he knows nothing about Mr. Charleson, and then he says, "I am convinced that the gentleman is fit for his position." He has no other reason for saying that than that the Minister of Public Works said so.

Mr. EDWARDS. What I say is that a man having a knowledge of the lumber trade and of the bush business is one of the best qualified for this employment, and that I know Mr. Charleson to possess. His personal and private character has been attacked. I have not heard anything against Mr. Charleson, but I do not pretend to know anything concerning him in this respect.

Mr. BERGERON. But the hon. gentleman was satisfied to have the Minister trust $13,000 to this man about whom he knows nothing, and have him draw on the Government for any amount of money.

Mr. EDWARDS. The Minister knows him, no doubt.

Mr. BERGERON. And the hon. gentleman says that in his business tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent without asking a report—

Mr. EDWARDS. Let us be fair. What I said was that in such work as Mr. Charleson is doing, the lumber business for instance, tens and even hundreds of thousands of dollars must be expended, no report of which is given until after the expenditure has taken place. Our operations are too far extended—covering hundreds of miles—for reports to reach the head office until after the expenditure has been made. We have to have trusted employees to spend this money.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the very word—trusted employees. But Mr. Charleson is not a man to be trusted.

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not know anything about that.

Mr. BERGERON. And yet you will support the Minister in putting practically an unlimited sum of money into this man's hands.

Mr. DAVIS. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) cannot be supposed to know everybody the Minister employs.

Mr. BERGERON. No, but, in his own business, he would not put money into the hands of a man he did not know or who was spoken against by men to whose word he should pay attention to. If any such thing as this had been done when the Conservative party were in power the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) would have stayed here for two or three days to protest against it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The country was not discovered then.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) ought to be in bed. Sitting up to this hour ages a man, and the hon. gentleman will be too old even for the Senate. Now, as to this letter that we have heard read, I admit that it is a well written letter. If the Minister of Public Works can do anything, he can write a letter. But, particularly in the case of his writings, the smoother they are and the better they read the more dangerous they are. I have here some correspondence which I shall put on "Hansard" some day; I have a letter which, though it bears the name of the Deputy Minister of Public Works, I am sure, was dictated by the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It should have been as he is responsible for it.

Mr. BERGERON. And I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) would have been glad to have had the Minister of Public Works here to take the responsibility.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we have been getting along very nicely.

Mr. BERGERON. We are enjoying it very much. But, before we leave the point we were discussing, I think my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) as a man of business should explain to us further how his business experience justifies such action as the Minister of Public Works has taken in the case of Mr. Charleson. I ask him, seriously, if he would, in his own business, put tens of thousands of dollars into the hands of Mr. Charleson and have no vouchers or any way—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) evidently thinks that Mr. Charleson should have left a bunch of vouchers before he went away.

Mr. EDWARDS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is showing his impracticability and want of business knowledge every moment. There can be no report of expenditure, there can be no vouchers until the expenditure has taken place. But in this case, as in the others to which I have referred, every dollar entrusted to the agent is to be accounted for, and if it is not properly accounted for there will be justification for finding fault.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint). Shall this item be adopted?—carried.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend will now agree to the committee rising.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will give us a few items before we rise. There are some items here that there is no reason for opposing.

Mr. FOSTER. If they are not contentious items, they will pass without a loss of time after we meet again.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But the hon. gentleman should give something—I never knew a committee—

Mr. BERGERON. We have practically voted half a million now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The items voted amount to a little over $30,000.

Mr. WALLACE. But there is a million behind the last one.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the Minister of Finance make up his mind, are we going to stay longer, or are we going home?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are a couple of items in the same department, at the end of page 15, amounting to $12,900, one of which we have talked out in connection with the others.

Mr. BERGERON. Very good.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion carries would my hon. friend indicate what is to be taken up at the next sitting.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As far as I understand the right hon. Prime Minister's mind, it is his intention to go on with supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Supplementary estimates?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6.30 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 22nd June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. RICHARDSON presented Fifth Report of the Select Committee appointed to supervide the official report of the Debates of the House, as follows:—

The committee recommend:

1st. That Mr. Wilfrid Larose be appointed to fill the vacancy on the staff of translators of the Official Report of the Debates at the same salary as is paid to the other members of the staff, but that for this session he be paid for his services the sum of $400.

2nd. That the clerk of the committee be paid the sum of $200 per annum from the beginning of the present session.

3rd. That Mrs. Alphonsine Raby, widow of the late Mr. A. Raby who died on the 4th instant, be paid the sum of $100, which amount he (the same as the other members of the staff) would have been entitled to receive had he lived up to the 8th instant.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved that the said report be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

STEAM TUG "SHAMROCK."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. Foster) asked:

1. How much was paid, if anything, to John C. Kaine for his steam tug "Shamrock," for the buoy service between Quebec and Montreal?

2. How much was allowed, if anything, to John C. Kaine for giving up his contract when the Government took the work over?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The amount agreed to be paid to John C. Kaine for the "Shamrock," including all her appurtenances, furniture, extra gear and tackle for the buoy service, was $21,500. 2. Nothing.

BRITISH COLUMBIA STATUTES.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. Has the Secretary of State received the statutes passed by the legislature of British Columbia at its last session?

2. If so, on what date were they received?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The statutes passed by the legislature of British Columbia at its last session were received by the Secretary of State on the 27th April, 1898.

THE NORTH AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House upon a statement which appeared in the columns of the "Presse," of Montreal, of the 19th instant. The article in question is to the effect that I have bought a steamer, the "City of London," to ply this year between Montreal, Quebec and Gaspé. That paper further states that the "City of London" is subsidized by the Dominion Government. I declare that the statement in question is entirely groundless so far as I am concerned. But I am free to say that it was at my special request that the Government have been subsidizing these two last years, to the extent of $5,000, the company which undertook to open through communication between Montreal, Quebec and Gaspé, and I am happy to say that, owing to our efforts, that subsidy, which has been increased this year to $7,500, will be voted again this year. The contract between the Government and the North American Transportation Company is not yet signed, but I was given the assurance that it would be ratified within a few days. Although I did spend much time and energy in securing for my constituency the establishment of that line, I must declare that I have not the least interest, either directly or indirectly, with the company that is operating it.

THE YUKON LIQUOR PERMITS.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to a return brought down with reference to the correspondence on the Yukon liquor permits. No correspondence has been brought down, with the exception of that between the North-west Council and the Government and this department here. There does not appear to be any correspondence between private individuals and the department, and there seems to me there must be some correspondence of that kind.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). There is, I understand, a considerable amount of correspondence, and I called the attention of the officer of the department who is charged with the preparation of the return, to this fact. He said there was a very large number of files which had to be searched through, and he was working through them and the correspondence will be brought down as soon as possible. There are two or three bundles relating to correspondence in respect of the Yukon district, and a large amount of work is necessitated going through an enormous number of files to obtain the correspondence desired.

THE CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. Minister of Finance found out yet whether there is any extension of that correspondence about the Central Railway in his department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I will have the file searched through, and will send over instructions to that effect.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Geological Survey—

To pay Mr. John McLeish, B.A., difference in salary between the rate of $400 per annum and $1.50 per day from 6th July to 31st December, 1897, and $400 per annum and $1.75 per day from 1st January, 1898, to 30th June, 1899, per Orders in Council of 31st January, 30th June, 1898, and 31st January, 1899, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any other Act..... $429 39

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The explanation of this item is as follows: The Geological Survey Act provides that certain qualifications are required of persons appointed under section 42 of that Act. The latter portion of the first clause, after providing what the qualification shall be, says that the person shall serve two years of a probationary period in the department. The director of the Geological Survey always interpreted that to mean, and assured me the intention was, that the person having the qualification, his appointment should be a probationary one. But after this increase of salary had been paid for a certain length of time, the Auditor General took objection, holding that the officer could not be appointed until he had served two years. The director was quite sure that his interpretation was correct. The matter was referred to me, and I said that the only way was to send it to the Department of Justice. This was done, and the Department of Justice decided that the Auditor General was right. I had given no attention to the matter, accepting the director's reading of the statute. The Auditor General said he must charge up against this officer's salary the amounts which he had received under the increase. I am introducing an Act for the purpose of affecting the interpretation, and I am asking this amount to cover the amount of salary the officer is entitled to. He will get $1.75 a day from the time the new Act comes into force.

Mr. FOSTER. For every day in the year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so.

Mr. WALLACE. This provides up to the 30th of June, 1899. What will the Minister provide after that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is now being paid $400 a year. As the Auditor General charged against the increased payments which it was held could not be legally paid for some time—the officer did not get anything at all. This will place the officer in the same position as if he had been paid $1.50 for the first period and $1.75 afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has disclosed a rather odd situation. Here is a Minister who is supposed to understand the administration of his department, proposes to Council something which could not legally be done. The Minister of Justice, who sits with the hon. gentleman at Council, presumably, sanctions it, and the order is passed. The Auditor General raises objections, and when the Minister of Justice is appealed to, he decides that the Council, of which he is a member, passed an illegal order. The hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) was quite right in saying that he had not given the matter much attention. Only in that way could he absolve himself from the charge of serious lack of knowledge as to the condition of official appointments in his department. I do not take exception to the rate of salary; as I do not think it is too much for these men to receive.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman has pointed out a thing which is not unusual. I have known cases in which the courts have been acting under a certain decision for years, until some counsel challenged the accepted reading of the law. Where the judges find that they have been wrong, they do not hesitate to say so. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) experience in administration must have taught him that it is impossible for a Minister coming into a department to give a legal opinion on every statute under which he is acting. He could not even read them, to say nothing of interpreting them. The director of the Geological Survey, a thoroughly qualified officer, makes a certain recommendation. No question arises as to its being authorized by law. And so the matter goes on until the question is raised. The late Government acted under the same interpretation, and paid their officers in the same way.

Mr. BENNETT. I had intended to avail myself of the debate on the Budget to refer to the lumber question as dealt with by this Government. But as the Budget debate was closed hurriedly, I did not get an opportunity. I propose, therefore, to avail myself of the present occasion to discuss the matter briefly. I need not go into the whole question of the lumber policy of the Ontario Government and the Dominion Government; that has often been gone over in this House. But I intend to make a few remarks with respect to the inaction of the Government in not placing customs duties on lumber entering this country from the United States, and also as to the inaction of the Canadian Government in not placing an embargo on the export of logs similar to that imposed by the Ontario Government. I have not the figures under my hand showing the quantity of logs cut on Indian lands and exported during the last year.

I would point out to the House that there are two classes of logs which in the past have been shipped from the province of Ontario to the United States. First, there are those which are cut under licenses issued by the Ontario Government, and in the second place, there are logs cut under licenses issued to parties to cut on what are known as Indian reserves. We in the province of Ontario, and more particularly on the Georgian Bay, are pleased to know that the Ontario Government, by their very salutary legislation, which we hoped would have a wholesome effect on the Federal Government, have prevented the shipment to the United States of large quantities of logs, as in past years, by placing an embargo on such shipments. We had hoped that the Dominion Government would follow that example in respect to all logs cut on Indian reserves. But a little time ago, in answer to a question put by me, the Minister of the Interior stated that it was not the intention, if I recollect aright, of the Government to place a restriction on logs this year cut on Indian reserves. When I say this year, I refer to those that might have been cut in the winter of 1898-99. Now, while in the province of Ontario and in the Dominion of Canada we have had what is practically an open door to the United States to ship in here large quantities of lumber brought into daily competition with our own lumber, we have practically done nothing at all, by way of reprisal or otherwise, to meet this invasion of our own markets. The House will bear with me while I quote a few figures compiled from the Trade and Navigation Returns as to the extent of the trade done by the American people in Canada in the matter of lumber. Turning to page 524 of the returns of the present year, I find that the following large quantities of the products of the forest, and field have been brought into the province of Ontario alone. I will read a summary, which is as follows:—

	Free of Duty.
Shingles	$19,772
Lath	8,450
Sawed boards (dressed on one side)	384,767
Timber or lumber (hewn or sawed).	462,363

Cherry, chestnut, hickory and whitewood	227,280
Shovel handles	16,275
White ash	12,783
Total of wood imports—	$2,527,509.

Now, Sir, all the articles that I have enumerated here, or the bulk of them, are admitted into this country free of duty. On the other hand, while we are permitting the people of the United States to bring in that large quantity of material free of duty, we are subjected to the annoyance, when we attempt to enter the American market, of being met with almost prohibitory duties on our lumber. By way of comparison, I will read the following table:—

extensive lumberman, Mr. Pitts, made the following statement:—

The fact is, we are on the verge of a lumber famine in the United States. Business is good, people are building, and the demand for lumber exceeds the supply. Before the end of 1899 lumber will go up $4 a thousand, and this will not be due to the tariff, but to better conditions throughout the country. If we are unable to get Canadian logs, there are 27 large mills from

The result of these regulations is that the lumber export trade from Canada to the United States has been greatly hampered; so much has it been hampered that we saw, in the early part of the year, a large deputation of the representative lumbermen of Georgian Bay and different portions of Ontario, gathered here to meet the Government on this question. The chief argument adduced at the time, as I understand, was the plea that the Government should admit duty free the lumber of the United States into Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Against that it was argued very strongly that the producers of lumber on the Georgian Bay were in a position, by reason of water accommodation, to ship into Manitoba and the North-west on practically as good terms as the exporter from the United States. Be that as it may, the lumbermen on the Georgian Bay strongly contend that having purchased, as they did, these timber limits at very high rates, and having now as in the past they had the United States as a market for a great deal of their surplus lumber, that trade is now stopped and that market is shut off from them. That is a special annoyance in the present year, owing to the fact that in the United States there is a great demand for lumber, according to their public press. In the Detroit "Free Press" of January 25th, of this year, a very

Mr. BENNETT.

Saginaw to Cheboygan, capable of cutting 540,000,000 feet a year, that will be idle. And if these mills operate, two-thirds of their product will go through the box factories and planing-mills of Michigan towns.

Now, Sir, it would appear from that statement that the trade of Canada would be very much increased in the shipments of lumber to the United States if we had a fairer market open to us than there is at present; and it is to be regretted that the Federal Government have not seen fit to follow the lead of the local government of Ontario and place an embargo on all logs cut upon Indian lands, which would have had the result of causing a large increase in the business on the shores of the Georgian Bay. On behalf of the constituency which I have the honour to represent, I would respectfully urge upon the Government that in the coming year an embargo should be placed upon all logs which are cut on Indian reserves, thereby overcoming the discrimination that now exists between the policy followed by the American Government and that followed by the provincial government of Ontario. Furthermore, I have this to say, that the Government has had ample opportunity of making a change on the question of tariff regulations on lumber as between the United States and Canada. As is shown by the returns from which I have read, over $2,000,000 worth of the products of the forest are being imported into Canada. While I have no figures to give as to the exports to the United States, still, I think it is to be regretted that while we have these very articles in such great abundance in the country that they should be brought into direct competition with those from the United States, and if the people of the United States wish to place, as they have placed, a hostile and arbitrary tariff against Canadian lumber, it is only fair that they should be accorded similar treatment at our hands. I will give some instances of this competition. There was imported during the past year close upon $300,000 worth of pitch pine. This has been brought directly into competition with the coarser grades of lumber entering into the building of bridges and other heavy works. As to the question of manufactured lumber, or lumber dressed farther than on one side, there is an item of importation amounting to $384,000. We in Ontario can, just as well as the United States, manufacture this lumber, plane it and have it shaped and grooved, employing a large amount of labour in our own country rather than have the mortification of seeing this article imported from the United States. I can only trust that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) will not only see that during the coming winter, 1899-1900, logs cut on Indian lands shall be manufactured in Ontario, but that the Government shall so amend the customs regulations as to place on American products entering Canada at least similar duties to those now imposed against Canadian exports entering into the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), if he applies his argument to timber cut on Indian reserves?

Mr. BENNETT. That is all I understand the Dominion Government have control of.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Let me first give an explanation of the vote as read. The first item is $1,500 to provide an additional amount for the relief, medical attendance, medicines and seed grain for Indians in the province of Quebec. The appropriation for this service, $3,600 was entirely exhausted early in April. The winter has been severe, and the demands made upon the department correspondingly heavy. In July of last year it became necessary, owing to an epidemic of measles, to send a doctor to the lower St. Lawrence to attend the Indians of Betsiamits, Mingan and Seven Islands. The cost of this service, $600, went far towards exhausting the vote, as it was unusual and unprovided for. Only two or three bands in the province of Quebec have funds from which their destitute can be provided for. In addition to medical attendance, medicines and relief, the vote bears the cost of seed grain, which is given to Indians who require it for their small fields and garden plots. As to the next item, to provide for the payment of 50 pupils at $50 each to the Mount Elgin Industrial School, I may say that we formerly paid this out of the Indian School Fund. The Indian School Fund became impaired some years ago, and then it became exhausted, and it is necessary to provide for the payment of 50 children by an appropriation of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. How many pupils are there altogether?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 100. There is no change in the number of pupils. The old fund is exhausted, and we have to provide a fund by an appropriation of Parliament for this expenditure. The next item is $830 to provide for the legal expenses incurred at the trial of two Indians. The amount is simply to pay the fees of counsel.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was the trial?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was at Port Arthur.

Mr. BENNETT. Before the hon. Minister comes to the lumber question, I do not apprehend that there was a very extensive quantity of lumber cut on Indian reserves and shipped to the United States. I have not the figures, but my argument is not so much as to the quantity as it is to the fact that the action which I suggest will prevent the anomaly that now exists. Logs cut on Indian reserves are now entitled to be shipped to the United States, while those that have been cut on Ontario Government lands are not, and, as a result, an opportunity may perhaps be afforded of mixing logs to an extent that could not possibly arise if an embargo were placed on logs cut on Indian reserves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As to the question of the advisability of placing some such restrictions on the manufacture of timber cut upon Indian reserves, as have been placed on timber cut on Ontario Crown lands, I quite admit that the subject is one which requires a great deal of consideration at the hands of the Government. I am quite prepared to go this far and to say that at the present time there is an incongruity in the fact that the timber policy of the two Governments in this respect is not harmonious. I think my hon. friend will admit the force of what I say when I point out to him that we are not at this moment in a position to take up, consider fully, and deal with this question. The fact is, as hon. gentlemen know, that the question of the lumber duty is one of the most important questions under consideration by the Joint Commission which is still in existence for the purpose of settling difficulties between the United States and Canada, and I think hon. gentlemen will admit that while these negotiations are in progress it would not be a desirable thing for this Government to make a change in its timber policy, or in its policy upon the lumber question, because, it would be regarded in a hostile move made while the negotiations were in progress. I think my hon. friend will admit that. It is only a question of a few months and I think it will readily commend itself to my hon. friend's judgment, and to the judgment of the House, that it would be an unwise thing to unnecessarily complicate the question for the sake of a few months. There is another question in connection with it, which I think my hon. friend, as a lawyer, will at once recognize, as importing a difficulty into the Government's position upon this question. I do not wish to be misunderstood; I do not wish to be understood as laying down a proposition on this question because I have not taken the opinion of the Department of Justice upon it, as I certainly will do later. It is that we have to consider the fact that the Government in acting in connection with Indian lands is in the position of a bare trustee. The Government has no interest whatever in the timber; the Government holds the timber surrendered by the Indians as a bare trustee having no beneficial interest in it. The law is very strict as to the responsibility of a trustee as to the disposition of a property. My hon. friend, I am sure, will agree with me, that no lawyer would say off-hand, positively, that he could advise the Government without consideration, that there was no danger of liability. It is a matter to be carefully considered as to what the position of the Government would be in regard to the Indian fund, which they knew at the time they made it would certainly have the effect of depreciating the value of the timber and causing the receipts to become considerably less. So far as the timber cut on Dominion lands is concerned, our policy is not affected particularly, because we have no Dominion lands in the province of Ontario from which timber is cut. The lands, so far as I am able to say at the present time, which are affected, are absolutely Indian lands, and are held by us as trustees. In addition to that, we have to go carefully into the question of our liability to the holders of the licenses to cut. That I am not in a position to give an opinion on off-hand and without referring the question to the Department of Justice, as to whether we could make a regulation which would affect these people who have acquired timber berths at public competition. Both these questions will be considered, as soon as the reason for not dealing with them, namely, the negotiations between the two countries, is removed.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. BENNETT. As to the first reason given by the Minister, the complaint is, that, when the Ontario Government had taken the initiative, early last year, the Government here did not follow their line of policy so as to make it applicable to the logs that were cut in the past winter. I fully realize that the Government could not now, at this late hour, make the law retroactive, but they knew of the policy adopted by the Ontario Government, and they might well have followed suit. As to the question of this Government's liability to the holders of licenses, I assume that the federal licenses are in the same terms as the licenses issued by the Ontario Government, namely, that the Government at all times have the right practically to act as they please, and, consequently, if the Ontario Government had the right to make this regulation under their licenses, if the terms of the licenses be the same, the Government here would have the same right to act. As to the point taken by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), that it would have been detrimental to the interests of the Indians, I can tell him that the increasing demand for stumpage on the north shore of the Georgian Bay would have the effect of producing a higher price than has heretofore obtained. If this embargo were placed all around, we would see Americans coming over, much against their own will, to manufacture on the shores of the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not profess to be familiar with the condition of the lumber market in the district referred to, but does not my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) agree with me, that the effect of such a regulation with regard to timber on Indian reserves would for some time to come at least be likely to cause a fall in the value of that timber?

Mr. BENNETT. That is a fair subject for argument. You would have the American buyer coming here, who wishes to take the logs out of the country, and you would have the Canadian buyer competing with him, who wishes to manufacture in the country. That competition would arise, owing to the demand for lumber in the United States. The contention of those conversant with the business is, that you would then have the American saw-mills located in Canada, and competing against Canadians, and, owing to the increased demand in the United States, the price would be at least as good as it is to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I never could understand the insane policy followed by both the Conservative Government and the Liberal Government with reference to this question of putting an export duty on logs. For fifteen years I have endeavoured to convince Parliament that it was most unwise that we should allow this thing to continue from year to year. During the passage of the Dingley Bill and the passage of the Wilson Bill, we had the same argument presented to the House as has been presented by the Minister of the Interior to-day, namely: Oh, we are negotiating with the United States, and we do not want to disturb the amicable relations between the two countries, and we will hold our hand a little longer, and, if they do not do something in the United States, we will then move. That is the same old cry for the last fifteen years past.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) does not want to misrepresent me. What I said was clear. I said that I thought the question should not be dealt with until a few months hence, when the negotiations were disposed of. There was nothing in what I said which would warrant my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) in stating that I thought it was a question which should be put off indefinitely.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want to misrepresent what the hon. gentleman said, nor did I do so. I stated that, for the last fifteen years, we have had the same argument presented for delay. We were told negotiations were going on, and that nothing would be done. But, when the negotiations had passed, nothing was done still. My fear is, that, when these present negotiations are finished, the Government will follow the same policy of doing nothing as has been pursued heretofore. I never could understand the insane policy of it. To my mind, it is nothing less than insanity to allow the valuable raw material of our country to be taken out of the country in such a way that its value is destroyed to the people who own it, and its value enhanced to the people who are getting it. We are giving away a valuable asset of Canada, and getting nothing in return. I see the hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) is not paying heed to what I say. If I can get his attention, I shall continue to speak; but, if I cannot, I shall refuse. We are treated, every time we present an argument to this House, in the same way. It is not respectful to the House, nor to the member addressing the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I accept the apology, but I do not think the offence should be repeated so often. The Minister stated that the Government were the trustees of this valuable property for the Indians, and he argued that there was a legal question as to the right of the Government to place a restriction, because thereby it might depreciate the value of the property which the Government held in trust in the interests of the Indians. I think the loss that might be sustained in the reduced value of the logs, would be more than made up by the employment that would be given to the Indians in the manufacture of the lumber in this country; for the mills on the north shore employ a large number of these Indians. We have been told that the license-holder has a right under his license to take the logs out of the country. I do not think that is the case; and I have always held that the same rule applied to licenses issued by this Government as to provincial licenses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is one of the questions that would have to be settled by careful legal examination.

Mr. SPROULE. I am only giving the opinion that there is a reserved right in the Indian Department, just as there is in the provincial government, to make changes or impose such restrictions on license-holders, such as increasing the stumpage dues, as may be found desirable in the interest of the Indians of the country at large. But whether that is so or not, I do not think there is any justification for the great delay that has taken place in determining this question. It must be determined some time, and the earlier the better, because the product is always growing less, and after it is gone there will be no need of restrictions. There is another reason why I think this question should be considered at the present time, and it is this. I am told by parties in the locality that the privilege which license-holders have of taking logs from the Indian reserves enables them to smuggle logs belonging to the Crown Lands Department of Ontario, claiming that they are from the Indian reserves. The logs are all put into the stream together, and it is easy for these people to mix them together. I am told that to prevent logs belonging to the provincial Crown lands being taken out, the provincial government has been obliged to appoint a number of constables to patrol the district. I am told that this is a fruitful source of trouble at the present time. While these considerations apply to logs taken from the Indian reserves, I cannot see why the government do not avail themselves of the power they have of putting an export duty on logs. They undoubtedly have that power; there is no question of their jurisdiction. There is no question either of export duties being any interference with the license of a license-holder. If the same object can be accomplished in this way by the Government, without doing an illegal act to any person, why do they not avail themselves of this right? We have been allowing that country to be pirated for many years, to the detriment of the whole country, but especially to the detriment of the people living in my section, who are more particularly interested in the product. This business has been going on for the last fifteen years, and there is no excuse for the long delay in dealing with the question. A year ago the Ontario Government were compelled to take the matter up, by the sheer force of public opinion. An election was coming on, and public sentiment was so strong that they could not avoid taking action. Both parties in the Dominion have been equally to blame for putting off the question. I do not blame the present Government more than the late Government. If they had gone through the country and had seen what was going on, they would not have waited the length of time they have done in putting on the necessary restrictions. Every day we delay dealing with the question is a day of injury and injustice done to the people in that portion of the province of Ontario, and to the people of Canada generally.

Mr. IVES. I do not intend on this item to go into the whole matter of the action of the province of Ontario, or into the question of an export duty on logs, pulp-wood and other matters, as I intend to take an early occasion on going into Supply of dealing with this question. But I think the Minister's reason for deferring action in regard to an embargo on the export of logs from the Indian reserves until the final winding up of the International Commission, is a good one. This is a comparatively small matter; and it would certainly seem to be a foolish thing to further complicate the question, in view of the early sitting of the commission, by so small a matter as the imposition of an embargo upon the export of logs from the Indian reserves. As my friends who were here in 1879, when I first came into this House, know, I have always been in favour of export duties on both logs and paper material. I think I have the honour, if it is an honour, of having moved the first resolution in the House in favour of the imposition of an export duty on logs. While I took that view of the subject at that early day, and have always insisted on it, I still think that the action of the Ontario Government was an illegal act, which, if tested in the courts, will not be sustained, and I think the present Government should have disallowed that Act. I do not see why the province of Ontario should be allowed to create other provinces of the Dominion. I think its action interfered with the question of complications which disastrously affect trade and commerce, which is beyond the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario altogether; and that action is now recognized as the chief obstacle in the way of a settlement of the lumber question by the International Commission. The Dominion Government, which has to deal with the general question of trade and commerce, should have dealt with the question of an export duty on logs, and will have to deal with it. If we do not get free lumber, or what satisfies us in the direction of free lumber, by a treaty with the United States, then the Government must act; and when they act, they must act all along the line, with reference both to logs and to paper material. If they want their action to be felt in the United States, and if they want to bring about a change of heart and policy on the part of that country, they can more easily bring that about by preventing the export of pulp material than the export of logs. They can more easily bring that about by preventing the export of pulp material than by preventing the export of logs. As I intend bringing this matter up when going into Committee of Supply at a later date, I shall not now go further into this item.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman is a little astray when he says he introduced the first resolution in this House on this subject. I think a resolution was introduced long before he sat in this House. I have a distinct recollection, if my memory is not at fault, of a resolution of a similar character which was introduced by the hon. member for Hamilton. The hon. gentleman has expressed the opinion that the action of the province of Ontario in opposing an export duty on logs is illegal, and yet, at the same time, he says that he is in favour of imposing an export duty, so that in the one breath he contradicts what he says in the next. I see that only yesterday the newspapers published an intimation that the Attorney General of Ontario is disposed to grant a fiat to enable the interested parties to bring the matter into court. Although not a lawyer, I venture to say that when the question is tested in the highest court, it will be found that the province of Ontario is entirely within its rights in putting this restriction. I do not think you will find many prominent lawyers in this country will agree with the hon. gentleman in the opinion to which he has given expression.

Mr. OSLER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior if his attention has been drawn to the interesting archæological report of the province of Ontario for 1898. That report contains, on page 90, a very interesting reference, by Dr. Secord, to the large Indian reserve near Brantford, and his report is continued by Mr. Boyle, The state of affairs revealed by Dr. Secord and Mr. Boyle is not creditable to this country. Dr. Secord writes, under date of December 1st, 1898, a report to, I presume, the Ontario Government, in which he draws attention to the fact that on this large reserve of 4,000 Indians, situated within 12 miles of Brantford, the death rate is 30 per 1,000, or three times that of the rest of the province of Ontario, where it is about 10 per 1,000. Notwithstanding that excessive death rate, he says that this band of Indians has increased from 2,600 in 1868 to 4,000 to-day. On that reserve all the old heathen rites are still continued, and the state of disease and filth and the unsanitary condition of the reserve is something simply horrible to contemplate. It is not an uncommon thing, Dr. Secord says, for young adults to pick the worms from their noses and throats, and disease permeates the whole tribe. Apparently, no attempt whatever is made to improve this state of affairs. The Indians drink the water from the surface—and from small wells two or three feet deep—and typhoid fever is prevalent there all the time.

The doctor lives in Brantford, twelve miles away, and is also the health officer. A good brick dwelling has been erected for his use on the reserve, but he seems to prefer living in Brantford. Dr. Secord further adds that diseases of an insidious character prevail, and ignorance, filth and indifference are the rule, and he suggests that a small hospital should be erected on the reserve and the reserve be put under the Health Act.

Not only the doctor, but the superintendent and paymaster are non-residents, necessitating the Indians going to Brantford for their treaty money, and the results are shameful. A little inquiry about Brantford will show that by the connivance of some of the agents Indian money is unlawfully intercepted and does not reach the hands of the Indians. Still less inquiry would show that much of what they get is put in jeopardy by their having to pass by the dealers in fire-water and the like, before they can get back to their homes. Mr. Boyle thus comments on Dr. Secord's report :

Dr. Secord's communication is most suggestive, and demands the immediate attention of all concerned. Among such a community as the Six Nations, that there should be utter ignorance of sanitation and treatment of disease is not to be wondered at, when we bear in mind how difficult it has proved to awaken intelligent attention to such matters among our own people. The Indians are the wards of the Dominion, and unless the Indian Department proposes to adopt the inhuman belief that the best Indian is a dead Indian, steps should be at once taken to improve the condition of things on the reserve. Apparently no attempt is made to improve this condition of affairs, and it is going on now from bad to worse.

I see in the statement of accounts, on page 520 that the agent, Mr. Cameron, has a salary and allowance of $1,540, and that Dr. Secord's salary and allowance is $2,850. Yet, neither of these gentlemen, who are in charge of this reserve, think it worth their while to live on the reserve. This report must have been brought to the attention of the Government long before this. Surely the Government, or some members of it who live in that district, must know something about the conditions of these Indians, and yet, no attempt whatever is made to better their condition or wipe out what any one who reads this report of Mr. Boyle, must consider a most disgraceful state of affairs. Canadians have always been credited with looking after the welfare of their Indian wards. There is a sum of about $800,000 capital, I believe, to the credit of these Indians, and surely out of that sum proper hospitals and sanitary arrangements could be established. That such a state of affairs as is here revealed should exist within twelve miles of Brantford is something which it will be hard to make the people of Canada believe. I draw the hon. Minister's attention to this report, and I hope that, without delay, steps will be taken to wipe out this disgrace to Canada in our dealings with the Indians which is revealed in this report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I admit at once the gravity of the remarks made by my hon. friend (Mr. Osler). With regard to the facts, I may say that, in the first place, the agent is Mr. Cameron, the superintendent of Indian affairs upon the reserve, who was the agent under the late Government, and whose practice as regards residence and visiting the reserve is just the same to-day as it has been in the past four years. I am informed by our inspectors, whom I have several times consulted on the question, that Mr. Cameron is a very good and efficient officer, who understands the working of Indian affairs on that reserve thoroughly, and that it would be very difficult for the department to get a man who could do the work better or as well. As to the question of residence, Mr. Cameron has always resided, I believe, in Brantford, and his view has always been that he is in a better position to attend to the Indian business residing at Brantford, by visiting there three or four times a week, than if he resided permanently on the reserve. The practice now is what it has been for many years. I am assured by the accountant of the department that payments were made on the reserve and not at Brantford. The question of medical attendance has received considerable attention from the department. I understand that Dr. Secord, who makes the report which has been referred to, is the physician for these Indians. He has never made a report of this character to us, as I am told by the officers of the department. I may explain, in justice to Dr. Secord, that he was down here last session and I discussed with him sanitary measures upon the reserve, and he insisted strongly that a hospital should be built on the reserve. I attached great importance to his recommendation, and felt disposed to ask Parliament for the necessary vote, but in view of other increases of expenditure in the Indian Department, I thought well to let it stand over. As my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) is aware, there is no end to the demand from the Indian reserves for the expenditure of money, and it is difficult to know where to draw the line. The inspectors of the department, particularly Inspector Macrae, are very familiar with the state of affairs on the reserve; and I think the view of the department was that the hospital requirements of the Indians would be as well served by the hospital at Brantford as by having a hospital on the reserve. You cannot deal with an Indian as you would with a white man. If it were understood that when an Indian was sick he would be taken care of, half the reserve would be sick. You must deal with the Indian as you find him. After considering the question and consulting the officers of the department, it seemed to me that it would not be advisable to establish a hospital on the reserve. I thought that possibly I could go down there and make an examination, but, up to the present time, I have not been able to convince myself that I ought to ask Parliament for the necessary money for this hospital. It was suggested that the hospital should be built and charged to the funds of the band, but some of the Indians were here and strongly opposed that idea. We cannot legally do such a thing without their consent, and it would be difficult to get their consent.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the unsanitary condition of the reserve—drinking surface water, and so on?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have had no such information, so far as I am aware. It seems strange that Dr. Secord should have reported that way to another body and not to us. He may have thought that the case was sufficiently covered by his statements to me with regard to hospital accommodation and medical attendance. I do not like to make a positive statement on the point, but I will have an examination made at the files of the department, and, after dinner, I will let the hon. gentleman know whether any such report has ever been made. In any case, it has not been brought to my attention. My hon. friend, doubtless, knows that the Six Nations Indians are supposed to be rather advanced Indians. They are very independent and self-reliant, and much inclined to resent interference by the Government in their affairs. It is by no means a case in which the department can say that this or that is to be done. When anything needs to be done requiring the co-operation of the Indians, the superintendent must meet the Indian council and discuss the matter, and even in the most trifling matters, he sometimes has serious difficulty in getting the Indians to agree with the views of the department. I can assure my hon. friend, in view of the statement he has made, I will have an examination made; I will send a competent inspector at an early day to examine and report.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why should the Indians be compelled to drive twelve miles for medical attendance? When the doctor gets a salary, why should he not live upon the reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I discussed that with Dr. Secord when he was here, and had it in my mind to make an order that he should live upon the reserve; but, after discussion, I decided that it would be inadvisable. There are two doctors constantly on the reserve, while Dr. Secord lives in Brantford. The Indians make a practice of coming to Brantford, and many of them prefer to have one of the doctors of the band in the city so that they may consult him when they go in. The doctors upon the reserve can be consulted by any of them at any time.

Mr. SPROULE. There is probably another difficulty in the way. I do not think we have the right to establish a hospital there, as that would be a matter relating to public health, and so one for which the province is responsible. This Government can establish marine hospitals, but they could hardly justify the establishment of a hospital on the reserve by giving it that name.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I wish to be fair to all parties. Speaking from recollection, I think that Dr. Secord told me the Ontario Government were prepared to give the usual grant if we established a hospital. It is a question of putting up a building.

Mr. SPROULE. The hospital must be established under provincial authority, and then you might get assistance for it. Another thing is to be said in connection with the heavy death rate, and that is that, as is known by every medical man, when the Indians come in contact with the conditions of civilization, the death rate among them is high. Consumption is prevalent among them, and the better the houses they have the more rapidly they seem to die off. That is the case in the northern districts of Ontario. Of course, poor sanitary conditions increase the evil. I still think the doctor ought to live on the reserve; and if the Indians are not paid on the reserve, they ought to be. If they can get the money in the city and can get whisky, they will buy whisky and other things of little value to them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I know the instructions to be definite that the payments should be made on the reserve, and I am assured by the accountant of the department that the instructions are carried out.

Mr. OSLER. I will give my authority, a gentleman well known in Toronto. Mr. J. C. Hamilton, barrister, who has taken great interest in Indian affairs for many years. He has investigated this matter, and writes to me, "not only the doctor, but the superintendent and paymaster are non-residents, necessitating the Indians going to Brantford for treaty money and goods." Mr. Hamilton, who, no doubt, is quite willing I should make use of his name, writes me that information as positive.

Mr. SPROULE. I think another of the troubles in connection with the Indians is, that, whenever epidemics or infectious diseases break out, there is no proper provision for isolating the patients, but they are allowed to mingle with each other, and the disease spreads very rapidly, causing a high death rate. Then, I am told that the law regarding vaccination is not carried out properly amongst the Indians. Sometimes a number of them are vaccinated, and then a long term elapses during which there is no vaccination whatever.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Every precaution possible is taken to secure their vaccination. There is no want of care on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad to be corrected on that point. I would say that another requisite for their health is the sanitary condition of the place. That has to be carried out under the provincial authorities. But it might be very much better than it is at the present time, and, if improved, would reduce the death rate materially. I have always thought that it might be well to have a union of interest between the provincial health department and the Department of Indian Affairs down here, whereby hospitals, if such are necessary, might be erected and conducted under the provincial law, while the larger part of the expense should be borne by the Indian Department here. As it would be principally for the benefit of the Indians, it would be proper to lay the larger part of the expense upon the Indian Department.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). There are many people in Ottawa who know more about the reserve and habits of the people who live on it, than the people do who live within a few miles of the reserve. One of the great troubles that exists up there is the peculiar relation that the Indians on the reserve bear the province of Ontario. While they are in Ontario, they are not in as close touch with Ontario as the rest of the people. Their schools are not managed in the same way. They are apparently entirely independent of the province, and hardly regard themselves as citizens of Ontario. It strikes me that one of the best things we can do for these Indians is to rid ourselves of the charge of them, and let them come under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. Let their schools be managed like the schools of white people, and under the same laws. Now, I know

Dr. Secord very well, and I am familiar with the conditions of the Indian people there. I am satisfied that any statements the doctor has made, either in his reports to the Superintendent of Indian Affairs or to the provincial authorities, are absolutely correct; they are not varnished; and any statement that he makes is given upon the authority of a man who is thoroughly qualified to discharge the duties that are involved in his office. He has only the welfare of the Indians at heart; he is doing the best he can to instruct these people in adopting sanitary methods. Everything that he has said in connection with the drinking water of the reserve is absolutely correct. The Indians know nothing whatever of the laws of health, or the science of the preservation of life. Every effort is being put forth to instruct them, but they do not readily adapt themselves to our methods. They do not regard as dangerous things that we regard as extremely dangerous. They live together, sometimes ten or thirteen persons in one room. If there is a case of consumption among them—and consumption is a very prevalent disease—patients are not isolated in the slightest degree, but all live together; and you see how, under such conditions, the death rate is likely to materially increase. I think it is about 30, or more than that, per thousand, being almost two and a half times more than it is throughout the province of Ontario. Now, I think there is a fit field for the erection of a hospital: and, at the time I was asked to become vice-president in the scheme that Lady Aberdeen inaugurated, I wrote her, telling her that one of the very best fields for this hospital scheme was right there, near the city of Brantford, where some 4,000 people are living in absolute neglect of those very sanitary conditions that they ought to be instructed in. The chiefs are apathetic, and do not know what needs to be done. We have 4,000 people there, emerging from a condition of barbarism in the past to one of civilization, without knowing how to adapt themselves to those ideas that are absolutely necessary to change an Indian into a white man. Now, the Indian is a man whom you can trust, generally; but you cannot trust him to look after his health. I think there ought to be an entire severance of the Dominion from the management of the affairs of the people on this reserve. I think they should be placed under the authority of the Ontario Government, which is more in touch with them, and can look after them much better than we can.

As to these statements made against the doctor not living on the reserve, there is not much in them; I can assure you of that. I am quite familiar with the affairs there. The doctor has two assistants, qualified practitioners, who are there all the time, and he himself comes down once a day, and is there about three nights in the week, when he is present constantly. You have not the slightest idea of the medical work that is involved in taking care of those 4,000 people, much more than there would be for a similar number of white people.

Neither can a successful objection be raised against the superintendent living in Brantford. He has always lived in Brantford. Brantford is the place where most of these people deal. It is convenient of access, and they can always see him there. He pays the money to these people on the reserve, and, when they get it, they do not spend it in drink, because amongst the Indians very few are addicted to it. Many of them would drink, if they had an opportunity, but in Brantford it is very hard for an Indian to get drink. These reflections on the Indian are entirely uncalled for. I am satisfied that the attention of the Government has been brought to necessity of better sanitary arrangements being inaugurated on the reserve, and any recommendation the doctor makes is entitled to the most serious consideration, because I am satisfied he is not animated by a desire to advance his own interests as much as to advance the interests of the people who live on the reserve. However, knowing, as I do, their condition, and knowing, as I do, the efforts that have been put forth by the English Church, the Methodist Church, and the religious organizations up there, to give them the benefits that civilized people get, I still regret to say that they are backward in a great many things. As agriculturists, many of them are making improvement, but in the direction of adopting sanitary methods that we adopt in our own houses, and that we try to encourage in the houses of other people, they are absolutely ignorant. When attacked by typhoid fever, they do not pay the slightest attention to diet. A man does not care what he sets before him. Where we are so particular, they eat everything. They have not yet skilled nurses. They have a nurse up there, trained in a hospital, and who has been brought to the reserve, and she has done very good work. I think the Government cannot do better than listen to the recommendations that have been made by the doctor, and listen also to the petition of the Indian Council to give these people an hospital. There is nowhere in this country it could do more good, nowhere could it be run at less expense, and nowhere would the educating influences of a hospital be of such service as upon the reserve to-day.

I can assure our friends here, who may be animated by the proper motive, that everything is being done by those who have the authority to promote the interest of the Indians, and I trust, now that attention has been called to the matter, the hon. Minister will listen to the recommendations that have been made by Dr. Secord, that he will place this hospital upon the reserves no matter at what expense. If it is at the expense of the Dominion of Canada it will be money well expended. We know that large sums are being spent on enterprises that I do not have quite so much sympathy with as I would have with this Government realizing how much we owe to these people in the past by making an appropriation for this hospital. We are sending millions of money to distant lands for missionary purposes, while we are neglecting at home the demands of 4,000 people, who are as much in need of all the help we can give them as are the people in distant lands, and I may say it would be a matter of sincere congratulation for this House if we were to make an appropriation of $5,000 or $10,000 for the purpose of carrying out Dr. Secord's recommendation and erecting this hospital. These Indians do not believe that they have been treated fairly by the Government. They know that their money has been misappropriated in the past, and I took occasion last session to bring before the House the case of the Mount Elgin Institute, where over $3,500 of their money was taken without their sanction, and appropriated to build a school-house some 70 miles away from where it was of any earthly use to the people on that reserve. I do not refer to the present Government or to any Government, but having taken that money and expended it in a manner that is of no earthly use to the people on the reserve, the least we should do would be to appropriate that amount to provide for the building of this hospital. They have eleven schools up there, conducted at their own expense; they are doing their very best to educate their children, and we might help them by doing what they want and that is, to spend more money for their own benefit. They have applied for the appropriation of a certain portion of the money for the hospital building, but I think it would be a graceful act if we were to set aside a sufficient sum of money for this purpose, and build the hospital for them. I can assure this House that the officials in charge there are doing the best they can with the means at their disposal, and I hope that no one will cast any reflection, either upon Dr. Secord, or upon Mr. Cameron, who is a most efficient agent, and who has been discharging the duties of that position for the past seven or eight years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am very much obliged to the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), for making a statement in regard to a matter which is entirely within his own personal knowledge. The only thing that appears to me to require to be remedied is the unsanitary condition of the reserve, and that is a thing that can only be done with the co-operation of the Indians themselves. If any hon. member of this House has had any experience, such as I have had, in the administration of a Health Law, he will know that it is a most difficult thing even to get intelligent white people to properly observe the regulations, and it is still more difficult to get Indians to observe them. The House will see the difficulty of getting these Indians, who are simply emerging from barbarism to civilization, to understand the necessity of a proper observance of sanitary regulations. The report of Dr. Secord says that he is paying special attention to this, but I can assure the committee that I am making every possible effort to see that every possible improvement is made in the line suggested.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) must be struck by the report coming from a single reserve of so desperate a state of things. There are many other Indian reserves in the province of Ontario from which we have no such reports. Does it not occur to the hon. gentleman to be a very extraordinary circumstance, when there are two physicians on the reserve and one living at Brantford, that such a state of things, almost beyond description, should have occurred, and that this is the first time that the attention of the department has been called to such an extraordinary state of things?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The inference I would draw is not that such a state of affairs, as Dr. Secord describes, does not exist on this reserve, although I do not suppose that Dr. Secord, in calling the attention of the authorities to it has toned it down at all, but it is that I would be inclined to believe that some other reserves may be in a somewhat similar state, and may require similar examination. That would be applicable to reserves where the population is somewhat dense, but it would not apply to other reserves where there is only a small population.

Mr. CLANCY. Either Dr. Secord has given this report a high colouring, or some one has been sadly remiss in his duty. I happen to live close to an Indian reserve, and I have had some opportunity of knowing, although not in detail, the state of the health of those people. No such state of things exists as is spoken of in this statement, but the Indians are just as my hon. friend described them. They are a class of people who resent changes made by any Government, and the present condition of things is probably due to the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and my hon. friend (Mr. Heyd), who spoke so eloquently a moment ago, and who almost melted into tears on account of their condition, who recommended that men should be dismissed who knew the condition of the Indians, who knew their wants and that others be put in their places. The Indians, resenting that, would remain in their homes, almost in a dying condition, rather than go to a new physician appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite. If there is a state of things such as has been described, it may be traced largely to these gentlemen themselves. I know the case of Walpole Island, where a gentleman against whom nothing could be said, was given his walking ticket. He was told that he had been an offensive partisan; there was no trial held, but some conspirator took it into his head that he wanted his place, and he got his walking ticket. A great many of the Indians would not go for medical attendance to the appointee of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), and if there is such a condition of affairs as has been described, I am afraid the hon. gentleman is indirectly responsible by listening to the appeals of his own friends, who want the places at the expense of these Indians. The Indians are prejudiced against coming into contact with these new physicians, and they would rather die in their homes, so strong is the principle of association, than go and seek medical attendance from those whom they do not know. This is only one case, because changes were made both in agents and physicians very generally. A change was made at Brantford. Dr. Secord lives in Brantford, and there are two physicians under him. It ill-becomes Dr. Secord, after living two years in the city of Brantford, to make a report of that kind, and to tell the hon. Minister of the Interior that it is not necessary for him to live on the reserve. I can quite understand that Dr. Secord could find most cogent reasons why he should not live on the reserve, but I cannot understand why the hon. Minister of the Interior should be so easily influenced as to conclude that he could attend to the wants of the Indians better by residing in the city of Brantford. My hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) knows perfectly well that there was a good deal of feeling among the Indians and that they protested strongly when the changes were made. He knows that the Indians of Walpole Island protested by petition against the action of the department, and that the same thing occurred in many places in Ontario. If that report be true, as stated here, then there is something wrong, and that wrong may be traced largely to the department. The Minister can rectify it to some extent by compelling these men who have sought new positions to attend to their duty rather than making these alarming reports.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Without entering into the political question which has frequently been discussed, I say to my hon. friend in good faith and frankness, that if the statement is made by any hon. member either in the House or by correspondence, that any Indian physician is not attending to his duty as he should, I will have a thorough investigation made and that physician will be dismissed without fear, favour or affection if the charge is found to be true. If the hon. gentleman calls on me he will be satisfied that I will take action fairly and fully. As to the Brantford reserve, I hardly think that what has been brought to the attention of the House in any way reflects upon the department. Quite the contrary. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) must see that what is reported is not the creation of last year, but the result of a state of affairs that has been going on for years. What occurs now is, that this gentleman whom we have appointed is taking sufficient interest in his duties to make these reports for the purpose of calling the attention of the proper authorities to it, with a view that a remedy may be applied. I am satisfied that much will be found to exist which ought not to exist, but I wish to state that I do not think it is a thing that can be rectified all in a minute. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) fully understands that these things must be done with the loyal co-operation of the parties affected, and that can only be accomplished by gradual reform.

Indians, Nova Scotia—

Additional amount for medical attendance and medicines $700

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a constant pressure on us for help, and it appears that during the last year, and particularly in the maritime provinces, these medical bills have been larger, the report being that grippe and pulmonary complaints have been very prevalent amongst the Indians.

Additional amount for seed grain, Manitoba and North-west Territories..... $2,000

Mr. DAVIN. Why is this vote required for the additional purchase of seed grain? What was the sum in the main Estimates?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The main Estimate was $1,570.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister of the Interior will remember that I called his attention to the condition of the reserves, consequent upon the dismissal of experienced officers, and that I asked for returns as to the crops of some of the reserves. I ask now whether there has not been distress upon the reserves, especially in the North-west Territories, in consequence of the change in the officers, and whether the necessity of calling for the large sum of $2,000 extra is not owing to the fact that several reserves in 1898 became quite demoralized in consequence of experienced officers being removed. The Crooked Lake Reserve, for instance, was one of the most successful reserves, and the Indians used to exhibit fine crops and cattle at the exhibition, but in 1898 all that went into a hopeless state of demoralization, and that, I believe, is a reason why this large sum is required to meet the distress on the reserves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The changes that were made in the re-organization of the Indian Department were made altogether in the interests of economy, and without exception, with the advice of the former Indian Commissioner. I went into the matter myself with extreme care, together with the present Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, then the Indian Commissioner, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) will admit that no officer of the department was ever better competent to deal with that question. Certainly, I advised with the trusted officer of the department, and I acted largely on his advice. Of course, I take the whole responsibility of what has been done. I do not wish to throw any responsibility upon him. Some of the changes, perhaps, were not advisable in one or two cases, but on the whole, I think, they were extremely desirable and have worked out beneficially, resulting in the saving of a considerable amount of money, while the affairs of the reserve are administered quite as well as they were before.

Mr. DAVIN. What reserves in the Territories require this seed grain?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. First, there is $280 for agencies generally. Then, it is to be sent to the following agencies: Moose Mountain, Hobbema, Edmonton, Carlton, Duck Lake, Saddle Lake, Muscowpetungs, The Pas, Clandeboye, Manitowapah, Birtle, Battleford. The Crooked Lake reserve does not figure.

Mr. DAVIS. With regard to this item of $2,000 for the purchase of seed grain for the Indians, which the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has been talking about, it appears to me it is put in the Estimates because the Indians are doing more work and have a larger acreage under crop this season, and for that reason want more seed. As regards the appointment of the new officials having the effect on the Indians which the hon. gentleman stated, I do not think there is anything in it at all. On the Battleford reserve, in one year, under the late agent, nearly all the cattle died and the Indians were very hard up; but under the new agent we have not had anything of that kind at all. As the Indians own the cattle, when the cattle are sold the Indians get the proceeds, and now they are doing remarkably well. In Duck Lake agency I know there is a great deal more land under cultivation than before, because the instructors are good, live men who know all about farming, and are helping the Indians along. The instructors are not cobblers and tailors, such as we had before, but live practical men; and this is true of all the agencies in my district. I suppose this accounts for the $2,000 which the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. DAVIN. I will direct my question again to the hon. Minister. I would like to ask him whether as a fact the Crooked Lake agency did not get demoralized and fall from a condition of great efficiency to one of demoralization in consequence of tried officers having been removed. The first question is, did not the Crooked Lake agency fall into a state of demoralization in 1897-98?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the changes were made in connection with the Crooked Lake reserve, charges were made that the changes had resulted badly for the reserve. I held a special consultation with the Indian Commissioner, and directed his attention to these statements. He assured me that there was nothing whatever in them, but that on the contrary the reserve was in a better condition than ever before. He was quite satisfied that after the changes he had recommended, the administration of the reserve had improved in efficiency rather than deteriorated. I do not say that I inspected the reserve myself; I am speaking from the report of my responsible officer.

Mr. DAVIN. The Indian Commissioner would naturally give as couleur-de-rose an account of the reserves under his charge as possible. Apropos of the whole vote, I wish to call the attention of the Minister to Mr. Smart's report for 1898. On page 22, he says:

The area of land under cultivation, during the year 1898, aggregated 111,880 acres.

In considering the amount of crops secured relatively to the acreage farmed, a distinction must be made between the area described as under cultivation which includes fallow lands, new breaking and "made" pasturage, and the area actually seeded down, which was in the spring of 1897, 40,368 acres.

The crop of cereals, vegetables and roots harvested in the fall of that year amounted to 1,120,900 bushels, and of hay and other fodder 76,458 tons were secured, the increase over the preceding year being 101,500 bushels and 2,164 tons respectively.

It is regretted that there was not a proportionate increase in the value of farm produce, which in the aggregate only exceeded that of the preceding year by some $20,000.

What I want to ask the hon. gentleman is this: was there an increase in cultivation and produce in 1898 over 1897?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give that information to my hon. friend off-hand; I will have to look it up. But because there was an increase in the agricultural product of the Indians upon these reserves in 1897 over 1896, it does not follow that if there was not an increase in 1898 over 1897, there was, therefore, any fault in the management.

The hon. gentleman will, on inquiry, find that a similar condition of affairs existed several years ago. The crops vary in different years in different localities. Manitoba some years ago produced more grain than it has ever produced since, but it does not follow that the people are not progressive or that cultivation has fallen back, but simply that the crops in that particular year were unusually good. Last year the crop of the Territories was much better than that of some parts of Manitoba, and some years the crops in both the Territories and Manitoba are not as good as they are in others, so that my hon. friend cannot draw any conclusion from comparing the product of the reserves in one year with the crop in another year. That is no indication at all that the management is any better or worse.

To provide an additional amount for annuities and gratuities to Indians and half-breeds in the Peace River and Athabasca districts, comprising the proposed new treaty..... $12,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As I have already explained, the Government has taken steps to negotiate a treaty with those Indians. We intend dealing with them on the same basis as in the treaties made by Governor Morris with the Indians for the ceding of territory in the North-west, that is to say, $7 per head of gratuity, and $5 each of annuity. The Indians number 2,700, and the half-breeds 1,000, or a total of 3,700. In the main Estimates we provided $32,400, and require $12,000 additional, or $44,400 altogether, to pay the Indians and half-breeds on the basis I have mentioned. I am estimating for the half-breeds as well as the Indians, because the commissioners have authority to treat with the half-breeds as Indians, if the half-breeds so desire, and take them into the treaty. But if not, we ask for authority to treat the half-breeds as we did the half-breeds elsewhere, and give them scrip. But to facilitate the making of a treaty it was deemed advisable that we should have a sufficient vote to enable the commissioners to take them into the treaty, if they so desire.

Mr. DAVIN. What are the names of the commissioners and their whole staff?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are two commissions, an Indian commission, and a half-breed commission, for this reason: An advertisement had to be sent out a year ago, informing the Indians that the Indian commissioners would be at a certain point at a certain time, and it is necessary that the commissioners should be there at that time. But, if they had to stop at Little Slave Lake, where the half-breeds are found, they could not keep their appointment with the Indians at Great Slave Lake. The half-breed commissioners, however, have instructions to act under the supervision of the Indian commission. The Indian commissioners are: The Hon. David Laird, J. J. McKenna, an officer of the department, and James H. Ross, of the Northwest Government, and along with this commission we have asked the Reverend Father Lacombe to go, not as a member of the commission, but in an advisory capacity.

Every one who has lived in the North-west for the last fifteen or twenty years, Protestant and Catholic, knows well that there is no man in the North-west looked upon by the Indians with the same reverence and affection as Father Lacombe.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nobody could be sent with the commission more likely to smooth away any friction. I saw him personally, and urged him strongly to give his services to the Government, and, after some hesitation, he consented. He is not a member of the commission, and has no power to decide anything, but simply acts in an advisory capacity. Mr. Harrison Young, of Edmonton, is the secretary of the commission. Mr. C. H. West, M.D., is the physician, and along with them go two men acting as general clerks, Mr. A. J. Conroy and Mr. W. W. Martin. The half-breed commission consist of Major Walker, of Calgary, and Mr. J. A. Côté, an officer of the Department of the Interior, two clerks—one an English-speaking man, Mr. Charles Mayer, formerly of Prince Albert, and lately in the immigration branch of the service—and a younger man, named Prudhomme, French secretary of the commission. We have provided by Order in Council that the commissioners who are in receipt of salary—that is, Mr. Laird and Mr. McKenna—will get $6 per day additional to their salary. I have submitted a vote to Parliament to authorize us to pay that. Nothing has been paid on account of that, but we are submitting a vote to Parliament to get authority to pay it. We are giving Father Lacombe $10 per day, whilst away. The secretary, Mr. Harrison Young, and Dr. West get $6 a day. That is their entire pay, because they are not in the service. Mr. Conroy gets $100 a month, and Mr. Martin $75 a month. On the half-breed commission, Major Walker gets $10 a day, and we are asking authority to pay Mr. Côté $5 a day additional to his salary. The secretaries get $100 a month each. The additional staff are: an interpreter, a cook and two servants. There will be ten mounted policemen and an officer, who will escort the party and transport the supplies. The supplies were purchased under contract. Tenders were advertised for, and the contract was given to the Hudson's Bay Company. Some small additional supplies were purchased from the Hudson's Bay Company at the contract rates.

Mr. FOSTER. What extent of territory will these men have to travel over?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The desire is that they shall go as far as Great Slave Lake, but it is impossible to form a positive opinion as to what ground they can cover. Their instructions are to go as far as possible and to accomplish as much as possible. Everything will depend on the facility they have in dealing with the Indians.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the hon. Minister aware whether arrangements were made for meetings with the Indians at convenient places, as was done under Mr. Morris?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, notices were sent out. I may explain that in the fall of 1897 I first went into this matter, expecting that I should be able to send out commissioners in the summer of 1898. But it was found impossible to get the notices to the Indians in time. We have been getting these notices out for nearly eighteen months. Printed notices have been sent out to the officers of the Mounted Police, the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, traders, missionaries, and everybody who could take them out. As wide a knowledge as possible has been furnished the Indians of the places where the commissioners are to be.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. Minister an estimate of the supplies that will be needed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained that the supplies were purchased after tenders had been advertised for, the contract going to the Hudson's Bay Company. Last fall, when I was in Winnipeg, I had a discussion with the Indian Commissioner, Mr. Laird, and Mr. Chipman, the chief commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company. We arrived at the conclusion that an additional quantity of supplies would be wanted. I asked Mr. Chipman if he would supply them at the same prices and would credit us at the same rates with supplies that were not actually taken. This was agreed to. The supplies were as follows:—

224 sacks of flour	$3,827 00
1,104 lbs. of bacon	2,191 22
5,050 lbs. of tea	1,594 54
3,614 lbs. of tobacco	2,867 14

Total $10,479 90

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to this large sum of $13,000 to provide an additional amount for the purchase of supplies for destitute and working Indians in Manitoba and the North-west Territories—this is in addition to $178,000 that the hon. gentleman was voted under the main Estimates. Did the hon. gentleman call for tenders for these supplies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking generally, all the supplies of the Indian Department are purchased by tender. The only things not so purchased by tender are some small items of implements, medicines, and so on.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman say what the reserves are for which these additional supplies were got?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The following is the statement:—

Supplementary Quantities of Flour, Bacon and Beef allowed over and above Quantities provided for in Estimates—

Swan River—
70 sacks flour	$112 00
1,000 lbs. bacon	105 00
Moose Mountain—
25 sacks flour	42 50
250 lbs. bacon	26 25
1,500 lbs. beef	75 00
Crooked Lake—
150 sacks flour.....	300 00
4,000 lbs. beef	200 00
Assiniboine—18 sacks flour.....	30 60
Muscowpetung's—500 lbs. bacon.....	53 50
Touchwood—7,500 lbs. beef.....	375 00
Carlton—1,000 lbs. bacon.....	109 00
Battleford—330 sacks flour.....	722 70
Onion Lake—112 sacks flour.....	329 28
Saddle Lake—
137 sacks flour	356 20
1,000 lbs. bacon	127 37
Ammunition and twine.....	100 00
Edmonton—
1,000 bush. wheat, to grind.....	600 60
10,000 lbs. beef	500 00
2,000 lbs. bacon	225 00
Hobbema—
4,000 lbs. bacon	450 00
1,000 bush. wheat, to grind.....	600 00
Morley—
39 sacks flour	68 25
35,000 lbs. beef	1,750 00
Piegan—268 sacks flour.....	459 20
		$12,622 43

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to the last item, will the hon. gentleman say why he found it necessary to get this additional amount to purchase cattle? The aim should undoubtedly be to make the Indians, who have got splendid pasturage for their cattle, turn their attention to improving the stock. They have been supplied with a thoroughbred bull, and by this time they ought to be able to supply all their own cattle.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is for the purpose of buying thoroughbred bulls. Everybody who has given attention to the development of the North-west knows that nothing is so important as the improvement in the quality of the cattle. I have been told by Gordon and Ironsides, cattle buyers, who practically have a monopoly of the whole cattle export trade of the North-west, that as a result of the policy of the late Government in connection with this matter, and which I am pleased to take up and follow out, that is the policy of furnishing thoroughbred bulls for the reserves, these cattle buyers have told me that they have found better cattle for export purposes upon the Indian reserves than anywhere else in the North-west Territories, except in two or three localities where the ranching companies have paid much attention to it. I have given some attention to this particular subject, and am asking for this vote for the purpose of carrying that policy a little further. I will give my hon. friend the names of the reserves where I intend to supply cattle: Piegan, 10 yearlings; Bloods, 16; Morley, 9 (two years); Blackfoot, 4; Duck Lake, 5; Carlton, 4; Battleford, 4; Clandeboye, 3; Berens River, 5; Manitowapah, 4; Portage la Prairie, 2. Forty-nine animals have already been bought in Ontario by Mr. Thos. Harkness, at an average price of $91.50.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I would ask the Minister to refer to item 67, to provide an additional amount of medical attendance and medicine in Nova Scotia—is any part of that for the county of Pictou?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what particular counties the accounts come from. There are some outstanding accounts in Nova Scotia. It is altogether likely some of them are from the county of Pictou.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). This sum is not intended to raise the annual payment, but merely to pay arrears?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just to pay increased accounts that have been incurred this year, to close up the accounts.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). In the county of Pictou the amount is only $75 in all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have tried to keep down the expense as much as we can, but there is a continual pressure to increase.

Mr. DAVIN. I approve of the hon. gentleman's policy of bringing in thoroughbred bulls, and I would suggest that it would be well to bring in some thoroughbred stallions to put on the reserves. At present the Indians get $10, $15 or $20 for their horses. Now, the Indian is a natural breeder of horses, but he has to be taught to breed cattle. Occasionally you will see a good horse, but as a rule their horses are very inferior, owing to the poor class of stallions they have. Now, the poor stallion does not merely do harm to the breeding on the Indian reserve, but he sometimes strays further afield, and the result is injurious to the quality of the horses of the white settlers, who sometimes find their mares throwing an inferior animal in consequence of an Indian stallion that, to use Shakespeare's phrase, would insist on going elsewhere and fishing in peculiar waters.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That question has been considered by the inspectors, in connection with the improvement of the breed of cattle. But there is a difference between the two questions. The price of thoroughbred bulls is $90 to $100. $5,000 goes a long way in improving the breed of cattle, but it would go a small way in the purchase of thoroughbred stallions.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. gentleman would find that $5,000 would go a considerable distance in providing good, serviceable stallions, not an animal that would take a high prize, but an animal that would give the Indian an improved breed of horses, and the result would be that they could get $75 or $80 a horse instead of getting $20 or $30. The moment the Indian saw that he could obtain a better price for his horses, he would try to improve the breed. Now, I would ask the hon. gentleman, with regard to this item, whether he asked for public tenders in all cases?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, by public advertisement.

Mr. DAVIN. Has he issued schedules in all cases?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The only supplies that are not purchased for the Indian Department by tenders are some little things, very trifling amounts, which are purchased by the agents locally. The Indian supplies generally are purchased by public tender. Schedules are furnished, and I believe the supplies are purchased at very low prices.

Mr. BERGERON. May I ask the Minister a couple of questions, as I was not here when vote 66 was carried? A month or two ago some petitions were sent in to the hon. gentleman from the Indians at Caughnawaga about the election of their chief. I was asked to act for the Indians, and I declined. I would like to know how far these petitions have been acted upon?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I remember the case which the hon. gentleman refers to. I would not like to make a positive statement until after adjournment.

Mr. BERGERON. We want, if possible, to avoid anything such as happened at St. Regis. What about the St. Regis Indians? I see by the papers they have had an election on the reserve and it seemed to me as if the chiefs were not quite satisfied with the election. Is the election for life or only for three years?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a matter that I am quite familiar with, because it has been receiving my attention quite lately. I found in the department a serious difficulty by reason of the fact that at the time when my attention was called to it, the Indians upon the St. Regis reserve had practically set the law at defiance. I am speaking from the information which is furnished me by the permanent officers of the department. The Indians had practically set the department at defiance; they had practically told the agents that they would obey the law if they felt so disposed. Some years ago when a warrant was sent for execution the constable was summarily run off the reserve by the Indians. The difficulty seemed to be that right alongside of the boundary there is an American reserve and the American Indians are extremely turbulent, much more so than the Indians on our side. The department had long ago applied the elective system to this tribe, and when the department ordered that an election should take place the Indians refused to obey that order. Different deputations waited upon me in regard to the matter. One deputation came and said they wanted the old tribal system, and another deputation said that they were good, honest, law-abiding Indians, that they were prepared to fall in with the views of the department and do what we wanted them to do, but they said: The department will have to back us up and prevent us from suffering violence at the hands of the Indians who are opposed to the wishes of the department. Further than that these well-disposed Indians said: If you do not do that, if you permit the Indians who are disaffected to bully the department, our lives will not be worth living on the reserve. We, who have been disposed to fall in with the wishes of the department will be told that we have nothing to say about the affairs of the reserve, and these other disaffected Indians will carry matters with a high hand. We had on the one hand a parcel of people who were well disposed and who were asking us to carry out our own regulations, and on the other hand we had a band of turbulent agitators who said that they would not carry out the wishes of the department. The agitators appeared not to be large in number, but they were turbulent in character. After making a careful examination and going into the matter carefully with Mr. Macrae who has a specially good knowledge of the Indian character, who has been inspector, in Ontario, Quebec and the Northwest, and is, I think, as well qualified to judge of what is to be done in dealing with refractory Indians as any of the officers in the department, I came to the conclusion that the only thing to do was to assert the authority of the department and carry out the law. It was a perfectly intolerable state of affairs that they should say that a writ of the province of Quebec could not be executed on this reserve. They said: We will not allow anybody on this reserve that we do not want, practically saying that they proposed to set the Government of the country at defiance. I made up my mind that this state of affairs must be remedied at whatever cost, and consequently we ordered that another election should take place. I asked the Department of Justice to send Col. Sherwood, Chief of the Dominion Police, there to see that the elections were properly carried out. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is familiar with what took place there as it appeared very fully in the press. A very unfortunate occurrence happened there. The chief of police was violently assaulted, and believing that the Indians intended to kill him he fired a shot. An Indian suddenly turned when the shot was fired and it proved fatal. I went into this matter very carefully and came to the conclusion that, beyond all question, Col. Sherwood was not to blame, but that on the contrary, he was entitled to the greatest credit for the forbearance, coolness and nerve he showed in refraining from firing until he did. The Department of Justice was asked to take proceedings for the purpose of the punishment of these Indians. There was a good deal of bluster for some time, and the hon. gentleman is aware from the press that it was a difficult situation to deal with, but we decided to deal with it firmly. We did not make a show of force, but the Indians were told that they were going to be arrested, and they finally surrendered themselves. With all the persons charged with the preventing the election and all the persons charged with the assault on Col. Sherwood the department made no conditions, but after a consultation with the hon. Solicitor General, who was acting for the Department of Justice in the matter, it was decided that they should be allowed to go back to the reserve and that they should not be proceeded against, or at all events they should be remanded under recognizances to appear when called for. Then I sent an officer of the Indian Department to the reserve with instructions to hold the election in accordance with the terms of the Act. Mr. Macrae has just returned, and he reports to me that he has held the election in accordance with the terms of the Act. Consequently, the department has fully carried its point. Of course there was a good deal of grumbling amongst these malcontents, and I have no doubt there will be. I think we may congratulate ourselves upon the fact that the Indians have recognized the authority of the department and the authority of the law and the position now is that the affairs of the reserve will be carried on as are the affairs of the other reserves. One point I want to make. It has been said that to some extent the difficulty arose because the department had done away with the old tribal system of electing the chief. As a matter of fact these Indians do not know what the tribal system is. They have no information on the subject. They talk about a return to the tribal system, but if you ask them what that system is they do not know. It is just a vague story that goes around from one to another, but they do not know what it means. The fact is that the men who talk about this make it a pretense to protest against the law. They desire to resist the proper enforcement of the law while all the ordinary and well-disposed people are willing to obey it. Everything is now going on satisfactorily.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that all those Indians who were arrested and brought to the jail at Beauharnois have been allowed out upon recognizance?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Every one of them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; most of them, I think, have been allowed out on bail. All have to furnish bail, some not only in their own bonds but in the bonds of others.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought some two of them had been kept in jail. Have any of them been kept in jail?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, they are all released.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they bound to appear before the court, or are they out indefinitely on bail?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Let me explain. The present position is that they are all bound over to appear at the next court of competent jurisdiction which takes place in about nine months in that district. I may say that at the present time the intention is that, if everything goes right and they behave themselves, nothing will be done.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the department retained the services of a lawyer there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. At Beauharnois?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not just sure what form it took, but there was a lawyer retained to act for the Indians, that having been found to be the best way of proceeding.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the name of the lawyer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Brossoit.

Mr. BERGERON. What did Mr. Brossoit get from the department for his services in connection with that matter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. His bill was taxed by the Justice Department at about $470. Such an account as that comes to me, and if I recognize it as being due I send it to the Justice Department to be taxed. There was no doubt it was proper for us to pay the amount, because I directed that a lawyer should be employed.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the money been yet paid to Mr. Brossoit?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I believe a cheque has been issued.

Mr. BERGERON. What was Mr. Brossoit's claim?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The accountant tells me that he thinks Mr. Brossoit rendered an account for $600, and it was taxed down to about $470. If the hon. gentleman wants the exact figures I will give them.

Mr. BERGERON. If it is not too much trouble to the Minister, I would like to have the amount of Mr. Brossolt's claim, and the amount which was paid him on it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very well.

British Columbia Indians $3,200

Mr. McINNES. I wish to avail myself of this occasion to call the attention of the Minister to a certain condition of affairs in connection with Indian reserves in British Columbia. On the west coast of Vancouver Island there have been some valuable deposits discovered of gold, silver, iron, copper and other minerals. There has been a great deal of prospecting done there in consequence. It so happens that there are quite a number of Indian reserves on the west coast, and these prospectors have in many cases located claims, which turned out to be on Indian reserves. Upon their applying to have these claims recorded, they have been told by the mining recorders that the claims being on Indian reserves they could not be recorded, and when these parties have in turn referred the matter to the agents of the Indian Department, so far as I know, no action satisfactory to them has been taken. I have been credibly informed that in one case there is only one Indian surviving who is living upon the Indian reserve, and if that be true, it is in the power of that one Indian to absolutely prevent any mineral development within the territory of the reserve. It is certain that so long as there is a conflict of jurisdiction between the Federal and the provincial governments, there can be no possible development of the minerals within these reserves, and inasmuch as I know for a fact that some very valuable deposits have been discovered on what are Indian reserves, and it is desirable they should be worked, I would suggest to the Minister (Mr. Sifton) that no time be lost in framing some kind of a regulation to enable them to be worked, or that he should have a conference with the provincial authorities with a view of deciding on some regulations so that the mineral deposits on these reserves can be developed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a very important point, and it is a subject which is surrounded with great difficulty. The title to the precious metals on Indian reserves has been in dispute for some years past, and has given rise to very great difficulty in the administration of Indian affairs. The well-known case in regard to the railway belt in British Columbia resulted in the decision that the precious metals belonged to the Crown, as represented by the province; that the Crown had a prerogative right to the pre-ciuous metals in lands which ever had been Crown lands in the province. As a result of that decision, the provinces immediately set up a claim that the precious metals within the Indian reserves belonged to them. Hon. gentlemen can see very readily what an unsatisfactory state of affairs that is. In the first place, we have the Dominion Government representing the Indians in administering the reserves, then we have the provinces setting up a right to the precious metals below the surface, and then we have the fact that whatever right the provinces may have to the precious metals, no regulations which they could make would authorize any one to go upon the Indian reserves for the purpose of mining, without the consent of the Indians properly obtained. We therefore have a very complicated state of affairs. Up to the present, the Dominion Government has always resisted the claim of the provinces to the precious metals within the Indian reserves. The difficulty arises in Nova Scotia, Ontario and British Columbia, and it actually prevents a satisfactory administration of the minerals on these reserves. I have lately—largely on account of statements made to me by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. McInnes)—given instructions that the officers of the department shall endeavour to prepare a set of regulations which will permit of the precious metals upon these reserves being mined, and if it becomes necessary to prevent a conflict of jurisdiction, I will endeavour to see that an arrangement is made with the provinces whereby the right of the people to operate under these regulations shall be recognized. On the whole, I do not think there will be much difficulty about that, and I hope to be able to carry out the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. McInnes).

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the case of the Songhees Indian reserve in Victoria. Some time ago, I moved for and received all the correspondence that had taken place between the Dominion and provincial governments in reference to this matter, and I am sorry to see, so far as I can make out from the correspondence, that the whole matter is at a deadlock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Prior) will admit that is not my fault.

Mr. PRIOR. I will admit that, so far as I can make out from the correspondence, the Minister has done his best to come to an agreement with the provincial government, and I also believe that the members of the provincial government have done their best to agree; but the contentions of the two governments are diametrically opposite. The facts are these. We have an Indian reservation in Victoria, inhabited by a small number of the Songhee tribe. It has been in their possession from the time of Governor Douglas, in the old Crown Colony days. I think it is stated that he made over the Indian reserve to them in fee simple. Again, the fact remains that the people of Victoria are very anxious to have these Indians removed, as they are a menace to the town in many ways. There are very few of them, but they stick to their reserve, which consists of 119 acres, and is just across a narrow portion of the harbour from the city. There would be no trouble, I think, in getting the Indians removed if the Dominion Government would give up their contention that the money to be derived from the sale of the reserve is to go into the Indian fund of the Dominion Government. But, as long as the Dominion Government adheres to that contention, I do not think any arrangement can be made, because the provincial government contends that, as soon as the Indians are removed from that reserve, the land reverts to the province. The hon. gentleman sent Mr. McKenna, one of the officers of his department, to British Columbia to try to come to an arrangement with the provincial government. But, according to the correspondence, no agreement has been come to, and at the present time the matter is no more forward than it was two years ago. Can the hon. gentleman suggest any course that would bring about a compromise on this question? It seems to me there ought to be no difficulty. The provincial government offered to put the Indians on a new reservation, and pay the expense of removing them, on condition that the Dominion Government should agree that the old reservation was to be transferred to the province. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give the matter his earliest consideration, because it is a burning question in Victoria, outside of politics altogether. Every man in Victoria wants to see the Indians removed. Whether the land goes to the Dominion or to the province, is a matter of very little consequence to them, so long as the land can be made available for railway purposes or some other purpose.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite recognize the importance of the matter which the hon. gentleman has brought to my attention. About a year and a half ago the matter was urgently brought to my attention. It was represented to me that the people of Victoria, the authorities of the city, and the authorities of the province, were extremely anxious that proceedings should be taken for the removal of these Indians from the reserve near the city of Victoria, and the property acquired by the province or local authorities. I recognized the force of the suggestion that had been made, and, when I took charge of the department, the position was this. The department was being bombarded because it had not acted—because it had refused to negotiate with the province. I said at once that there was no reason why we should not meet the province and do what was reasonable and fair. I sent Mr. McKenna to Victoria to look into the whole question. He was selected because, some years before, he had made a report on the law relating to the Indians in British Columbia, and was very familiar with the whole subject. He went there, and negotiated for some time with the members of the government. Subsequently, I was there myself. The position, as the question came before me in the first instance, was this. The department was being asked to co-operate with the provincial government for the purpose of getting these Indians off the reserve, and we made a proposition, which the hon. gentleman has no doubt read. That proposition did not look to any benefit being derived by the Dominion Government. On the contrary, the Dominion Government agreed to assume the responsibility of taking the Indians from that reserve and placing them on another reserve, if certain things were done by the province, none of which would bring any benefit whatever to the Dominion Government. We simply acted as trustees. When I was in Victoria, I met the members of the late provincial government, and had a conference with them on the subject; and I was astounded to find that what they wanted was, not to get the Indians off the reserve, but to make some money out of the transaction for the province. It was not a case of wanting me to agree to the removal of these Indians, and to go to the expense of their removal, without the Dominion Government deriving any benefit, which I was perfectly willing to do; but they said that this was a valuable property, and that the provincial government wanted to make something out of it. I said that was an entirely different question; I had not understood that there was a financial question involved. I said to Mr. Eberts, the Attorney General, that I had understood that they were acting simply as a public-spirited body for the purpose of doing something for the benefit of the city of Victoria; and I was willing to help them. But I said to Mr. Eberts that the Dominion Government were in the position of trustees, and that we could not do more than the law prescribed. He raised the question of title. I said: "I cannot settle the question of title, neither can you; we are both lawyers, and one will have one opinion, and the other another opinion; but when the question is settled, the Dominion Government will abide by the decision. We do not tie ourselves up in advance, nor ask you to do so; we simply ask you to say that you will accept our proposition that any money derived from the sale of the property shall be dealt with in the way the law provides." I am still perfectly willing to carry out that proposition, and, if there is any money which by a subsequent decision is decided not to belong to the Dominion or to the Indians, but to the province, it will go to the province. I am willing to facilitate the decision of the question in any reasonable way. I think my hon. friend will admit that that is all I can possibly do. As representing the Indians, I can do no more than administer the trust as the law says I shall. I cannot give away trust funds without making the Government liable.

It being Six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. PRIOR. When the House adjourned at six o'clock, the hon. Minister of the Interior had just finished making a statement to the House with regard to the way in which the Songhees Indian reserve stands at present. I think his remarks went to establish that the title to these lands had not been determined by a court of law.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position is this. The Indian reserve was established before confederation, and the provincial government maintain that all that the Indians have is the usufructuary right of being upon the land and having the benefit of it so long as they choose to occupy it, but that as soon as they leave, their right expires, and the title is in the province. I do not positively say that that is not so, but I simply say that in my position as a trustee of the Indians, I cannot admit that pretension. If a court of law holds that that is so, that decision of course will relieve the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs of all responsibility. I must, however, have a valid decision, and it is the duty of the Government not to prevent that argument to go by default.

Mr. PRIOR. It seems to me that the Government should refer the question to the courts and have it settled at once, because until it is settled I suppose nothing can be done with regard to this and other reserves, the titles of which may be in dispute. I understand that it would be wrong for the Government, as trustee of the Indians, to give way, but it would be much fairer if the province or the city of Victoria, in this instance, would get any benefits that might accrue from taking these Indians and putting them on another reserve. When that reserve was given years ago, the land was of very little value, but it is now exceedingly valuable, and the rise in value is not due to anything the Indians have done but to the way in which the inhabitants and ratepayers of the city, right opposite the reservation, have built up the town. That being the case, I must say that if anybody is to get any benefit from the sale of this reserve, it ought to be either the province or the city, preferably the city. However, this matter is fully understood by the Minister and the provincial Government, and I do not suppose that anything I can say can throw any light on the subject. The only thing I can say is that if the title is in doubt, that doubt should be settled without delay, and I hope the hon. gentleman will do his best to have it settled and get these Indians off the reservation and settled somewhere else, and let the party entitled to it get the benefit.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I sympathize very largely with the hon. gentleman in his desire for a settlement. And I have in contemplation a proposition to the provincial government, which, I think, cannot be objected to, which will give them the opportunity of settling the question, if they are willing to do it.

Mr. MONK. I was not here when the decision arose as to the validity of the Indian title, but has it not been decided, in a case in the province of Ontario, that the Indian title reverts to the Crown, as represented by the province, should the Indians leave the reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As a lawyer, the hon. gentleman is perfectly familiar with the cases of which there are a number. In the St. Catharines Milling case, the decision of the judges went very far, and it is upon the strength of that decision that the provincial government takes the stand it does. But my hon. friend will see that the Indians have the right to stay on the reservation, and nobody else can have any right to it as long as they stay there, and it is my duty to see that the Indians, if they do leave, are put in as good a position as they would have been in if they had not moved.

Mr. PRIOR. Might I ask the hon. gentleman why these $2,000 are asked for in the item to provide an additional amount for surveys and reserves commission in British Columbia? There used to be a commission. Was not the Hon. Peter Reilly Commissioner for Indian reserves, and was he not put on the retired list because there was no more work to be done?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are accounts outstanding which it requires $2,000 to pay.

Mr. PRIOR. This was money spent without a vote?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We had a vote for expenses in connection with the reserve commission in British Columbia, but the expenses over-ran the amount voted.

There was a clerical error in resolution No. 69, made in the making up of the details. Under that resolution, there is an item to provide an additional amount for the purpose of supplies for destitute and working Indians in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, $3,000. In giving the details, I gave them, showing $12,800 odd. The next item is to provide a gratuity to Clara Baker, equal to one year's pay of her husband, W. M. Baker, who was killed while on duty. $400. That should have been $480, the error being a clerical one. I propose to decrease this $13,000 by $80 and to increase this other item to $480, which will not change the total amount.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although the supplementary Estimates are of chief importance for the moment, there are a few items in the main Estimates relating to the Indian Department which are almost of equal importance, for the reason that they apply to annuities to Indians falling due in the first week in July, and other like matters; and while we can explain to white men the cause of delay, it will not be so easy to explain to Indians. I think it would be desirable, if the committee would consent, that we should pass for a moment from the supplementary Estimates and take up the Indian items in the main Estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. What difference will that make, if the assent is not given to the Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We may have to take our Supply Bill in instalments, and if there is a first Supply Bill, it is well that it should contain these items, as the difference may be that between keeping faith and not keeping faith with the Indians. The principal item I propose is item 211 in the main Estimates. There are a number of items that are not controversial, and we might run through them. But if it is decided to take only the one item, I shall not object.

Mr. FOSTER. We had better take up this item 211 section by section.

Removal of Lake of Two Mountains Indians from Oka to Gibson $200

Mr. FOSTER. How long is that going on?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am afraid for a good many years yet.

Mr. SPROULE. That is rather an unsatisfactory answer. I think that item has appeared in the Estimates every year while I have been in this House over 20 years. If there is a settled policy with regard to this matter, it ought to be possible to carry it out within a reasonable limit of time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may explain that the department is under obligation to pay for the removal of those Indians who express a desire to leave. No money was spent under this head last year. The fact is that the arrangement made has turned out practically a failure, but we are bound to provide the money in case it may be needed.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that if any of the Indians desire to leave, this is to provide a fund for their removal?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes
Survey of Indian reserves..... $500

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these surveys going on?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When Indian lands are surrendered for sale, we have to send a surveyor to survey them.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was spent under this head last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Four hundred and ninety dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this apply to the survey of Indian lands on Georgian Bay, which has been taking place in late years?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; where the Indians have a fund, the survey is generally charged to that fund, but where there is none, we have to take the money voted by Parliament.

To assist in the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians belonging to bands in the older provinces, which have no funds of their own $500

Mr. FOSTER. What was done with this last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the facts as to that at hand. This is to provide a fund for incidental expenses. For instance, when an agent enters prosecution and has to employ a lawyer, we have this $500 to pay any expenses. It is to cover any special expenditure that may be incurred for this purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there many complaints on this score? I have been going through some correspondence of the department concerning attempts to suppress the selling of liquor to the Scugog Indians. I judge that there is not much success attending the efforts made to keep the Indians from being supplied with liquor. The correspondence I had covered two or three years, and it seemed to me the same Indians were drinking and drinking about the same amount. The great difficulty seemed to me, in the first place, to get the Indian agent to act promptly, and, in the second place, to get the evidence to convict the white provider of the liquor. But my hon. friend ought to be able to state generally if there is any improvement in that respect.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I realize the importance of the subject, but the question of preventing Indians from getting liquor is a most difficult one. There is some town near almost every Indian reserve, and there are a number of unscrupulous men who make it a business to supply Indians with liquor. While I was a resident of the North-west, I acted for some years as the representative of the Indian agent in one or two divisions, and had a good deal to do in connection with the attempt to prevent the sale of liquor to Indians. It is a most difficult thing to accomplish. A man may be fined for supplying liquor to Indians, and a few months afterwards we find somebody else endeavouring to do the same thing. I had a special conference with the inspector, Mr. Macrae, two or three times in regard to this subject, and he has undertaken to give it special attention, as a result of which we may look for some little improvement in the future.

To provide for the erection of a lock-up at St. Régis $500

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Everybody will understand the necessity of that. There has been no lock-up on the reserve, and if there had been one when the original troubles took place some years ago, this later trouble might not have occurred. There are 500 or 600 Indians on the reserve.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say to the Minister that it was supposed this afternoon we would go on with the supplementaries. I want to reserve one item in these Estimates for general discussion for those gentlemen who are not now present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow the two votes which will include annuities to go through, we will be glad, on anything that is reserved, to allow the whole matter to be taken up.

Indians, Manitoba and North-west Territories—
Annuities and commutations $135,825

Mr. FOSTER. Does this vote take in the annuities for the Peace River and Athabaska district?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Last year we voted a gratuity of $7 per head, and that is dropped out. We pay the gratuity when the treaty is made. But we estimated for it in the supplementaries which we went over this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. What are you going to do with these treaty Indians in the next financial year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We pay them an annuity, but the other was a gratuity. The gratuity which was voted for the current year we will send to the commissioners and check it off for the current year. It will be actually paid by them during the next fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the gratuity for the current year.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They only get a gratuity once. They get a gratuity of $7 per head, and an annuity of $5 per head. We have estimated for the gratuity in the supplementaries of this year.

Mr. FOSTER. While the Indians remain under treaty you do not allow them to change their annuity into a lump sum?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. There have been a few cases of that kind in the past, but I have never done it.

Implements, tools and hardware..... $12,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This estimate covers the cost of implements and tools to replace those that are worn out and useless; it covers also those that are required by the Indians who are commencing farming operations, and having been in the industrial schools, require to be assisted. All the persons who leave the industrial schools require to be assisted. A large portion of the estimate is for the purchase of materials to make necessary repairs. In several of the agencies there are Indians who have chiefly maintained themselves by hunting, and who now desire settling on reserves and commencing farming. We are increasing the vote to give some assistance to them in the way of implements, wagons and harness. This applies to the Blackfeet reserve to some considerable extent. The Indians of the Blackfeet reserve particularly will want this year a small supply of wagons and harness to enable them to put up hay for their cattle. I am informed that the Blackfeet and the Piegan Indians are showing greater aptitude to stay upon the reserves and engage in farming operations than formerly, and the commissioner thinks that it would be good policy to assist them by giving them a little more help.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend do with the graduates from the industrial schools? A boy comes out of an industrial school after he has gone through his course. What aid is given to him in the way of implements, or the like of that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are willing to do everything we can to get them to settle down and go farming. I may say that there is very great difficulty in arriving at the proper policy to pursue in regard to the Indians that come from these industrial schools. I found a policy, when I took hold of the department, of permitting Indian boys and girls to remain in the schools much longer than, in my judgment, it is good policy to do. The authorities of the schools seemed to manifest a fear that if the pupils were allowed to leave the schools, they would not turn out well. I think that that was not showing much faith in the work, because I thought that after these boys and girls had completed their course at the schools they ought to be turned out to work and allowed to maintain themselves. I have pressed that upon the Indian Commissioner, from time to time, as vigorously as I can and also of the necessity of restricting the age limit within which Indian girls would be permitted to stay in these industrial schools. The difficulty, I may say, applies more to the girls than to the boys, because the girls do not manifest any desire to go back and live on the reserves, and hon. members will understand that it is not desirable that they should go out from the schools unprotected and with no person to look after them. As far as possible the commissioner is pursuing the policy of trying to get them to settle down and live a civilized life. When the young men are willing to do that assistance will be given under this arrangement.

Mr. WILSON. To what extent?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Fifty or sixty dollars is the amount which is generally expended for the purpose of assisting the pupil to start in his occupation.

Mr. FOSTER. In whatever trade he goes at?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It depends a good deal on the trade.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that in the way of tools or implements? I suppose tools and implements are given, and not money?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How are these tools bought; by tender or by giving an order to some firm?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The articles are, generally speaking, purchased by tender. The Indian Commissioner makes an estimate each year of what he will require, and under this estimate tenders are advertised for in the ordinary way. If any small amount is required beside the larger amount which the tender calls for, suddenly, or where time is an object, the commissioner buys it if he considers the price to be reasonable, but the amount purchased in that way is trifling.

Mr. SPROULE. What arrangement is made for the care of these tools from year to year? It is said that they sometimes take bad care of them. Is there any effort made to instruct them to take care of the tools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. We have upon the larger reserves farming instructors, and I understand that they are almost without exception capable men. Speaking from recollection, there are some reserves where the number of Indians is not sufficient to warrant the maintenance of a separate farming instructor. The agent in such a case is generally a farmer, and the agent, and in the other case, the instructor, have to pay special attention to the care of the implements and to the farming operations of the Indians. Great success has attended the efforts that have been made to get the Indians to raise cattle. I cannot say that such great success has attended the efforts that have been made to get them to follow farming in the way of raising grain. Their nomadic habits are hard to eradicate; it is hard to get them to settle down to sustained labour. But the raising of cattle is much more in accordance with their disposition, and they are much more successful in that than in other farming operations. However, I think, on the whole, that satisfactory progress has been made.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you find, on the whole, from your returns, that they are taking up agriculture? Do they raise much more grain, vegetables and roots for their own use than they did a few years ago? What is your experience?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our experience is that there is a gradual and steady improvement. Of course, I could not give the hon. gentleman exact figures without taking the statistics from the report. The hon. gentleman will find them pretty fully in the reports of the different agencies.

Mr. WILSON. You say you buy these implements by tender. Do the parties tendering supply them as you want them, or do you buy them in quantities and keep them in store?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general custom, I think, has been that they are supplied and warehoused, to be called upon when wanted.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case I notice that there is an increase of $4,000. Is it expected that you will have a larger number of industrial school scholars to take up agricultural life in the coming year than heretofore?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The principal increase is on the Blackfoot and Piegan reserves.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the Blackfoot and Piegan reserves? Do you expect a larger number to take up agricultural pursuits this year, or the coming year, than in the previous year? If it were otherwise it must indicate that they are taking very poor care of their implements, for being once supplied they should not require to have an increased supply.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The principal increase is for the purpose of supplying the Blackfoot and Piegan Indians with implements, with the implements they have not heretofore had, so that it does not indicate any lack of care on their part. I do not, however, want the hon. gentleman to think that I am saying that the Indians take first-class care of their implements. The agents and instructors are instructed to see that the implements are properly cared for.

Mr. FOSTER. When we come to discuss the item which has been reserved, I trust the Minister will be prepared to give the committee a brief but at the same time full statement, concerning the operations and results of the Indian educational system for which we are paying an immense amount of money. I have never yet been satisfied, that we got a return for the nearly one-half million dollars we are spending yearly for the education of the Indians. The annual report of the Minister, no doubt, gives a great deal of information, but if the hon. gentleman would make a short and comprehensive statement of this in the House, it would be the best way to give a general publicity. I would like him to give the committee shortly, but as fully as he can, the results of the Indian school system, industrial and otherwise. I wish, also, he would give what are the results that are coming in the way of agricultural progress. Are we making any progress in reclaiming the Indians from their wasteful and nomadic habits of life, down to the settled condition of an agricultural population? Our money has been poured out like water for these two purposes, and I have never been convinced that we are getting what we ought to get in return for the immense amount of money we expend. I wish information with reference to these young boys and girls who come out of the schools where we educate them for two or three years. What becomes of them? Do they drift into the old tribal state; do they go to ruin amongst civilization, or do they set out for themselves in any condition of life, which, while not on the plane of our civilization, perhaps, is still a distinct advance over Indian life.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will be happy to give the House full information as to this, and also my own views on the subject, which I have formed as the result of living in the North-west for years. I have to some extent modified my views by my experience in the department, but I am bound to say that I do not give full approval to all that we are doing in connection with Indian education. I will explain my reason for that when I make the statement to the House. Hon. gentlemen will understand, that a Minister taking charge of a department with a large and expensive system established, does not feel free to inaugurate an entirely new system, and thus destroy the effect of the money which has been previously expended. I will be glad if the House will, on an opportune occasion, take a few hours to discuss the matter.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. McMULLEN. The request of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) is an opportune one, and I am glad the Minister of the Interior has promised to make such a statement to the House. For many years, when in Opposition, I criticised the expenditure connected with Indians in the North-west, for I never could see that the country got the benefit of the money expended. I trust that the Minister will be able to make some suggestions with a view of cutting down the expenditure in connection with these Indian institutions. It is well that the country should deal kindly and liberally with the Indians, but, at the same time, I fear that the country receives no adequate return for the money spent.

Mr. DAVIN. As to the question of the Indian schools in the territories, it is very natural that the results should seem to be inadequate. To educate the children of savages taken from the tepee, is, of course, an arduous task, but the results have been surprising. The adaptability of the Indian child for education, and especially for technical training, is of a high order. Where the education of the Indian fails, is, that when the child is taught to read and write, to cast accounts, to understand a trade, in fact, to become useful members of society; then the adolescent seventeen or eighteen years old goes back to the tepee, and one year there, while it will not entirely destroy the technical or literary education, will in a very short time entirely destroy—especially in the case of the girls—all the practical training by which good habits have been imparted. Although I am a supporter of these schools, I will go so far as to say, that unless the Indian Department in some way provides that the children of our Indian schools shall be launched for life, it is very hard to resist the contention of those who maintain that the money spent on this education is to some extent thrown away. The argument of those who oppose our efforts to educate the Indians have a tremendous support from seeing numbers of these children going back to the habits of the savage who has to be cared for by the Government. But, even so, I would not yield to the view which gentlemen on both sides of the House take, that we are to look at the money spent on the education of the Indians in the same way as we would look upon money invested for other purposes. If you invest money for any other purpose, I admit at once that the true tests are: What are the results, does the success balance the outlay; but I will not admit that principle in the case of Indian children, for I contend that we have a duty to discharge to those people. We have taken their lands; we arrested them in a stage, no doubt, of very primitive progress, but still a stage of progress. If left to themselves, they probably would have worked out a civilization, and gradually have passed through the various stages which our own race have passed through, passing from the savage to the quasi-civilized man, and then to the man of complete civilization, which most of us flatter ourselves, I am afraid vainly, we belong to. There is scarcely an Indian school in the North-west Territories which I have not visited, and there is not one of them—I will be perfectly frank about it—which, while sometimes filling you with surprise at the capacity of the Indian child for receiving education, will also fill you with discouragement and sometimes even with despair, because undoubtedly you see great rocks ahead. When you trace the history of one child after another who has gone to these schools, you find in many cases that they go back to the tepee, and then relapse into the position of the reserve Indian. I grant that it is discouraging; and you could make a strong argument on behalf of those who doubt the wisdom of spending so much money on the education of the Indian child. So that I would urge the Minister to consider whether he cannot go a step further. What occurs to me is that it is very undesirable to take into these schools children that any man of common sense will know cannot be educated into useful citizens; but if the children were selected, and then the department, carrying its guardianship still further, after teaching these selected children a trade, would take care to launch them in life, it would be more advantageous to educate fewer, and to perfect, so to speak, the civilization of the fewer, than to educate, as at present, a certain number up to a certain standard, and have them when called on to pass examinations and make apparently a very respectable showing; but when you come to look at the result as swelling the stream of civilized life, you find that after all very little has been done. Seeing that efforts are made to lower the cost of our Mounted Police, while keeping it up to its present standard, the educated Indians might be made use of for scouts. A small force under the control of the commissioner, and officered, of course, by white men, would cost very little. All they would want would be ponies and rations. By and by the population of our territories will be greatly increased, and the problem of dealing with the North-west will be multiplied, and new problems will suggest themselves; and I am inclined to think that a subsidiary body to the Mounted Police, composed of young educated Indians used for scouts for service along the border or in any portion of the country where pure scouting would be required, would furnish almost an ideal force. While admitting that there is a great deal to be said in the way of adverse criticism, I think that Parliament, conscious of what it owes to the redman, and what it has taken from him, and of our duty as guardians, will never be ready to look at this matter as one of mere pounds, shillings and pence.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the Minister tell us how many scholars are attending these schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number of Indian children attending day schools is 2,476, boarding schools, 902, and industrial schools, 1,146.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the department supply them with books, maps and everything they require?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. In the industrial schools we pay so much a head. Most of the schools are managed by the religious denominations, subject to supervision by officers of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there many of these denominational schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the general system.

Mr. GILLIES. How many are engaged in teaching in the day schools, and what is the average salary of each teacher?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are seventy-two teachers of day schools, one teacher for each school. The standard salary paid is $300. I would not say there is no exception to that, but that is the general rule.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice, in a tabulated report given in the Auditor General's volume, G-12, a statistical review of the whole situation, and I find that the item of supplies for the destitute is a very large portion of the whole vote. It amounts altogether to $182,718, and in some of the agencies I see that it is almost tantamount to keeping the whole crowd, unless they are very numerous. One of the agencies cost $37,493 for supplies for the destitute, and another $26,000, and another $17,000, and so on. It would look as if in some of the agencies destitution is the rule.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The item is for supplies for destitute and working Indians. It is quite impossible or some reserves to get the Indians to do any work, unless the agent supplies them with food and other necessary provisions while they are doing that work. That is why in this item we use the words "supplies for destitute and working Indians." Then, we have in this vote the money necessary for the purpose of supplying cattle with hay. The cattle are the property of the Government, and the Indians, when attending to the cattle, have to be supplied with provisions by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. The heading in this tabulated summary is rather a misnomer. It ought to be: "Supplies for destitute and working Indians." But evidently these Indians do not do much work. The whole amount of seed that has been supplied to them on the Blackfoot agency is $108, and they had to get $37,000 worth of provisions. The whole amount of agricultural implements supplied them is $377. It would seem as if almost the sole business of that agency was to consume the food supplied for the destitute.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the divisions of this particular vote. The entire vote for the North-west Territories amounts to $175,459. Out of that, the food supply was $151,380; ammunition, $3,970; clothing, $6,080; medicines and medical attendance, $11,060; hospital, $2,915; small items, $1,050.

Mr. FOSTER. What about this agency which eats up $37,400--the Blackfeet agency?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The larger portion of the expenditure is for the Blood, Blackfoot and Piegan reserves, where up to the present the Indians have not done a great deal in the way of agriculture, but are just beginning to show an aptitude for it. On the more advanced and older reserves, the Indians are largely self-supporting.

Mr. FOSTER. On what system are these supplies given?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Daily rations are supplied, just like military rations.

Mr. FOSTER. What do the Blood and the Blackfoot agencies contribute in the way of getting their own living?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They have been doing some hunting. They go away during certain seasons, hunting, and they have been doing a little in the way of raising cattle, but not very much. Up to the present their subsistence depends on hunting and what they get from the Government. The increase in the vote for agricultural implements is due to the fact that they are manifesting a little more aptitude and desire to settle down on the reserve. I might give one fact as an indication of what the officers of the department have been doing for some years past, and I have made no change in that respect. I found that they had been buying supplies for the reserve from the Indians, and that they had been paying the Indians higher prices for beef than the beef could have been purchased for by tender, and they did it to encourage the Indians to raise beef which the Indians themselves are eating.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a case where an Indian, for once, got ahead of the white man.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are the children on the reserve compelled to attend those schools?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are not sufficient schools. The Government is constantly being urged to provide more schools.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the number you have given include the very considerable number of children taken charge of by the various religious denominations and being educated in denominational schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically, there is no system of denominational schools, except that supported by the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite understand there is no Government system, but I understand that the different religious denominations are educating Indian children and supplying them with clothing very largely. Are those the same children that you have charge of?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No doubt they are. A church may have large schools and get from this Government a grant of so much per head of the pupils. There may be fifty more pupils in any one of those schools than we are paying a grant for. Adherents of the church contribute money for the schools, and in most of the schools, particularly the boarding schools, there is a considerably larger number of pupils than we are paying the grant for.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. Minister tell us the number of denominational schools, the denomination to which they belong, and the number of pupils attending each?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 72 day schools with 2,476 pupils. Of these schools, 47 are Church of England, 10 Roman Catholic, 3 Presbyterian and 12 Methodist. Of boarding schools there are 29 with 902 pupils. Of the boarding schools, 8 are Church of England, 14 Roman Catholic, 5 Presbyterian and 2 Methodist. There are 10 industrial schools with 1,146 pupils. Of these schools 4 are Church of England, 3 Roman Catholic, 1 Presbyterian and 2 Methodist.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is given to each of these schools per scholar?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They vary. That is one thing I intended to refer to when I speak on the subject at length. I will give a regular scheduled statement. There seems to have been no regular rule adopted. The accountant of the department tells me that the amount runs from $100 to $125; my own recollection is that there are some as low as $80, and some as high as $150. I have the information here, but it is in a form which would require the reading of a good many pages of the report to give the hon. gentleman what he wishes to know.

Mr. SPROULE. In the statement he is to make, will the Minister be good enough to say what amount is given to each school per scholar, and what percentage of the full number attending each school is paid for?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very well. In the item of day, boarding and industrial schools in which $276,473 has been asked, there is, as hon. gentlemen will see, a reduction of $15,195. There is a reduction of $19,200 by reason of the fact that last year there was a vote for building the industrial school at Elk Horn which was burned down. There is also a reduction in the number of pupils at Brandon.

Surveys $5,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Some of the reserves in the settled part of the North-west Territories are not actually occupied by Indians. In these cases we are getting them surrendered and surveyed so that they can be settled upon. The money can be funded for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think my hon. friend could take this out of the general vote for surveys of the North-west. Why debit that to the Indians? This is really an advantage to the Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know that I would consent to that. But it occurred to me that it might be made a charge against the reserves under sale.

Mr. FOSTER. When the reserves are sold does the money go for the benefit of the Indians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, it is funded for their benefit.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that the cost of survey should come from that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has never been done, but I think it might be done.

Sioux $5,057 50

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman buying Sioux, or what is this vote for?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for the reserves on which are the Sioux Indians who came across from Minnesota and who settled on reserves west of Brandon. This is for the general expenses of the reserve.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are there on the reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are several reserves—Bird Tail, 73 Indians; Oak River, 302 Indians; Oak Lake, 61 Indians; Turtle Mountain, 11 Indians.

Grist and saw-mills..... $1,097 50

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these mills are operated for the benefit of the Indians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to bring that point up again, as I have not the information at hand.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that the items charged are too small in some cases to employ men to run these mills. On what principle do you run them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The department has a miller to take charge of the mill, whose salary is included in the vote for general expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you grind any grain in these mills for the white settlers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

General expenses..... $128,025

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This vote covers practically the entire salaries in the Indian service in Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these millers have you?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Two or three. We pay them $40 a month and expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to this item of general expenses, it bears a very large proportion to the total vote for the Indians. It is nearly one-fifth of all the money spent on the Manitoba and North-west Indians. That seems an immense appropriation. For instance, the commissioner's office in Winnipeg costs nearly $34,000, then, there is a very large and expensive department here at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically, the commissioner's office as it before existed, has been entirely abolished, that is to say, the commissioner does not do departmental work at all. When I took charge I abolished the system whereby the commissioner did departmental business directly with the agent. The agents corresponded with the commissioner, to whom their returns were all sent in, then they were checked over and had to be sent down down here and gone over again. There may have been an object some years ago in this system when the communication was very slow, but there is no object in doing so now. The commissioner at Winnipeg has to oversee the work, he has to receive and check over the reports of the inspectors, he has to make recommendations in respect to all the work for the next year. He is responsible for the whole work, but he does not do it in detail. He gets information from the inspectors' reports, and checks up what is required for each year, and makes the estimate for the year. We make our estimate upon that. The staff consists of the commissioner himself, his secretary, an accountant, who spends part of the time here and part of the time there, who was the chief clerk in the commissioner's office at Regina, Mr. Paget. The commissioner gets $3,200, the secretary, $1,500, Mr. Paget, $1,500, a stenographer, $600, another stenographer, $280, a clerk, $900, office boy, $360, and there are $800 for clerical assistance. There are none there but who are absolutely necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Now that we have an Imperial limited running through, and telegraph wires at hand, what is the necessity for having a re-duplication in Winnipeg of the office here? It is now only about 40 hours between Ottawa and Winnipeg, or two nights and a day. Only one day of real working time is saved. Then the telegraph wire is an instant communication. Has not the time come when that office, so far as it is a re-duplication of work here, or a checking over of work which might be done here—when that office might be absorbed entirely in this?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The chief argument against the hon. gentleman's suggestion is that the travelling expenses of the officers going up there and coming in here, would necessarily be very heavy. For instance, if the commissioner is at Winnipeg, the various inspectors doing their duties in the North-west come down to Winnipeg and discuss the matters with him. He gets their reports, and it is much more satisfactory to have a personal discussion with the commissioner than merely to report. I do not see how we could manage to make any saving if the commissioner wished to carry on the work in that way. If we had the commissioner here the inspectors would have to come down here to consult with him, and he would probably have to go out there quite often. It seems to me that for the present, at least, not much would be gained by bringing them down here. I do not think the system would be quite as efficient. The inspectors coming into Winnipeg maintain to some extent personal relations with the work of the department, and that is a distinct advantage in the way of keeping up efficiency. I do not think that the work could be done so efficiently if we did not have the commissioner located at Winnipeg.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is reasonable as far as the commissioner himself goes, and I suppose the commissioner must have secretarial work beside in that office. But there are seven salaries. Why should you have an accountant there. What you want to do is to keep within touching distance of your inspectors. You have to make your inspectors responsible for the work of the agents. When you say that you want to keep them in touch with the department here you can do that under the present circumstances by having your commissioner in Winnipeg where the hon. gentleman can have communication with him personally, and frequently. But why have a whole system of accounts up there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have said something which has misled the hon. gentleman. I do not mean that there is a system of accounts kept there, because there is not. Mr. Paget is specially well acquainted with the accounts of the agencies. It is difficult for a man who has not special knowledge of the accounts to get along when the Estimates are being made up. The commissioner makes up the Estimates that the department passes before recommending them to Parliament. All these items which are voted are worked out almost to a single cent, and this involves a considerable amount of work. The commissioner has a very considerable amount of work in cutting down excessive demands that are made by the agencies, and he requires a man for doing that who is thoroughly versed in the accounts here and at the agencies. Mr. Paget has been doing that work, and he is specially fitted for it. He spends a portion of his time up there, and after he is done, he comes down here to the department. In addition to Mr. Paget there is a secretary, Mr. Lash, who manages the office when the commissioner is visiting the agencies. There are also two typewriters and two clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. There are seven men paid, and $800 is taken for clerical work besides. What strikes me is that the work which my hon. friend has done there could be done here. You must have your commissioner in Winnipeg and he must have a secretary, but what is the need of having four or five men besides? What are these other men doing besides the commissioner and his secretary? We have two typewriters, one clerk at $900, and a junior at $360.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will see that the commissioner carries on a very considerable correspondence.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he has to have a secretary and a typewriter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say this, that the staff think that they have been over-worked rather than under-worked, and the suggestion was made to me, when a change was made in the commissioner's office that the staff ought to be made larger. I refused to sanction any additions because I think the same thing as the hon. gentleman, that the work of the commissioner's office should be minimized as much as possible. I quite appreciate what the hon. gentleman says, and my own desires are in the same direction as his, and if there is any possibility of reducing the staff I am prepared to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, there is a great amount of correspondence.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The inspectors come into the office, when they are in Winnipeg and a good deal of their correspondence with agencies is conducted through the office. That adds a certain amount of work.

Indians, British Columbia—

Salaries $19,840

Mr. McINNES. Mr. Chairman, in connection with these Estimates for Indians in British Columbia, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to a peculiarity in connection with these expenditures which I have noticed in the Estimates for a number of years, and of which I have never received any explanation. I find by the Indian Report that last year the Indian population of British Columbia is given as 24,973; the Indian population of Manitoba as 6,716, and of the North-west Territories as 14,600. That is to say, the total population of the whole of the prairies, Manitoba and the North-west Territories, amounts to 21,316, whereas in British Columbia we have an Indian population of 24,973, over 3,000 more. Notwithstanding that, in British Columbia there are over 3,000 more Indians than on the prairies, we find that for the coming year there is proposed to be expended for the prairie Indians $766,047.50, and for the British Columbia Indians $124,710, or in other words, just one-sixth of what is proposed to be expended upon the Indians of the prairie. There may be some explanation of this, and I should be very glad to hear it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give my hon. friend (Mr. McInnes) the explanation. The explanation is that the Indians of British Columbia are very much better able to take care of themselves than those of the prairies. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the Indians of British Columbia are, as a rule, men who work for wages, and are fairly well able to take care of themselves. I may say to my hon. friend that in discussing the question of Indian administration there with public men, some of them have suggested to me that the Dominion Government did too much for the Indians of British Columbia, as they were perfectly capable of taking care of themselves. I am quite sure that my hon. friend would not suggest, for the purpose of increasing the expenditure there, that we should practically waste money in pauperizing Indians who are doing pretty well for themselves now. The policy of the Government is to try and get them to take care of themselves as rapidly as possible. The Indians of Manitoba and the North-west Territories are the hardest Indians in Canada to deal with, because of the fact that they are the farthest removed from the ordinary type of the workingman. They are the hardest to get settled down to work.

Mr. McINNES. I am pleased to hear the opinion of the hon. Minister of our Indians, and to hear it echoed by the House. I have no doubt that the Indians of British Columbia are superior to the Indians of the prairies, and that they are practically self-sustaining, for whereas the Indians on the plains have now to have $190,000 spent to relieve their destitution, the Indians in British Columbia only require something like $3,500. That proves it. I did not have any special reference to the amount proposed to be expended in the way of relieving distress; I had more particular reference to the maintenance of schools; and there is no reason given in the Minister's explanation why the Indians on the prairie should have greater educational facilities than the Indians in British Columbia. For the education of the Indians on the prairies there is no less a sum spent than $276,433; but for a similar purpose in British Columbia, with more Indians, there is expended the comparatively insignificant sum of $59,000. If our Indians in British Columbia are more intelligent, more energetic, and more thrifty, as the Minister says, then, that is the very reason why they are more susceptible to education and should have a larger grant for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. McInnes) would not suggest that we should start in to administer the department on the basis of evening up the expenditure, on the ground that the Indians of one part of the country were getting more than Indians of another. That might be a good thing theoretically, but it is not practical. I have recognized the fact that the Indians of British Columbia were not getting such assistance, educationally, as they ought, and I have made some slight move in the direction of remedying that. Of course, my hon. friend (Mr. McInnes) will appreciate my desire to cut down the expenses, as far as possible.

British Columbia Indians—

Office and miscellaneous (including hospitals, irrigation and dyking, suppression of liquor traffic)..... $10,920

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot find the Auditor General's account for expenditure in miscellaneous in British Columbia. There is one thing which seems to be always with us; that is, that reserve commission in British Columbia. That has existed from time immemorial, and seems to have everlasting life, as long as the funds last.

Mr. GIBSON. A good salary attached to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, good salaries; but are we never to get to the end of the work of the reserve commission in British Columbia? What is that commission doing now besides taking in the salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The information we have from the inspector is, that the work has been pretty nearly completed.

Mr. FOSTER. That identical information met my ears in 1882, when I first came into this House, and every year I was a Minister it was the one explanation that was given.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It struck me exactly as it struck the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), and I am sure the hon. gentleman will give me credit for cutting the expenditure down.

Mr. EARLE. Who are the commissioners?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Vowell is the commissioner on behalf of the Government.

Mr. EARLE. But he is a salaried officer, and his pay does not come out of this vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Judge O'Reilly was the commissioner.

Mr. EARLE. But not at present.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We retired him, and I think he was entitled to a pension.

Mr. EARLE. But not from your department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. Mr. Vowell has had charge of it since.

Mr. EARLE. Mr. Vowell is the Indian agent, and his salary would not come out of this vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. These are simply the expenses of doing the work, when a party is sent out to make a survey.

Mr. EARLE. My impression is, that the work of surveying is entirely over, and that the only work now being carried on is office work. While we are on this item, I would like to ask the Minister in regard to an application made for a school on the west coast of Vancouver Island, or for an additional allowance to the Kuper Island School at Alberni.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, we have a vote for a new school.

Mr. EARLE. I would suggest to the Minister that before establishing a school there, he should have the matter looked into very closely, because I think that the greater number of Indians are at Barclay Sound, while there are very few at Alberni. The Indians at Barclay Sound are located in nearly the same locality, so that a school there would reach almost the entire population of the west coast Indians.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Since I gave instructions to have the item included in the Estimates, the fact to which the hon. gentleman refers has been called to my attention, and the item has been left subject to the consideration whether the money is to be paid or not.

Mr. FOSTER. We have not got to the bottom of this commission, and I propose to spend a few moments to find out what it is doing.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The sum asked for on account of surveys and reserve commission is for the purpose of having the reserves already laid off surveyed and completed, as much confusion and inconvenience often arises in connection with unfinished reserves, especially when the same are allowed to remain seven or eight years in that condition. Some of the localities where such surveys are yet to be made are remote, and consequently high prices are necessary. Then there are several localities not yet visited by the reserve commissioner, where reserves have to be made for the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite understand that if you have surveyors, you must have axemen and survey men; but why do you require a commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That I have done away with. When I came in, a separate gentleman who was reserve commissioner, but I did away with that office, and transferred the duties to Superintendent Vowell.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, all that is being done in surveying is being done by surveyors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. GILLIES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how many Indians there are in the province of Nova Scotia, and the counties in which these Indians are?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will find the information on page 410 of the report of the Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. GILLIES. I would draw the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that though the Indians of Nova Scotia, especially the Micmac tribe, are constantly decreasing, the expenses in the way of salaries and medical attendance are increasing. This year, in the main Estimates, a vote of $300 is demanded for the medical attendance of the Indians of Nova Scotia, about 2,000, and in the supplementary Estimates, the hon. gentleman is asking for $700 more. Then, for salaries we have the very large sum of $1,100. So that in salaries and medical attendance alone, for the few Indians down there, we are spending $4,100; whereas for assistance to the Indians we spend only $2,000. I wish to draw attention further to the fact that in the Estimates for former years, for medical attendance in Nova Scotia, when the population of the Indians was greater than now, the sum was much less. In 1894, the vote for medical attendance was only $2,000, when the Indians were very much more numerous than they are to-day, and yet, to-day that service is costing $3,000. In my own county, where the number of Indians is only 120, the medical attendance of last year cost $133.98. The Indians in the county of Richmond are all on the Salmon River Reserve, and that reserve is five or six miles away from where the attendant physician lives, so that I can scarcely understand how the sum for medical attendance should amount to so much, particularly in view of the fact that the charge for medical attendance upon that very reserve years ago was in no year over $50 or $60.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) for drawing my attention to a matter with which he is, no doubt, personally more familiar than I. I may explain to the House that there is a constant contest between the officers of the department and the gentlemen who do this work with regard to these accounts. In 1895-96, the last year of the administration of the late Government, the amount expended on this service was $2,997. In 1896-97 it was $2,977, being $20 less, and in 1897-98, $3,005, so that, there has only been a variation of a few dollars in those three years. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we are doing the best we can to keep the accounts down as much as possible.

Steamer "Vigilant"..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are you doing with that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was built in 1890 for the use of the agent on the north-west coast.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it used exclusively by the agent?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, it cost $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What size is it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have seen it and I think it is about 45 feet long.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not quite large enough for an excursion steamer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is just a small steam yacht.

Mr. FOSTER. Not used for jaunting purposes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the "Quadra" is the one that my hon. friend and his colleagues used.

Mr. FOSTER. At the present time it is being quite extensively used.

J. A. Macrae, inspector of Indian agencies and reserves $1,600

Mr. FOSTER. Are you giving him an increase of salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $200.

Mr. FOSTER. How long ago was he appointed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He came to Ottawa in 1894. Previous to that he was inspector in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, certainly in the service of the department. I can remember myself that he has been working for the Indian Department from 1885.

Legislation—

Senate $6,573

Mr. SPEAKER. In connection with this item of legislation, I would like to say a few words, with the permission of the committee, about a matter which was discussed a few days ago when I was in the Chair, and of course could not correct any misapprehensions. Before I give up dealing in any respect with that stationery item, as I intend to do, I would like to say a few words with regard to it, so that it may be a little clearer perhaps than it is to-day. As to the amount applicable for the purchase of stationery for this House, in 1896 a motion was carried in the House to the effect:

That the practice of supplying each Senator and member of the House of Commons with a leather trunk and a box of stationery be discontinued in future, and the Order of the House sanctioning the same be rescinded.

Now, up to that time there was a vote of $12,000 for stationery for the use of the House of Commons. This resolution having passed, the Government reduced the vote from $12,000 to $8,000, at which it has remained since. Of course there has not been the same opportunity of purchasing stationery and filling boxes for members of the House with the $8,000 vote that there was with the $12,000 vote. After that reduction had been made the Committee on Printing, in 1898, recommended in one of their reports, which was carried:

That the members, officers and those on the official list of the Press Gallery of the House of Commons, should be provided for their use with stationery in every particular equal to that supplied to the members of the Senate.

Well, there was no change in the vote for that purpose, and the hon. members of the Senate, I understand, receive very fine boxes of stationery. Boxes of stationery have been abolished by the action of this House, so that the report of the committee in 1898, and which was repeated again in the report that was brought before the House the other day, seems rather inconsistent with the action of the House, and in view of the amount of the finances at the disposal of whoever has to deal with the stationery. Now, after the session of 1898, when the suggestion was made that although the House had decided not to have stationery trunks for the members, still stationery trunks should be supplied to the members--when that was passed, the head of the stationery department, Mr. Clarke, came to me and asked what he was to do about it. That was since last session. He asked if it would be safe for me to give him an order for stationery in every particular equal to that supplied to Senators, and he informed me it would require a very much larger sum than the vote passed last session for that purpose. I communicated with the leader of the Government to ascertain if I would be warranted in supposing they would increase that grant for the stationery estimate, and there was no encouragement whatever given to me that that would be done. Therefore, I instructed Mr. Clarke to confine his purchase to the $8,000, which he did. Then, when the other day, the report was submitted to the House again repeating the suggestion about the very fine stationery we should get, Mr. Clarke wrote me a letter as to the purchase for the next year, and pointed out in that letter that it would cost $8,730 more than the vote of $8,000 which was in the Estimates, the usual vote as it now stands. I wrote to him that I could only repeat what I had told him before that the Government refused to increase the grant for stationery above $8,000, but that if the Printing Committee would provide the funds for that purpose, well and good, otherwise he would have to keep within the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this vote supposed to cover? Is it the stationery the members use, or that which is used by the press, and the clerks, and the general staff of the House of Commons?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is supposed to cover 291 persons altogether, who get a supply of stationery, and who get the trunks of stationery. There are 213 members, 9 of the "Hansard" staff, 10 translators, and the Clerk tells me an average of 56 reporters in the Press Gallery, and 3 officers of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What, 56 reporters! There is not room in the Press Gallery for them all.

Mr. SPEAKER. They are officially certified members of the Press Gallery. For the Senate only 80 trunks of stationery are supplied, and they have $8,000 to do it with, while we have $8,000 for the whole number I have mentioned. Then in addition to these I have mentioned, all the officials of the House of Commons, in all the departments, have received out of this supply of stationery all that they want during the session. The members receive all that they want during the session, all that they requisition for. Thousands upon thousands of certain kinds of envelopes, for instance, are used by the members. The press are supplied during the session. So the demands upon the stationery are very great, and it is exceedingly hard, I know, for the clerk of the stationery department to meet the requirements of the House without going further.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the requisitions for stationery countersigned by the Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. No. During the session an hon. member gets what he wants.

Mr. FOSTER. Any one of the 291.

Mr. SPEAKER. Any one of the 213, at any rate. Members of the House get what they want, and others who are on the list get what is reasonable, as asked for from time to time. Some hon. members seem to require a very great deal more than others during the session.

Another point I would like to say a word about is as to the parties supplying the stationery. I was informed that ever since confederation much the largest portion of the stationery had been purchased from firms in Great Britain, and very little in Canada. About two years ago Mr. Clarke reported to me that some excellent samples had been submitted to him of pads and envelopes and other stationery by Messrs. Warwick Bros. & Rutter of Toronto, at fair prices; in fact, he said they had showed samples as good in quality as the English and quoted the English prices. I told him it was a pity not to buy part of the stationery in Canada if it could be had as good and as cheap as it had been got from England. In 1897 and 1898 Mr. Clarke ordered pads and other goods to the extent of about $1,000, and in the present year, he extended the order for envelopes, &c., to the extent of $2,372. He ordered altogether from Canadian firms $2,479. He ordered from firms in Great Britain $5,478 worth; from Bavaria $112; from the United States $260, and from the Government stationery office, $102.

Mr. FOSTER. What came from Bavaria?

Mr. SPEAKER. Faber's pencils, I believe.

Mr. WALLACE. Were the goods ordered from Canadian firms of Canadian manufacture?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand so. It will be seen that less than one-third of the whole vote of $8,000 was spent with Canadian firms even this year. Early this session Mr. Clarke reported to me that among these supplies were envelopes from Messrs. Warwick Bros. & Rutter, which were very inferior, and not up to the sample. He said the same thing, to a certain extent.

had occurred in the case of that firm last session, and they had promised most faithfully that they would not do it again if he would give them another chance. Well, it was so very annoying and so very unfair that the House should be treated in this way that I ordered Mr. Clarke not to give this firm another order. He has ordered the bulk of the supply for next session from the old firms in the old country. He found that we wanted some envelopes and could not wait for them to come from the old country, and he reported that he had some excellent samples from the Barber & Ellis Company of Toronto, and at a little cheaper rate. I told him to fill up what he would need this session. Those envelopes have not yet come, but they will be used for the remainder of the session.

Mr. SPROULE. Was any reduction made in the account of the firm that supplied the inferior envelopes?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, but the orders have been stopped. The supply was needed immediately for the use of members, and the envelopes came in small lots, Mr. Clarke informs me, and he could not return them without leaving us without any.

Mr. SPROULE. I should have thought that the clerk of stationery, when he found the envelopes not up to sample, would take it off the account.

Mr. SPEAKER. I asked him that very question, but he explained to me that the envelopes were coming in small lots and were needed. Now, these points, I think, cover the means that have been at the disposal of the stationery department; and they also show that some hon. members were somewhat mistaken when they said that I had undertaken to take all the orders away from the old firms in Scotland and give them to some Canadian firms.

When I became Speaker, I found that the stationery department had been under the control of previous Speakers, and I continued to give general attention to it, depending very largely on the experience and ability of Mr. Clarke at the head of the office. Now, I need not say how pleased I will be to be relieved from having anything to do with this stationery business. In fact, I feel that I have responsibilities and duties enough without that somewhat thankless work. I do not know how it came to be in charge of the Speaker, except that it was part of the internal economy of the House which he had to attend to. But from this day, I certainly will very respectfully decline to take any charge of it, and the House will no doubt arrange how they can best deal with it for the future.

Mr. ELLIS. I was not here when this subject was discussed the other day, but I have attended pretty regularly the meetings of the Printing Committee. That committee is, of course, a joint committee, and it often occurs that members of the one branch of Parliament who find that the supplies are not as good as those given to the other naturally talk over the matter at the committee. And when some of the supplies partake of the nature of gilt clocks and things of that kind, there is naturally a desire all around that there should be gilt clocks all round, and that there should be an understanding of the whole business. No question arises as to the stationery for the trunks—that was not seriously discussed. The question that was discussed was the complaint of many members that the stationery for use in the House was not of such a character as should be furnished to members of Parliament. The envelopes have not enough mucilage to seal them. My own judgment, as a member of the committee, is that the whole service for Parliament should be one service, that is, there should be no difference made between one branch of the legislature and another; and whatever is furnished should be furnished by some authority treating both branches alike; and of course exercising the greatest economy consistent with doing the work properly.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask who makes the selection of stationery? It seems to me that the experience of the last two years at least has been such that we might well offer to dispense with that kind of stationery we have received, and save that much money, for the simple reason that members of this House are all supplied liberally on application with the stationery they require during the session.

Now, I presume that no hon. member of this House wants a particle of paper more than is absolutely necessary. I will have nothing to say as to the character and the cost of it, on the whole, which has been fair, but what has been called stationery, put in the trunks, is of no use whatever. No hon. member can use it, when he goes home. It is not suited for any gentleman to use. It looks very much like a job lot that is put into the trunks. I am not going to ask who makes the selection of the stationery, and what induces any person to pack members' trunks with that kind of stationery. It is no use, either at home or here. So I say, let us not go through the mockery of receiving stationery. Let us save that sum of money, or let us be consistent, and have stationery or not, and I am not urging that point. I quite agree with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who spoke last, that the Senate and the members of this House should receive the same stationery, and I think we had better settle the whole question during the present session.

Mr. FOSTER. Who does make the selection?

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Clarke makes the selection.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine, on suggestions and advice.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Clarke has made the selection since I have been in the Chair, following out what he did before. That was when there was $12,000 in the vote; but since then the vote has been reduced to $8,000, so that there has been no proper vote to give really valuable trunks and stationery. He has tried to squeeze what he could out of it for the members, and I believe he has run his stock very low by reason of his attempt, out of a very much smaller sum, to give some kind of trunks to the members. He has run his stock so low that he believes he will not be able to give any boxes of stationery next session. He made the selection. Of course, he had to give much less value in stationery than he had done before, when he had more money; but, as to the selection he has made, I think I mentioned it once before this session, that if hon. members wished a different kind of stationery than that which is placed in their trunks, they can send up and get from Mr. Clarke, if he has it in stock, a different kind of stationery of similar value.

Mr. OSLER. I think on one occasion I remarked that the only economy the present Government had effected since they had been in office was to do away with hon. members' stationery trunks, but it appears that there has not been much economy. I would suggest, that if stationery is to be supplied, it should be simple and of the best character. If you supply paper, supply the best paper, the best pens, the best pocket knife. The various articles that are supplied should be of the best. Let it be as simple as can be, but it should be of the best, and I am quite sure the selection of it can be left with all confidence to Mr. Speaker, under the direction of the House. The paper should be simple business paper, and these little articles of stationery should be simple and of the best.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the House will distinctly understand what I said about that. I hope the House will provide some other means of selecting and attending to the stationery. I think it is hardly consistent with the dignity of the Chairman of this august assembly that he should be looking after different kinds of stationery, and I am sure it is not an agreeable task. I wish the House particularly to take it off my hands.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me that a false impression has been conveyed by the report of the committee on printing to this House. It certainly was conveyed to my mind, and I suppose to the minds of hon. members of this House, that the hon. Speaker had not done his duty. I am very pleased to learn that Mr. Speaker was not to blame in connection with this matter. When the vote of the House was reduced, hon. members cannot expect to receive the same quality and the same amount of stationery. The impression left on my mind was, that Mr. Speaker had not done what the committee thought he might have done, with the amount placed at his disposal. Hon. gentlemen will see that they could not by any possible means be furnished with the same amount of paper, or paper of the same quality, with a much smaller amount of money. I, for one, do not care anything about a trunk; but, if we are to have stationery, I am thoroughly in accord with the suggestion that it should be good. Perhaps we do not control what goes on in the Senate at all, and anything we say here cannot affect the expenditure there, but it has always been the desire that the House of Commons should have just as good material as they have in the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. We want to get through the Estimates, but I think this matter should be settled by common consent. I might have said it bluntly the other day, but I said what Mr. Speaker has said here, that I thought it would be just as well to relieve Mr. Speaker of the trouble of looking after the paper for the members. It is not a pleasant thing to come in contact with two hundred hon. members, every one with a different idea as to the kind of paper he should have. I believe that if we had the general assent of the House, that what we want is good, plain, serviceable stationery, the whole matter might be left with the efficient clerk of stationery. I believe that if Mr. Clarke was not interfered with, and simply had the assent of the House that what was to be given was simple, plain, but good stationery, we would get it, just as well as we ever would get it. We cannot vie with the Senate. In the first place, we cannot bring the Senate down, and, in the second place, I do not think we should go up to the height of getting brass clocks. We might as well let the Senate manage their own stationery. They are a luxurious and select body, and they will have such stationery as they want. I believe that this House will not care to go so high. My view would be, that if it is made known by common assent that we do not want any furbelows, but we want good, plain stationery, we could leave the vote with the clerk of stationery and he would provide it. I had a little curiosity as to how we get 291 recipients of stationery. They must be largely multiplied, if there are 56 reporters around these precincts. I think that at the present time you will find that there are not more than 30 or 35.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a press association in connection with the Gallery here. They organize themselves, and I think they are responsible for their organization. They have certain privileges connected with this House, a good many privileges, and, as far as I am able to judge, they are pretty strict in the admissions they give to their Press Gallery. Every session there is a new organization among them, and the secretary of the Press Gallery sends to the Speaker the full list of those who are elected members of the Press Gallery. That list is not completed at once, but within a few weeks of the beginning of the session it is completed. That list I have always sent to Mr. Clarke for his guidance, and to the Sergeant-at-Arms for his guidance, as to the members full list of those who are elected members for the Press Gallery who have the privileges of the House and of the Reading Room as well as the members of Parliament. Mr. Clarke assures me that 56 is the average number for some years, and I think it is 52 this year.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is done through the secretary of the organization, of course it could not be done in any better way.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is done well. I have heard of many instances where newspaper men were not accorded the privileges of the Press Gallery, and when they came to complain to me, I referred them instantly to the organization of the Press Gallery, which, I believe, is entirely above party.

Mr. FOSTER. In every sense superior to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. So far as I can make out, they are very strict and careful in that matter.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not quite agree with what my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) says, I think we ought to have some kind of a strong box to hold our stationery in. A year or two ago we got a paper box or a card box of some kind, and it all went to pieces. We should have a deal box or a hemlock box or some such thing, no matter how coarse it be, to contain our stationery until we get home.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should now adjourn.

Mr. BRITTON. There are in Ontario, as I suppose there are in other provinces, what are called county library associations. They are sustained, first, by a membership fee, second, by a grant from the Law Society, and third, by a small grant from the Ontario Government. Application has been made to this Parliament to furnish to these associations, numbering about twenty in Ontario, a copy of "Hansard." These associations are established in the county towns, and although mainly intended for the legal profession, the general public has access to them. It would not be a very great expense to furnish these different associations with a copy of "Hansard," and I think it would be money well spent. "Hansard" would be more read there than in other places, except, of course, in Parliament during session. It would be very valuable in giving the discussions which take place on the legislation of the country. I admit there is a good deal of "Hansard" that never would be read by anybody, but that is, perhaps, the misfortune of having the debates published in extenso. Still, there is so much that is valuable, valuable for the public and specially valuable to lawyers, that I submit that Parliament should furnish the extra amount required to supply these county libraries with copies of "Hansard." I trust that this suggestion will meet the approval of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. Almost every week the Committee on Printing has before it applications for the blue-books issued by Parliament. The other day there was an application from the city of Toronto asking for bound copies of the parliamentary publications, but although the matter has not been finally disposed of, the committee thought that they were meeting all requirements when they supplied the books in unbound form. Incidentally, the question of supplying "Hansard" was brought up, and it was pointed out by some members of the "Hansard" committee, that in almost every case where application was made for the bound copies for law societies, the member for the district could supply them with one from the two copies he receives every year. I submit, that if you are going to the expense of furnishing the law societies and free libraries with bound copies of parliamentary publications, the appropriation made by Parliament to the Printing Committee would not suffice. It is quite an easy matter for the member representing the locality to give the extra copy of "Hansard" he receives to the law society or public library in his district.

Mr. BELCOURT. I quite agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton). It seems to me that the expense involved in supplying law associations with a copy of "Hansard" would be quite justified by the advantages derived from it. These law associations are open not only to the members of the bar, but to the judges throughout the province; and I think it is important that the judges should be made aware of the debates of this House affecting public legislation—for instance, legislation on the Criminal Code, amendments to the criminal law and legislation on procedure in election matters. The opinions which induced the members to pass legislation might very well be at the disposal of the judges throughout the country, and I think the expenditure for this purpose would be justified.

Mr. BENNETT. I was asked some little time ago by the Bar Association of the county of Simcoe to assist in securing this grant, if possible, and I can heartily concur in what has been said by the two hon. gentllemen who have preceded me. In answer to what the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), the chairman of the committee, says, I have this to say, that where a member has always had the two copies of "Hansard," if he has presented one copy to a friend, it is rather hard that he should have to turn round now and break into the series by giving one of his copies to a law association. I agree that for lawyers and others interested in the profession to be enabled to refer to "Hansard" at a central place in every county town, would be a matter of great convenience.

Mr. MORRISON. I would be inclined to support the suggestion that "Hansard" be sent to the various law associations, if it were also sent to other associations which are just as important or even more important than the law associations. I would suggest that copies of "Hansard" be sent to the various farmers' institutes, the medical associations, the mining institutes, the fruit-growers' institutes, the canners' association, the license victuallers'—

Mr. FOSTER. The high-binders.

Mr. MORRISON—and in fact to all members of the community who are interested in legislation, quite as much as lawyers can possibly be. I cannot see how hon. gentlemen can escape from supporting that suggestion. In fact, I think the argument is stronger in favour of having "Hansard" sent to these different associations, because they have not the same facilities for going through the frightful mass of stuff that appears in "Hansard" from session to session; and if the hon. member for Kingston will support my suggestion that "Hansard" be sent to these different bodies, I would have much pleasure in supporting his suggestion; but certainly I think there should be no invidious distinction. Seriously speaking, I fail to see why "Hansard" should be sent to the law associations. My hon. friend from Kingston states that there are 20 law associations in Ontario. There must be as many in Quebec. In British Columbia we have five, and there will, of course, be more in a few years as population increases. Then there are similar associations in the maritime provinces, in Manitoba and in the Territories; and I see no valid reason for supplying all these bodies with "Hansard." It is not the question of expense at all; it is the bad precedent that would be established; and all these other associations have as much right to be furnished with copies, particularly the farmers' associations. Personally, I oppose the suggestion of my hon. friend from Kingston, that "Hansard" be sent to the law libraries.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think a good many members of this House will agree with me that we are overloaded with lawyers, and I am afraid that if we supply all the different lawyers' associations with "Hansard," those who are not lawyers will be crowded out of this House. I am very much afraid that if the judges read "Hansard" they also will become politicians, and it is desirable that they should remain entirely independent and unbiassed. But, joking apart, I would have no objection to supplying the different law associations with copies of "Hansard," but to do so will increase the cost. I think mechanics' institutes might very well be supplied, and farmers' institutes too, if the lawyers are to be supplied.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not agree with the view of my hon. friend that the result of the free distribution of "Hansard" to the law libraries would be to bring more lawyers into this House. I am sure that if the lawyers read half the stuff they would find in "Hansard" they would not want to come here at all. However, there is a serious aspect to this matter. We make laws here, and naturally our intention and our desire must be that the laws we make should be thoroughly understood, especially by the judges who are called on to administer the laws and by the lawyers who take part in their administration. If we want the laws which are passed here to be properly understood, it seems to me of the first importance that the reasons and explanations given in this House when the Bills are introduced and discussed on both sides should be accessible to those who are called upon to administer the laws. I will give the House one illustration of what I mean. It will be remembered that in 1886, as a result of the general election, there were a good many contestations of elections. For the first time the question was raised as to the six months' limitation; that is to say, when an election was contested, if six months were allowed to elapse without following up the first proceedings, the whole contestation failed. That question was discussed, with different results in all the provinces. One case was decided one way in Quebec, another case another way in Ontario, and other cases a different way in the maritime provinces. Finally the question was solved by reference to "Hansard," where the speech made by the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Justice Fournier, on introducing the Bill, explained the whole difficulty. So that all of those cases finally turned on the construction put upon that clause by the gentleman who introduced the Bill in this House. That is one case which illustrates the usefulness of "Hansard," and I am not one of those who believe that after we have considered and discussed a Bill in this House, no good will result from a reference to that discussion by those who want to understand the law. I do not think we should reflect upon ourselves by saying that a great deal of information is not to be derived from our discussions in this House upon the legislation introduced here. I will conclude by repeating that our object should be to facilitate a proper understanding of our statutes, especially on the part of all those connected with the administration of justice, and in this respect "Hansard" is extremely valuable, because in the debates on the different statutes will be found what was the intention of the House in passing them. I may say, therefore, that my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) has given a very valuable suggestion which I hope will be put into effect.

Mr. McNEILL. Though I, more frequently than otherwise, am not in accord with the hon. Solicitor General, he and I sometimes do agree, and I certainly do agree in what he has just stated. It is very seldom, however, that I find myself in accord with any opinion expressed by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), but tonight, for a wonder, I find myself now in that position. I agree with that hon. gentleman entirely, that "Hansard" should, if possible, be supplied to the different mechanics' institutes throughout the country. I made that suggestion myself in the House some years ago. These institutes are the places where the reading young people are likely to assemble, and it is very important that they should have an authoritative document, such as the "Hansard," to refer to. They see certain statements in the newspapers, in which they are very much interested. One newspaper says one thing and another the opposite, and if supplied with "Hansard" they would have an opportunity in their discussions, of going to the fountain head and finding out the facts. I believe that "Hansard" is a most valuable work of reference, and I should be sorry indeed if this House should ever contemplate as I have sometimes heard it proposed, doing away with "Hansard" altogether. I would, on the contrary, like to see it supplied to every mechanics' institute in the country, as well as the law libraries mentioned by my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton).

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). (Translation.) I have much pleasure in endorsing the remarks fallen from the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), as far as "Hansard" is concerned. "Hansard" should be found in all the law libraries, not only in the province of Quebec but throughout the Dominion. I may further say that, in my capacity of professor at Laval University, I am of opinion that "Hansard" should be also supplied to our universities. Last year, an application was made to the Debates Committee by the law faculty of Laval University for a complete series of "Hansard." I do not know whether our request was acceded to, but I think we are entitled to it. I think that for our studious youth who are going through their curriculum in our universities to be enabled to refer to the report of our proceedings in this House would be a matter of great convenience and interest. As the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has just remarked, "Hansard" is very valuable not only to those who are engaged in politics but to lawyers and to all those who are connected with the administration of justice. For instance; we have our "Criminal Code" which was discussed at great length in this House in 1892. Those who have not the advantage of having a copy of Mr. Crankshaw's work on the matter, which gives a complete summary of those proceedings, have to refer continually to "Hansard" because it is in the report of these proceedings and of the reasons and explanations given in the House when the statutes are introduced and discussed that is to be found the intention of the legislator. The same remark applies to our commercial law. We have, it is true, the work written on the matter by Mr. Girouard, now a judge of the Supreme Court, which contains all the proceedings and the debates which took place in connection with the bills of exchange and promissory notes. But there are many other matters in connection with which one has continually to refer to "Hansard," as, for instance, the Banking Act. Our courts of law are continually called upon to interpret the laws passed by this House. Now, in order to facilitate a proper understanding of our statutes, reference must necessarily be had to "Hansard," because it is in our debates on the different statutes that will be found what was the intention of the framers of the law. Therefore, the suggestion made by the hon. Solicitor General has my heartiest support, and I hope the House will show more liberality than they have done in the past in supplying the law libraries and our universities with this publication.

Mr. MONK. I have much pleasure in endorsing the suggestion expressed by my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux). I would be particularly pleased to see the "Hansard" distributed to our universities. Its distribution would be conducive to great good among our studious youth. I would even go a step further and say, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned—and I think the other provinces as well—that it would be a great advantage to have "Hansard" distributed to the institutions of higher education. Great good would be derived from the distribution to those institutions of higher learning of the results of our deliberations in this Assembly, and the suggestions made have, therefore, my heartiest support.

Mr. A. A. C. LARIVIERE (Provencher). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that, within my experience as a member of the Debates Committee, these ten years past, in every case when an application from some institution of learning or some society was made to the committee for copies of "Hansard," it was invariably complied with, in the case of societies provided with reading rooms or libraries.

It may be that in some cases when such applications were made by societies having no permanent place of meeting, those applications were not complied with. Such was the case when it was found that the copies of "Hansard" asked for were for the exclusive use of the secretary or some other officer of the society. In such cases we have refused it, but in every case when it was shown to our satisfaction that there existed a library or a reading-room provided for the members who wished to derive information from the perusal of the report of our proceedings, we always acceded to the request of the applicants. As to those institutions which have expressed the wish of being supplied with "Hansard," we always furnished them with it, whether in the case of universities, or law libraries or otherwise. "Hansard" is actually distributed to all those institutions having applied to the committee for it, and if there are some which are not yet supplied with it, that is simply owing to the fact that they did not apply for it.

Mr. SPROULE. We have often had the question raised whether it would not be wise to do away with "Hansard" altogether on account of the considerable increase in the expense from year to year, and that increase would be certainly much greater if the suggestions we have just heard were put in force. I was rather amused at the reason given by the hon. Solicitor General for supplying the law libraries of the country with this publication. The reason he gave was the great difference of opinion among lawyers on the interpretation of our statutes, which, he said, the distributing of "Hansard" to them would to a great extent do away with. Why, even if you should distribute "Hansard" as suggested, you would rarely get two lawyers to agree on the interpretation of any clause of any statute. If it is for the purpose of disseminating knowledge, I agree that it would be wise to put as many copies of "Hansard" as possible within the reach of the legal fraternity, but by the same parity of reasoning you might go further and distribute "Hansard" to the mechanics' institutes and all the free libraries of the country, and there they would be just as available to the lawyers as to the general public. I do not see any reason why you should give "Hansard" to one institution and refuse it to another, but if we were to supply it to all these institutions, it would not be many years before you would have a resolution in the House to do away with "Hansard" entirely.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LARIVIERE.

Mr. WALLACE. I fail to understand why the Government should not continue the business of the House to a more reasonable hour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am rather disposed to agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), but I made a bargain with my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), some time ago, that we would let each other off about eleven o'clock.

Mr. WALLACE. He has gone away, and we are here ready to transact business, and I do not see why we should be prevented.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will give my hon. friend ample opportunity to-morrow night.

Mr. WALLACE. There it is again—Friday night.

Motion agreed to, and the committee rose and reported progress.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 160) to amend the Companies' Act (from the Senate).—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). We dealt with the resolutions respecting bounties on iron and steel, but the Bill was not introduced, and I ask that the resolution be received, that I may place the Bill of it before the House for the first reading.

Resolutions reported from Committee of the Whole on a certain proposed resolution providing for the gradual reduction of the bounties on steel ingots, puddled iron bars and pig iron made in Canada, authorized by chapter 6 of the Acts of 1897, &c., were read the second time and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) to provide for the gradual reduction of the bounties on steel ingots, puddled iron bars and pig iron made in Canada, authorized by Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1897.

Mr. WALLACE. The Bill, I presume, is that the bounties continue until 1902 and are gradually reduced thereafter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bill is in accordance with the resolutions.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. What does the Government intend to take up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I neglected to ask the right hon. Premier, before he left the House, but I think the intention is to take up, first, the supplementary Estimates, and then the main Estimates.

Mr. CLANCY. There are many items in the main Estimates that it is hardly fair to go on with on Friday, particularly in the evening. There is generally a slim House on Friday evening and it will probably be even thinner than usual to-morrow, because the session has been long-continued, and members find it necessary to go home.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that case, I do not see what we can do but take up what one of my hon. friends humourously calls the "Retribution" Bill. But that also might be regarded as not quite fair.

Mr. CLANCY. It would not be fair.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. However, sufficient for the day is the good thereof. We shall see what to-morrow brings forth.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 23rd June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. GIBSON moved :

That the third report of the committee on Printing of both Houses of Parliament be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that report was referred back to the committee.

Mr. GIBSON. After the statements made by myself, Mr. Speaker, in the Committee of the Whole House, last night, the matter was brought up in the Printing Committee this morning. As the understanding of the House was that you wished to be relieved of the duty of selecting stationery, it was thought that the report of the committee might be adopted.

Mr. SPEAKER. That does not settle the question of order, however. The report was referred back, and this resolution cannot be passed in the present position of affairs. I think the committee will have to report again, and that report will be considered.

ANTI-JAPANESE AND ANTI-CHINESE LEGISLATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) to the return in regard to the disallowance of certain legislation in the province of British Columbia. The other day I brought down a report on this subject, and some time afterwards my hon. friend called attention to the fact that a certain portion of the correspondence had not been brought down. I inquired and found that the hon. gentleman's complaint was well founded, and brought down the missing correspondence the day before yesterday. Yesterday the hon. gentleman said he had not got what we want and spoke in this way :

I invite the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the letter that he says he has brought down. What I asked for is the despatch No. 83 from the Governor General to Mr. Chamberlain, not from Mr. Chamberlain to the Governor General. I want the despatch brought down that inclosed the opinion of the Department of Justice. I do not see that here.

If my hon. friend will look again he will see among the papers the despatch he wants.

Mr. PRIOR. That is quite right. The two were together when the right hon. gentleman brought them down, but I understood him to say that he had brought down a copy of the despatch of the Minister of Justice only.

TEMISCOUATA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. McALISTER moved that the petition of the Temiscouata Railway Company for leave to present a petition for a private Bill be now read and received.

The PRIME MINISTER. Explain.

Mr. McALISTER. The Temiscouata Railway Company's Bill was passed in 1897, and expires the end of this month, and the company are asking now for leave to introduce a Bill to continue the Act in force.

Motion agreed to.

THE YUKON—MR. OGILVIE'S REPORT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On the 9th June a motion was carried in this House ordering the printing of the evidence that was taken in the commission held by Mr. Ogilvie and laid on the Table of this House by the Minister of the Interior. This is the 23rd of June, and I would like to know whether the Government is able to explain the delay, which seems to me extraordinary, or to expedite compliance with the House by the Printing Bureau. I am particularly anxious to have this evidence. I have been waiting for some time to present a motion of a very serious character which I feel it my duty to move in this House, touching the conduct of the Government and the members of it and the officers under it in the Yukon district; and it seemed to me that that evidence, being in the Department of the Interior for so long and then laid on the Table of the House and then ordered to be printed, ought to be in the hands of the members of the House. I desire that members should have that evidence in order that they may fully appreciate the value of the motion I propose to move. I have mentioned on one or two occasions the fact of this delay in printing, and desire to have it expedited. I understood from the right hon. Prime Minister sometime ago that he would use his efforts to expedite the printing. I should be very glad if the right hon. gentleman could say when we may expect it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) knows that the Government has no control over the printing of the House—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No direct control.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I am informed by the Clerk that the printing is done and that the work is now being put into book form. It is a large document, more than 300 pages. It will be distributed on Monday.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. MONK. I ask leave to direct the attention of the Government to a motion for a return which was carried in this House on the 23rd April last for a statement of the travelling expenses of the Superior Court judges coming from different parts of the province of Quebec to the city of Montreal. As we have the Estimates under discussion just now, and as I am informed there is a project to ask for the salaries for three new judges in the city of Montreal, I think that report would be of great importance, and I would ask the Government when it is to be brought down?

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say that this report is ready, and will be brought down on Monday.

THE NORTHERN COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the telegram and cablegram to Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner, in regard to the financial standing of the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company, which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated, in reply to a question of mine in this House, had been received by the Government, were not brought down amongst the papers. The Order of the House was issued for the same on the 17th of May, and I would ask the right hon. gentleman, if he will see that it is placed on the Table as soon as possible.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

The PRIME MINISTER. You will have it on Monday.

QUEBEC COUNTIES AND THE PLEBISCITE VOTE.

Mr. MOORE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Government to some papers that I asked for in connection with the polling in certain counties in the province of Quebec in the plebiscite vote last fall, and which have not come to hand. They were ordered five or six weeks ago. Only one return has been received, about three weeks ago, that for the county of Kamouraska.

The PRIME MINISTER. That report is being prepared by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is not an officer of the Government, but an officer of this House. However, I am informed by him that he is proceeding with it. I have not seen him for some time, but I know that he is working at it, and it will, no doubt, be brought down at an early date.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he not an official of the Government?

The PRIME MINISTER. He is an official of the House, first.

WORKING RULES OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a special despatch which appears in the Toronto "Evening Star," of Wednesday, June 21. The "Star" is a paper which generally supports the hon. gentlemen opposite, and this special says:

Ottawa, June 21.—It is understood that the Government intends to bring in legislation this session providing running rules for railways, so that all roads may take advantage of them, instead of every road having its own rules, which causes confusion in the case of companies that have running rights over other roads.

The Government Bill, when introduced, will be referred to the Railway Committee so that its details may be thoroughly threshed out. Some time ago the Grand Trunk adopted the American rules because a good portion of its system is in the United States. There was some dissatisfaction about the change among the employees, and the trouble is said not to be entirely disposed of. The course which the Government intends pursuing would settle this matter.

I would like to know, if there is any truth in the despatch, that it is the intention of the Government to introduce such a measure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I can probably give the hon. gentleman the information that he requires. He will recollect that last session some discussion took place with respect to approving the rules which had been laid before the Governor in Council by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I stated then that the rules had been approved, but I promised the hon. gentleman himself, I think, that I would communicate with the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the subject, asking them to delay bringing the rules into operation, in order to afford the men an opportunity of stating any objections that they might have to those rules. I did have such correspondence, and the rules were laid over for some time. I notified the officers who represent the labour association, of the fact that the rules were being deferred until they could be heard, and I asked them to name a day when it would suit their convenience, and I would be glad to hear them, and to notify the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as the desire seemed to be that I should be present on the occasion. The communication which I sent in this way was not answered. I sent another, and it resulted in a message being left at my office by one of these officers, stating that there were really no objections to the rules. The rules then, I suppose, would have gone into operation, but shortly after that I was advised that these officers who had acted in this way, had not been duly authorized by the society; I think they said there was some misunderstanding. Following upon that information, I again communicated with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and asked them, if they would further delay bringing the rules into operation, as there might be some objections. I may say that, just before this last occurrence, a body of rules was received from the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, which they desired the Governor in Council to approve. These were dealt with in the same way; they were approved before I had understood from the officers whom I supposed represented the association, that there was any objection to these rules. Then, having heard that these parties had not been fully advised of what was going on, and that they desired still to look into the matter, I communicated with the Canada Atlantic Railway people, and, as a result, these rules have not gone into operation. The present situation of the matter is this: Upon consideration, it appeared to me that it might be desirable to amend the General Railway Act, so that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, should be authorized to frame a body of rules, either by itself or through some competent body, for general application to all the roads in Canada that are under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. That view having been concurred in by my colleagues in the Council, I have had drafted a section to add to the General Railway Act, and a Bill containing this section is now before the Railway Committee. It appeared to me that these general amendments were of such a nature that it was desirable the Railway Committee should discuss them, and make any desirable suggestions that could be incorporated in the Bill. The Bill is now before the committee; it was received at the late meeting of the committee, but, owing to there being a very small attendance of members, I suggested that it should remain over and be made the first order at the next meeting, when we are likely to have a large attendance. That is the position.

SUPPLY—THE QUEEN vs. CLARKE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By arrangement with the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), I wish briefly to bring up a certain matter. I may say, at the outset, that, owing to the courtesy of the Minister of Justice, I have been able to get some papers which deal with the claim of Mr. Clarke. His counsel, Mr. W. Myers Grey, lost his papers in this matter at the time of the fire in New Westminster, and, having asked me to bring the matter to the attention of the Government, I was dependent on the courtesy of the Minister of Justice for obtaining the only information that I have in the matter. The plaintiff in this case, whose lands were expropriated by the Crown, was offered the sum of $150 or thereabouts, and the matter went finally to the Exchequer Court, where he recovered a judgment of $11,000 and costs; the costs and principal amounted to $12,303.05. That judgment was obtained during the time of the old Government, on January 20, 1896. Some delay occurred; whose delay it was, is not important to Mr. Clarke or to Mr. Grey, so long as it was not theirs. Some delay occurred in the amount of the judgment being tendered to the plaintiff; and, in a memorandum that has been sent to the Department of Justice, I find the following facts stated:—First of all, those that I have mentioned, the date of the judgment and the amount; then, the fact that the cheque for this amount was not issued until the 28th of April, 1896. The claim is for the difference in the interest that was running from the date of the judgment until the time of this payment, and, of course, the interest subsequently. Reference is made to the legislation, where the rate of interest is stated at 4 per cent, which may be paid on a judgment. Mr. Grey, in his memorandum to the Department of Justice, shows that, where the Crown is authorized to pay interest in that sense on a judgment, it is practically peremptory, and not merely permissive, for the Government to pay interest until the money and costs are paid.

The practice bears out that construction, as is shown in the rules of the Exchequer Court to which he refers. In this correspondence which I have before me—it is not complete, I admit—I cannot find any reason why Mr. Grey's client, Mr. Clarke, has not had the advantage of the practice in this case, and has not had the full amount of the interest on his judgment. I need not say any more, Sir. The correspondence continues from September, 1896, down to January, 1899, and the complaint is made by Mr. Grey, in part of the correspondence, that he could not obtain answers to his letters. Therefore, I suppose that is one of the things that goes to show why his claim for interest on the judgment has been unpaid. I call the matter to the attention of the hon. Solicitor General, and I would be glad to know on what ground he has gone on in resisting this claim.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The plaintiff claimed by his petition to recover from the Crown $20,778, and the Crown offered him $149. After protracted litigation, it was decided that the plaintiff was entitled to recover $8,600, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent on $2,500 for ten and one-half years, and on $4,000 for seven and one-half years. This judgment was rendered on the 20th of January, 1896. The judgment was not entered—I think it may be fairly assumed, because of the neglect, or of the action, of the plaintiff's counsel, until the 24th March, 1896. Then, the judgment, which was entered on the 24th March, 1896, reached the Finance Department on the 25th April, 1896, and a cheque was issued for the amount and sent to this gentleman on the 1st of May, 1896. Surely, there is no serious ground of complaint because of delay, when a cheque for a judgment, entered on the 24th of March, did not issue until the 1st of May, especially in view of the fact that this large amount of interest was allowed, interest on a portion of the sum for ten and a half years, and on another portion for something like six years. In any event, the judgment, after it was recorded and communicated to the Department of Finance, was paid by the Department of Finance, and a cheque sent for the amount within a very few days after this occurred, and previous to the 1st of May. Then, there appears to have been some correspondence in reference to it. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) knows perfectly well that the Crown cannot be made to pay interest on a judgment, except there is a statute or a contract. In reference to this judgment, there can be no contention that the Government would be under any obligation to pay interest upon a contract, so that the whole matter depends upon the construction that can be placed upon the statute which refers to the payment of interest. That statute provides that

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General may allow and pay to any person entitled by the judgment of the court to any moneys or costs, interest thereon at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent from the date of such judgment until such moneys or costs are paid.

So that, in this case, it was entered on the 24th of March, communicated to the Department of Finance on the 25th April, and paid on the 1st of May. Subsequently, the Department of Finance, in the exercise of the discretionary powers conferred by the statute, allowed interest for one month on this judgment. The judgment was rendered on the 20th January in British Columbia, and it was paid on the 1st of May, and, if you allow eight or ten days from the time that the judgment reaches the Department of Finance to elapse until the matter is decided, and until the Department of Justice consider whether an appeal is to be taken, and if, after these ten days have expired, you allow one month's interest, I think there is no great cause of complaint.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There does not seem to be much to discuss except the hon. gentleman's statement as to the date of the judgment. The hon. gentleman states that the judgment was in March.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think I gave the date of the judgment as the 20th of January, 1896, but it was only entered on the 24th of March.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose that is a grievance that the Crown has taken advantage of, the date when the entry was made. I suppose it should have been entered on the 20th of January. Perhaps, on reconsideration, the Government will bear that in mind. I am sure they would not wish to take advantage of any technical point, although the strength of the Solicitor General's statement is really based upon the date of the entry being in March, as against January. I would be glad, if the matter could be reconsidered in that spirit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I may state what is the general practice of the Finance Department in reference to the payment of these judgments. The statute which has just been referred to gives the Minister of Finance discretion as to the payment of interest on a judgment rendered in the Exchequer Court. We have adopted a practice in the matter, which, I think, is fixed by Order in Council, that, where there is any delay which can be attributed properly to the Government, interest will be paid, but where there is no delay chargeable to the Government, interest shall not be paid. We regard the money as payable when the certificate of judgment is filed in the Finance Department. Before we make the payment, we allow ten days to elapse for the department to make inquiry into the matter, and for the consideration of the matter by the Department of Justice. If there be any delay after the ten days, we may pay interest, but for any delay that may occur between the date of the judgment and the filing of the certificate we can take no action whatever. If we do not pay after the expiration of the ten days from the filing of the certificate, we allow interest at the rate of 4 per cent to the date when payment is actually made.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), if he has been able to get the information promised on the 21st of June in regard to there being correspondence with the judges touching an amount in his supplies, in which he said :

I am not sure that I have authority to say that I would bring that letter down without consulting the Minister. It is not, if I am properly informed, on the departmental file yet. It accompanies the account, and explains to the Minister why the liability was incurred. I see no objections to producing the letter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will inquire.

Intercolonial Railway—

To build rest-houses at nine engine stations $4,360

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to drop that item ; therefore, it will have to go into the supplementary Estimates for next year.

Intercolonial Railway—

To provide new machinery at Moncton shops $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised that it will become necessary to get some machinery of a larger size, as we have very much larger engines, necessitating larger plant, hoisting apparatus, and the other machinery necessary for our purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman an estimate of the kind of machinery and the cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may state that we will have to ask a similar amount next year, as this will only suffice in part for our purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the items of machinery and their cost which make up the $5,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As I have said, this amount will be inadequate for all our requirements, but with this vote will be purchased a planer, hoisting apparatus, emery tool grinder, air motors, and it includes the cost of setting up that machinery. These are special machines made by special manufacturers, and they will be got from the manufacturers direct by the department, and of course without tender.

Mr. SPROULE. Will you get them in the United States or in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Part in the United States, and part in Canada.

Intercolonial Railway—

Rolling stock $20,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to enable us to get as speedily as possible twenty more refrigerator cars. We purchased last summer a number of refrigerator cars, but there has been a great demand for more, and we have made arrangements so that if this grant passes we will immediately get twenty more of these refrigerator cars.

Mr. SPROULE. How many refrigerator cars have you on the Intercolonial Railway now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Twenty-six.

Mr. FOSTER. What will these cars cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total cost of each car will be $1,012 ; the car itself will cost $972, and the addition is for the air brakes.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these cars obtained ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are being made by Rhodes & Curry. They made the others, and the order was extended subject to the understanding that we would get a vote from Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these cars cooled by ice or by the ammonia process ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we have not yet tried the ammonia process on our system.

Prince Edward Island—

To purchase wharf at Mount Stewart... $3,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This was a new wharf built by the provincial government, and it cost them, I believe, the sum which is mentioned here. There is quite a little freight brought to the railway by coasters to this port, and we found it necessary to acquire the wharf and run our track down to the water. It was owned by the provincial government.

Mr. FOSTER. What evidence of cost came before the Minister ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our engineer, Mr. Mackenzie, looked into the matter, and reported to us that the price was reasonable.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a new wharf or an old wharf?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood it was a comparatively new wharf, and had only been a short time built.

Mr. FOSTER. It is rather important to know whether it is a new wharf or an old one, because I have no doubt the provincial government would be glad to get some more of its wharfs taken. Several years ago a thorough examination was made of the wharfs in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and the Dominion Government took over a certain number of them, many of them not in the best state of repair. No doubt the provincial government would be glad to get these old wharfs off their hands. I wish to know is this one of the old wharfs existing at that time or has it been built since? If it was built by tender and contract as a new wharf, the cost could easily be ascertained, but if it is an old wharf it would be pretty difficult to tell what it is worth. Is it in a good state of repair now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, my deputy tells me that it is in a very satisfactory state, and he approved of the arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine it was built for other purposes than to accommodate the Intercolonial Railway. Can the Minister say why we could not obtain the user of it without purchasing it, and becoming responsible for its maintenance? Do we charge wharfage? I suppose we must give the use of it to others.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The railway runs round the head of Hillsborough River, and this wharf is well located for coast business. Many vessels brought traffic to that point, and in the interests of the railway it was desirable that we should secure a wharf in that particular locality. At all events, it was so reported to me, and I approved of the proposal.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you the report of the engineer that it was necessary to get this wharf?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether we have a report that it was necessary; but we have a report as to the reasonableness of the price.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we have a report that it was necessary. The wharf is a small affair at the head of the river at Mount Stewart, from which point the railway branches off to Souris and Georgetown. This wharf was built by the local government, but it was not strong enough to carry the railway. The railway had to have a wharf at that locality, this wharf was selected, the engineer approved of the selection and the price, $3,500, and agreed to report in favour of its purchase. I have not seen his report; but when the Minister of Railways last year went to Prince Edward Island, I went with him to the place, and he went down and inspected the wharf before paying the money for it. It is the only place in that part of the country where grain or any other produce that comes by train, can be shipped to schooners.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the provincial government a system of tolls on the wharfs it owns?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot say positively.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Yes, it has.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The switch runs down on the wharf, and the vessels load beside it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister propose to leave this wharf open to the public, and, if so, to charge tolls or make it free?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It cannot be used by the public to any extent, as it is too narrow, and the railway tracks run on it. I suppose it might be used by the general public also, but it belongs to the Dominion now and is paid for. It will enable a very large section of country to ship their grain straight to that point; otherwise, they would have to take it to the buyers at the different stations and from these points send it to Charlottetown.

Mr. FOSTER. Did I understand the Minister to say that it had to be strengthened by the Railway Department, and rails had to be laid on it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that strengthening process done?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It had just been finished when I was there last year. The workmen had not left. The rails were laid.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it amounts to just this: The wharf has been bought, the strengthening process has gone on at the cost of the country, the property has been taken over, and the Minister of Railways did all this without any authorization at all and without any vote. After it is all done—bought, strengthened, and the user of it taken over—then the Minister thinks that probably it is high time for him to come down and ask for a little money. Up to that time he was lord high admiral, who went around and dispensed these buying privileges along with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as though it was their own money they were spending; and not till it came to the time to pay did either of these gentlemen think there was an institution called Parliament, and that there was an old but now pretty obsolete rule which used to bind Governments and Ministers in this country, that before you make a purchase you ought to go through the form, at least, of consulting Parliament and getting the authorization of Parliament and a vote of money. That never was thought of till eight days before the end of the fiscal year, when the note pressed for payment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is such a small affair that the Prince Edward Island Government and the Intercolonial Railway and all railways are accustomed to buy any switches for traffic without coming and taking a special vote of Parliament every time.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I understand that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has thrown off the mask entirely. Up to this time there has been something like an apology when members of this Government have proceeded illegally and wrongfully to acquire property without a vote or means of paying for it, and without any authorization. But to-day the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stands on his legs and declares that it is not necessary to have the authorization or vote of Parliament. I am glad that at last the Government, through one of their members, have come out of the bush into the open, and declared that hereafter they intend to go on the plan that they will purchase, entirely irrespective of whether Parliament has authorized the purchase or not. A little thing! It is the buying of a wharf, and I should think that common honesty would compel the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to stand up and argue that the principle is the same with reference to $3,500 as it is with reference to $75,000. I want the country to know—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman must not misrepresent me.

Mr. FOSTER—and I want the members of this House to know it. I have the floor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman refuses to allow me to explain.

Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor. I am perfectly relentless just now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want to thank the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member will not give way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want to thank him for his extreme courtesy. The hon. gentleman refuses to allow me to explain. I will bear it in mind.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an old rule that when a man smites you on one cheek, you should turn the other; but in parliamentary practice it becomes necessary once in a while to forego that old rule. My hon. friend has time and again refused me a single word in the midst of his explanations, and just for this once I am going to finish what I have to say when I have the chance. Afterwards I will give the hon. gentleman some courtesy. That is just the position the hon. gentleman has taken, and I want the members of the House and the country to know that at last the Liberal Government, through one of their members, have publicly stated to this House and to the country that they do not consider it necessary to have the authorization of Parliament or the vote of Parliament before making purchases.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not make any such statement. The hon. gentleman knows that no money has been paid or can be paid until we take the vote. The Minister simply went there and agreed to purchase this wharf because it was in the public interest that it should be purchased, and the fact that it was necessary to alter it and strengthen it did not amount to a row of pins. The hon. gentleman or any other Minister would do the same thing. It was done in order to get the traffic of last fall on the wharf.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has correctly stated the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I am willing to take his last statement. It is the same as the first.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was satisfied from what was represented to me that it would be a public convenience and in the interests of the Prince Edward Island Railway that we should run this spur down on this wharf. In the conversations with the members of the provincial government, they understood that while we would take the wharf and use it, the purchase could not be concluded until after that on the sanction of Parliament. They never expect a dollar until we obtained an appropriation from Parliament. In the meanwhile, for our own convenience and that of the public we are using the wharf.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The question resolves itself into this: Is the House free to object to this vote?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so. I think that all faith in Governments would be at an end if when this Government makes an arrangement with the local government of Prince Edward Island in reference to a matter of this kind, on which they expend money, this Government is free to depart from it. There is a contract which the House must approve or vote want of confidence in the Administration. A government is not warranted in making expenditures, unless under very exceptional and extraordinary circumstances, without an appropriation, and the fact that this Government said to parties: "You cannot be paid until Parliament votes this money," does not help them at all. It is not a saving clause, so far as this Parliament is concerned. The property was purchased, money was expended on it, and the purchase price must be paid, but it will be paid in opposition to the sound parliamentary principle of getting the authority of Parliament before, instead of after the thing is done. The hon. gentleman can hardly take the position that no harm is done because no money was paid, and, therefore, the House is free. The House is not free. It must carry out the contract made by the head of a department and a member of the Government, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman has inverted the order of procedure. I do not mean to say that there are not cases of exigency where the Government is warranted in incurring expenditure without the authority of Parliament, but there was no such exigency in this case. But I suppose there was an election going on.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all. It was agreed to be purchased the previous year from the then premier, Mr. Peters.

Mr. FOSTER. That is still worse.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was agreed that we should come down to Parliament and ask for a vote. I thought the vote was in myself. When my colleague came down last year, I took him to the place, and the superintendent ran the railway down the wharf in order that my hon. friend might see whether it was a suitable purchase or not. He agreed that it was a suitable purchase. When the agreement was made, the local government were told expressly: We cannot purchase until Parliament assents. The whole agreement is made subject to the approval of Parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. If my memory serves me rightly, the spur was built down to the wharf during my time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. It never was there at all in the hon. gentleman's time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman, I assume, does not wish to exaggerate a small matter. The facts are not such as would justify any person in finding the least fault with this transaction. The members of the provincial government thoroughly understood the whole matter, we had no written contract with them but a verbal understanding that we would ask Parliament, and if Parliament gave us the grant we would close the purchase. We are under no obligation further than any Government is to carry out its promise, which in this case was that we would submit a vote to Parliament. That is a thing which has to be done time and time again, particularly in connection with a railway department.

It was perfectly clear that it would be very much in the interests of the public that we should run a spur down there and enable the people to bring their produce to the end of the wharf, and we did that. The provincial government said: We own this wharf, look it over and see if it suits, and if it does, you are at liberty to buy it. The distinct understanding was that the transaction was not a purchase until sanctioned by Parliament and a grant made for that purpose. They were not misled in the slightest degree.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they know they will get their money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They know that if we ask Parliament, under such reasonable circumstances, Parliament will not hesitate to grant the money, but it is open to Parliament to say we will not grant it, and the transaction falls to the ground.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not appreciate the gravity of the case. According to his own statement, the Dominion Government, through its Minister of Railways, makes a contract with the provincial government, but the provincial government know perfectly well that although under that contract they cannot be paid until the money is voted by Parliament, the money must be voted by Parliament, or else the Government would be defeated. At all events the Minister of Railways and Canals would retire from the Government and throw the whole country into confusion unless this vote were carried through.

Mr. FOSTER. How much money was expended on the strengthening of a wharf and preparing it for Intercolonial Railway business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy does not recollect the amount just at this moment, but it would not be a very large sum. It would be the cost of laying down the rails.

Mr. FOSTER. There is more than that. The hon. Minister of Marine says it was not strong enough and had to be strengthened.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said the rails were underpinned. The whole does not amount to a hill of beans.

Mr. TAYLOR. Beans come high down there.

Mr. FOSTER. We will want the engineer's report on which this was purchased. The hon. Minister of Marine, in his anxiety to help his colleague, rather lets him in deeper by venturing the information that the whole thing had been arranged a year ago, and that he thought a vote for it was in the Estimates that came down last year. Surely there have been elections around there in that space of time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. Mr. Peters came here and talked the matter over.

Mr. FOSTER. More than a year ago the promise was made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for this Government, that the provincial government should be helped to the extent of the purchase of this wharf for $3,400. Parliament met, no vote was taken, and Parliament adjourned, the Minister of Railways then went to work and took possession of the wharf, which he had never been authorized to buy and for which he had no appropriation. He spent from $1,000 to $2,000 of public money upon that wharf. He put his rails upon it and took the user of it. He virtually committed himself, without the shadow of a doubt, to payment for it, and yet now he says that there is no harm done because the money has not been paid. Of course it could not be paid until the hon. gentleman got it, for I suppose he was not so pressed in this case as his colleagues were with respect to Mr. Charleson. Mr. Charleson had to be sent out at once, and so they had to 'steal money from other votes which, in their express wording, were applicable only to other purposes and not to the building of the telegraph line to the Yukon. They furnished Mr. Charleson with $13,000 worth of cheques to put in his pocket to take up into the Yukon. In this case, there is such a hurry to get it all over before the meeting of Parliament, which took place three days afterwards, that they resorted to this act of financial brigandage—nothing short of it; nothing else will express it. The Minister of Railways and Canals, more cautious, or less urgent, because he was dealing with friends of his own, who did not require the cheques in their pockets quite so soon, let it run for a year, puts his hand into the public treasury for a couple of thousand dollars to build up and strengthen his wharf, and then comes down and says: Now, my obedient followers, my loyal henchmen, I want you to step up like little men and vote this money. And the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) is getting ready to justify it.

Mr. WALLACE. He always does.

Mr. FOSTER. Always. And the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) justifies it by saying it is only a little thing, and nodding his head in his superior way, as though he were saying: What fools these men on the other side be for trying to live up to the appropriations of Parliament and the rules that govern the expenditure of money in this country. We want to have the engineer's report and the account of money which was expended up to this time. I shall not ask the hon. gentleman this time to hold back the vote, but only to bring that information for the evening sitting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will try to do so.

Mr. MARTIN. Without entering into the constitutional aspect of the question, I venture to think that it would have been better, if the vote had been included in last year's Estimates. I think the object to be accomplished is a very desirable one. As far back as 1896, the extension of the railway to the wharf at Mount Stewart was advocated by myself, and it was as strongly opposed and ridiculed by our opponents—at least by my opponent in East Queen's. The extension of the railway to the wharf necessitates its purchase by the Government. It was referred to as one of the branch lines to be built in Prince Edward Island. It will afford very necessary accommodation, and I am glad indeed that the Minister of Railways and Canals has taken hold of the matter. I do not know that the case justifies the ex-Minister of Finance in making so much out of it, as it is a very necessary work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Martin), if he will allow me, that I did not object to the work.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand that perfectly. There is a question at issue, and has been for many years, as to the Dominion Government taking over certain wharfs in Prince Edward Island. I understand that a letter was sent by the Premier of this Government to the Premier of Prince Edward Island, that this Government is ready to take hold of some of these piers at least. I think the preferable way would be to take hold of the question as a whole and finally arranged as to the wharfs the Dominion Government is to take. The place where this money is being spent is a large shipping place, and its business will extend and increase, and this accommodation is very necessary indeed. I trust the item will be allowed to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) did not take exception to the merits of the work. It might be the most meritorious work that the Minister has done for years past, but exception is taken to the way he has done it—first spending money, and then asking the House to vote it. It is said, in extenuation of his conduct, that it is only a little thing; but, if it is condoned by this House in little things, it will not be very long before the Government will take the opportunity of doing the same in large things. We must observe the safeguards that are provided against the improper expenditure of the people's money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have some difficulty in ascertaining how the Minister of Railways and Canals could purchase a wharf, no matter how expedient it might be in the interests of the country, according to the rules which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) would have observed. Apparently, the Minister should not even discuss the question of buying a wharf without first having a vote of Parliament. All that occurred in this matter is, that the Minister has discussed the question, and says he will propose a vote in Parliament for the purchase.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is mistaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, that is the whole story. Anybody transacting business with the Dominion Government ought to know that a vote of Parliament is necessary in these cases. Above all others, members of a provincial government might be expected to know it, because they know something of the principles governing the appropriation of public money. If a Minister was not at liberty to discuss the expediency of purchasing this wharf and the price of it, without getting a vote of Parliament, I do not see how he could buy a wharf at all.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is wide of the mark, and he knows it—he is too sensible a man not to know it. If nothing had been done but what he says, no question would have been raised, unless some were to question the desirability of the purchase itself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What else has been done besides discussing the purchase?

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Railways and Canals has taken personal possession of the property, as if it were bought and paid for, and, more than that, he has spent $1,000 or $2,000 upon it, and has his tracks upon it. He has taken an irreparable step, a step which he cannot retrace, because it would be against his dignity and inconsistent with his place in the Ministry. And the Government could not allow him to do that, even if he were willing. If he has simply discussed the purchase of the wharf and agreed to ask a vote of Parliament, that would be all right. But the action he has taken prevents entirely an open mind with reference to this transaction. The Government and its followers are bound to approve this transaction or repudiate the Government, and that they cannot do.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) might be supposed to be making a very good speech on behalf of an Opposition member of the Prince Edward Island legislature.

Mr. FOSTER. What I have said is without any such consideration. I speak as I think it is my duty to speak.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the point he makes might be a strong one from the standpoint of an opponent of the Prince Edward Island Government, who might say: You have given up this property to the possession of the Minister of Railways and Canals without getting anything in return.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That might be a ground for attacking the Government of Prince Edward Island for giving the Minister of Railways and Canals the use of this property without receiving a copper of money, but how the Dominion Government can be complained of in the matter when we have merely taken possession and have not paid anything for the purchase of the property so far, is not clear, and in that respect my hon. friend's criticism is without ground.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose the Government says to this House: You are free to reject this vote or to authorize it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. He knows the Government have tied the House just as much as if there were manacles around them. Suppose the House would take the view that they would not supplement the bargain, what would happen then? $25,000 of the people's money has gone into that wharf. Does not that make a difference? It does to the extent of the loss of that money, but it does not as to the purchase, and I was discussing the purchase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Cannot my hon. friend separate the purchase from the action of the Government in taking possession? Surely he is not doing himself credit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman ignores the fact that the putting of this spur down upon that wharf is not only an advantage to the Prince Edward Island Railway, but a pub-the convenience, and if Parliament did refuse to make this grant, the people and the government of Prince Edward Island would be the very last people to ask us to take up our rails and discontinue the use of that wharf, and my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) will corroborate what I say. It is a matter of mutual benefit to the people and to the Government to have the use of that wharf. My hon. friend is simply carrying to an absurd extreme his idea that we are taking some advantage of the members of Parliament, that we are coming in here and tying the hands of Parliament. If Parliament is as much hand-tied as he suggests, would they not be hand-tied to an equal extent by any proposition we could lay upon the Table of this House? If we had agreed to buy the wharf, if we had brought in a proposition asking Parliament to authorize us to purchase, would not our friends be manacled to the same extent that they are now? Of course they would. But they are not manacled at all. If they lost confidence in our judgment, when we come to Parliament for authority to purchase, they could refuse that authority just as fully as they can in the present case. I know my hon. friend is very anxious to criticise, I know he is in a hypercritical mood, and he does not seriously regard this matter as open to the criticism that he has made upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. I must make my protest against any such assumption. My hon. friend may be the kind of man who would get up and seriously contend what he does not believe, but I repudiate his assumption that I can do any such thing. As long as I sit in this House I shall follow every illegal action of this Government as far as I can do it, and I am going to protest against it in the interest of good government. Let it be understood that I am not saying one word against what may be the benefit of this, I am in favour of railways increasing their means of doing business. But my hon. friends opposite seem to think they have the whole argument in their favour when a thing is wrongfully done, by saying that it would be beneficial, that it is desirable. The fact that a thing is desirable is no reason why you should go at it in a wrong way. If my hon. friend had sent down a year ago to a provincial government and had said: I will take over your property that is worth $250,000, will you give it to me for $250,000? And they would say: Yes, and he would enter into possession of it, he would go to work and make public improvements upon it, and pay for them with public money, and a year afterwards come down, after he had been using it, and asked us to vote for it, would that be a thing that any Parliament could swallow? Does it make a bit of difference whether it is $250,000 or $3,400? Not at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend object to this vote?

Mr. FOSTER. Now, hear that childish remark! There never was a more childish word uttered by any man, after I had just stated that I was not opposed to the improvement itself, but I was opposed to the method. He thinks to gain a smart advantage over me by asking me if I am opposed to this vote, so that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can go down to Prince Edward Island and say: Foster and the Liberal-Conservatives opposed this vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They will understand it fully.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not bandy words with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. No, bandy arguments.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman should not interrupt when he objects to being interrupted himself. The hon. gentleman finds fault with this vote, but he does not dare oppose it. He protests against it. Well, let the vote pass now, and in concurrence he can make a motion against it. The hon. gentleman will remember that old Latin maxim: De minimis non curat prætor.

Mr. FOSTER. Give it to me in English.

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought my hon. friend would understand it. The translation of it is this: There are some minds too small to delight in great things, they only delight in small things.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought, Mr. Chairman, there were some cuss words in that Latin phrase, that the Minister himself did not like to use in English. But it appears that the whole purport of it is that gentlemen on the Opposition side have small minds, and cannot grasp large questions.

The PRIME MINISTER. Only some of them.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite willing that the public should judge.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is not whether this will be a benefit to the people of Prince Edward Island and to the railway, what we object to is the principle of spending public money without the authority of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Railways and Canals says there was no bargain in writing with the local authorities. Whatever arrangement existed, with whom was it made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Attorney General Peters. There was no written contract.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
In what year was it made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was the year before last.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Were the negotiations ended finally with him, or were they carried on with his successor ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The arrangement was made between Mr. Peters who was premier and leader of the provincial government, and myself, but when we were preparing our Estimates last year there was no estimate made to enable us to carry it out. We have been reminded since by the present premier, who has called my attention to the oversight. We intended to ask for the amount last year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
At the time that the local government came up—either Mr. Peters or his successor—were there any other proposals ? Is this not part of a general demand made by the Island government in regard to certain expenditures they wish the Federal Government to make in Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say to my hon. friend that so far as I am aware this was a transaction by itself. It was not coupled with any other proposal. The arrangement was made directly with the Railway Department and this was the only proposal that was brought to my notice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
That may be. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the Island government were making demands upon the Federal Government for certain expenditures in Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think for certain expenditures. I know they have made certain claims on divers and sundry occasions, but they are not connected with this.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Is the hon. gentleman able to say that this is not a part of the demands made by the Government of Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My recollection very distinctly is that it was not coupled in any shape or form with any other demands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Is that the idea of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It has nothing to do with any general claim in any way, shape or form. They merely recommended that this should be done because it was necessary in the interest of that part of the country that a spur should be built down to the wharf for the shipment of grain.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
As I understand there was no correspondence about this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say that, but I do not recollect any.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The hon. gentleman will see how important it is, and that is one of the reasons that I rise at all to speak on this item. That is a most unsatisfactory way of conducting public business in connection with this or any other item of public expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sorry my hon. friend takes that view.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
We have had repeated instances during this session of abuses of this kind, and it is an important part of this discussion as to how far the Government should pledge themselves in advance of any parliamentary action. The position of the hon. Minister of Railways may be tenable or it may not be. If there was any correspondence we might be entitled to form some judgment as to the nature of the bargain, if a bargain has been made. It is not only unfortunate for the proper discussion of this question by this committee, but for the relationship of the Government and the parties with whom they are dealing that there should be no record kept to which these parties or the Government may appeal. I venture to say that this is a dangerous principle for any department to go upon. Here you are purchasing a wharf, or, in another case, you are undertaking to expend public money in connection with some public work, small or big, and in this case it has actually happened that there is no record of any kind in the matter only the mere statement of the Minister who states things to the best of his recollection from his side of the case. In view of the position the hon. Minister of Finance assumes, it is quite possible that the Government might take an entirely different view of this matter, and I do not know that anything the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has said to-day would prevent the local government taking the position, that they had the good faith of the Government pledged to this proposal. The only chance they took was the chance that the Government majority would not approve of the action of the Minister of Railways and Canals, or his colleagues, and that the vote would be lost. That is the only risk they run with the understanding they have. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals no doubt told the local authorities that he would make a bona fide effort to induce Parliament to agree to this vote. I fancy that after they obtained the consent of the Governor General to bringing this item down here they merely run some little chance of the vote not being agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is just the same as every vote.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, in reference to any item in the Supply Bill, and nothing but the loss of confidence in the Government would prevent it going through.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We dropped several.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the hon. Minister of Finance say that the Government are free to enter into another arrangement with Prince Edward Island, that there is nothing to prevent them from dropping this item?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not consent to that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister of Finance is making a point that is entirely different from the one I am putting. I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will not push that view any further than I am supposing it to exist, that he is in honour bound to do what is reasonable and fair to get this item through. This brings up the question that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) has raised. It does not matter whether the item is $3,500 or whether it is $35,000, so long as that principle is involved to which the hon. member for York has addressed himself, and that is the violation of the principle that, except in extreme cases of urgency, which are mentioned in the statute, and for which there is a process already provided, all supplies and all expenditures should be controlled by Parliament and that Parliament should be consulted in advance. It should not be assumed from anything the hon. member for York has said that he desires to attack the proposition of making suitable arrangements in connection with the railway service in this or any other locality. All he has done, and I would like to identify myself with him in that, in the strongest possible manner, is to advocate the general principle that where money is required for public purposes, large or small, this Parliament should be consulted in advance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think that it is improper and incompatible with the position of a Minister, in any department of government, to ascertain from a person who has property to sell, which the Government, in the opinion of the Minister, ought to buy, upon what terms he will be willing to sell it and whether he would hold the property for the Government and to give the assurance that if he could get the authority from Parliament he would take it over.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No; I know of many cases where that is done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would it not be paralyzing the arm of administration if that could not be done?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes; I do not think that in anything the hon. member for York has said he has found fault with the principle involved in the last statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals. But in this case the hon. Minister has gone farther.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is as far as it has gone.

Mr. TAYLOR. You went farther; you spent money.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In this case the Government has taken a definite position and public money has been spent in good faith in that direction, so far as the local government are concerned, and there has been action taken in this regard. There is nothing in the English House of Commons where the House shows such appreciation of the position in which the Government may place the Parliament, without the wish of Parliament, though Parliament sustains the Government and sustains them reluctantly, as in regard to this matter of parliamentary appropriation for supplies. I have in my mind a case in which the British Government in the sixties, entered into an arrangement for subsidizing a steamship line which subsequently got into difficulties, but under the contract made outside Parliament, the Government was pledged to guarantee the interest on the bonds. That Government was defeated in the meantime, and the incoming Government, although they contended the contract was improperly and illegally made, still felt bound to show good faith, and though they denounced the whole transaction they voted the money and are paying regularly the interest on the bonds of that bankrupt company down to the present time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is done very frequently.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but it was an abuse in that case, and it was so denounced in Parliament that a similar case, as I believe, has not occurred in England since. If there is not the strongest possible protest made in this Parliament now, this abuse may possibly carry us to very extreme lengths. I join in the request, that later on such correspondence as is in the possession of the department should be brought down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recall any correspondence, but in order to be on the safe side when asked the question, I said it was quite likely I had some reminders from the provincial government on the subject. There was nothing in the way of correspondence which would amount to a written contract. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) thinks that the fact that there was not a written contract is ground for additional criticism, but some of his friends would have made it a ground of complaint if there was a written contract. I admit that what took place was purely a verbal understanding, and if this were a complicated matter it might give rise later to misunderstanding. It is very necessary that these things should be done in a proper way, but you must remember that we are not only a Government administering public affairs, but we are common carriers, operators of a railway, and we have to meet the urgent demands of the public even when Parliament is not in session. It should be, and I believe it has been regarded in the past as being within the general scope of the authority of a Minister and of the Government—in proper cases of which Parliament must always be the judge—that action may be taken in advance of the action of Parliament. I concede that there is a possibility of misconception arising, as to the exact terms of such understandings, if they are not committed to writing. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will remember a case where he made an arrangement for the purchase of a lot of land at Newcastle from the Hon. Peter Mitchell. He says he made that arrangement in the presence of Mr. Pottinger, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has written me several letters on the subject. In the first place, he wrote me that he could not say exactly what price he was to pay, but he was very clear that he made the transaction with Mr. Mitchell to buy the land for a certain amount which he did not remember.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without a vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course; there was no vote of Parliament. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) intended to get a vote, but he made the bargain to buy first. He subsequently wrote me a letter to say that his mind was refreshed on the subject, and whilst in the previous letter he could not say what the purchase price was to be, he was then clear that it was $7,000. He stated that he made this square trade and bargain with Mr. Mitchell to buy his land for $7,000. I could not myself see that I was under any obligation to carry that arrangement out, and I was not satisfied that it should be bought in the public interest, and the thing dragged along. Later I had another letter from my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) in which his memory was still more clearly refreshed, and in the latter communication he remembered that he had agreed to buy this piece of land for $10,000, and he pressed upon me to pay Mr. Mitchell the $10,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On receiving this strong representation from my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), I went down to look at the piece of property, and I was compelled to come to the conclusion that the railway did not require the land, and that if it did require it, $1,000 would be a very high price to pay for it. We could not sell it for $1,000 to anyone; we did not need it, and, therefore, notwithstanding the pressure brought on me from all quarters, and while I would like to be as obliging as possible, seeing what occurred when my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was Minister; I could not decide that it was in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, or of the public, to buy that land. I can very well see, as my hon. friend suggested, that the presence of a written understanding between the ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) when he was Minister, and the Hon. Mr. Mitchell, would have removed a great deal of misunderstanding as to what price he bargained for. I mention that to show that in certain matters it is well to have the terms written out. But in this case, we perfectly understand what the arrangement is, and it was all subject to the condition that Parliament should vote this sum.

Mr. McNEILL. Two observations have fallen from members of the Government which strike me as being very remarkable, to say the least. The first was from the hon. Minister of Finance, who said that a case might be made against the local government because they had given over this wharf without having received anything in the way of a money payment in return. He said it might be said against the local government: "You have given the wharf, and you have got nothing for it." The implication there, if it means anything at all, is that a case might be made against the local government, because they had no right to put faith in the pledges of the Dominion Government. That is a statement against which I protest. I protest against the assumption, especially coming from the lips of a Minister of the Crown, that when the Government of the Dominion makes a pledge, that pledge may be broken. That is the last argument that should be made by a Minister of the Crown. But I was still more surprised and very much alarmed at the statement made by the Prime Minister—who, I am sorry, is not present at the present moment in his place—that it was a small thing, and it was only men of small minds who could regard it as anything but a small thing, that the well-established rule that the money of the people shall not be spent without the consent of the people's representatives, had been violated. When you find the Prime Minister taking a position of that kind in his place on the floor of Parliament, I think we have arrived at an alarming condition of things in this country. We have seen many strange things done by this Government; we have heard many strange expressions from them; but not until now, in the course of this Parliament and the life of this Government, have we heard such an alarming statement as that which fell from the lips of the Prime Minister a few moments ago. I hope the people of this country will take note of it, that we have from the highest authority sitting on the Treasury benches the deliberate statement that it is a small thing to spend the money of the people without the consent of the people's representatives, and to set at defiance a well-established constitutional rule of this country and this Empire.

Mr. HAGGART. The objection taken on this side of the House is, I think, very pertinent, and is unanswerable—that there should be some record of all these proceedings. The hon. gentleman might be justified in entering into a contract if that contract is submitted to Parliament afterwards to receive its sanction; but there is no record of these proceedings, and there is no report of the officer in charge of the railway as to the necessity of acquiring this wharf. If the hon. gentleman has such a report, he ought to bring it down to the House. The hon. gentleman justifies his proceedings by saying that at some time or other I entered into an arrangement with Mr. Peter Mitchell to purchase land at Miramichi. Any arrangement which I made in regard to the Intercolonial Railway, I made on the recommendation of my engineers. I took a memorandum of the proceedings; I had a report to justify me; but the hon. gentleman says he went down there and found that the place was not worth one-seventh of what I had agreed to pay Mr. Mitchell.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You told me latterly it was $10,000 you agreed to pay.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman bring down the correspondence? Mr. Mitchell came to me and told me that the Minister of Railways would pay the money at once if I wrote a letter and said that there was an arrangement for the payment of $7,000. It is a small transaction for the hon. gentleman to bring up. He knows the whole effect of it; and he knows what my responsibility was for what took place long after I was a Minister. I never expected that the Minister would bring the matter up in the House. The other day he talked about private correspondence with a gentleman in England being made public; but this is a smaller matter than that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman make such a statement as that. He never had any communication with me, I admit; but, not simply on one occasion, but on three different occasions, he gave letters to Mr. Mitchell stating that what he said then was the revised and the re-revised arrangement which he had made with Mr. Mitchell. What did he give these letters for? To be pigeon-holed, and held as private and confidential, never to be breathed about? No, sir; these letters were written for the purpose of enabling Mr. Mitchell to induce me to buy this property from him, and to justify my conduct in buying it before the public and before Parliament, by producing the evidence that my predecessor in office had engaged and promised to take this property from him on these terms. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to say that any such letter was a private letter, and that if I had acted on his statement, I would not have been justified—yes, bound, as a matter of self-defence, and he must have known that that was the purpose for which the letter was given—to bring that letter and use it in Parliament as proof that such an arrangement had been made with the hon. gentleman. Mr. Mitchell stated to me that this arrangement was made in the presence of the manager of the Intercolonial Railway. He (Mr. Haggart) never stated in his letter to me that any engineer was present or that any record was made of the transaction. On the contrary, he said that there was no memorandum or evidence of it, but that the conversation took place in the presence of Mr. Pottinger. I referred to the general manager, and I found that he had not the slightest recollection of any such arrangement or understanding for the purchase of this property. Therefore, of course it was not open to consideration at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand why the Minister of Railways and Canals drags head and shoulders into this discussion a matter which has no relation to what is before the House at all. What are the facts as now stated? It appears that the Hon. Peter Mitchell, a friend and supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, a man who for the last ten years has shown the strongest hostility to the Conservative party, who has run election after election for hon. gentlemen opposite, and has done everything he could to injure and break down the Conservative party, had a piece of land which the engineer of the Intercolonial Railway recommended as a desirable piece of property to purchase in connection with that railway. He was not a political friend of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), but a political opponent of that hon. gentleman, and a political and personal friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. Therefore, my hon. friend was under no obligation whatever to do anything or to strain a point to favour

Mr. Mitchell. But the engineer of the department, having stated that it would be desirable in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway to obtain this piece of property, and having taken the best means he could to ascertain what its value was, he told Mr. Mitchell that he had come to the conclusion that it was desirable to purchase it in the interest of the country; and having gone out of power before that arrangement was completed, he has implemented it at Mr. Mitchell's request by stating, as a matter of business to the Minister of Railways and Canals, that he had contemplated the purchase of that property at a particular price.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That he had agreed to buy it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What had that to do with the question before the committee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has this to do with it. We are being criticised now, because we made an arrangement to purchase a piece of property contingent upon such purchase being approved by Parliament. We are being criticised now because we made an arrangement to purchase a piece of property provided we got the approval of Parliament. Yet here is a transaction of my predecessor, and which seems not to have been an uncommon thing, and I refer to that in reply to the hon. member for Pictou, to show that similar transactions have taken place before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not see that the cases have any bearing on each other. The contract of which the hon. gentleman speaks was not completed. There was simply a purchase contemplated between the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) and one of his strongest political opponents. That purchase was not completed, and at the request of Mr. Mitchell, my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), as a matter of business and fairness, communicated to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) what he had contemplated doing, if he had remained in power.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume, therefore, that the constitutionality of the transaction depends upon whether the person with whom you are having it is an opponent or friend of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but I am utterly at a loss to understand why the hon. Minister should wish to make it appear that a gentleman to whom he and his friends are deeply indebted for long years of hearty, earnest political support, and who has expended his time, money and help in their service, was trying to impose on the Government and get a much larger price for a piece of property than it was worth. I do not think that Mr. Mitchell will feel deeply indebted to the hon. gentleman for thus bringing his name into this discussion. In my judgment, this conduct is on a par with some other transactions of an equally ungrateful character. I am at a loss to know what the committee is detained about. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) said an hour ago that he had no objection to the item passing, on the understanding that the Minister of Railways would furnish later on in the evening any correspondence that bore on the subject. I left the House an hour ago when that proposal was made, and when I came back I would suppose—if I had not known the relations of the parties—that for some purpose or other the hon. Minister of Railways was talking against time. When he travelled away down to Newcastle, and was dragging in his old friends for the purpose of placing them in an unfavourable light before the House, I concluded that he had forgotten he is a member of the Government and desirous of putting through his Estimates, and that an hour ago my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) had offered to allow the item to pass on condition that the hon. gentleman would bring down, later in the evening, the correspondence.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has dragged this matter in for the purpose of making a comparison between the two transactions. There is no comparison, as the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well. I stated the result of the conversation between myself and the manager of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman then met the manager of the Intercolonial Railway, and that gentleman's recollection was not the same as mine. Of course, the transaction then ceased, and the department was no longer bound by it. When the hon. gentleman got a letter from me giving my recollection of the transaction, and when the manager of the Intercolonial Railway said that he did not remember anything of the kind, the Minister was not bound to do anything. Just look at the difference between the two transactions. In the one case the Intercolonial Railway had never entered into possession. There was only an alleged agreement between Mr. Mitchell and myself, and the gentleman who is manager of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. Minister induced Mr. Mitchell to come to me and get from me a letter explaining the transaction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HAGGART. In order to justify—so I was told—his giving to a political friend a certain amount for a piece of property, which, it is alleged, the Intercolonial Railway wanted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has no authority for saying that I used any influence of the kind. Mr. Mitchell never went to the hon. gentleman at my suggestion or request.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Mitchell told me that he came direct from you to me to get the letter. I went to the hon. Minister myself and had a private interview with him on the subject. I explained to him, as far as my memory went, the whole transaction. He knew perfectly well my ideas on the subject, and then he asked Mr. Mitchell to come to me for the purpose of getting a letter giving my recollection of the conversation that I had with Mr. Pottinger. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Pottinger never recommended it. Mr. Pottinger took a part.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I only tell you what Mr. Pottinger said.

Mr. HAGGART. He took a part of the same property for the Intercolonial Railway and paid for it. Mr. Mitchell said that was part of the same transaction, and that Mr. Pottinger was to have taken the whole of the property. Mr. Pottinger's recollection may be that he did not recommend it to me, but I thought that he did, and under that impression I wrote the letter to the Minister. And the Minister had also a private conversation with me on the subject, for I went in and explained to him, as far as I remembered, the whole transaction. When Mr. Mitchell came to me, he told me that he came at the instance of the Minister, who had said that if he got a letter from me stating what I remembered of the conversation, he would put the amount in the Estimates and pay Mr. Mitchell.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope we are not to be diverted by the discussion of the Mitchell case from the vote before the House. Whether or not Mr. Mitchell is a supporter or opponent of the Government is of no consequence, or whether the price paid him for his land was sufficient or not. The hon. leader of the Opposition and the ex-Minister of Finance have assailed the Minister of Railways because he made an agreement with the Government of Prince Edward Island to purchase a piece of property, necessarily subject to the vote of Parliament. These hon. gentlemen argue that in doing that he tied the hands of the House and took away from Parliament that freedom it ought to have with regard to the appropriations in Supply. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) retorted by citing a similar case in which the late Government agreed to pay Mr. Mitchell for a piece of land, for which they had not asked any appropriation. In that case, it was not merely an offer to purchase, but an absolute purchase, because Mr. Mitchell says that they did purchase this property. What is more, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), to his credit be it said, told his successor that he had purchased the property, and gave Mr. Mitchell a letter to that effect. What does that prove? It proves that in the administration of the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway there may be occasions when it is expedient for a Minister to contract, subject to the vote of Parliament, for a certain piece of property, and that was what the Minister did.

Mr. FOSTER. No one challenges that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend and his colleagues have been challenging that. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) asked a little while ago what was the cause of delay. The cause of delay has been simply that hon. gentlemen opposite have assailed us for purchasing this property, as they say, without a vote of Parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. No, for taking possession of it and spending money on it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is another phase of the matter. We find that in this other case a property was purchased. The only question is whether the price has been a fair one. I think it quite fair to say that unless the Minister was at liberty to carry out such transactions the Intercolonial Railway could not be run.

Mr. COCHRANE. As a layman, I am surprised at the stand taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. The argument of the Minister of Finance did not at all touch the point that has been brought before this committee. The question was not whether they have a right to make a bargain, but the question was whether they have a right to enter into the possession of property and spend public money upon property without consulting Parliament. The case cited by the Minister of Finance is not a parallel case at all, for the money was not paid nor was the property occupied. But the Minister of Railways and Canals, in the case now before us, not only negotiated for the purchase of the property but entered into possession and spent public money without asking Parliament for authority. Of course, hon. gentlemen opposite seek to draw a red herring across the track; that is in accord with their action in everything else. They think that if they can go back and show that the Tories did what they are doing, they justify themselves completely. In the time I have been in Parliament, I never knew of a transaction like this. The gentlemen are doing away altogether with the responsibility of Parliament. If this is the way our affairs are to be managed, they might as well dismiss the House and run the country without our assistance. I am surprised to see such action on the part of gentlemen, who, during the eighteen long years when they sat on this side of the House would hardly let us go out to breathe, but they would insist that it must be done by contract. And they hand over thousands of public money to a man to spend in such a way that he himself gets a commission. And because we object to that kind of thing, they say we have small souls. The opinion of the people in the country is that there is a steal in that transaction, and that seems to be the explanation of a good many of the transactions perpetrated by gentlemen in power to-day.

Farran's Point Canal—Enlargement..... $22,000

Mr. HAGGART. How is this to be finished and how much has been expended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The appropriation $325,000 has been spent. It is expected that this $22,000 will complete it. We hope and expect to have it done by 1st July.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) take this opportunity of making a statement, in the light of his present information, as to the time when we may expect to have the fourteen-foot navigation, canal and river, completed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would gladly accede to my hon. friend's (Sir Charles Tupper) request, but I think it would be better, if agreeable to him, if I defer a positive statement until I come to the main Estimates. I have a judgment upon the question, but I think I shall have a better and more reliable one on the subject in a week or ten days.

North Channel—Deepening, &c..... $212,000

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. Minister explain how much has been expended and how near this work is to completion ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the fourteen-foot channel, and could use it at any moment now. But it is of a width of 160 feet, and we propose to make it a width of 300 feet.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the hon. Minister is mistaken. They are working this dry.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is dammed up at either end. But if it were possible for us to use the other canals above and below, we could remove the dam and have the fourteen-foot navigation for a width of 160 feet. But seeing we cannot use the other canals, and as it is cheaper and more expedient to work without letting in the water, the dam is kept standing.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount expended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Up to 1st of May we had paid $400,640. We owe $212,000.

Mr. COCHRANE.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is required to complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is estimated that the remainder of the work will require $56,000 or $57,000. The cost of the whole work, including land damages, would be about $700,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Of course, it is too late to protest now ; but I protested before this was begun against what I believed to be an expenditure of nearly $700,000 on this work. There was no necessity for this channel. They had a perfectly good channel. We have the right under the Washington treaty, of navigating the American side of the channel ; and with very little or no expenditure, by going round the point, you could utilize the locks at Cardinal. Mr. Rubidge, the engineer-in-chief, recommended the scheme to me again and again, but I refused to spend one cent upon it. I thought the expenditure would be entirely useless. There was a good channel on the American side that we have the right to navigate, we could go from that channel to the mouth of the Cardinal locks. I am aware that the engineer-in-chief recommended the Minister to build this work. I can only enter my protest that there is no necessity for this amount, and I think it is an entirely useless expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend adheres very strongly to the view that the other channel would have been the better channel, but all the engineers of the department are against him, and were against him when he was Minister of the department. They furnished evidence of the fact that it would cost just as much to make the other channel of the depth of fourteen feet as to make this one of that depth ; and the other would have the disadvantage that it would be a very circuitous channel, whereas this is a splendid dead-straight channel right into the canal. All the transportation men were, without exception, in favour of making this channel, as against the other. One would think that when the responsible officers of the department all concurred in the view that this was the proper channel, and when their reports were unquestionably to the effect that this work could be done at an expense not greater than deepening the other channel from nine to fourteen feet, I think the department came to a wise conclusion. My hon. friend has a strong opinion, and is entitled to the enjoyment of it, but it was not in harmony with that of the officers of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend may be perfectly justified in stating that it would take as much money to utilize the other channel as to build the north channel, but I venture to say that if he puts on any unprejudiced engineer to make an examination, he will get no such report as that.

There is no necessity for coming in so close to the point where the water is but nine feet. He could go round it. But if he excavated a channel from the point down, the quantities do not justify the statement which, I have no doubt, has been put in the mouth of the Minister as to the expenditure being as much as for building the north channel. I venture to say that an unprejudiced engineer would report that it would not cost one-fifth, let alone as much as the Minister has said. I do not blame him, because he is taking the report of the engineer-in-chief. He says he has the report of the engineer in his department in favour of the scheme.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So my deputy tells me.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no engineer in his department taking charge of it, unless it is himself. Who is the engineer of his department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Rubidge, the superintending engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Rubidge is the officer of the canals. He always was in favour of it, he recommended it to me, he brought me up to the channel and tried to impress me with the necessity of building it. I thought the deputy who was along with me and Mr. Monroe, who was along with me at the time, rather concurred in my opinion that there was no necessity. The deputy may have altered his opinion since, I am not positive whether he expressed any decided opinion upon it. But I thought it was very plain, as the facts came out, to any one who had an eye at all for such things that there was not the least necessity for building it, as we had a perfectly good channel on the American side, and a very little expenditure on the point for the purpose, taking a straight line towards the mouth of the locks, would meet the purpose without this enormous expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a great difference of opinion with respect to a good many works in connection with the St. Lawrence Canal, but so far as I am aware there was no difference of opinion in the department, and among the officers who had charge of the work, as to the superiority of this route and as to the cost. I had no opinion of my own about it, and would not be expected to have any.

Lachine Canal—

Deepening River St. Pierre..... $8,400

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to drop this.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the position of that work now? We had a spirited discussion over it at a previous time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am inclined to the opinion that what work was done was done very wisely and judiciously, that it was a good scheme. I went over it, and I am sure that so far as the uncultivated mind is capable of forming a judgment, it was a good scheme.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it the Minister's opinion that it was a good thing for the people who wanted the drainage?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say it hurt the people that were going to get the benefit of the drainage.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was expended on it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $160,000 or $170,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no more to be spent on it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be an amount, I think we will have to put it in the supplementaries.

Trent Canal—

W. Quinn, concrete inspector, two-thirds of his wages while laid up..... $153

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This man, while in the Government employ, met with an accident that laid him up for three months. I think it is the custom in the department to allow two-thirds of the wages where a person is laid up from an accident through no fault of his own. It was through some hoisting apparatus.

Mr. TAYLOR. I just want to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the Government to an item which ought to be here, but which is not. I intended to have drawn attention to the subject last night, when the item was going through in reference to the widow of the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. I refer to the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie). He was here for the best part of the session, but he was taken down with typhoid fever, and his medical adviser said that he should be sent home. He was sent home and placed under medical treatment there until the end of the session. When he came to settle up he was docked $150 of his sessional indemnity. I think his full sessional indemnity should be paid. If he had been sick here in Ottawa he would have got it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I could not say a word at this moment, but I am very glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has brought my attention to it.

Chambly Canal—

To purchase double metallic telephone lines $700

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a telephone line which belongs to the Bell Telephone Company. They have changed the route of their main line, abandoning this, and as we will have to construct a telephone line for the purpose of our canal, we have an offer from them to sell for this price. My engineer says it would cost twice or three times that sum—between $1,600 and $1,700—to construct a line.

Mr. POWELL. How long is it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nine miles.

Mr. FOSTER. That is about $80 a mile ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would have to put up a new line if we did not get this. It is really quite an advantage to us to be able to make this arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. They could not have any use for their old line, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are changing their line. They are abandoning this line ; they really have no use for it, because their new line takes a different route. I think that $80 a mile for that line is quite an advantageous price. It is double metallic. I think it is cheap.

Mr. POWELL. Being double metallic does not add very much to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does add this, that you get twice the quantity of wire, which is copper, and copper is not a drug on the market.

Mr. POWELL. Surely it cannot be copper, because that wire would come to more than that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As I tell you, we are getting what the engineer tells me would cost between $1,600 and $1,700 to replace. It is copper wire, and it is in good condition.

Mr. HAGGART. Copper wire is worth more than that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if this Chambly Canal is the canal in reference to which I asked a few questions the other day as to damage being done to farmers' lands and to the destruction of their roadway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember the question the hon. gentleman has reference to.

Mr. TAYLOR. I put another question on the Paper last night in reference to this matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to an indenture dated the 8th of December, 1845, being an agreement between the Government of Canada and the owners of the land. This agreement quite contradicts the answer the hon. Minister gave the other day. I would ask him to look into it, to revise his answer, and to be more careful in answering the question I have now submitted, because there is a distinct agreement between the Government and the farmers that the Government will maintain the roadway for all time, in consideration of the farmers giving up the right to their property. I think when my hon. friend reads the agreement made between the Government and these farmers in 1845, he will find that the answers he gave the other day were not correct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I read the answers that are given to me. I will, however, call the attention of the proper officer to it.

Cornwall Canal—

To pay balance of amount expended on repairs to recess, platforms and tail bays of new locks, Nos. 15 and 17.. $6,500

Mr. HAGGART. What new locks require repairs ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The platforms of the two locks, Nos. 15 and 17, require to be taken up and rebuilt.

Mr. HAGGART. Why ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have become delapidated, and require to be renewed.

Mr. HAGGART. Would you find out the reason ? New locks like that, only built a couple of years, and which have only been in use a year, could not be out of repair, unless there were surely some reason, such as faulty construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only explanation that my deputy can give is that the water and the ice got under them and destroyed them, so that, they require to be replaced.

Mr. HAGGART. Bad cement, I suppose—some foreign cement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must be responsible for the cement.

Mr. HAGGART. While on the subject of the canals, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he did with the quantity of cement that he got from Thorold to be used on the Soulanges Canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not use any more of it in the works. We have not paid them anything more since the hon. gentleman brought the subject up. It is in statu quo. That is the present position of the question. There was a portion of the cement which was good. It was looked into, and it was found to be as good as could be desired, but there was a portion of it which was defective. It seems to me difficult to understand, because the Thorold people have been making cement for many years. Their cement has gone into some of the best canal work we have. A very large portion of it was used on the Welland Canal by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), and other contractors, and the work is standing to-day in first-class condition. There must have been some carelessness in the manufacture of some recently made, because, unquestionably, a portion of it was defective. We have not used that nor paid for it.

Repairs and alterations to the Governor General's car "Victoria"..... $2,500

Mr. POWELL. What does that mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Each new Governor General, when he arrives upon the scene, has his own views in regard to the car. There is an arrangement which has been existing for a great many years, covering the periods of a great many Governors General, under which repairs that they require are made, and the cost of these repairs is added to the previous capital expenditure and interest is charged upon the amount.

Mr. FOSTER. It is treated as an investment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an investment.

Mr. HAGGART. You charge interest on all these repairs?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has been the arrangement. It is increasing. Each one has to have his little improvements made, and the present Governor General, Lord Minto, is no exception to the rule in that regard.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not rendered necessary as a cleaning process on account of the Minister of Public Works having had this car for a while jaunting around, is it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never heard that he used this car. I understand that the Governor General is the only one who ever used it.

Mr. BRITTON. Is transportation at the public expense?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all; he has to make his own arrangements; we simply furnish him with a car.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many private cars have we now for the Governor General and for the members of the Government, at the expense of the country?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have only one Governor General and only one Governor General's car. We have a car which is supposed to be more exclusively intended for the use of the Ministers, and we have a car for the Deputy Minister and Chief Engineer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that the "Cumberland"?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was the "Cumberland," but it has now been transferred to the "Montreal." It is a second-hand car which Mr. Harris, during his brief administration, purchased from the Grand Trunk Railway for $4,000 or $4,500. These are the only cars that I know of, which belong to the Government, that are brought up here.

Mr. POWELL. Has the Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway a private car?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but it is usually at Moncton, I believe.

Mr. POWELL. It is a small matter to refer to, and it is only by way of retaliation, that is all, that I speak of it. When the Conservative party was in power there was a tremendous uproar made from one end of the country to the other, as if the constitution itself was shaken, that some improper, or supposed improper use, was made of these cars. I see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is on the alert; his voice resounded through "all Greece to Macedon and Artaxeres' Throne," in denunciation of private cars.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think you can recall an instance where I referred to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. POWELL. I can recall several.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish you would do it then.

Mr. POWELL. I wish to ask the Minister (Mr. Blair) what are the regulations with respect to these cars. I have no doubt that if there are any regulations they would be violated by Conservatives as much as by Liberals, but inasmuch as it was made a very vital point in the Liberal platform, I would like to know if there are any rules established as to the use of these cars by others than officials. Of course when the Minister of Railways travels he has a right to have any persons with him he sees fit, or when another Minister travels it is recognized by usage also to be the correct thing. But I understand these private cars have lately been handed over to little girls for their transportation, and to their uncles and their cousins and their aunts. I am not raising a very serious objection, except on the ground of consistency, because I recognize the fact that a great railway cannot be run without granting little privileges of this kind. Private railways see it in their interest to have private cars, and I do not think it would hurt the country very much that the Ministers should have one. It does seem a little inconsistent that the Ministers should use private cars for the accommodation of their friends after denouncing such use before they came into power.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid we are all somewhat inconsistent. My memory is not very retentive on these points, but I can recall the tremendous furore that was raised by our Conservative friends, by reason of the fact that Mr. Brydges had a car during the Mackenzie Government. I think one election was pretty nearly run on the strength of Brydges' car.

Mr. FOSTER. They were a new thing, then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The matter may have been taken up in the same sense by Liberal candidates and newspapers. The arrangement, as far as there is any arrangement, in regard to these cars is that my own official car is under my own direct control, and I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) that I never had any of my family junketing about in it.

Mr. POWELL. I did not refer to you at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have never sent it out under these circumstances. I have it when I go myself, and it is not used otherwise. There is a spare car here which Ministers have when they require it, but they have to pay for their transportation; what I mean is there is no expense in connection with it.

Mr. FOSTER. Have to pay what, and to whom?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have to pay for their own transportation unless they can arrange with railway companies to give them free transportation. The Government do not pay for the transportation of the car.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody pays for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The idea I want to convey is, that the use of the car does not involve any charge upon the revenues of the country in any way, and there are no railway charges paid in respect to it. The Deputy Minister has his car which he uses when he requires it, and which I dare say may often be borrowed by Ministers as occasion may arise. I do not know of any rule that is laid down on the subject.

Mr. POWELL.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) say, as a matter of information, whether or not the Prime Minister has overcome his repugnance to riding in a private car?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To tell the truth I have never seen the Prime Minister on a private car, and I would not like to make any statement in regard to him.

Mr. CLARKE. I presume the same rule prevails with regard to the use of private cars by the present Ministers, as prevailed during the late Conservative Administration. When they are available they are used by hon. gentlemen in the Government who desire to use them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) what he knows about my repugnance to private cars?

Mr. FOSTER. It occurs to me that in the early, and more fresh, and may be a little more innocent stages of this Government's official career, when the right hon. gentleman came from Montreal to Ottawa, shortly after he was Premier, it was heralded all around the country, that he actually rode in a car with other people and did not get on a private car. And the right hon. gentleman when interviewed about it, said: He did not consider himself any better than the common people, and would ride in the same car. I wonder if that same virgin freshness still adheres to my right hon. friend.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think that I was ever interviewed upon that subject, and I do not hold myself responsible for everything that appears in the press. Moreover, I have used a private car when I was acting in an official capacity; otherwise I am a democrat to the hilt.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Amount remaining unpaid of sum appropriated by chap. 2 of the Statutes of 1890, in aid of the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, the date for finishing the work named in contract having expired before final completion thereof; this sum being acknowledged as due, notwithstanding that the changes made in the specifications for the work were not legally authorized. $5,300

Mr. FOSTER. I asked that papers be brought down with reference to this, and some were brought down by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and to-day the Minister of Finance gave me a supplementary list. I shall not now ask that this item stand, but I wish it to be understood that I shall have the right to refer to it in the main Estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I might explain, perhaps, that the total subsidy would be $142,400. There have been payments made, one under the authority of the Act of last session for $61,400. There have been paid on account of those subsidies in all $137,100, leaving a balance of $5,300. When the vote was brought in last year it was explained that I had not the necessary report from the engineers to authorize the payment of the full amount, but they have since been obtained and I have in my hand a report dated the 19th of January, 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not included in the papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As we understand, the engineer had only reported with regard to 20 miles, but it appears we were inaccurate in drawing that inference from his report, because it really covered the whole road, and all required by the department to be done had been done. He sent this report on the 19th of January, showing that it applied to the 25 miles, instead of 20 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish my hon. friend would have a copy of that made and bring it down, so that it may be added to the other papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will see to that.

Mr. FOSTER. My impression was, that a report was made to Council, on which the Minister was authorized, on the report of his engineer, to allow for certain trestle work for which the contract did not allow; that this was set out in the Order in Council; that the total amount of the subsidy due was subject to this exception, and that last year's vote included the subsidy for all of that work. As the Minister had a supplementary report from the engineer, authorizing certain other structures to be considered as equal, not to the requirements of the contract, but to the practical work, this is a further computation of the subsidy, as due.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The Order in Council was based on a report authorizing certain work which, under the terms of the original contract, could not be permitted. It turned out that that authorization made by Order in Council was not within the legal competency of the Governor in Council, because the date for the completion of the work had expired. Therefore, it becomes necessary to ask for a special appropriation of Parliament to make that good.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom is this payable?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. The railway company made an assignment to Barnes, and Barnes made an assignment of the whole of the subsidies to the Bank of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. In that assignment the bank had a complete right to all the subsidies, unless Barnes paid it $40,000, which seems to have been his indebtedness to the bank.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Forty thousand dollars to bring the road up to the condition required.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not appear, from the papers brought down, that Barnes exercised his option to take up his assignment to the bank.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; the money was all paid to the bank.

Mr. FOSTER. And this amount goes to the bank under that assignment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Welland Canal—

Remission of arrears of water rental due by village of Merritton, also law costs in connection $2,140 75

Mr. FOSTER. Why is this allowed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A lease was made of certain lands to the town of Merritton in connection with its water supply system, subject to a rental of $400 a year. The town paid that rental for a short period; but the amount appeared to them to be very large, and they protested against it. Ultimately, the hon. gentleman who preceded me in the department, I think in the year 1890, agreed to reduce the rental, and it was reduced from $400 to $80; but there was a considerable amount of arrears at the old rate. I think there was no promise on the part of my predecessor that the rental in arrears would be abated, and proceedings are being taken against the town to recover those arrears. Not long ago a cyclone struck the town, a good deal of property was destroyed, and the tax-paying capabilities of the town were very much impaired. They came to us with an urgent appeal, ad misericordiam, that we should not enforce the judgment against them for the arrears of rent. They are willing to pay the rental of $80, but they ask us to remit the arrears at the higher rate, and we recommend the remission to Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they paid the money?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What are you going to do with this money?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the authority of this vote we discharge the judgment. It is a mere matter of book-keeping. I do not know any other way of doing it, except by Act of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. I might ask the Minister of Finance, if he consulted his department as to this method of doing away with arrearages. If he has not, I would suggest that he consult with his deputy and the Auditor General on the subject; because it strikes me that this has been done in a different way from what has been done this year. I know that at one time, when arrearages for a large amount were struck off, the matter went before the Public Accounts Committee, the committee reported to the House, and the House authorized the striking off of the arrears.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was that done by Act of Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, because it could not be done otherwise. It strikes me, however, that this is not the right way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will look into the matter and see if there is a better way. By doing it in this way, you swell both the revenue and expenditure needlessly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as the appeal to the Public Accounts Committee is concerned, I think that is a matter for the Government. If they wish to have an independent expression on the facts, they might go to the committee; but, when the Government has a fixed view of the case, there would be no occasion of consulting the committee. If they went to the committee, they would escape a certain amount of criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. That might be an advantage.

Mr. HAGGART. I remember the circumstances in regard to this matter perfectly well, and it was my intention to forgive the indebtedness. It is not a remission; it is the wiping out of an indebtedness due by the town of Merritton. They brought in a very strong argument to show that the neighbouring town was getting the water at a great deal less, and it was my intention to have this amount wiped out. But the trouble is the Governor in Council have no power to do it. The Public Accounts Committee recommended it, but have no power to do it. The only possible way is by an Act of Parliament. The wording of this is a little better than the one brought before the House the other day, but it is still wrong, because there is an amount of money that has never been paid to the Government, and you cannot remit it. Could you not have some form of words which would have the effect of wiping it out altogether?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the one hand, you would have to pay out the money and on the other hand to receive it back.

Mr. HAGGART. Who would receive it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Issue a cheque to the Railway Department, and then it would go into the revenue. If you issue a cheque and charge it on the one side and credit the amount among the receipts on the other they would balance.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you would have an abnormal revenue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, if the amount were a large one.

Mr. SPROULE. How much for law costs and how much for remission of rents?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression is something like $140 or $150 for costs. There was an error, we recovered judgment, and of course when we remitted the amount, we remitted the costs.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Welland Canal—

Interest to owners of steamer "Lakeside" on balance of sum deposited as security for damages to Lock 1... $143 87

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This vote arises out of a circumstance which may occur frequently, and, I think, it is desirable that some regular procedure should be taken in such a case. The owners of this steamer did certain damage to the canal. According to usage they were required to make a deposit to cover the cost of the repairs. When these repairs were completed it was found that the amount that they had put up was in excess of the sum expended. The balance of course required to be repaid. The persons who made the deposit had the right to expect that the returned portion should carry interest, and it did really carry interest because it was paid into the bank and they were entitled to get the benefit of it. We are unable, under the existing condition of the law, to add interest to the amount of the refund and are, therefore, compelled to ask for an appropriation.

Mr. SPROULE. What amount are you allowing them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the amount is calculated on the basis of 4 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. Then they must have deposited a very large sum over what was necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They had quite an amount on deposit, but it was in the hands of the Government for over two years.

Mr. PRIOR. Why ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because it took some time to make the repairs, and there was a good deal of dispute as to whether or not the amount of repairs charged against them was properly charged, whether or not we ought to ask them to bear as large a proportion of these repairs, and, therefore, a controversy resulted. Some concessions were made to them ultimately and the amount was settled. The interest we have allowed is only for the period during which we held the money.

Mr. POWELL. I think that is right in principle.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We ought to have some regular machinery.

Mr. POWELL. I was going to bring some other cases to your notice. In election petitions I have had from the office some $4,000 or $5,000 in the hands of the clerk of the election court at one time. In one case it was held for two years and no interest was paid on it. This is a case perfectly on all fours with the one which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has mentioned, and I think there should be some general rule by which interest on such deposits should be paid back to the people who make the deposits.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not think the cases are parallel. The money in an election petition is paid into court, and, of course, there is interest allowed on the money paid.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not have any reference to election deposits.

Mr. POWELL. No, but until it is paid back, the Government have the use of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had in my mind the present case. The other was not in my mind at all.

Mr. POWELL. I think this is a matter that ought to receive the attention of the Government. Somebody has had the use of the money. The officers of the Dominion Government have had it, for the clerk of the election court may be considered such, for in the case of Valin vs. Langlois the court leaned to regard the election court as a Dominion court, and it is only right that the party who makes a deposit should receive interest on it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. There is interest allowed on money paid into the election court. It may not be paid for the full time. The officers of the court, probably, have not much better banking arrangements than an individual can have, and, therefore, there is always a loss on the fraction of the month or when the money does not stay for some length of time. These are things that you cannot do absolute justice in, but, substantially, there is interest paid on money that is paid into court on election petitions, and I suppose, in a case of this kind, when the money is in the hands of the Government, and presumably used for good purposes, there is no reason why the Government should not pay at least bank interest if they are entitled to pay a portion of the money back to any one.

To pay the Kingston and Montreal Forwarding Company a rebate of tolls on grain that passed through the Welland and St. Lawrence canals in 1891 and 1892, and which was transhipped at Ogdensburg..... $7,321 18

Mr. SPROULE. How does this come—seven years old ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very considerable amount; the matter is one of importance, and I desire to put the committee in full possession of the facts in reference to it. This vote is to refund the amount which was paid in tolls in 1891 and 1892, by the Kingston and Montreal Forwarding Company, on grain shipped through the Welland Canal, and later through the St. Lawrence canals to Montreal. The rates of toll during these years were, through the Welland Canal, 20 cents, and 15 cents in addition through the St. Lawrence canals. There was an Order in Council passed as far back as 1839, to the following effect :—

Goods shipped to any port west of the St. Lawrence canals, tolls upon which have already been paid for passage through said canals, may be re-shipped from such ports and be passed through the Welland Canal free of tolls in the same way as if they had been shipped through direct in the first instance ; and goods eastward, having paid Welland Canal tolls, may be transhipped at any port on Lake Ontario, and thereafter pass free through the St. Lawrence canals as if they had been shipped through direct in the first instance.

Mr. PRIOR. That is any grain that was shipped through one port went through the other?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Any grain that was shipped from the port of Montreal and passed through the others, was entitled to a refund of the Welland Canal toll to the extent of 18 cents. That being the condition of things at the time that the shipment took place, the Montreal Forwarding Company shipped the quantity of grain, the statement of which I have here, through the Welland Canal. But as there was no port having facilities on the Canadian side, they went over to Ogdensburg and shipped there, and the grain came down later as originally destined for Montreal. But when they asked for their refund the technical question was raised as to whether they were entitled to it under the strict meaning of the Order in Council. I am inclined to think that the point was raised owing to the fact that between the time the grain had come through the Welland Canal and had gone through the other canal, some little time intervened, and a new Order in Council had passed restricting the privilege and the right to a refund to shipments which had been stopped, and had not been transhipped in ports that were wholly Canadian. It was claimed by the Department of Justice that upon the strict interpretation of this Order in Council the company were not entitled to the refund, because the port of Ogdensburg was not strictly a port on Lake Ontario, but was a port on the river. The claim has been made and pressed, and except upon the grounds that the Justice Department puts forward, I do not know any reason why it was not paid. The matter was submitted to me after coming to the department as an unsettled matter. I took a great deal of pains to look into it, and to arrive at a conclusion, and I must say that I felt bound to come to the same conclusion that my predecessor did when he recommended that the amount should be refunded.

Mr. PRIOR. Did your predecessor recommend it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The Minister of Justice had expressed an opinion that in strictness under the Order in Council, they were not entitled to it, but in equity he thought they were, and so we all did. I reported the case to my colleagues in the Council, and they came to the conclusion that it was a very extreme interpretation of this section that had been put forward. The grain came down destined for Montreal, it came to Montreal, and it only tarried at Ogdensburg because we had not at the time any facilities to make a transfer on the Canadian side of the lake.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it be possible that this company did not ship the same quantity of grain from Ogdensburg?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That point was gone into very carefully. My predecessor sent the proper officer of the department at Ogdensburg, and he followed up the vessel's record, and followed up the quantity, and he was satisfied that the grain had been reshipped and had gone out by the port of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me very natural that the Minister of Justice should come to the conclusion that he did, because Ogdensburg is a port on the river and not on Lake Ontario, and on the American side. But the Order in Council only provided for the rebate where it was transhipped from a port on Lake Ontario; therefore, the legal interpretation of the Order in Council would be clearly that they could not get it. It seems strange that this question existed from 1881 to 1892 without being adjusted.

Mr. PRIOR. I presume the matter was brought up several times.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was brought up continuously.

Mr. BRITTON. As I have some business connection with a company at Kingston, not this company, I wish to understand this matter. First, it ought to be made clear that this grain was consigned to that company, and that it was merely transhipped at Ogdensburg because there were no facilities at Kingston to receive it. Secondly, the point should be made clear that it is the same grain that was sent from Ogdensburg later on. These two points being clear, I suppose that in equity they have a claim under what was intended to be the meaning of the Order in Council. Then, the other point is this, whether the department has any knowledge of other claims for payment under similar circumstances. I have inquired, but have not yet ascertained whether the other company at Kingston has any claim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would be likely to prefer it before now, if they had.

Mr. BRITTON. If there are any, they will be settled upon the same basis?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the cases are analogous.

Mr. SPROULE. There is more involved here than the settlement of this claim. The Americans have always held that we charged them too much as canal tolls where they shipped to an American port. Now, the Americans might, very naturally, in coming through the Welland Canal, if they tran-ship grain to Montreal, they might set up the claim for a rebate of the canal tolls which they had paid above what they ought to pay in consideration of their being Americans, because, I understand, that Americans shipping to a port on Lake Ontario and then transhipping to Montreal, are entitled to this rebate. Some time ago, I think, there was an Order in Council passed reducing the tolls from 20 cents to 10 cents a ton. Was it under this new Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The charge was made under the old one of 1889, under which 20 cents was the rate for the Welland and 15 cents for the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Minister remember when the new Order in Council was passed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was passed in 1892.

Mr. SPROULE. Were any other claims preferred besides this one?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have heard of none.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be that because such a claim as this is paid others may loom up which we know nothing of, and the matter should be well considered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some years have elapsed, and if there were any similar case it would be sure to have been brought to the notice of the department.

With the permission of the House I wish to supplement the information I gave earlier with reference to the Mount Stewart wharf. By reference to the Auditor General's Report, 1897-98, hon. gentlemen will see that the sum of $930.75 was expended in extending the line to that wharf. I have here some letters which have been found since recess and there may be others.

Mr. SPROULE. Better read them and put them in "Hansard."

Mr. TAYLOR. Lay them on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not of sufficient importance, I think, to go on "Hansard," and as they are originals, I shall get copies made and lay them on the Table of the House.

Mr. PRIOR. Is it the policy of the Government to purchase wharfs for public use in other provinces as well as in Prince Edward Island? I know that in British Columbia the provincial government always does that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) overlooks the fact that this wharf was required in connection with the business of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

Mr. PRIOR. I can understand that, but does not the Government own wharfs where there is no railway, in Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. TAYLOR. Not in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they do, but they are not under my jurisdiction. There are wharfs owned by the Government and the Public Works Department has charge of them.

Mr. PRIOR. Why does not the provincial government attend to that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is on the sea-coast.

Mr. EARLE. If wharfs are required on the Pacific coast for the convenience of settlers, the provincial government have in all cases provided them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The provincial government build them in the maritime provinces too, but there are some built and maintained by the Dominion.

Mr. EARLE. Why do that on the east coast and not on the west coast? What principle guides the Government in that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is any rule against the Government building wharfs in British Columbia.

Mr. EARLE. It is simply because we have not asked for them.

Mr. PRIOR. We did not catch on to it before.

Post Office—

Amount required to increase the salary of Mr. A. Bolduc, post office inspector, from $2,000 to $2,200 a year from 1st July, 1897, to 30th June, 1898, Mr. Bolduc having completed ten years' service as inspector	$400
---	-------

Mr. SPROULE. Why does the Prime Minister propose at this late date to increase this salary?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. After a certain number of years' service an inspector is entitled, as a matter of right under the Civil Service Act, to an increase of salary. It is not a question of option.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, this inspector's salary should have been increased two years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He did not call attention to it last year, and it was not put in the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Postmaster General give it as his opinion that this officer is entitled of right to the increase or that he becomes eligible for it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think he is entitled to it as a matter of right.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the language of the Act is open to that view. It does not depend on any recommendation such as the statutory increase does.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have to vote it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The voting of it is one thing ; you might say you have to vote the salary of a judge, which is provided by statute. The salary of a judge is a contract by statute ; it is payable out of the consolidated fund.

Mr. FOSTER. So is everything.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The schedule of the Civil Service Act says :

First-class inspector on appointment, $2,200 ; after ten years' service, $2,400.

The only condition there for an increase is the length of service. No recommendation is required.

Mr. PRIOR. I call the Postmaster General's attention to the post office in Victoria, B.C. Mr. Noah Shakespeare, the postmaster, has been in that position for a number of years, and the revenue of the post office has increased very materially year after year. The gross revenue is now nearly $53,000 a year, which, as I understand, entitles him to an increase of salary. Mr. Shakespeare is only getting at the present time $2,000 a year, and I think he is entitled to at least $2,400. Would the Postmaster General say what salary the postmaster at Quebec is receiving ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the salaries of the various postmasters, but he will see the scale of remuneration on page 196 of the Civil Service Act. The salary for a revenue of from $20,000 to $40,000 is $2,000. What does the hon. gentleman say the revenue of Victoria is ?

Mr. PRIOR. Fifty-two thousand six hundred and twenty dollars. It has been above $40,000 for a number of years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My view of the schedule is, that both the postmasters and inspectors are entitled to these increases—that the only point to determine, as regards the salaries of the postmasters, is the amount of the revenue, and, in regard to the inspectors, the length of service. That is the view I take of the Act.

Mr. PRIOR. If that is the Postmaster General's decision, Mr. Shakespeare is qualified, and has a right to a large increase of salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think he has called the attention of the department to the matter since I have been there.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. PRIOR. I think the Postmaster General will find that he has.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend will find, when he looks over the Civil Service Act, that the provision he refers to is not mandatory, but simply gives a man eligible standing, from which he can base a demand for so much salary, and puts the Government in a position to give him that increase, if it pleases. I do not think it is mandatory, but optional, with the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the Department of Justice has advised as I have stated.

Mr. FOSTER. While I was in office, we proceeded constantly on the idea that it was not mandatory, but was an enabling position, from which the postmaster could demand a certain salary, and from which the Government could recommend a vote for it, if they chose. As a matter of fact, I think it was always, or nearly always, done. I know, however, that in one case it was not done for two or three years, although the salary was placed at the requisite figure for other considerations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is an opinion of the Department of Justice. If there is, I will bring it down.

Mr. PRIOR. That being the case, I would like the Postmaster General to remember Mr. Shakespeare's claim, and, if possible, bring down the amount in the supplementary Estimates this year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will do so. If the revenue of the post office entitles Mr. Shakespeare to the salary in the schedule, he should get it, according to the view I have taken ; also the postmasters at London, Halifax, and some other places. The Auditor General called my attention to the question some time ago, in the case of another postmaster, whose salary he claimed should be reduced because the revenue had fallen.

Mr. PRIOR. I think Mr. Shakespeare should get the salary, not only for this year and last year, but for the previous years in which the gross revenue was over $40,000.

Amount required to refund to George Yates, postmaster of Oil Springs, on account of cash and stamps stolen from the Oil Springs post office in November, 1893..... $144 27

Mr. FOSTER. What is the practice of the department with reference to cash and stamps stolen from postmasters ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Stamps stolen from postmasters and money received for stamps are the property of the Crown.

Postmasters are always supposed to have on hand either the stamps they are entrusted with, or the equivalent of money. If the office is where there is a bank, there are certain rules requiring the postmaster to deposit. If the postmaster follows the rules, and a loss occurs, the Crown assumes the loss, though the postmaster is obliged to use ordinary care, such as he would with his own money. Postmasters are agents of the Crown.

Amount required to pay Messrs. O'Connor & Hogg for legal services in connection with claim of department against Estate of Sowden, surety for ex-postmaster of Port Hope..... $160

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for? How much was the department owed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The transaction was this. The postmaster at the village of Millbrook some years ago became a defaulter. Mr. Sowden was one of his sureties. Proceedings were instituted, and he gave a mortgage as security for the amount owing by the postmaster, and this is a bill of the costs incurred by the solicitors for the Crown in obtaining that security. The account was sent to me, and I submitted it to the Department of Justice, and this is the amount at which that department has adjusted it.

Mr. SPROULE. How much was the claim originally?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it was about $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the claim validated?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. I am not finding fault, but I will say that it was allowed to remain in abeyance for a great number of years. I think the default occurred in 1880 or 1882, and the mortgage had not been realized upon; but the matter was brought to my attention, and I put it in the hands of the solicitors of the Department of Justice to recover whatever there was in the security. I rather rebelled at having to deal with an old claim like that, but I found that it was perfectly valid. It is in the hands of the Department of Justice. It is only a few months since the matter came to light at all.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems a large sum for lawyers' fees. Were these costs taxed by the Department of Justice?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were. The account was a good deal larger at first, and this is the amount at which it was adjusted. I have seen the account, and I cannot find any fault with the amount which is certified to by the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these sureties still taken?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are in the case of country post offices; but the system which we adopted two years ago is working very advantageously.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be cases of particular hardship, where a surety may plead properly to be let off; but my own idea is, that if sureties are worth anything, in the case of default on the part of a public officer, the security ought to be rigorously exacted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. To my mind, it ought to require a pretty strong case to justify letting the surety off.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any suit in court over this case?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether the Crown originally sued the postmaster or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to say, in connection with that item, that it seems to me to be very liberal pay for little services. So far as we can judge, $160 is liberal pay for searching for a security and taking a mortgage for $2,000 on some property. It appears to be very much on a par with many liberal payments made for law costs by the Crown in connection with legal work done by political friends.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This is a perfectly fair and reasonable allowance. The services were rendered to the late Government and at their request, by Messrs. O'Connor & Hogg, who were the regular agents of the Department of Justice under the preceding Government. The bill was sent in and passed in the regular way by the officials of the department. I do not wish to evade responsibility, quite the contrary, but I wish to say that the responsibility that devolves upon this Government is merely as to the taxed costs due for services rendered to our predecessors.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be quite out of question to expect one lawyer to condemn another lawyer's bill of costs.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If we had not paid these gentlemen, who were employed by the preceding Government, their costs, the hon. member would have a grievance the other way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If we can take the bill of costs as a narrative of what occurred, the solicitors had to go to Port Hope and Millbrook and follow the thing up, and were many days in search of the security before they got satisfied.

Mr. TYRWHITT. How do you propose to fix the salaries of postmasters? Hitherto they received 40 per cent of the gross receipts, but the reduction in receipts owing to the reduced postage, will reduce their salaries. Is it proposed to increase the percentage?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that the reduction will be permanently much less than it was, and I had not contemplated any change in the salaries for the present, but rather to let the revenues recover, as they will in a reasonable time.

Mr. TYRWHITT. In the meantime, they will receive 40 per cent of the gross receipts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The practice is to readjust the salaries at the end of each fiscal year; and in the ordinary course we would probably proceed next fall to readjust the salaries on the result of the revenues up to the 1st of July. So far as I can see, there is going to be a return to the old volume within probably the time I prophesied when asking Parliament to pass the measure. I think it would be only reasonable not to drop the salaries down, but leave them at their present basis, for in about three years the revenue will have recovered.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the salaries are not to drop below what they are at present?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not as a rule. Of course there will always be cases of reduction for special reasons.

Mr. SPROULE. Twice a year you try to get an approximate estimate of the business. If a postmaster did the $300 of business last year, when the rate of postage was 3 cents, he would only do $200 this year on the same quantity of mail matter, but still you allow the salaries to remain as they were, but there must be a large number of cases where the work has increased, although the revenue has not in consequence of the decreased postage, and in such cases the postmasters would be entitled to more. How do you come to a conclusion as to what advance you will give them?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am only expressing my views with regard to the cases of reductions in the revenue caused by the reduction in postage, and not the cases of increased work without increase of revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. In every case where the gross revenue is no less than last year, there must be greater work—more letters and papers handled.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That does not materially increase the work.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the salaries received by the postmasters in 1898 will be maintained, and that in the event of the revenue falling off in consequence of the decreased postage rate, the loss in his percentage will be made up to the postmaster from some other source?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is substantially what I mean. The salaries of the postmasters are paid by what are called "salary warrants," being deductions from the revenue. I did not contemplate having the salaries scaled down to follow any small reduction in this or that office, as a result of the reduction in postage, but there are always fluctuations in post offices, from special causes. For example, if a village were to lose its trade for some reason, and the reduction in revenue was due, not to the reduced rate of postage, but to other causes, the salary would have to be readjusted. But taking the salaries in the large, it is not intended that they should be reduced to keep pace with the reductions in revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman taken any means of keeping track of the business done so as to see what reduction will be caused in the revenue by the change in the postal rates, and whether the postal business in the aggregate is increasing at a normal or abnormal rate, and how much of that increase is due to the reduced rate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As the reduction has only been in force five months, I would not like to make a statement and be bound by it. The system is hardly in force long enough to offer a sound basis for coming to a conclusion. I will give the hon. gentleman, however, the benefit of what information I have to the present. When the measure went through Parliament, I ventured to predict that the reduction in revenue would not equal $700,000 the first year. I think the reduction for the present year will be at the rate of about $500,000 per year. I think we are carrying now at the rate of 12,000,000 more letters per annum than under the former rate. We are carrying about 10 per cent more letters, judging from the revenue during the five months.

Mr. SPROULE. You have come to that conclusion from the revenue? You have kept no account of the business done otherwise?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is an enumeration taken, but only for part of this spring, and the data are not sufficient to enable us to predict anything more definite. The reduction in revenue for the five months of this year, as compared with the corresponding five months of last year, is about $190,000. Supposing that the reduction this month amounts to $30,000 or $40,000, you would then have a reduction for the six months of about $225,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the increase in expense in that six months?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say. I do not think I am taking any larger vote than formerly. The annual increase in expenses ought to be something considerable. I am not starving the service in any way that I know of.

Mr. McNEILL. I understand the hon. Postmaster General to say that he did not intend to reduce the salaries of postmasters according to the reduction that might result from the lowering of the rate of postage, but I did not catch what he said regarding the remuneration of postmasters who were found to be doing a good deal more work by reason of the change.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rule of the Post Office is not to base remuneration on the work done. It is based upon the revenue.

Mr. McNEILL. But surely it is based upon the revenue only because the revenue is supposed to afford the readiest and best way of judging of the work done. If the revenue under the 2-cent rate is as great as it was under the 3-cent rate, that would imply that there is a good deal more work being done in the office, and surely the understanding is that after all that it is the amount of work that is done upon which the salary is based. For instance, where postmasters have forwarding work to do, that is taken into consideration, because it involves more work.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I understand the statement of the Postmaster General, the salaries are to continue at the regular percentage, but if that percentage does not yield a salary equal to that under the 3-cent postage, the salary paid during the last year of the 3-cent postage shall be the salary until the revenue rises to what it formerly was.

Mr. McNEILL. But I was pointing out that with a revenue equal to that before the reduction was made in the rate of postage, there must be a good deal more work done. What I wanted to understand was whether the postmaster in that case would receive a larger salary than he received before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) will remember that it has never been the practice in Canada, though I think it is in England, to remunerate postmasters according to the work. In Canada the practice has been to remunerate them out of the revenue received and in proportion to the revenue received. We are speaking now of salaries only. There are special allowances, such as the forwarding allowance, which are classed differently from salaries.

Mr. MOORE. I gather from the discussion that forty per cent of the gross receipts is paid to postmasters. If that is the case, I would like to know how it is that in the town of Magog, the postmaster only gets $600 a year, and the gross receipts, if I recollect correctly, are over $3,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The report for the year ending 30th June, 1898, which I have here, shows the revenue of the post office at Magog to have been $3,184, and the postmaster's salary $800. The scale of remuneration is forty per cent up to $800, and twenty-five per cent between $800 and $10,000.

Mr. MOORE. Is there any change in the percentage as compared with the last year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has never been any change; the rate now is the same as it always has been since confederation, and, I am informed, the same since the post office was established in Canada.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to ask another question—respecting losses sustained in post offices through the operations of burglars and thieves. If the postmaster keeps a safe in which he puts his money and postage stamps and a burglar breaks in and steals the money and postage stamps, destroys the safe, does the Government hold itself responsible for the value of the safe?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principle upon which responsibility is based is this: The Government entrusts the postmaster with a certain amount of Government property in the shape of postage stamps. The postmaster, as the agent of the Government, is obliged to have on hand, whenever the inspector appears, either the stamps so entrusted to him or the equivalent in money, unless the post office happens to be situated near a bank, in which case there are certain departmental regulations requiring that the proceeds of these stamps shall be deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. If the postmaster has on hand stamps or the equivalent of stamps and the stamps or the equivalent are stolen through no fault of his, as in the case of burglary, for instance, the loss is the loss of the Crown but not of the postmaster.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Moore) refers to the safe.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not find that the Crown has ever paid for a safe that has been damaged; I never heard of such a case.

Mr. MOORE. In nearly every important town and city in the eastern townships, and, perhaps, in the province of Quebec, within the last few years, the post office has been broken into and the safe blown to pieces, and, so far as I know, no apprehension of the thieves has been made. In many cases the postmaster owns the safe, but I do not know that any of them has ever been remunerated for his loss.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to pronounce an opinion as to the right or wrong in such a matter. Since I have been in the department I have no recollection of any claim for damage done to a safe, but no doubt the question has come up. But it is a proper question to consider.

Mr. MOORE. I think it is very hard for a postmaster who is getting a small salary, and who supplies himself with a safe and burglars destroy that safe, that he should get no remuneration.

Mr. PRIOR. I suppose the Postmaster General will say that the same rule applies to assistant postmasters as to postmasters. I see in looking up the Auditor General's Report and the Post Office Report that in Quebec, where the revenue is $2,000 less than in Victoria, B.C., the assistant postmaster gets $1,600, and the assistant postmaster in Victoria only gets $1,400. I presume he is entitled to the same rise in proportion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is only one rule.

Mr. PRIOR. Some time ago I called for a return showing the number of letter carriers employed now in Victoria. That return shows that although there is much more business done there now than used to be, there has been a reduction in the number of letter carriers, permanent and temporary, from seventeen to eleven. I know, and my hon. colleague knows that these men consider that they have to work altogether too long hours. They are good men, and they work very often until eleven or twelve o'clock at night. I can understand that when the letter carrier system was first introduced it took them longer to get round than it does after they become au fait in their business. But there is a big difference between seventeen and eleven, and I do not think it is justified. Another thing I know is that there are no extra men. There used to be one man kept on all the time to take the place of any who might fall sick, or be off duty, but there is no such man now, and when one man is away, the remaining men have to do his work, for which, I am informed, they get no extra pay. Then, again, they get no holidays. I believe the entire staff of temporary and permanent carriers have to work from the 1st day of January to the 31st day of December. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether he has had any report from the Inspector stating that the number they have now is insufficient, and that he wants more help. So far as I am given to understand, the head officials in the post office consider they are undermanned altogether. I hope the hon. gentleman will take these things into consideration, and if he finds from reports he has in the office that there are not a sufficient number of men, that he will take steps to set that matter right. I make these explanations now in order that the hon. gentleman may provide for an increased number of men in the supplementary Estimates.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get the information for the supplementaries.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I would remind the Postmaster General that in 1891 he professed to be strongly in favour of building a post office at Alliston, in the south riding of Simcoe. I bring this matter to his notice now in order that provision may be made in the supplementary Estimates for carrying out the Postmaster General's wishes at that time, as well as my own at the present time. In the town of Alliston there is a very good building owned by the Bank of Hamilton that could be bought at a very reasonable price, and which would make an admirable post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The purchase of public buildings rests with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). I can only bring the matter to his attention, or whoever may be acting for him.

Mr. BRITTON. For the same reason that the member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) made his statement now, I wish to mention the case of the Kingston post office, and ask the Postmaster General if he would take a note of it. Under the new order of things the Post Office Department is very efficiently managed. I would remind the hon. gentleman that one of the chief employees in the Kingston post office has died, one has resigned, and another has been transferred from that post office to another branch of the service. In no one of these three cases has the vacancy created in that way been filled; yet the business has increased owing to the new rate of postage, and I would like the hon. gentleman to give his attention to it. I do not say that we ought to have, perhaps, a higher class of men there, but if these higher clerks can be relieved to some extent of the minor duties by the appointment of what I understood was to be a distinct class of stampers and sorters, I think the service would be considerably improved.

Mr. ERB. I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a class of postmasters who, under the 40 per cent regulation, are, in my opinion, very much underpaid, that is, postmasters in country districts where there is no village. There are several such in my riding, where the post office is held in a farmhouse, necessitating either the farmer or his wife or some member of the family to be at the house during all hours of the day. The post office is an important centre, a great many farmers get their mails there; but since there is no village, no stores, no shops or factories of any kind, most of the farmers, when they mail letters, take them with them when they go to market or to some adjoining village or town. Consequently, the revenue of this particular class of offices is very small, and the compensation that these postmasters get on the percentage basis is very small. In my riding a postmaster resigned, and I had great difficulty in getting any person in the neighbourhood to take his place, because the pay was so small that nobody wanted to be bothered with it. I hope the hon. Postmaster General will give his attention to offices of this kind. There are a few in my riding, and I daresay there are a few such in various parts of the country.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to ask unnecessary questions of the hon. Postmaster General, nor do I ask questions to irritate him. But this is an important question which has been raised by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), in regard to the Government building post offices in different portions of the country. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if there are any regulations, or rules, by which a place has to have a certain number of inhabitants before it is entitled to call upon the Government to build a post office. Magog is a large and growing town and the people are beginning to be anxious to have a post office and custom house built by the Government. If the population is large enough to come within the regulations, if there are such regulations, I would be glad to know it, that I might take measures to have the matter brought before the Government in the regular way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware that any such regulations have been prescribed by the Government. It is a question which arises on different occasions for the Government to consider whether a particular locality has a claim superior to other localities, and to deal with it accordingly. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Moore) had been in Parliament some years ago he would have remembered many discussions on the subject, and, I think, some resolutions were submitted from that side of the House setting forth the views of the Liberal party. I think the general principle of the Liberal party was that public buildings should be erected in places in the order of urgency, or, in other words, that the revenue of the post office and the various other Government offices, customs and inland revenue, should be considered in determining priority as between different localities. This general principle was affirmed in a resolution submitted by the Liberal party some years ago which will be found on the pages of "Hansard," and, I presume, the policy, thus affirmed, will be the policy of the Government to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another subject I have noticed in the press lately, to which I might bring to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General, to see whether he has considered it or not, that is the question of a reduction of the parcel post rates. While there was a substantial reduction on letter postage there was no reduction of postage on parcels sent through the mails, or for sending post office orders outside of the country. I thought I had the paper which was left with some hon. members asking that the hon. Postmaster General's attention should be called to the subject, but I have not got it. From memory I cannot give the countries between which and Canada the money order system is in force. It seems to me that the rates are not as liberal as they might be in that regard. I think Newfoundland is included in the list of countries to which we cannot send a post office order. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if his attention has been drawn to the matter to which I refer, and, if so, if he has given it any consideration.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reference to the foreign post office business, I cannot say what countries are not included, although I know that some countries are not. It may be that Newfoundland is not included, but I will be surprised to hear it.

Mr. SPROULE. I was only speaking from memory

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may be quite right. As to the rates between Canada and the United States, there are negotiations at present pending between the United States post office department and Canada, with a view to a reduction of the money order rates. I do not know whether a conclusion has been arrived at. I took part in a discussion on the subject, and the conclusions which were tentatively arrived at were to be communicated to the Postmaster General of the United States. Whether he has expressed an opinion I do not know, but the proposal is a reduction in the rates of money orders between Canada and the United States, each country retaining what it collects itself.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to a matter which, I am sure, will receive his careful consideration, because it is a case in which, I think, a very considerable hardship exists. It will be in the recollection of the hon. Postmaster General that sometimes in the early part of the session I drew his attention to a rather peculiar case where money was lost while being transmitted through the mails. It occurred at the village of Campbellville, in the county of Halton, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A mail bag was placed by the courier on the proper hook; the train came along, caught the bag and carried it about one hundred yards, where it seems to have dropped off. The mail carrier fully discharged his duty inasmuch as he placed the bag where it ought to have been placed, and saw that the train had carried it away. The bag dropped from the hook or from the catcher. It was afterwards supposed to have been picked up by a person who was not honest enough to return it to the post office, but who opened the bag and took out the contents, which consisted, amongst other things, of several registered letters containing sums of money. I forget now the amount, but I do not think it was more than $125.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $125.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Post Office Department could have traced the responsibility to any mail carrier, or postmaster, that money could have been recovered from themselves or from their sureties. Every effort was made to trace the responsibility. A man was arrested and tried, but the case was dismissed on account of lack of evidence. Every possible means have been taken to find out the guilty party, and it is now admitted that there is no trace of the person who rifled the mail bag, so that every means of recovering the money have been exhausted, and the persons who had mailed these letters are obliged to sustain a loss. I understand it is the intention of the hon. Postmaster General, hereafter, to make provision for a small fee to insure a registered letter. At the time that these men handed in these letters at the post office there was no such provision. The person who mailed these letters took every precaution they could and felt that their money was safely entrusted to the post office, believing that the officials were able to discharge their duty. The officials did discharge their duty as we know. No one is considered in any way responsible for neglect, but yet these men are unable to recover their money. I think this is one of those cases where the Government could fairly step in and remunerate these men for the loss they have sustained. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to consider the matter fully and see if, under the peculiar circumstances, he cannot place in the supplementary Estimates which he may bring down, a small sum sufficient to indemnify these men for the loss they have sustained.

Mr. KAULBACH. Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hear the remarks of the hon. Postmaster General in regard to the erection of post offices. He told us that post offices were erected where "urgency demanded or in important centres." I beg to remind him that in the early part of the year, I wrote to the Minister of Public Works asking for the erection of a post office building at Bridgewater. It will be remembered by him perhaps, as well by the Postmaster General, the dire calamity that befell that town by fire the past winter, when the whole business portion was laid in ashes. I need hardly remind the Minister that Bridgewater is an important town, containing, as it does, the workshops of the Nova Scotia Central Railway, and being at the head of navigation, and a town where large lumbering operations are centered, renders it a commercial and trading centre. Therefore, Bridgewater can make out an exceptionally strong claim, and the people of that town will expect a Government building there, and I hope they will not be disappointed. It is also the centre of our friends opposite in that county. But irrespective of that, I think the request would be granted at any time on its merits. Whether or not that should have any influence with the Government, I am not going to say, but still I would advance it as a reason. I know that the Minister of Public Works will have to refer to the Postmaster General for his report on the subject, and when he does, I trust the Postmaster General will consider it carefully and make a favourable report, so that an amount may be placed in the Estimates this year. I bring the matter up at this opportune moment, because were I to allow it to remain over until the further supplementary Estimates are brought down, I would be precluded this year from seeing any sum placed in the Estimates for that very necessary work.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General to his explanation with regard to the salaries of postmasters, because I did not quite understand him as to what the policy of his department would be as to the rule which would be enforced for the future. Let me say that the country postmaster is the poorest paid official in the service of the Government, or for that matter in the service of anybody else. In the cities and large towns, particularly those postmasters who get a commission of 25 per cent, they are, I think, overpaid, and the Postmaster General might fairly consider some rearrangement with regard to that. In the case of the ordinary country postmaster who performs his duties for $15 or $20 or as low as $10 a year, and in the case of the postmasters of country villages who get from $100 to $600 a year, they are, to say the least, not overpaid. Suppose a postmaster gets $300 a year, but that under the decreased rate of postage the revenue of his office remains stationary, while that postmaster's duties may increase fifty per cent, what does the Postmaster General propose to do with regard to an increase of salary in such a case? Again, there are many places in farming districts where the business will not increase very much on account of the reduction of postage, because I assume that the increased postage will be largely among business men who write letters in the cities and towns. Now, we will assume that the general postal revenue under the 2-cent arrangement, is as large as under the 3-cent postage, the business having generally increased, but nevertheless in two-thirds of the post offices in Canada the business has not increased or decreased but very little. Say that in many post offices, the revenue may have increased a little, but not sufficient to entitle the postmaster under the 2-cent rate, to have the same salary as he had under the 3-cent rate. What does the Postmaster General propose to do about that? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has stated that the increase of letters, which is the principal source of revenue, is about 10 per cent; but the letters mailed would have to increase fifty per cent to bring the revenue up to what it was before the reduction in postage. There is, of course, the other source of revenue arising from the tax on newspapers which was estimated by the Postmaster General at about $60,000, but even that would be a comparatively small sum when we are considering the total revenue of the Post Office Department. If the post office receipts are to be anything near the expenditure, or near what they were last year, there would have to be an increase of 50 per cent in the number of two-cent stamps sold. With regard to the reductions in parcel postage, referred to by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), my own opinion is that both the Governments of the past and the present Government have erred in that direction. The Government have assumed the duty of carrying the letters and newspapers of the country; that is their business. But they have gone into the further business of carrying merchandise for the accommodation of the people, and I do not believe they should carry it at less than cost. It is difficult to estimate what it does cost, but it is certain that they are carrying merchandise from other countries to Canada and from one part of Canada to another for one-third or one-fourth of what it costs to do it. That business is increasing year by year. I have no objection to its increasing in a legitimate way, but I do object to the Post Office Department becoming a common carrier of merchandise for the people of the country at one-fourth the cost of carriage, and I think that question should engage the attention of the Postmaster General. If I mistake not, at a previous session the hon. gentleman expressed his opinion in that direction, and I think that he might fairly be asked to ascertain as near as he can what it costs to carry merchandise in this way, and to make those who send it pay the actual cost of carrying it. I think that is a fair proposition.

Mr. CLARKE. Reference has been made by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) to the necessity of increased accommodation in the way of better buildings in their respective towns and cities. I would like to ask the Postmaster General in that connection if his attention has been called to the inadequacy of the post office accommodation in the city of Toronto, and if a movement is not on foot to get a site more centrally situated, on which a modern building could be erected. The present post office building is not in a good locality to admit of taking advantage of the street railway lines. As the hon. Minister knows, the postal business of the city is increasing enormously, and I think every facility should be given to the people who use the post office, and this could best be given by having a more convenient site and a new building. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) referred to the remuneration paid to the letter carriers in Victoria, and to the fact that instructions had been given that they should receive no holidays. When the Post Office Estimates for next year are brought down, I would like the Postmaster General to bring down the instructions given with reference to holidays for letter carriers.

Mr. KAULBACH. When I spoke of the necessity of a building at Bridgewater, I referred simply to a post office; but when I say post office I mean to include custom-house and savings bank. I hope the hon. Minister will be very particular in seeing that this is one of the most important applications.

Mr. OSLER. If the Government are proposing to increase their post office expenditure, and have in view the providing of increased accommodation for the post offices of the Dominion, I do not think they could make a better beginning than by increasing the postal facilities of the city of Toronto. Considering the revenue derived from Toronto, the post office building there is probably the poorest and worst equipped that can be found in this Dominion. I am not one of those who advocate increased expenditure if it can be avoided; but if a general improvement of the post office buildings in the Dominion is going, I think Toronto is entitled to the first consideration of the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the point brought up by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), the facts of the case are, I think, as he has presented them. Unfortunately, there is no provision in the law for meeting such a case. That and similar cases suggested to me the advisability of asking Parliament to consider the condition of affairs, with a view, if possible, of ameliorating them; hence the measure before the House. I may say, if it is any consolation to my hon. friend, that the catching-post, which was erected many years ago near the station in question, happened to have been placed at a very unsuitable point. I looked carefully into the matter some months ago.

and my recollection is, that the officers showed that catching-post was on a curve some little distance from the front of the station, so that if a bag fell from a passing train, instead of being caught, no one at the station would notice its fall. I have since had that remedied. My instructions to the controller were, if possible, to have the post removed and put exactly in front of the platform, so that no such accident as this could happen again. My hon. friend will know whether or not those instructions have been carried out. I believe part of the difficulty was owing to the fact that the train would not stop, and we have had to arrange with the railway company to be a little more accommodating and to slow up at that point. With reference to the remark of my hon. friend from Lunenburg, I understand his point to be now that while he would like to have a post office, he would not be satisfied with a building that would not accommodate the post office, the inland revenue and customs.

Mr. KAULBACH. I must be satisfied with what I can get, but I think that if the hon. Minister would consider the urgency, I would get all I ask.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish the hon. gentleman to understand in what light I take his wishes. I think his larger proposition was, that the building ought to meet all the requirements of the service, but I understand he is willing to accept anything that is forthcoming.

I do not know that the subject of buildings is quite pertinent to this particular branch of the inquiry, but with reference to the inquiry of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), I thought I had placed that matter plainly before the House; but, although the hon. gentleman has gone, I would say to the committee that his calculation as to the volume of work necessary in order to realize the same revenue is, I think, somewhat incorrect.

Mr. FOSTER. Take 10,000 letters at 3 cents, that is $300 revenue, and you have to take 15,000 at 2 cents to get that revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that, in order to make up the amount of deficiency from 3 to 2 cents, the work would have to be increased 50 per cent. That is quite an error, for, if you take the gross earnings of a post office, you will find that nearly half is derived from other sources than the 3 cents rate. I would not like to venture an opinion altogether binding, but in a rough way I would say that, taking a gross revenue of $4,500,000, nearly $2,000,000 of that would be derived from other sources than the 3-cent letter rate. I think that the 3-cent letter rate would not amount to more than $2,900,000; so that a shrinkage of one-third of that would mean a loss of $900,000.

Mr. MULOCK.

I have over-stated it, because the shrinkage is not so much; so that the shrinkage in revenue from the reduction in the rate from 3 cents to 2 cents does not involve as much as appears on the surface. There is a considerable revenue derived from registration, 5 cents per letter. I think the number of registrations is about 3½ millions per year, and there is a considerable sum derived from drop-letters, from the 2-cent letter rate, from postage upon parcels, and so on. Nevertheless, of course, the reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents does involve a substantial reduction in revenue, and I can only repeat that it is only out of revenue that the salaries of postmasters are paid, and the remuneration has heretofore been based on that principle alone—payment out of revenue. Although my hon. friend wants me to pledge the policy of this Government for a long number of years to come, I will not look into the future that far. Suffice it to say, that my intention is to recommend to the Government, after the close of this fiscal year, to deal with the postmasters on the lines I have indicated.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not forget the newspaper postage business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have a note of that. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) regarding the inadequate accommodation in the Toronto office, if his remarks had been limited to the accommodation in the present building, I could quite agree with him, for I have a report from Mr. Bennett, a very efficient officer, to the effect that one could hardly have devised an internal arrangement of that office with less regard to the prosecution of the business of the office, and he has asked me, within the last few days, to, if possible, have an official look into the matter and make a thorough report, with the view of entirely re-arranging the whole inside of the post office at Toronto. I have received his communication within the last few days, and have not had the opportunity of doing anything more than consider it. From my knowledge of the building, I know there is a great deal of force in the criticism, but as to the change of site, that is a very large question.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). With reference to what fell from the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), who represents a county that has always been Conservative, it is very refreshing to hear him ask the Government to put up another building in that county, which was given the benefit of a public building by the late Government.

Mr. FOSTER. If one building is good, two are better.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The place where the hon. gentleman now wants a building put up is where the building already erected should have been put. The railway ends in that quarter, but the people there did not vote quite right, and so the building was put up by the late Government in the smaller place. Now, however, the hon. gentleman wants a second building in the same county at a place which is Liberal in politics, which, no doubt, would be all right, if there were not other counties with stronger claims. Perhaps we have not properly appreciated this question of public buildings. The whole question is: Does it pay? I have heard a good deal said about the number of people that must be in a place before it can be entitled to a public building, and that, of course, may be a very good criterion. I think, however, there should be a public building in every county in the Dominion. There might be more, if it would pay. Suppose you could get, in a county town, a public building constructed at a cost, say, of $5,000. I venture to say that public buildings could be got in many counties for from $5,000 to $7,000—

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It has never been done yet.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That may be because people wanted the buildings too large. The average building in a county where there are no large towns or cities, would not cost more than $7,000 at the outside. The interest on that would be just $210. The postmaster could live there, you could get rent from him, and I will venture to say that that expenditure of $210 per annum on interest would pay the Government, because it would be less than it now pays in the shape of rents for post offices and customs-houses. The question is: Does it pay? Can the Government put up a permanent building in a county on which the annual interest will be less than the amount you have to pay, of necessity, for rents of the two buildings you require? Take the county town of the county I represent. A rental has to be paid for the post office and also for the custom-house. I venture the opinion that any of the Government engineers will say that a building sufficiently large, say for Guysborough, Arichat, and a number of other towns I might name, could be erected at such a cost that the interest would not be as much as the rents the Government is now paying. Then, you would have a better building, better security to the people, better advantages. That is the way to look at it, and in that case each county town would get a fair building that would serve all purposes—custom-house, post office, or any other Government offices required. And you would get them built very cheaply in county towns, much cheaper than in large cities. A substantial building could be built for the sum I have named, and the Government would be in pocket on the transaction. In these poor buildings you have in country towns, the people cannot get good service. There is also constant danger of the mails being robbed; there is not the same security as there would be in a substantial building. If there were a post office building in such places as I have referred to, with the postmaster living in it and paying rent, I believe the Government would be in pocket as a result of the transaction.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am sorry that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) should place himself in the unfortunate position of misrepresenting facts. He stated that the Nova Scotia Central Railway terminates in Bridgewater, it terminates in the town of Lunenburg, and being correct I challenge contradiction. I state further that the trade of Lunenburg is very large and exceeds that of Bridgewater by a very considerable amount. Our trade is very largely in fish, and that represents a large amount of capital. Still, the trade of Bridgewater is large also. The geography of the hon. member for Guysborough is very deficient. He happened to be in the county of Lunenburg some short time ago and ought to know whereof he spoke. But I think he is inclined to be somewhat adverse to the people of Bridgewater in opposing this application I am making for the building referred to. Bridgewater is, as I said before, an important town, and one where nearly all the roads of the county centre, besides being at the head of navigation concentrates trade. Any person seeing the amount of trade done in that town would come to the conclusion that the Minister of Public Works should not hesitate one moment in granting the request I have made for a public building. And the Postmaster General, I feel sure, if he were there, would have no hesitation in reporting favourably for the construction of that work.

Mr. CARGILL. I desire to bring before the Postmaster General the question of the salary paid to the country postmasters. We have had a number of gentlemen to-night representing towns and cities whose postmasters, I think, are pretty fairly paid. At least I feel satisfied that if one of these positions became vacant and an advertisement were put in the papers asking for applications, many would propose to take it and even to work at reduced salaries. In country places where stage routes are established, it is not much inconvenience to establish a country post office along the route. This is a great convenience, especially to the farmers. It is a serious inconvenience to the farmer who may be appointed postmaster to open up a private house and establish an office, an inconvenience for which he is but lightly remunerated with his allowance of $5 or $10 as postmaster. There are postmasters in my constituency who are giving their services to accommodate the public in the locality and who are receiving only $10 per annum for their services. Now, the Postmaster General, from what I know of him, is very generous and charitably disposed, and does not want to impose injustice upon any class of the community. I think he feels that postmasters in towns and cities are pretty well paid. But it might be prudent on the part of the department to consider the propriety of reducing these salaries and increasing the salaries of country postmasters. I leave the matter in the hands of the Postmaster General, feeling sure he will give it his consideration and deal out even-handed justice to all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I concur in what has fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from East Bruce (Mr. Cargill). I am sure the people generally admire and appreciate the magnificent manner in which the Postmaster General has handled the Post Office Department the three years during which he has been at its head. At the same time, I earnestly hope that the salaries, fees or commissions paid to postmasters will receive his early attention. I believe that the reduction in the postal rate was appreciated, but I believe also that many postmasters are serving the country at much less than they should be asked to accept. I know one case of a widow who is the postmistress for her locality. She has a grown-up daughter whom she must keep at home to assist in the duties of the post office, although the daughter could earn $10 a month if she went out to service. And yet the commissions this woman receives amount to only about $50 a year. If a person could be got to take the office, she would resign to-morrow, but nobody can be found who will accept it. I know a postmaster who received $12 a year and who resigned, and I had the greatest difficulty in getting a person to take the office to save it from being closed up. These rates of remuneration should be increased. Whether you take from the salaries of those in the cities or from the general revenue, something should be done. I pressed this question upon the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power. I dare say they were charitably disposed—I have no right to say they were not—and would have been glad to increase the allowance of these people, but I presume they felt that under the circumstances they could not afford it. Whoever is in power, I think it is time this question should be taken up.

As to the construction of public buildings: a resolution was introduced in this House, I think, by the present Minister of Justice, to prevent peddling around the construction of public buildings where it was supposed would do the most good politically. That resolution was endorsed by every member of the House, including Sir John Macdonald who was then leader. It declared for a principle on which public buildings should be erected, and that was that public buildings of the kind my hon. friend from Lunenburg spoke of should be erected only when the public revenue warranted it and that when public buildings were to be built they must be built in those places showing the largest amount of revenue first.

I do not know what the revenue of the post office is in my hon. friend's riding. But there are three or four towns in my riding where I should be rejoiced to see public buildings erected, but there is not one in the riding. The receipts of this office are about $4,000 a year, and I would be glad if the Government could see their way clear to erect a post office. But since I voted for this resolution and the principle there laid down, I do not want to knock at the door of the Minister of Public Works and urge him to depart from that principle. I hope that the Government will observe it in the future, and that they will only erect public buildings at places where the revenue will warrant it. Of course, there may be exceptional cases where that principle should be departed from, but there should be very strong grounds for doing so. I hope the Postmaster General will consider the case of the country postmasters, and the moment that the revenue of the Post Office Department will permit, I hope he will recast the whole system and give the country postmasters some increase. There is no class of men in the public service to-day that are so miserably paid as the country postmasters. We surely can afford to give them some little increase over what they are getting now. Ask a man to conduct a post office the whole year round for $12, to make up the returns and to keep the office open all the time! It is a miserable, scanty pittance to offer anybody, and I think the Postmaster General should give this matter his serious attention.

Mr. GILLIES. I endorse every word that has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill), and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), with respect to the miserable salaries now paid to country postmasters. I do not find any particular fault with the present Postmaster General in the respect, because he is but following in the footsteps of his predecessors. If he reflects for a moment on the miserable pittance that is being paid to his officers, the country postmasters, all over the Dominion, he will agree that some change is desirable in the public interest. I have several cases in my mind in my own constituency, and I believe similar cases exist all over the country. Fancy a daily mail arriving and being despatched by a person in the community, waiting upon the public, delivering letters, receiving them and stamping them, giving his time day and night, and with all the responsibility of a public officer resting upon him, and all for the pittance of $10 a year. I will mention two cases in my own county, the facts concerning which the Postmaster General will find to be as I state if he takes the pains to inquire. There is a post office at River Bourgeois, in my own county, the postmaster of which is named Sampson. His predecessor resigned because the amount paid him, $50 a year, was too small. There are, I believe, 1,500 or 2,000 mails arriving at and despatched from the office yearly. Sometimes the mail arrives in the middle of the night. The man must get up, take delivery of the mails and despatch them by the stage driver. He has to furnish a building at his own expense, and gives his time exclusively to the management of that post office. I have only to cite the case to show its absurdity.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He gets $80 a year, and some other items, making $100. That is 100 per cent more than the hon. gentleman mentioned.

Mr. GILLIES. Perhaps he does now. The forwarding allowance is included in that, I suppose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Commissions on money orders and salary together, make over $100.

Mr. GILLIES. Even then his remuneration is far too small. He has to keep a building specially for that service, and gives his whole time to the business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The gross revenue of the office is $200, and he gets one-half of it.

Mr. GILLIES. I am citing the case to show the Postmaster General how absurd it is, because if that post office were situated in a town or city, he would be getting $700 or $800 a year. The other case is the post office at Grand River, kept by Mr. Murchison. Mails arrive there daily, and are despatched daily. He receives a salary of between $30 and $40. At that post office there are some 800 mails made up every year, received and despatched. His house is taken up for the post office, and no rent is allowed him, and this is most unfair if not unjust. These are only two instances out of many I can cite all over the county, and the same state of things exists all over the country. I quite agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) in his views respecting public buildings. I am strongly of the opinion that there should be one in every county. I do not mean that an extravagant building should be erected, but a building that would cost $4,000 or $5,000 in these counties would be amply sufficient to accommodate the post office, the customs-house, the office of the tide-waiter and the post office savings bank. I may say that, in this respect, the shire town of my county, Arichat, is sadly neglected. A site was bought for a public building in 1884, for which $1,000 was paid. An amount of $10,000 was put in the Estimates for a building, but the vote lapsed, and nothing was done. In that town the post office receipts are between $800 and $900. It is the shire town of the county and deserves consideration. The custom-house is there, for which the Government pays $60 or $70 a year rent. The post office savings bank is there, and the deposits in that bank amount to between $200,000 and $300,000. They are very large. The savings bank is located in the room in the house of the savings bank-keeper, for which no rent is paid, and this is most unfair and a positive reflection upon the Government. The tide-waiter has his office in another building; the custom-house officer has his office in another building. A building could be constructed for from $4,000 to $5,000 which would give the Government the security necessary for the protection of its property, and the public would be largely inconvenienced, because the several different officers, namely, the collector of customs, the postmaster, the tide-waiter and the keeper of the savings bank, would be under one roof. The Government would not be put under a larger outlay than they are at present. The amount they pay now in rental for different buildings would more than suffice to pay the interest on the money that would be expended in erecting a public building in that town, besides the great public convenience that would be afforded. I therefore impress upon the hon. Postmaster General, and upon the Government that, as they have the site in the town already paid for, they should turn their attention to this matter and construct a public building at Arichat without delay. The small post office they have now is under the control of the post office authorities. It was put up some years ago, but it is in a tumble-down state. I hope the hon. Postmaster General will take hold of the question, and that proper accommodation will be provided for that town.

Mr. McALISTER. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with what has been said by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) in regard to the small and insufficient salaries paid to country postmasters. I know in my own county postmasters who have to receive a daily mail, have to keep their offices open for the convenience of the people, mailing and receiving letters during the whole day, receiving only $15, $20 and $24 per year. They have to attend to their offices every day to attend to the mail matter that passes through their offices. When you look at the amount they receive per day, it seems smaller than when the yearly pay is mentioned. A postmaster receiving $12 a year gets a little over 3 cents a day, and $24 will be only 6 cents a day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the revenue?

Mr. McALISTER. It is not altogether the revenue that should be looked at. The postmaster has to keep his office open for persons coming to mail letters or to get letters no matter what the revenue from the office is. I think the salaries are insufficient, and I am satisfied that an increased grant to the postmasters would meet with the approval of Parliament and of the country. These country postmasters are the poorest paid officials in the Dominion, and I think that this matter should be taken into consideration. As has been said by the hon. member for Richmond, the present Government agreed to pay the salaries paid by the late Government, but still it is not too late to mend, and I think the time has arrived when the Postmaster General should give this matter his serious consideration and endeavour to pay the country postmasters larger salaries than they receive at the present time. I must also say that the mail carriers in the country receive small salaries. True, they are engaged by competition, but when they know that the grant for carrying the mails is to be cut down they will take it at a much lower figure than will pay them, or that they otherwise would take it for. I think that when the large mail carriers are not interfered with, when the remuneration to these is increased from time to time rather than decreased, the country mail carriers, instead of being cut down, should be granted an increase.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend (Mr. McAlister), who has just spoken, has referred to country postmasters, and if I understood the hon. Postmaster General correctly a few moments ago, he stated that salaries were based on the percentage of the revenue of the post office. Am I correct in that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, except the minimum salary of $10.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the hon. Postmaster General to say that the salary was based on a percentage of 40 per cent. up to $800 and 25 per cent. above that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Up to $10,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find that the present Government have changed the arrangement that prevailed under the late Government, because I represented many cases to the late Deputy Postmaster General, Lieut. Col. White. The system that the late Government adopted was two-fold; in the first place, salary was based on the revenue, but in addition to that there was a test provided by a numeration made twice a year. If the business upon enumeration showed itself to be larger than upon the basis of the percentage of revenue, the salary was based upon the enumeration. A post office might receive a great many more letters than were sent away, so that if the Postmaster General is running the post office business simply on the revenue basis, he is doing an injustice to postmasters in many places.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) need not make any mistake upon the subject. I stated in the most unqualified way that I have not in the minutest degree varied the system or remuneration. There is an enumeration each year, but I think that the general object of the enumeration is rather to see that the revenue is not in excess. I do not think that there is much fear that the returns from revenue do not fairly represent the real revenue. This enumeration is always taken into consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the revenue is not altogether the real basis, because, when I spoke to the Deputy Postmaster General, I pointed out cases where the numeration was more than the revenue, and the salary was regulated accordingly. The present Postmaster General is doing a greater injustice to the country postmasters, because he not only expects them to do their work for $20 or $30 or $40 a year, but he prevents them from exercising their franchise. If they vote, or if they attend a political meeting, their heads are cut off. In my county nearly every postmaster's head has been taken off because he attended a political meeting, or because he voted in favour of the Conservative candidate, many of them drawing small salaries. It seems to be a rule with the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), that in addition to expecting these postmasters to do their work for a miserable few dollars a year, he expects them to sell themselves out body and bones to the Liberals. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) eulogized the Postmaster General for his efficient management of the Post Office Department. Let me tell him that in the country districts the Postmaster General has closed up many small and useful post offices in order to make a good showing in his revenue. I know a case where ninety families have to travel eight or ten miles to get their mails, simply because the former postmaster was a Tory and the Government dismissed him and have not appointed another in his place. In South Lake the post office was removed from the centre of the settlement away to the west, where it only accommodates two or three families now, and all the rest have to come eight miles to Gananoque to get their mail. Again, in order to make a better showing in his revenue, the Postmaster General in many country districts gives a mail service only twice a week, where formerly there was a daily mail. Ellsville had a daily mail, but is now cut down to twice a week. That is the same all over the country. No wonder the post office finances are better, but the country districts are suffering for it. That is the experience in my county and I hear the same complaints all over. But the serious charge against the Government is, that while they pay these postmasters only a miserable salary, they will put them out of office if they dare to show any sympathy for Conservatives.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish these remarks to pass without some comment. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) appears to have had a very unfortunate experience.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is true.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can tell the House that I doubt if any post office was closed, or any mail service reduced in frequency, for any reason other than the proper working of the Post Office Department. I doubt if in any case any post office was ever closed under my administration, or any reduction made in the frequency of the service, except upon the proper report of the regular official of the department that it was in the interest of the public service. It is inaccurate to say that there was any reduction of service except it was warranted from a post office standpoint, and that alone. Generally the trend has been in a more liberal direction and not in a narrowing direction such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) speaks of. There is more mileage of mail carried to-day than ever in Canada before.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly; taking in the Yukon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Leaving out the Yukon. I think I am perfectly safe in saying that there are a million miles per annum of mail service to-day more than there were when this Government took office three years ago.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And there are more post offices too. There were a few closed, but they were closed because they were useless. There were more opened and opened because they promised to be more useful to the public from a post office standpoint. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will take my statement, but I give it to the committee as a frank and fair statement of the policy I was governed by, namely, a strict regard to the betterment of the postal service of Canada.

Mr. GANONG. I was pleased to hear the Postmaster General state that he held to the same policy as he did before the elections in 1896, namely, that new post office buildings will be furnished according to the urgency of the case, taking into account the revenues received therefrom. Since 1896 there have been appropriations made for post offices, notably those in the counties so ably represented by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). That gave us a slight suspicion that it was urgency of a political nature, rather than of revenue which shapes the policy of the Government. If the revenue of the post office in Shelburne county which I think is about $1,367, warranted a public building, the revenue of the St. Andrew's post office in the county of Charlotte, being $2,251 a year, certainly warranted a post office also. The town of St. Andrew's is one of the most popular summer resorts along the seaboard, and although the postmaster there endeavours to keep the post office creditably, the building is badly adapted for the purpose. It is no credit to the Dominion to have visitors from the United States finding such poor postal accommodation in that town. I agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that a judicious expenditure of public money could be made, and perhaps a saving to the public be effected, if the claims of some of these smaller towns were considered. The postal revenue of the town of St. George in my county is about the same as the revenue of the town in Shelburne which got a post office, and I submit with confidence the claims of the town of St. Andrew's and the town of St. George in the county of Charlotte to the attention of the Minister.

Mr. MOORE. It is so unusual and so refreshing to see both sides of the House discuss a question in which we all agree, that we feel reluctant to pass from this to another question over which there may perhaps be some wrangling. It is ridiculous to pay postmasters $12 a year, and expect them to do the work and incur the responsibilities connected with their positions. In the Oliver post office, a short distance from the town in which I live, the postmaster draws a salary of, I think, $12 a year. The late postmaster held the office for a great many years and having died he was succeeded by his son-in-law. They were both very strong Liberals, but they did the work for less money than they should receive, and to my mind a good staunch Liberal ought to have about as much pay for doing work as a good strong Conservative. Although this postmaster at Oliver is a political enemy of mine, I would be glad to see him get a sufficient salary to compensate him for the work he has to do. He has to sit up until 10 o'clock at night, change the mails twice a day, and he is doing that year in and year out for $12 a year. Now, as to another matter. The revenue of the Magog post office is between $3,000 and $4,000 a year, and this I think entitles it to consideration from the Government, and ought to be sufficient to induce them to establish a post office and custom-house in the town of Magog.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Postmaster General made any changes for the better lately in the postal service in the Rainy River district, particularly in the direction of the Seine River. The service there has been a very inadequate one, and I think it is so still. I happened to be in that section last summer, and at Fort Frances, while I was in the office of the Hudson Bay Company, one of Uncle Sam's subjects came in and brought a packet of letters, and received another packet of letters. Walking down the street to another small place of business, I saw the same man come in and do the same. I asked why that was done, and I found that the business men of Fort Frances clubbed together to pay a man to bring in the mail from Kouchiching, United States, just opposite to Fort Frances, which mail comes over the American mail route, and to gather the letters and take them out by the same route. They have to do that in order to get business accommodation. Then, at Mine Centre which is an important mining town 30 or 40 miles above Fort Frances, with numbers of working properties and a large mining population around it, there being at this season of the year anywhere from 400 to 500 to 1,000 men at work, the only way they can get any satisfactory accommodation is to assess themselves a certain amount of money, and send a man to Fort Frances to carry the mail. For so important a point, which is being largely developed, it seems to me that it is not the sort of accommodation which is sufficient for the needs of the people. In the winter season these people get one mail a week from Rat Portage. Last year in the summer season they got two mails a week by the river boats; but, I suppose nine-tenths of their mail matter comes by way of Tower or Harding, by the United States mail route. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he made any amelioration in the service of late.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. During last winter Fort Frances received service from two directions—from Rat Portage over the ice, and from the railway across the country by separate stage. I cannot remember the frequency; perhaps my hon. friend knows.

Mr. FOSTER. Once a week from Rat Portage and once a week from the other.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In winter Fort Frances is a somewhat inaccessible place, and there is scarcely any one living between there and the line of railway except lumbermen. Last winter some 300 or 400 people were engaged in lumbering in that district, and it paid some persons to run a stage, and some other person established a hotel or stopping place along the route. It is a long route, running 80 or 90 miles through an uninhabited country. With regard to the summer service, my hon. friend says that last year it was twice a week. Perhaps that is correct. At all events, this year I have been trying to improve it. There are two lines of steamers running between

Mr. FOSTER.

Rat Portage and Fort Frances. They do not, I believe, go above Fort Frances.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a daily line of steamers between Fort Frances and Mine Centre.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One of the lines of steamers is owned by Captain Lewis, the other by the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company. The latter recently put on a pair of fast running steamers; and so anxious was I to improve the mail service that I undertook to make an arrangement with this company, who, I believe, expect their two steamers to make three trips a week; and besides these they have a couple of smaller steamers, freighters, which they expect will make a couple of trips a week.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the "Keenora" herself makes three trips a week.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, it is the "Keenora" making three trips, and the other making two, that is, five trips a week. When I saw the manager, he would not make any stipulation further than three trips a week. I had a conversation with him, and had hoped, owing to his vessel being the swifter, to give him the service. I expected to put the mail service on that line, commencing last Monday. But my hon. friend has had enough experience in the public service to know that however well one's intentions are, and however much he may be serving a locality, the locality itself acquires an interest in and a sympathy with existing concerns which sometimes prevents an improvement in the service, and that is just what is happening in this particular case. I found that the friends of Captain Lewis thought it was not fair to take the service from his boat, which had carried it on when there were no others. I have sent an officer up to see if an arrangement can be made to have the boats run on different days, and to have four services a week at least—two by Captain Lewis's boat, and two or three by the other. On Wednesday of this week I instructed an officer in Toronto to see Mr. Henderson, the inspector at Toronto, and despatch him at once to Rat Portage to try and make this arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Four services a week to Fort Frances would give a very good service. What about that to Mine Centre?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot speak as to that; it has not been brought to my attention, but I will look into it.

Mr. McALISTER. May I ask the Postmaster General on what basis the postmasters are paid? I find that in the province of New Brunswick the gross receipts are $39,438, and the salaries paid amount to only $19,889. I presume they are paid on the same basis in the different provinces?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. All salaries are paid on the same principle, whether in New Brunswick or in any other province. The minimum fees are paid where the post office performs a comparatively nominal service and where the revenue is very trifling. If the revenue exceeds a certain sum so that 40 per cent upon it would give more than the minimum, the salary is based on the percentage; but when the gross revenue is such that 40 per cent would not come to more than the minimum, then the fixed salary is paid.

Mr. McALISTER. Are the receipts not sufficient to increase the salaries of the non-accounting postmasters without any loss of revenue?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend will see that the cost of the maintenance of an office is not wholly the salary of the postmaster. In many of these small offices the cost of the service far exceeds the revenue, to say nothing of the salary. You could not bulk all the revenues and then distribute the salaries; that would not be a just arrangement. Of course, it is a great advantage to the people to have post offices here and there; and if we put post offices within a mile or so of each other in remote districts, they serve only a few families. I think I am safe in saying that there is a county in the province of Nova Scotia in which there are nearly 200 post offices. I would not venture to say how much the average revenue is, but it must be comparatively small; and, if you multiply post offices to suit the convenience of the people—and I am not saying you are not to do it—if you are going to put up post offices every two or three miles you cannot have a very liberal salary for each officer. My hon. friends will have to choose between a few officers with large salaries, and a great many officers with trifling salaries. The multiplication of small offices in the rural districts is a great convenience to those districts, being the next thing to a house to house delivery.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to a number of cases of hardship in my riding. The hon. gentleman will remember that, on the advent of this Government to power, a large cancellation of contracts took place, and, in their anxiety to secure contracts, a number of carriers took them much below their value, and now wish to be relieved. A case of peculiar hardship is one concerning which I have had some correspondence with the Postmaster General. I refer to the case of Thomas Farley, who carries the mail between Lisle and Black Bank, a distance of 14 miles, for 50 cents a trip. I wrote the department, asking that he might be relieved from his contract. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to make a note of that particular case, and see if he cannot allow this man to throw up his contract. There are a number of other cases of this sort, but the particular one I have mentioned is very pressing owing to the poverty of the contractor.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman mentions having communicated with the department. His correspondence did not reach me, but no doubt was received and dealt with officially.

Mr. TYRWHITT. It was early in the winter—about January.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A great deal of correspondence that may be directed to the head of the department, if it is purely of a business character, finds its way to the staff, and that, no doubt, has been the destination of my hon. friend's correspondence. As to relieving the contractor of his contract, I am not aware of any provision in the law that admits of that, whether it be a contract to carry mails or perform any other public service.

Mr. TYRWHITT. If the hon. Minister would allow me, I can give him a precedent, and that is the case of the courier who used to pass my own gate, and who was relieved of his contract. His name was Henry Stone, and the hon. gentleman may remember that he relieved him of his contract, and afterwards gave it to John Cook without tender, I believe.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is in error. He was not relieved of his contract in the sense of being relieved of a non-paying contract, but the contract was cancelled in his hands for a different reason altogether—because it had been awarded to him without compliance with the law, and I did not regard it as a proper contract. It was not to relieve him of a non-paying contract, but to put it up to tender.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I only know that, after he got the contract, he was most anxious to get rid of it, because it did not pay, and the next thing I knew was, the contract has been changed and put in other hands.

Mr. BELL (Addington). Is there not a clause in the contract by which, on three months' notice, the contractor may be relieved?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It depends on the contract itself.

Amount required to recoup the North-west Mounted Police for assistance to destitute half-breeds during the years 1897-98 and 1898-99.....	$800
---	-------

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been an arrangement for the past ten years or more under which the officers of the Mounted Police have general instructions, in cases of very great necessity, to offer small amounts of relief and the Department of the Interior has generally had a vote from which it could recoup the Mounted Police vote for these expenditures. Accounts have been received from the Controller of the North-west Mounted Police for $576.77, from the 1st June, 1898, to 30th April, 1899. Part of this vote will be used to pay these accounts, the balance will be available in case of other accounts coming in within the time. The expenditure generally runs about $500, but it has run a little over that this year.

Amount required to pay balance of expenses of commission in Crow's Nest Pass Railway inquiry $690

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the accounts came in from the commissioners, it was found they had charged fees for Sunday as for other days. The department, acting under my instructions, took off the charges made for Sundays. The commissioners refused to accept my view of the case and proposed to have an action against the Government. I referred the matter to the Department of Justice. I do not know whether the department gave a formal opinion, but they intimated that we should have to pay it. This is why I take this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they work on Sunday?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know that they held sittings; but, of course, they were out, and, no doubt, in some of the time over which the difference arose, they were travelling. They claimed that under the ordinary rule, they were entitled to get so much a day for all the time they were occupied. I took the view that Sundays should be excepted.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did you not hold to that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would have done so, but the Department of Justice was not disposed to stand by me.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole amount spent on this commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the information now, but I will give it to the hon. gentleman within a few minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) is anxious to say a few words on this subject, if there is no item for this commission in the main Estimates, I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) will be allowed to take it up on some other item?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, on any of my Estimates.

Mr. SIFTON.

Amount required to provide for the expenses and salaries connected with the commission appointed to inquire into half-breed claims in the North-west Territories, out of which payment may be made to J. A. Coté as half-breed commissioner, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I covered all the information about this last night in discussing the half-breed commission.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the rate of pay of the commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Coté is given $5 a day in addition to his salary. Of course, that cannot be paid without a vote of Parliament; he gets his expenses also.

North-west Mounted Police—

Required to complete the service of the year $50,000

Mr. FOSTER. There is a further vote for the North-west Mounted Police under item 74.

The PRIME MINISTER. Item 74 is for the force in the Yukon, while the present item, No. 72, is for the force in the North-west Territories. Our reason for asking an additional appropriation is this: In 1896-97 we expended for the Mounted Police $526,162.05, a decrease of $6,852.12, as compared with the previous year. But this was only the work of our prentice hands. The following year, we spent $369,638.88, a saving of $156,523 as compared with the previous year. But it was evident that we had undertaken too much. In 1896, when we took office, the force was 750 men. In 1897 we made provision to reduce the force to 500 men. But we could not reduce the force as speedily as we intended. Last year, it varied from 700 to 550. It now stands at 550. The reason why we could not reduce the force—

Mr. FOSTER. In the North-west, you mean?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes—this is quite apart from the Yukon. We have 200 men in the Yukon. That force is under the control of the Department of the Interior. I speak only of the force in the North-west Territories. Our intention was to reduce the number from 750 to 500. It is now 550. We are about to draw fifty men from the force to send to the Yukon to replace men who are going out of the service; the force will then be reduced to 500 men.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been expended this year?

The PRIME MINISTER. We took an estimate for $353,750, and we find we are short $50,000. We could not reduce the force as speedily as we intended, because we had to send 20 men to patrol the Crow's Nest Pass Railway during its construction. Then we had to keep a reserve of trained men, the very best men of the force, to send to the Yukon. Then we had to organize a patrol in the north in consequence of the travel which is now taking that direction by the Edmonton route. At the present time we have in that region 60 men under the command of Superintendent Griesbach, which are distributed as follows:—Fort Saskatchewan, 30; Edmonton, 6; South Edmonton, 1; St. Albert, 1; Innisfail, 1; Red Deer, 1; Beaver Lake, 1; Westaskiwin, 1; Rivière qui Barre, 1; Lac Ste. Anne, 1; Athabaska Landing, 1; Lesser Slave Lake, 3; Peace River Landing, 4; Fort Smith, 2; special patrols, 6. All these places are very far advanced in the north and west. At Peace River, Fort Smith, Lesser Slave Lake and Athabaska Landing, we keep the men there all the year round. Apart from that we have six men patrolling all the time up and down the rivers in summer and winter, in summer to prevent bush fires especially, because careless travellers set fires, and we have men to look after the camps, and see that the fires are extinguished. They also give protection to travellers and maintain the peace. As I have said, we have been obliged to keep more men than we intended, and the reduction of the force has taken place more slowly than we expected. We are short, as I have said, in our accounts this year by $50,000, made up as follows:—For the pay of the men, $16,000; subsistence, forage, fuel and light, $7,000; transport and freight charges, $15,000; general stores and clothing, $12,000.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the right hon. gentleman find that the 550 men are sufficient for the efficient service in the North-west?

The PRIME MINISTER. They give a very efficient service indeed in the North-west. Of course, we always hear complaints from the settlers who want more men, especially to guard against prairie fires and as a protection against cattle thieves, particularly on the American boundary. But the complaints have become less and less because, as the settlers increase in number, they look more after their own protection. In the fall we always have complaints that more men are required, but we find that keeping a man here and there is enough, because when he discovers a fire he calls on the settlers and they act themselves. The country is gradually settling up, and we believe the force can be gradually diminished.

Mr. FOSTER. What do these six men do in Edmonton?

The PRIME MINISTER. I presume they perform the ordinary duties of the force, policing and patrolling in all directions. They do not do police work for the town. I think no such work is required.

Mr. FOSTER. There are none now in the confines of Manitoba?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman mentioned that he proposed to reduce the force. Several years ago, as a result of a discussion in the House, the late Government determined to bring the force down to 750. It was then over 1,000 men in strength. But my hon. friend has been unable to reduce it as rapidly as he expected, and I think he has done wisely in not reducing it more rapidly. There is a pressure among all the settlements to have one or more mounted police, but I think the Government is wise in depending upon the settlers, as they increase in number to look after their own constable and police business. The extension of the country north will require for some time to be looked after by mounted police. But I wanted to ask my hon. friend if he thinks that the morale and texture of the force is as good as it was two years ago? We were very proud of the force then; does he believe it is as good, or is it not a fact that by drafting out picked men from the different stations and sending them to the Yukon, he has broken to a large extent the splendid morale and discipline of the force which were its chief characteristics up to that time. I have heard experienced men declare that it is so, and I think that impression obtains in the North-west.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I do not think so. If my hon. friend will look at the report of the North-west Mounted Police for this year he will come to the conclusion that the force has not deteriorated. I am free to say, however, that we are bound to give it a little more attention. We have decided to restore the old school that we had at Regina, and keep more men in training at Regina than we had before. By keeping, say 50 trained, drilled and carefully instructed men at Regina, there is no reason to doubt that we will maintain the force in its full efficiency.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were drafted out for the Yukon?

The PRIME MINISTER. 200.

North-west Mounted Police—

Required to complete the service of the year	$385,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the hon. Minister to give us a full explanation of the whole business.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The appropriation voted in 1898 was $346,250. The supplementary Estimates asked for now of $385,000 cover two Governor General's warrants. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has no doubt read the indemnity clause in Resolution No. 79 of the Supply Bill. The sum which is referred to there as having been paid to the Mounted Police officers for the purposes of the force is $144,077.19. That makes up a total of $875,327.19.

Mr. FOSTER. That only makes $790,000. Does $200,000 cover the Governor General's warrants ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. This item we are asking for is $385,000. That covers the Governor General's warrants. The Governor General's warrants are included in this $385,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It includes the two warrants, but do the two warrants make up the $385,000 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, they do not.

Mr. FOSTER. How much are they ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One is $150,000, and the other is $175,000. The two of them together make $325,000. This vote is $385,000. The appropriation by this last year's vote from the revenue and this vote will make $875,327.19. The expenditure which has been accounted for through the Controller of the Mounted Police up to the present time, is $731,010.98, divided as follows :—

Pay of force.....	$130,512	16
Subsistence, forage, dog-feed, fuel and light	181,363	22
Clothing, general stores, horses, dogs, ammunition, hospital expenses, stationery, &c.....	64,942	96
Guides, billeting and travelling expenses	10,647	32
Transportation and freight charges..	233,014	67
Contingencies	6,313	64
Buildings	104,217	01
Total	$731,010	98

That leaves a balance of the total amount of $875,327 which I mentioned as being expended under last year's vote, and the money expended from the revenue of $144,316.21. The amount is made up and estimated for the balance of the expenditure this year as follows :—

Pay of force	$50,000	00
Subsistence, forage, dog-feed, fuel and light	25,000	00
Clothing, general stores, horses, dogs, &c.....	14,316	21
Transport, freight charges.....	30,000	00
Buildings	25,000	00
Total	$144,316	21

The charge for subsistence is heavy. It includes subsistence of all the officials in the Yukon. Transport and freight charges amount to $233,000. These cover the transportation of supplies and material for nearly all the requirements of the different services, except militia. The cost of public buildings, $104,000, includes some 26 different buildings. The buildings at most of these places are considerable in extent. At Dawson, Selkirk and Tagish quite extensive barracks are constructed. There is also a very good post constructed on the Dalton trail, not far from the provisional boundary line. There is also a very good building at the Stikine River, where there are three men. We have quite a large post at Tagish, and quite an extensive barrack.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the buildings at Dawson and Selkirk permanent ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What have they cost ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was wrong in saying that we had a building of any extent at Selkirk. I had in my mind the militia buildings, which, of course, were not paid for by the police. We have a small building at Selkirk.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the expenditure of $230,000 during this current year for buildings represent any permanent value ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The barracks at Dawson are permanent. There was a small barracks constructed in former years but it has been largely increased. About $60,000 will be the cost of the barracks at Dawson, and it will not require to be changed except we might want to increase it, which I do not think will be necessary for years to come. It will accommodate 150 men.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the distribution of the 200 men ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are, altogether, thirteen officers, including the doctors, 208 non-commissioned officers and constables, thirty-eight special constables and dog-drivers, making altogether 259. The number of dog-drivers was necessarily large on account of the police handling the mail.

Mr. FOSTER. To what department has the cost of the mail service been charged ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has all been paid out of this, and none of it charged to the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. And all the officials in the Yukon are fed out of supplies charged to the Mounted Police.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At present.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely it is the intention to distribute these charges amongst the departments to which they belong ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, after the 1st of July. It is pretty difficult to tell what the proportion of the rations would cost, but I suppose an estimate can be worked out.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the police practically done all the mail service?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not correct in saying that the police have done all the mail carrying. Shortly before the ice formed at the beginning of the winter season, I undertook, with the Postmaster General, that we would provide for the carrying of 700 pounds of mail once a fortnight each way from Dawson to Lake Bennett. I watched the matter very closely, and Major Wood, a very good officer, stationed at Tagish reported that that arrangement was carried out upon all occasions when the trail was passable, but there was a considerable period during which parts of the lake opened and were not capable of being travelled upon. I am giving my attention to having a cut-off by land at these points where the ice cannot be relied upon, so that next winter we hope to have a permanent service without delays. The expense of that work was paid out of the police fund.

Mr. FOSTER. When the Minister of the Interior made the arrangement with the Postmaster General, did he not make an arrangement by which the Post Office Department was to pay him the cost of the carriage of the mail?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at that time. It was discussed between myself and the Postmaster General, but there was great difficulty in arriving at what it was going to cost.

Mr. FOSTER. It was incumbent upon the Post Office Department to provide for that mail service, and that department should make an estimate of what it would cost, and pay that amount to the Mounted Police. Or, the Minister could have said: Having my mounted police on the ground, I will do the service for you at a percentage less than that. I trust that the accounts will be so distributed that the Post Office Department will bear its fair share of the cost.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) misunderstands the arrangement. It is not proposed to load the service of one department on to another, but it is not necessary to have two departments asking for the vote. There may possibly be an apportionment of the cost between the two departments, but is it immaterial whether the money is voted to one department or the other. It is a matter of book-keeping, afterwards to distribute the charge. Mr. White informed me that when the North-west was being opened up, the system adopted was to take a vote of about $400,000 a year under the heading "North-west Territories," and that was applied to all services, and there was, I think, no apportionment between the departments concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a vote for general service but for Mounted Police, and the cost is charged to the police, thus relieving the Post Office Department of very great expense. If there is no apportionment it will introduce utter confusion into the services of the Government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was no confusion in the case of opening up Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether the expense was apportioned there or not, nor does the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know it from the information of Mr. White.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply stating a very plain principle, that if the Post Office Department gets its mail carried by the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of the Interior should charge the Post Office Department what he thinks is fair; and a basis to get at what would be a fair amount would be what the Postmaster General would have to pay for the service, tempered by the fact that the Minister of the Interior had his men on the ground and could afford to do it at a percentage less. I do not suppose my hon. friend got the postal revenue, did he?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. He is too generous altogether. In his own business I know he would not do that; if he had to take the cost, he would get all the revenue; but he is so generous to the Post Office Department that he is willing to do a very important work for it and charge it up against the Mounted Police. I would certainly press on my hon. friend and the Government the necessity of making some fair apportionment of the cost of the service to the Post Office Department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there can be any dispute about the correctness of the principle the hon. gentleman speaks of, that when one department performs a service for another, it should make a proper charge to that department. I think in this case the Post Office Department should be charged with what the service costs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We intend to take an account of that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give my hon. friend the distribution of the force, which includes officers, men and dog-drivers: at Skagway, 2; at the summit of Chilkoot Pass, 3; at the summit of White Pass, 10; at Lake Lindermann, 3; at Lake Bennett, 7; at Log Cabin, 4; at Cariboo Crossing, 3. All these except Cariboo Crossing are in British Columbia. At the request of the provincial authorities, we withdrew all our men from British Columbia except those whom we deemed to be necessary to protect our own customs officers, and to see that they were in a position to meet any emergency that might arise.

Mr. FOSTER. And those you have mentioned are those that are necessary to be kept?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. All these are not in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Skagway is not in British Columbia.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It may be in British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, it may be. The two men who are there are simply depot men to look after supplies. There are at Tagish, 64; at McClinton River, 3; at White Horse Rapids, 3; at the head of Lake Labarge, 3; at the foot of Lake Labarge, 4; at McClinton, a post on the river, 5; at Big Salmon, 4; at Little Salmon, 6; at Tantalus, 5; at Five Fingers, 5; at Atlin, B.C., 1; at Selkirk, 5; at Ogilvy, 4; at Hutchikoo, 4; at Stewart River, 5; at Half-way Post, 4; at Selwyn, 4; at Indian River, 5; at Grand Forks, 7; at Dawson, 63; at Fort Constantine, 4; at Dominion Creek, 5; at the post office on the Dalton trail, 9; on the Stikine River and at Glenora, 5; making altogether 259.

Mr. FOSTER. Tagish and Dawson are your two main points?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. Tagish is the depot point for the southern part of the territory. Major White is at Tagish, and is in command of the southern half of the territory, under Col. Steele, who is the chief commander of the territory.

Mr. FOSTER. At which of these places have you built barracks?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have barracks at all of these places. At some places the barracks are very small. The buildings are log buildings, but are substantial, and will serve every purpose for a considerable number of years. They are intended, as far as possible, to be permanent stopping-places on the line of communication. They were intended for that purpose when put up, and they are carefully and substantially built. It is expected that we shall be able to utilize some of them in connection with the telegraph line and some in connection with the permanent mail route to be established hereafter. A few of them are off the line, but most of them are on the line, and will be capable of being used.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. PRIOR. Were they erected by the men themselves, or did you hire labour?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were mostly erected by the men, though, of course, from time to time, some little assistance was hired.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister know the number of militia in the Yukon?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I only know that the order was made for 250. Whether that is the exact number there or not, I cannot say. One hundred are at Dawson, and the others are in barracks at Selkirk. The 100 men at Dawson were sent there by the Militia Department at my request to assist and practically furnish a reserve for the police.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I come to the conclusion that in the year there has been close on $1,700,000 or $1,800,000 spent in the Yukon for police and militia. I imagine that the 250 men sent in by the Minister of the Interior and kept there will cost fully as much per man and probably more. The cost of the 200 men amounts to a little over $4,000 per man—$4,375. These men have cost us each $4,375, and the militia no doubt have cost us more than that, say about $5,000 apiece. With such an expenditure, the Government is bound to give us the very best reasons for having incurred it. Were those men necessary or were they not? Every man that was unnecessary has cost the taxpayer about $5,000. I would like the hon. Minister to tell us generally what service these men have had to perform, particularly with reference to what they had to do in the way of maintaining law and order?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The House is no doubt familiar with the general class of work that has been done by the Mounted Police in the North-west Territories. Their duties in the Yukon district have been pretty much the same. It has been their duty to do the ordinary police constable work and to keep the country, as far as possible, under police control. In addition to that they have been engaged to some extent in handling the mails. They have had a considerable portion of their spare time, when they had any, occupied in the putting up of their buildings and establishing quarters for themselves, which would be of a more or less permanent character. It is difficult for me to give the members of the committee an accurate idea of what the police force is in the Yukon, because in order to do that I would have to give the detailed routine of the force at each point.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be about the same at all the points.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. From a pretty constant supervision of the work, I do not think that any men in the Dominion, during the same length of time, have been working as hard or constantly and subjected to as arduous toll as the Mounted Police in that district. A large portion of their time has been taken up in patrolling, in the forwarding and handling of their supplies, and in transporting supplies for other departments of the Government, keeping the line of communication open, and handling everything that required to be handled for the Government. It became evident, in the very beginning, that a great many things which, under ordinary circumstances, would not be done by the police, would be very efficiently done by that organization and in fact could only be efficiently done by it. For instance, when we have sent in officials from time to time, we have practically put them in charge of the police at one end of the trip and the police have seen them through. That has occupied a considerable portion of their time at different periods, and it is only in that way that we could keep open communication and have our men forwarded from one place to another as required. I think that the members of the committee will fully recognize the fact that 250 men, scattered over a district of 600 miles, where travel was usually extremely difficult, arduous and dangerous, and when that route at Skagway was encumbered by men of lawless character, travelling in such a way that they had to be under the supervision of the police, had a very great responsibility resting on them, and the fact that law and order has been maintained in that district is the greatest tribute to the efficiency of the force we have ever had since it was organized. It is the universal testimony that there never has been a mining camp where such a rush took place, in which order was maintained as well as it has been in the Yukon territory. The class of men that went in there were, it has been said, a good class of people, a law-abiding population. I would not like to say that they were not, but I have no hesitation in saying that they were, with few exceptions, almost the same class of people that were at Skagway in the early days of that town, when it was impossible for a man to go out after dark without danger to his life. Hundreds of such people had gone up to our North-west Territories. Of course a great many people who went in there were very fine, respectable people, and no doubt the sentiment of the majority was in favour of a proper maintenance of law and order, but it does not follow, by any means, that if there had not been a properly organized force and a sufficient force to protect the officers of law and back them in case of trouble, law and order would not have been maintained with anything like the same efficiency. It must be borne in mind that while we might justly rely on the loyalty and devotion of our police officers, yet there were times when some anxiety might be felt in case the sympathy of the mob would be with the law breakers. Our officers told us that once or twice they did have great apprehension in regard to what would result in case there were any difficulties. However, that period has passed. But I venture to say that in that mining camp at Dawson, when there were from 25,000 to 30,000 people when there were, undoubtedly, a very large number of those people of the most lawless class—for it is a notorious fact that a large number of lawless men did make it their business to go to Dawson City and spread themselves over the Klondike district generally—it is beyond all doubt that the position of the men at Dawson who stood responsible for the maintenance of law and order, was a very arduous position and such a position that it could not be said that there were too many men there for the purpose. The question of sending the militia may be discussed separately. There were other considerations in the mind of the Government in sending the militia, and I do not speak of that subject just now. But I venture to say that, as my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) says, in discussing the question of the police in the North-west Territories, there were difficulties, when, out of 750 men, 250 were drafted away. And there are practically no difficulties about law and order in the North-west. The country is just as civilized and as safe as the city of Ottawa, and more so, for there is less difficulty, so far as the administration of justice and the prevention of crime are concerned. There is practically no danger of any kind, for there are railways and telegraphs everywhere, so that, if trouble occurred, say at Calgary, a regiment of soldiers could be landed there in forty-eight hours without any difficulty whatever. There is no danger throughout that territory, except of a possible outbreak among the Indians, which, I am happy to say, is not at all probable. But, if trouble did occur, there would be no difficulty in getting a force there at any time. Considering all the facts, I think it will be at once evident that we have not, so far as the police force is concerned, sent too many men into the Yukon district. The committee must consider the vast territory, the absolute impossibility of quick communication, of sending men where they may be wanted. At first, we could not even send men, because there were not sufficient supplies available. The men would starve to death on the way in. Now we have a very considerable quantity of supplies, supplies for about a year, and these are stored at different posts, so that supplies will be on hand if we desire to send a body of 15 or 20 men to one place or another. If we had not such an organization, we should not feel safe. But now, knowing that the organization of the police is so good, we feel almost absolutely safe, because we feel that we can cope with almost any difficulty that can occur.

I might give one illustration of the difficulty of the situation, without which difficulty the administration of that part of the country would be comparatively simple. Two miners, going down the Hootalinqua River, were shot at by some Indians. One was killed and the other badly wounded; I have forgotten whether the second one died or not. It became necessary to send out a party to hunt the Indians down. The nearest police post had to be communicated with. It was about 40 miles from where the murder took place. That trip of 40 miles was over territory so difficult of travel that a man could only make 10 miles a day, except by the most tremendous efforts, carrying such supplies as would be necessary to keep himself from starving. When the post had been communicated with, they had to send out a party strong enough to cope with any difficulties they might meet, and to take the malefactors, even if resistance were offered. Not only had they to carry supplies with them, but they had to carry full equipment. They had to be as fully equipped as any party that we send out to make a survey in a distant part of the North-west Territories. The men must carry their own subsistence, and be prepared for any kind of weather. This is a vastly different thing from sending men here and there in a country where they can stop at different places over night and get provisions. We must send out a party capable of travelling without assistance, and able to move quickly enough to catch the criminals. This body of men did arrest the criminals, who were subsequently tried and convicted at Dawson City. In other cases also criminals have been promptly apprehended. I say, Mr. Speaker, with some degree of pride, that, in the first place, I do not think it could be shown that there ever was a case of population going into such a country, where the difficulties of communication and of performing these various services were so great. Moreover, I do not believe there ever was a case in which a large and miscellaneous population went into a mining district, and in which so little crime took place during the last eighteen or twenty months, during which that population was there. My information of what took place in Australia, where the very best organization was in existence, where they had a thoroughly organized mounted police force under first-class officers, is, that there was a very much larger amount of crime. It was no unusual thing for the Government convoys to be held up and robbed, and there was a considerable degree of lawlessness, notwithstanding the stringent efforts made to put it down. We have had nothing of that kind. We have established such a state of affairs that the men who, starting for the Canadian Yukon, from Skagway by the White Pass or the Chilkoot Pass, have said that, when they got to the Canadian line, they could pack up their revolvers and rifles, because they would not want them any more. This is the state of affairs we established, and that exists there now.

I venture to say that the statement I have seen in print that it was the name of the Canadian law, simply the name, that brought about that result, should commend itself to the common sense of any member of this committee. The name of the Canadian law had a great deal to do with it. It secured for every mounted policeman on that trail practically the power of ten men; for, when a mounted policeman went to a man and said: Do so and so, he did it. A policeman did not need ten or fifteen men with him to direct the people as to what they were to do. They understand that that one man represented the Canadian law, and they carried out his instructions. But, if we had not had the men to give the instructions, to say what would require to be done, and to say that it had to be done, as a matter of course, everything would have been in a disorganized and lawless state. I want to bear testimony, apart from political considerations, to the men upon that force. I have said that I did not know of any body of men in Canada who were subject to such arduous toil as these men were. They did everything for the people on that trail. They took the people in, fed them, housed them, and took care of them in every way. If a report came in that a man was on the trail, used up, starving or sick, a policeman or two—generally, a party of two—would be sent out and the man would be brought in, and housed, and fed, and cared for. That has been taking place all the time upon that trail up to the time when the ice went out this spring, and travel, except by boat, has practically ceased. Now, the amount of work which these men have had to do has been enormous. I think the members of the committee ought to recognize the fact that they have had cast upon them an enormous amount of work. The question whether the country should provide a force of men to do that work, or whether the country should have left the people to starve, and if they got sick, to let them stay sick, and to die—that is a question of policy; but I have no hesitation in saying, for my own part, that I think the policy was a proper one, under the very unusual circumstances that existed.

Mr. FOSTER. Could my hon. friend state generally, from the records of the Mounted Police, the classes of crime, and number of apprehensions, and the like of that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The record for serious crime is very trifling indeed. Of criminal and other cases tried in the Yukon from the 1st of December, 1897, to the 30th of November, 1898, there were 600 altogether. I can give the hon. gentleman an idea of the nature of the offences by running over a few: Larceny, non-payment of wages, dog stealing, drunkenness, arson, theft, damage to property, assault, creating public disturbance, stealing gold dust, giving liquor to Indians, indecent behaviour, drunk and disorderly—that is the way they run.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of these cases occurred in Dawson?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were all tried at Dawson, except five that were tried at Tagish. Six were tried by the officer on the Dalton trail, one was for evading the customs officer, and five for horse stealing. The hon. gentleman will find the particulars in the appendix of the Mounted Police report.

Mr. FOSTER. The supplies that were bought for the Mounted Police, the whole of the subsistence, amounts to over $200,000. Were all these supplies bought by tender and contract?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All the supplies for the Mounted Police, with scarcely any exception, are purchased by public advertisement. I do not think that during this last year any supplies have been purchased otherwise than by public tender, except in one case. There were a few tons of stuff that had to be sent in in a hurry. The order was sent to Superintendent Curry, at Vancouver, by telegraph, to purchase them. I think they amounted altogether to about $20,000. He went around to the different persons and procured tenders, and purchased the stuff hurriedly, and shipped it. But supplies generally are purchased by tender. But I will say further, in order not to mislead the hon. gentleman, that during the previous year we purchased a considerable quantity of supplies at Victoria and Vancouver without tender. When I say a considerable quantity, I do not mean any considerable proportion of the whole amount. But we did that in order to ship them quickly, that we might get them in before the difficulty occurred concerning the transportation. But the quantities were comparatively small. During this year we have purchased altogether by tender except in the one case which I have mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. How have the supplies generally gone in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We let contracts to the transportation companies that go by the upper Yukon. I may say just here that some attacks were made upon the Government because we had let contracts for police supplies to an American company. Now, I want to say to the committee, I maintain that at the time it was the proper thing for me to do. There were two companies in the business last spring when it was necessary for me to make arrangements for supplies for this present year. Of course, the stuff was purchased and shipped as early as possible in the spring. There were two companies, the North American Transportation Company and the Alaska Commercial Company, that had been doing business there for some years. They had steamboats upon the river, they had warehouses, they understood the river, and they knew perfectly well what they could do and how they could do it. There was nobody else in the business; of all the companies that were offering to do the business, there was absolutely no other company that was at all in the same position as these two companies, and could guarantee, without any great danger of failure, that the contract would be carried out and the stuff would be delivered. Of course, it was these companies that carried the stuff in former years. The Government had had their supplies sent by the same companies. The North American Transportation Company had taken in all these supplies formerly. I had in my mind the possibility of getting a Canadian company to do it, but after a great deal of consideration I came to the conclusion that I would not be justified, for the sake of giving the work to any particular company, in taking any chances by giving it to a company that might not be able to carry out the contract. We consequently made that contract which I have referred to, the contract was faithfully and loyally carried out, and the goods delivered according to contract. Shortly after that contract had been made, speaking from recollection, and I think after the goods had been shipped, reports came that there was likely to be very low water on the upper Yukon, and I became alarmed for fear that the boats would not get up there until late in the year. I became alarmed for fear that we would be short of supplies, particularly on the upper portion of the river, which is the southern portion of the river, and to make sure that we would have sufficient provisions from year to year, I instructed the controller to purchase an additional quantity of supplies and push them forward early in the season by way of the passes. They were despatched by the lower route and we have them there. The Controller informed me a few days ago that we have now about a year's supplies for 250 men in the Yukon territory. We will send in this year the usual amount of supplies, so that, in case of any difficulty or temporary stoppage we will be prepared to avoid a shortage of supplies.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had a very adequate explanation of the matter by the hon. Minister compared with the time which is at his disposal and the disadvantage under which we are working at this hour in the morning. I do not think that we are in a position to spend very much time on the criticism of this vote, and, under these circumstances, I think myself that it would be far better if we made up our minds that these are very important votes, that they ought to be thoroughly looked into, and that we should not attempt to rush them through at this hour of the morning. However, that is in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite. If they choose to stay here all night, we will have to stay also. The disadvantage of taking up a most important matter like this late Friday night and Saturday morning, when almost all the members are away and every one is tired, is apparent. I think that when my hon. friend gets this vote through he should adjourn the House. However, if we must go through with it, there are some things we will have to say. I would not detract, in the least, from the efforts which have been put forward and the work which has been performed by the department and the Government in reference to this matter. I would pay just as hearty a tribute as the Minister to the excellent work of the police force which we have had in that territory. I do not think that there are two opinions about that. I do not think any one in this House would for a moment, believe that the Mounted Police have been lazing away their time, but on the contrary, they have done all that men could do in their position, and they have done it generally to the satisfaction of everybody. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) must not take to himself and his administration the total glory of having a comparatively law-abiding and orderly community in that part of the country. Happily, that has been the exceptional condition in Canada; it has been the exceptional condition in the early history of mining in every part of Canada, in British Columbia especially. I think it is not going too far to say that nine-tenths, yes, probably nineteenth-twentieths of that aggregation of men who go into the Yukon, go into that country not with the idea of committing lawless acts, but, on the contrary, with the idea of diligently pursuing their own interest by lawful means. Their object is to get claims, work these claims and make them profitable to themselves. They do not go in there with the idea of looting or getting claims by violence or force; they go in there with the idea of faithfully obeying the laws of the country in which they are to work, and loyally abiding by the laws of the country, so that lawlessness would be the exception, and law and order the rule. If you take into account the circumstances of the Yukon, you will see that the country does not invite to lawlessness; quite the contrary. There is in that country a hard struggle for existence, a hard struggle to win what they go to win in the way of seeking and obtaining gold, which prevents lawlessness rather than contributes to it. Happily, it has always been the history of our country, that our mining population has been the most law-abiding of any of our population, not excepting the older settled portions of the country. The mere fact that there was a comparative immunity from serious crimes in the Yukon is not to be attributed entirely to the immense expenditures which have been made, or to the large number of police and militia in that country, but to the causes which I have mentioned. I know that in the work which was undertaken by the police, taking into account the exigencies and circumstances of the country, that large expenses were impossible to be avoided. It is impossible for us to go into a critical analysis of the accounts at this hour of the morning. We simply have to take general principles and discuss them, that these supplies were got by tender and contract largely, that they were taken in under contract, that the transport companies gave rates as good as could be secured, sometimes under competition and sometimes without competition. All these are things that might be criticised if we had time, but we have not. We just take the general statement of the Minister and the general report of the department. I must say that I do not think the Mounted Police ought be charged with the keep of the Civil Government in any way. I do not think the Mounted Police should be charged with the cost of carrying the mails, and I think it is the bounden duty of the Government to charge a fair share of that cost to the Post Office Department. My hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) will see, that without that utter confusion for all comparative purposes is introduced into the keeping of the public accounts. Before we pass the main vote, the Ministers should come to a satisfactory conclusion amongst themselves and announce to the House what proportion is to go to these different services. Probably the Mounted Police did a great deal more than was necessary in the way of servile work. Charity, of course, is an excellent thing to dispense, and sick men should be taken care of as far as they possibly can be, but it is an open question as to whether men who were travelling in that district did not rely too much upon the Mounted Police, and were not taught sufficiently to rely upon themselves. The tendency would be to impose upon the leaders of the Mounted Police if the impression got abroad that the Mounted Police were there for that purpose. I am one of those who believe that it is better to err on the side of kindness under those circumstances than to take the other extreme. The crimes that have been committed are of the most trivial character, and I think nearly all of it has been committed in the city of Dawson itself. Is there any civil government in Dawson City or is it all Mounted Police and military government?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Before Mr. Ogilvie went out there I gave him my opinion that it would be well to have Dawson City incorporated as soon as possible, and he agreed with that view which is also the views of the other members of the Government. We did not give him any positive instructions because we thought it better that he should consult with the people up there. Incorporation has not taken place yet, and in one of his letters he thought the people were better satisfied to have their affairs administered by the council of the district, than by a municipal corporation.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, because they get all their civic work done for them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There will have to be incorporation in a very short time.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the Mounted Police do anything in the way of sanitary work?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They have regular sanitary regulations which they see are carried out, and one of the officers is sanitary inspector. Some time ago a very capable physician, Dr. Good, who formerly practiced in Winnipeg, was appointed Health Inspector by the Yukon Council. I am well acquainted with Dr. Good, and I know he is a very capable man. He had no intention of remaining there when he started, but he was appointed Sanitary Inspector for Dawson, and he went to work vigorously.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not feel like discussing the item any further, but of course we will have an item in the main Estimates for the Mounted Police, and then other important points will be taken up.

Amount required to provide for arrears of salary to 30th June, 1899, to be paid to the following employees connected with the Surveys Branch, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act:—

Louis Gauthier	$228 34
John Langlois	625 00
Otto J. Klotz.....	242 77

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have an explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The two first items refer to the cases I mentioned the other day in bringing in a Bill respecting the Department of the Interior. Mr. Gauthier was appointed to take the place of Mr. Dufresne, who had been a computer in the astronomer's office and had died. The Auditor General held that under a clause of the Civil Service Act we could not make a new appointment. We had examined Mr. Gauthier's qualifications for the position, which were of an extremely technical character, and he had been appointed, on the assumption that the rule respecting technical employees enabled us to appoint him, at a salary of $100 a month. Objection was made by the Auditor General to the payment of the increase, and on further examination the objection was sustained; so that he could only be paid at the rate of $900 a year. The amount we are asking the House to vote is the difference between $900, which he was getting before, and $1,200. Mr. Langlois is a surveyor. He abandoned a permanent position to accept work in the department, on the assurance that his pay for the present would be $75 a month, and that his employment would be continued. His position is the same as the other. He cannot be paid more than $400 a year under the Act, and we are asking a vote for the difference between that and $75 a month from the date of his appointment up to the 30th of June of this year. As to the payment to Mr. Klotz, it is an old claim, which, after some examination, I decided to recommend for payment. It represents certain extra services and expenses in determining the longitude of Montreal.

To provide for the payment of a gratuity equal to one year's salary to the widow of J. A. Cadenhead, late surveyor in the Yukon

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The circumstances of this case are very exceptional. Mr. Cadenhead was sent by the department to the Yukon territory to make a survey. He was a perfectly satisfactory officer, the report of his work being very good. While coming back, down the Klondike River, he accidentally broke through a thin crust of ice under which there was a large crevice and went into the water. He was apparently so much fatigued by a long and arduous trip that he had not sufficient strength to get out; and when he was found he was frozen stiff, with his hands on the ice. But he had evidently taken the trouble to take the surveyor's notes and plans, which he had in his pocket when the accident occurred, and when he apparently realized that he had no chance of getting on the ice, and had thrown them a considerable distance from him, so that they could be got. Therefore, the department had the result of the work that had cost him his life. If he had finished his work and returned, he would have been entitled to charge the department the cost of his return, which would be about $500, and I thought it was fair that his widow should receive the equivalent of a year's salary.

Miscellaneous printing

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This is the explanation given me by the Queen's Printer of this item:

The miscellaneous printing for the House of Commons has been increasing in volume. During the current year a large number of dairy farm reports were ordered by the House, and had to be charged to this account. The cost also of the Auditor General's Report has increased since the repeal of the Order in Council limiting to 500 the number of copies of reports to be supplied to departments. The report is a very bulky one, and 1,500 copies extra make a considerable difference. Besides, there is an annual increment in the number of pages at the rate of about 100 pages.

In further explanation, I would observe that the vote for miscellaneous printing was for 1891, and for some years previously, $30,000; but finding that that amount was not spent only $25,000 was asked, at which point it has remained for a number of years. During the last three or four years, however, the expenditure has exceeded the amount voted, and the object of the present request is to cover the extra expenditure of the present year.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there any reason why the departments should have more than 500 Auditor General's Reports distributed amongst them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know the particular circumstances which brought about this change, or whether the Order in Council was repealed by this or the preceding Government.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not repealed by us. I do not see why the departments needed so many of the books unless to send them around amongst political friends. When we have established a system of purchase of these reports, outside of what the members get, it seems to me that 500 is more than the departments can require.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will look into the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. gentleman will do so. These are costly books, and I do not see what departmental reason can be assigned for a distribution of more than 500.

To pay the legal representatives of the late A. M. Montpetit in full of claim for translation of Report on Liquor Traffic, including interest..... $581 10

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is in the Department of the Secretary of State and the following explanation has been given to me:—

This is a claim extending back to the year 1893, when Mr. Montpetit was engaged to translate the report and evidence of the Royal Liquor Prohibition Commission.

About a year after this work was undertaken the Government of the day decided to discontinue it. Mr. Montpetit was paid for the work he had actually done, but in addition thereto made several large demands for what he termed a violation of contract, which were not entertained. He also claimed to be paid for the translation calculated according to the number of pages in French instead of in English, as he had been paid. In October of last year an arrangement was come to with his legal representatives (Mr. Montpetit having died in the meantime) to allow this enumeration, together with the sum of $35.25 for an index, in full of all demands. The difference between the French and English pages come to $527, which with $35.25 makes $562.25. To this amount has been added $18.85 interest accrued since the date of settlement (28th October, 1898), making $581.10, for which a vote is here asked.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very peculiar vote. The claim dates back to 1893, and it was thoroughly well understood then that it would not be admitted.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, this claim has been pending.

Mr. FOSTER. I know, but refused.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but pressed all the time.

Grant towards relief of distress caused by a hurricane in the West Indies.. $25,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Last year there was a disastrous hurricane in the West Indies, which caused a considerable loss of life and very great damage to property, and an appeal was made to the Empire for funds. A fund was started by the Lord Mayor of London, and a sum of £37,000 had been collected when Canada took action and contributed a sum of £5,000. After consultation with the Colonial Office as to the form in which it might be most advantageous to use, $15,000 was given to the government of the Windward Islands, and $10,000 to the Government of the Barbadoes. In both cases the money was sent to the Colonial Governments through the Bank of Montreal and the Colonial Bank, both banks lending their assistance without any charge.

International Commission at Washington. $14,000

Mr. FOSTER. This item will provoke some discussion, and as we have done a good deal of work to-day, I think we ought to adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is early yet, and it is desirable that we should get through with the supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. These supplementaries might just as well have been down a month or so after the beginning of the session, and not kept until a few days before the close of the fiscal year, and then rushed through out of all reason.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). We have never lost but one half day during the whole session.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there has been a year in the parliamentary history of the country in which Government business was so far behind and so deplorably managed as this year. Look at the supplementary Estimates for the current year. Not brought down until nearly three months of the session are over.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was more convenient to bring them down towards the end of the fiscal year, so that they may be all brought down at the same time, and no need to bring in further supplementaries. There has not been a Government day, since this session opened, when there was not ample Government business to be done, and very often we have delayed business to suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps on one or two occasions in which arrangements were made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The discussion on common-place items which has gone on has never been equalled in the history of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not propose that Estimates shall go through without proper explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have no objection to that.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the objection to item 93, "International Commission at Washington"?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to do all the talking. An international commission has some aspects that may call for some discussion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a small item which was left over at the instance of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), for the payment of Mr. Mungovan. The question was put whether this gentleman had been constantly employed during the period covered by the vote. Dr. Dawson, the Queen's Printer, has furnished me with a memorandum which shows that this gentleman was absent for a few days on leave, and these days, of course, would be deducted from his pay. Whether this item is passed as it is or not he would not receive the whole amount. We can either take this item as it stands or reduce it by the number of days of his absence.

Mr. FOSTER. There was another point and that was why it became necessary to make an exception to the law to employ Mr. Mungovan when there are hundreds of young men and women who had passed the examination and were available.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only answer is, that, as I am informed, this gentleman had been employed from time to time in similar service and was competent to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. In what work was he employed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The same work, I am told.

Mr. FOSTER. What was he doing—any technical work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was employed as extra clerk, during the session chiefly, I believe, in the Printing Bureau, addressing and distributing documents.

Mr. BENNETT. Was he not absent during the West Huron fight also?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The statement only shows that he was absent for eleven days.

Mr. BENNETT. That was during the Brockville election. I think he was in West Huron also.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can only speak of the days when he was absent.

Mr. FOSTER. If the law is carried out, of course he can only be paid for the days on which he worked. It looks as if the Government were breaking the Civil Service law in order to keep a man at a base of operations from which he can travel out into the different constituencies when calls are made. I think my hon. friend, even without a pair of double magnifying spectacles, can read that between the lines.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think we have done a good day's work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will have all day to-morrow to rest, while we have to work.

Mr. TAYLOR. If hon. gentlemen opposite had gone down and got a meal with the idea that they are going to force through this item to-night, I can tell them that they are making a mistake. We have done a good day's work, and have pushed through items with very little discussion that ought to have been more discussed. There were some upon which I wished to have something to say myself, but refrained from speaking because the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) said the Government were anxious to get these Estimates through, and said we should push through as many as possible. We have done that until one o'clock, and now the Prime Minister should accede to the request of the Opposition and let us finish these up in the early part of the week.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let this item through—

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) wants to provoke a fight he will get it. There are as many members of the Opposition here as there are on the Government side. I do not purpose that this item is going through without a division, not only in the committee, but in the House; for this Mr. Mungovan is simply employed in violation of the Civil Service Act, and sent out to the country to electioneer whenever the Government may need him.

Mr. MCGREGOR. A very handy fellow.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is well that the country should know that. He was not the only one. In West Huron, the inspector of clothing, McCormick, who came from Goderich, and was employed in the department here, though paid by this Government, was canvassing from house to house during that election. In this way the Government, who were entrusted by the public with the management of their affairs, are spending public money. They are paid $7,000 a year each to manage the business of the country; are they going to steal the money of the country to pay men to do election work for them? If that is what they are doing, the people of the country want to know it. Mr. Mungovan is not a civil servant, but there is a special vote here to pay him to go through the country electioneering. I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. BENNETT. Before the motion is put, I desire to say that I happened to be passing along the streets here in Ottawa in company with two other members of the House, when this Mungovan came up and applied some very disreputable epithets to one of these gentlemen. I believe this was because of the dispute which had arisen over the payment of this account. Personally, I think it is to be regretted that Mungovan or anybody else should be employed as he and McCormick are, to go to any part of the country where they may be sent for electioneering purposes. I for one protest against this payment.

Motion to strike out item negatived: yeas, 9; nays, 29.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, you purpose to put the item through. The proposition by the Minister of Finance is to reduce the amount by eleven days.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection. As I said, the money would not be paid for the time the man was absent. I move to reduce the item by the amount of pay for eleven days, which would leave the item $136.50.

Motion agreed to.

Customs—

Additional amount required for salaries and contingencies..... $16,518 68

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend asked me, whether the officers had been paid. The information given me by the accountant of the department is, that the amount due for salaries in British Columbia, for the month of June, is $5,000; contingent expenses for May and June $7,500; living expenses, $5,000; officers in the passes, from the 1st of February, 1899, to the 1st of June, 1899, $4,000.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. FOSTER. What is meant by living expenses? Is it a per diem allowance?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are allowed $60 a month. There was another item my hon. friend asked about, the $9,000 extra taken for printing and stationery. That account stands as follows:—Paid for printing for May and June, 1898, $3,610. That is, we had not estimates enough for the previous year, and the account for May and June of 1898 had to be paid out of this year's account. Printing for this year, $16,054; stationery for nine months, $3,687; law costs, $1,570, largely in connection with the sugar case, part of which, I suppose, will come back to us from the sugar refining company; instruments for gauging, $482; flags, $72; sundries, $1,000. The total is $26,477.87. Then, we have the printing account for the three months of April, May and June, estimated at about $5,000; stationery, $1,000; making a total of $32,477. We could do with less, but there may be some odd things that may be required.

Mr. FOSTER. Make the vote $8,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have no objection; we can get through with $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman give us some information about that Montreal case of Fitzgibbon, Schafetlin & Co.?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In that case the defence has been put in, and the issues have been fixed by the Court of Demurrer, and Thursday next is fixed for discovery in Montreal. The case is being pressed. We have had already several motions on the preliminary issues.

Mr. PRIOR. This additional amount required for maintenance of and repairs to revenue cruisers, $10,000—does that include revenue cruisers all over the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was discussed the other night.

Mr. PRIOR. Has the hon. gentleman given any more consideration to the request made by my colleague and myself for the last couple of years in regard to providing another steamer for British Columbia waters, so that the "Quadra" can be kept more for looking after smugglers? A smaller vessel could do the other work. This matter has been brought before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Customs year after year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This matter has been before us; in fact, there was a vote by the old Government, and it was dropped, and considered again. But the marine preventive service has cost a good deal, and I hesitate to ask for any more. It has been increased; we have been very active on the Atlantic in this matter.

Militia and Defence $274,290

Mr. FOSTER. In reference to this militia item my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), have a number of accounts which they have gone into, and they wish to bring up the question of prices and tenders, and the like of that. This is a subject which will take a considerable amount of time, and I think that it had better be left over.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I would suggest to my hon. friend that the plan agreed upon between the hon. leader of the Opposition and the right hon. leader of the Government be carried out, that on the main Estimates this can be gone into thoroughly or on the large vote of $250,000 for the Yukon contingent.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, they can discuss it on that. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) let us have the items of information in connection with this item of miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, amounting to $10,000?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I promised to give the hon. gentleman some information in regard to this item of $10,000, which is a supplementary vote to the vote of $15,000 for miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses. I have a statement here of the exact expenditures to date, which is as follows:—

	Paid to Date.	Required Supplementarily.
Reconnaissance	$3,668	$1,000
Compensation for injuries	2,398	1,375
Printing and stationery	5,390	6,068
Advertising	1,351	212
Legal expenses	878	1,196
Telegraphing	303	50
Sundry	985	15
	$14,973	$9,916

That makes a total estimated expenditure of $24,889. Now, I pointed out the other day, to the committee that about $5,000 of this money was required to pay expenditures incurred prior to the 30th of June, 1898. I was not exactly correct in that because the exact amount is as follows:—Reconnaissance, $1,000; printing and stationery, $1,800; injuries, &c., $1,575, making a total of $4,455, as the amount which was actually expended prior to or at the 30th of June, 1898. The item of compensation for injuries, as I pointed out on that occasion, is the result of the very large number of battalions, almost the whole of the militia, which have been called out during the last two years. There is a large number of casualties in connection with horses, as any one familiar with these matters will understand.

Mr. FOSTER. Has there been any change in the regulations in reference to these claims?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. None whatever. The extra expenditure for printing and stationery is caused by the printing of 500 copies of the regulations and orders $1,000, 1,200 copies of the militia list, quarterly, instead of semi-annually, $400, additional printing and stationery required by the present General including daily orders, $600, making an addition of $2,000 to the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the idea of printing the list more frequently than previously?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. For the better information of the forces. There are a great many changes going on now and it is considered advisable in the interest of the militia that the publication of the militia list should take place quarterly instead of semi-annually.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Are the regulations distributed gratuitously or are they sold?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sorry to say that the sale is very small. We had the hope of liquidating the expense by advertising. But we find that very few people have taken hold of the advertising. The legal expenses have increased owing to the expropriation of the Rockliffe Range. The expenses in connection with that amount to something like $1,200. Our legal expenses ordinarily are small. So that the $1,200, the $4,500 of the previous year, and the $2,000 for extra printing will pretty nearly cover the increase of $10,000 I am asking.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend tell me in what position the commander of the 8th Hussars, New Brunswick, is?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think my hon. friend will not press that question, but will allow me to discuss the matter with him privately, when he and I will be quite satisfied with the condition which I shall be able to inform him that the matter is in.

Mr. FOSTER. With that presentment of the case I will withdraw my question.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns may we know the programme for Tuesday?

The PRIME MINISTER. I suppose we will have to finish these supplementary Estimates.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.35 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 26th June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

COST OF PROHIBITION PLEBISCITE.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What amount has been expended to date on account of the Prohibition plebiscite ?
2. What amount is estimated to be yet due ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. The amount expended to June 23, 1899, on account of the Prohibition plebiscite is $192,541.61. 2. It is estimated that $1,000 will cover the payments yet to be made.

MONTREAL POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. QUINN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Has any person been named to the vacant office of postmaster of Montreal ? If not, why not ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No person has been appointed yet to the vacant office of postmaster at Montreal. As I have already stated, before making the appointment, the Government would order an investigation into the office and would have to go into the report.

I. C. R.—REINSTATEMENT OF EUGENE BLANCHETTE, OF FRASERVILLE.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether Mr. Eugène Blanchette, of Fraserville, in the province of Quebec, was dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial Railway ?
2. Has he been reinstated by the Liberal Government ?
3. Why ?
4. Upon whose recommendation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. Eugène Blanchette was dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial Railway on the 14th of February, 1879. 2. He was re-employed as section foreman on the 8th of March, 1897. 3. To replace a man who left the service. 4. He was recommended by the late Mr. Poullot, M.P.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ANTI-CHINESE AND JAPANESE LEGISLATION.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is the Government aware that fourteen statutes, viz., chapters 39, 44, 46, 78, 79, 80, 81, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88 and 89 passed by the local legislature of British Columbia on the 27th February last and received by the hon. the Secretary of State on the 27th April last, contain a clause prohibiting the employment of Chinese and Japanese in connection with the undertakings referred to in said statutes ?

2. What is the policy of the Government in regard to the disallowance or otherwise of said Acts ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government is aware that a number of statutes of British Columbia passed in the present year, contain clauses prohibiting the employment of Chinese and Japanese. These statutes are now under the consideration of the Department of Justice, but no report has yet been made.

I. C. R.—TENDERS FOR GREEN SAND CASTINGS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Have tenders been called this year for green sand castings for the Intercolonial Railway, eastern division ?
2. If so, whose tender was the lowest, and who got the contract ?
3. What is the price per ton, and what amount of scrap are the contractors taking from the Government, and at what price per ton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Yes, tenders were called for this year for green sand castings for the Intercolonial Railway, eastern division. 2. Wm. P. McNeil & Co.'s tender was the lowest, and they were awarded the contract. 3. The price is $24 per ton of 2,000 pounds, the contractors taking an equal amount of scrap at $16 per ton of 2,000 pounds.

CLAIMS FOR GENERAL SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. What progress has been made by the Medals Claims Commission in deciding who are to receive the Canadian general service medal ?
2. How many claims for medals and clasps have been received up to 23rd of June, 1899, and of these what number have been favourably decided upon ?
3. How is it proposed to distribute the said medals and clasps, and at what date is the distribution thereof likely to take place ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 11,078 applications for medals and clasps have been received. 4,291 have been passed upon by the Medals Claim Board, for approval. Decision in 152 cases has been reserved by the board, pending receipt of additional particulars. All applications, with the exception of 441 received during the last few days, have been investigated, classified and recorded for consideration by the board. 2. Answered by No. 1 above. 3. The question of how and when the distribution shall take place has not yet been decided.

WHARFS AND PIERS CONSTRUCTED IN DIFFERENT PROVINCES.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. How many wharfs and piers have been constructed at public expense in the province of Ontario since 1867, and what amount was expended in the construction, repair and maintenance from 1867 to the present date ?

2. How many in the province of Quebec during the said period, and what was the cost of their construction, maintenance and repairs to date ?

3. How many in each of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and the aggregate amount expended in each of these provinces during that period in the construction, maintenance and repairs of these wharfs ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The question asked by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies), is somewhat comprehensive and it would be difficult to answer it in detail. It would be very much better that it should go into the form of a notice if the hon. gentleman has an opportunity of moving it. For the present I could not furnish him with the answer.

Mr. GILLIES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he will accept notice of motion in the words in which the present question is asked ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid it is not in the power of any hon. member of this House to accept notice of motion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) has no opportunity in the course of business, of moving I will consider his question later, but at the present I really could not give him the information.

FISHING BOUNTIES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

On the Order being called for :

Return showing : 1. All persons who have received fishing bounties in Prince Edward Island since 1st January, 1898, on their sworn application, made on the regular forms of the Department of Fisheries, and the amount paid to each showing whether for vessel, boat or ordinary hand.

2. The names, if any, of those who received bounties other than after making oath in regular form.—(Mr. Macdonald, King's, P.E.I.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Stand.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). It has stood twice already. If the Government could see its way to bring that down at an early day—it is an important return—it might facilitate business.

THE TARIFF—DUTY ON AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, &c.

Mr. DAVIN (West Assiniboia) moved :

That in the opinion of this House, faith has not been kept with the farmers of the west, since duties have not been reduced on agricultural implements and have been increased on the cheaper cottons, and that the quarter per cent preference on goods of English manufacture has, in the case of many staples of which all the people are consumers, been rendered delusive by raising the duty above that levied under the tariff of 1894-95.

He said : I rise, Mr. Speaker, to oppose a motion that must commend itself to every member of this House—that must commend itself certainly to every member of this House whose memory is charged with the events of the last five or six years, and whose political conscience is awake. You, Sir, will remember, that for some years before that 23rd of June which has become a red-letter day in the calendar of the Liberal party ; that the leaders of that party in this House, following in the wake of Conservative members, supported an agitation for tariff reform, and after the great convention in Ottawa in 1893, throughout the country, themselves agitated in favour of tariff reform—going, indeed, further and advocating tariff revolution. And, especially my right hon. friend the Prime Minister ; he, in various parts of the country, in fact throughout the country from Halifax to Vancouver—

Mr. PRIOR. Halifax to Victoria.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the right hon. gentleman speak in Victoria ?

Mr. PRIOR. He did, and it is further than from Halifax to Vancouver.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, from Halifax to Victoria, the right hon. gentleman made his chief claim for support, on his determination if he got into power, to relieve those persons whom he himself contended were greatly oppressed by the tariff which was in existence at that time. Now, the right hon. gentleman used no mistakable language ; in unmistakable phrase he described the tariff of that time as slavery, in the same sense as slavery in the Southern States was slavery. My hon. friend the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), whom I see in the House, was present at the meeting in Winnipeg in September, 1894, when the right hon. gentleman, in eloquent, in strong, in almost exaggerated language, described the condition of the farmers in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, as that of slavery. And, it occurring to the right hon. gentleman that somebody in the audience might smile at that, as an exaggerated figure of speech—smile at it as I see an hon. member from one of the lower provinces smiling at it now—the right hon. gentleman harked back on the statement and said: Slavery; yes, slavery in the same sense as southern slavery was slavery. The right hon. the Prime Minister came west, and a few days afterwards, at Moosomin, accompanied by the present Minister of Agriculture, he also spoke on a platform there. The question of relieving the North-west farmer in regard to the tariff on agricultural implements came up, and in the presence of the right hon. the Premier, the Minister of Agriculture pledged the Liberal leaders, that if they came into power—I am sorry that the right hon. the Prime Minister is about to leave the House, because I was going to make an appeal to him.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will be back immediately.

Mr. McMULLEN: He will read it in "Hansard" afterwards.

Mr. DAVIN. Ah, no; I will have to make a special appeal to him on this occasion. The right hon. gentleman was present at Moosomin when the present Minister of Agriculture spoke as follows:—

As a farmer he was not satisfied with the reduction which had been made in the agricultural implement duty, because the United States Congress had made a standing offer of reciprocity in implements, and it was the duty of the Canadian Government to take advantage of that.

That is: to give reciprocity in agricultural implements.

Last year the farmers of western Canada imported $120,000 worth of American implements, on which they paid $40,000 duty. Referring to the Massey-Harris combine, he claimed that the fact that these people spoke of going to the States to fight the Yankees in their own markets, showed that Canadian manufacturers were able to get along without protection. Canadians were able to hold their own with the Yankees in any walk of life. Massey-Harris got protection; why should not the farmers?

Now, I ask you, what could any farmer around Moosomin, who happened to be present on that interesting occasion, what could he and his friends think as to what the policy of the Liberal Government would be. I may say here, that the public opinion of Ontario, the public opinion of all Canada, is greatly influenced by the opinion of the farmers of the North-west Territories, because the eyes of the farmers, especially of Ontario, are on these territories, for the reason that their brothers and their sons have settled there and they are in constant correspondence. Then, if the farmers in the North-west Territories feel that any wrong is done them by any Government, it hurts that Government all over Canada, because of the reason I have stated. I want to read to the House the resolution which was passed in 1893 at that great Ottawa convention, when the Liberal party formulated its policy, and that resolution, if I remember aright, was moved by my right hon. friend. It will not, I think, occur to the House that I am taking up its time unnecessarily in reading this resolution, when I recall to it, that when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made his Budget speech, in which he gave what was to be considered as the reform tariff of the Liberal leaders, he actually quoted this very resolution as though he wanted to emphasize his belief that the Liberal Government was bound by this resolution.

Mr. MONTAGUE. One of their ten commandments.

Mr. DAVIN. One of the ten commandments, not so brief, but equally binding. It was the first resolution, and it is as follows:—

That the customs tariff of the country should be based, not as it is now, upon the protective principle, but on the requirements of the public service;

That the existing tariff, founded upon an unsound principle, and used, as it has been by the Government, as a corrupting agency wherewith to keep themselves in office, has developed monopolies, trusts and combinations;

It has decreased the value of farm and other landed property;

It has oppressed the masses to the enrichment of a few;

It has checked immigration;

It has caused a great loss of population;

It has impeded commerce;

It has discriminated against Great Britain.

In these and in many other ways it has occasioned great public and private injury, all of which evils must continue to grow in intensity as long as the present tariff system remains in force.

That the highest interests of Canada demand a removal of this obstacle in our country's progress, by the adoption of a sound fiscal policy, which, while not doing justice to any class, will promote domestic and foreign trade, and hasten the return of prosperity to our people.

That to that end, the tariff should be reduced to the needs of honest, economical and efficient government.

That it should be so adjusted so as to make free or to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessities of life, and should be so arranged as to promote freer trade with the whole world, more particularly with Great Britain and the United States.

We believe that the results of the protective system have grievously disappointed thousands of persons who honestly supported it, and that the country, in the light of experience, is now prepared to declare for a sound fiscal policy.

The issue between the two political parties on this question is now clearly defined.

The Government themselves admit the failure of their fiscal policy, and now profess their willingness to make some changes; but they say that such changes must be based only on the principle of protection.

We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound, and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.

This issue we unhesitatingly accept, and upon it we await with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electors of Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the electors of Canada gave their verdict in favour of this policy, thus formally and solemnly, as you, Sir, remember; for you were part of that great conclave—this policy again and again propounded in a most solemn manner by the right hon. Prime Minister, but never implemented by him when power is placed in his hands. These promises make what an old writer calls "reverend history" to-day. It may be that the leader of the House would like to forget the many promises he made when he was courting the electorate of Canada, just as some fickle lover would like to forget the vows he made and poured into the ear of the girl he had left betrayed. But, Sir, it need not be supposed that the poor girl forgets. She remembers, and she might address to the Prime Minister some such lines as these :

Say that the lips once breathless
 May quicken if they would ;
 Say that the soul is deathless,
 Dream that the gods are good ;
 Say March may wed September,
 And time divorce regret ;
 But not that you'll remember,
 And not that I'll forget.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said that I would make a special appeal to the Prime Minister in this matter ; because, Sir, I have reason now to know, not merely as an inference from events, that his—shall I say without offence?—falsification of promises is systematic, but I have actual testimony to which the right hon. gentleman will be sure to pay some attention, because I have in my hand a eulogy of my right hon. friend from one of the most gifted members of this House, the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau). It is a sonnet, in which it is intended to embalm in fourteen immortal lines all the good qualities of the man whom my hon. friend naturally regards as the great statesman of the day, and the first thing for which the hon. member for Temiscouata eulogizes the leader of the Government is this : "Il n'a rien affronté"—he has faced nothing ; he will not come up to the scratch ; he will not come to the fight ; that is really what it means. Why, Sir, that is what we say ; and here a distinguished supporter of my right hon. friend in lines, each of which is intended to glitter on the stretched forefinger of all time forever, tells us that the Prime Minister will not face anything, and he has not faced anything. It is quite true, he afterwards tells us of some other good qualities which I hope we shall see in operation. But it is a remarkable thing that in a sonnet by a gifted member of this House, a close friend of the Premier's, the writer commences by telling us that the Prime Minister has faced nothing up to the present. All I can say is that when next the hon. member for Temiscouata writes a sonnet, say after next session, I hope he will be able to tell us that the Prime Minister has faced something.

Now, Sir, I have proved that the promises that were made to the people of Canada, especially to the people of the North-west have not been fulfilled. But, Sir, what did we see here this session ? We saw a remarkable thing, and it is time the attention of the public and the attention of Parliament should be drawn to it. We saw the Finance Minister come forward and make his financial statement, which showed this House what everybody of any foresight knew all along. I do not know whether my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) is here ; but if he is, he will remember that a few years ago, in the Rideau Club, after some speeches, amongst which was a speech from my right hon. friend, I told him that it was palpable to me that what the Government intended to do was to draw itself right on to the base of the old Conservative Government. And that is exactly what has been done ; because what happened when the Minister of Finance sat down ? My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) got up and made a speech full of vigour, as he always does, full of analysis, as all his speeches are ; but, in concluding his speech, he congratulated the Finance Minister on his position, and accepted it as a perfectly satisfactory position—accepted his standing on the old Conservative base. And after the hon. gentleman had sat down, a distinguished member on the Government side replied to my hon. friend ; and then we had a speech from the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), who on two occasions in the course of that speech, endorsed the position of the Minister of Finance—welcomed it. So that the hobnobbing, if I may say it, between the Minister of Finance and the ex-Minister of Finance, and—I will not go so far as to say—the osculations of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. leader of the Opposition—but anyway, the fact of these four gentlemen mutually greeting each other, led one to cry out, "Righteousness and peace have met together, love and joy have kissed each other." At any rate, what has happened has emphasized that now the Government is standing on the old Conservative lines, not only with regard to the tariff, but with regard to other leading questions.

But my hon. friend need not suppose for one moment that the farmers of the North-west Territories and Manitoba will accept the position that this tariff is satisfactory to them. It is, on the contrary, extremely unsatisfactory to them. They feel, not only that it is unjust to them, but that promises have not been kept. They feel that they are the victims of the slavery so eloquently described by the right hon. leader of the House in 1894 ; they feel that they have trusted, and that their trust has been misplaced. Another man would not put it in that euphemistic form, but would say that they had trusted, and had been betrayed.

This motion goes further. It declares that the reciprocal feature of the tariff, on which so much stress has been laid, is illusory. I have in my hand a pamphlet that I noted in this House before ; and, if I refer to it particularly now, it is because it is still being circulated in the North-west Territories and Manitoba. This is a pamphlet containing speeches by Mr. Fielding, Sir Richard Cartwright and the Hon. William Paterson. I do not see my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) here, and I should like very much to know whether his absence from the House is his silent, and, I fear, impotent, protest against the course taken by his colleagues upon this important question. The hon. gentleman bore with a tariff that actually increased the duties on cotton, that did not lower the duties on agricultural implements, that buttressed up, to use his own language, "the robbers great and the robbers small." He bore it all patiently, although we saw the camel shrinking under the load of ignominy that was crushing him to the earth. But what seems to have broken the camel's back is the iron duties. When these duties were submitted, he fled the House, and he fled for one of two reasons, perhaps both—to utter his silent protest, to go into the wilderness, though I cannot compare him with Achilles sulking in his tent, because he has no myrmidons to follow him, and no black ships to take away, and, whatever terrors formerly circled around his flashing helmet, are now things of the past. But I want, in this connection, to read to the House what the hon. gentleman said in 1894 on the iron duties :

Nothing would be more objectionable than an attempt to tie the hands of Parliament for a period of ten years.

Of course, this is the very thing that is being done.

For myself, I utterly refuse to be bound by it, and I say so expressly, for the benefit of these manufacturers, that I for one will utterly refuse to be bound by any such proposition. I do not recognize the authority of this Parliament to tie the hands of our successors by any definite term of years.

Sometimes we see the Opposition papers speaking of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce as the big policeman of Ontario, in regard to expenditure. Well, the big policeman has put on the upper shelf in the lumber room his dark lantern, he has burnt his baton, he is as conveniently blind, with regard to expenditure, as if he had suffered the fate of John Milton, but we thought that there was one spot in the political world where he might stand erect, and that was the iron duties in the tariff. When he spoke in 1894, he thought he was a power, he thought that if the Liberal party came into office, he certainly would be Finance Minister, and so he did not say : "We, the Liberal party," but "I want to tell those manufacturers that they need not depend on me ;" and I fear that one of the reasons why the hon. gentleman was left, not altogether out in the cold, not actually in the street, but in the porch, badly planked, so that from the winds of public opprobrium he is not wholly sheltered—one of the reasons was because, from the very first, it was intended to take the course that had been taken, and finally to stand upon the old Conservative basis.

Now, I will do what some people in the country have more than once taken me to task for doing. I will compliment my right hon. friend who leads the House. I have sometimes got into a scrape for doing this, but I must compliment him on the clever way he took to break the shock to the public mind. I have my own opinion about it from an ethical point of view, but there can be no question as to its effectiveness—allowing first one session to pass, and then another, and then another, allowing four sessions to roll away, and then at last the Minister of Finance took his ground squarely on the Conservative basis. Of course, we know that the public mind is so constituted that it will only resent strongly something it greatly disapproves of—well, about twelve months. Public opinion gets indifferent after about twelve months, but so great was the somersault contemplated by my right hon. friend, that he did not trust himself to merely twelve months, but broke the thing gradually ; and what even then was done? Why, within a few months of the Minister of Finance appearing here as a Tory financier, we had the Postmaster General, with his ursine grace, speaking at a dinner to the Prime Minister of Ontario, and saying : "We have carried out our pledges, we have reformed the tariff, and, if anybody is not satisfied, I tell him that there is a worse tariff than a high tariff, and that is an uncertain tariff. You will have to be content with that, and make the best of it." Well, the Minister of the Interior, our own Manitoba and North-west representative in the Cabinet, took as daring a course, although he was not quite so rough and impolite as the Postmaster General. This is what he said at Perth :

The tariff question in Canada is settled. It is, I venture to say, a dead issue. There will be changes, but as an issue between the parties it is dead. We have already succeeded in solving the difficulty, and our opponents, if in power, would not alter it, because they are satisfied and we are satisfied.

Why, the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) said he was satisfied, and the leader of the Opposition said he was satisfied.

The PRIME MINISTER. You had better sit down, then.

Mr. DAVIN. No, for I represent the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west, who, to a man, resent the way they have been betrayed. They have been betrayed by this Government ; they have been betrayed and humbugged by the Minister of the Interior. I do not want to say anything offensive. I could not possibly say anything offensive in the presence, and certainly still less in the absence, of any one.

And, now, with what we know to have been the history of tariff changes since the 23rd June, 1896, what language would characterize this speech of the Minister of the Interior at Perth? Suppose we were to say it was a timid speech? Suppose we were to say that the Minister of the Interior had a brow of unblushing effrontery, could it be said that we were slandering him? Why, people might think we were very mealy-mouthed indeed. But I want to show something else, he said in regard to this. The Minister of the Interior, when speaking at the Hardy banquet said, that they had settled the tariff question, just as he said at Perth. But I want to read the exact words of the Minister of the Interior, as I find them reported in the "Weekly Globe," of Wednesday, November 16th, 1898—language of the most extraordinary nature, when you consider that the Liberal party had denounced the manufacturers as robbers great and robbers small; that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who was the financial critic when the Liberals were on this side of the House used to describe them as having their hands deep in the pockets of the people; that a gentleman who is now a judge—I do not know whether his elevation to the bench was to salve his disappointment for not being made a Minister of the Crown, or whether it was to silence the indignant thunder that he might pour out behind hon. gentlemen because of their course in regard to the tariff—described the farmers as bled white by the manufacturers. Now, listen to what the representative in the Cabinet of the North-west and Manitoba says on the subject:

We have, therefore, succeeded in bringing about a revision of the tariff which has afforded much-needed relief—

To whom—to the farmer? To the labourer? To the shopkeeper or the tradesman? Let me read it again:

We have, therefore, succeeded in bringing about a revision of the tariff which has afforded much-needed relief to the manufacturers of this country.

Why, Sir, it is almost incredible. If I had not the words in the "Globe" here, if I could not give you the date, if I were not ready to pass it to the hands of any one who wishes to see it, it might well be said to be incredible.

They have succeeded in affording "much needed relief," not to the farmers of the North-west Territories who were suffering from bondage like the slaves in the Southern States, not to the people generally who were being bled white by the manufacturers, but to "the manufacturers of this country." Now, Sir, in this pamphlet I have here a statement given by the Minister of Finance in his financial statement in 1898 in which he sought to show that some advantages had been given to the people. And he states at page 14, that cotton fabrics, printed, dyed or coloured, were brought in under the old tariff of 30 per cent, and then he goes on very fairly to show that they are brought in under the present tariff at 35 per cent. So the Government that were to carry out the resolution I have read, pledging it to do away with a system of tariff that had destroyed the country from every point of view, that Government puts 5 per cent additional on cotton fabrics coming into this country.

Under the preferential tariff, after the 30th June, 1898, this is reduced to 30½ per cent, still five-eighths of one per cent, so far as English goods go above the old tariff, and when the preferential tariff came into full effect from the 1st of July last, the reduction would be to 26½ per cent, or 3½ per cent lower than the old tariff. But the old tariff was a wall around the robbers great and robbers small; it was a bastion and buttress behind which these men fattened and grew to be millionaires. And this wall is lowered by taking off a few bricks, lowered by taking off a coping stone here and a coping stone there; but when the people of the country seek to pass their goods over it thus lowered, they seem to be but pigmies so high does it rise; so nearly equal is it to the old tariff that had been so strongly denounced. In the same way curtains, trimmed or untrimmed, were 30 per cent under the old tariff and 35 per cent under the new, but also reduced so far as concerns goods coming in from England.

Now, I will turn to the speech of the Minister of Customs and take the list that he gives. And the figures are correct, but it was one of the most extraordinary and audacious things in the world to put it before the people with a view to convincing them that some promises had been kept. I take what I have taken before and I take them not because I am able to compare the incidence of taxation in the light of another year's experience and in the light of a full preferential tariff:

	Present Tariff.
	p.c.
Springs and axles	25
Wire nails	30
Cut tacks	25
Wood screws	35
Iron or steel nuts and washers, strap- hinges and bolts	42½

When this was first brought to my attention, I took the Trade and Navigation Returns, up to the 30th of June, 1897, and I saw that the columns placed before the people the rates under the so-called preferential tariff were quite illusory. But I grant that a change took place on the 1st of July, 1897, and on the 1st of July last, and instead of having 12½ per cent, there was 25 per cent. I wanted to see what the result was since then, and I found that the figures, as given me by this return, were not of such a character as would enable me to make a precise comparison.

Mr. McMULLEN. They did not prove what you wanted. That is what the trouble was.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I could not get them. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; I will hand over the figures to my hon. friend, if he wishes, such as they are. The impression left on me by looking over the only figures I could get, namely, the figures supplied by the Trade and Commerce Department—

Mr. McMULLEN. Between the old tariff and the new, did you make an allowance for the deduction of 12½ per cent and 25 per cent?

Mr. DAVIN. No, I did not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Because that would not suit your views.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, it suits my purpose admirably, and I will go back to that. Just take cuffs—35 per cent under the present tariff. The calculation was made that under the reciprocal tariff they would be only 26½ per cent. Is that satisfactory to the hon. gentleman? Will my hon. friend say that 26½ per cent is carrying out free trade?

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the old tariff?

Mr. DAVIN. The old tariff was 36 per cent, as given by the Minister of Customs.

Mr. McMULLEN. Now it is 26 per cent.

Mr. DAVIN. It is 35 per cent. Now, I will run that to the ground. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), surely, with a memory in his brains, unless he has been hypnotized, either by disappointment or by delayed ambition—with the memory in his brains of what he used to say, on this side of the House, of a tariff of 30 per cent, surely he will not contend that 26½ per cent is a free trade or a revenue tariff. If he will, I will be glad to hear him say it, because he will be received from one end to the other of this country with mockery; and if I should have time to go down to North Wellington, he dare not go back to his constituents and contend that a tariff of 26½ per cent is a redemption of the promises that were made.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. BENNETT. He is being gerrymandered.

Mr. DAVIN. Gerrymandered or otherwise, I venture to say there are sufficient independent farmers in North Wellington to hoist him higher than Haman—I speak politically—if he takes the position that he takes up here. I say politically, Mr. Speaker, because there is no man breathing the vital air that the literal realization of that suggestion would shock so much, and to whom it would give such enduring pain as to myself. Now, then, take carpets. My hon. friend is a self-made man, and I honour him for it. But he can recall the time when he emerged from one small house into another, and when the laying down of the carpet was an important thing—a most important thing, that is, in the social progress of aspiring manhood. Now, would he like to know what carpets were under the old tariff? Carpets were 30 per cent; under the new tariff they are 35 per cent, and if they come from England, 26½ per cent. But how many carpets that are used by the farmers and by the tradesmen of Wellington come from England? I venture to say, all the carpets, even in the mansion of my hon. friend, do not come from England. Probably all his come from Turkey. He will find, if he looks at the Trade and Navigation Returns, that the great majority of the moderate-priced carpets come from the United States; therefore, this preferential tariff is altogether illusory. I see the hon. gentleman is quiescent, and I will assume, not that he is satisfied, but that he is silenced.

Now, I am going to take some items in which the people of the North-west are very much interested. Take springs and axles. We get of these from the United States 8,393 cwt., and only 1,964 cwt. from Great Britain; that is to say, according to the last Trade and Navigation Returns, we got of these articles from the United States $23,194 worth, and under the reciprocal tariff, $4,280 from Great Britain. Then, take harrows—under the reciprocal tariff we get none whatever. Then, take cultivators; out of $14,152 worth of cultivators, only $100 worth came in under the reciprocal tariff. What is the good of placing it there, unless in view of an election? When my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was making that speech last year, I thought perhaps an election was imminent, and that there would not be time to inform the farmers how completely illusory his reciprocal columns were, and under those circumstances I could understand him making that speech; but when, so to speak, we can take the Minister and bring him up before the agricultural tribunal, the forum of the agricultural opinion of this country, and when we can show that his reciprocal columns are illusive, why, it was the greatest mistake in the world to send out that pamphlet, which is a clear demonstration of how completely the people have been—well, disappointed. My hon. friend here (Mr. Bennett) says “humbugged”; and he assures me that you have decided that “humbugged” is a parliamentary phrase. Well, I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to see that you dissent from that opinion, because I was going to raise a point of order and to contend myself that nobody could use, in a Chamber like this, the word “humbugged”; and as you know, Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to keep up the tone of debate in this Chamber, I am very glad to find that you do not agree that “humbugged” is parliamentary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. Who says, Carried. Is it one of the timbers in the bottle-necked steamship that is creaking? Well now, Sir, I come to drills: out of $53,806, none came in under the reciprocal tariff. Out of the total amount of drills, the North-west Territories and Manitoba took $45,600. And yet, forsooth, you have the reciprocal tariff held before them here, although, as a fact, not a single dollar's worth comes in under reciprocal tariff. Do hon. gentlemen suppose, for one moment, that the million farmers in Canada, in the North-west and in Manitoba, count for nothing in political dynamics? When the schoolmaster has been abroad, is it to be supposed that those men, devoted to an employment that is more useful to the people of Canada and more useful to any country, where it exists, than any other, will not, when the time comes, make an indignant protest against the way they have been treated by my hon. friends opposite? Of pronged forks, 58,008 dozens, worth $12,419, brought in, 50 came in under the reciprocal tariff. Of hoes, 13,354, worth $2,166, only 232 came in under the reciprocal tariff, costing $85. Out of 1,978 horse rakes, worth $31,578, none came in under the reciprocal tariff. Out of that number of 1,978, the farmers of the North-west Territories and Manitoba, those gentlemen for whom I speak here to-day, took 1,000, costing $15,000. Of the 8,822 ploughs, costing $159,718, how many came in under the reciprocal tariff, under the reciprocal tariff that was to do so much, in regard to which the hon.

Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was so eloquent? The hon. gentleman is always eloquent, but he sang in a difframbic tone of the reciprocal tariff; he was inspired more than usually when he talked about the effect of the reciprocal tariff, and the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), resonant as his eloquence always is, was louder than ever when he talked about what the reciprocal tariff would do. Farmers of Canada, farmers of the North-west Territories, farmers of Manitoba, hear what the reciprocal tariff has done for you in regard to ploughs! Out of 8,822 ploughs, costing $159,718, seven actually came in under the reciprocal tariff, costing $109. It is splendid. Mr. Speaker, I wish that some of those members of the Reform party, whose young days were devoted to the muses, would become vocal again and sing us the song of the reciprocal plough. If we could only get a sonnet on the reciprocal plough, or the reciprocal hoe, or some other reciprocal entity, it would be edifying, at least. Take adzes, cleavers, hatchets, &c., which the farmer is deeply interested in, and I see the perspicuous orb of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) fixed upon me; I want to ask his opinion, because I think he knows all about these things. Of these articles $37,662 worth came in. How many of these actually came in under the reciprocal tariff? Five hundred and sixty-five dollars' worth.

Mr. WOOD. I suppose that, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knew anything about it, he would know that, if there were a 50 per cent preference in favour of England, these articles could not be made in England and brought into this country?

Mr. DAVIN. Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker, from the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood)? I wonder that the party whips do not go and garrote him. If that be true, what are you to think of the honesty of the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. Minister of Finance? I thank thee for that word. There is a Daniel come to judgment.

Mr. WOOD. You know that you are talking nonsense.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, we have axes.

Mr. BENNETT. To grind?

Mr. DAVIN. These are not axes to grind, although they might be in the view of hon. gentlemen opposite. These are axes to be used by the honest farmers of Canada, who have homesteads to clear. The reciprocal tariff is held out: Look what the reciprocal tariff will do for you! It will give you axes, if you will go and get them from England, 34 per cent lower than you did pay for them, although we have put them up a little under the general tariff. The honest Canadian farmer hears this, and having heard my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, in those stentorian and resonant periods that I always liked to hear when he was opposing me in Haldimand, goes before the farmer and says: Look what you are getting out of this reciprocal tariff! See what these farmers who went across the Atlantic to Birmingham to buy their axes got. Here is the result. Out of $36,711 worth of axes, $8 worth came in under the reciprocal tariff. It must have been a glorious sight to see them bringing these axes in. There must have been half a township of farmers groaning under the weight of this $8 worth of axes that they brought in under the reciprocal tariff. I have only touched the fringe of the great achievement of hon. gentlemen opposite. I think I would be able to cross swords with the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau, and fight him, because, I think, after having $8 worth of axes brought in, I will not say that my hon. friend has not faced anything. Eight dollars worth of axes brought in under the reciprocal tariff? I hope the hon. member for Temiscouata will indulge in another sonnet; in fact, I hope that he will write one sonnet on the reciprocal tariff and a sonnet on each item, showing its worth and recording its triumph. Of saws, $81,111 came in, and how much under the reciprocal tariff? $3,613 worth. You remember, Mr. Speaker, in the days when you used to devote your leisure to the study of Shakespeare that Prince Hal and his friends searched the pockets of Falstaff to find bills to any amount for sack and only a twopenny worth of bread. Prince Hal cries out: What an unconscionable amount of sack to twopenny worth of bread. We can reverse this and mers of Canada generally, and so small a say: What an unconscionable amount of goods brought in under a tariff as high as the old, or higher, and paid through the nose for by the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and by the farmers of Canada generally, and so small a quantity under the reciprocal tariff. Take files and rasps. All the farmers need files and rasps. Out of $73,241 worth, only $9,214 came in under the reciprocal tariff, and as to "tools generally," out of $377,724 worth, only $45,548 worth came in under the reciprocal tariff. And then buggies. It is really laughable to see the little flag of reciprocal tariff raised over buggies. The successful farmer or the son of a successful farmer who has money and who wants to buy a swell buggy, may think he will get it cheaper now on account of the reciprocal tariff. Well, that class do not seem to have brought over a great number, because of $27,882 worth of buggies, only $322 worth was brought in under the reciprocal tariff. I suppose that would pay for two buggies—or probably for one buggy imported for some first-class English swell who could not ride in anything that had not springs made at Sheffield, and that had not been finished up at Manchester.

An hon. MEMBER. Or the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, that would be very proper. He is a farmer, Sir, that I love to contemplate, because he is always so exquisite and so beautifully veneered, that I would take him for a Bond Street swell rather than a farmer who is occupied in seeding down the land. Out of $924 worth of cutters, none came in under the reciprocal tariff. As to wagons; all farmers, not merely the genteel farmer, not merely the kid-gloved farmer, but all farmers are interested in wagons, and wagons to the value of $79,084 were imported, and only $30 came in under the reciprocal tariff. That is something for the hon. members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories to meditate upon. I see my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) dreaming on this subject, and I rather think, when I see a sort of expiring gleam over his face, that he may come to my help in this matter, and strike a blow for that agricultural class in Manitoba which he is fain to suppose he is representing. Now, then, we have carriages, and out of $16,112 worth of carriages, how much came in under the reciprocal tariff? None. We imported of "finished parts of buggies," $21,446 worth and none came in under reciprocal tariff. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I promised that when I get through with that, I would turn to cuffs. I could not get my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to go through this book for me; I suppose he has found it very unpleasant to consult the Trade and Navigation Returns from time to time, but I, who have always delighted in the light literature of blue-books, I find no trouble in devoting a little time to them, and so I turn to cuffs, and here is what I learn. Cuffs, cotton, linen, xyolite or celluloid; we imported of these 10,159 pairs, valued at $2,254, and under the reciprocal tariff 7,921 pairs came in, value $1,676, and paying a duty of $513. Under the reciprocal tariff, cuffs to the value of $1,676 worth, the kind of cuffs that are used by the people, paid $513 in duty, or going well beyond 30 per cent. We see there that this reciprocal tariff is completely illusory. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to read this motion in order to show what its bearing is:

That in the opinion of this House, faith has not been kept with the farmers of the west, since duties have not been reduced on agricultural implements and have been increased on the cheaper cottons,—

I have proved that the promise was made by the Liberal party to reduce the duty on agricultural implements and I have proved that that was not done. I have proved that instead of a reduction being made on cotton that the duty on cottons has been increased.

—and that the quarter per cent preference on goods of English manufacture has, in the case of many staples of which all the people are consumers, been rendered delusive by raising the duty above that levied under the tariff of 1894-5.

Mr. Speaker, I will grant you, that had that 25 per cent reduction been made on the old tariff, I think it would have been a boon, but what I assert in the resolution, and what I have shown in my speech is, that when the Government took it into its head to bring in the preferential tariff, for fear they should hurt the manufacturers, before the preferential tariff was brought into play the old duty was raised. I have shown that from the figures of the Minister of Finance himself, and I have shown it from the figures of the Minister of Customs. The third proposition I lay down in the resolution, I have proved as thoroughly as a mathematician might prove a proposition in Euclid. I have demonstrated what I undertook to demonstrate, and, therefore, I say here, that no honest man in this House can refuse to vote for this motion which I now move, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (King's, P.E.I.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has made a direct appeal to me, it is only fair that I should give him an answer, and in a very few words I think I shall be able to show him that he himself has given me the very best reply I could make to such a motion as this. This motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) comes very much like mustard after dinner; the dinner is over now, the guests have left the table, and there is no use for the condiments of my hon. friend (Mr. Davin). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) had been in earnest about this motion, it seems to me (as it must seem to everybody else) that the proper time for him to have moved such a resolution was when we had the Budget debate before us, and when the Minister of Finance stated, that in the opinion of the Government, though we had not done yet everything we intended to do with the reform of the tariff, still it was of paramount importance that there should be something like stability in the tariff, and that for this year, at all events, the Government would do nothing more.

If my memory serves me rightly—and I think it serves me perfectly well in this instance—and if it were not out of order to refer to a past debate, I think I remember some words uttered by my hon. friend, in which he rather took the view that we had acted wisely in not reforming the tariff this year—that, in fact, we were protectionists, as he was; and I think he paid us a compliment on that score. I do not know that I appreciated the compliment, though, if he repents it now, I shall not find fault with him. At any rate, if he did not do so, some of those associated with him stated that, in regard to the tariff, we had borrowed their clothes, and become protectionists, and, therefore, there was no necessity for having a further reform in the tariff.

My hon. friend, because this is a question of political economy, discussed it with political quotations. He has found a rival poet in this House. Now, the poet speaks of things nearest to his heart. I have a young friend in this House who is attached to me, not only politically, but personally, and who, in a moment of poetic fancy, such as my hon. friend has experienced, has dedicated a poem to myself. As I say, every one who indulges in poetic effusions, speaks of things nearest to his heart, and I remember a poem written by an older poet than the hon. member for Temiscouata, and dedicated to his night-shirt—which, of course, was the thing nearest to the poet's heart. And, as my hon. friend, in a moment of poetic fancy, dedicated one of his poems to his night-shirt, perhaps that is the reason he complains in his motion that cottons are not cheap enough. That is the best answer I can give to my hon. friend on that subject. But my hon. friend also gave his version of the poem of my hon. friend from Temiscouata. Now, I do not dispute the scholarship of my hon. friend. He gave us to-day an English quotation, and I have heard from him quotations not only in English and French, but in Greek, Latin and German. My hon. friend undertook to translate the poem of my hon. friend from Temiscouata. Perhaps, Sir, I may, without any pedantry, claim to understand the French language at least as well as he does, and I may tell him that the word "affronter," which he finds in the poem of the hon. member for Temiscouata, has more than one meaning.

Mr. DAVIN. But not as here.

The PRIME MINISTER. The word "affronter" does not mean simply to face an enemy, but it means "to deceive;" and, when the writer of the poem says, "Il n'a rien affronté," the translation was obvious—"He has been guilty of no deception." Therefore, my hon. friend has the answer in the poem itself, when he says that faith has not been kept with the people of the west; for the hon. member for Temiscouata tells him that he is all wrong—that the leader of the Government has never deceived anybody, or made any false promises. Now, Sir, that is all my answer to my hon. friend on this occasion. There is no need of going into this question to-day; it has been threshed out again and again. If my hon. friend is in earnest, he should have moved his motion at the proper time; and now, that the proper time is past, there is nothing to do but to vote it down.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I was rather amused at the address of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) this afternoon. I have had the privilege of sitting in this House with my hon. friend for a number of years, and I can honestly say that if there is any man in this House who has an unenviable record on questions of trade, of speaking one way and voting another, it is my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia. He has given us many evidences of his capability of being one thing one day and another thing another. I was looking up his record recently in regard to the many votes he has given in this House. I notice that in 1891 he voted against taking the duty off binder twine, and almost immediately afterwards, on April 7, 1892, in the Regina "Leader," his own organ, he published a long and pointed article on the very heavy duty on binder twine to which the farmers of the west were subjected, amounting to some $400,000 more than their binder twine was really worth. I suppose he came to realize that the farmers of the west were not very well pleased with his vote against taking the duty off, and that is why he took a turn in the other direction. Then, the present Government took the duty off binder twine, and my hon. friend does not give them any credit—he does not say a word about that. He simply declares that the duty should be taken off agricultural machinery of every kind. My hon. friend has a record on that subject, too. When hon. gentlemen opposite were induced to reduce the duty on reapers and binders from 35 per cent to 20 per cent, my hon. friend lauded them in his paper and on the floor of Parliament for the manner in which they had acceded to the demands and necessities of the farmers of the North-west, and said they had gone as far as any Government could be expected to go in face of the revenue necessities of the country. Then, when the Minister of Public Works of Manitoba had a seat in this House, he moved to take the duty off binder twine again, and on that occasion my hon. friend did not find it convenient to be in the House. To use a very common or vulgar phrase, he crept under the barn on that occasion also.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the date ?

Mr. McMULLEN. If my hon. friend will turn up "Hansard" on every occasion on which he acted so inconsistently, he will find them by the dozen.

Mr. DAVIN. Give us the "Hansard."

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will turn up "Hansard" of the session of 1893, he will find that a motion was moved by the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) that binding twine be put on the free list; and how did he vote then? In April, 1892, he had, through the Regina "Leader," expressed his sympathies with the farmers of the North-west because they were subjected to the payment of duty on binding twine; and in the session of 1893, when the hon. Postmaster General moved to make it free, the hon. gentleman did vote that time, but he voted against the motion. My hon. friend has given us several quotations from the new and the old tariffs in the endeavour to show that, in many instances, the new tariff was higher than the old. But he never gives any credit for the preferential rate, and I find it a common practice for hon. gentlemen opposite, on the platform, when trying to show that the present duties are equal to or in excess of the old duties, to make no allowance at all for the preferential tariff, and that course appears to be followed by their newspapers, particularly the "Mail and Empire."

Then, my hon. friend says that the Government promised us free trade as it is in England. Surely, being a man of extensive knowledge and experience, he must know that England did not jump into free trade at once, just as a man gets out of one suit of clothes into another. He must know that it took a long period of years before England reached the position in free trade which she enjoys to-day. In 1842 she adopted free trade as a principle; in 1844 she abolished the duties on wool and raw material; in 1845 she abolished the duties on some four hundred articles; in 1853 she abolished the duties on 123 articles; in 1860 she lowered the duties on butter and cheese; in 1861 she lowered the duty on paper; in 1866 she reduced the duty on timber; in 1870 she lowered the duty on sugar, and in 1873 she abolished it; and in 1880 she abolished the duty on malt. So that, from the time she first adopted free trade as a principle, in 1842, down to the time when she reached the condition she now enjoys, thirty-eight years elapsed during all of which she was continually making reductions. I contend that Canada has made as great progress in the direction of free trade from 1896 to the present as England did during the first two or three years of her tariff. Surely hon. gentlemen did not expect Canada would have jumped into free trade all at once. No doubt, we would like to see her position financially such as that we could adopt free trade. But she is not in that position to-day, and hon. gentlemen opposite are largely responsible. Were our financial condition to-day such that we could go the length England has gone, we would be very glad indeed.

My hon. friend has taunted the Government with not having implemented its promises as regards taking off the duties on agricultural implements. But he must admit that very considerable reductions have been made. He must admit that the duty has been taken off barbed wire. Also that very considerable and desirable reductions have been made on agricultural implements, such as hoes, spades, shovels, &c. The duty has also been taken off wind-mills, to which, surely, my hon. friend will not object. Our hon. friends opposite have produced one live specimen of a wind-mill, and I trust they will not produce any more. My hon. friend does not appear disposed to give the Government credit at all for anything, but asserts that they have broken all their promises. I contend that, on the contrary, they have gone a very creditable way in implementing those promises by making many reductions, which no doubt will be followed by more. I am quite sure that the Government will make further reductions just as soon as the financial position of the country will enable them to do so. They have cut down expenditure.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, they have, and I hope they will go on in that direction. I know very well that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) does not feel comfortable over there, but would much prefer to be supporting the Government. No doubt, he looks longingly back to those happy days when he feasted at the public crib. We all well remember that when my hon. friend had not a great deal to do, the late Government sent him away to British Columbia as secretary to the commission appointed to inquire into the propriety of allowing Chinese to come into Canada. He was sent out as secretary, along with the late lamented Mr. Chapleau, who, I think, was commissioner. I do not know what happened the hon. gentleman. Whether it was due to the salubrious, bracing air of the mountains, or the sleepiness produced by the heavier air of the Pacific coast, but he certainly became absolutely oblivious when he got there, so that he was not capable of telling a Chinaman from an African or a Hottentot, and some one else had to take his place. He drew, however, something over $3,000 for his services. Of course, we can understand his anxiety to have a repetition of that experience.

An hon. MEMBER. What was the matter with him?

Mr. McMULLEN. I could not say, and the report does not state what was the matter, but certainly something must have happened. No doubt, the hon. gentleman would like to go back on another Chinese commission, or something of that kind. He knows perfectly well that when he was supporting the Government he received very desirable patronage, which no doubt he appreciated, and no doubt many of the votes he gave in this House, some of which were contrary to his expressed opinion, were given out of gratitude for the advantages and privileges which he enjoyed.

Mr. McNEILL. I rise to a point of order. I wish to know whether it is in order for an hon. member to say that another hon. member has given a vote because of advantages he has received from the Government.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My personal opinion would be that it would not be in order to impute any motive to any hon. member, and I think it would be just as well not to do so in the future.

Mr. McNEILL. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. gentleman ought not to withdraw a statement of that kind, which no doubt he made hastily, without due consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not impute any motive to my hon. friend at all, I was only reciting certain facts in history. I was only telling the House what his experiences in the past were.

Mr. WALLACE. In further reference to the point of order, let me say that the hon. member for North Wellington did impute motives. He said—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps the hon. member for North Wellington was not well understood, but he has just told us that he did not impute any motives, and you must accept his statement.

Mr. WALLACE. He made a statement—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE—that the hon. member for West Assiniboia gave votes in opposition to his speeches.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. So long as the hon. member says that by his statement he does not wish to impute motives, as I understand, he is within the rules. Perhaps we have not understood him perfectly well, and we must accept the statement he is making.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. McNEILL. I am sure Mr. Speaker will hear what I have to say. I only want to have this point clearly understood. If I say that what an hon. member in this House states is untrue, I understand that I am not out of order, even though I do not mean to say: You are a liar.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think there is any point of order in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) says. If I understand well the situation it is this: The hon. member for North Wellington has been charged with imputing motives to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). Now, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) denies that. For my own part, I was inclined to believe that he did impute a motive and should withdraw his expression, but he has declared that he has been misunderstood and did not intend to impute motives. Then we must accept his statement. That is the way I understand the rule.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to understand whether, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. McMULLEN. I have only to say that I—

Mr. McNEILL. For future occasions, I wish to understand the ruling that has been given. The hon. member for North Wellington said—the expressions he made use of was—that no doubt the hon. member for West Assiniboia was influenced in his vote by the fact that he had received certain benefits from the Government of which he was a supporter. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, your ruling is that such a statement as that is in order, if the hon. member who makes it says that he does not intend to impute motives?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule I am applying is, that if we understand an hon. member to impute motives or say something which would be irregular, and if he declares that what we understood him to say was not what he intended to say, we must accept his statement.

Mr. McNEILL. And the hon. member is not to alter his statement?

Mr. McMULLEN. I was pointing out the course the hon. member (Mr. Davin) had taken in this House in discharging his duties to the country—and his services, in some cases, were such as to be appreciated, I presume—and I was going to show also what the Government had done for Manitoba and the North-west. The hon. gentleman has tried to make out that nothing has been done by the present Government, since they came into power three years ago to carry out the pledges they made; to reduce the burdens resting on the people of Manitoba. We all know, and the hon. member (Mr. Davin) himself will not deny, that many improvements were made in the tariff which were of benefit to the people of the North-west.

Mr. DAVIN. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman venture to deny that the present Government took the duty off barbed wire?

Mr. DAVIN. The old Government had brought it down to 12½ per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. But will the hon. gentleman deny that the present Government took the duty off barbed wire?

Mr. DAVIN. But the real good was done by the previous Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman insists that the Government has done nothing to redeem its pledges. I have heard the leader of the Opposition, over and over again, declare that the Government had not fulfilled one pledge they made to the people, and that statement is repeated from time to time, not only in this House, but in the press. And it is repeated notwithstanding that we have pointed out many promises of the Government which have been fulfilled. Of course, the Government cannot fulfil every pledge in a year, or in two years, or in three. But my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) knows, and will, no doubt, admit it, that Manitoba and the North-west Territories were burdened by a very oppressive tariff of railway rates. He himself has complained on behalf of that people, the people have often complained for themselves. This Government, when they made a bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, arranged to secure a reduction of those rates under which the people of Manitoba and the North-west had suffered for so many years. And what was the result? We know that a gentleman in this House stated, after a careful investigation, that the advantages reaped by the people under this reduction would be worth $600,000 a year to them. That was a very desirable reduction and it was a carrying out of the promise made by the First Minister.

Mr. PRIOR. What did they pay for it?

Mr. McMULLEN. The Government gave a certain amount for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. If my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) will take the whole amount given for the construction of that road, he will find that the reduction in what the people will have to pay in goods going in and out will more than cover the whole amount of interest on the sum given. And we not only secured reductions over the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as my hon. friend knows, but we have secured very desirable concessions over the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Mr. PRIOR. Is that any reason why you should give them two millions more than we offered?

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend will admit this—and if he does not, it is true, nevertheless—that when the Government of which he was a member made their bargain for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, there was no stipulation for a reduction of freights and no stipulation that the Crow's Nest Pass road should be utilized not only by the Canadian Pacific Railway, but also by any other company that desired running powers over it on equitable terms. These concessions were secured under the arrangements made by the present Government, concessions which will be of advantage to the people of the North-west for all time. Moreover, my hon. friend from West Assiniboia has given the Government no credit for the reduction on coal oil. The hon. gentleman used to cry loud and long against the duty on that commodity. I do not know that he ever voted against it, because it never suited his party to vote that way. And not only has this Government reduced the duty, but it has increased the facilities given to bring coal oil into Manitoba and the North-west, an advantage which is even greater than the reduction of duty. Coal oil now can be brought in in tank cars, which could not be done before. Every facility is offered to provide the people of Manitoba and the North-west with this commodity at the lowest price. And my hon. friend knows perfectly well that binders are now admitted into Manitoba and the North-west at 20 per cent. And that is a very low tariff after all. How many other commodities of the same kind are admitted at less than 20 per cent? I contend the rate is very low indeed. The people of Manitoba cannot expect that they alone are to be the cherished children of the entire Dominion. I believe the Government and the Dominion are willing to do everything they can for the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Our sympathies are with them in their struggles to make progress and to become prosperous, and we earnestly hope that every facility will be given to them, consistent with the necessary revenue that the country must gather for the purpose of meeting the demands on the Dominion treasury. But as I said before, when the Government came into power they found that they had to provide for meeting an enormous expenditure, we had an enormous debt, and the interest has got to be provided to pay on that debt. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not deny that, they stand up and find fault with the Government when they have made reductions in expenditure, and again when the Government bring in propositions to reduce the expenditure by reducing the number of civil servants, by dismissing men from the Intercolonial Railway where they are not necessary, and to reduce the expenditure in other directions, immediately a unanimous yell is raised on that side of the House that this is being done for political purposes, that these men are being beheaded because they belong to the Conservative party. Now, that is not fair. When this Government proceed to make reforms, hon. gentlemen opposite charge that they are animated by pure political spleen. But I believe the Government have made commendable advances in the direction of implementing the promises that they made, especially if we take into consideration the difficulties that they have had to face, the enormous troubles that they have had to contend with in bringing about a reform of the condition of things after the extravagant manner in which they were handled the last 17 or 18 years. It was no ordinary undertaking that the Government assumed, and I say they have made commendable advances in the direction of carrying out the promises that they made, and they are going on to implement the others just as soon as they possibly can. We promised that we would abolish the gerrymander, and we intend to ask hon. gentlemen opposite to consent to the passage of a Bill that will do away with that infamous Act, an Act the equal of which never disgraced the statute-books of this Dominion. We hope that Act will be abolished, we promised the country that we would do it, and I hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will feel it their duty to lend us their countenance and assistance in doing away with an Act that certainly was never put on the statute-book with a desire to mete out justice and equity to the electors of this Dominion. Now, when my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) gets up and recites all the broken promises that he claims stand at the door of the Government, I earnestly hope he will have manliness enough to confess that a very considerable number of those promises have been already fulfilled, and not to try to make the people believe that nothing has been done at all in the interests of those people of whom he claims to be the sole champion in this House. I confess that I greatly pity the settlers of the North-west if their interests, their progress and their advancement are solely dependent upon the efforts of the hon. gentleman. When he supported the Conservative Government he never appeared to accomplish very much. Sometimes he appeared to stand in very bad favour with the Government that occupied the Treasury benches, but there was one thing that I will give him credit for, and that is that however much he kicked, however much he reared in opposition to what he thought was wrong, when it came to a vote he was nearly always found on the right side, or else he was under the barn. Now that he is relieved from the necessity of following a Government, I hope that when he takes up a resolution of this kind again, and attempts to point out where the Government have been lax in fulfilling their promises, he will give them credit for what they have done. But I am quite sure, notwithstanding his loud tones in condemnation of the Government, that when he gets home and addresses the people of the North-west, and when they realize the advantages they have gained by the legislation that has been passed by this Government and the improved condition of things they now enjoy under this Government, they will accept those advantages as a pledge of the good intentions of the Government concerning them, and what they may hope for in the future, and that they will go on and bestow their confidence and support on a Government that have done so much in so short a time for the people of this whole country.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I do not intend to deal with this question at any length, as it has been threshed out time and again in this House already. But the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) thinks that he must bring this motion up annually. I think that every year he brings up some such motion as this, to-day it is with reference to implements. But I do not think that anybody, especially in the North-west, is inclined to take the hon. member seriously. Nobody does that. As a matter of fact people know that for the last 15 years he has been bringing up these motions for the sole purpose of getting his name into the papers. Why, Sir, just take up the Order paper, and you see what his motions are for. A few weeks ago the grain dealers met at Winnipeg and passed a set of resolutions, a copy of which was sent to every member from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. But we find the member for West Assiniboia, who poses as the farmers' friend, simply put his name to the back of the set of resolutions and handed it in to the Clerk and had it appear on the Order paper as coming from him, to show what he had done for the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west. That explains his whole method of action. Then, again, he introduced a Bill some time ago with reference to pensions for the North-west Mounted Police. He wanted to get a pension for every man of the police force who had served 10 years. Did ever anybody hear of such an extravagant thing? But it served his purpose, because he sent copies of the Bill to every police force post in the North-west and got it stuck on the walls, as I am informed, in order to show the Mounted Police how hard he tried to get a pension for them. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman occupies the same position, he fills the same role in this House that the clown does to a circus, or the end-man to a minstrel troupe. That is about the size of it. This thing has been going on from year to year, but the people of the North-west Territories understand the hon. gentleman. They have come to understand all these things, because he has been shown up time and again in this House, they know his record in the past of moving motions in this House and then voting against them.

Now, he tried to say something about the tariff. I do not intend at this time to go into that subject for the reason, as I said before, that the question has already been pretty well threshed out. He read from the Trade and Navigation Returns and tried to show that a great many articles which would have been lower under the preferential tariff did not come into the country at all, and, therefore, they had no claim to the reduction. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there were half a million dollars worth of any commodity imported and consumed in this country, and that only $10 worth of that commodity was imported from Great Britain, I claim that the people get the advantage of the reduction on that half million dollars worth, because it is the reduced tariff that regulates the whole amount. For the same reason, if the manufacturers and wholesale men of this country understand that goods can be imported into this country for a certain figure, they have got to reduce their prices to meet that figure, or they will not carry the country's trade. People are going to buy where they can buy cheapest, and if they can buy and import goods from Great Britain at 25 per cent less duty than from anywhere else, they are going to buy from Great Britain.

I have here a statement which I wish to place on "Hansard," showing the old tariff rate, the present general tariff rate and the present preferential tariff rate on manufactures of cotton:

That is the whole list of cotton goods, and I venture to believe that no one can honestly say, taking the preferential rate into consideration, that great reductions have not been made in this tariff in the interest of the consumers. I procured this list from the Customs Department, and, I suppose, it is correct. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. member for West Assinibola to the fact that his own leader, in 1897, in this House, did not take the same view of the tariff that the hon. member now takes because he appeared to be very much put out about it. He was afraid that all the industries of the country were going to ruin. I have the statement here, and I would like to read to the hon. member, for his benefit, what his leader said. I suppose that he recognizes the hon. member for Cape Breton (Sir Charles Tupper) as his leader, although, from his record in the North-west Territories, when he was holding meetings up there, one might be suspicious of the fact, because, when an hon. gentleman who is as closely connected as the hon. member for West Assinibola is with a political party, holds scores of meetings without mentioning the name of his leader, it makes an outsider consider that there is something suspicious, that there is a nigger in the fence. Still, in the meantime, the hon. member for Cape Breton is recognized as his leader, and this is what the hon. gentleman said in 1897:

The result is that this tariff goes into operation, and the hon. gentleman knows that the industries of this country are already paralyzed in consequence, while hon. members gloat, vindictively gloat, over the destruction of Canadian industries. I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail, of those industries in the Montreal "Gazette," where one manufacturer after another declared that those industries were ruined, that their mills must close, and that they saw staring them in the face a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House was in charge of the fiscal policy of this country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted upon Canada.

Sir Charles's notion was that these results were to flow from the working of the preferential tariff. He proceeded:

I feel that, so far from rejoicing at it from a party stand-point, I deplore from the bottom of my heart the ruin that is going to be inflicted upon the best interests of Canada, and upon its great industries. Still I unhesitatingly say that from a party point of view the hon. gentlemen are doing their own work; they are showing the people of this country that no reliance can be placed upon the most solemn declarations that they make, either in the House or out of it; they are showing the people of this country that, having obtained power, which was all they wished for, they are now prepared to abuse that power at the cost of the sacrifice of the industries of Canada.

That is what the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) said when this tariff was introduced, and now the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) tries to make the people believe that nothing has been done for the farmers of this country. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has pointed to the fact that binder twine and barbed wire have been placed on the free list; and the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) interjected: What good has that done? I am sure the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) will not agree with him that no good has been accomplished by that, because the hon. member (Mr. Davin) has always announced himself in favour of putting binder twine on the free list. He was in favour of it, according to his speeches in this House, even though, when it came to a vote, he was found opposing it. Now, with reference to the good effect on the farmers of the country which this preferential tariff has, I will read to the House a statement made by Messrs. Stobart Sons & Co., of Winnipeg, large wholesale dry goods dealers, who are good, strong Conservatives and political friends of the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin). They take several small bills of goods, and they show what duty the people would have to pay under the old tariff, and what they have to pay now under the preferential rate. They had an invoice of goods dated February 2nd, 1897, covering woollen cloths valued at $39, on which the old rate of duty would be $14.25, and under the new tariff the duty would be only $10.24. Still, the hon. member (Mr. Davin) says that nothing has been done by this Government for the farmers. This large firm in Winnipeg had another invoice, dated February 15th, 1897, for blankets valued at $2,020, and under the old tariff the duty would be $832.35, but the same consignment to-day would only have to pay a duty of $530.25 under the preferential rate. Here, in a small consignment of $2,000 worth of blankets, the duty is $300 less under the preferential tariff, and that sum is saved to the farmers. Still, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) says that nothing is done by this Government in the way of reduction of duties. Then, this Winnipeg firm takes the value in duty on a single blanket, and they quote a seven-pound planket as being worth $1.50, which is supplied by the Canadian manufacturer. Under the old rate of duty during the Conservative Government, the duty on that single blanket would be 72½ cents, but under the new tariff of the Liberal Government the amount of duty collected on that one blanket would be only 39½ cents; and any one purchasing that blanket under the new tariff would save 34 cents, as compared with what he would have to pay under the old tariff. Is not that a considerable reduction on an article used by every one. Then again, on March 16th, 1897, an importation was made by this same Winnipeg firm of calicoes and prints, valued at $81, and it would pay duty under the old tariff of $24.30, but under the present tariff the duty was only $21.26. Then again, in an invoice for cotton cloth, on February 17th, 1897, the value of the goods was $28, and under the old tariff the duty would be $9.10, but under the new tariff it is only $7.35. On a small consignment like that there is a large reduction of duty, which the farmer gets the benefit of. That is the statement by Stobart Sons & Co., a reliable firm in the city of Winnipeg, who, as I have said, are political friends of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), because it is well known they are strong supporters of the Conservative party. Anyway, whether they are Liberals or Conservatives, they would not make a statement that was not true, and I have given you their statement. But the hon. member (Mr. Davin) may say that these goods are not coming into the country. Whether they do or not, that lower rate of duty under the new tariff regulates the price, not only of the goods that are brought in from the United States, but of similar goods manufactured in Canada. If the American manufacturers want to trade in this country, they have to sell their goods as cheaply as the Canadian merchants can lay them down from Great Britain. If the Americans do not reduce their prices, they cannot get the trade of Canada, and they know that, and in consequence they have reduced their prices. That is the reason such a large amount of American goods have been imported into Canada in the face of the preferential rate. The Americans have been obliged to reduce their prices, and the consumers are getting the benefit of it from one end of Canada to the other. In the same way the Canadian manufacturers have had to reduce their prices, or, if they did not, the merchants would go to England and get their goods there. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will look at the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find that only about 1,000 yards of imported cotton has been brought into the North-west Territories this year, and that is because we are using home manufactured goods. If our people could import them cheaper than they could buy them at home, it stands to reason they would do so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Would the hon. gentleman again give the figures for a single blanket?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. The selling price of a seven-pound medium gray blanket is $1.50; the market is supplied by the Canadian manufacturer—I have sold numbers of them myself, and I know something about them. Under the old rate of duty on this class of goods the amount collectable on the one blanket would be 72½ cents, but under the new tariff the amount collectable is 39½ cents. That fact alone goes to show that a great deal has been done for the farmers of this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) brings up this motion year after year, but neither I nor anybody else takes him seriously. It is brought up for the purpose of doing duty in his constituency, and I suppose in the other western constituencies as well. Whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) brings this motion to a vote or not, he can get his speech printed, and that speech will be circulated all over, and he will be able to get up on a platform and say to the people of the Territories: Look at what I am doing for you. He will say to the North-west Mounted Police: Look at what I have done for you. Did I not introduce a Bill to get you a pension after ten years' service; have you not read the Bill? Well, they may have read the Bill, but all the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) ever did for them was to introduce it. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) that these tactics will not do any longer, because the people now understand him, and they are going to judge the hon. gentleman by what he accomplishes in Parliament, and not by what he says. The records will show that, when he was here supporting the Conservative Government, he accomplished nothing, and he has accomplished nothing since. I believe, moreover, that he is a detriment to the people of the Territories, on account of the way he brings these matters up, because, if he did not act in the peculiar way he does, far more would be accomplished for the people up there.

Even if I were not satisfied with the tariff as a whole, I would be prepared to support this Government for all the other legislation they have introduced, and I think the hon. member for West Assiniboia should take that into consideration; for the tariff is not the only issue in this great country of ours. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), mentioned the fact that the late Government was prepared to enter into some agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and said they were going to get the work done cheaper than the present Government. How were they going to do that? They were going to give away $5,000 a mile of the people's money without getting one cent in return. They were going to tie up the people of the North-west; they were going to hand over to the Canadian Pacific Railway another pass in the Rocky Mountains, and allow them to stand over it with a club and prevent any one else from using it. This Government did give more; they gave $11,000 a mile, but they got in return more than five times what would pay the interest on all that was given. They got reductions on freight rates on all commodities going into the North-west, and on all grain going out. That means a saving of $800,000 every year to the people of Manitoba and the North-west, whereas the whole interest on what was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will not amount to over $100,000 a year. Besides, no monopoly is granted, for we have running powers over that line, and over all branches that may be built from it for all time to come. That shows that it was a good bargain; and if the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) thinks the matter over, he will not again make such a statement as he has made to-day. Now, I do not propose to take up any more time, because, no doubt, the hon. member for West Assiniboia will have a few more poetical quotations to give us. There is one, however, which I would advise him to study; it is from Burns:

Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel as ithers see us;
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,
And foolish notion.

If the hon. gentleman could see himself as the people of the west see him, he would make fewer speeches, and parade himself less before the House than he has been in the habit of doing during the last ten years.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I have a few words to say in regard to my right hon. friend's construction of the French language, as he might not be here when this question comes up again. I do not at all question—it would be absurd for me to do so—the right hon. gentleman's standing as a scholar and a man of culture; but I think he will agree with me that though a man who acquires a language cannot hope to speak that language as idiomatically, or to understand its delicate "nuances" of phraseology as well as a man to the manor born, yet in regard to the grammar of that language, the man who acquires it, especially if he has been fortunate enough to have had some training in linguistic studies, need not veil his opinion on a question of grammar before any man, no matter how eminent or eloquent he may be in that language or any other.

The PRIME MINISTER. You must give way to the dictionary, though.

Mr. DAVIN. I will give way to the dictionary; but now I will appeal to my hon. friend. I say that he cannot translate that line into English as he did; it cannot be done correctly. I quite understand that in certain connections the past participle of the verb "affronter" means "deceived," but the right hon. gentleman cannot make the word mean it without placing the man who has written the sonnet, and who, I am told, is a master of expression, in an entirely false position. Let me read it, and there is not a man here, whether he knows French or not, who will not easily understand whether I am right or not: "Il n'a rien affronté." If that is intended to mean what the Prime Minister says it does, that the Prime Minister has deceived nobody, then it does not say it. If the writer of the sonnet meant to use the words in the sense of "deceive," the translation would be: "He has deceived nothing." I am quite ready, of course, to acknowledge that it may seem like a piece of temerity on my part to question the accuracy of my right hon. friend's translation. But I have Littré and other dictionaries here, and I say it is not grammatical if it means what my right hon. friend says it was intended to mean. I am quite ready to submit the question to any competent arbiter, and to submit to any fine that may be necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the course that has been taken by the right hon. gentleman and by other hon. gentlemen on that side of the House proves that I have made an unanswerable case against the Government on behalf of the people of the North-west and Manitoba; because the Prime Minister, who is the mouthpiece of the pledges made by this present Government, says in reply two things. He says I should have brought this motion up before the Finance Minister brought on his Budget. What he means by that, if he means anything, is this, that if I had brought it up before the Finance Minister brought on his Budget, he, having it called to his attention how he had made those promises and had failed to perform them, would have spoken to the Finance Minister, and the Finance Minister, when he made his statement, would have given redress. Does the right hon. gentleman forget that last session I brought this motion forward, and brought it forward long before the Budget was brought down? And who on that occasion moved the adjournment of the debate, for the purpose of choking off an expression of opinion by this House? No less a person than the Finance Minister himself. So that that reply on the part of my right hon. friend is entirely out of court. When I brought this question forward on March 30th, 1898, I went more fully into the matter than I have done to-day. I proved to the handle the promises and expectations of the farmers of the North-west; and when the Minister of Finance moved the adjournment and I insisted on a division, Mr. Douglas, Mr. Earle, Mr. Gillett, Mr. LaRivière, Mr. McNeill, Mr. Pope, Mr. Quinn, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Roche, Mr. Sproule, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Wallace, and others voted with me; while Mr. Fielding, the Finance Minister, voted against me. So that that answer of my right hon. friend is not a good one. Then, my right hon. friend passed on to act on the advice of the attorney to the barrister when he had a bad case; not literally, because the right hon. gentleman is too gracious a person to abuse the other side; but he tried to raise side issues, and I must say somewhat frivolous issues.

My hon. friend referred to some productions of mine when I was not so much engrossed in politics as I have been for many years, and when I sometimes fell into the sin of perpetrating verses. I believe that since the cares of state have been on my shoulders, if I may use such a phrase, I have not erred in that way, and, therefore, am not open to the criticism that even if a member of Parliament makes bad verses, he is not bound to publish them. My hon. friend referred to one or two sins of mine of that kind, committed before I became a member of Parliament, and in order to make a case against me, something extraneous to the issue has always to be dragged in, whether my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who will do it politely, has to do it, or whether the dogs from the kennels of the party have to be set on me. My right hon. friend raises, in tones that a rhetorical Orpheus might envy, the side issues, and then, after him we hear the bay and the bark of the following, who do not belong to as high a plane of culture as himself. What is the meaning of that? The meaning is that they have no answer, that there is no defence, and, therefore, they seek to divert the attention of the people from the main question to something that has no bearing at all upon it. When I bring this motion on from year to year, as I intend to do until I succeed, I am met with this sort of retort, or else I am overloaded with abuse for having ventured to bring it forward. I say here now, and I challenge contradiction, in the face of the strident and unfounded utterances to the contrary in my regard that have come from hon. gentlemen of the calibre of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that during the tenure of office of the late Government, by the independent course I took in this House I accomplished more, as "Hansard" and the statute-book will show, for the North-west Territories than was ever accomplished by any private member.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. We had the bark a short time ago, and now we have the bray. That is my reply to the hon. member for North Wellington. With reference to the irrelevant matter which was brought in, I have nothing to say. For instance, he said that I got some advantages from the late Government, Sir, you have only to look to the Auditor General's Report for four or five years before 1895, and you will see that in consequence of the independent course I took in this House, the Conservative Government boycotted a newspaper with which I was supposed to be connected, and gave all the patronage to the Grits, both advertising and printing.

Mr. McMULLEN. You had sold the paper then.

Mr. DAVIN. The paper was sold in 1895, and I say that from 1891 to 1895, the hon. gentleman will find that five-eighths, nay, nineteenth-twentieths of the printing and advertising were given to the Grit paper, and the paper in which I was supposed to have an interest was boycotted. During the time the late Government was in power, and I made that statement when Sir John Thompson was here and he endorsed it, I never, from the time I became a member of Parliament—and I believe I could say before that—uttered a word to any Minister on any subject in which I was personally interested. Therefore, at this time of the day, when it is known throughout the length and breadth of the land, what manner of politician I have been—whether as a member of Parliament or not—to rise here and suggest that I ever did anything from personal motives is uncalled for and simply playing into my hands.

The hon. gentleman referred to the fact that I was secretary to two commissions. I was secretary to the Canadian Pacific Railway commission, and what are the facts about that? I am glad to see my hon. friend the member for Cape Breton (Sir Charles Tupper) here. When I was appointed secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway commission, my first intimation was from the Secretary of State, and I went and saw the hon. gentleman who is now leading the Opposition and I told him I wanted to give up the appointment. Sir John Macdonald was then on his way across the Atlantic, and my hon. leader here said to me: Sir John Macdonald wishes to have you on that commission, and he is now away, so do not take a course that may displease him. I wanted to give the appointment up, because I did not think it would be of any financial advantage to me. It took me away from Toronto and broke up an arrangement I had formed, and destroyed, for the time being, my professional connection. I was assured by my right hon. friend, the late Sir John Macdonald, that the commission would not last beyond the long vacation. I said there were two reasons which disposed me against accepting it. In the first place, I could not take it if it went beyond the long vacation, and, in the second place, I could make more out of my time than that commission would give me. Sir John Macdonald assured me that it would not go beyond the long vacation. Then a great man, who is a professor, and plays an important part in the literature of this country, came out in one of the papers, "The Telegram," I think, and said, speaking of that commission, that Judge Clarke was a partisan very much under the influence of Sir John Macdonald, that Mr. Miall was an employee of the Government, and Mr. Keefer was a creature of the Government, but that so long as Mr. Davin was secretary of the commission, there was a guarantee to the public that nothing crooked would be done; and for that reason, though I desired to leave the commission at the end of the long vacation, and when the late Mr. James Beattie wrote me letter after letter, which I can produce, urging me to come back to my duties in Toronto, I had to remain with the commission as the result of my resignation would have been to give colour to the statements made by the "Globe." A more thorough inquiry, an inquiry more completely without fear or favour, than that, at the head of which was Judge Clarke, never was made.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 152, Letter M of the Senate) respecting the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company (Limited).—(Mr. Morrison.)

MONTREAL ISLAND BELT LINE RAILWAY.

On the Order being called for the House to resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 112) respecting the Montreal Island Belt Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Lemieux.)

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At the request of the Board of Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, I ask that this Bill be allowed to stand until Wednesday night.

Mr. BERGERON. Why?

An hon. MEMBER. Explain.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The members of the Harbour Board are here and they find that some of the provisions of this Bill interfere with the properties under their control, and they wish to have it left over until Wednesday night in order that they may look into it. I think that is a reasonable request and one that might be granted, under the circumstances, without opposition.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have seen two members of the Harbour Board and I know what—I can hardly call them objections—but what the statements are that they make. They pretend that the Belt Line Company should not build any part of this line on the harbour property, unless permission be granted. Of course we have no objection to that, as we have no right to infringe on any of the Crown's properties without the permission of the Crown.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) desire to go on with the Bill?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not object to the Bill standing over.

CIVIL SERVICE—ATTACHMENT OF SALARIES.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 38) respecting the attachment of salaries of public officers and employees of the Government.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

Mr. JOHN H. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I must say I have great sympathy with the object of the Bill. I have a very high opinion of the civil service of Canada. It is as independent and efficient as any that can be found on the face of the globe. As a general rule the members of the civil service pay their debts. But there are some exceptions to the rule; and it is to provide for these exceptions that this Bill is introduced. What power has the tailor or the grocer or the landlady to enforce payment of bills against a civil servant debtor? Of course they can sue and get judgment and issue execution; but the debtor has no lands against which the judgment will attach, there is no goods upon which execution can be levied. Hence the employee of the Government is in a position to laugh at the process of the court. Is that the only remedy? No, there is another. The merchant can make an affidavit that he has a judgment and cannot enforce it. He may cause to be issued a judgment summons calling upon the man to show cause why he should not appear and be examined, touching his means of paying his debts. The defendant pays no attention to the judgment summons, and the order goes as a matter of course, for him to be examined. At the next court he appears, and tells the best story he can—the number of relations he has to support, what he has to pay out of his salary, and so on. The judge makes an order against him probably for a payment of $5 a month. At the end of the first month, the $5 is not paid. What then is to be done? Another summons is taken out calling upon the debtor to show cause why he should not be committed to jail for not paying as ordered. On the strength of this last process, the merchant gets his first instalment. You can easily see that this is very unsatisfactory. It actually costs more to collect the debt than it is worth. So one can easily understand how the merchant, the boarding-house keeper and the tailor are very anxious to have a law enacted to give them greater power in the collection of their debts. They cannot see any valid reason why the civil servant should be placed in a better position than the employee of a railway company. If the employee of a railway company owes a bill, you can garnishee the amount by serving a process on some officer of the company. They naturally wonder and ask why the civil servant should be placed in a better position than the employees of the railway. Is it because he has a poorer salary? That reason does not obtain, because he gets not a poorer but a better salary. His emolument is a generous one. If any man wants to know how generous, let him walk out from Sparks Street in the direction of Stewarston, and look at the beautiful houses erected in that direction. A great proportion of these houses belong to members of the service. And how have they got them? They have saved out of their salaries—honourably saved, enough to provide themselves with these beautiful—and in some cases, magnificent residences. The civil servant, in respect of his salary, gains at both ends. He gets $50 increase yearly, or did until recently, and that as a matter of course, whether efficient or otherwise, he got it by lapse of time. He gains at the other end because of the greater purchasing power of his money. Each year he can buy more groceries and more clothes for $50 than he did the preceding year. Therefore, there is no valid reason why members of the service should not be made amenable to the law to the same extent as persons in the employ of the railway companies. Now, an objection has been raised to this Bill. The moment you give power to garnishee the civil servants' salary, what will be the result? A man sometimes goes into the service who had, perhaps, already been in debt, and he comes here as to a city of refuge. There is no blame to him for that, but the moment you give power to garnishee for the debt, that moment you place him in the hands of his old creditors. They would have power to take away all his salary, and so render it virtually impossible for him to continue in the service. Now, that is not an objection to the principle of the Bill. Besides a provision may be made that this Bill shall not apply to any debts contracted by the civil servant prior to the time when he became a member of the service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Then, another objection is raised, viz., that too much labour and responsibility will be thrown upon the head of the departments. Now, it is no reason why a merchant should not have his rights because it may entail a burden upon the head of a department. More than that, if you look at the matter closely you will see that there is really little extra trouble entailed. The moment the head of the department receives the process from the court attaching the salary of the employee, it is only necessary for the head of the department to write a letter to the clerk of the court whence the summons issued, stating the amount of salary and how much of that salary is accruing due at the end of the month. Then, when the order is made under the seal of the court and that order is lodged with the head of the department, at the end of the month he simply charges up the amount of the judgment against this man's salary, and pays him the balance. That is a simple process. Of course, some complications may arise where the department may require to employ an attorney. For instance, if a man voluntarily attempts to assign his salary before the end of the month, and a notice of that assignment is served upon the department, I can imagine that the department may be obliged to employ some one to safeguard its interests. In all cases provision should be made in this Bill by which the whole costs should fall upon the civil servant and not upon the department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from these considerations I do not see that any valid objections can be urged against this measure. We are not treading upon ground that has not been trodden before. Other provinces have set us the example. In the great province of Ontario we find a law authorizing the salaries of its civil servants to be garnisheed. It is the same in other provinces. We are only asked to follow in the footsteps of precedents well established—laws satisfactorily in operation. There can be no reason why this Bill should not pass, and why the members of the civil service should not be placed exactly upon the same footing as other men in the community, and be compelled to pay their honest debts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman promoting this Bill to the interpretation he puts upon the word "salary." I may be wrong, but I do not understand that any garnishee laws of any of the provinces enable the creditor to garnishee anything but a salary or wage. An attempt is made here to extend that—whether it is desirable or not, is a matter for the committee to consider. I think he ought to be satisfied to embrace the salary simply, and not to include other items such as fees, or allowances, or other moneys than salaries or wages. I do not know what it is intended to cover by that, but you are getting into all kinds of difficulties by enabling fees to be garnisheed. I do not see how it can be done. I do not believe it can be done. I believe it is a great blot in the Bill. I believe it is a mistake, and I think the hon. gentleman will achieve his object, if the committee are with him in the principle of the Bill, by leaving the word "salary" to embrace salary and wages, and leaving out the words "allowances, moneys, emoluments or fees." By introducing those words into it, you encumber the Bill with many difficulties that you will find it almost impossible to overcome. I do not see what good you are going to do. Your object is to attach the salary of civil service employees. That may be a good object or it may be a bad one, it may be capable of achievement or it may not, we will discuss that as the Bill goes on. But I think the hon. gentleman will be well advised if he limits the Bill to what he really desires to achieve, enabling the court to attach the salary or wage of the man, and not emoluments or fees. Something else than salary or wages is not a thing that can be attached, and we should not attempt to do it.

Mr. McMULLEN. When a judge is called upon to decide as to the percentage to deduct from a man's annual income, call it salary or call it allowance, in deducting that amount the judge should be in a position to know the amount of the man's income, and whether it is all salary or whether it is called allowances. Now, I give my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries an example. We know that there are a number of civil servants in the departments drawing extra allowances for supposed extra services; and why should not these men pay a certain percentage of that extra allowance given them annually, as well as a certain percentage of the salary towards paying their honest debts? Take, for instance, any of the Deputy Ministers, take the Clerk of the Supreme Court, take the Clerk of the Exchequer Court, take any civil servant; I say that any money that that official receives as a civil servant, in the discharge of his duty, whether it is called salary or whether it is called allowance, no matter what it is called, the whole sum should be part of the amount he has to pay in the satisfaction of his honest debts, so long as it is a fixed annuity. There may possibly be a case in which a clerk is allowed a certain amount for the performance of some specific duty. For instance, a clerk in the Marine and Fisheries Department might be required to get up a return, and the hon. Minister might be willing to allow him something for it. I do not say that that amount should be included, but where there is a fixed sum received as a regular annual allowance by a civil servant from year to year, which is not called salary, and which is not put down in the civil service report as salary, it should be taken into consideration when you are going to take the power to make him pay his honest debts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) does not grasp the objection I took. You are attempting to put civil servants on the same level as any other citizen who owes a debt to another citizen. You are going further than that, in my opinion. Speaking under correction, my recollection is that, when I was in active practice, you were only allowed to garnishee the debt due and nothing more than the debt. If you were allowed to attach the salary or the wages, that covers everything. I was not very much in favour of this Bill when it was introduced last year; I am not very much in favour of it now. I think the hon. gentleman is getting into deep water. I think that if a small fee is payable to a man it is not a matter that should be garnisheed. Where you give a gratuity to a man it should not be garnisheed. The judges of the land are civil servants, and the hon. gentleman is taking power from this Parliament to attach the salaries of the judges.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER. That is what we want.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. An hon. gentleman says that is what he wants, but there are a great many considerations to be weighed before we grant that this is the right thing to do.

Mr. POWELL. That is what the public want.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not quite sure about that. The judges of the land are appointed to discharge certain important judicial functions.

Mr. FOSTER. Why should not a judge pay his debts?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not saying that he should not pay his debts. I never argued that; I think he should pay his debts, but it does not follow that an allowance given to a man to live upon should be taken from him in order to pay his debts, and he be deprived, perhaps, of what the country has a right to expect from him.

Mr. FOSTER. That debt may be another man's living.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That may be, and if we are satisfied that it is desirable that a judge or any other man occupying a position of that kind, should be subjected to have his salary attached and taken from him, well and good, but I think it is just as well that we should not do anything of the kind. I do not think it is desirable that judges of the land should practically have their salaries attached to pay a debt that any man may claim as due from him.

Mr. FOSTER. In the question of attachment, would not the debt have to be proved first?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, of course the court would have to give judgment. I suggested to the hon. gentleman, when he introduced his Bill last year, that instead of introducing a Bill that would more or less encroach upon the principle that the local legislatures should declare what the practice should be, he should content himself with the simple declaration that the salaries of officers of the Government should be liable to attachment as well as those of others. He might leave it to the different provinces to apply it as they choose. Instead of that, the hon. gentleman comes in to usurp the powers of the local legislature by declaring what machinery shall be adopted to recover a debt. I do not want to give an off-hand opinion; I do not know whether this is constitutional or not, but I have my doubts upon it. It is infringing upon the prerogatives of the local legislatures.

Mr. POWELL. It is a civil procedure.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. I do not know whether we have power to pass such legislation; my own judgment is that it would be well to confine the word "salary" to salary or wage, which covers everything, leaving the emoluments, fees, moneys and allowances to stand by themselves, because, I think, you will give rise to an immense deal of complication by introducing in this Bill that which I do not think is present in any provincial legislation. Can the hon. gentleman produce a provincial Bill showing that fees are attachable?

Mr. THOS. FORTIN (Laval). Mr. Chairman, I happen to know something about this Bill, in favour of which I have expressed myself a good many times. It has always been to me a matter of surprise that a law of this kind was not passed at the very first opportunity. I was astonished that the first Bill presented two or three years ago, was not even discussed in committee, and I was even still more surprised last year when I heard some of the ablest and oldest members of the House, even some hon. members of the Cabinet, opposing a measure of this kind. Of course, I attribute this astonishment of mine to my being a new and inexperienced member, having new and simple ideas! I believed, in my simple notion of things, that public officers, such as judges, postmasters, customs officers, who received large salaries, who by their own position ought to be an object lesson and to give an example such, for instance, as the judges, should come under the general rule of the ordinary common law applicable to every man! In my innocence, I even went further. I believe a man occupying the position of a judge—and I see that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) makes an especial exception in favour of the judges—occupying the position of a judge, who has to administer the law, who can, in many cases, send a man to jail for stealing a loaf of bread for his children or his wife, should be only too proud to be able to tell other people that he was subject to the ordinary laws. If any one—I do not think it is possible—but if any gentleman occupying such a high position should so far forget to pay his legitimate debts, I think the law should be made applicable to him as well as to other people. Last year when the discussion of this Bill in committee was in progress, an hon. member asked whether the Bill was to be applicable to the judges. I happened to be speaking at the time. I did not, of course, answer the question, because it was far away from my mind that anybody should suggest that a judge should neglect to pay his legitimate debts, but I said, and I still believe, that if there could be found in the whole country one judge who will not pay his legitimate debts, we should have a special law applicable to him, if that object could not be secured by a law of this kind. Of course I understand that I am inexperienced in matters of this kind, and that my ideas may be new, but nevertheless I am strongly convinced that this Bill is a good one, and should be passed at once. The principle of the Bill is not attacked; that is a point in favour of the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). Now, what are the objections? Last year the Bill as it came before the House contained only one clause, which was equivalent to a consent on the part of the Dominion Parliament that the sums voted to be paid as salaries to public officers and employees, should be attached in the hands of the Government as any other garnishee. The objection was made last year, that the Bill was incomplete, was too short, was too simple, but this year we are met with the objection that the Bill is too complicated. Last year it was said that the Bill contained no machinery as to how the attachment should be made, and this year we are met with this objection: Why, there are too many provisions; you deal with the procedure, and that belongs to the provinces. My opinion is not in accord with these objections, and I beg to differ from what has been said with reference to the procedure. As to the question of what is seizable or what is not seizable, or what proportion is seizable and what proportion is not seizable, I admit that that is within the jurisdiction of the provinces, because it is comprised within the constitutional Act under the head of "property and civil rights." I have looked carefully into the British North America Act and I cannot find a single provision which would make the subject of attachment itself, come under the authority of this Parliament. But, Mr. Chairman, although the provinces may make laws to declare what proportion of the salary of a public officer or a public servant shall be seizable, it does not follow that it can be attached. And why? For the simple reason that the Dominion Government is not amenable before the courts, because the Crown cannot be sued except with its own consent. In the case of a petition of right, for instance, there is a statute which enables an ordinary subject to bring in a petition of right, and the first thing to be done is to obtain the fiat of the Attorney General; the consent of the Crown. This Bill says in effect: We, the Parliament of Canada, declare that in future the Crown consents to be attached.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) permit me a moment. What seems to me to be inconsistent and peculiar is, that you give the right to the creditor of the civil servant to attach the salary, though it is not proposed, nor does the law now permit, the civil servant to sue for that salary himself. He has to obtain a fiat for a petition; so that you really give his creditor a greater right over that salary than you allow the civil servant under the law as it now stands.

Mr. FORTIN. I do not consider that to be a very weighty objection. We cannot suppose a civil servant remaining as such and being obliged to sue the Government for his salary. That is an hypothesis that I do not think ever will take place. But let us suppose such an emergency, and what would happen?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Suppose he were dismissed he would not hesitate to sue them.

Mr. FORTIN. He might sue then, but he would come under the ordinary rule of having to ask for the consent of the Crown. There are probably ten or fifteen thousand public employees drawing salaries from the Dominion Government all over the country. The Bill is dealing with them, and an exceptional case of one out of ten thousand would not, I think, be a very strong argument against this Bill. As I was about to say: what the Bill gives is the consent of the Crown to be attached. The attachment is obtained; that is to say, it is an order of the court, by which the garnishee as well as the defendant are summoned to appear; the defendant to show cause why his salary should not be attached, and the garnishee to declare what he may owe, or what may be due by him in the future, to the defendant. It is because the attachment is a suit that up to the present time it has been found impossible to attach the salary of a public officer, when such salary is derived from the Dominion Government.

Mr. POWELL. Before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) passes from that, I would like to ask him a question in respect to the matter suggested by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). You are working on the supposition that you are going to make the Crown a party, which is essential, there is no doubt about that; and as the Minister suggested, this Act contains no machinery by which you can make the Crown a party. The local legislature cannot make the Crown a party. The requirements of the law are not fully complied with in this legislation. Even though it passes, I do not think it would operate at all.

Mr. FORTIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) has apparently not read the whole Bill. The machinery is well defined in sections 3, 4, 5 and following.

Mr. POWELL. Let me put an instance. We will say that the Crown disputes the claim that you are attaching, and says that there is no debt due, or says that the employee has been guilty of laches or misconducted himself in his office, so that really the Crown does not feel like paying him anything. How can you proceed in that case?

Mr. FORTIN. There is no law which prevents the Crown from bringing in an attachment.

Mr. POWELL. If my hon. friend is a practising lawyer, and I presume he is—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. POWELL—then he must know he has to make the Crown a party in some way, and there is no provision in this Bill for making the Crown a party.

Mr. FORTIN. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) is a practising lawyer or not, but judging from what he says I doubt very much that he is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FORTIN. It is very clear under sections 2, 3 and 4.

Mr. POWELL. Where is the authority to make the Government a party?

Mr. FORTIN. I will show you. Subsection 3 says:

A copy of the writ or attachment shall be served at the office of the head or deputy-head of the department in which the public officer is employed, or from which he receives his salary.

Mr. POWELL. Does that make the Crown a party?

Mr. FORTIN. Allow me to proceed for a moment. I do not know how in the other provinces one is made a party to a suit, but in the province of Quebec and in most civilized countries, a party is made a party to a suit by being served with a copy of the summons.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That does not apply to the Crown.

Mr. FORTIN. Of course it will apply to the Crown.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. FORTIN. Why?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will tell the hon. gentleman why. Before you could make the Crown a party you would have to have a fiat, and get a petition of right.

Mr. FORTIN. Exactly, if this Bill is not passed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman must see that that Bill does not make the Crown a party, because one of the Crown officers is served. Suppose I were to be served with a summons issued against the hon. gentleman, would that make me a party simply because it was served on me?

Mr. FORTIN. According to our ideas of law and procedure in the province of Quebec, a person might be made a party to a suit against whom nothing was claimed. For instance, I ask for the cancellation of a deed of sale made by my debtor to a third party; I can take my conclusions against the debtor as to the cancellation of the deed, and make the third party merely what we call a "mis en cause"—a party to the suit merely to annul the deed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That does not apply to the Crown in Quebec, any more than in any other province.

Mr. FORTIN. Because no action can be taken against the Crown without the Crown's consent; but, if this Bill passes, it provides for the consent of the Crown.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not expressed.

Mr. FORTIN. I think it is, in section 2. If the Parliament of Canada lays down the rule that the Crown can be attached exactly as a third party will it not be a party to the suit?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not under that clause.

Mr. FORTIN. Under that clause and the following, which provides how the writ is to be served—in the hands of the Minister or the Deputy Minister. Then, another clause provides what shall be the duty of the Minister. Now, suppose this would not make the Crown a party to the suit, what law is there in force which will prevent the Crown intervening in such a suit and contesting it? What harm can result from this? The writ is served in the hands of the Minister or the Deputy Minister. He reports what is due, or that nothing is due. Then, if the suing creditor wants to go further, if he wants to say that that declaration is not in accordance with the facts, then, he will have to apply for a petition of right. It seems to me there can be no question on this point. The object of the Bill is merely to give the consent of the Crown, because, if such consent were not necessary, we would not want the Bill at all. If the members of the civil service were not paid by the Government, their salaries could be attached.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The mere fact of a Bill passing does not necessarily imply that proper provisions are in it.

Mr. FORTIN. There may be difference of opinion as to the merits of the Bill; but, so far as I can judge, the Bill meets all the requirements of the case. I may say that this Bill is framed in a very large degree on a statute passed in the province of Quebec in 1875. Though that Bill has been in existence for twenty-four years, not a single defect has been pointed out in it by the judges.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman, if the practice under that Bill is to make the Crown a party in the process?

Mr. FORTIN. Yes, a party by garnishment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman remember whether there is an express provision in the Bill for that purpose; or is there any general provision in the legislation of Quebec which would be applicable to a Bill of this kind, not requiring the naming of the Crown, where the Crown is interested?

Mr. FORTIN. The statute passed in 1875 only deals with the employees of the province of Quebec. The procedure in ordinary cases, is the ordinary procedure in matters of petition of right. There is a local statute embodied in our Code of Civil Procedure in regard to the local government, and there is a federal statute in regard to the Federal Government. With regard to subsection "c," I think it should stand as it is. There might possibly be struck out the word "fees." The Bill deals with public officers and employees of the Government. There are public officers who are not employees of the Government, who are not in receipt of a salary from the Government. For instance, the judges are not employees of the Government, or civil servants, but they are public officers; and they cannot be said to draw a salary, at least not according to our understanding of the word in French. A judge does not receive a salary; he receives an emolument.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A judge receives a salary, does he not?

Mr. FORTIN. Not according to the meaning of the word in French. He receives an emolument or a "traitement," or an "honoraire d'office"; but he does not earn a salary. There can be, however, no difficulty, because call it what you will, whether a salary, emolument, fee, allowance or wages, the object of the Bill is clear. It only applies to persons receiving an annual or monthly allowance from the Government. It does not apply, for instance, to the member of this House or the Senate, or any person receiving a special fee for any particular service rendered to the Crown, but only to those who receive a monthly allowance, salary or fee, or whatever you choose to call it. I do not think that on this point any serious objection can be taken.

I repeat what I have said. I am still under the impression that this Bill is a good one, and should be passed at once. I have studied it very carefully and compared it with our own statute of the province of Quebec, which has been in force for twenty-four years, and given uniform satisfaction. I have listened to the many objections against this Bill and do not find one good one. The reason advanced last year was that it will embarrass the Government. That is a great mistake. That assumes that there are so many public officers who do not pay their debts, that each department will be flooded with attachments, but to make any such assumption is unjust to the civil service, who, as a rule, pay their legitimate debts. There are exceptions, and this Bill is intended to meet those exceptional cases, but, as a matter of principle, whether there are exceptions or not, does it stand to reason that the best paid men in the whole country are to constitute a privileged class? I do not know really to what particular school I may belong, whether the English or the French school, but I belong to that school which takes as its basis the principle of equality before the law. I want to see everybody equal before the law, to be judge, crier or bailiff. I am scandalized when I enter a court-house and see the judge presiding, personifying justice, and enjoying a salary or emolument of some $5,000 or $6,000 or $7,000 a year, and who, if he chooses to refuse payment of any just claim, cannot be forced to pay it. Just in front of him sits the clerk of the court, who receives $1,000 a year, and a portion of whose salary you can attach. Then, there is the crier, receiving $500 or $600, and if he does not pay you can attach a portion of his salary, but the lord, the almighty lord, personifying the ideal of justice, need only pay if he chooses to do so. I say that is a scandal. I admit that these notions of mine may be very primitive and rude, but I confess that I cannot make up my mind to the conclusion that the law which sanctions this is a good law. I sincerely hope that the members of this committee will put no obstacle in the way of passing this Bill as soon as possible. There may be imperfections in it, no one pretends that it is perfect; but it is a step in the right direction, and I think it will work very well. There will be no such flooding of attachments as is dreaded. The mere knowledge by a civil servant that a portion of his salary may be seized will excite in him, to a certain extent, a certain sense of shame. I would be ashamed, if I were a judge receiving $5,000 or $6,000 a year, to see my salary attached in the hands of the Minister of Justice. The mere existence of such a law will make civil servants more careful. If they go into debt, they will do so knowing that a portion of their salary is liable to seizure, and will take the better care to pay their just and legitimate debts. There may be exceptional cases of misfortune, but the Canadian people are not so exacting as to shut their eyes entirely to exceptional cases. When a man is unable to pay his debts, on account of illness or some other misfortune, his creditors are not usually Shylocks in this country. In fact, they are not sufficiently Shylocks, perhaps, and so far as I am concerned, I intend to support the Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend must be in error in coming to the conclusion that the moneys paid our judges for the work they discharge are not salaries. If he will turn to the statutes which authorize these payments, he will find that the moneys are throughout defined as salaries—the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, the salaries in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, &c., of the several judges, shall be so and so. All through the statutes, whenever any money is made payable to a judge, it is called a salary.

I am not going to argue very much against this Bill, if the sense of the committee is in its favour, but I submit that it is going further than any legislation has gone yet. I understood the proposition to be that we should extend to the public employees of this Dominion the same liabilities that are applied by the provinces to their employees.

But you do not stop there, and I ask why do you use words which may give rise to a great many difficulties? For instance, the travelling fees of a judge are to be attached, when he travels on circuit. I say that is not right.

The hon. gentleman says there is no argument against this Bill. I submit that there are very strong arguments against it. This principle of attaching the debts of workmen was first introduced in England in 1854, but has been several times amended by withdrawing salaries from liability or attachment. For instance, take the case of the merchant seamen; so great was the evil arising from the law which enabled creditors to attach the salaries of merchant-seamen that a statute had to be passed by the British Parliament exempting the wages of seamen from attachment, so that their families might have something to live upon and not have the wages go to the one creditor, who manage to serve through some sharp practitioner, the first garnishee process. Not much time elapsed before the evils in the system were found to be so great that a statute had to be passed to remedy them. In 1870, a statute was passed called "The Wages Attachment Abolition Act," providing that the wages of any servant, labourer or workman should not be liable to attachment; and after an experience of many years with regard to the Merchant Seamen's Act and the Labourers and Workmen's Act, the law was again amended, and daily wages were not allowed to be seized by the first person issuing a garnishee process.

The idea of the hon. gentleman may be a very good one, but it will have to be worked out with very great care. And the hon. gentleman is attempting to substitute a provincial court for the Court of Exchequer. He is attempting to empower the provincial court to serve its process beyond the jurisdiction of the province. I ask: Can that be done? The provincial court can issue a writ within the limits of the province, but can it issue a writ outside the province? Perhaps it can. If we constitute a Dominion court, I can easily understand how this power can be given.

Mr. FORTIN. There is the election court.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a Dominion court; and in a case where this very objection was taken that you could not serve a member of Parliament out of the province, it was held that, inasmuch as this was a Dominion court, this Parliament could give it power to serve a writ outside the province. But nobody suggests that these provincial courts are to be made Dominion courts. You are trying here a new experiment, seeking to give to provincial courts power to serve without the province. That is a matter that will have to be decided. I want to ask this committee, if you are going to make a civil servant of the Government liable to a gar-nishee process the same as every workman, why not simply say in this Bill that his salary or wages shall be liable. Why use too many words?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say just a few words with regard to the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Hon. members will recall that, when I introduced this Bill last session, it was severely criticised, among its critics being the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). And we got so tangled up in the different opinions of the lawyers that the laymen of the House did not know where they were at. I suggested that we should at least go on with the Bill, and, if there was anything wrong about it, it could be decided in the courts. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries states that he suggested that I should confine myself to a general declaration. He would probably be surprised to know that I adopted his suggestion last year, and simply made the declaration, removing the barriers and leaving the provincial laws to be applied in the case of the Dominion civil servant. The hon. Minister was strongly opposed to it—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say a word about that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman did not assist the Bill, and was one of those who opposed it most strongly. And during the year I sought to have a perfect Bill proposed. I thought about it from month to month, and sought to provide the necessary machinery, seeking the assistance of the best legal talent I could secure, and now the hon. gentleman meets me with the question: Why did you not confine yourself to a simple declaration, without any machinery? It is utterly impossible to know how we are to please these hon. gentlemen. Like my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), I came to this House with all the enthusiasm of youth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am quite free to make the frank confession. I supposed that, when I got here, I should find a burning desire on the part of everybody to advance liberal legislation; that such a Bill as this, being just what the people of Canada wanted, would at once win the cordial support of all the representatives of the people. It seemed to me to be the most reasonable, the most liberal, proposition that could be placed before this Parliament or before the people of Canada—that all men being born equal, all men should stand equal under the law. And I thought that if I introduced a Bill obviously based on that principle, everybody's hand would be raised for it. It seemed to be an outrage, a thing unfair to the civil service itself, as well as the general public, that any class should be created an aristocracy in this country, and be allowed to contract debts and then snap their fingers at the law and their creditors. I was immensely pleased with one remark of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), when he pointed out that it would be an injustice to the people to whom the debts were owed, if a Bill like this were not allowed to go. What about the poor people who are giving the credit, who are struggling from day to day to make a living? I am not here to curse the civil servants, I am not here to denounce them in general terms; but I am here to say that they are a portion of the governmental machinery, and, inasmuch as the Government must be, or at least should be, always respectable, and as it is not respectable that any of these men should be indebted all over the country, they should not have more freedom in refusing to pay their debts than other people have. But where I looked for approval, I find myself met with all sorts of objections. After the Bill has been left over for a year, I am told as I was a few moments ago: I believe in the principle of the Bill, but we must give it careful consideration. I would ask hon. members: When are we ever going to accomplish this reform? Am I to be told year after year, as I have been for two years: We quite commend you, Mr. Richardson; your idea is an excellent one; but we must think over it carefully? It reminds me of an incident that occurred during the American War. Mr. Seward, who was a member of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet, had occasion to write a letter to some person who had offended him. He wrote a very vicious letter, and went into Mr. Lincoln's office to read it to him. It was in most denunciatory terms, and, when the reading of it was finished, the President said: "It is a capital letter; just the very thing—capital." Seward answered: "I thought it was about the right thing to say to this man, and I will go now and get it rewritten and sent to him." "But," said Lincoln, "surely you don't intend to send such a letter. It is just the thing to write, but I would not think of sending it." This, it would seem, is just the kind of Bill to introduce; but, if we accept the dictum of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and others, we should never pass it or put it in force. I maintain that this is the kind of liberal measure that should go in force. Last year my hon. friend the Prime Minister, as members here will bear me out in saying, said he believed in the principle, and, if it went over for a year, he promised he would support it this year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know that he said that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I remember that he distinctly made a promise of that kind.

However, I do not want to press that. The Bill should stand on its merits. Let me tell hon. gentlemen what the practice is in the United States. I was talking to-day with a gentleman who is familiar with the way they do things over there, and he tells me, if a letter is sent to the head of a department that a civil servant owes a certain amount of money, that civil servant is sent for, and, if that money is not paid instantaneously, the civil servant is dismissed. And, if the complaint is repeated, he is dismissed. And if two or three people complain to the head of a department that a man in the employ of the Government is not paying his debts, that man is dismissed at once. Why all this pretended sympathy for the civil servants? If they will not pay their debts, let them have their choice and accept instant dismissal. Surely, hon. gentlemen will not pretend that this country cannot get along without civil servants who will not pay their debts. Let those who will not pay be dismissed and better men put in their places, men who will pay. These are the considerations that would lead me to-night to press forward this Bill. If lawyers differ on the questions involved, let the Bill go upon the statute-book, and let the questions be determined by the highest courts, whether the Bill is a proper one or not. On the general proposition there cannot be two opinions, and I urge very strongly that the Bill pass committee, and go to the third reading.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I think the best thing to do with this Bill is to refer it to a special committee composed of legal gentlemen of the House. I am just as strongly in favour of the objects sought to be attained as any gentleman who has spoken in favour of this Bill. I want that distinctly understood. But I do not see any use in putting upon the statute-books of this country an Act that is going to be a detriment rather than a benefit to the people in whose interest it is supposed to be framed. I know nothing about the codes of procedure in force in the province of Quebec, but I have no hesitation in saying that so far as the working out of that Bill is concerned in any of the maritime provinces it is perfectly waste paper, it is utterly impossible to work it out. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) spoke of such an Act being in force in the province of Quebec since the 70's. But in Quebec, or any other province, there is no possibility of a constitutional question arising with respect to the attachment of salaries of the officers of the local government, because the local government is supreme in that matter. But the mere fact that no question has arisen under that law in Quebec is no guarantee that such a question will not arise between the provinces and the Dominion with respect to this legislation, because it is just in respect to points of procesure that the jurisdictions clash. Now, let us look at the general philosophy that underlies the exemption of the salary of a public officer from seizure. There has been an opinion expressed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) that the laws of the country have had in view the constitution of some privileged class. Now, he will pardon me for saying so, but he has not in his reading—and he is not to be blamed for that, because he is not a lawyer—he has not run against any cases that state the principle and reason for the existence of the rule. The rule is laid down as a rule of English law, not for the benefit of the man who gets the salary at all, the rule is not for him, but it is laid down for the benefit of the Crown, and it is part and parcel of the prerogative of the Crown. I am not arguing whether this was a good rule or a bad rule, I expressed my opinion in the beginning that I was decidedly in favour of the ends that were sought to be compassed by this Bill. Now, let us see how the principle works. It applies not only to salaries, but it applies to pensions, and every lawyer in the House from an English-speaking province where the common law of England is in force, will bear me out in stating, for it is elementary law, that a man in receipt of a public salary cannot even by contract under seal assign that salary. The salary is the salary of the Crown, and the law goes so far as to say that even if he is a pensioner he is not allowed to assign his pension, that is the prerogative of the Crown. The salary of a postmaster is given to him by law in order that he shall be above want, and shall be able to devote all his time to the public service, and be as good a servant of the Crown as he possibly can be. Whether that is right or wrong, I am not going to discuss; but this much is certain: I know, and I presume other gentlemen in the House know as well, if not better than myself, hundreds and hundreds of people get fat salaries who do not pay their debts, and the fat salaries are not required for the purposes of fulfilling the duties that the public have placed upon them. Whatever may have been the correctness of the rule at the time it was established the progress of civilization has outgrown the reason of the rule, I am free to admit. Now, I would suggest something in line of what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has suggested, that there should be a simple declaration, together with an enabling power conferred upon the local legislatures to make such procedure as will work out the desired results, and in order that the Bill may be properly drafted to accomplish this, I would suggest that the committee rise, and that a motion be passed—it might be done with the unanimous consent of the House—referring it to a special committee consisting of legal gentlemen, some who are for and others who are against the Bill. Now, I will direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to sub-clause c of section 1, which has escaped his notice. He will find there in the Bill itself a declaration putting upon the word "salary" the meaning that he has placed upon it:

The word "salary" includes salaries, emoluments, fees, moneys, allowances or wages payable to any public officer, or to any person employed by the Government.

His construction of the following section was correct without that, but in order that there shall be no difference of opinion, the draughtsman of the Bill has expressly defined "salary" and it covers all these cases. In respect to the procedure in the English provinces, there is no question about it, under the garnishee processes in those provinces—I do not speak of the province of Quebec, but for the maritime provinces—any party whose interests are going to be affected by the court must be before the court, and you cannot make the Crown a party unless the statute expressly authorizes the Crown to become a party. This summons is served upon whom? It is simply served upon some servant. There is no direction made as to trying out the main issues, or one of the main issues, as between the Crown and its servant, or whether the debt is due or not due, and in this respect the statute is lamentably deficient in procedure. In the English-speaking provinces we find that garnishee processes are very difficult to work out indeed. Draw the law as carefully as you like, make the provisions as distinct as you like, still the difficulty is felt by the judge, and by litigants who invoke that law. I am in favour of the principle of this Bill because I know several parties who have evaded payment of their debts. If this Bill goes to a special committee of legal gentlemen of the House, and if I happen to be one of them, I shall devote my time enthusiastically to working out a Bill that will be applicable to every province, because there is no use passing an Act that may be perfectly applicable to Quebec and absolutely inapplicable to the circumstances of every other province.

Mr. GILLIES. Without saying whether I am or not in favour of the principle of this Bill, I am certainly opposed to the Bill as it stands at present, although the objects sought to be obtained by the promoter of the Bill are laudable objects. I regard the Bill as it now stands as simply and entirely unworkable. So far as I understand the garnisheeing process in the province of Nova Scotia, every judgment creditor, or every person attempting to enforce garnishee proceedings, must have judgment against a debtor whose moneys he attempts to attach that are in the hands of a third party. Take an officer of the Crown, a judgment obtained against him by a judgment creditor is entered up, and then the judgment creditor attempts to attach the moneys that are in the hands of the Crown, how can these proceedings be enforced when there is no way provided by the Bill for making the Crown a party to the proceedings. In other words, A obtains a judgment against B. B has funds in the hands of the Crown, which may be designated as C. A attempts to garnishee the moneys in the hands of the Crown. How does he give notice to the Crown? The Crown cannot be made a party to the proceedings without consent, that is, there must be a fiat granted, and there is no consent here provided for on the part of the Crown. The Bill says that a certain officer of the department, in which the civil servant is employed, shall be given notice. That is not making the Crown a party, in any sense whatever and therefore the Bill, as to that, is entirely abortive. I am opposed to it on grounds of public convenience, such as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries pointed out to-night very cogently, in making it applicable to the judges. Hon. gentlemen behind him attempted to make light of that proposition. In that they were entirely astray. The administration of justice might be seriously interfered with if you make this Bill applicable to judges. A judge, before he came to the bench, may have been indebted like any other person. There may be very serious inconvenience arise from the attempt to collect debts by the process attempted by this Bill which might have been incurred before the judge came to the bench, and it would be seriously interfering with the administration of public justice if a judge's salary could be made the subject of lien in the way of a garnishee. If you can attach his salary you can attach his travelling fees, and if you can put a judge in the position that he cannot go from one circuit to another to hold court, you interfere with the administration of justice. That may be a reductio ad absurdum, but we have to consider all the possibilities.

Mr. BERGERON. Why does he not pay his debts?

Mr. GILLIES. He has not the money. He may have been heavily in debt before he went on the bench at all, and therefore unable to pay his debts all at once. If a judge is appointed to the bench owing $5,000 of a debt which has been legitimately incurred in the ordinary course of business, or perhaps through unlooked for losses, and if, after he is six months on the bench, his creditor garnishees his salary, serious inconvenience will result. If he can take his salary, he can take his travelling fees, and the administration of justice might be seriously imperilled by the inconvenience the judge would be subjected to thereby. For these reasons, I am entirely opposed to the Bill. I think it is thoroughly unworkable, and would be defeating the object aimed at by the hon. gentleman introducing it. It is an attempt to legislate on behalf of the different provinces, which, I think, is entirely beyond our jurisdiction. The question of civil rights and legal procedure is entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces, and is entirely beyond the powers conferred on us by the British North America Act.

Mr. CHAUVIN. I would like to put a question to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin). I am in favour of this Bill, but I would remind the hon. member for Laval that last year the hon. Solicitor General, and the right hon. Prime Minister, said that to render the Bill workable it would be necessary to have the laws of the provinces amended, especially the laws in Quebec, in order to make the salaries of federal employees seizable. I would like to ask the hon. member for Laval if it is not true that two of his friends in the Quebec legislature, Mr. Gouin, in 1897, and Mr. Champagne, the member for Two Mountains, in 1898, submitted a Bill to make provision to render the salaries of federal employees seizable? It is probable that Bill was asked from the legislature at the request of the hon. member for Laval in the interest of the present Bill, because he felt that this Bill would not be practicable in Quebec except there was a provision in the civil code of that province making the salaries of federal employees seizable. I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is not true. The Bill introduced into the legislature is not yet passed, and that is a reason why he should not push through the present Bill because it would not be workable unless there is a provision in the Quebec law making the salaries of federal employees seizable.

Mr. FORTIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman I may say that the discussion that took place last year, to which he has alluded, in which the hon. Solicitor General took part, was on the Bill as first presented by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). There was in it one provision declaring, in general terms, that all moneys due by the Crown would be seizable. The objection was taken upon this point: Whether it belonged to the provinces to declare what was seizable and what was not, and whether we had the jurisdiction here to declare that salaries should be seizable in toto or in part only. It was only upon that point that the discussion took place, and it was generally admitted, and, I am told, by the hon. Minister of Justice, that it belongs to the province to declare what is seizable and what is not, whether a fifth, or a fourth, or half the salary. This Bill does not touch that point at all. This Bill recognizes that power as belonging to the provinces, when it says:

In future all moneys and salaries due or accruing * * shall be liable to be seized by way of attachment in each and every of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada in such proportion as may be determined by the laws in force in such provinces.

Therefore, there can be no question, and I am informed that the hon. Minister of Justice, having carefully examined this Bill, has declared, as I understand, to the hon. member for Lisgar, that there is no constitutional objection to it, as the Bill fully recognizes the jurisdiction of the provinces. The Bill must provide for the machinery. Objection was made as to the procedure. When a subject falls regularly or constitutionally before this Parliament or any class of subjects upon which this Parliament can legislate, it has been held time and again by the Privy Council that all necessary and incidental powers, in order to enforce such laws, although they may be in reference to civil rights or laws of procedure, may be exercised by the Dominion Parliament. That is a general rule which has been decided in many cases. There is another reason here applicable to this particular Bill, and it is this: The Bill, I repeat, is equivalent to a consent on the part of the Crown. Some hon. members object on the ground that the Government cannot be a party, but call it by whatever name you like, there is the necessary machinery in the Bill to put the writ in the hands of the Government and to enable the head of the department to retain the salary and to pay a portion of it, under the direction of the court from which the writ has issued. Whether it is to make the Government a party to the attachment or not, is a mere matter of name and it is no use to discuss the point, because it is of no practical importance whatever. The moment there is a consent that the attachment can go into the hands of the Government, the moment there is the necessary machinery to meet the requirements of that attachment, to send a report that the officer receives so much a month or a year, and then from the moment of the service of the writ of attachment the Deputy Minister will retain the portion which is declared seizable by the laws of the province from which the writ is issued; the moment all that is provided you have the provisions to carry out the law, and it is immaterial whether you say the Government is a party to the suit or not. As regards the procedure in this Bill, there is a particular reason why it falls within the powers that can be exercised by the Dominion Parliament. The Dominion Government has full control and authority over the persons who are employed or paid by it. In passing this law, Parliament says in effect, that a portion of the moneys voted by Parliament, and to be paid by the Government, can be attached. Is it not a legal consequence that Parliament can say under what conditions that portion of the salary can be attached, and how the members of the Cabinet, or the Deputy Ministers are to execute such a law? It may be argued that the Government might consent, but that the Minister or the Deputy Minister could not go from Halifax to Vancouver, or to the Yukon to appear in court to make a declaration as an ordinary garnishee would. That is quite true, and, therefore, the necessary procedure must be provided for by this Bill, and it must be by the consent of the Crown to become a garnishee in such case. It becomes necessary for Parliament to say: Well, then, garnishment will take place in such a way that the public service will not suffer; and this Bill provides exactly how that can be done. The attachment is made by serving a copy of the writ, and then the declaration of the garnishee may be sent by mail.

Mr. BRITTON. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) a question right here. Is it intended that after the writ of attachment is served, the Government has the opportunity of disputing the claim, and, if so, is it to be worked out as a trial of the case against the Government in this particular proceeding? Or, is it intended that on this writ, or whatever you call it, being served, that then, if the Government does not dispute it, the Bill merely provides a way of the Government paying money to the creditor. Or, if the Government disputes it, is the matter to be abandoned?

Mr. FORTIN. In my humble opinion, all the cases that may arise in an ordinary suit by attachment, can arise under this Bill. I do not know of any law which would prevent the Government from disputing the claim. I know of no law which would prevent the Government from saying in answer to the writ of attachment: We owe nothing to such a man.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it optional with the Government as to the payment, or is it mandatory? Does your Bill merely empower the officer to pay it if he chooses or does it compel him?

Mr. FORTIN. It is mandatory as regards all that may be acknowledged to be due to the defendant, or otherwise it would not meet the object of the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. Then your Bill falls altogether.

Mr. FORTIN. Why should it not be mandatory? If an ordinary person instead of the Government be the garnishee, is it not mandatory? The third person is ordered by the writ to appear before the court and to declare what he may owe to the defendant. But here, under the machinery of this Bill, the Minister or the Deputy Minister is not bound to appear in person and to that extent we facilitate the process. We must expect that ordinary justice would be done by the Minister or Deputy Minister, and we merely ask them to send a report by mail. It has been suggested that the procedure should be left to the different provinces. Imagine,

Mr. Chairman, what would be the effect of leaving the execution of an attachment of this kind to the procedure in each of the different provinces. There are seven, or we may say eight provinces in the Dominion, and the procedure might be different in each of them. We could well understand the Minister saying in such a case: Are we compelled to follow the statutes of each province; are we compelled to go to the chief lieu of the court to make a declaration in one province, and to send a letter in another province? The very idea of leaving to each province the manner in which this Bill would be carried out, would be the strongest objection against it, and the only way to make it workable is to provide the machinery here, and to make that machinery as simple as possible. It was strongly urged last year that the Government would be obliged to employ an army of officers all through the Dominion; but the present Bill has met that objection, and under section 9, the Governor in Council is authorized to make by-laws and regulations, and to deduct from the salary of the civil servant a certain amount, not exceeding ten per cent, so that all this expense is avoided.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a point to which I wish to direct the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Fortin). He has attempted an argument as to the legality of this parliamentary attempt to usurp the rights of the local Parliaments to legislate on civil procedure. The hon. gentleman starts out in his argument by assuming that there is a subject matter of legislation assigned to this Parliament, and that he is only incidentally providing the machinery for carrying out some legislation which this Parliament determines should be enacted with regard to that subject matter. But, his whole argument is based upon the assumption that we have the jurisdiction in the first instance. I would like to ask him, under what subject matter in the British North America Act does he place it? What has been assigned to this Parliament to legislate on? I can understand that when the subject of insolvency was submitted to this Parliament, we could enact all the machinery—as incidental to the main matter—necessary to carry out our legislation. As incidental to the main subject of our jurisdiction, we have the right to enact all procedure necessary for carrying it out, but where is the subject matter in the first instance here, which would enable you to annex to it the power to legislate on a matter of procedure. You are deliberately starting out to usurp functions which properly exclusively belong to the local legislatures. Unless you can satisfy yourself that there is a subject matter which you can legislate upon in the first instance, and assign to this Parliament as being within its jurisdiction, you have no right to intrench upon the civil procedure at all. The mere getting through this Parliament of a Bill which is unworkable will not do you any good. The hon. gentleman seems to think that if he only gets his Bill through, whether it is workable or not, whether it produces good or evil, he will accomplish all he wants.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the hon. gentleman excuse me? I called on the Minister of Justice four or five times to get his legal opinion of this Bill, as he is the legal authority of this Government, and I got his opinion that there was no constitutional objection to the Bill at all. What more could I do than that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman got a legal opinion from this House last session as well as this session, that there was no constitutional objection at all to civil servants of this Government being amenable to the law of the province; but he must not get away from the point under discussion. That is not the point we are discussing. The point is whether this Parliament has power to enact legislation regarding the method of carrying that out—whether we have the power to enact the procedure that shall be followed—to say when the writ of attachment shall issue, upon whom it shall be served, and when it shall be served. All these matters are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the province. The hon. gentleman says that he is introducing liberal and radical legislation, and that we all ought to support him. I have pointed out that in England similar legislation was passed in 1854, and that Parliament afterwards repealed it—first as regards seamen, and in the second place as regards all workmen and labourers. That is some evidence that those opposing this Bill are not opposed to legislation which is absolutely good in itself, but are opposed to legislation which has proved to be absolutely bad in Great Britain. There is already a procedure by which every civil servant who owes a debt and will not pay it can be compelled to pay it. What is that procedure? He can be brought before the court—in the province of Ontario, at any rate—and can be examined as to what his salary is and how much he owes; and the judge, after hearing the whole case, declares that he shall pay so much per week or so much per month out of his salary, and if he does not pay it, he can be imprisoned. But that is apart from the point I am discussing. I would like to see this Bill referred to a committee of lawyers. I am unable at present to see how it can be worked out, unless through the Court of Exchequer, because you cannot confer upon a provincial court power to use its process outside of the province that gives it life. The jurisdiction of a provincial court in Prince Edward Island is limited to the bounds of the province. You say, let the writ be issued, and send it up to Ottawa ; but you cannot do that without violating the British North America Act. You are attempting to introduce legislation which as I see it now is absolutely unworkable.

Mr. McNEILL. Did I correctly understand my hon. friend to say that this Bill would enable the travelling allowance of a Judge to be attached ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I called the attention of the promoter to the fact that in the very first section that could be done, and I asked him to strike out all the words, except "salary and wages."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am willing to accept that suggestion. With regard to this Bill being referred to a committee of lawyers, the spectacle which we have witnessed to-night, and the spectacle which we witnessed last year, when the Bill was under discussion, must satisfy every member that the most futile thing on earth would be to refer it to a committee of lawyers. There is one way in which we can settle this question. I have it from the Minister of Justice, the fountain of legal authority in the Government, that the Bill is perfectly constitutional. I have had the same opinion from other legal gentlemen, perhaps not so eminent as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Have you his written opinion ?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not. He had two or three little objections which I could not help regarding as absurd.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will give them to the hon. member, and let him judge of them for himself. The Minister of Justice said he did not think it was a wise Bill, because a lot of people forced goods on civil servants, and they were compelled to buy more than ordinary people. I think that was absurd ; but he said that so far as he was concerned he took no objection to the constitutionality of the Bill. Then the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), an eminent lawyer from the province of Quebec, says the Bill is all right. In view of legal objections now offered, when lawyers differ in this way, what in the name of common sense can laymen do ? The only logical thing is to pass the Bill, and let its constitutionality be tested in the courts. I am not trying merely to get a Bill on the statute-book. This is a liberal and radical measure which I am anxious to see passed. I am not a lawyer, but if we leave the Bill to a committee of lawyers we cannot hope to get an agreement. Let the Bill go upon the statute-book, let it be challenged if necessary, and then we shall have a decision of the courts whether it is constitutional or not. That is a reasonable proposition, and one that will enable the people of Canada to know whether the salaries of civil servants can be attached or not. If we go on with the Bill, I am willing to accept any reasonable amendment. It can be discussed in this committee as well as in a special committee ; and after my recent experience I have very little faith in special committees. The night is young ; let us go on with the discussion of the Bill, and any reasonable amendments that may be offered will be accepted.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the plea which the hon. member makes, that the Bill should be allowed to go on the statute-book, however defective it is, and however incapable it is of doing the work intended, is a very bad plea, and will not be accepted by the House. Such a Bill, if placed on the statute-book, will only lead to costs being incurred, and to difficulty arising between the Government and the civil service, for no good whatever, except to gratify the ambition of the hon. member.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no ambition.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman says he has no ambition, and we can accept his statement. I will say to pass the Bill will do no good except to meet his desire on this particular point. Now, I have always understood that it was the duty of the legal department of the Government to be prepared with a statement as to the legality of a Bill and its completeness to perform the purpose for which it was intended, and the duty of some Minister of the Crown to present that statement to Parliament when the Bill was under discussion. Time and again these Bills, promoted by private members have in my experience been discussed at the council board, and the opinion of the Department of Justice has been given in regard to those Bills, and that opinion has always received the greatest possible consideration in the House. Now, in what position are we to-night ? We are a lot of laymen, a number of us, and we have heard legal opinions on this question on the one side and the other. How are we to decide ? This House naturally looks to the Justice Department of the Government as having some authority and as being responsible to the House and the country. But here we have a private member saying : I consulted the Minister of Justice, whose opinion I accept on one point, but whose opinion on other matters is absurd, and consequently I threw it aside. And here we have a colleague of the Minister of Justice—himself a lawyer equally eminent and of much longer practice—declaring that this Bill, which the Minister of Justice declared constitutional, is unconstitutional.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say it was unconstitutional, because I suggested last session, and I am still of that opinion, that in so far as the Bill declares that the salaries of civil servants shall be liable to garnishment or attachment in the provinces, to that extent it is perfectly constitutional.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But this Bill goes further, and the hon. gentleman has specifically declared that going so far as to interfere with the question of civil rights, which belongs to the provinces by the British North America Act, it is unconstitutional. That is directly opposite to the statement of the hon. member for Lisgar, who says that the Minister of Justice has declared that this Bill is constitutional in its entirety. I do not think this Parliament should be without guidance in a matter of this kind. We have seen in the case of Bill after Bill submitted to this House, the Solicitor General standing up and saying, when questioned as to the legality of a certain provision: I am not expressing my opinion. The Solicitor General represents the Department of Justice, the Minister of Justice is not here nor is the Solicitor General, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is the only lawyer in the Cabinet present, and he declares the Bill unconstitutional. In the absence of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Lisgar ought not to press this measure until we get a definite opinion from the Department of Justice, first, as to whether it is constitutional, and next as to whether the machinery provided will be efficient to carry out the purpose the hon. gentleman has in view. What is the use of our going on discussing this measure, and then finding out that the Minister of Justice or his colleague throws it overboard, or, if we should put it on the statute-book, finding out that it is absolutely unworkable. These proceedings are farcical. This House ought to hold the Government responsible for not being prepared, on measures of this kind, to express their opinion, as the authorized committee of this House, as to the constitutional aspect, before we spend hour after hour discussing them.

Mr. DAVIN. Is not this Bill the one that was brought in last year?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly not.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the difference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is entirely different. This Bill provides machinery for the collection of debts.

Mr. DAVIN. But in principle it is the same?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the promoter of the Bill another question. Did not the Bill last year provide that you could not collect old debts, but only debts accrued from the date of its passage?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, and I have expressed my willingness to consent to an amendment to the same effect.

Mr. McNEILL. Did the Minister of Justice say that the providing of elaborate machinery was constitutional?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I called at the Department of Justice three or four times, and urged them from time to time to consider the Bill, and finally the Minister of Justice told me he had gone over the Bill, and, so far as he was concerned, he could see no constitutional objection to it. He made some little objections, such as I have mentioned, namely, that it might interfere with the administration of the public departments, that servants of the Government occupied such a position that they should not be dragged before the courts to the neglect of their duties. I took no stock in these objections, but was perfectly satisfied with his opinion that he saw nothing unconstitutional in the measure. I am satisfied to accept the suggestion of the Minister of Marine, and beg to move, therefore, that in subsection C of section 1 the words "emolument, fees, moneys, allowances," be struck out.

Mr. DAVIN. On this very point we are in this position. We have just had the statement from the hon. member for Lisgar that the Minister of Justice gave him a certain opinion; we have heard the position taken by the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies), which seems to me to dodge responsibility on the part of the Government, but last year when a Bill, the same in principle, was before the House the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) had no doubt whatever. This is what he said:

We have no right to declare by Act of Parliament that a man's salary shall be liable to attachment. I would not like to see such a declaration passed by this House. With all respect to the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill and those associated with him, it would not be creditable to us to pass through this House the clause which declares as to who should or what should be liable to attachment. We cannot do it. Then, if it is going to be law, it will be necessary to provide some machinery which is not provided by the Bill, whereby the Queen can be sued. You cannot take one single step in order to enforce a remedy against the Crown unless Her Majesty permits herself to be a party to the action. The Queen can only be sued upon a petition of right, a fiat has to be granted by the Government. Some provision to meet such a case will have to be adopted. I say, with all good feelings towards the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill, that it is not in the shape in which it can be passed, even if we thought the principle one that should be adopted.

That is a manly position taken by the Minister of Railways. But to-night we are in this extraordinary position, that in the discussion of a Bill respecting which a Minister of the Crown, himself a lawyer, and who has been Prime Minister of a province, declares his opinion in that unmistakable manner, we have a Treasury bench deserted save for the presence of one Minister, who spoke on the Bill, and he wobbles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not wobble, but expressed myself exceedingly strongly.

Mr. DAVIN. If my hon. friend considers that he spoke exceedingly strongly and definitely, I do not know what his weak moments would be.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think the hon. gentleman could have been in when I spoke.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I was, and I must confess that the spectacle we have to-night is one the most derogatory to Parliament that in my experience—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. I spoke in the earlier part of the sitting of the kennel, and I now hear voices from that unclassical quarter. I do not know where that sound came from, but I may say to one or two hon. gentlemen opposite, just by way of warning, that one or two of them in past sessions made to my knowledge a contract with one or two—shall I call them gentlemen?—to interfere with the independence of this Parliament, and I have treated them with silent mercy, but I give them fair warning that if they are not more careful I will attach an epithet to each one of them that will go down to their graves with them and will make them a laughing-stock in the little rural villages in which they sometimes shine as great members of Parliament.

Mr. McMULLEN. Say that over again.

Mr. DAVIN. I will repeat it, in order that we may see again the beautiful smile that is characteristic of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I repeat that, in my experience as an observer of this Parliament, either as a member or one whose duty forced him to observe it, I have never witnessed a scene so derogatory to its dignity as this—when, with so important a Bill as this before us, we are left, as the hon. member for Haldimand has shown, entirely without guidance. Where, Sir, is the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick)?

Mr. TALBOT. He is going to England to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIN. That, then, is the reason. The Solicitor General should be here to represent the Minister of Justice and help Parliament with questions of this sort. I think he might time his visits to England better. Is he going to Rome this time? I well remember that on one occasion he went to Rome as a delegate to the Vatican, and I heard that he displayed great diplomacy, inasmuch that if he found that the bar was altogether too mundane an employment, he would be capable of graduating to a high dignity as an ecclesiastical delegate. Well, Sir, I would ask this gentleman (Mr. Talbot), who knows all about it because no information has come from the Treasury bench—is the Solicitor General going to Rome this time?

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. TALBOT. He had left you roaming.

An hon. MEMBER. Question.

Mr. DAVIN. That is the question. I asked, where the Solicitor General was, and was told that he was not here, as he was going to England. That meant crossing the Atlantic, and he might go from London to Rome. I ask again the question: Why is it we are without guidance here? For you might as well look for guidance to a weathercock, whirling in a shifting breeze, as to look for it in the shifting speech of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Does any one know where he is? Does any one know whether he thinks this Bill is constitutional or not? Does any one know whether he wants this Bill to pass or not? What did we see a short time ago? We saw the hon. member for Lisgar make a pathetic appeal to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and then from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the gods above, recalling a time when, with the blooming innocence of his ignorance of parliamentary life and trickeries—

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, no; I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIN. I agree that the hon. gentleman did not express himself at all as well as that. But, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman must not expect that, when I speak obliquely, when I use the historical form, I will give his exact language. If I wish to quote him, I will quote him directly, as I sometimes do, from the Winnipeg "Tribune." But I always do it with fear and trembling, lest it should spoil my style. But we did see the hon. gentleman—and, if my descriptions should fall short in any way of doing justice to the tragic elements in the appeal, surely that is not to be wondered at—we did see him appeal to his past, and to the time when he came in here an enthusiastic young reformer, believing that all he had to do was to bring forward a measure like this, and everybody would hold up his hands, that he would get help from the Ministers of the Crown, that when the Minister of Justice told him the Bill was unconstitutional, he would not find himself let and hindered by the Treasury bench. He told us, and he has not withdrawn it, though the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries doubted it, that the Prime Minister told him he would help him this year, or in some future year, with this Bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I said was, that the Prime Minister said he was in favour of the principle of the Bill, but there were some details he wished to look into, and, if I would lay it over for another year, he would endeavour to support it.

Mr. DAVIN. And I must say—and I like to come to the help of my western friend—that is my recollection also. But, here again, where is the Prime Minister now, when this important measure is before the House, an important measure supported by a leading Reformer from the west, and by a distinguished lawyer from Montreal, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin)? Why, Sir, as I say, it is a most derogatory situation we find ourselves in—unguided, the Government afraid to take responsibility in the face of a measure like this and to declare, as the Minister of Railways and Canals did last year, that they could not accept the measure, or else to come forward and say to the hon. member for Lisgar: Accept certain modifications, and the measure will be passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. member (Mr. Davin) need not worry about the spectacle of the Government. If I remember the facts, last year the Government divided on the question, some voting for the measure and some against it. Any member of this House should be at liberty to introduce any legislation here he chooses, regardless of the Government. I support the Government on general principles, but I do not propose to run to the Premier, or to any member of the Government, to ask what legislation I shall or shall not introduce, or how I shall vote on this question or on that. Surely to goodness, this is a measure with regard to which every member has his responsibility. If hon. members do not wish to vote for it, they can vote against it. If an hon. member does not think it constitutional, let him vote against it. The Government affords no spectacle in connection with the matter. I suppose they have been attending to matters which they think infinitely more important. When the question was asked, some time ago, whether they intended to introduce such a Bill, I think the Prime Minister replied that the hon. member for Lisgar had already introduced a Bill. Now, we listened with all attention to the words of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). He seemed to make out quite a case; but, when you come to look at it, what is there in it after all? The Government has not taken any responsibility in the matter. The Minister of Railways and Canals has pressed—

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to lay down the doctrine that the Government has no responsibility in regard to legislation of this sort placed on the Public Bills and Orders?

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I apprehend the matter—I may be entirely wrong, but I give my own view—I do not see that the Government have any more responsibility than other members of Parliament in regard to this matter. The hon. member for West Assinibola is just as much interested that such a Bill as this should become law as is the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Bill stands upon its merits. Why fly off at a tangent and rush into a criticism of the Government, endeavouring to make a point against the Administration? Surely that is not what we are sent here to do. We are sent here, not to seek to put the Government in a hole, but to act upon our own responsibility to our constituents. Let the hon. member for West Assinibola remember that he will not make himself a name in this country by seeking to get a crack at the Government, as it were, to try to hold up the Government to ridicule. Let him remember that the people have their eyes upon him, and that he will be held responsible for the position that he takes on this Bill, and on other legislation. It will not bring kudos to himself to be able to send out speeches showing that he scarified the Government in this or that connection. To my mind that is the greatest curse of politics at the present time, and one that we should get rid of. I appeal to hon. members to give this measure a fair trial. It is a matter immaterial to me to have my name attached to any Bill that goes upon the statute-book. What honour does it bring to me that a Bill of this kind has been promoted by myself? It is because I believe that an aristocracy is being created in this country, the aristocracy of the civil service, and that they are not placed in the same position as other members of society, that I have undertaken to press this measure. It is because of that conviction that I have introduced this Bill year after year. So far as I am concerned, if it does not pass now, I do not propose ever to introduce it again. I want to have it decided to-night upon its merits. If members think it is of no use, let them vote against it; if they think it is all right, let them vote for it. But I do not allow myself to be deceived by being told that if I will just wait another year it will probably be adopted. Let us settle it here to-night upon its merits.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This Bill is neither a Government measure, nor are the Government supporting it or opposing it. Individual members of the Government may support it, and others may oppose it, as they did last year. It is a matter upon which gentlemen on either side of politics are free to vote just as they like.

Mr. BELCOURT. Representing as I do a constituency in which there are probably a greater number of civil servants than in any other constituency in Canada, I desire to say a few words. I wish to discuss this Bill, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) puts it, on its merits. I am glad of the opportunity which is now afforded me of expressing my opinion of the civil service, as I have done on a previous occasion. Having lived here a good many years, and having had frequent and close relations with them, I am in a position to assert confidently that there is no class of the community which more honourably fulfils its obligations than the civil service, speaking generally. If we attend our division court in Ottawa we see a lesser proportion of civil servants attending on judgment summons, or to be examined after judgment, than almost of any other class. With respect to the constitutionality of the Bill, I desire to point out that by section 2 it is provided that in future all moneys due by the Crown are attachable. Now, as a lawyer, I am of opinion that that provision is unconstitutional. The garnishment of the salaries of the civil servants may not be unconstitutional, but the attachment of moneys due by the Crown to any person is, to my mind, unconstitutional.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have changed that.

Mr. BELCOURT. You have changed section c, but that difficulty will still remain, because you have not changed section 2. Supposing a man having an important contract puts in a claim for extras. A garnishment is taken and served upon the head of the department; the matter comes up in court, in the division court or the superior court in any province; in order to decide the question raised by the attachment, the judge will have to decide as to the liability of the Crown in that contract, involving thereby a question which properly belongs to the Exchequer Court alone. That is why I think this provision of section 2 is unconstitutional. I have listened carefully to the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen supporting this Bill, but they have failed to make out a case to show that there was any demand for this Bill; they have not shown any necessity for attaching the salaries of civil servants. The member for Lisgar has told us that this was a liberal and progressive measure. I take issue with him there. I do not think it is either liberal or progressive. Let us remember that the tendency in all countries is not to render attachable the salaries of wage-earners, but, on the contrary, to increase the exemptions. At one time wage-earners' salaries were wholly attachable; to-day, in Ontario, practically, you cannot attach the salary. The law provides that you must leave in the hands of all wage-earners the sum of at least $25, and I say that amounts to practical prohibition as to attachment. As a matter of fact, those who practise in the courts of Ontario know that attachment for salary is a practically unknown quantity; it is practically prohibited by the fact that $25 must be left in the hands of the party whenever seizure is made. I say it is neither a liberal nor a progressive measure, for another reason. The tendency in modern days is not to encourage but to discourage the giving of credit. Every day we find our retail merchants giving less and less credit. If you render salaries attachable you are going to stimulate the habit of giving credit, and the very evil which my hon. friend seeks to prevent, that of giving credit to the civil servants, will not be overcome, but, on the contrary, will be fostered. Some hon. gentlemen have compared the case of the Government with that of railway companies and other large corporations. It seems to me that the two cases are not at all parallel. A railway company is engaged in business for profit, whereas the Government is not in that position at all. The Government is in the position of administering the affairs of the country for the good of all. I submit, therefore, that no case has been made out for the Bill. Surely the merchants of Ottawa must be supposed to be as much interested in this matter as the merchants of any other city, but they have not demanded this Bill, they are not, so far as I know, in favour of this Bill. I think we may safely be guided by the opinion which prevails in this city of Ottawa. Again, there is no necessity for it, because we have in the province of Ontario to-day all the necessary machinery for forcing legal debtors to pay their debts. You may bring them up before a judge and examine them, and if the judge thinks they are in a position to pay, he orders them to pay a certain sum of money, and this they must pay upon pain of imprisonment. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) says that there was no such provision in the province of Quebec. I think, however, there is such a provision, but not to the same degree: there is a provision by which you can bring a judgment debtor before a judge and examine him as to his means of paying. If he has committed any fraud, you may have a remedy even in the province of Quebec. So that in the two large provinces, at least, there are ample means at the disposal of all creditors for securing their debts. If this Bill were passed and were found workable it would not afford the people of Ontario and Quebec any remedy which they have not got to-day. The only procedure which is created by the Bill is the one which speaks of a writ of attachment. In the province of Ontario you can issue a writ only in certain cases. So, not only does this Bill not afford any remedy, but it does not afford any procedure by which that remedy can be carried out in Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. I should like to say a word on the question of the constitutionality of this Bill, if I, as a layman, may venture an opinion upon it. In the first place, I would say that my opinion is in direct contradistinction to the opinion which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) expressed at the last session of Parliament. The argument that has been advanced by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) is incontrovertible, that we have jurisdiction over the wage of the civil servant. We may say that we shall pay the wage of civil servants in any direction we think proper. It is incidental to his employment. We may say that we will pay a portion to his wife, or a portion to his children.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a matter of contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The contract is not binding on the Government in reference to it. You may do it in any manner that you please as was made plain in the Balderson case. But that question does not arise here. It is incidental to the hiring of the civil servant and incidental to the service that the Government, or the legislature, should have full control or power in reference to the payment of the wages of the civil servant. The Government can do it in any form. The legislature can direct what form may be adopted; it may be that the wage may be paid in the form of a judgment. We are not interfering with the jurisdiction of any of the provinces when we say that a certain form shall be provided before we pay the money out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are declaring in this Bill that there should be an attachment and how and where it shall be served.

Mr. HAGGART. The question of attachment is another thing. As to the manner of procedure it is incidental to the manner in which we may pay wages. We may say that a judgment of the court may be obtained before we pay that, and we may prescribe the form in which the creditor shall have to proceed before we pay the money. All these things, to my mind, are simply directory, they are simply optional upon the Government. The Bill does not provide means enough for bringing action or making the Crown a party to action. It will not be mandatory upon the Government, and that is one fault that I have against the Bill that it does not provide means whereby the Crown shall be sued. We provide means whereby the Crown shall be sued. The Crown itself is a consenting party, but a party has to get their consent. You cannot make a garnishee effectual by legislation, such as is proposed here, against the Crown unless the Crown is a consenting party to the proceedings. The Bill does not provide fully for that, but I think the object of the Bill would be accomplished fully if it were made simply optional with the Crown, so that when a party has judgment against a civil servant, upon it being furnished to a Deputy Minister, or an officer of the Crown, he would have power to pay it. There is another objection to the Bill. I think it is not directory enough. When you interfere with the prerogative of the Crown the Act should be framed in the most direct manner possible so that there can be no doubt possible. I think the object would be accomplished if the Bill were passed and simply filed with the deputy heads of the departments and leave it optional with them. I am not speaking of the principle of the Bill. I am of the same opinion as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that these Bills that have been passed in Great Britain have been found unworkable and that the Crown has found it necessary to alter or revoke them altogether. I am not of the opinion that any sufficient cause has been shown for a Bill of this kind, and I think it is not necessary. I think the Bill is objectionable on many grounds, but what I rose to state was simply the constitutional point to which I have referred. I think there is no doubt as to the power of the legislature to deal with the wages of the civil servants and to say in what manner they shall be paid. It is, an incident to our power, and it does not interfere with the procedure of the court at all. This is a public Bill, and one which the Government should have an opinion upon. They should state what their policy is to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that the case in reference to all public Bills?

Mr. HAGGART. Public Bills cannot become law, or do not always become law, unless they have the support of the advisers of the Crown. The advisers of the Crown have had an opportunity of becoming familiar with the opinion of the members of the House and of the country, and I think it is fully time that the advisers of the Crown should give an opinion upon it.

Mr. McNEILL. In regard to this clause which says that any public officer, or any officer employed by the Government, is included in the Bill, I would like to ask if that covers the case of a contractor?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have stricken out the words in the interpretation clause, and the meaning in the second clause must follow and be limited to salaries and wages.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, it has been made quite evident, by this discussion, that there is a great difference of opinion as to the Bill, whether it would be workable or constitutional or not. I think from the diversity of opinions that have been expressed here to-night it is a question whether this Bill should be allowed to pass. I am not sure as to the wisdom of passing this Bill. We have had, for thirty-two years, since confederation, the law as it stands to-day, and there has not been, so far as I have been aware, one single reason why that law should be revoked. The whole tendency of legislation, not only in this country, but in Great Britain, has been in the direction of further exemption, as was stated by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). This law was repealed in England after a fair trial, and we know that in the local legislatures they are rather increasing the exemptions and providing that men shall have their wage or salary for themselves and their wives and families to a greater extent than before. My opinion is that it is not a good thing to provide too much machinery for the collection of debts. I believe it would be a good thing if a law were passed exempting everything under a certain amount. In Ontario it is limited to $40, but I would go farther than that. In the present Bill it is not proposed to interfere or take cognizance of any debts contracted heretofore.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have promised to introduce that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It does not provide any remedy for debts heretofore contracted. It only makes provision so far as the future is concerned. If the groceryman, the merchant, the tailor, the shoemaker, the blacksmith—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The doctor or the lawyer—

Mr. CAMPBELL—or anybody else in this country chooses to give credit to members of the civil service he knows they are not responsible. He knows that he cannot collect that debt, and therefore he gets cash down, or else he allows it to become a debt of honour with the debtor. I venture to say that most of the civil servants in Ottawa pay cash down for what they get, and if they do not, then the merchant trusts them on their honour, because he knows he has no recourse against them. I have heard of no sound reason why we should now put on the statute-book a law repealing the system which has been in force for thirty-two years. As the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) very justly said, the curse of this country is the credit system. If we could only go back to the cash basis, people could buy goods a great deal cheaper, and it would be an advantage both to the buyer and the seller, because there would be no bad debts at all. As it is to-day, the man who pays 100 cents on the dollar has to pay not only for his own goods, but has to pay for his neighbour who defaults in his payment. Every merchant knows that when he is selling goods he charges a little more to provide for bad debts, and therefore if we make a law providing that these creditors can collect from the civil servants, we are simply extending a system which I believe to be a bad one in principle. Even if this law when passed were workable—and we have heard sound opinions on both sides of the House that it would not be workable—even if it were workable, I am not sure that we would take a step in the right direction to pass it. I am of the opinion that we should hesitate before passing this law, especially in view of the divergent opinions that have been expressed. It is my opinion, and I am strongly of that opinion, that this Parliament should do all it can to do away with the credit system. If we could make all debts uncollectable up to a certain amount, then we would do away with the merchants giving credit, because he would only sell to those who paid cash or to those whom he was sure would pay. I again say that we should consider the matter carefully before passing any such Bill as this.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hardly think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who is the only legal member of the Cabinet present to-night, is treating the House with due consideration. This certainly is a subject of some public importance, and I submit that it is a subject of sufficient importance to call for a definite declaration of policy upon the part of the Administration. The Administration have other duties to perform than their departmental duties, and one of the important duties of an Administration is to guide the legislation of Parliament generally. Before I discuss that point, I wish to disabuse the mind of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) that I was charging him with any petty attempt to perpetuate his name in the annals of Canadian history by putting a Bill upon the statute-book, and while I do that, I cannot help saying to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson), that his awful threat that if we do not pass this Bill now and here he will never bring it up again, will not make this Parliament cease to consider this Bill, or any other Bill introduced by that hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman which deals with a matter of public importance such as this does. I submit that the very strongest case has been made out that this Bill shall be left over, and I say that with a very large amount of friendship to the Bill itself. I submit this to the hon. member for Lisgar: if any member came into this House absolutely uninformed and absolutely unbiassed, depending upon the argument for his judgment and his vote to follow his judgment upon the Bill; I submit that up to this time that member would not know how to vote upon this question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has laughed at referring this Bill to a committee of lawyers, but even lawyers are sometimes useful, and they are useful. It appears to me, in framing a statute that may be workable; or at least more workable than that which happens to be framed by a layman. What I rose to say to the Minister of Marine was that it is the bounden duty of the Government to give us a declaration of the policy upon a Bill of this kind. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) gets up and he says to the members behind him: We have no particular policy on this Bill; you can vote just as you please. That is an easy way to get out of it, but it is not the constitutional practice for a Government to pursue. It is an easy practice to please and not to displease his followers, but it is a practice which is not at all in conformity with the practice of Parliament, and the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) ought to know that as well as any other member of this House.

Mr. POWELL. Especially where the royal prerogative is concerned.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so. Especially where the royal prerogative is concerned, and especially, too, that a Bill of this kind, if you come to consider it to its limits, may mean an interference with the revenues of Canada. Let me refer to Bourinot upon this very question (pp. 804 and 805), and I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) will see there that the point which I took before and which I am repeating now is very clearly taken. Bourinot says:

Ministers alone can initiate measures of public taxation and expenditure under the constitutional law which gives control of such matters to the Crown and its advisers; while the conventions and understandings of the constitution—

And these, I submit, are quite as strong as the laws of the constitution.

—have gradually entrusted them also with the direction and supervision of every matter which demands legislative enactment. In the ordinary nature of things, no measure introduced by a private member can become law unless the Ministry gives facilities for its passage. If the House should press on their attention a particular measure, they must be prepared to give it consideration and to assume full ministerial responsibility for its passage or its rejection.

Now, I submit, in view of that statement in an authority which is recognized by this House, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) ought either be prepared to say what is the policy of the Government on this Bill, or he should advise his friend behind him to let this stand until the Government of Canada, on a matter of this importance, is prepared to give its policy to Parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not accept the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) that even in this House or in the Imperial Parliament, in the case of any and every Bill introduced by any and every private member, that the Government is bound to announce a policy one way or the other. I have seen, time and again, in the Imperial Parliament, members of the Government divided upon Bills which were not Government Bills, and I have seen in this House, time and again, some members of the Government vote for a Bill and some vote against it, it not being a Government measure. It was not a Government Bill; the Government were not responsible for it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not when the policy of the Government was asked.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Opposition would always ask the Government to adopt a policy pro or con; but the Government may not have a policy on the question, one way or the other.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They ought to have.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some of them will be in favour of the Bill, and some of them opposed to it. The Government may say: It is not a Government measure, and our supporters are free to vote for the Bill or not, as they please. That is the position we occupy with reference to this Bill; I am opposed to the Bill; I stated that last year, and I state it now. I think it is an unworkable, unjust and unfair Bill, and to some extent I think it is unconstitutional. But some of my colleagues think differently. That may well be. It does not follow that the Government are bound to be unanimous on every Bill, or every resolution, which is produced by a private member. You have often seen the Government differ on temperance resolutions and on fifty other resolutions brought into this House. They are not bound to unite on a measure, unless it is a part of the Government policy, on which they can be challenged.

Mr. TISDALE. These constitutional questions, which must frequently arise under our federated form of government are very difficult questions. With regard to the constitutionality of this Bill. I do not think it is necessary for us to settle that question or to be seriously troubled about it, because I think we ought to be pretty well able to agree upon a decision without reference to its constitutionality, more particularly after hearing the views of the promoter, who, no doubt, is sincere in his desire to get the Bill passed. If we cannot get some further light from him on the subject, I do not think we have light enough at present to justify us in passing the Bill. The one remark of his that would influence me against it is, that we should pass the Bill, and then leave the courts to decide whether it is law or not. That is one principle of legislation, whether public or private, which I have found most mischievous, and lawyers particularly know the evil of it, for two reasons: First, it costs so much to find out whether a doubtful Bill is law; and secondly, what sort of a standing would a legislature have that passes laws which it is doubtful about? We are here not only to pass laws, but a great deal of our time is occupied, and one of our most important duties is, in trying to remedy legislation that is not plain, so as to make it plain. The hon. gentleman, therefore, comes with a very weak case. He has to admit that, under all the circumstances, it is extremely doubtful whether the Bill is constitutional; and, even if it were constitutional, it is very doubtful whether it would be workable. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman as to that: I think it is quite plain that it is unworkable, and that it cannot accomplish what he desires. I go strongly with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). Even if the Bill were constitutional and were effective, there is no case calling for it. I agree with the hon. member for Ottawa that the trend of legislation is not to create machinery, unless it is absolutely called for, which can be used for founding credit. This, I think, is the fourth Parliament in which this kind of legislation has been introduced, and it has always failed to pass, and each year it grows less. With regard to the province of Ontario, as the hon. member for Ottawa says, there is ample machinery at present in the hands of the courts; and it is a poor argument to say that we should force this legislation in the province of Quebec, if its own legislature will not provide a remedy. We all agree that it is entirely within the competence of the province to legislate on this subject, whereas there is a difference of opinion as to the competence of this Parliament to do so. At all events, we should not interfere until we are quite sure that the law we are asked to pass is within our jurisdiction, more especially as it is the undoubted right and duty of the province to deal with the subject. As the Minister of Railways said last year, if this Bill passed, it would compel every spending department of this Government to inaugurate a set of books in order to keep track of the attachments that might be issued. Now, in my opinion, there is nothing so dangerous, or that brings the action of the legislature so much into contempt as to pass ineffective laws—laws that cannot be enforced. The beauty of our system—and it is something no man ought to forget—is that, when we pass laws, whether in great things or small, the people accept them, and know that the officials behind them will compel their observance; and, in my opinion, it is our first duty to be careful not to pass any legislation which is in danger of failing. In justice to the civil service, I think no case has been made out to show that in equity and fairness there has been such a crying grievance as to justify us in laying a strong hand upon them in order to compel them to pay their honest debts in this way. I have never heard of a case. Even granting that the machinery could be made effective, if there had been a notorious grievance on the subject, there might be some plea for the legislation; but there is not. I do not know why the hon. gentleman—and I say it in no unfair spirit of criticism—is so anxious to have this legislation passed, because he is not in the centre where there are many civil servants. He may advocate the measure in a theoretical sense, but I do not think he has shown any practical necessity for it. The legislature of Ontario had to take a retrograde step to protect the wages of workmen in that province from being garnisheed, the argument being urged that they needed their wage, and that the need of their wives and families ought to be considered. The same argument will apply to the civil servants. I look on this as a measure that will not be of any good to the people the civil servants deal with, and will be used in an unfair and cruel measure towards the civil service. I think, on all these grounds, we have quite enough to reject the Bill, whether constitutional or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I may tell my hon. friend that I have had resolutions of Boards of Trade and letters from grocery associations and other people from all parts of the country, urging me to go on with this measure. Here is the last I have received:

Montreal, April 17th, 1899.

The Montreal Grocery Association have much pleasure in fully endorsing the Bill you have presented concerning the attachment of the salaries of Government employees, and hope it will become law during the present session.

That is a sample of the many resolutions I have received within the last year or two. The hon. member says he cannot understand what reason I have for introducing a Bill of this kind.

Mr. TISDALE. What evidence?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman said reason. Well, the reason I have for introducing it is the very opposite to what the hon. gentleman has for opposing it. I was able to submit instances last year of very great hardship existing owing to the impossibility of collecting from people who refused to pay their just debts, under the most aggravating circumstances. I have no desire to mention these instances again, but many hon. members will bear me out when I say that such instances exist by the thousand. There are gentlemen all around me who are willing to give instances, if the hon. member insists. There is the greatest need for a measure of this kind, or I would not urge its passage. I have no special reason for promoting this Bill, except the great injustice which is committed from time to time under the present law. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say it is not constitutional or not workable, but there are lawyers all around me, just as eminent as he is, who entertain a different opinion.

Mr. TISDALE. I said nothing about its constitutionality.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman did not think it is workable or necessary. I do not wish to be discourteous, and I am much younger than the hon. gentleman, but I have sat in this Parliament three or four sessions, and my experience is that I have never yet known that hon. gentleman to raise his voice in favour of any liberal measure or any measure of benefit to the country. I wish to say now, as the last word I shall have to say of the measure, that my sole object is to attain the best end than can be desired. If hon. gentlemen do not care to vote for the Bill, let them vote against it, but let us at least have a vote. When lawyers differ, laymen should make up their minds to vote, on their own judgment, as they think proper.

Mr. COCHRANE. There are other members just as anxious to discharge their duties as the hon. gentleman is, but in what position are we placed? We have gentlemen of the legal profession disagreeing as to what effect the Bill would have and as to its constitutionality. If we are all anxious to have this Bill become effective, what would be the best way to proceed? Would it be on the lines indicated by the promoter of the Bill, who says: I am going to kick; I must have a division to-night or I will not have anything more to do with it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. The position I took was that inasmuch as I had brought the Bill up for three sessions and we had now fully discussed it during nearly three hours, we ought to decide whether to pass it or not; and if you do not choose to pass it, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to waste my time with it again.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the Bill lies so near to your heart and has lain so near to it so long, why do you want to abandon it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There will be no object in going on with it further.

Mr. COCHRANE. There would be all the object in the world in having it dealt with in an intelligent way, and it appears to me the most intelligent way would be to refer it to a committee of legal gentlemen, and they might associate with them a man of common sense. But we ought to have an opinion that would be conclusive. I do not agree with the hon. Minister of Marine. I like his smiles and all that sort of thing, but we have a Department of Justice, and I should think that that department was created just to deal with such cases as this on which legal gentlemen differ. I am at a loss to know how I should record my vote if called on, but if I had an authoritative opinion of the Department of Justice, although I do not agree with the policy of the Government, I would feel compelled to decide in this matter according to the opinion of that department regarding the constitutionality of the Bill. We have here a question which should be settled by the Department of Justice, and the better way, I think, would be to refer the Bill to a committee of legal gentlemen, who would be able to come to some conclusion on the various law points raised.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There appears to be a general disposition to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and it would be, perhaps, as well for the committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. I would then have an opportunity of discussing the measure with the Minister of Justice and will not fail to do so. I would, therefore, move, with my hon. friend's consent, that the committee rise and report progress. That will be the best way to attain something definite. That will not kill the Bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have already seen the Department of Justice. I do not wish to be fractious in this matter at all, but I have sat here every Monday night, since the session began, for the purpose of promoting this Bill, and I think we ought to have a vote now and be done with it.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I think a proper course would be for this committee to appoint a sub-committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This committee cannot do it. We must rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. The House can then refer it to a special committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the committee rises the Bill will not be heard of again.

Mr. POWELL. I do not think the hon. member for Lisgar should take this course. A great many of us are deeply interested in this measure. I speak with perfect candour when I say that I am very anxious that by some Bill we should compass the end sought to be attained. I do not see any use forcing the Bill to a division. There is a very simple procedure indicated by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). For two decades it has been the custom of the Government to embody in their railway subsidy contracts the provision that the Government shall, out of any moneys coming to the contractor, pay the workmen. Now, that has worked most admirably, and why not apply it in the case of civil servants? A judgment may be entered up against the debtor and a certified copy of such judgment may be filed with the department, for which the debtor has performed services. Then unless the debtor can satisfy the department that he has settled the judgment, let the amount be deducted from what is coming to him and paid over to the judgment creditor. That has been done in the case of railway contractors for the past twenty years, and if applied to the cases sought to be covered by this Bill it will accomplish everything aimed at, and there can be then no question of constitutionality. As a matter of law, I think that section is perfectly constitutional. I may say that the Department of Justice in its different branches thinks differently, for last year the Solicitor General on a perfectly similar matter with respect to the franchise, laid it down as an incontrovertible principle of constitutional law that this Parliament could not hand over any subject of its jurisdiction to a local legislature. I differ from him, and I see most hon. members do. I would advise the hon. gentleman not to force it to a division.

Motion to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again agreed to—yeas, 26; nays, 17.

Committee rose and reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like if the Minister would consent to have the next order advanced one stage. It may be that when we meet again under this order, the Bill may take up the whole night, and all the legislation after it will be blocked. It will not take a minute to advance this one a stage.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All right.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Onderdonk, or a copy thereof, for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the several awards made by the arbitrators chosen to value the rolling stock, and all letters and telegrams referring to the purchase of said rolling stock from the said Onderdonk; together with any opinion or opinions given by the Justice Department as to the obligations of the Crown to take over the said rolling stock, together with the cheques given in settlement of said rolling stock; and all other papers and documents relating to the purchase of said rolling stock.—(Mr. McMullen.)

Copy of any correspondence from the Montreal Board of Trade, or any other board of trade in the Dominion, requesting insolvency legislation.—(Mr. Bergeron, by Mr. LaRivière.)

Copies of all petitions or communications addressed to the Government or any member thereof within the last two years, by or on behalf of any board of trade or other public body, asking for insolvency legislation.—(Mr. Quinn, by Mr. Foster.)

Copies of all correspondence had with the Department of Railways and Canals, or with any member of the Government, in connection with the cases of Pierre Michaud and Fred. Belanger, porter and track foreman, respectively, on the Intercolonial Railway at Trois Pistoles, and dismissed therefrom in 1898, and for all petitions and papers in regard thereto.—(Mr. Foster.)

Return showing the names of persons to whom payments were made of allowances or drawbacks on freight charges on the Nova Scotia portion of the Intercolonial Railway from 1st July, 1898, to 31st March, 1899, giving amount and date of payment and date at which overcharge was made.—(Mr. Bell, Pictou.)

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 27th June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 162) to incorporate the Belleville Prince Edward Bridge Company.—(Mr. Hurley.)

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved that the House again resolve itself in Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before the House resolves itself into Committee of Supply I deem it my duty to bring to the attention of this House some of the most serious considerations that could possibly occupy the attention of a free Parliament. I have to ask at the outset the indulgence of the House, because the subject that I propose to address myself to, so far as I have been able to consider it, does not admit of a brief statement, or a brief introduction. Will you, Sir, credit me with this statement, which I make in all sincerity, and it is that I never rose with more reluctance to address the House than I do on this occasion. I am impelled to perform what I consider my duty by the most serious sense of my responsibility as a member of the House of Commons of Canada. I will not say more, Sir, at this moment, because I hope, before I conclude my observations, that the House will agree with me, that whether I am well-advised, or ill-advised, the sincerity of that statement cannot be questioned. A member of this House enjoys privileges, and a member of this House has responsibilities in all the statements that he may make. I want to invoke not so much the privilege as the responsibility in that connection, but, before doing that, as I shall have to animadvert upon private character, as in so far as private character is connected with public affairs and with the affairs of the Government, I want to recall the attention of the House to the fact that attacks on private character under circumstances not so solemn as the circumstances that surround the subject of my speech to-day have been made, and made by members older in parliamentary experience than I am, and by members occupying great positions to-day and positions of responsibility. In the first place I would call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that, in regard to the privilege which is accorded to a member of this House, this was the statement of Chief Justice Cockburn in the case of Wasson vs. Walter, after centuries' experience in the House of Commons in England, where he made this observation :

Numerous as are the circumstances in which the conduct and characters of individuals have been called in question in Parliament—

He went on to deal with the statement that had been made in the House of Lords by either a Lord Chancellor, or an ex-Lord Chancellor, where he had stigmatized the remarks and observations of a man outside of the House as scandalous and disgraceful. Then we have in our own House, a record of where a colleague of the present Prime Minister, Mr. Alfred Jones, attacked the characters of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and of a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and where he stigmatized the Chief Justice of that court as a "foul slanderer." That was in 1878. The present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) also appears on record as having attacked Judge Travis, and the appointment of that judge, and he attacked him by right of his privilege in this House, when he said, speaking of his appointment :

It was an appointment that under no circumstances should be made. That is the opinion of almost every member of the House, because hon. members have more or less opportunity of judging as to whether he was suitable to the province or not. He may come out of the investigation well, and he may technically escape condemnation, but if any one reads the public press of that part of the country he must come to the conclusion that the administration of justice has been degraded and that, practically, there is no respect for the Bench in Calgary to-day.

That was in the year 1886. The present Minister of Justice, when a member of this House, from his seat in Parliament deemed it his right to make the following observations when dealing with the rebellion in the North-west Territories:—

I thought I had the names of the parties here who gave me this information, but I find I have not. I was told that the furs were divided between Mr. Bedson, Mr. Hayter Reed and the General who was in command. My information is so direct, so circumstantial, that I have had in my own mind no doubt whatever, with respect to the accuracy of that information, and I should like to know very much what redress has been given, and whether any inquiry has taken place. For it seems to me that a party who could be guilty of such a proceeding is not one worthy of being retained in the public service. I have already given the names of the parties: Mr. Hayter Reed, Mr. Bedson and General Middeton.

That was in the year 1887, and in the same session of Parliament the present Minister of Justice used this language:

I call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that there was a half-breed named Charles Bremner living in the vicinity of Battleford and having in his possession $7,000 worth of furs; that he was arrested and sent to Regina and afterwards discharged, because there was nothing against him; that during his absence his furs were taken possession of by the military and that General Middeton, this man Bedson and Hayter Reed divided the furs amongst them. There can be no doubt in the matter. These three parties instead of protecting the property of an innocent man took it and divided it amongst them.

Later on, the Minister of Justice said:

But, when a man goes into his own country and is paid and is liberally paid by the public, for the service he is discharging, and instead of using his authority to protect people and to preserve their property, uses his position, because he thinks the public are not likely to become cognizant of his conduct; to rob a citizen of his property, especially when the man is a half-breed living beyond the influence of public opinion and reach of public intelligence; the Government ought not come down to Parliament and propose to increase his salary as is done in this case. I say these men ought to be called to account for their conduct and they ought to be held responsible to the law of the land for what they have done in this matter. I do not think we are discharging our duty to the people of this country when we permit officers to conduct themselves in this way to escape that censure which their conduct richly deserves.

I call particular attention to the last sentence of that observation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills), in connection with much that I have to say on this occasion.

Then, Sir, I approach the subject with a recollection of the extraordinary inclination the present Administration have shown for commissions of inquiry—commissions to prove, commissions to take down, commissions to search out, commissions to ferret into and to dive underneath, in order to fasten a charge upon some officer, who they are told by a political supporter, has been guilty of the offence of political partisanship; or to investigate and inquire and thoroughly search into the affairs of some institution, such as the Kingston Penitentiary, the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, the Dorchester Penitentiary, in order that if possibly it could be proved that any officer, high or low, in that institution had been guilty of dereliction of duty he should be immediately discharged from the service, or, at any rate, that the public should become familiar with all the facts connected with the administration of these institutions. I dwell upon that just for a moment to show that inquisitorial spirit with which this Government heralded their advent to office and this inquisitorial spirit which they have continued; this inquisitorial spirit which they backed up by votes of large sums of money, on the justification that no one could complain if, at the end of these inquiries, some delinquent was got hold of and made a public example of. There was no man asked to take any particular responsibility in connection with this matter. There was no political supporter of the Government asked to come out in the open and formulate charges. There was no member of Parliament dared to risk or imperil his position, but on the information of the slimmest character so far as Parliament is aware, these commissions were issued and these inquiries were made, with the result, I submit, that there was nothing arising out of them that could at all justify this expensive curiosity of the Government. Now, then, taking a general glance again at matters of public importance, I would recall to your recollection, Mr. Speaker, as an old parliamentarian, what was the experience of the English Parliament in connection with corrupt practices at general elections. How, for instance, in the 15th or 16th year of Her Majesty's reign, the public was alarmed at the evidence in election trials that pointed to a state of general political corruption in certain constituencies; and how, early in the reign of Her Majesty, legislation was adopted in England whereby the Parliament could delegate to judges of high position, extraordinary powers, powers that had never been delegated before by Parliament, in order that wherever there was a ground for the belief, the ground for a suspicion even, that general corruption had prevailed in the constituency, there should be a tribunal that could probe the whole matter to the bottom, so that as a result of their report to Parliament, Parliament might act, and the action of Parliament, of course, as we know, was represented in certain cases by the disfranchisement of the whole constituency. A good many years later on we copied that legislation. To that legislation I particularly refer to-day, because the motion which I shall put into your hands has direct reference to that wholesome principle and to that practice, which has been of incalculable advantage to the mother country, and since we adopted that legislation, of equal advantage to us. In the statutes of England, for instance, we find that the Act is entitled "to provide for the more effectual inquiring into circumstances of corrupt practices at elections." The sections to which I wish to call the attention of the House are particularly sections 6, 9 and 14. Section 6 provides that the commissioners shall, by all such lawful means as to them appear best, inquire with a view to the discovery of the truth in regard to the existence of general corruption in a constituency. Section 9 provides that for the more effectively prosecuting an inquiry, every one who upon such examination "makes a true discovery, to the best of his knowledge touching all things as to which he is so examined, shall be freed from all penal actions, forfeitures, punishments, disabilities and incapacities, and all criminal prosecutions." I call particular attention to section 9. Then, section 14 provides that the commissioners shall have power to award to any witness a reasonable sum for his travelling expenses and for his maintenance. I call particular attention, also, to section 14.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Now, Sir, in the time of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration, Mr. Blake, as Minister of Justice, introduced practically a copy of that old English statute, which forms chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of Canada; and paragraphs 9, 10 and 11 of that chapter will show that these important sections have not been lost sight of, but have been re-enacted into the laws of Canada. And, I ask you to note this, that in "Hansard" of 1876, Mr. Blake is reported to have pointed out, in regard to this statute, that in connection with corrupt practices at elections, it is obviously desirable to avail ourselves of the services of the judges of the Supreme Court or the judges of the provincial courts for these purposes; and that the object of giving full powers for the calling of witnesses and for indemnifying witnesses who answer truly, is in order to facilitate the object one has in view in an inquiry of this description—mark these words, Mr. Speaker—to get at the truth, to search to the bottom; and therefore he advocates that a very liberal indemnifying clause should be provided. I need not dilate upon that important feature, for it was the novel feature in England, and it was the novel feature in Canada at that time—the power of indemnifying witnesses; the power of protecting a witness who came forward and practically turned Queen's evidence. Not, mark you, as under another statute to which I shall refer, and under which the Government of the day have pretended to act in the case of the Yukon, to make the evidence of a witness such that it could not be used against him in a subsequent prosecution; but to enable the court and the judges to make him, at the moment when he made an incriminatory statement, entitled to a free pardon, an indemnity, and a protection against all prosecution in the future for the crime with which he was connected, or in regard to which he would give evidence to assist the commission of inquiry.

Then, touching the subject of commissions of inquiry, I would recall to your recollection a statement made long ago in regard to the disposition and the spirit of the House of Commons of England. Pitt said, in 1788, on a motion for an inquiry into the conduct of the Admiralty in England, that whenever a case was made out strong enough to warrant a suspicion of abuse, that deserved either censure or punishment, he should have held it to be the indispensable duty of the House to proceed to an inquiry. And Fox, speaking in the same debate, said it was the constitutional province and undoubted duty of the House to watch over the executive departments; and where they had cause to suspect abuse, to institute an inquiry with a view to censure or punishment.

Then, we have the present Minister of Justice, when a member of this House, in 1891, referring to the case of Lord Torrington, and using these words:

Take the case of Lord Torrington, in the matter of the rebellion in the Island of Ceylon. A Royal Commission was appointed there, as it was too far away for Parliament to investigate.

Indicating not merely an adherence to the practice laid down by all in England, and followed down to the present day, but pointing out where it was essential and where it was reasonable that, instead of Parliament conducting the inquiry under its particular supervision, it should delegate its great powers and all the powers it possessed to a royal commission. The case mentioned as the case for justification was where the matters to be inquired into were situated afar off.

Another aspect of these commissions in England is adverted to by Todd, in his work on "The Parliamentary Government in England," where he says that commissions of inquiry ought not to be of a partisan character. Then, the late member for North Simcoe, in this House in 1878, referred to this subject. In opposition to a Government that had an immense ministerial majority, referring to the Welland Canal contracts and to the Goderich harbour job, as he described it, the late Mr. McCarthy said—and I quote his language:

It was idle to pretend that a committee could be obtained in this House whose decision would be viewed as that of an impartial judicial tribunal. It was utterly impossible to suppose such a thing.

And later on in the same speech, he said:

It was neither fair nor reasonable to ask that charges which were made should and must necessarily be referred to committees. He did not understand there was any rule of that kind.

I would again go to the mother country, and refer you, Sir, to such commissions as I have been able to discover that have been issued in connection with any such matters as immediately pertain to the subject of my speech. I refer first to the Sheffield inquiry, which was of a judicial character. Referring to the Members of Parliament Bill, which had to do with the charges referred to the Parnell Commission, in 1888, the Home Secretary, Mr. Mathews, referred to the Sheffield rattening case, where outrages had been committed at Sheffield and criminal proceedings had proved abortive. The public mind was exercised and accusations were levelled against individuals. A question arose as to whether the trade union was responsible for the outrages. The inquiry provided was a judicial inquiry, and the reference was in the largest possible terms. It was a general inquiry into acts alleged by any one in the world against these trade unions or associations, and it was stated expressly on the floor of the English Parliament that that commission was intended to ascertain, as far as possible, the whole truth about the grievances, outrages and scandals which had moved the public mind. That was in the discussion of the Parnell Bill, and that is in later days. But following up the reference, I find that in a discussion of this Bill, to which Mr. Mathews had alluded in 1888, Mr. Walpole said it was proposed to make the commission of a non-partisan character, the president being the late Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Grey, and the composition of the commission was a most important question, because unless constituted in such a way as to give confidence to those whose interests were concerned, it would be found to produce very little benefit.

Then we come to the Royal Commission of Inquiry in England, in 1888, into the management of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The Secretary of State for the home department informed the House of Commons that that commission would retrospectively include everything from the foundation of the board. Lord Randolph Churchill, who initiated this inquiry and who moved the resolution for it, made some observations that seem to me so relevant to the subject in hand that I ask the particular attention of the House to them. Referring to the extent the Metropolitan are under the management of the Board of Works, he said :

That a body administering affairs so large is bound to possess, if it is to be efficient, the most entire public confidence which can well be imagined.

When you remember that I am proposing an inquiry into the administration of affairs of such a large territory as the Yukon district, the applicability of these observations will be apparent. Lord Randolph Churchill went on to say :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

That members and officers of the board had been interested in property required for public use, and that parties on the board were practically paid for some of their advice given on the board. That members of the board engaged outside in professional duties and used their personal influence inside the board in favour of the scheme submitted in which they were professionally interested, and that land which had been held by the board was in the hands of a clique which had been guided by interested and personal motives.

Then, he explained, and you will see, Mr. Speaker, the weakness of his position as compared with the strength of mine as I develop it :

These charges had been mainly made by newspapers.

He took no responsibility, he incurred no risk, from the beginning of his motion to the end of it, and I ask you to contrast his position with that which I propose to take on this occasion. He said :

These charges had been mainly made by newspapers. He also referred to a statement by another newspaper, that the Board of Works is the most corrupt public body in London, and it was quite notorious among the architects that members of the board had been bribed.

He also referred to a statement made by a member of the board, that the Estate Office was corrupt from top to bottom, and in his speech, he went on to say :

I can understand that there are some hon. members who will think a parliamentary committee preferable to a Royal Commission. I think that a parliamentary committee has many advantages, but there is this disadvantage about such a committee—that owing to its composition and to the character of the House of Commons, a parliamentary committee cannot prevent itself from being more or less of a party character. I think that it would be most dangerous to the interests involved in connection with the Metropolitan Board of Works, and most dangerous to London government, if the House of Commons gave a shadow of encouragement to the introduction of party spirit into this matter. * * * I think that from every point of view, if the House comes to the conclusion that an inquiry ought to be held into these matters, a Royal Commission composed of eminent men beyond all possibility of being suspected of any party would be a preferable body before a parliamentary committee.

And having made his motion, in his own language, the Speaker suggested a better form, and this motion, on the suggestion of the Speaker, carried :

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty that a Royal Commission be appointed to inquire and report upon the Metropolitan Board of Works and into the irregularities which are alleged to have taken place in connection therewith, and to assure Her Majesty that this House will concur in empowering such commission to take evidence on oath, to compel attendance of witnesses, and to call for all necessary records, documents, &c.

And later on, the Government acceded to the reasonableness of the view that in an inquiry of such an important character, the country should pay the expenses of procuring the attendance of the witnesses.

Coming again to Canada, I call your attention to the language of the Royal Commission that was granted in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This is the part of that commission to which I refer :

The questions which have arisen have become the subject of discussion, both in and out of Parliament, touching the propriety of and responsibility for large expenditures connected with this work. That allegations have been made as to divers irregularities and extravagances, neglects and other derelictions of duty on the part of officers and others employed on the said work, and that sundry irregularities and improprieties have taken place in the obtaining of contracts for portions of the said work, and in the performance of the same.

Sir John Macdonald, in "Hansard" of 1881, speaking on the Address, and referring to this commission, said :

It was announced in the House, press and country that there had been gross improprieties—this had been made the battle-ground of both parties. There were charges and counter-charges of misconduct of official subordinates, and even insinuations, as well as assertions, with regard to members of the Government. It is absurd to suppose that a committee of the House could by any possibility satisfactorily examine into matters of that kind. It would be a farce, a most perfunctory inquiry, if made here, in Ottawa, dragging witnesses from British Columbia and the Georgian Bay for the purpose of a full inquiry. The only consequence of this inquiry will be this : if the commissioners will carry out their commission honestly and impartially, they will inquire into all the proceedings connected with the railway. They will report without fear, favour or affection, what they consider has been wrong, what extravagant, what well done—what parties are liable to censure, who are worthy of praise. I can only say this—and, if my word be doubted, we can prove to the House—that not one single word of instruction, not a single word of insinuation, not one hint has been given to the commissioners, or any of them, as to the manner in which they should perform their duty.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before those commissioners were called, the Minister of Public Works, the late Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, and his successor in office on the Conservative side, and public men of all descriptions and party proclivities, and the commission was of the character that Sir John Macdonald said he intended it should be. Then coming more directly to the difficulties, the charges, the grievances in the gold fields, coming more directly to the case in hand, where, evidently, from the terms of the commission, the Government of the day had nothing to fear, where they stood as independent as any man in the community could stand, I find in the Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Council of Victoria, Australia, in 1854-55, the following

Minute of the Executive of the Lieutenant Governor, authorizing a Board of Inquiry, dated 30th of October, 1854, in which the following paragraphs appear, and I read them in full :—

3. Has the conduct of the officers generally in camp at Ballarat, either during the execution of their duty, or at other times, been such as to inspire respect and confidence amongst the population in general ?

4. Charges of corruption having been publicly advanced against officers of the Ballarat Camp, it will be the duty of the board—

And again, for the purposes of comparison later on, I ask your particular attention to the language of these instructions to this commission :

—it will be the duty of the board narrowly to search for and inquire whether there is any foundation for such serious accusations, and they will specify the individuals, if any, who they believe to be guilty.

That, on its face, is reasonable, and just what it should have been. It was a board of inquiry. All these commissions, all these investigations, short of the indictment, short of having the criminal in the box on his defence, are of an inquisitorial nature. That is shown by the instructions that I have quoted in the Australian case. The object is to relieve the public mind. Where there is suspicion, right or wrong, over the length and breadth of the land, that there is something wrong in the state of Denmark, the officer who goes to inquire into that, should not sit as a judge and ask for an indictment, should not sit as a judge and ask that all the terms of the indictment should be technically drawn up, ask for the prisoner to be produced in advance, and to be charged with the indictment, ask for the counsel, and ask for all the formalities that properly surround any man really on trial, either for life or in regard to offences where, if guilty, he may be sent to prison. They are the preliminary steps, and are used by the Government in order to see whether some one should not be brought to the bar. They are used for the purpose of ascertaining whether some one should not be given notice that he is to be formally charged by indictment, by the finding of the grand jury in all these various particulars. Is that an extreme view ? Let me take the next case under my hand. The Government of the day—I quarrel not with them—appreciated the objects of these royal commissions in a case in which I have asked for the papers, and where the papers have come down. They were vague charges, so far as the papers disclose. They were exceedingly vague charges in connection with the Crown Timber Agency out in New Westminster, B.C. It is only in the year 1898, I think, that this Government was called upon to deal with these general charges in regard to the Crown Timber Agency of the province of British Columbia, under the administration of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), being in an unsatisfactory condition. Let us see what happened. Mr. Archer Martin, then barrister in British Columbia, now a judge of the Supreme Court, was appointed to inquire into the Crown Timber Office at New Westminster—Sessional Papers, No. 112, reference 115. The papers have been brought down this session. I do not think, speaking subject to correction, that I will omit any important fact, when I make the following statement in regard to this commission of inquiry.

A complaint was made on December 5, 1892, by a settler that the firm of Genelle Bros. had men cutting timber on his place, and that he had protested to the Crown timber agent in vain. Further complaints were made in 1893, and in September, 1896, the settler complains that the timber inspector pays no attention to his appeals, and, when he visits the district becomes the guest of Genelle. That is the substance of the information, as I take it; I am willing to be corrected on that. I am willing, for the purpose of my argument, to be considered to have passed lightly over some other complaints. But it is enough for my purpose to say that seems to be the gravamen of the charge of the settler, and in the papers brought down that seems to be the substance of the complaints that led to the commission. But let the charges be more serious, let the assertion be more serious, imagine what you will, on February 2nd, 1897, a minute of Council approves of a memorandum from the Minister of the Interior, who states he has received such information in regard to the affairs of the Crown timber agent in British Columbia as would appear in his judgment to require to be investigated immediately. The commission is accordingly issued, authorizing Mr. Martin to inquire into and report upon the affairs of the Crown timber agent in British Columbia. That is dated February 2nd, 1897. I ask the members of this House who are good enough to follow me, to note that that commission is under the same statute; is of the same character and of the same description as the commission that was issued to Mr. Ogilvie in connection with the Yukon. On the issue of the commission, the Crown timber agent is accordingly suspended. The Department of the Interior proceeds to forward papers and returns received from licensees of timber berths to the commissioner, as it is thought that he might want to seek to examine them.

I do not question the propriety of this; I ask you to bear it in mind in the case of the commission that was issued to the Yukon. On February 27th, 1897, the commissioner writes to the secretary of the Interior that he finds that it may be necessary to hold sessions in other parts of the province, in order that the whole affairs of the agency may be thoroughly investigated, which is, I understand, the object of the commission. He goes on to discuss the belief that the returns of the licensees are inaccurate, and says:

I presume you intend to leave me a free hand to sift the matter to the bottom.

Again I do not blame the Government, for the purposes of my argument. The Deputy Minister, on March 15, 1897, wires:

Investigation to be as thorough as possible.

The memorandum of the Deputy Minister of the 6th of March, 1897, to the Minister contains the following:—

No definite charge is made against Mr. Higginson.

Mr. Higginson was the Crown timber agent. I ask the members of the House again to note this carefully: "This investigation was to be as thorough as possible." On March 4th, 1897, the assistant secretary of the department writes to the manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company, requesting that his officers at New Westminster will afford all necessary information to Mr. Martin, as it is desirable to check the telegraph account of the Crown timber agent. On the 11th of March, 1897, a detailed statement of the contingent expenditure of the New Westminster office from June, 1895, to December, 1896, was transmitted to the commissioner. On the 20th March, 1897, the commissioner writes that, under the circumstances, he does not think that he should search for further evidence against this official, but that he should utilize that which crops up in investigating other matters. That which "crops up"—I ask you again to observe this language of the commissioner. He adds:

I issued subpoenas for the principal witnesses, examination of whom would take all next week. This will clear up all the evidence in this part of the country, but it may be necessary for me to go up to, say Kamloops and that vicinity, for a few days. I think that it would be cheaper and more satisfactory for me to go there, where I might pick up other evidence,—

"Pick up," I ask hon. members again to remember that—

—than to bring uncertain witnesses a long distance at considerable expense.

This commission sat at New Westminster from the 19th to the 29th March, and examined 23 witnesses. It became evident that the condition of things up country would require to be investigated, particularly in regard to lumbering operations in the vicinity of Shuswap Lakes, and that it would be less expensive and more expeditious for the commissioner to go to the witnesses than for witnesses to come to the commissioner. I decided to hold sittings at Donald, Notch Hill and Kamloops, where the Golden Lumber Company and the Columbia River Lumber Company were examined.

Now, we have had discussed in this House what I might call the Spinks Commission, and you will observe at page 386 of the Votes and Proceedings of this House the resolution that was voted down. I do not intend to refer to a past debate, but I am sure it is doing no violence to the rules of the House to refer to the facts, still fresh in the recollection of hon. gentlemen, as to how that commission was set on foot—the fact that counsel were supplied to the parties who failed to make specific charges and supplied at the expense of this country to prosecute the charges against the judge; subpoenas were issued and every attempt was made, and yet that commission proved abortive. But I call attention to the fact—and I would like to transgress the rules of the House just for one moment—that the justification at the hands of the Solicitor General amounted to this, that, in any event, a great public service had been done by the result of that commission, because the suspicions that existed in the community had been removed, and, therefore, the fountain of justice was again considered to run pure. So, practically, that commission issued against the judge, one of the highest officers of state. In that case suspicions were thought sufficient ground for a commission, and the Government paid all expenses of conducting the prosecution.

Then, coming down to the case in hand, I find this in the Department of the Interior report for 1898, page XIV. Referring to the question of charges that had been made from time to time against certain Government officials in the territory, of improper acts in the discharge of their duties, attention is called to that portion of Mr. Walsh's report of the 15th of August, above referred to, dealing with this particular matter. And in view of what Mr. Ogilvie has reported, I ask again particular attention to that statement in regard to Mr. Walsh's statement to the Department of the Interior:

While there would appear to be no doubt from this report as to the groundlessness of the accusations that have been made, I may say it was, nevertheless, considered desirable, both in justice to the public and to the officials themselves, to have a thorough investigation, and thus afford an opportunity to persons who have complaints to make to substantiate the same by proper evidence.

I repeat that—

It was considered desirable, both in justice to the public and to the officials themselves, to have a thorough investigation, and thus afford an opportunity to persons who have complaints to make to substantiate the same by proper evidence.

I will call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that careful pains seem to have been taken not only that there should not be a thorough investigation, mark you, but that there should be "no opportunity to persons who have complaints to make to substantiate the same by proper evidence," though the Deputy Minister in the innocence of his heart, was led to make that official report. What gave rise to the Ogilvie Commission, so-called? The petitioners, the Miners' committee, standing with nothing but their own resources at their backs—men who had gone out to brave all the difficulties and trials of that country, its climate, its condition—they, and they reasonably ask, on making certain charges in regard to the delinquency of officials and the corruption which they charge to prevail in the Yukon district, for a commission of inquiry. But they were sufficiently well advised to ask, that in connection with the inquiry, there should be those very things, that, to the mind of English legislators, to the mind of Hon. Edward Blake were so essential in a matter of this kind; and that that is where you run a tilt against corruption of that character, where you dare to attack corruption in communities, and it is believed to be corruption widespread, corruption systematic—you could not hope to proceed without these provisions that enabled the commission of inquiry not merely to pay the expenses but to protect the men who, on coming into the box in order to expose the corruption, would have to confess their own venality and their own crime. So these men ask that provision be made for the expenses of witnesses and the protection of witnesses, and these are features in the resolution of the miners to which I have referred, and these are features which are conspicuously absent from the commission that issued. Let us look, for instance, to see how this came up. I have here the report of Mr. Ogilvie, and all through it, from start to finish, you find among other noteworthy things in it that the men who wanted to expose to the light of day the exact state of things were hindered by the fact that they could not bring men at their own cost and charges from the creeks miles and miles away to live in Dawson at their own expense during the pleasure of this commission, that they could not induce these men to come in without the protection that the Legislature of Great Britain and the Legislature of Canada has seen fit, in cases of this character, to throw around the witnesses. For these reasons, the commission became wholly unsatisfactory. This is what Mr. Ogilvie found. The notices that were given did not indicate—as they could not indicate—that there would be protection for witnesses or allowances for witnesses; consequently, you will see all through this answers of this character: "We cannot secure immunity for our witnesses," said Mr. George, for instance, page 77, "we cannot compel them to answer."

In the stenographic report of the evidence submitted by Mr. Ogilvie, one of the parties, at the outset of the inquiry, wanted to know if there was any safety accorded to witnesses if they appeared. The commissioner referred to the provision of chap.

33 of our statutes. I need not quote it; it is the well-known provision that where witnesses answer candidly, such evidence as they give on the stand cannot be used against them. The House will recollect the difference between that provision and the one in the Corrupt Practices Act and the one in the English Act, where there is power to pardon a witness on the spot, not merely to protect him from having used against him the confession he has made, but to enable him to go free. Under the Act to which the commissioner referred a witness might be indicted on the strength of having made a statement, and, while he was protected from having the evidence used at the trial, he knew that he incurred responsibility for his action, while under these other Acts he could be relieved of responsibility immediately. There was no power to grant pardon to a witness who had made a clean breast of the case, and which, as Mr. Blake said, is a most desirable and necessary provision where the purpose is to ferret out crime. The miners' memorial is dated August 25th, 1898. The notice respecting this commission was not issued until the 25th of January, 1899, notwithstanding that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) told us that a special messenger was detailed to take this commission in to Mr. Ogilvie. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is not in his seat, but probably he could account for the delay. All through the history of this sad case you will observe, Mr. Speaker, that what was required, if there was a desire to probe to the bottom and ferret out the facts, was expedition. Everything was gained by the delinquents by the lapse of time. Some of them, no matter what this Parliament may do, before anything reasonable can be done, will be able to plead the statute of limitations, which is incorporated with many of these crimes in the Criminal Code. If they are able to say that two years have elapsed since they stole money, since they took bribes, since they committed gross frauds upon this Government and this country in the acquisition of claims, dredging leases and so on, they will be able to laugh at the law. So, we will find that everything that has occurred, from start to finish, even that which occurred in this House not so long ago, has been the very thing that any criminal connected with this transaction would have desired. The notice respecting this commission is dated on the 25th January, 1899. It does not indicate, because it could not truthfully indicate, that there was any protection for witnesses, or that there was any indemnity for them, and so the men who might otherwise have been induced to come from the creeks and from their mining locations to Dawson City to give evidence in connection with, say, a $10 or a $25 bribe, or with some nefarious conduct, knew they must abandon their work, come down to Dawson, live in this expensive place and pay the whole cost themselves without any remuneration whatever. At the outset there was apparently a desire on the part of the Government that everything should be done so quickly that the report should be here by the meeting of Parliament. By reference to "Hansard" we find evidence of it in the letter accompanying the petition. Ordinarily Parliament meets in February; this commission, notice of which was given in January, 1899, was supposed to be concluded in time for the pending session. No provision as to the expenses was made. I received a communication dated Dawson, the 27th February, which is as follows:—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Dawson, Yukon Territory, 27th Feb., 1899.

The Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, M.P., Ottawa.

Sir.—We believe you are vitally interested in the correct government of this country.

We beg to inclose a copy of our letter of above date to Sir Wilfrid Laurier protesting against the character of the inquiry into the conduct of the officials now being held in Dawson. We also inclose a copy of the "Klondike Nugget" newspaper, which gives a substantial, correct account of the first two days' sitting, and expresses the feeling of the miners and the criticisms which are current.

The confidence of the miners in the sincerity of the Government in this matter and desire for their fair treatment generally is considerably shaken. They demand, at any price, a pure and capable administration.

We, therefore, place the facts before you, in the hope that your influence will be used towards arriving at this end. You will doubtless see—if a complete report of the first two days' sitting if the commission is available to you—that the questions asked by the commissioner were not searching, and his utterances exposed the nature of his sympathies. The newspaper inclosed will inform you how this ruling of February 23rd surprised us at a time when it was confidently expected that a complete exposé would be made of grave misdemeanours occurring up to the present time.

We would point out to you that Mr. Ogilvie's ruling exempts from investigation all official acts since he has been at the head of affairs. Also, that by official invitation of a proclamation by Mr. Ogilvie a large number of vital charges had been made in writing and placed in his hands, and many more were in preparation, which are now ruled out of court by his lamentable decision.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) GEORGE T. C. ARMSTRONG,
DONALD MacGREGOR,
PERCY McDougall,
ARNOLD F. GEORGE.

This is a document which, I may say, has been treated with a great deal of contempt by the Government. When I asked, very late indeed, perhaps twice, whether any answer had been sent to this communication, I was told that none had been sent. First, I will read the communication to the Government:

Dawson, Yukon Territory, 27th Feb., 1899.

The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, M.P.

Sir,—Our memorial, dated 25th August, 1898, desired on behalf of the miners of this country a searching and impartial investigation into the conduct of the officials of this territory.

It appears that the interpretation which Mr. Ogilvie's legal advisers place on the commission framed in response to that memorial limits the inquiry to the actions of the officials prior to the 25th August, 1898 (the date of our memorial), six months ago. We cannot believe this interpretation is in accordance with the spirit in which the commission was framed, falling so far short of what we, your memorialists, desire, and so hopelessly inadequate to the needs of the situation.

We would also call to your notice that Mr. Ogilvie informs us he has no instructions with regard to expenses, and cannot even provide maintenance for penniless witnesses compelled to come in from remote creeks.

We desire to point out that such an inquiry can be productive of no good, adds to the dissatisfaction of the people, and has already become a by-word amongst the miners.

We took part in the first two days of the commission, and conclusively proved one, the least of our charges when a decision was called for by the attorney for the officials regarding the illegality of evidence of misconduct subsequent to the 25th August, 1898. The decision was given that such evidence was inadmissible.

We, therefore, immediately withdrew from such an unsatisfactory and inefficient inquiry.

Furthermore, we strongly object to the principle of a departmental inquiry—the head of a department inquiring into the acts of his subordinates, for which he is responsible.

We would beg for the immediate appointment of a parliamentary commission, with power to inquire into matter occurring up to the date of the sitting, and with proper provision for expenses, of at least three members, acting under the instructions of a parliamentary committee.

Your obedient servants,

(Sgd.) GEORGE T. C. ARMSTRONG,
DONALD MacGREGOR,
PERCY McDOUGALL.

Now, I asked a question in regard to whether this had been received and I was told it had, and on the 15th of May I asked :

Has any reply been sent to the communication of the 27th of February, 1899, from the committee of the miners of the Yukon River, received by the hon. Minister of the Interior on the 1st of May, 1899 ?

The Minister in reply said, "No." Now then, have these men reasonable ground for being dissatisfied with the rulings and with the conduct of that commission. Their position and mine are totally different. They asked for a parliamentary inquiry, and to the best of their knowledge they limit their charges. My charges, which I shall put in your hands, Mr. Speaker, are of a far more extensive character, but, nevertheless, under no circumstances can reasonable men deem that the action of the Government in regard to such charges as these men fulminated, could have the confidence of the country. Who was Mr. Ogilvie? Let us recall the constitution of this committee. I cannot recall a bolder thing ever done in the history of Canada, or bolder conduct following it up, than the Minister of the Interior was guilty of. You will remember, Sir, how satirical he was in his official capacity, when as a member of this Parliament I ventured to ask about the relationship of various officers to him, and the relationship of various officers one with another. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) told us he had not time to go into genealogical theories or facts. I shall show you, Sir, without much difficulty, that if he understood the responsibilities of his position, or cared for them, that was a very important question for him, and that the country, in coming to a conclusion with reference to an inquiry by Mr. Ogilvie, who was a subordinate of the Government, into the conduct of other subordinates, might have good reason to believe that the uncle of the Minister of the Interior by marriage, was not the proper man to inquire into charges that came so near the nephew's door. I say it was a gross scandal, I say it was one of the worst scandals that has ever been known, to put such a man into such a delicate position, and the fact that Mr. Ogilvie would act under the circumstances indicated his entire unfitness for that position. The report of the commission that is now before us shows his unfitness. I will demonstrate to the letter before I get through that he was absolutely unfit and absolutely unqualified. The report of the evidence, the stenographic notes taken before Mr. Ogilvie, all show his unfitness, his desire to shield, and show at the outset, his misconception of his duties as a commissioner, show, too, that it made him lose his head, so that he thought he was a judge of assize, and show that before any man could receive information on public questions, that man, forsooth, was to be served with a notice to give him an opportunity to be present and to stand his trial. All through this business, the whole affair will show that it was honeycombed with these relatives. In the first place, the nephew censures his uncle at the outset. Mr. Ogilvie had already had to submit, as the Minister of the Interior shows, to a censure at the hands of his nephew, the Minister of the Interior. The Minister had censured him for his indiscreet connection and his indiscreet letters with reference to a company that was to operate in the Yukon. That was a rap over the knuckles for Mr. Ogilvie at the start. So, we have this relationship between the Minister of the Interior and Mr. Ogilvie, who was the judge of the Minister of the Interior. We have another double running relationship, as the evidence is considered later on. We have the Walsh and Walsh combination: the James Morrow Walsh, the Louis Walsh, and the Phil. Walsh combination: all figure prominently in this arrangement—and the relations between Major Walsh and the Minister of the Interior were, perhaps, even closer than the relations between Mr. Ogilvie and the Minister of the Interior. We have the Willison and Willison combination also. On one occasion the Minister of the Interior was able to officially state that Mr. Willison, of the Yukon, was not a brother of Mr. Willison, editor of the "Globe." On another occasion when asked if Mr. Willison, of the Yukon, was not a cousin of the editor of the "Globe," he said he did not know anything about the relationship, and he seemed surprised when I reminded him that he knew enough to say that the Mr. Willison of the Yukon was not a brother of the Mr. Willison of the "Globe." However, they are, no doubt, related, and the "Globe" thinks that this attempt to inquire into Yukon matters is born of malice and political spite. Then, we have the combination of Landerkin and Landerkin, a member of this House who has his son sent out there. I would say nothing about it except that in the very evidence that comes up before this commission, there is a private and confidential note from one of the Minister of the Interior's officers, asking Mr. Fawcett to say a good word for Mr. Landerkin in his official report. I would remind the committee and the Minister of the Interior, that where a responsible Minister has not only his own family connections under him, but where he is surrounded by family connections in the administration, the public, right or wrong, is suspicious, and, at any rate, frankness is due from the Minister of the Interior. Sir, I have an absolute right to know from the Minister of the Interior what relation, what connection by marriage or otherwise, Mr. Ogilvie, appointed his judge, is to him. Here was a man asked to perform the most difficult and delicate duties, without any training or qualifications that could be suggested; a man who had spent his life in the wilds, a good surveyor, and, if you like, an honest man, but a man without training. He could not move a step until Mr. Clement arrived. He sat waiting for the arrival of that gentleman who was not named in the commission, in order that he might discharge the duties that the Governor General had imposed on him. But, Sir, let us see how delicate Mr. Ogilvie's position was, and how pertinent my inquiry was as to his relationship to the Minister of the Interior. I challenged. In that question, the jurisdiction of Mr. Ogilvie. There is no doubt that the Minister of the Interior was involved in that inquiry. There is no doubt whatever, that the evidence in that inquiry came dangerously near his door: there is no doubt at any rate, putting the evidence aside, that there were possibilities of it coming straight to his door. He was responsible for the whole administration of the territories, and this officer of his, who was trying other officers, knew in his heart, if he had the intelligence of an ordinary man, that if he brought in a verdict or report that showed that Wade was corrupt, that showed that McGregor was corrupt, that showed that Norwood was corrupt, that showed that Walsh was corrupt, that showed that the whole box and dice of them were corrupt, incompetent, and unfit to discharge their duties; he was giving a sentence of political death to the Minister of the Interior, and he knew that if he reported in that direction, his nephew by marriage would have to leave the Government, if he had a sense of manliness or responsibility about him. I submit that that is not an extreme position. What are the rules? Why, in states of the Union men are disqualified from sitting as judges where the connection exists either by blood or marriage. Take an authority on that subject out of the American and English Encyclopedia, where it is stated:

Disqualification has, however, commonly been imposed by statute where the judge is related by blood or marriage.

That is in accordance with the ideas of some of the states of the Union. But let us go to the English authorities and see the delicacy that properly exists—see the rules laid down in regard to all matters of a judicial character. In the Queen vs. Rand, Law Reports, 1 Queen's Bench, page 230, Mr. Justice Blackburn said:

Wherever there is a real likelihood that the judge would, from kindred or any other cause, have a bias in favour of one of the parties, it would be very wrong in him to act; and we are not to be understood to say that where there is a real bias of this sort this court would not interfere.

And in the Queen vs. the Justice of Great Yarmouth, 8 Queen's Bench Division, page 525, Mr. Justice Field said:

The administration of justice ought not only to be pure in itself, and capable of being demonstrated to be so, but nothing should be done by those who are administering it to throw on it a substantial doubt. It is not enough that the conclusion arrived at was right, and that it has been arrived at on right principles, for every person having a personal interest in any litigation, or having a direct or indirect motive for desiring a particular decision to be come to, should abstain from putting himself in such a position as that, unconsciously to himself, a bias adverse to the due administration of justice might take possession of his mind.

Again, in the same report Mr. Justice Smith said, referring to the Rand case:

This is the point: "Wherever there is a likelihood that the judge, whether from kindred or any other cause, would have a bias in favour of one of the parties, it would be very wrong of him to act." That is the rule; where there is a real likelihood, from kindred or any other cause, that he may have a bias in favour of one of the parties, he ought not to act.

These are the rules that guard and guide the judges of England, that guard and guide the judges of the land, and I do not believe there is a judge in any of the provinces who, if he had been connected with the Minister of the Interior by marriage or by blood, would have for a moment accepted an invitation to sit on that commission; and I am certain that I shall never hear, on any evidence to the contrary, that there is one in all the land who would have so far forgotten his duty to the community and his respect for himself as to have accepted that position. And mark you, Mr. Speaker, these relationships become of tremendous importance to any one who follows the history of this case, as I intend to give it; because we have not only the relations and connections of the character I have mentioned, but we have the whole system of Government practically conducted by private correspondence between the relatives. There are letters from the Minister of the Interior to his uncle, not brought down to Parliament. There are letters between those two that I have asked for, that the Minister of the Interior has admitted related to this commission; but he has said that private matters were so interspersed with other matters in them that he could not lay them on the Table—since this man accepted the position of a judge, corresponding with him in regard to this very commission. I would like to see the man, whether a Minister of the Crown or any other, who under such circumstances would correspond with a judge of a Superior Court of this country with regard to the judicial duties he was performing on the bench, and who would be permitted to say on the floor of this House that that correspondence was private and could not be produced. We have private correspondence between connections by blood and connections by marriage; and we have, as Mr. Ogilvie has had to report to this House, this private correspondence, some of it forced out of the witnesses on the stand before him.

Now, to make good my statement—because in my opinion it is a very serious one—in regard to this mixing up of private correspondence, I take the Minister of the Interior's own statement during this session. On May 29, 1899, I asked him:

1. Has any official or unofficial or other communication been received by the Government from Mr. Ogilvie respecting the commission of inquiry?

2. If so, what is its purport?

3. Will the hon. the Minister of the Interior lay upon the Table of the House that portion of the private letter from Mr. Ogilvie referring to the subject to which the Minister alluded on 15th May, 1899, in the House of Commons?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. The report has been received. 3. Inasmuch as the remarks in reference to the subject are intermingled with references of an unofficial and private character, it is not considered proper to lay a copy of them upon the Table of the House.

On another occasion the Minister of the Interior deemed it proper to base an argument upon a communication from the commissioner, saying:

I have had a preliminary note from Mr. Ogilvie saying that the report would be forwarded in a short time, and then I will lay it on the Table, and the House will know as much about it as I.

I asked for the production of that, and the hon. gentleman brought down a return; and on page 48 of the return, in which he brought what he considered he ought to bring, and refused to bring down what he thought he ought not to bring, he remarks that this is a private note from Mr. Ogilvie, and, therefore, he does not bring it down. So, again, the Minister on April 4, 1899, read a telegram which he had sent to Mr. Ogilvie in answer to a private letter:

You have an absolutely free hand in regard to the officials. Do what is necessary to put the service on an effective footing.

I asked for the letter to which that telegram was a reply. That letter is private; it will not be brought down. And as we go through, we shall see the difficulties that beset any one in my position or any one who is anxious, from a public point of view, to probe this matter to the bottom by reason of this correspondence being considered as private. Let us for a moment consider that telegram itself. What absolute buncombe it is: "You have an absolutely free hand in regard to the officials." That telegram was sent after the constitution of a government in the Yukon. Mr. Ogilvie had not then and has not now an absolutely free hand in regard to the officials. The statutes of the land control him in respect to every wish he may have in regard to any reform there; and I will show you what class of men surround Mr. Ogilvie if he desired to do right, if he came to deal with an official or to perform any executive act. He is not the arbitrary despot that Major Walsh was; he is not controlled by the Minister of the Interior in that regard; but there is a statute and there is a council, which shows how empty that telegram is. With regard to this commission, I have said that the petition was dated the 25th of August, and that the commission was issued on the 17th of October, 1898; and now I call your attention to the fact that the inquiry opened on the 6th of February, and what happened? Here is a commission ordering Mr. Ogilvie to conduct an inquiry and to report. Mr. Ogilvie opens the court and explains the delay, outside of the difficulty in mail transmission, to be due to the fact that he could not go on without the attendance of Mr. Clement, as legal adviser. On page 7 of the report, this is what I find:

The commissioner said that nearly half a year had elapsed since the 25th of August, the date on which the petition of the miners' committee had been forwarded to Ottawa; that the commission had been issued from Ottawa on the 7th of October ; that the commission had been delayed by reason of the delay of the mail and the non-arrival of the legal adviser.

Mr. Clement may be considered a very essential man as a legal adviser, but the Governor General never authorized him to act in this matter, though the evidence shows that he practically took charge of it. Not a thing could come up, hardly a matter of discretion could be determined without reference to Mr. Clement. The ideas in that locality are somewhat crude. The ideas of Mr. Ogilvie were as odd as those of Judge Dugas. Judge Dugas so lightly considered the responsibility of his judicial position that he did not hesitate to confer with Mr. Ogilvie, and practically, as the evidence shows, Mr. Clement was the legal adviser of the judge as well as the legal adviser of Mr. Ogilvie. Let us see how this Mr. Clement interfered. I shall give a few instances to show how this gentleman, who was unknown to the commission, who had no authority under it, who was supposed, I believe, by some members of this House to be there, as a nautical adviser sits in an admiralty court—let me give a few instances to show what authority he assumed and was conceded. In the case of a nautical adviser, what he says he says to the judge, and the judge, on his own responsibility, uses or not what he says, but Mr. Clement assumed a different position altogether, and as he figures considerably in matters concerning which I have to make serious charges, I will refer particularly to page 76 of the evidence, where it will appear that Mr. Clement had the audacity, in the case of a commission holding open court, to browbeat and to bully one of the petitioners who appeared before it. When Mr. McDougall, who had no lawyer to advise him, as was given these men in British Columbia, who made charges against Judge Spinks, was endeavouring to press his charges, Mr. Clement, who was as much a stranger to that commission as any man in this House, interfered in the most arbitrary and uncalled-for manner. Mr. Armstrong and Mr. McDougall were both explaining their case and were both struck with amazement on being told that this commission was limited, and that the moment any evidence was offered of anything that took place after the 25th of August, 1898, the court's ears would be stopped. Mr. Armstrong said :

We withdraw from the commission on account of the limitation.

To this the commissioner replied :

You have incurred the responsibility of making statements which you refuse to substantiate.

Mr. McDougall retorted :

No, we don't ; but I submit this is not a proper commission of inquiry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Then, let us see how this gentleman, who was not known to the commission, who was vested with no authority whatever, chose to interfere. He said :

You are talking nonsense.

Again, on page 34 of the evidence, we find Mr. Clement again interfering. Mr. Clement was there to keep out, as the record shows, all the evidence he possibly could. Mr. Tabor, counsel, speaking as to what questions would be inquired into, said :

That is, charges laid down prior to the date of the commission and of the letter of the 25th of August.

Here Mr. Clement interposed with his own ruling :

The charges contained in that letter ; nothing subsequent.

That was the ruling given by Mr. Clement, and on page 73—I am only making a few references here and there to show the unfair and improper and uncalled-for interference of this gentleman—we find Dr. Bourke putting this question to the commissioner :

Am I to understand that we have no appeal to the judge for his ruling in this matter ?

Dr. Bourke was then discussing whether they were bound by Mr. Ogilvie's decision. Here is the reply of the commissioner :

That is what the legal adviser says.

Thereupon Dr. Bourke asked :

If we apply to the judge for a mandamus, would you hold to his decision on the point ?

The commissioner replied :

I don't think I would be compelled to.

Mr. Clement again gave his decision, and said authoritatively : "No."

You will, therefore, Mr. Speaker, see the position which Mr. Clement assumed, with the connivance of the commission. Here you have the miners' committee—not one of them trained in the law—granted a commission, and Mr. Clement, under the guise of being a legal adviser to the commissioner, comes into court and takes the case out of Mr. Ogilvie's hands, and assuming an authority for which he had not the slightest warrant, tells these men at one time that they are talking nonsense, and again lays down the law as to what the ruling will be.

I shall not take time by going further into the evidence to show the arrogant and dictatorial position which this Mr. Clement assumed, but compare the commission empowering Mr. Archer Martin to inquire into charges against the Crown Timber Agent in New Westminster with the present case. Mr. Ogilvie shows all through the evidence that he considered his was a commission of assize, and not a commission of inquiry—that serious indictments were preferred and that the men implicated would have to be present, that the charges would have to be submitted to these men, that they should have opportunity to defend themselves, and counsel were heard and the greatest formality observed at different parts of the inquiry. But later on, he lost that spirit and took another course, and attempted to go beyond the 25th of August to oblige Mr. Fawcett, an officer of the Government, and invented some system, contrary to Mr. Clement's idea of what could be done under the commission. They sat informally and took solemn declarations, where they could get the witnesses to solemnly declare after giving their evidence, but at the start these gentlemen proceeded as though sitting in assize and not on a commission of inquiry. I would refer you to pages 8, 9, 12, 14, 33, 34, 50, 213 and 258 of the evidence, where it will be seen that any one daring to open his voice in this court—as Mr. Ogilvie thought it was, with his legal adviser beside him—would have to formulate the charge on which he wished to be heard and notify the parties accused. But see the difference compared with the Archer Martin commission. In this case the commissioner, Mr. Martin, wrote to the secretary of the Department of the Interior :

Kindly give me all the information you can from the department, so that I may follow it up. Get me permission to get all the telegrams out of the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraph office from 1895 to 1898, so that I may check them all over. Give me authority to ransack this district and then go up to the other district. Put money at my disposal to summon all the witnesses. I infer that the desire of the Minister is that I shall probe this matter to the bottom.

But in the case of the Ogilvie commission Mr. Ogilvie thus interpreted his duties: Specify your charges, notify the parties in any way implicated, and an opportunity being given them to go into court, we will proceed to try the case. Although I have been appointed a commissioner by the Governor General in Council to inquire into this matter, I propose to constitute myself a judge of assize, and as Mr. Clement, an officer in the service of the Government and a man of legal training, is associated with me, I will pronounce the rulings, but they will be those dictated to me by Mr. Clement, and I will not follow the law, but will depart from my duty to allow Mr. Clement to take charge when all these matters come up. He may browbeat the witnesses as much as he pleases, tell them they are talking nonsense, and lay down what rulings the court will give.

We find at page 8 that the laws of evidence were to apply. The laws of evidence! Look into that commission issued to inquire into the Crown Timber Agency in New Westminster, and see how much he was guided by the laws of evidence. You find the correspondence between the commissioner and the department, and the material on which he went, and the copies of documents which he used for the purposes of the commission of inquiry. And I say he proceeded in the proper spirit. The desire was there to find something wrong. Now, the very opposite method is adopted here. Is it a violent assumption, then, to say that the desire was to find nothing wrong, and that Mr. Ogilvie appreciated that fact? Compare the treatment of others with the treatment of this man Pulford, of whom something was said before. Pulford was sent to jail for conduct that Mr. Ogilvie had ruled, with the assistance of the legal advisers, justified such treatment. Charges were to be put in specified form, notice to be given, and all that kind of thing. They directed Pulford to answer, and, because they had an idea that this man was an agent of some Conservative Association—that never existed—in the city of Ottawa, Mr. Ogilvie resorted to the old Star Chamber method of torturing the witness, ordering him to tell all he knew, regardless of any charge, regardless of any one being summoned, and, when he did not answer satisfactorily, sent him to durance vile, and made him suffer for not giving general information, such as he was said to possess. However, it turned out that this young man knew practically nothing, and was not authorized by any one to take any particular position. But, wherever any one attempts to fasten a charge upon an official, or give evidence in regard to any conditions that obtained there, he is held down to the rules of evidence, and to specific charges, and to the important consideration as to whether the parties accused, directly or indirectly, had been given opportunity to attend. So, conditions are made. For instance, as shown at page 10 of the evidence, as to what facilities will be given to those coming before the commission for searching the records. It will be seen that Mr. Armstrong asked, if the records of the Gold Commissioner's office would be open to them, and the answer was in the affirmative, but on the condition that they would state what area they wished to investigate. That will be seen to be contrary to the spirit of the Martin commission, contrary to the spirit of all these commissions of inquiry. They were to name at their own hazard the particular area or location they wished to examine; otherwise, they were not permitted to look at these records. Why, Mr. Speaker, the proper consideration of his duties would have shown Mr. Ogilvie that these men were to be considered as assistants, not as prosecutors, not as men preferring indictments—though they had named some charges—but himself as one who was to inquire, and these others as men who were to assist him. But he proceeds in an entirely different spirit. Having laid down these strict, stern rules, which pertain to the courts of justice, Mr. Ogilvie shows again his unfitness for the position by allowing one person, Captain Starnes—a very good man, no doubt—to walk into the box, and, without being sworn, to give information concerning a matter in regard to which sworn evidence was given. Page 41 shows the style in which Mr. Ogilvie himself conducted this examination. I ask particular attention to this. We all know what Jeffreys did of old time in England, in his treatment of those who came into court. Perhaps Mr. Ogilvie is not quite his rival, but I do not think that any will contend that his language was such as to encourage any one to come before him or to assist him in carrying on the inquiry. After Mr. McDougall and Mr. Armstrong have reasonably, and in calm and in moderate language, discussed this question of jurisdiction, discussed it almost as if they had been trained in the law, after Mr. Clement tells Mr. McDougall that he is talking nonsense, this is the language that Mr. Ogilvie dared to use—I quote from page 76 :

The Commissioner.—You should have some respect for yourself, Mr. McDougall, if you have none for other people. Your opinion does not rule in this country, I am glad to say. It would be better if you would restrain yourself. You come into the Government offices and insult people who are quite as intelligent and respectable as you are, Mr. McDougall. I should like you to have some degree of propriety before this commission.

I would recall the language of Jeffreys to the mind of the lawyers in this House.

Mr. McDougall.—The point has been raised in court, sir.

The Commissioner.—Express yourself in proper terms, or I will listen no more to your remarks.

Mr. McDougall.—I am quite prepared to take the consequences.

The Commissioner.—I will give you a lesson in civility unless you conduct yourself in a proper manner.

Mr. McDougall.—I am prepared to have any lesson in civility.

The Commissioner.—After this restrain yourself when you are addressing any person. If you have any charge to make against the purport of the commission, do so in a proper manner.

Now, there is no one who will defend the spirit shown by that language. And, if any one will refer to pages 75 and 76, preceding this outburst on the part of Mr. Ogilvie, he will not find the slightest provocation for the exhibition of temper and the insolence of which Mr. Ogilvie was guilty. Then again, I would call your attention—as illustrating the fitness of Mr. Ogilvie to this position—to page 68. During the examination, Bolton, one of the officers in the service was being examined, and this is the manner in which Mr. Ogilvie attempted to meet Mr. McDougall, who was examining him. The commissioner was clearly wrong:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Q. But you swore, in answering me, that you never heard there was such a thing as trafficking in passes?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. But you swore to me that you never heard so?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. Can the evidence be looked up to see if he stated that he never heard there was trafficking in passes?

Mr. Bolton.—I had knowledge of hearing of such a thing.

Mr. Tabor.—

He is counsel for Mr. Bolton.

—How many times have witnesses to be asked questions over and over again? There are rules laid down by the highest authorities; that rule should apply here. There are two gentlemen examining at the same time, and asking the same thing over and over again.

The Commissioner.—I notice some questions are asked over and over again.

Mr. McDougall.—It is a curious state of things, according to law, if a person who has sworn one thing, and I rise to ask if he has sworn whether that was positive or not; I should like the evidence locked up.

Stenographer referring to notes found the question referred to was: "Did you ever hear of any traffic in passes?"—Answer "No, sir."

So, Mr. McDougall was right; but, instead of getting the sympathy of the court in a line of cross-examination which was reasonable and proper, the very thing to be desired by the court, he has cold water thrown on his efforts. Again, at page 201, we find an example of the weakness of this commissioner. I do not know whether his legal adviser was with him or not. The witness was Mr. Woodworth, who is a counsel there, and they were trying to get from Mr. Woodworth information he had received as a solicitor. Mr. Woodworth said:

Mr. Woodworth.—I cannot bring anything to mind as a solicitor, in which I have. If I had, I would be very glad to answer, because my feelings have been outraged in the way in which things have been done; it is an awkward situation for me.

The Commissioner.—It is an awkward situation for me; the public may not understand this; if I don't force you to tell what you know, they will think I am in the swim as much as the rest. I will take the matter into consideration and advise you on it.

Now, I say for a man who is put in this position, is it not preposterous that he should care one brass farthing what the public thinks? This man had a legal adviser beside him, but he had not the moral courage, he had not the stamina, or the experience—I do not say he was dishonest, but his whole training shows, and that answer is absolute evidence, that he was not fit to perform his duties properly and impartially. Then on page 246 we have a ruling. Now, here is a most extraordinary thing. Just where your interest is excited, and you suppose now that you are going to get something important, the commissioner shuts the whole thing up and there happens a blank, and he actually stops the stenographer. I will have something to say about Judge Maguire; and I regretted very much, when speaking on a former occasion in this House, that I had occasion to refer to him directly, because in the paper I read his name was incidentally mentioned. But this evidence shows an extraordinary condition of affairs in regard to Judge Maguire and Judge Dugas. They are advising most improperly—the Solicitor General will agree with me, any lawyer in this House will agree with me—most improperly advising gold commissioners privately as to what they ought to do in a hypothetical or in an actual case, cases that may come before them in a judicial capacity, and at the same time the evidence shows these gentlemen are going to the Gold Commissioner for mining claims. This commission, this very evidence, brings out what I never knew before, that Judge Maguire was the private counsel of Mr. Fawcett, and Mr. Fawcett, as Gold Commissioner, was giving Judge Maguire mining locations. While I am attacking this commission as a commission that ought never to have been organized, because the man was not the proper man for it, there is in it, for any one who will read the evidence, cause for the most serious alarm, and there is proof of the most nefarious conduct, conduct so nefarious on the part of officials right and left, that if I wanted a vindication for the suspicions I have expressed already on the floor of this House, there it is in the Ogilvie commission. But I say this is far short of what an inquiry ought to be. Listen to this evidence on page 246:

Mr. Fawcett.—I have here the opinion of Judge Maguire, under which I acted in subsequent cases. That is Judge Maguire's decision in a similar case, in which the purchaser was recognized, although the claim was cancelled.

There is Judge Maguire's decision in a similar case. It is not in court, this decision is an opinion from the judge of the Superior Court:

By Dr. Bourke:

Q. What claim did McDonald get?—A. 16B on Dominion.

Q. But that refers to another claim on Dominion?—A. Yes; that is a case which I submitted to Judge Maguire. I have here the præcipes, which I submitted to Judge Maguire, in regard to claim 160 below on Dominion, and that is the judge's reply.

My contention is that if the judge had never been interested in mining claims, it would have been wrong for him to give opinions to this official. Let any man in this House attempt to get an opinion from a judge in the province of Ontario, and I can anticipate the answer he would get. But what would he think if an official opinion was given to you by a judge making application for claims later on?

Q. This refers to Murphy. How was Murphy connected with McDonald?—A. That is a similar decision. I was giving you my authority for doing things of that sort.

Q. The judge did that in the case of Murphy, and you—was Mr. McDonald's case one of an innocent purchaser?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it included in your list of re-locations?—A. No, it came up subsequently.

Q. That seems to be a solitary case.—A. Well, yes, it was the case referred to. I submitted this to Judge Maguire for his opinion, so that I might in future be guided by it. It was the only case that came, up to this time.

Q. You would not call that to apply to a case where the man had not paid for the claim at all?—A. I don't know anything about paying for the claim; that has nothing to do with the case at all.

Q. That had nothing to do with the case at all? The Commissioner.—Stenographers will not need to take that down. We are not going to take notice of these statements.

Coming down to the very core of the most fearful scandal, getting right into it, the judge asked to inquire into this matter, saying: "Stenographers will not need to take that down." However, take Mr. Ogilvie's own opinion of what this inquiry was. He had a little contempt for it himself. On page 186, he says:

The Commissioner.—No one here can explain why it was done.

Dr. Bourke.—I can explain why it was done; so can Mr. Fawcett.

The Commissioner.—It is only a one-sided investigation; some of the people are here, and some are in Ottawa.

This is the great Ogilvie inquiry, stigmatized by the commissioner as only a one-sided investigation. Naturally he imagined—and you will see him cutting off the evidence right through—that it was his duty to put a stop to evidence implicating John Brown or Tom Smith if they were not in court. Take the case of Major Walsh; if anything came up against him, Major Walsh was not present. If anything came up against Mr. Wade, Mr. Wade had not arrived. If anything came up against any other officer—wait, these men are either out of the country or they are returning. So he understood, or misunderstood, his duties. Then if you read pages 12, 15, 72, 74, 75, 76, you will wonder, as I did, who raised this question about the 25th of August, about this limitation, put off until they got the miners out of the way, until the Miners' committee had withdrawn, and then overlooked because Mr. Fawcett wanted to come to Ottawa, and then they circumvented the difficulty by saying that the witnesses would have given statements that were not on oath. But that was not until these men who had asked for the inquiry were practically bowled out of court by being told that wherever there was any evidence that related to an act before the 25th of August, 1898, there was no jurisdiction in the commission, the commission should not hear it. I ask the Minister of the Interior, who, I suppose, will have something to say in this matter, when I was asked personally in December, 1898, to send the information that I had in my possession to Mr. Ogilvie, whether he believed at that time that he had limited this matter to the 25th of August, 1898, and if he had that idea, or if that was the opinion of the Government, why it was that in the correspondence that took place between his deputy and myself, there was no intimation of this kind? But Mr. Ogilvie, before a man had raised a question as to the 25th of August, this limitation that turned out of court the real active men in the inquiry, and left in court Mr. Fawcett to conduct this informal inquiry to suit himself, Mr. Ogilvie says more than once in these references that I have given, that this question has been raised. Who raised it? It was not raised before him, it was raised, as he tells the court, when they talked about application for a mandamus to Judge Dugas, and you will find in the evidence that he had been consulting with Judge Dugas.

With whom else had he consulted? He had his legal adviser, and he had the free run of the judge, and the judge was interested in mining claims, as I will show, just as well as Judge Maguire. There was this little ring, and this advice that they could cut and nip this inquiry in the bud. Then, we come to the report itself. I am endeavouring to speak within the bounds of moderation and fairness, in this matter, but, I confess, the condition of affairs that confronts me is appalling to my mind. What I say I endeavour to support by reference either to the facts or to information, and the House and the public can form their own opinion. I say that no man can carefully read the evidence, and read Mr. Ogilvie's report, as I have read it, without coming to the conclusion that Mr. Ogilvie has wholly proved his unfitness for the position of weighing evidence, that he has not appreciated even what crime consists of and matters, which are criminal, he passes over as matters about which there is no dispute. Take a case which is referred to on page 7 of his report, which has been in circulation in the House for some time:

The first day was devoted to investigation of charges of corruption against officials in the Gold Commissioner's office for having accepted bribes for admission into the office.—

Mr. FOSTER. That is what he told us.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER:

—The result was that a door-keeper named Villeneuve, who was employed as a special constable in the North-west Mounted Police service, and who had been for some time a dog-driver, had accepted money for admitting people out of their turn into the office. No one else was implicated in any way except that some of the evidence showed that clerks had received pay from outsiders for attending to work done before and after office hours. This was so usual an occurrence that it was readily admitted, no one attempted to deny it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

There is this extraordinary statement. This was a crime of the most serious character; this general custom of taking money before and after office hours was an offence against the provisions of the Criminal Code, but it was such a usual occurrence that no one attempted to deny it, and it forms a most important part of the evidence against the whole administration in the Yukon, that everything was so arranged and there was so much confusion that we find these clerks taking this money before and after office hours, while the whole grievance was that you could not get your work done in office hours.

Mr. FOSTER. Why should you?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why should you, the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) pertinently asks. The point is that matters were so arranged that, according to the evidence, as stated by Mr. Ogilvie, it was a simple thing to take pay for work after office hours. The bribe was there, and whether the bribe was there or not, the criminal offence was there. This man Villeneuve that Mr. Ogilvie so lightly speaks of, was, according to the evidence, an illiterate man. He could neither read nor write. He was put into a position in Mr. Fawcett's office, without Mr. Fawcett saying aye or no, or anything about it. He was a poor, uneducated man, who was used for the purpose of working the pass system there. He took bribes. This man went into the box and perjured himself before Mr. Ogilvie, by swearing that he had not done what Mr. Ogilvie says he did do. Mr. Ogilvie passes over the perjury, passes over the scandal of his appointment, and the extraordinary conditions connected with Villeneuve and with Mr. Fawcett that I propose to refer to in connection with this matter so lightly mentioned by Mr. Ogilvie. At page 41 is the evidence that Mr. Villeneuve could not read, and in another place it is shown that this man who was posted there to pass men into the office was engaged as a dog-driver. His accomplishments fitted him for that position. That he was employed as special constable in the Mounted Police, does not appear, so far as I have been able to pursue this report, that he was a dog-driver appears on page 43 of the evidence, and that he was employed as a janitor without the Gold Commissioner's authority; and not under the Gold Commissioner's control appears on page 56 of the evidence. He was placed in Mr. Fawcett's office. I have no reason to say more against Mr. Fawcett, according to my information, than that his weakness all through was pitiable and deplorable. He was afraid, not only of the whisper of Major Walsh, but of his shadow. He hardly dared call his soul his own. Even a woman, who would whisper in his ear any direction, when she came to get a privilege, through the order of Major Walsh, was able to get it, according to the evidence, which goes to show that Major Walsh had sent her. They broke the rules and regulations, and Mr. Fawcett seems to have been simply terrorized by Major Walsh all through this unfortunate business. There is evidence that the officers under the Gold Commissioner, appointed to attend to the public and the man appointed to guide and regulate the entrance of the public were not placed there by the Gold Commissioner, that they did not act under instructions from him, and that he knew nothing of their duties. At page 56 of this evidence, you will find that Villeneuve, this man was convicted of being paid in connection with these passes, according to the report of Mr. Ogilvie, was one of the appointees of Major Walsh, and was under Major Walsh's instructions. Mr. Fawcett did not know that passes were issued. As is stated in this evidence at page 57, and Villeneuve was told to accept passes from men passing in and out of Mr. Fawcett's office. That appears on page 59. This man, of whom Mr. Fawcett knew nothing, had to do with what are called the regulations as to the admission of miners to Mr. Fawcett's office, which appears by the evidence at pages 31 and 45. There are references in this report to these passes that are extraordinary. Mr. Fawcett says that there was no pass system. That is in his evidence at page 59.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the pass system?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This pass system appears, from the explanations on pages I have mentioned, to have been a rule framed for the purpose of regulating the turns of men to go in or out of the office. That is the official explanation, but the charge, a large part of which will be corroborated in this evidence, is that it was simply a plan for fleecing the public. It is simply an excuse for bribery. A man named McGill was able to play a very sharp trick, owing to the illiteracy of Villeneuve. He found out that Villeneuve could not read or write. He made a pass out on a bit of paper, like that which was used, and he sold it to a poor miner, getting $10 for it—a most dishonourable trick. That man handed this forged piece of paper to Villeneuve, and passed on. Mr. Fawcett says: I knew nothing of the pass system, because there was no pass system. Villeneuve is convicted of having accepted money for admitting people out of their turn into the office, but poor Villeneuve, I do not think has been properly looked after or defended. He was working under Hurdman, as he says. He was told to take these papers, and on one or two occasions, of course, he took the money instead of the passes. However, Fawcett says there was no pass system, but, mark you, Mr. Fawcett admits at the same time that Villeneuve was told to accept passes from Hurdman and Bolton, two of his clerks. If my recollection serves me right, this gentleman, Hurdman, who exercised so high functions under Mr. Fawcett, Hurdman who was delegated with all the powers of the Governor General of Canada in Council as well as the powers of the Minister of the Interior, was a $2-a-day man. That was the amount we had to pay for an officer to discharge these high duties. Fawcett admits that Villeneuve was told to accept passes from Hurdman and Bolton, and I do not know how poor Villeneuve could tell when the pass was from one or the other, McGill found out he could not, because he sold one that was neither from Hurdman nor Bolton. Let us see about the pass system. It is a most extraordinary business, and while Mr. Ogilvie in the innocence of his heart refers to it in the light manner I have mentioned, the charge was that all this was an organized system of corruption, and not merely did McGill make money out of it, but that men in the service of the Government made the money that induced them to stay there for $2 a day, which as every one knows would not keep them in Dawson City. Bolton, one of the officers, says about the pass system, at page 63:

Q. Do you know whether other clerks gave passes for admission into the office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who would be supposed to give passes?—A. I do not know, I am sure; it was done by different boys in the office. There were lines leading up to the different wickets. If there were five or six men in front of a wicket before dinner or before four o'clock they would give them passes to come into the office after dinner or next morning.

Q. There were three wickets at which clerks were permitted to give passes?—A. Yes; the clerks gave passes to men at their separate windows.

Let us hear what poor Villeneuve, who was the only victim according to the judgment of the court; let us hear what he says. At page 39:

Q. You used your own authority in the matter of letting people into the office—never had any instructions from Mr. Fawcett except to say you had nothing to do with the door?—A. Yes.

Q. Why didn't you follow Mr. Fawcett's instructions not to take passes?—A. Well, when the man outside presented me with a little piece of paper, and said: "This man is correct, let him in." I had to take it.

Again, at page 31, he deposes:

Q. Did you ever take a pass from any of the miners at the door?—A. Yes; I used to take them from the special constable at the door.

Q. Did you ever receive in your own hands a pass from any of the miners to get in?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever receive passes from miners to get into the office?—A. Well, that I can't say; I don't remember.

Q. Did you frequently receive passes?—A. I received passes sometimes.

Q. Did you receive a large number of passes every day?—A. Pretty nearly every day when I was at the door.

Q. Were all these passes the same, or were they different?—A. All different; there were some passes I did not look at. As soon as I saw anything like passes I put them in my pocket.

Q. Did you do anything with them after?—A. Yes, I burned them.

Q. Why, because there was no stamp on it? At first you only receive passes with the office stamp on?—A. Yes.

Q. But do passes on which the office stamp was have a signature on them?—A. Yes.

Q. Are they similar to the passes shown?—A. Yes.

Q. Did they all have the office stamp on them?—A. No; they had to be stamped; they were stamped after hours. Some people were left in the office and wanted to get a pass from Mr. Hurdman to get in after dinner or to get in the next morning—because people that were waiting so long at the door, I think it nothing but right for them to have the right to have the first show when to come in again.

Q. Were these passes good for over dinner and over night?—A. Well, the passes were supposed to be good for one day; some passes came in behind every day.

Q. You refused some passes?—A. No, sir; at the beginning I did; I was told not to refuse a pass.

Q. Who told you not to refuse a pass?—A. I was told that from the clerks in the office.

Q. Which clerk?—A. Mr. Hurdman.

Q. Did you receive any instructions from Mr. Fawcett about acceptance or the rejection of passes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they tell you to let any man in who came with a pass?—A. Yes.

Q. Who told you that?—A. Mr. Hurdman.

Take the evidence of Frank Gibson, another clerk, as to the pass system, of which the Gold Commissioner knew nothing. Gibson was in the office from the latter end of July until the 16th of October, and at page 44 he gives his evidence, as follows:—

Q. Had you any instructions as to the admission of miners into the office?—A. No, sir; they had to take their turn. Lists were gotten out and allowed them in in the right order.

Q. There were several systems during the summer; one system replaced another?—A. Yes, sir; one or two.

Q. There were numbers given?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before that there was indiscriminate getting into the office?—A. Well, I couldn't say.

Q. Who gave the numbers?—A. That I couldn't recall; perhaps Mr. Bolton, I think he was the principal clerk.

Q. You don't mean that Mr. Bolton gave passes? Any pass given from Villeneuve to Bolton?—A. I believe so.

Q. You know that Villeneuve had a good deal to do with the regulations connected with the admission of miners to the office?—A. Yes, as far as I understood.

Q. He was more connected with it than the policeman?—A. Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. He practically had in his hand the regulation of miners to the office?—A. Yes, as far as I know.

This poor illiterate wretch who was proved to have been guilty of being bribed right and left, he had, according to Gibson, the regulating of miners into the office. Can it be doubted that there were not men behind him. At page 45, Gibson continues:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Q. You beckoned me through the crowd and obtained permission for me when the door opened after the dinner hour?—A. I did that on my own responsibility.

Q. Why did you mildly remonstrate with me for not giving money to the door-keeper?—A. I don't know that I remonstrated; I might have asked you why you didn't ask him to have a drink or something of that kind.

At page 51 you will find that these officers were allowed to regulate the passes in the manner the evidence has already shown, because Mr. Hurdman deposes:

Q. Did you have any definite instructions from Mr. Fawcett about the admission of people in or out of turn?—A. No, none at all.

There you have the office presided over by Mr. Fawcett, but you have Major Walsh putting in charge a man who is permitted and enabled to manipulate and manage an affair of this kind, and to make money out of it. I refer hon. gentlemen to pages 107, 108 and 123 of the evidence if they wish proof of this. I wish to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to an extraordinary stop in the examination on this point. The commissioner passes it over lightly, and as I have said, he seems to have forgotten that the evidence which he passes over so lightly, and as to matters which were well known to have occurred, happens to constitute a crime under the Criminal Code. On page 114 there is an extraordinary stop in the testimony which was leading up to an important fact, and a fact which I propose to charge. E. D. Bolton is being examined and he admits a peculiar thing. I make the statement now, that another private letter seems to have arrived which we have not had brought down to the House. Bolton states that the officers were told by Mr. Deville in a letter, that they could not take up claims. I make that statement here, so that it may be corrected if it is wrong; in view of the announcement by the Minister of the Interior that there were no instructions outside the conversations he had with Wade, and the Order in Council that was passed touching the taking up of claims by officials. Bolton deposes at page 114:

My letter from Mr. Deville stated that I would not be allowed to record claims.

That letter has not been laid on the Table, and in case I forget it, I want it to be observed that one of the most curious things in the history of this whole business is, not merely the private correspondence, but the keeping away from this House at this late period of the session, the kind of information that this evidence shows did exist, and is in existence and which would be most material. I refer to minutes of Council in the time of Major Walsh, and I have not seen one of them laid on the Table of the House. But listen to this, in the middle of Mr. Bolton's evidence, at page 114:

Q. Now, there are a great many charges. This is a question not relevant. There are a great many charges of officials having acquired interests. Have you any objections now to stating whether you obtained any interests in such a way as that?—A. No, sir, I never acquired any in that connection.

Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. If I did, I didn't know it.

Q. Did you or did you not?—A. No; I have not any interests in Dominion Creek.

Mark you, this is the line of answers that this witness gave:

Q. You have none at all on Dominion Creek?—A. Not in that way; none in any other way as far as—

Now, what was this commissioner there for? To allow an officer before him to stop there? You will find him interrupting the men who preferred these charges; you will find him confining them and limiting them; you will find him asking questions right and left, by way of cross-examining on the part of the defendant; but you will not find him assisting to find out anything. But I will do Mr. Fawcett the justice to say that he did fasten upon Major Walsh very effectively, so far as an inquiry of this kind could do it, in the absence of Major Walsh, a charge that was attempted to be put on his own shoulders. Again, there is an important reference on page 53, by one of these clerks, as an excuse for all the irregularities and troubles, the crime and confusion that was permitted to exist in these offices. The charge of parties, intelligent men, who owned interests there, was, that the system was such that corruption was the easiest thing in the world, that men were able to charge for this, that, and every other item, because the system lent itself to such opportunities. Mr. Tabor, who is defending, sees the importance of defending the witness against something that was brought up, and he asks:

Q. You were very busy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The books you kept no one else knows anything about but yourself?—A. I don't think any one else could make head or tail of them—the rush was so great, I had too much work to do; when I got the data that is in them it was rather a disconnected affair, and I have never had time to get on the creeks and make them continuous.

Q. Therefore in your press of business you paid little attention to what was going on in the office?—A. I couldn't.

Now, I refer again to Mr. Ogilvie's report, on page 8—and I think it is a matter for comment that, in regard to a serious charge, this is what he says, and this is all he says:

A charge was brought by the people of the "Nugget" against Mr. Fawcett for having improperly issued a permit to prospect to Mrs. Emma Koch.

The evidence shows that Mr. Fawcett misunderstood this woman, who didn't at the time she applied for the permit use very good English. The act of granting the permit was, we will admit, improper, but there was nothing to show that Mr. Fawcett in any way benefited by it, or any of his friends, Mrs. Koch being an utter stranger to him.

I say that any man who has a head on his shoulders and is not biased, sitting down and reading the evidence in regard to that permit to Mrs. Koch, will say that Mr. Ogilvie, as he shows himself in that sentence, was absolutely biased, was not a man who should have been entrusted with this inquiry, and was endeavouring to shield, not only the people immediately connected with that matter, but Major Walsh, who was connected with it in the most disgraceful manner; and even Mr. Fawcett does not come out of it very well. I will give you references to show that Mr. Fawcett first denied the charge, and afterwards admitted it; and, when he admitted it, he drove back the responsibility on to the shoulders of Major Walsh. It lets a flood of light into the system that prevailed under Major Walsh, and shows the manner of man he was, the things he dared to do, the influence of this woman upon him, the manipulation he practised, and the most arbitrary conduct on his part. It shows the fear and terror which Mr. Fawcett had of Major Walsh. Now, I will come to the evidence. Take, first, the charge and the direct negative given by Mr. Fawcett. Then, when he found himself in such a position that a direct negative would not do, he comes finally to the man who is responsible; but the name of that man is not mentioned by Mr. Ogilvie, nor is a suggestion made that there was anything improper on the part of Major Walsh in this matter. Charge No. 2, submitted by E. C. Allan, found at page 78, reads as follows:—

That at the time pending the issuance of permits to prospect, as appeared in his own notice of 11th July, 1898, at 10 a.m., he did wilfully deviate from his said notice and issue a permit to Mrs. Koch." (Referring to Mr. Fawcett.)

The Commissioner.—There is a case, too, on the list against Mr. Fawcett in connection with Mrs. Koch, are you ready to go on with that case, Mr. Fawcett?

Mr. Fawcett.—I do not remember the lady. Is Mr. Allan in court?

The Commissioner.—I don't see him.

Mr. Fawcett.—To this charge I give the direct negative.

Later on, you will find that he remembered the lady, and that he did not give the negative. Mr. George, who makes the charge, says:

You will support your direct negative by sworn testimony?

Mr. Fawcett.—The charge is true, inasmuch as I deviated from the said notice; for at the time this permit was given no arrangement had been made by the council with reference to issuing permits, and no notice had ever been made public or passed.

Now, I am going into this matter, for it is very important—one of the most important matters that has come up in the inquiry. The Minister of the Interior will remember the case of Nelson & Donald, and he will not be able to reconcile the evidence of Ma-

Major Walsh in that trial with the evidence of Mr. Fawcett in this case as to who was responsible for the closing of Dominion Creek. We have Mr. Fawcett here putting the whole of that responsibility on Major Walsh, and we have Major Walsh, in the case of Nelson & Donald, saying that Mr. Fawcett had acted, and that he concurred in the action which Mr. Fawcett had taken. As I have a very long task ahead of me, the shortest way is to stick to the very evidence. This is Mr. Fawcett's own statement:

The facts of the matter are these: From the beginning there was a difference between myself and the commissioner in reference to the closing of Dominion Creek hills and benches. People had been permitted by myself to prospect these hills and have their applications at the office, nothing preventing them from renewing their certificates except that the returns of survey had not yet come in, and these returns would aid in identifying these hills to show where they were.

Before going on, I may say that I have no doubt, and I submit it to the lawyers of this House who have followed the regulations in this matter, that Mr. Fawcett was correct—that there was no authority to close these creeks, that the regulations contemplated nothing of the kind. If that view be correct, it lends itself to the imputation of corrupt motives on the part of Major Walsh; and of corrupt motives and corrupt conduct on his part I have not the slightest doubt, after reading the evidence. Mr. Fawcett goes on:

Pending that, everything that was necessary to be done had been done with reference to persons prospecting receiving their claims, so that on that account I had objected to this notice, or this so-called legislation if you wish, stating that Dominion Creek hill and benches were closed and readily objected to that on the ground which I have stated, because had they been closed it would have prevented those whom I had permitted to prospect from having their claims put on record, and thrown their claims open with the rest, so that after going on and prospecting with my permission they would have no protection whatever; probably many of them would lose their claims.

Mark you, he did not know this lady, nevertheless, the whole thing came out when she was here in court to give evidence. Mr. Fawcett then went on to say:

So that this lady came to me on the 7th of May (I think some time then), one morning after I had had information about the closing of these hills, and she says, "Major Walsh says I have to have a permit to prospect on Dominion hills, creeks and benches." Well, I told her I knew about no permits; I had heard nothing about any permits. About an hour after, Major Walsh came to me and said: "I think we will issue permits for Dominion Creek, hills and benches." That was the first intimation I had of any permits being issued. "All right," I said. Of course, I came to the conclusion that they concluded I was about right, and to prevent a hasty stampede they had accordingly decided to give a permit to any one who came.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

About an hour later Major Walsh's cook comes back,—

That is the lady I have mentioned.

—and says, "Major Walsh says I have to have a permit." I was very busy at the time, and unthinkingly wrote on a piece of paper: "This will permit the bearer to prospect any section of ground on Dominion hills and benches,"—

This is the way in which the business was conducted. The public were notified that not a soul could get in there, but a whisper from Major Walsh's cook was all that was required for her to obtain a permit of this character.

—and, as near as I can remember, shortly after she came to get a permit for her husband or some other friend. I told her to bring me a written order from Major Walsh—

He would give Major Walsh's cook a permit, but when it came to giving his friends a permit, he said:

—saying that a permit should be granted. I had had time to think the matter over a little. Major Walsh came down a few minutes later, and he said: "Did you give Mrs. Koch a permit?" I replied: "She came and told me you said she was to have a permit." He says: "I will have to get it from her; we will have to appoint a time for the issuing of these permits, and there will have to be public notice given."

Do you suppose that he got it from her? She not only kept the permit, but, as the record shows, the remonstrance on the part of Major Walsh was exceedingly weak, and she followed the permit by a claim. She got all that she wanted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). That is not the evidence. Read a little further on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will come to that, and am only too glad to be corrected.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I notice that just two lines below the evidence is directly to the contrary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By Mr. Fawcett?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, the cook got nothing on her permit.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better leave me alone—not that I complain of the interruption—but if he is a friend of Mr. Fawcett, he had better refrain from interrupting, because Mr. Fawcett admits that he was mistaken when he said in his evidence that she got nothing on her permit. I shall read the few lines to which the hon. gentleman refers:

So he departed and I expected, as he and Mrs. Koch seemed to be particular friends (I think she cooked for him), I thought she would get the permit from him. The end of it was that Mrs. Koch got nothing on her permit; she got no claim; she has received no claim yet on account of that permit. That is the full explanation of the matter.

The hon. Minister of the Interior would not have made that interruption, because, later on, Mr. Fawcett admits that he was entirely mistaken, and that she did get a claim recorded on that permit. Bear in mind, that the cook of Major Walsh got this permit, for there were cooks and Indians and brothers of Major Walsh, who all figure in this matter of taking claims. This was his friend the cook, but he had more friends than the cook. There was a Mr. Charbonneau, and there are Indians and there are brothers who were benefited, and I charge the Major with having been interested with the brothers, but whether that be so or not, we have this fact, that these people whom he took up, of whom he was the ruler, were manipulating claims and manipulating the officers, whisperings in the ear, such as this cook resorted to, with Mr. Fawcett. Mr. Fawcett thought she got no claim, that she took nothing by this, but she knew a little better than that, and he admits that she did, and that she showed him that she did get a claim.

Let us glance at this cook's evidence on pages 128 and 129, for it is rather interesting. Mrs. Koch, being duly sworn, testified as follows:—

At this time I could hardly talk. I heard in my restaurant that Dominion would be thrown open, and it would be a good thing to stake. Everybody had the fever at the time, so I got it too. I made up my mind to go and try and get a claim on Dominion. On the morning of the 28th of June, word was sent me very early in the morning by Dr. Arabella Merrill. I shall not go out without a permit. It needs a permit. Do I have to tell who sent the news? It was from the Indian of Major Walsh, Ambrose Serett; he heard the Major talking in the tent over it, so I went to the office and asked where the Gold Commissioner was. This is the gentleman (pointing to Mr. Fawcett).

Q. Mr. Fawcett, you mean?—A. Yes. I went and asked him for a permit to stake on Dominion. Mr. Fawcett didn't answer me straight. I asked him again, and he asked me who told me. I said (whispering) "A friend." And he could not understand, and all the gentlemen around were laughing over me, and I went and whispered to Mr. Fawcett: "Somebody, the gentleman told me you don't need any permit." I came home and I said it was too good news, it must be something. Dr. Merrill was there and the rest. I said, please to go to the Major and ask him; we want to go out and stake; ask for a permit. He would let us go out for nothing, being only two women. ;—

Dr. Arabella Merrill evidently was a woman.

—would tell us true, so Dr. Merrill went and asked if it needs a permit. He said, "yes, I will go and instruct the Gold Commissioner." That is all I can remember. He went down and came up again, and said, "yes, it needs a permit." The doctor came and said it needed a permit, and I went there again. I told the Gold Commissioner I needed a permit. I got a permit, and was staying in the building. Major Walsh's brother, Philip, came in, and I said,

"Mr. Philip, see what I have got." He opened it; he said, "where did you get it from," I told him I went to the Gold Commissioner and he gave it to me. He said, "you are very lucky, I wish I could get it." He went up to his brother. A short time after that I went to the Major; still in the building. I asked him for a second permit for my friend from the Gold Commissioner. I thought everybody got a permit; I thought, I am ahead, because a woman can run quicker than a man; I asked him—I don't remember correct what the Gold Commissioner answered me, but I remember, "no." I saw then that the Major was coming down the steps, every muscle in his face twitching. Went into the office and called Dr. Merrill from the window, where she was getting a miner's license. Thought she will get a permit, too. He called her up. He said, "tell me, doctor, you have a permit?" She tells him, "I don't get a permit. My friend, Mrs. Emma Koch, got permit." He said, "heavens! this is a mistake. One permit will throw open the whole of Dominion." And Dr. Merrill came down and we were both very down-hearted, because I threw my restaurant over and sold everything I had. I don't know what to do. I was thinking I don't want to make trouble for any official. If it is wrong I will offer the permit back. So I got a letter written to the Major if it is wrong or any trouble, he will please take back his permit, but if it is possible and he can help a poor woman along, he shall let me have a permit, but if it makes any trouble to send for it by 8 o'clock. If not, I will go to Dominion and stake, and then after I stake I will fight for it. So I went over on Dominion and staked. I came home very sick. At the time there were not many ladies up the creek. My! I was sick. I did pick nuggets off of the ground. I saw pretty nuggets and lots of gold. Now, I think I am rich. I don't know what to do to record, because I don't know the law. I don't know anything whatever, so I came home, and after a day or two's rest, I heard stories all around that dozens of ladies went to the Major and the Gold Commissioner, and made it hot for him, for every lady wanted to stake on Dominion. Every lady I showed the permit to told Major Walsh and wanted to stake on Dominion. I went to the Gold Commissioner to record a claim. He said he would not. I told him he has to. He said not. He didn't want to record it. Told me he would not do it for his best friend. I went to the Major and made it just as hard for him. He told me permit was open for Dominion. Told him I staked and I wanted my claim. I went from one to the other and did not get it.

Q. But didn't you get it recorded after?—A. Yes, I got it recorded.

Q. The claim?—A. Yes.

Q. That is all you have to say?—A. Because the Major told me permit was open on Dominion.

Q. Do you remember when your application was accepted?—A. On the 11th.

So, the hon. gentleman will see what I mean. Mr. Fawcett's statement will appear later on. At page 129, Mr. Fawcett examines the witness:

Q. After you came from Dominion, do you remember Major Walsh came to my office to see if I would record?—A. No, you are mistaken. I went to Major Walsh and begged him if he can do anything for my case; I wanted a claim. Said "No, no." I said I will fight. He said he is ready to fight. Then later I was crying and he felt sorry. He said he would come down and talk to you in the office, and he sent me down. He came down then.

Q. That is right, but was your application taken at the office; do you remember who took your application on the 11th?—A. Where everybody has to go in line I went too.

Q. You got the claim some time after that?—A. A long time after that.

Q. After they had all been investigated?—A. Yes, sir, I think I was the last one to get a claim.

Referring to this same page, Mr. Fawcett calls Mr. Craig and examines him:

Q. Do you remember anything about this lady coming for a permit to me?—A. I don't recognize her, but I remember such a case as she speaks of, distinctly.

Q. You remember something about it?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember Major Walsh coming to me that morning after the lady came for the permit?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect what he said?—A. He said he thought the most simple solution of the difficulty would be to issue permits for a specific time for parties to prospect—something to that effect.

Q. Do you recollect her coming a second time?—A. She came for a permit the second time, and, I believe, got one.

Q. Do you remember her conversation on that occasion?—A. I don't know that I noticed it particularly. I was working at the time at an adjoining desk. I recollect she spoke low.

Q. Do you remember of her asking for a friend?—A. I remember of her asking for a friend, but I thought that was at a later date.

Q. That was your impression?—A. The application for the friend was refused; whether her own was or not, I don't know.

By the Commissioner:

Q. You don't know of any understanding between Mr. Fawcett and Mrs. Koch about this permit, why it was given?—A. Not unless it was given on Major Walsh's suggestion.

Q. Have you any reason to know it was given on his suggestion?—A. I know Major Walsh came to the office to see Mr. Fawcett shortly before this lady came back the second time.

Then comes the correction of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) was not aware, and to which I referred:

(The Commissioner addressing Mr. Fawcett):

Q. You made a statement the other day, Mr. Fawcett, to the effect that Mrs. Koch got nothing by this permit?—A. Yes, I was under the impression that her claim was not recorded. She tells me it is. I know I had her application; that is why I was under that impression.

So, then, as at page 130, he says:

Q. You were mistaken in making that statement?—A. Yes.

Q. She is on record?—A. She likely is.

Q. This record would verify her statement?—A. I have not looked at that.

(Addressing Mrs. Koch.)

Q. Have you your certificate with you? Have you the papers for your claim?—A. Yes.

Mr. Fawcett.—That was my impression. I had the application and thought it had not been put on file yet, with the rest, and my impression was she had not recorded the claim. I know she didn't receive record until after they were all investigated by Mr. Cautley. Mrs. Koch here shows her certificate showing that she had recorded (29th August)?—A. After Mr. Cautley went up to Dominion and made the investigation of the stakes, I put it down.

There is further testimony as to how the public were treated in regard to this matter, showing most extraordinary conduct on the part of the authorities. From the quotations to which I have referred, it would look like an honest and explicable transaction; but there was a most extraordinary course attempted. Mr. Fawcett placed the whole matter upon Major Walsh; and Major Walsh in the care of Nelson and Donnelly, as I recollect it, put it upon Fawcett. But the truth was that, contrary to the law and contrary to the regulations, Major Walsh or Mr. Fawcett, or both—one puts it upon the other and the other puts it upon the one—undertook to make a ukase or order that, for a certain time, all the claims on a valuable creek should be withdrawn from the public, either for staking or for application. Then, certain persons got wind of it, before any one else, that this embargo was off and that the creek was open. And out they rushed—people like the cooks and the employees, and some policemen, if I recollect rightly—but I will refresh my recollection of that by referring to the page—and Indians in the employ of Major Walsh, interested with Major Walsh's brothers, Louis, who was away, and Philip, who was with him—and engaged under written agreements, too—and directly representing, as I believe, Major Walsh as well. And when the advertisements are being prepared there is carelessness in the office, and so on, and the result is that this woman, this ignorant woman, and others in the ring are able to get an advantage over the general public. If these facts are true—and I am referring now mainly to this evidence—no greater scandal could have occurred in the administration of the Yukon. Now, the pages to which I refer I intend to give, but, if the House would indulge me by calling it six o'clock—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would like to ask if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) can give us some idea how long he expects to speak?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have so long a speech to make that, if my voice will permit, I am satisfied I shall speak longer than most hon. gentlemen will care to listen. I am performing what I believe to be a duty. When I began I was suffering from a bad bronchial attack. I would ask the Prime Minister to permit me, at a reasonable hour to-night to move the adjournment myself and finish my speech to-morrow. I will undertake to do all I can to discard any irrelevant material, and to speak as long as my voice will permit to-night.

BUBONIC PLAGUE.

Mr. PRIOR. With the consent of the House, I would draw the attention of the Government to a matter of the greatest moment, not only to the Pacific coast, but to the whole of Canada. I refer to the subject of a statement appearing in the morning's paper, in a special telegram from Honolulu via San Francisco. It is a subject to which, I think, we may ask the immediate and earnest attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). The subject is the bubonic plague, and the telegram reads as follows:—

The bubonic plague has come half way across the Pacific Ocean. The Nippon Maru arrived here early this morning and was put in quarantine by the board of health on the report of bacteriologists that a death occurred three days before the vessel arrived here was due to the bubonic plague. The Nippon Maru had a death on board among the Chinese passengers from Hong Kong shortly before reaching Nagasaki, May 26. The Japanese health authorities decided that the suspicion of the death being due to the plague was so strong as to warrant putting the vessel in quarantine and cremating the body. The vessel was in quarantine until June 3. It then proceeded to Yokohama, leaving there for this port June 8. Three days before arriving here there was another death among the Chinese. The ship's surgeon diagnosed the cause of death as uræmic convulsions, but considered the symptoms as suspicious enough to warrant flying the yellow flag when the steamer neared this port and of preserving the body for examination here. No communication between the shore and the vessel is allowed and the health officers who boarded her have gone into quarantine themselves.

This seems to be a most serious matter, because everybody who knows anything about the bubonic plague knows that it is one of the very worst plagues that can be brought into the country. I only draw this to the attention of the Government to ask them whether they are looking after the quarantine in British Columbia, and seeing that every facility is given to the officer in charge there to look after the ships and to order the strictest quarantine to be taken in regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I can assure the hon. gentleman that every precaution will be taken that can possibly be taken. The Director General of Public Health, Dr. Montizambert, has already had his attention drawn to the bubonic plague, and has given instructions to the officers at the different ports to look out for it.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On page 88 of the evidence, I find this extract from the evidence of Mr. Fawcett:

Q. When was that privilege stopped on the hill-sides?—A. The 30th of May.

Q. What led to it?—A. A resolution by Major Walsh and his council.

Q. How was that council constituted?—A. The commissioner was the council himself; but there were other members of the administration whom he invited in for consultation. He sometimes sent written requests that we should call upon him. On this occasion there were present Messrs. Wade, Bliss, McGregor, myself and Mr. Pattullo, who acted as secretary for whatever was done.

Then on page 89 the following appears, speaking of the order that was posted up:—

Q. Did you issue it?—A. Well, on one occasion Mr. Pattullo came with a notice asking me to sign it; it was in relation to closing the hill-sides; but I objected on the ground that I considered there was no basis for the hill-sides being closed; I still maintained my objection to what had been done in council as Gold Commissioner, and I refused to sign the notice.

From my point of view Mr. Fawcett was then acting with due regard to the law of the land.

Mr. Walsh sent and summoned me before him, and he gave me a very strong reprimand. As near as I can remember, he said: "Mr. Fawcett, I want you to understand that it is impertinent on your part to question anything that has been decided in council, and when I sent that notice for you to sign, I want you to sign it." On the spur of the moment I signed this notice without reading it.

Q. Were you not simple in not reading it?—A. Yes; I was simple. I acknowledge this.

Q. Don't you think you should have kept a copy for your own protection?—A. I never thought of the thing at all.

Q. Don't you think you should have made a copy of it before you let it go?—A. Well, I never thought anything would arise out of it. I didn't think any blame or weight would be attached to me. I had no idea there was to be any change in what Major Walsh seemed to be so resolute in passing.

That has reference to what has gone before, this extraordinary exercise of arbitrary authority on the part of Major Walsh in closing this creek, then his equally extraordinary interference in opening it for his cooks and those who happened to be in his good graces.

I had no idea there was to be any change in what Major Walsh seemed to be so resolute in passing. When I signed that I thought I was carrying out what was passed in council.

These words "in council" are misleading. There was no council. These officers who were called in were nothing more than tools of Major Walsh. They were his subordiates; they were officers of very inferior position; they were under his authority and subject to his order and they were, this gathering, this motley gathering, called the council. Then this evidence goes on to say:

Q. What was in this notice?—A. It stated that on and after 11th July that permits to prospect bench claims on Dominion Creek would be granted—for prospecting and staking, and I think there was something that applications would be accepted if approved of by the mining inspector.

Referring to page 90, the commissioner asked:

Q. It is necessary to procure a copy of that notice. Would you procure a copy of it, Mr. Fawcett? That notice, you say, was posted about the 30th of June?—A. Yes, I think it was posted about that time.

Q. Was the intention of that notice carried out?—A. No, it was not carried out, for this reason: I was under the impression that these people who had been permitted by me to take their claims and practically recorded them,—

Mr. FOSTER. It must mean stake claims.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It means stake, I suppose, but I am reading the exact report.

—to take their claims and practically record them would make a great noise if they were deprived of their claims there, and on issuing this notice, which I think was about the 6th of July, or about then, I saw that the whole responsibility seemed to rest upon my shoulders, the notice being over my name, and to relieve the responsibility from myself I wrote a letter to Major Walsh. A copy of that letter I have with me, which I will put in evidence.

The commission then adjourned for lunch.

NOTICE.

The notice recently issued regarding permits to be given on 11th July, 1898, is hereby cancelled and the following substituted therefor:—

HILL AND BENCH CLAIMS

On Dominion Creek are now open for location and prospecting by all free miners.

Those claims shown in the appended sketch, with one exception, will be open only to those who made application for them prior to the completion of the survey, which application was filed at the office of the Gold Commissioner.

Dated at Dawson, Yukon District, this 8th day of July, A.D. 1898.

By order,

THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

Dawson, 7th July, 1898.

Hon. J. Morrow Walsh,
Commissioner for the District of the Yukon, Dawson.

Sir,—Having considered, from different stand-points, the proposed method of opening the hill and bench claims adjoining that portion of Dominion Creek between Upper Discovery and 120 Below, through the issue of permits, thus giving those who have but recently arrived, and others who have never prospected, an equal chance of acquiring a claim with those who during the winter and early spring staked their claims with my permission, spent in some cases a considerable amount in packing over their supplies, also weeks of hard labour prospecting, and who, on appearing at the office to record their claims had their applications noted, and were informed that they would be permitted to record as soon as the returns of the survey were so far completed that the position of the ground staked by them could be exactly determined in relation to the adjoining creek claims. Some of those persons complain very strongly, and I think with good reason, and with both law and equity on their side, that if they are deprived of the claims which they consider theirs by the right of staking and prospecting, through the permit system, they having to take their places in line with those who have been watching an opportunity of acquiring the benefit from their labours by making the journey more speedily than they are able to make it from Dawson, that they intend to carry the issue to Ottawa, and that they have had the assurance of their counsel that their case is a good one. I think myself that if the proposed plan is carried out it will work great mischief before the last is heard of it. I further think that on constitutional grounds it will be conceded that when the creek or hill claims are thrown open for location and recording, and other permit than the miner's license granted them under the mining regulations is not required, to allow them to stake and prospect on any ground where they are not prevented by the mining regulations. Even now I am of the opinion that it would be advisable to protect the claim of those whose applications were accepted at the office, allow them to record without further staking, or give them ample time to redate their stakes, and proclaim the balance of the hill-side open for prospecting and recording. It would be an easy matter to have the proclamation posted at this office, and at the post office, about the time announced for issuing the permits, and there could be no complaint that the people had not received due notice of the opening, the proclaiming taking the place and answering the same purpose as the permits.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

Turning to page 92, and continuing the evidence of Mr. Fawcett, he says:

(Taking the second notice): The words "The notice recently issued regarding permits to be given on the 11th July is hereby cancelled" refers to the first notice; as far as I remember I put no date on it myself; the typewriter put a date on the notice. Of course what I had in my mind was that this notice would not be printed and would not be published on the date on which the permits would be given, and after, when people came for permits they would be confronted with the notice; that is what I had in my mind, but it happened otherwise.

Q. What was the date of the issuance?—A. Dated "Dawson, 8th July. By order, Thomas Fawcett, Gold Commissioner."

Later on:

Q. You didn't date it at all?—A. I didn't date it at all.

Q. And the executive part of it you left to others?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, under that notice, had you any knowledge of any one taking advantage of the terms of it?—A. Well, at least, I heard some one saying people were starting for Dominion.

That is on Dominion Creek.

Q. Any before this was published?—A. The night of the 8th.

Q. Was that published on the 8th?

I call your attention to this particularly, Mr. Speaker :

A. It was published on the morning of the 9th.

Q. Well, then, were they starting on the night of the 8th?—A. So it was reported; people were on the trail, and over there already, thinking it would open on the 11th.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of any one?—

A. I have no knowledge.

Q. You didn't instruct any one?—A. None, and no none in connection with the office started.

Q. You gave no advice?—A. No.

Q. Didn't suggest to any one to take advantage?—A. No; there were two men working on my party who started about 2 o'clock on the 9th.

"Two men working on my party." I suppose that means working under his direction, officers in his employment. I do not know; the commissioner does not seem to have pressed to have that explained. I merely offer the idea that comes to my mind, and leave it to the consideration of the House.

Q. How did the public come to the knowledge that notices were to be up before that time?—A. I don't know.

Q. That is all you know of the history of the case?—A. As far as I can remember. I know that Mr. Swineheart was in on the afternoon of the 8th July; saw Major Walsh and had a conversation with him when I was upstairs. I think it——could be ascertained from him that the notice was published by Major Walsh's instructions, and arrangements made by him and not by me.

Turning to page 93—

Some hon. gentleman may not have followed this evidence quite as closely as I have, and I would ask the House, Mr. Speaker, to recollect the entourage of Major Walsh, who had got in on the Dominion Creek—these cooks and others in his employ—and I would call attention to the fact of the advantage obtained by those who are very close to Major Walsh, in connection with Mr. Fawcett's evidence.

Q. Do you remember your attention being called to the fact that notice was given to throw the claims open at the moment it was posted up?—A. That was my understanding; that the moment the notice was posted up the claims were thrown open, but I didn't expect it would be posted up before the 11th. I understood as soon as these notices were posted up these claims were thrown open and not before, and as this was to take place if the permits it should not have been posted before the 11th,—

I ask that that be marked.

—that was my understanding; that it was posted up before the 11th was a matter over which I had no control and no knowledge.

Q. When did you learn it was posted up before the 11th?—A. I saw one of the police—

I mention here, because the evidence bears it out later on, that this was one of the men acting under Major Walsh directly.

—I saw one of the police carrying a bundle down on Saturday morning and posting them up; that was on the morning of the 9th, at 9 o'clock.

Q. On the morning of the 9th these notices were posted up for the first time?—A. One at the office for the first time.

Q. And your expectations were that they would not be posted up until the 11th?—A. That was my intention and my expectation.

Mr. Galpin.—I would like to explain the position I took; if you had been here last summer, sir, there was about three or four thousand men all hot on this very question. They appointed a committee to make an investigation, as they had heard several rumours about the throwing open of these claims. I was on that committee and am here to-day to carry out a promise I made to them that I would look into the matter to the best of my ability and find out why the muddle arose. Mr. Fawcett, how long would it take for a man to go and stake a claim on Dominion and come back to Dawson and make application?

Mr. Fawcett.—That would depend upon the ability of the man; the shortest time I think would be twelve hours.

By the Commissioner :

Q. What would an average time be?—A. It would be hard to make it in one day; if they were not strong it would take two.

Q. Do you think it possible to go out and come back in twelve hours?—A. I think not; I think twenty-four hours would be the shortest time.

Q. By twelve hours, you mean one trip?—A. Yes.

Q. Going out and coming back you think would be about twenty-four hours?—A. I think at least. Monday morning was the first time they appeared at the office to record.

Q. Leaving Friday?—A. Leaving Saturday; of course the office wasn't open on Sunday; they might have been ready for anything I know.

By Mr. Galpin :

Q. This previous notice, a copy of which is not here, was sent, I believe, all over the country? It was sent to Stewart River and I know of people who came down from Stewart River to get a permit. They got here just as this notice appeared saying that no permit was required. Now, Mr. Fawcett tells us that that was dated 8th July. I think the paper says so. That was on Friday. They were not printed, I believe, until Saturday. On the 8th, on Friday, I suppose Mr. Swineheart had them, and what was to prevent Mr. Swineheart from sending out a number of people on Friday when he had the manuscript in hand. Could Mr. Fawcett tell us if one of the council did send out anybody, giving them information that these were thrown open?—A. I don't know; I don't know if Captain Bliss was on that council.

I call attention again to this description of the gentlemen whom Mr. Walsh called in on this occasion, as "the council."

Q. You don't know whether Captain Bliss gave that information to anybody?—A. No.

Q. Was Captain Bliss on the council?—A. Yes.

Mr. Galpin.—I think I should have mentioned that. I bought a claim on Dominion from a person, a man who has since left the country. He said that he was given information by Captain Bliss, and says others as well knew of it, and he met people going back ; this was before the notice was put up.

The Commissioner.—That is only a statement; we can't take it as evidence.

The commissioner says :

That is only a statement ; we cannot take it as evidence.

And good man as the commissioner was, he did not ask on any occasion that I can find that any one should be put in a position to make that statement on oath, or, as in the case of Pulford, to send him to jail for not giving him full information on that subject. I will not go fully into the evidence except to show that if Mr. Fawcett is to be believed in regard to all this illegal conduct of closing Dominion Creek, he protested. The act was done by Major Walsh, and in regard to the opening of this creek, it shows that these gentlemen whom Major Walsh calls a "council," had a meeting, that they issued notices to open the creek, that people in close connection with Major Walsh got this information, that they staked and afterwards recorded claims in advance of any other people. On this subject I will have something to say later on, wholly and apart from the evidence before that commission. I do not profess to have made a thorough examination of the evidence taken by Mr. Ogilvie, but I am giving a large part of it that seemed to me to be of importance. With the exception of the reference that I will make to this commission in another connection, my point has been to show three things in regard to it. First of all, that the man who was appointed ought never to have been appointed, that he did not appreciate the position in which he was placed, that he was there to inquire and probe into these matters, and not to put men on their trial and to conduct a criminal trial or a quasi criminal trial with all the necessary precaution that surrounds the accused, when he is properly put on his trial ; and, thirdly, that notwithstanding the manner in which that commission was constituted, there appeared the most extraordinary revelations—and we have got but just a peep into the condition of affairs that existed during Major Walsh's time. One more reference to the evidence taken before this commission, and I will leave it for a moment. At page 94, after the commissioner said "that is only a statement," Mr. Galpin said :

Mr. Galpin.—Applications were received on July 13th. That would give little time to go and come back even though they knew on the 9th. The application for the claim I have was received on the 14th.

Mr. Tabor, who was acting for the commissioner as counsel, said :

Mr. Tabor.—You say this was given as an exhibit to Major Walsh and it should have been returned to you ?

Mr. Fawcett.—Not necessarily ; it was made by Major Walsh's instructions for him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Q. You just simply sent it to him for his approval?—A. It was his order, practically.

Q. He had control of it after that?—A. Yes.

Again, showing the authority that was exercised by Major Walsh, who locally was responsible for so much of the misconduct and maladministration that occurred, but who, after all, can very well fall back upon the gentlemen whom I see opposite on the Treasury benches, who, recklessly, regardless of every principle that ought to have influenced them in their organization of the government of this territory, disregarded their duty, and in the most reckless manner clothed improper parties with authority, and who, for all their maladministration and for all their wrong-doing, must be and remain wholly responsible. I wish to refer now to some observations that have been made in connection with the constitution of this commission, to prove my statement that it could not satisfy the public mind of the country, and that it could not satisfy the intelligent critic in any part of the Empire. I shall quote from the "National Review" of May, 1899. I do not quarrel with that "Review," but I will say that, on the whole, their observations under the heading of "Greater Britain" have been unduly favourable, in my judgment, to the Canadian Administration of the day. It may be that, like the London "Times," their cue is to support whenever possible the existing Administration, and so this leading magazine in England has been exceedingly kind in its criticism of the Canadian Government. It has eulogized the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), for instance, and that is going a long way, if the "National Review" only knew all we know in regard to his administration. The "National Review" has, in fact, eulogized the Government as a whole, but in its description of events that took place here this session, I will quote a few lines from that magazine of 1889, where it says :

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper very rightly maintained his demand for a judicial inquiry, and was ultimately defeated by 101 votes to 48, confidence being confirmed in the Ogilvie investigation. From the point of view of the British investor this decision is regrettable. Commissioner Ogilvie is an upright and honourable man, but he is not strong enough, nor does he occupy a sufficiently independent position to conduct the searching inquiry the occasion demands.

Mr. Speaker, I have made no attack, and I desire to make no attack upon Mr. Ogilvie personally ; but I think that crisp sentence in the "National Review" expresses, perhaps more happily than I in the heat of debate may have expressed, my criticism in regard to Mr. Ogilvie. I do not withdraw in the slightest degree my animadversion upon what I regard as his cruel and harsh remarks to men untrained in law, to men who were not given the advantage of counsel such as in the Spinks investigation the Government gave to the complainants, when they were endeavouring to remonstrate in proper language, and temperate language, against the view which the commissioner took of his limited jurisdiction, which particularly controlled the complainants and the petitioners who put on foot this investigation at the outset. In a paper published by gentlemen who support the Administration, and quoted by the Winnipeg "Daily Tribune," which I believe is edited, owned and controlled by a gentleman supporting the Administration, I find further evidence; and I ask the attention of the House to these quotations in order that I may not be considered as taking an extreme view in the criticism that I have made on this investigation. I ask the attention of the House to what was said by Mr. A. R. Lee, who was summoned before the commission. The Edmonton "Bulletin" published and the Winnipeg "Tribune" copied the following:—

A. R. Lee, formerly of Edmonton, writes from Dawson under date of March 7, stating, in regard to the commission of investigation: "I had the pleasure of waiting upon the court on the opening day in answer to a subpoena which turned out, however, to have been served on the wrong man, consequently, as I had waked 60 miles to attend court, it was of interest to know who would compensate me for the loss of time and out of pocket expenses incidental to my journey to town. Mr. Ogilvie said he had no authority to pay witnesses their expenses even. Now what is the use of "posters" setting forth Mr. Ogilvie's invitation to men who know of any malfeasance connected with Government officials to come forward and make their complaints known? In the first place, most people are under the impression that the investigation is only a trap whereby the Government can ascertain what claims have been procured illegally, and through collusion with Government employees in order to deprive present owners of their property. I never heard of such a general feeling of insecurity to property, as prevails in this unfortunate territory, and can scarcely realize that it is part of the British Empire. When this objection does not apply, is it reasonable to expect men to walk 50 or 100 miles, lose their employment (if they are working for wages or their time if working for themselves) expenses all the time they are kept in town, and receive no compensation whatever for all this, in order to get the privilege of telling Mr. Ogilvie that they were forced to pay some one at the post office $2 before they could obtain a letter, or $5 or $10 to the doorkeeper of the Gold Commissioner's office in order to gain admission to that holy of holies?"

And I myself have conversed with gentlemen whose word I have no reason to doubt, who were, I believe, English gentlemen in the truest sense of the word, who told me of the necessity to bribe, and to pay these fees over and above official salaries, but yet who, when I asked them: "Will you give me your names and the right to use your names, and the day and date when you did these things?" answered: "Why should I, with my claims? I hold my property under the Government of Canada. The regulations surrounding my rights are made by Order in Council. There are, however, so many cases in which I must appeal to the discretion of the Gold Commissioner, or later on possibly to the discretion and judgment of the Minister of the Interior; and do you suppose that I am going to go to the expense of a hundred dollars or so to come down to Dawson, to leave my claim and the representation of my claim, at my own cost and charges, in order to show that I had to buy a Government official for $20, $30, or $50, and to go back at my own cost and charges? It is not for me to cleanse the Augean stable. No duty rests on me to do this thing at great cost and charges." And can you expect poor men, who through this robbery and extortion have been unable to obtain claims, at their own cost and charges to wait on the time and pleasure of a Royal Commission constituted as Mr. Ogilvie's commission was constituted, and without the advantages which I referred to to-day, and which I must mention again, that obtained where this House and this country have said they wanted a full and thorough investigation as to whether corrupt practices prevailed in any constituency, and to obtain which Mr. Blake said you must require that the inquiring authority will pardon those who come forward and make a clean breast, and also provide that the expenses of the witnesses shall be defrayed by the Crown? Then the Winnipeg "Daily Tribune," which, as I say, is edited by a member supporting this Government, assists me further in showing that my impressions, as indicated by the stand I am taking in this matter, are not wholly characterized by political bias. On April 17, 1899, that paper said:

As it is the best of Liberal doctrine to let the fullest light into all charges that may be made, it may be assumed that honest Liberals will hold up both hands for the most searching inquiry at the right time.

Again, in the same article:

Nobody doubts Mr. Ogilvie's honesty and integrity, but few will say that he possesses the qualifications necessary to conduct a searching inquiry into the mess which returning Klondikers seem to be unanimous in declaring existed there.

So again, in the same paper, the date of which I have not under my hand, because it is an extract from the "Tribune" appearing in another paper, it is said:

The people of Canada are satisfied that all is not right in the Yukon; we doubt if there is an honest man in the Yukon who is not scandalized by what has occurred, and may still be occurring there.

Then, further down:

The Government has infinitely less to fear from the fullest investigation and exposure than it has from any attempt to prevent or burk the most complete inquiry. It is very plausible to cry that no specific charges have been laid. This is not true, but even if it had been it does not help the case. Wrongs have been committed.

And so on. One more reference to the Liberal press. This is to the Victoria "Times," a paper published in the city of Victoria, in the province from which I come, and where perhaps we are brought more directly into contact with the injury that is done to Canada, not merely to its good name but to its business interests, by the conditions which have existed, and which, though in a less degree, I think I shall be able to show—at any rate, prima facie—exist to this very day. This paper, the Victoria "Times," a Liberal paper, and an ardent supporter of the Government, said as follows:—

In the opinion of the "Times" the course which the Government should take is quite clear. All charges should be thoroughly investigated, and by a commission having the confidence of the country. The Government and not the Opposition must take the lead in prosecuting such an investigation. If officials have done wrong they should be exposed and punished, it matters not what their politics, or by whom appointed. Now that direct charges have been formulated on the floor of Parliament by a prominent member of the House, nothing short of an exhaustive inquiry by a non-partisan commission will properly meet the situation. The investigation by Mr. Ogilvie may be good enough in its way, his findings may be absolutely fair and just, and cover the whole ground; but partisan politicians, who think more of making a point against the Government than of reforming abuses, will not accept them as final. An investigation that does not silence criticism has failed in its object.

Now, I have a stronger appeal to make to the Government—no, I am speaking to-day to Parliament. I am arraigning the Government, let there be no misunderstanding on this head. The position I am taking, I take with full premeditation. The Government ask the confidence of this House. They ask us to resolve ourselves into a committee to vote supplies, so that they may expend those supplies in carrying on the Government of Her Majesty; and with the information that has come to me, and in the position I am warranted in taking, I believe the proper time is now to ask, not the Government, but to ask the free Parliament of free Canada to consider whether the time has not come for the thorough investigation demanded not only by these miners in the city of Dawson, but by the press of England and the press of Canada generally, even by Liberal organs such as I have quoted to-day, when, not being coerced by the party whip or lash, they said, on the spur of the moment, that such an investigation of a non-partisan character was absolutely essential to silence all criticism, or, in other words, to show that if wrongs have been committed in Canada, the day had not yet come when the Canadian people could not rise to the occasion, and, after a full and fearless investigation, punish all who were guilty of these wrongs, whether they occupy a position high or low in the service of the country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

And so, before the full brunt of all this evidence was felt, before the damning evidence came out, even before Mr. Ogilvie, what was the position that the hon. Minister of the Interior himself assumed? When he wrote to me, as he did through his deputy, asking that I should state charges, he never warned me that I would be abused and vilified for hitting below the belt if I spoke my own mind thoroughly. He never told me, when asking me, to give such information as had come to my ears, that if I dared to name a man who was pointed at by the finger of scorn of the people who had expended their money and risked their lives in the Yukon, my name would be held up to scorn and contempt. No, he told his deputy to write and ask me to forward to Mr. Ogilvie, or through the Department of the Interior, all such information as I had heard of or had collected in the province of British Columbia. He asked me, knowing that I had never been in Dawson, to send all the hearsay evidence I could to his officer, to his wife's uncle, in order that it should be investigated. He never told me to remember that though he wrote in December, they would not inquire into such things as could be proved by evidence to have had any connection with any events later than the 25th August, 1898, but in December, 1898, he asked me to disclose to him and his department, and through him to Mr. Ogilvie, everything that I had heard in connection with the maladministration of the Yukon. Well, because I took a different view, because I appreciated the state of affairs differently from him, what was my punishment, so far as he could administer it, so far as the men behind him could administer it? It was this. When I came here, and from my place in this House undertook to give the information that I had heard, declining to send it to his wife's uncle, I was told that I had made—what was it? A disgraceful speech, a shocking speech—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And an hon. member, whose son is affected in some respects, says "hear, hear." There are several members probably who would join in the "hear, hear," for that same reason. Was it fair, was it manly, to ask a man to sit down and send, over his hand and signature, any information that he possessed, in order that it might be investigated, and then, when that man, as a member of the Parliament of Canada, chose to rise in his place in Parliament and state the information he had received, to brand him with having made a shocking speech, with having hit below the belt, with having referred to names inside this House in such a way that he would not dare to do outside this House?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landarkin), the father of one of the young men in the service, says "hear, hear." These are the men who would shout you down when you ask to be shown some spirit of fair-play. Would it have been more manly for me to write a private letter to the Minister of the Interior, at his invitation, reflecting upon Major Walsh and Mr. Wade and the different officers, than to come out here in the open, in the Parliament of my country, and make the statements that he had asked me to make to him in a private letter?

At any rate, let me refer to the letter of the 2nd December. What was his request? His deputy wrote to me that the Minister appreciated the difficulty of getting information as to any specific acts of wrong-doing, and asked if I were in possession of—and I quote now the exact words:

Any information whatever showing or relating to any specific acts of malfeasance of office on the part of any officer during the past two years.

That was the invitation extended to me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Down to December.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Down to the 2nd December, 1898. There was no limit; it would have seemed extraordinary if there had been. That covered hearsay evidence, and it did not limit the information to acts committed previous to August 25th. A fair answer to that, had I been willing to adopt the plan the Minister suggested of sending this up to Mr. Ogilvie, the officer of his department, would have been to state all I knew about Major Walsh. Would it not? Is there a man can say no to that? If there had been immorality and drunkenness in connection with Major Walsh, and I had heard of it, and if that immorality and that drunkenness affected the public in their dealings with Major Walsh, if I had accepted that invitation, would I not have been, as a man of honour, bound to state such information? I do not presume that any one would suppose that I had been in Dawson or that I had any direct testimony. Everything the hon. Minister asked me for was, on its face, hearsay and in the nature of hearsay evidence. I did what I had a perfect right to do. I declined to put into his possession any information that had come into my hands; and if he says that his commissioner was right in ruling out everything connected with anything after the 25th of August, 1898, my discretion was very well exercised. According to the plan these gentlemen adopted, it would have remained locked up in the possession of the Minister of the Interior. I replied on the 10th of December, disapproving of the Ogilvie Commission, and preferring "a perfectly independent Royal Commission." I have referred to the matter of my treatment when I said here what I was asked to say in a letter to the Minister of the Interior, which would have been published by sending it to Mr. Ogilvie, according to the way in which that letter was framed. And here I want to ask your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the conditions which confront us. If the Government propose to follow the policy outlined in the Ogilvie commission, and to sit in their offices, supported by a majority that has heretofore followed them through most difficult passes and around most difficult curves, and to defy every man in this House or out of it to come forward, and at his own cost and charges bring witnesses from Australia, bring witnesses from England, bring them from the different parts of the Dominion of Canada—itsself half a continent—in order to support a charge that he dares to make regarding the delinquency of an official, then, of course, carte blanche is given to the officials in the Yukon, even at this day, to rob and plunder at their own sweet will. Let us see whether there are not some responsibilities that ought to prevent the Government of this country taking that position. We are dealing, mark you, with a territory under the particular charge of the Administration of the day. We are not dealing with Manitoba, we are not dealing with any of the old provinces, where the administration of criminal justice and the prosecution of criminals is in the sole charge and under the sole direction of the local authorities. We are dealing with a case where the responsibility for the suppression of crime and the punishment of criminals devolves primarily on the gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches in this House. And in connection with this matter of prosecuting charges under similar circumstances in England, we know now that, if the suspicion of a crime arises in any part of the United Kingdom, you will have the hearty co-operation and support and the support of the exchequer under the direction of able prosecutors, and you can ferret out the crime where it exists and punish the criminals who committed it. In an interesting article in the "Law Magazine," 1864-65, vol-18, this whole question is discussed. I would ask the attention of the House to a very short reference to the subject, which becomes now primarily important, for we are dealing with a portion of the Dominion of Canada which is as much under the direction, in these matters, of the Attorney General of Canada as is London under the direction of the Attorney General of England. In this very able article, it is said:

And, depend upon it, that while, as we have been told by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, the existing system of private prosecution too frequently operates as a direct encouragement to crime, the greatest discouragement that could influence and deter the mind of willing and unscrupulous offenders would be the knowledge that there was an official sentinel of the state whose peculiar duty it was to keep a vigilant eye on all that relates to the public and domestic security, and who would with all the unbounded resources of the position track out the criminal and bring him speedily and surely to justice.

Now, some hon. gentlemen may say to me: You are travelling far afield. I do not think so. The day has come when the spirit of that article is appreciated—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does that apply to Winnipeg?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will tell the hon. gentleman what applies to Winnipeg. I was just coming to that. Manitoba is not and was not like the North-west Territories. In Manitoba the responsibility for the administration of criminal justice is local; in the North-west Territories it is federal. I am glad that my hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) has reminded me of this point. In the province of Manitoba, notwithstanding that the responsibility for the administration of the criminal law was local, we have a noted case where the Federal authorities intervened owing to the financial difficulties of the local administration.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does that take cognizance of the case the hon. gentleman established in the Public Accounts Committee the other day, the case of an official who drew his salary and did not do any work?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A case of robbery.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it will facilitate business very much if hon. members who desire to make an interruption ask the permission of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member to explain, if what he has just said applies to the case he established the other day in the Public Accounts Committee, of the officer in the Inland Revenue Department who drew his salary and did not work? And will the hon. gentleman tell us who that officer is?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that, later on, if I have time, I will show that there is a man in the Yukon who is a son of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin), who has just interrupted me. And there is some private correspondence where it is said: We hope you will say something good about young Landerkin; it would please his father. The hon. gentleman called my attention to Winnipeg—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, to the case you established.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) has some maudlin idea—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Mr. LANDERKIN. Maudlin? Does the hon. gentleman talk about maudlin?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, maudlin.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) should be ashamed of himself to be so fresh.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) will be good enough, if he wishes to make an interruption in the debate, to ask permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor. If the hon. gentleman who has the floor allows it, he may interrupt.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am amazed at my own moderation when the hon. gentleman dares to interrupt me.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You are in the same state you were in the other night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Coming to the province of Manitoba, to which my hon. friend had directed my attention, where the responsibility for the administration of criminal justice was local, let us see what was done. We had before this House the evidence in regard to a matter where, if strict rules and procedure precedents had been observed, no prosecutions would have been ventured on by any self-respecting Attorney General in the province of Manitoba without the orders and directions of the House of Commons. In England the rule is, under similar legislation to ours, that, when offences are committed against the laws for the protection of the House of Commons, those prosecutions are conducted under the order and direction of the House of Commons of England. But in the case in point, it was supposed that there had been a violation of the laws for the protection of elections to this House; and the present Minister of the Interior, when the Conservative party were in power at Ottawa, after the general election of 1896, undertook to go to great expense, to employ detectives to ferret out information, not at his own expense, but at the expense of the Dominion treasury, relying, as he did, on being able to induce the incoming Prime Minister of a Liberal Administration to father the Bill and put it on the federal treasury. In regard to that, we had the evidence of Mr. Howell, who, acting either for the Minister of the Interior privately, as he first did, or for the Minister of the Interior when he was Attorney General of Manitoba, as some of his evidence suggests, or as the private prosecutor for the Dominion treasury, as some of his other evidence suggests—we have his evidence that from the 26th of June, 1896, and perhaps an earlier date, he began to gather evidence from all sources in order to prove that men in Manitoba had been guilty of offences against the Act in relation to the election of members to the Federal Parliament. He testified that Mr. Sifton told him to employ detectives to get evidence, to send them all over the country; that he gathered evidence, and, after some five months of gathering evidence all over the province of Manitoba, he was told to go on and prosecute. He further testified in the prosecution that, where there is a suspicion of crime, it is usual to get detectives to work up the case." He had done it under Mr. Sifton's instructions before, and, to use his own language again, he said: "When we get a suspicion in the province of Manitoba, we start." He was gathering information all along during the autumn, gathering it from all sources, and some time in July, and again he said: "It would be a gradual collection of hints until I got the evidence." There is a case in Manitoba, as I have explained, that was primarily under the charge and administration of the Attorney General of Manitoba. His excuse was, as it will appear later on, that they had not the money to tackle such a formidable case as a suspicion that there had been a stuffing of ballots and illegal conduct at a Dominion election. The hon. gentleman got the cooperation of gentlemen opposite, got the money out of the people of Canada, to carry out this work, which resulted in some 23 prosecutions, and the conviction of a man who was a self-confessed scoundrel in the box.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to go further back than the result from Manitoba, I remember when the Prime Minister, drawing from his reading and great learning, gave us in this House a reference to that interesting work of Parkman, the book of Wolfe and Montcalm. The Prime Minister, perhaps, has forgotten the time when he drew from his recollection and referred to those unhappy days in the Empire of France, when, just such things were occurring that undermined that empire away out here in Canada, as I, in my heart, believe have been occurring in this part of fair Canada to-day, the Yukon territory. The hon. gentleman referred then to the robbery and the corruption that weakened the hands of Montcalm, to these scoundrels Bigot, Péan and others. To that stage in the history of our country I refer in this connection because, whatever may be said about the Government of France in those days, when they were dealing with that condition of affairs away across the sea, and far away from the central government, they did not hesitate, even in the times so long ago, to do in the case of Quebec just what the Minister of the Interior was able to induce the Government in 1896 to do in the case of Manitoba, employ detectives to ferret out the delinquents, in order to bring them to justice. For it would appear that, however bad and corrupt those local governors had been, and those local officers had been, they were not afraid in Paris that the detectives would bring the crime any nearer to Paris than Quebec was.

And consequently we have, for instance, Major Walsh, of whom I have much to say before I finish my observations—we have heard from him his denial. I am not going to say that I would ask this Parliament to believe that Major Walsh, or any of those poor men who were under him, were absolutely guilty. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, I must press my case hard, I must press it strong, for the case at present is only for an inquiry. My case is based on information that convinces me, in the absence of a thorough inquiry, of the guilt of these men. But that does not mean that I would pass my verdict on them now once and for all. I am attempting to prevail upon this House in order that such an inquiry, such an investigation, as is sanctioned by the mother land, by the practice of the mother of all Parliaments, that has been sanctioned by our own Parliament, to fasten upon the guilty the crimes of which they have been guilty. But in all this let it be understood that if I happen to use an expression to the contrary effect, I do not mean it. I do not ask that these men should be prejudged, but I am pressing earnestly to-day for an inquiry, I must say, in the absence of hearing the other side, but they should be heard, if I can have my wish, not only on the preliminary inquiry, but they must be heard in the criminal courts of the country, no matter what the result of the preliminary inquiry may be. Let it not be considered for a moment that I am prejudging the case of these men. I am speaking of the evidence before me, I am showing what it points to, I am charging home guilt on a prima facie statement, I am charging home guilt without the other side being heard, I am charging home guilt without these men having what they are entitled to, a trial before a British jury, and British fair-play. But I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have got to make such an overwhelming case, I believe I have to press this case so strongly, that I have not the ghost of a chance of even a preliminary inquiry, unless I make that case as strong as it possibly can be made.

Now, we have Major Walsh heard on the floor of this House by a letter, where, while he does not deny, in so many words, the charges that were made against him, he challenges proof. Well, no lawyer would have been surprised at that, suppose him to be guilty; that would be the first thing he would do, if he were indicted for some of the crimes that I believe, on the evidence I will submit to you, he has been guilty of.

Again, with that guarding sentence, subject to what he would prove on the trial, I believe I am in possession of information in regard to this man and others that if it were in the possession of the public prosecutor in England these men would be treated as men who had to stand their trial and must be brought to the bar. But this is not an unusual circumstance. In the case of Bigot, when he was berated for maladministration, Vaudreuil wrote to the Colonial Minister :

I cannot conceal from you, Monseigneur, how deeply M. Bigot feels the suspicions expressed in your letters to him. He does not deserve them, I am sure. He is full of zeal for the service of the King ; but as he is rich, or passes as such, and as he has merit, the ill-disposed are jealous, and insinuate that he has prospered at the expense of His Majesty. I am certain that it is not true, and that nobody is a better citizen than he, or has the King's interest more at heart.—p. 31.

That was the defence of Bigot, but when these charges had been followed up, Bigot was tried and found guilty in Paris, and how did the Government get the evidence ? They did not sit back in their seats and challenge men to take any particular risk or responsibility ; they did not do as Mr. Ogilvie has done, ask for specific charges to be made by men untrained to all the difficulties and intricacies of legal channels. They sent detectives away from Paris in these old days on the long journey to Quebec to ferret this thing to the very bottom and to obtain information, if information could be obtained, wherewith the Government authorities in Paris could enforce the law and punish those who had been guilty in the performance of the high responsibility and trust reposed in them. As Parkman goes on to say :

One Querdisien-Tremais was sent from Bordeaux as an agent of Government to make investigation. He played the part of detective, wormed himself into the secrets of the confederates, and after six months of patient inquisition traced out four distinct combinations for public plunder. Explicit orders were now given to Bigot, who, seeing no other escape, broke with Cadet, and made him disgorge two millions of stolen money. The Commissary-General and his partners became so terrified that they afterwards gave up nearly seven millions more. Stormy events followed, and the culprits found shelter for a time amid the tumults of war. Peculation did not cease, but a day of reckoning was at hand.

There is an instance of what might be done by a Government which is desirous of following up all delinquents and punishing those guilty of crime. But the difficulties in this case are enormous. To men informed at all in connection with the history of Canada and of the situation of the Yukon, the position we are occupying in Ottawa to-day, no argument would be needed. As I have already mentioned every month's delay in following these men is a shield to the criminals, if the criminals there be. Time is running, and time is everything to the guilty, if there were those guilty of a breach of trust. Time is everything to the host of offences under the Criminal Code on the part of public officers. Speaking generally two years is the limitation for the prosecution of an offence under that Act. You have officers sent out, appointed in 1896 ; you have officers sent out in 1897, the bulk of them in 1897 ; you have the robbery, the peculation and the conspiracy to rob and everything else charged in 1898. We are running on and now we are away into 1899, and the cry that goes up everywhere is not to condemn men unheard but to take some action when there is reason for suspicion, to follow the lines that you follow, not as in Manitoba, but as they would be followed in England, and as, with your federal jurisdiction you are bound to follow in the Yukon Territory. Witnesses of crime, men who have been robbed, men who have been victimized, men who have been deprived of their rights came from every part of the world to this extraordinary and unique locality, and now they are scattered and gone. The man who takes my position in this House takes some risks, and I am free to acknowledge that. The witness is here to-day and is away to-morrow. The witness that meets me on the coast and unbosoms himself to me of the wrongs that have been practiced upon him, who upbraids your country, who asks me whether there is no redress and who makes an appeal to you, so that you feel that you should take some responsibility in regard to the matter, have disappeared after you have taken that responsibility. You may have taken the responsibility and made charges on his statement, and when the time comes you find that you have reckoned without your host. He may have died ; he may be out of reach, and being of the class of the mining population, you cannot count upon being able to trace him at the required time. Take the kaleidoscopic changes of officials. Was there ever anything like it ? The conditions of the country may be extraordinary, but look at the condition which confronts you. You have Major Walsh in charge practically from May till August ; you have Judge Maguire from some time in February till August ; you have other officers, and suddenly they are out of the country. They have gone. Naming these two or three represents the condition of many. You have your $2 and your $1.50 officers, you have your cooks at about the same price, but they do not remain. Many of these men would be valuable witnesses, but they are all of transitory spirits, here to-day and away to-morrow. More serious than all, Mr. Speaker, in a case of this kind, when you are pressing it on the attention of a House where there is a vast majority subordinate to the Treasury benches, I recognize the fact that the authorities are involved. I would not have brought this matter solemnly to the attention of the House if it were only to get the head of the son of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin), or if it were to obtain the scalp of the cousin of some other hon. member of this House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Perhaps of your own brother-in-law in Winnipeg.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Or of my own brother-in-law. These are not the men against whom I fulminate. The men against whom I bring the brunt of my charge sit opposite to me. The men who are on trial in this matter, so far as they can be on trial, are the men on the Treasury benches, but the men sitting behind them, of course, want the strongest possible case to be made out before they would withdraw their allegiance from them. These are a few of the difficulties in proving this case, and a few of Mr. Ogilvie's difficulties, an officer appointed by these gentlemen, censured at one time by one of these hon. Ministers, connected by the closest ties with one of these hon. Ministers. Think of his position in conducting a formal investigation. After all said and done, think of the position of the miner, of the man who owns a claim in the Klondike, when he goes into court and dares to beard these men, dares to charge that rascality was rampant in the Gold Commissioner's office, dares to charge that the pet and appointee, the creature of the hon. Minister of the Interior, was himself corrupt and immoral. Think of the risk these men run. They know that the title they hold their lands by is under the regulations framed by these gentlemen on the Treasury benches; they know that the discretionary power is vast, even in the local officers whom they might attempt to upbraid. Take the Gold Commissioner's powers, take the various powers that ultimately are exercised by the Minister of the Interior, who—to the disgrace of this Parliament, whether under a Conservative or Liberal regime—has the extraordinary authority which he ventured to exercise in the case of Nelson and Donnelly. Think, then, of the difficulties that surround the man who would venture, in the city of Dawson, to bring these men to the bar of public opinion, to challenge the uprightness of their conduct or to charge them with malfeasances or something even more serious. Need I argue as to the condition of these men who would bring such charges. Conditions may be imposed upon them by these very officials, the time for the representation of a claim may be lengthened; the time for leave of absence may be shortened; there are a hundred ways in which these men could be ground down by Orders in Council and regulations under them. There is the question of royalty. They are on their knees in that district to the Government of the day in regard to what some of them consider an extreme exaction. All these men are in search of gold, all of them are looking after worldly gain, and are not they to reckon with the risk and hazard they would encounter if they dare to come into court (though it be conducted by Mr. Ogilvie or by a judicial commission) and give testimony that would reflect on the men who hold in the hollow of their hands so much of their fortune. Take the case of Nelson and Donnelly. A word or two about that case to show the position that these gentlemen on the Treasury benches hold when any man dares to bring to their doors this responsibility for all the maladministration and scandals that have occurred in that district. In the case of Nelson and Donnelly, in reference to "34 below Upper Discovery on Dominion Creek," according to the return brought down, the question arose whether this had been recorded under two different descriptions. The inquiry began on June 23rd before Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner, assisted, if you please, by Judge Maguire, the judge of the court before whom either of those parties, if aggrieved in their legal rights, have an absolute right to appear. Yet this judge was ordered as an assessor into this court, contrary to all law, contrary to all statutes, and asked to sit in an informal proceeding and in a proceeding that was conducted illegally from beginning to end. Mr. Wade appeared, if you please, for Alexander McDonald and R. Morrison. This was in June and in the March before Mr. Wade had handed over the richest real estate property it is possible to conceive, to Mr. A. McDonald and Mr. R. Morrison. The Land Registrar, the officer who held four or five positions, had handed over, as Mr. Fawcett himself says—although Mr. Fawcett's name was used—Mr. Wade had handed over the water front in March or April to Mr. Alex. McDonald, and he appeared in this case for Mr. McDonald and Mr. Morrison; and Mrs. Lucille Elliott then appeared on the scene. The inquiry began on June 23rd. She purchased a quarter interest on the 5th of July, 1898, after the inquiry had commenced, and funny things happened. The side into which she purchased the quarter interest went through the whole gamut of these proceedings and came out triumphant. Major Walsh was the witness who assisted her, and though he was examined before Mr. Fawcett, forsooth, his testimony was contrary to the testimony I read to-day in regard to the closing of Dominion Creek, and Mr. Fawcett did not contradict him. Mr. Fawcett contradicted him in 1899, but in 1898 he sat and listened to evidence being given on behalf of "Mrs." or "Miss Lucille Elliott" by Major Walsh. She purchased a quarter interest on the 5th of July, 1898, after the inquiry commenced. The contestation began between one Nelson and Lucille Elliott as against McDonald and Morrison. There was a nice contest in view of the information to come. Taking the information to be correct (and for the moment I assume it to be correct, though forming no final conclusion), you have a scandal connected with the whole outfit, through all the improper influence of Lucille Elliott on the one side, the improper influence of this A. McDonald and Morrison on the other, and you have them in this case coming into collision. There is no evidence to show that Lucille Elliott was a purchaser for value, without notice, of a quarter interest. One Donnelly was in actual possession of the claim. The Gold Commissioner knew of the claim; Nelson knew of it. It was shown that the commissioner had neglected the regulations requiring the recording of the claim within the specified period. There was no dispute about that from beginning to end. No dispute was lodged, no case was brought into court when the Crown, through Mr. Fawcett, began this investigation, but something moved the powers, and Mr. Fawcett calling in Judge Maguire as an assessor—as Mr. Ogilvie called in Mr. Clement—proceeded to investigate. To show the extraordinary influence of the powers that be in the Yukon district—the reason that, to my mind, that hundreds of mouths are shut in that district, that if they had a suspicion that fair-play would be shown to them on the part of the powers that be, would be open—I proceed to refer to this. Regulations made by Major Walsh without authority of law, without authority of this Parliament, without any authority under the sun, were agreed upon as covering the case. No one dared to resist them. Major Walsh made regulations, and Major Walsh had no more right to make regulations in regard to the holding of mining titles there than the page who sits at your feet, Mr. Speaker. He was powerful enough not only to close Dominion Creek when he liked, and to open it when he liked, but to make regulations when he liked, and all had to bow to the regulations of Major Walsh.

Mr. DAVIN. He modified the law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He modified the law, he changed the law, he repealed the law, he was a law unto himself. Walsh came to testify in this case, and he said that upon his arrival the Gold Commissioner told him of having closed a portion of Dominion Creek, in which he acquiesced. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in the judgment of the House as to how far this can be credited. I have referred to the evidence of Mr. Fawcett to-day, and unless I am altogether astray in my geography, you cannot believe both Mr. Fawcett and Major Walsh, but nevertheless this was the evidence given to Mr. Fawcett, sitting in this extraordinary inquiry. At the conclusion of the inquiry, Judge Maguire, if you please, paid by this Parliament, commissioned by this Parliament as a judge, independent of the Executive, having no relations with the Department of Justice, having no relations with the Gold Commissioner in the Yukon territory, no right to advise him in one way or another; an impertinence for the Gold Commissioner to come to him, and an equal impertinence for him to come to the Gold Commissioner—nevertheless, Judge Maguire, who sat through this extraordinary inquiry, gave an opinion to the Gold Commissioner, which Mr. Fawcett said coincided with his own; and from this there was an appeal to the Minister of the Interior on the 31st of January, 1899. Remember, Mr. Speaker, my point is the vast powers rightly or wrongly exercised by the Minister of the Interior, and I ask you, then, to realize the difficulties that you would have, if you were prosecuting the charges and asking men to come from their claims on the different creeks around Dawson to give evidence that would reflect on the ability, and character, and integrity of the Minister of the Interior, or any of his satraps or appointees. Here was an appeal in regard to a valuable property. That it was valuable, there can be no doubt. The Minister of the Interior appreciated that, when he came to give his decision. He stated in his decision, according to the papers brought down to this House, that it was a case in which the Gold Commissioner had “inadvertently issued certificates to different parties for the same ground.” Affidavits having been used in the investigation before the Gold Commissioner, and objected to as not being evidence, the Minister of the Interior ruled that these affidavits could be properly read in evidence, and that they were prima facie evidence of the staking of a claim on a certain day. To the members of the bar in the province of British Columbia, I think, that would be a delightful ruling, and would save an awful lot of trouble, if it were accepted under very similar regulations that exist there. I have not myself been able to find that the rules of evidence have been changed in the slightest particular by the mining regulations. Nevertheless, we will take the opinion of the Minister. Admitting that he was right, there was question of evidence on which the claim was allowed, and he ruled that it was good. He goes on to say:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

I do not think that the Crown would under all the circumstances be justified in insisting upon a doubtful and technical right, to overrule its officers.

Now, you have this awkward position. You have Lucille Elliott, on one side; and you have Aleck Macdonald, a big man, a favoured man, not only as to the waterfront, but, as I will show you, strongly favoured with regard to this oppressive royalty, the richest man, or one of the richest men, in the Klondike—you have this great mining king on the other side. The decision has to be given for one or the other. Now, we will see how the Minister of the Interior worked out the conclusion. He proceeded to confirm the decision of the Gold Commissioner, and held that the plaintiffs—that was, Lucille Elliott, or those connected with her—were entitled to the claim in question ; and he directed—this great Minister, this man clothed with these huge powers, this man whose influence overshadows the Yukon—directed that a renewal certificate for claim 34, below Upper Discovery, on Dominion Creek, be issued to the plaintiffs, and that the certificate issued for claim 17 to Mr. Donnelly—that is, the party through whom Aleck Macdonald claimed—be cancelled in the books of the Gold Commissioner. That was pretty hard on Aleck Macdonald. Now, let us see how Aleck Macdonald's troubles are assuaged. After this, the Minister refers to the plaintiffs' faulty and careless proceedings—that is, the parties through whom Lucille Elliott claims—in consequence of which Donnelly—that is, the party through whom Aleck Macdonald and Morrison claimed—had gone to trouble and expense. Here we come to the great chancellor, the man exercising all the powers of common law and chancery law, and all the powers in the kingdom. Because he considers that the costs which this unsuccessful litigant, this great mining king, has been put to in prosecuting the appeal, must be very heavy ; just as we saw in the case of the mining royalties, when the costs against Aleck Macdonald were big and the royalties were heavy, they had to mete out to him an easy rule which would enable him to pay by instalments later on, rather than exact from him the payment at once ; so, in this case, the Minister proceeds :

In view of the facts I direct that the defendants—

That is, Aleck Macdonald.

—have a lien upon the claim—

That is, the claim of Lucille Elliott and others.

—for $8,000 for their time, labour and costs, the said sum to be paid within six months from Jan. 1st, 1899, and that the Gold Commissioner hold in his hands the renewal certificate for the claim until this sum is paid to him for the defendants. All structures and improvements upon the claim shall be left unimpaired, and shall become the property of the plaintiffs upon taking possession, which they may do forthwith.

There is the power, if you like. That is not the order of an impartial judicial tribunal. That is the order of the great Napoleon of the West ; and am I rash and unreasonable, when I say that it takes a man of some stern stuff, whatever race he may belong to, away out in the Yukon, to challenge the character of that Minister, and to challenge the character of the man whom that Minister has particularly favoured. I say the difficulties are so great that he would not be a coward, when, in pursuit of gold, he hesitated before he ran a tilt with the Minister of the Interior. I hold in my hand a series of regulations, or a large number of sections. I shall not, under the circumstances, cite them all ; but I hold in my hand a reference to the mining regulations, touching, for instance, this representation of claims, by which you must appeal to the discretion of the Gold Commissioner in regard to some of your dearest rights. For the purpose of my argument, I think I will content myself with referring to the case of Nelson & Donnelly ; for, if the Minister is justified in exercising these extraordinary and autocratic powers to which I have referred, no reference I could make to the particular clauses in the regulations would strengthen my case. There are other difficulties. There are great difficulties on the part of men pressing this inquiry against a Government that is not sympathetic, against a Government that is on the defensive, against a Government that holds you at arm's length, and whose Minister of the Interior tells you : You table your specific charges, if you dare, and I will make you rue the day you tabled them. There are difficulties in the way, and I appreciate them all. And these men in the Yukon, no doubt, appreciated them, perhaps, more than I do. They may think that this Napoleon and the Government of the day have some strength, which we in this House know they do not possess, whatever their majority may be. There is a sense of fairness in this House, whether the majority be Liberal or Conservative, in which I have confidence. We may be partisan blind at times, but I believe in the inherent sense of fair play that dominates this body, and I also believe that if the men in the Yukon, who know what has been going on, appreciated the sense of fair play in the Parliament, there is not one Minister on the Treasury benches who could inspire the slightest terror in any one man of them. At any rate, there is not the slightest terror inspired by any one of these Ministers in me.

Let me give an illustration of the further difficulties in dragging to the light the wrong that seem to me to have been committed, in unearthing the irregularities and crimes that I believe to have been committed. I want to show the extraordinary secrecy with which the Government of the day has surrounded this Yukon territory. I want to show you how, step by step, they have endeavoured to prevent any man from letting the light of day into the history of their administration of the Yukon, from its very inception down to the present. Take page 85 of the evidence, and we find the commissioner referring to minutes of council. He says :

Mr. Fawcett is here and the clerks are here, and the minutes of the council are here, which can be examined.

What minutes of council have been produced before this House ? What minutes of council has the Minister brought down here, from the time his officers went up in February, 1888, down to the present ? Not a line, though, as will appear later on, there were positive instructions in the commission to Major Walsh to keep this Government advised of every step he took and everything he did. If Major Walsh had done so, the difficulties of any man who suspected wrongdoing would be in a large part removed.

Take the Order in Council of the 17th of August, 1897. The commissioner, Major Walsh, was ordered, as follows:—

To make a full report to the Minister by each mail of all matters affecting his office and the administration of the various departments of the Government under his control.

Is there a Minister on the Treasury benches who would say to me now that Major Walsh ever did anything of the kind? There is not one man of them who will pretend that Major Walsh made a full report to the Minister by each mail of all matters affecting his office and the administration of the various departments of the Government under his control. But there were dragged out of Mr. Fawcett—and I use the word advisedly—before that commission, reports or letters of Major Walsh with regard to public matters and the administration of the various departments of the Government under his control, marked “confidential.” That is the order of the day under this regime—and in this respect Major Walsh was a mild sinner in comparison with the Treasury benches—private correspondence, private letters, private records, every attempt to conceal these important matters from the public. He had his example, he has his vindication in the practice adopted by the Government of the day in the city of Ottawa, and so we did not get the full reports. We will find how many he made in this career of his for a year. For a year, do I say? Some Ministers have said officially that his career was for an indeterminate period. However, we will come to that later on. The Minister of the Interior said officially that Major Walsh made eight reports, of which six were laid on the Table of this House. I think the hon. Minister erred. I have been a pretty diligent student this session of returns laid on the Table, and I can find none. Possibly the Minister referred to a return in reply to an address of the Senate, dated 17th March, 1898, for there are six reports in that return. The first of these letters is dated “Skagway, October 24th, 1897.” The second is dated “Commissioner’s Office, Bennett, October 31st, 1897.” The third is dated “Bennett, October 31st, 1897.” The fourth is dated “Commissioner’s Office, Bennett, October 31st, 1897.” The fifth is dated “Tagish, November 31st, 1897.” The sixth is not dated, but is called a supplementary report. And at page 3922 of “Hansard,” we are told that the two other reports will be brought down to complete the eight. They have not been brought down, and I would not advise any member of this House, if he is at all inquisitive, to take the trouble of looking up the information contained in the reports laid on the Table. But if he wants to find out anything interesting, if he wants to find out how the Yukon is governed, he can get a peep or two by reading the evidence that Mr. Fawcett gave before Mr. Ogilvie—I may say the evidence that Mr. Fawcett was compelled to bring out. He can learn, for the first time, he will not learn it from the reports before this Parliament, that certain mock minutes were now and then adopted. Minutes of council! A nice council that was! You have heard of the men who composed it—the clerks of Mr. Walsh, none of them with any other authority or status than that of a clerk or inspector. One was a livery stable keeper, the captain of the whaler was not there, but there was an accountant, and these various gentlemen were brought in to constitute a council. We did not constitute them a council. There was no legislation to do so. There was a council, forsooth, something like those minutes. We have not seen these minutes, but they accidentally rolled out in the evidence of Mr. Fawcett. The iniquity of the practice of this private correspondence in regard to public business is illustrated further on. You will remember that in this House the Minister of the Interior told us that Major Walsh came home in pursuance of a letter which he had written the Minister saying that he intended to come as soon as he possibly could. I asked for that letter. There have been very few letters from our commissioner, and the few we have amount to nothing. They give the temperature for a large period of time—three or four months how cold or how warm it was, and all about the discomfort of the gentlemen who accompanied the commissioner and the Indians and all that, up as far as Lake Bennett and Tagish and so on. But as regards administration or policy, there is a blank. I asked for the information on which the Minister of the Interior made that statement, and in the return he brought down in reply, I find simply the statement: “This is a private letter from Major Walsh.” Then again, the Minister stated that before Major Walsh started down to Dawson City, in the spring of 1897, he wrote to the Minister and said he did not wish to remain in Dawson any longer than he could help, and would like his successor to be sent in as soon as possible, and the Minister said that shortly after getting this letter he cabled to Mr. Ogilvie. All the correspondence outside of that is absolutely private.

So, again, there is not the light of day. Compare with this for a moment, and only for a moment, the treatment that Mr. Peters got. Mr. Peters happened to be connected in business with me in July of last year. And before he was connected with me he sent a cipher message to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). I suppose he had some object in putting his message in cipher. He apparently did not think it was to be a public document. What that message was no man knows to this day. But, in the desperation of the moment, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries permitted his colleagues to do a thing for which no explanation has been given, a thing that I cannot pass by without remarking upon it. He permitted his colleagues to drag this into debate. And, worse than that, when the papers were moved for, he permitted his colleague to fix up the return, to pass it through the hands of the Governor in Council and lay it on the Table of the House in such form that it should not appear in the return at what time this cipher message came from Mr. Peters, whether it was when he was a partner of mine or before he became my partner. I have asked ad nauseam in this House, as hon. members will recollect, to have the return corrected. I was told cavalierly once that the Minister of the Interior had written a note to the Clerk of the House about it. I pointed out that that would not go into the return, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite—I do not know what has induced them to take such a course—have not taken one step to have that rectified; but correspondence that, I suppose, Peters thought was private, though no reason was given why he or any one else should have thought it private, has been put before the House as though it were with a partner of mine about a liquor permit. I would take this occasion to say that I suppose that Mr. Peters, who is as strong a Liberal as any who sit on the Treasury benches, who differs from me in toto cœlo in politics, is as indignant—at least, I hope so—about the use made of his name as I am. But I say, without fear of contradiction by any living man, that I had no more to do with that correspondence, it was no more my business, I had no more knowledge of it, than any man on the Treasury bench. Mr. Peters happened to have referred the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to me, and he used my cipher. But I never saw his telegram, he never put it in my hand, and I never heard of it until it was dragged in in this manner. I would not have referred to this except to make the point, as I do, that hon. gentlemen opposite are ready, when they think they can wound an opponent, to bring down a cipher telegram, and all the correspondence surrounding it. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is ready to print at the public expense all the private correspondence he can find in the pigeon-holes of his predecessor in order to wound an opponent; but, forsooth, in the case of the government of the Yukon, there are uncles, there are sons, there are brothers of members of Parliament, are the correspondence in regard to the goings-on, in regard to what is transpiring there, will be so mixed up, as the Minister of the Interior said on one occasion, with private correspondence that the records cannot be produced to Parliament. This system of private correspondence, as will be seen, affords, whether it is intended to or not, a cloak which is the greatest shelter that fraud and rascality can find. Fraud and rascality cannot flourish in the open. Public officers cannot and dare not do wrong as they might do under the cloak of secrecy, when the details of everything they do and everything they resolve is put upon the official record, and is open to be inspected by Parliament. Let us see some of this official correspondence. In this examination Mr. Fawcett produces a letter marked "private"—improperly marked "private," no privacy about it. It was written by an officer of old standing and one, so far as I know, of reputable character, Mr. Deville, in the Department of the Interior. But, following the lines and practice of his Minister of concealing everything that can possibly be concealed, he writes a letter on the public duties of Mr. Fawcett, and marks it "private"—dares to mark it "private"; dares to put it in the category, the shameful category I have been referring to. I refer to page 207 of the evidence. This letter is dated 26th July, 1897:

Unless you are very wrong, and I do not think that possible, you may be sure that Mr. Sifton and Mr. Smart will stand by you.

I must concur in that statement. And the last sentence of this letter—and I ask the attention of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin)—is this:

When you write to us, do not forget to put in a few words about Landerkin. I will communicate them to his father and he will be pleased.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did he say anything about the Winnipeg matter?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, he does not seem to have thought it so important as the hon. member for South Grey does. He has a mind and the hon. gentleman has something else.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has not much of a mind or he would not take up the time of the House in this way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At page 210 we see, speaking of this Mr. McDonald, who had great favour allowed him:

Q. I would like to know if McDonald got an extension of time—

Mr. Tabor.—I object, Mr. Commissioner, to the question. I would like to have the letter produced.

Dr. Bourke.—I want the letter produced. Did he write to you?

Mr. Fawcett.—He sent a letter to me. I think this is something that he wrote Mr. Fawcett (looking for the letter) I fail to find the letter and it is my impression that they did write to me at this time. I have not a copy of it.

And later on:

Q. You know of this letter from Mr. Walsh to you, and you know that Alex. McDonald got time. I suppose there is no other case like this?—A. No, not that I know of.

Q. No other case of extension?—A. I don't know; this is the only case that came under my notice.

This, if you please, is in regard to the "mining king," who got an indulgence under which they were not to collect his royalty as promptly as they collected the royalty of a poor man. They come down on him easily, by instalments. Then, Dr. Bourke said—and, by the way, this is the man whom Mr. Ogilvie goes out of his way to abuse, a man who seems to have known a thing or two:

Dr. Bourke.—I want this to go on record, and ask that this letter in which Major Walsh hurriedly referred to McDonald's difficulties to meet his engagements. I want the Government to know McDonald's position as a practical speculator; a man who holds Government royalty to speculate with while a poor man who cannot pay for his sluice-boxes is locked up.

The Commissioner.—The Government knows that months ago.

I suppose the Minister of the Interior will not contradict that.

Dr. Bourke.—The public want to know.

The Commissioner.—The Government have been asked if there is any way to fix the amount of royalty due by Alex. McDonald.

Mr. Fawcett.—I asked Mr. Dougherty the same thing.

The Commissioner.—We can collect it; it is a simple matter if you know the amount.

A terrible difficulty occurred in the case of Macdonald and the papers had to come to Ottawa. Of course, when all the papers were shovelled off to Ottawa no one could act until the Ottawa Government had acted, and Macdonald, of course, got delay. But as Mr. Fawcett honestly says, he does not know any other man that could work that little racket. Now, let us see what the letter is that Mr. Fawcett could not find. It is found on page 211:

(Confidential.)

Dawson City, N.W.T., 20th July, 1898.

Alexander McDonald, Esq.,

Dawson City, N.W.T.

Dear Sir,—I have just received your letter of to-day with regard to the royalty and the manner in which it affects your interests if collected at once.

I do not think it is exaggeration to say that he was the most successful man in the Klondike. They say that his mules are coming along the trails in extraordinary number.

I fully realize the value of all your mining interests and of the work you have devoted to their development, and also appreciate the fact that besides expending large sums of money in this way, you have also reinvested largely in this territory, instead of simply removing the gold from the mines and sending it outside.

I believe from what you say, and from what I have learned from other sources, that to insist on the payment of the royalty on your total output at once might be embarrassing to you.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

I am sure the Canadian Government recognize the value of your services in developing the country. I would not care to do anything which might seriously interfere with you.

I do not see anything unreasonable in your proposition to pay one-half of the royalty in September next and the other half in May, 1899. I will write the Gold Commissioner instructing him that you are to have the time mentioned in which to make your payments.

I am yours truly,

J. M. WALSH,

Commissioner of the Yukon.

Why did he mark that letter confidential? There is no reason I can conceive of other than the reasons that exist for those hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches marking all their correspondence confidential, when they dare. The Blair letter to Roche is a sample; but there are hundreds of them, as we shall see before this discussion is finished. But there is another confidential letter. Mr. Walsh had read over, no doubt, the Order in Council of His Excellency to make a full report to the Minister by each mail of all matters affecting his office and the administration of the various departments of government under his control. Good, easy man. Why, he said, looking to the practice of Ottawa, that does not apply to anything, I will mark it confidential. So, on the 22nd of July, 1898, he writes to Thomas Fawcett, Esq., Gold Commissioner, at Dawson, a confidential letter; and if there can be anything more cowardly than for a superior officer as he was to write to his subordinate a letter of instruction, a letter of advice, and mark it confidential. I would like any hon. gentleman to suggest it. The first letter might be corrupt, it might be anything, but the second letter is of the most cowardly possible character, and may possibly be based on corruption, too, at any rate, it suggests suspicion, and when we come to read it, we will see what its purport is:

(Confidential.)

Commissioner's Office,

Dawson, 22nd July, 1898.

Thomas Fawcett, Esq.,

Gold Commissioner, Dawson.

Dear Sir,—I inclose a copy of a letter I am forwarding to Mr. Alexander McDonald, in reply to a communication from him applying for an extension of time for the payment of royalties due him this season. You will please be guided in accordance therewith, and give the necessary instructions to the inspectors of mines.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. M. WALSH,

Commissioner, Yukon District.

In other words, I, Mr. Walsh, tell you confidentially to violate the rules and orders, and regulations of the Governor in Council, and your instructions, I tell you confidentially, disobey me at your peril. And Mr. Fawcett writes an open letter, acknowledging these instructions, and then, forced as he is by the suspicion, when the charges of favoritism are made against him—because, poor man, he could not quote it to the pub-

He in whose authority he was doing it—then he writes the confidential letter. It is his justification, he is impaled on a charge, and his answer is: I did it on Mr. Walsh's instructions. Where is your authority? Here it is, it is the confidential letter.

Now, I want to show, Mr. Speaker, how serious a thing this system is, if you have been able to follow me in the illustration I have been giving. When the Government of India was undertaken at long range from home, what was the great guarantee of honesty on the one hand, and what was the proof of dishonesty in the minds of able men, notably in the minds of exceedingly able men? The check against dishonesty was publicity and the minute record of every official act; the proof of dishonesty and a dishonest purpose was the obliteration of the record, and the resort to private correspondence for the conduct of public business. In the impeachment of Hastings by Burke, he has something to say of the advantages of a government of writing and a government of record, and the advantages of a system which, as he says, makes every transaction in the service and every expenditure a matter of record. He adverts to the unfortunate conduct of Hastings, and charges him with having destroyed that system:

He has destroyed it by making a fatal, mischievous distinction between public and private correspondence, whereas the company has made none. He has said: "There are thousands of occasions in which it is not proper to divulge your private correspondence, but there is no occasion in which it is not necessary to communicate your correspondence to those who are above you." These are the distinctions he has thought proper to make. The next way—without entering into all the ways in which he has attempted to evade this regulation—is, by appointing spies and under-agents, who shall carry on the real state business, while there are public and ostensible agents who are not in the secret. And the correspondence of those private agents he has stopped and secreted, and there remains nothing but the shell and husk of a dry official correspondence, which neither means anything nor was intended to mean anything.

Could anything be more appropriate? But he goes on and says:

This is the way in which he has defeated this excellent institution.

That was the institution where a record of everything was published, where a record of every transaction was committed to paper.

But he has taken a mode of doing it by delegating out of his own hands the whole powers of the company, which he was bound to execute, into hands where they were not bound to record their deliberation, where they were not bound to accord their assent or dissent unless they chose it, and where, as in a gulf, a most important part, as we shall prove, of the company's transactions has been buried.

Now, for a moment, let me refer to Todd, to show how far this Government in general, and in this case in particular, has departed from the sound, the wholesome and the honest rule of government. Todd lays down, after reviewing the cases and the practice in England, the following:—

All public transactions of state are necessarily official; and that no public officer would be justified in withholding from official record any document emanating from himself in his official capacity in relation to public affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have endeavoured to prepare the way for the serious step I propose to take, a step that I take after deliberation, after careful thought, impelled by a sense of duty, and invited by the challenge of the hon. Minister of the Interior. That hon. gentleman used this language across the floor of this House:

I challenge the member for Pictou or any other man in this House, to lay upon the Table of the House the charges that he has to make, and declare his ability to substantiate them by evidence, and he will get his investigation, and I will be able to convince the hon. gentleman who makes that charge that discretion on his part would have been the better part of valour.

I propose, therefore, in compliance with that challenge to move:

That the condition of things in the Yukon district in the North-west Territories was satisfactory, prior to the time when the present Minister of the Interior became responsible therefor.

That it appears by Minute of Council, approved by His Excellency on the 1st June, 1895, that in the year 1897, the Honourable Thomas White, then Minister of the Interior, authorized the organization of an expedition having for its object the exploration of that region of the North-west Territories of Canada, which is drained by the Yukon River.

That the explorers found that in proximity to the boundary line there existed extensive and valuable placer gold mines, which even then as many as three hundred miners were at work.

That the number of persons engaged in mining in the locality mentioned steadily increased year by year since the date of Mr. Ogilvie's survey, and it was estimated that in June, 1895, not less than one thousand men were so employed. "The number it is certain will be," the said Minute of 1895 stated, "greatly augmented during the current season, for reports of the mineral wealth of the region have become widespread reports which the geological observations of Dr. Dawson would indicate to be well founded. Incident to this mineral development there must follow a corresponding growth in the volume of business of all descriptions, particularly the importation of dutiable goods and the occupation of tracts of the public lands for mining purposes which, according to the mining regulations are subject to the payment of certain prescribed dues and charges."

That for the purpose of ascertaining officially and authoritatively the condition of affairs to which the correspondence referred to in the next preceding paragraph relates, the hon. the President of the Privy Council, during the spring of 1894, despatched Inspector Charles Constantine, of the North-west Mounted Police Force, accompanied by Sergeant Brown, to Fort Cudahy and the mining camps in its vicinity.

A copy of the report made by Mr. Constantine on his return dated 10th October, 1894, establishes the substantial accuracy of the representations already referred to. Mr. Constantine left Sergeant Brown at Cudahy for the winter and that officer made reports to his superior officer at regular intervals, the result of which was to keep the North-west Mounted Police Department well informed as to the condition of the settlement, and to fortify still further the demand for organized government.

The facts recited established in 1895, first, that the time had arrived when it became the duty of the Government of Canada to make more efficient provisions for the maintenance of order, the enforcement of the laws and the administration of justice in the Yukon country, especially in that section of it in which placer mining for gold was being prosecuted upon such an extensive scale, situated near the boundary separating the North-west Territories from the possessions of the United States of Alaska.

The Minister accordingly recommended in 1895, with the concurrence of the hon. the President of the Council, that a detachment of twenty members of the Mounted Police Force, including officers, should be detailed at as early a day as possible for service in that portion of the North-west Territories; the officer in command, in addition to the magisterial and other duties he might be required to perform by virtue of his office, and under instructions from the Department of Mounted Police, to represent, where necessary, and until other arrangements could be made, all the departments of the Government having interests in that region.

That it appears by a Minute of Council approved by His Excellency on the 15th May, 1896, that by authority of His Excellency the Governor General a detachment of twenty members of the North-west Mounted Police was in June, 1895, detailed for service in the Yukon district, the officer in command in addition to his magisterial and other duties to represent where necessary and until other arrangements could be made, all the departments of the Government having interests in that region, particularly the Customs, Inland Revenue and Interior.

A surveyor was sent into the district for the purpose of laying out building lots and mining claims and generally of performing such duties as might be entrusted to him from time to time.

The Government of Canada was at this time keenly alive to the importance of that section of the country and was kept continuously and thoroughly informed of the condition and progress of its business and other affairs as stated by the said Minute.

That Mr. Ogilvie, the present commissioner for the said district, on coming out of the said district in the fall of 1897 stated in a public lecture at Victoria, B.C.:

"Many miners have expressed to me their gratification at the way in which law and order are administered in Canada. They seem particularly pleased with the fact that a man's just rights do not depend upon his personal popularity, that his tender to his claim is not based on the number of times he treats when near the saloon, nor yet upon the quantity of whisky he drinks, or any kindred merit, but simply and purely on his just and legal rights whether or not all in the country are his friends, or all his enemies.

"I came a good deal in contact with these men during my work about the creeks, settled many of the disputes arising between them, adjusted many differences and everywhere and every time they had the highest respect for the law. Never but once was anything unkind or uncomplimentary said about what was done, and in that case the offender soon after offered a most ample apology. I think I can safely assert that, taken as a whole, there is no more lawlessness and disorder in the minds of the miners of that district than there is in the minds of the citizens of our most highly civilized communities in this favoured land."

That it appears by the ninth report of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, dated 3rd June, 1898, Appendix No. 2e, that the following correspondence took place in 1896 between the Prime Minister of Canada and one of the Honourable Clifford Sifton, not then a member of this House, but a resident of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba:—

(Exhibit Y.)

(Confidential.)

Winnipeg, July 17, 1896.

Honourable Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Laurier,—The result of the late elections in some of the constituencies in Manitoba indicated to me that a fraud of some kind had been perpetrated in the interest of the Government candidates. I at once placed skilled detectives at work, and have now in my possession conclusive evidence of an organized system of tampering with ballots which constitutes the most colossal crime against honest elections which I have ever had any knowledge of. I now know that two constituencies were secured by means of these practices. I think it can be proved eventually that others were secured in the same way. I am also in a position to say that there are strong indications that the same practices prevailed in Ontario. As I have said above, detectives are now at work, and my purpose is to promptly but secretly push the inquiry and secure evidence upon which to convict the guilty parties.

It is also important that no means be left untried to unearth these frauds in the province of Ontario and punish every one guilty of complicity. The bearer will explain the matter somewhat in detail.

The expense of such an investigation here is altogether beyond the financial competency of my department, although I have assumed the responsibility of inaugurating the work and carrying it on so far, from my conviction of its far-reaching importance. I now think, after careful consideration, that it is the plain duty of your Government to furnish the necessary funds for the service in order to carry on this work here, and to take the matter in hand in Ontario yourselves. I therefore request that the expense of conducting these inquiries and prosecutions should be borne by the Federal Government. The money will be fully accounted for in detail by me as the officer having charge of the administration of justice in this province. I have spent a considerable portion of my time since the elections in connection with this matter, and I cannot conceive of any more urgent public duty resting upon you as Premier of the Dominion than to leave no stone unturned to expose these frauds and punish the perpetrators. You must be aware that representative Government and vote by ballot are simply a farce if such practices are permitted. In view of what I know I am almost surprised that any Liberal was returned in a close constituency.

I cannot impress upon you too strongly the necessity of an immediate and favourable reply.

Yours faithfully,

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

(Exhibit Z.)

24th July, 1896.

The Hon. Clifford Sifton, Winnipeg, Man.

I feel confident that you will unearth the most odious conspiracy which has taken place for many long years, and we will most willingly furnish the necessary funds for the service in order to carry on the work in which you are engaged.

WILFRID LAURIER.

That Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, a member of the Privy Council of Canada, and a member of this House, having stated from his place in Parliament that he is credibly informed and believes that with the same co-operation (and through the supervision of the Department of Justice) as was given by the Government of Canada to the said the Hon. Clifford Sifton, as indicated by the said correspondence hereinbefore referred to, and the evidence contained in the report of the said committee, he can establish before a commission comprised of eminent judges and clothed with powers as hereinafter suggested, the following facts and charges:—

That the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, has been guilty of scandalous neglect, delay and mismanagement in the administration of his department in the Yukon district.

That Mr. W. Ogilvie, an officer of the Department of the Interior, who had been engaged in that region since 1895, reported in 1896 to the Department of the Interior the richness of the gold deposits; advised that department that a great development was expected, and that a great rush was likely to be made to the Klondike. He further reported that gold had been found in quantities; that Bonanza Creek was rich in gold; that the excitement was intense; that it was certain that millions would be taken out of the district in the next four years. He reported that the traffic in liquor would have to be taken hold of and regulated without delay; that legal machinery was absolutely necessary for the trial of cases of contract, collection of debts, and generally the judicial interests of the country; that there had been several applications for land in the vicinity of the mouth of the Klondike, and that Inspector Constantine had selected a reserve for Government purposes at the confluence of that stream with the Yukon, 40 acres in extent, and that he (Mr. Ogilvie) recommended also that a court of record be established.

That the reports of Mr. Ogilvie upon the subjects and district aforesaid were dated, and received at the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, respectively, as follows:—

His report of the 6th September, 1896, was received 19th October, 1896; his report of 18th August, 1896, was received at Ottawa on the 22nd October, 1896; his report of 6th November, 1896, on the 16th February, 1897; his report of 9th December, 1896, on the 27th February, 1897; his report of 11th January, 1897, on the 16th March, 1897; his report of 23rd January, 1897, on the 15th March, 1897. (See statement of the hon. the Minister of the Interior—"Hansard," 1898, vol. 1, page 974.)

That on the 11th February, 1897, the Surveyor General, Mr. Deville, formally and by report in writing communicated the information contained in the said official documents which had then arrived at Ottawa as aforesaid to the deputy head of the Department of the Interior.

That the Surveyor General of Canada reported (see report dated 1st February, 1898) to the deputy head of the department as follows:—

"The first news of the Klondike gold mines was communicated by Mr. Ogilvie in his letter of the 6th September, 1896, which was received on the 20th October, 1896. This letter, as well as those which followed, contained full particulars of the discoveries and of the extraordinary richness of the ground. They were all published in the Report of the Department of the Interior for 1896; they were also embodied in a pamphlet compiled in this office and entitled 'Information respecting the Yukon district.' The manuscript of this pamphlet was handed over to the printers on the 8th June, 1897. It contained the report of Mr. Ogilvie's exploration in 1887, notes on the history of the district, means of access, &c., collected from various sources, views from Mr. Ogilvie's photographs, and five maps compiled and photo-lithographed in this office. The pamphlet remains to this day the most complete and reliable source of information available. It has been reproduced in full or in part by several publishers, and extracts from it form the bulk of many recent Klondike publications. Notwithstanding the wide circulation of these reports, and although the news was given to the press and published all over the country in the fall and winter of 1896, they did not attract much attention from the public. The present excitement dates from the arrival of the steamer "Portland," at Seattle in the end of July, 1897, with the first contingent of successful miners."

And again: "Mr. Ogilvie was informed accordingly by letter, dated 24th July, 1896, and instructed to return to Ottawa for the winter. This letter did not reach him until the 11th September, 1896. * * * In one respect this was a fortunate circumstance; his presence on the ground during the winter of 1896-97 was of great service to the whole population, and helped to prevent conflicts in the newly-discovered gold-fields. He was able to make a survey of all the lands applied for at or near Dawson. He marked out for the applicant, Mr. Joseph Leduc, a part of the town-site into lots, surveyed nearly 200 claims on Bonanza and Eldorado creeks, settled quietly and without trouble nearly all, if not all, the disputes on those creeks, and there were many, and, perhaps most important of all, educated the miners fairly well in the requirements of the mining law."

That in the aforesaid lecture at Victoria, in the fall of 1897, Mr. Ogilvie said:

"In conclusion, let me say that we have in the far north land a vast region comprising from 90,000 to 100,000 square miles of untold possibilities.

"Rich deposits we know exist in it, and for aught we know many more equally rich may yet be found. We know now that there is sufficient to supply a population of a hundred thousand people, and I look forward to seeing that number of people in that country within the next ten years.

"It is a vast inheritance; let us use it as becomes Canadians, intelligently, liberally and in the way best to advance our country, Canada. Let us use it as becomes the offspring of the Mother of Nations."

That notwithstanding the foregoing facts, the hon. the Minister of the Interior informed the House of Commons in 1898 that he had nothing but the vaguest and most indefinite information until the 1st October, 1897, when he met Mr. Ogilvie aforesaid at Vancouver, B.C. ("Hansard," 1898, vol. 1, p. 582.)

That at all events on the 16th February, 1898, at the latest, the said Minister expected and had reason to expect that possibly 40,000 or 50,000 people would reach Dawson in the summer and fall of that year. ("Hansard," Vol. 1, 1898, p. 624 to 626.)

That the Deputy Minister of the Interior in his annual report, 1898, states :

"The great rush which was anticipated as a consequence of the gold discoveries on the Klondike River made it imperative to carry out Messrs. Ogilvie's and Constantine's recommendations."

That no action having been taken on Mr. Ogilvie's reports or that of the Surveyor General aforesaid the latter called the attention of the hon. the Minister of the Interior to the fact that the Yukon Territory had been neglected, and wrote to the Minister on the 5th March, 1897, as follows :—

"A perusal of Mr. Ogilvie's report leaves the impression that if prompt steps are not taken for placing the land and mining business of the district under official management, it will soon be in an undesirable condition."

That Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner, reported under date 19th January, 1898, a rush and overcrowding of his office. (Interior report for 1897, p. 93) as follows :—

"The stampede to record claims still keeps up on the office. Our certificate number has now reached 50 per day. We have used the foolscap paper I brought in with me for keeping records on and have used the last of the stock to-day. There is none to be had in town and we will have to use the thin paper such as I am writing on. The office falls in for a great deal of blame because the people cannot get in to record as fast as they want to....."

"We have nearly protests enough to keep us engaged for a full month doing nothing else but investigating these matters."

That in May or June of 1898, about 30,000 to 35,000 persons had actually arrived at Dawson.

That the Deputy Minister of the Interior (returning to the year 1897), reported in 1898, moreover, that "in view of the rapid development," and especially of the large influx of miners, "it was deemed necessary for the proper enforcement of law and order as well as for the successful management of the Government interests in that district, that the officer representing the Government of Canada should be appointed as chief executive officers of the Government with full authority over all officials of the various departments of the Government as well as the North-west Mounted Police stationed there."

That notwithstanding Parliament was not prorogued in 1897 until the 29th day of June, no parliamentary provision was made for supplies, nor was special legislation proposed or obtained for preliminary or permanent organization in the Yukon district.

That on the 12th August, 1897, the present Minister of the Interior caused the following telegram to be sent to Inspector Harper of the North-west Mounted Police at Victoria, B.C. :—

"Department of the Interior,
"Ottawa, 12th August, 1897.

"Inspector Harper,
"North-west Mounted Police,
"Victoria, B.C.

"Advise Fawcett that Major Walsh has been appointed Commissioner for the Dominion Government for Yukon territory. He will have complete authority over all matters as representing the Government. Expects to leave in about three weeks. This will not affect Fawcett's position except that Walsh will be placed in full charge of all officials, including police.

"CLIFFORD SIFTON."

That statements in the telegram aforesaid were untrue and misleading and tended to further confusion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

That on the 17th August, 1897, His Excellency the then Governor General was advised to approve of an Order in Council in the words and figures following :—

Extract of a Report of the Committee of the hon. the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on the 17th August, 1897.

On a memorandum dated 11th August, 1897, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting that for the proper enforcement of law and order as well as for the successful management of the Government's interest in the Yukon Territory, he is of opinion that it is necessary that an officer representing the Government of Canada should be appointed who shall be the chief executive officer of the Government in that district; and that the chief executive officer should be vested with the fullest authority over all the officials of the various departments of the Government, and should have power to remove, suspend or supersede any official except the judge of the Supreme Court pending the action of the Minister under whose department such official is employed.

That he should also be placed in full command of the North-west Mounted Police Force, and the officers of the force should receive their instructions from him. In order to maintain proper discipline he should be empowered to remove, suspend or supersede any member of the Mounted Police Force whose conduct, in his opinion, would warrant such action.

The Minister further submits that the chief executive officer appointed herein should also have power to vary, alter or amend any mining regulations issued under authority of Your Excellency in Council governing the granting of mining claims, where such change may, in his opinion, be necessary in the public interest.

The Minister states he should make a full report to him, the Minister, by each mail upon all matters affecting his office and the administration of the various departments of the Government in the territory under his control.

The Minister, therefore, recommends that John M. Walsh, of the town of Brockville, province of Ontario, be appointed Chief Executive Officer of the Government in the Yukon Territory, and that he shall be known as the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory; and further that he be vested with the authority as hereinbefore contained. And that his appointment shall take effect from and after the 15th day of August, 1897, and that he shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

The Committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

(Signed) JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

To the Honourable
The Minister of the Interior.

That His Excellency the then Governor General was further advised to sign under his hand and to cause the Great Seal of Canada to be affixed to a commission in the words and figures following, that is to say :

"(Signed) ABERDEEN.

"CANADA.

"Victoria by the Grace of God, of the United Empire of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c., &c.

"To John M. Walsh of the Town of Brockville, in the Province of Ontario, in our Dominion of Canada, Esquire,

"Greeting :

"Know you that reposing trust and confidence in your loyalty, integrity and ability we have constituted and appointed and we do hereby constitute and appoint you the said John M. Walsh to be the Chief Executive Officer of the Government of Canada in the Yukon district with the title of Commissioner of the Yukon District.

"To have, hold, exercise and enjoy the said office of Commissioner of the Yukon district unto you the said John M. Walsh and for the purposes aforesaid, we do confer upon you the necessary and requisite power and authority in the following matters, that is to say:—

"1. To remove, suspend or supersede any official or officer of our Government of Canada (except the judge of our Supreme Court of the North-west Territories), pending the action thereon of the Minister of the department in which such official or officer is employed or acting.

"2. To vary, alter or amend any mining regulations issued under the authority of our Governor General in Council governing the granting of mining claims where such change may in the opinion of our said commissioner be necessary or expedient in the public interest.

"And we do also empower you, our said commissioner to have and exercise full command of the North-west Mounted Police who may be stationed or quartered in said district. And we do order and direct that the officers and men shall receive their instructions from you, and shall obey any lawful orders which may be issued by you, our said commissioner. And to that end that proper and necessary discipline may be enforced. We do authorize and empower you to remove, suspend or supersede any member of the said North-west Mounted Police stationed or quartered in said district whose actions or conduct would in the opinion of you, our said commissioner, warrant such action on your part.

"And we do further order and direct that you shall send by each and every mail a full report in writing to our Minister of the Interior upon all matters and things affecting your said office and upon and concerning the administration of the various departments or branches of our Government of Canada under your supervision or control in said district, and with all and every the powers, rights, authority privileges, profits, emoluments and advantages unto the said officer of right and by law appertaining during pleasure."

"In testimony whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent and the great seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed, witness our right trusty and right well beloved cousin and councillor the Right Honourable Sir John Campbell Hamilton Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen, Viscount l'ormartine, Baron Haddo, Methlic, Tarves and Kellie, in the Peerage of Scotland, Viscount Gordon of Aberdeen, County of Aberdeen, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Knight Grand Cross of Our Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada.

"Secretary of State."

That His Excellency the then Governor General of Canada was again advised on the 26th day of August, 1897, to approve of the following Order in Council:—

"Extract from a report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council approved by His Excellency on the 26th August, 1897.

"On a memorandum, dated 23rd August, 1897, from the Minister of the Interior, recommending that the name James Morrow Walsh be substituted for that of "John M. Walsh" in the Order in Council of the 17th instant appointing a chief executive officer of the Government in the Yukon Territory.

"The committee submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

"(Sgd.), H. G. LaMOTHE,

"Asst. Clerk of the Privy Council."

His Excellency's advisers further advise the then Governor General to issue a further and other commission under the hand of His Excellency the Governor General and sealed with the great seal, addressed to James Morrow Walsh in the words and figures following:—

"CANADA,

"Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c., &c., &c.

"To James Morrow Walsh of the Town of Brockville, in the province of Ontario, in our Dominion of Canada, Esquire.

Greeting:

"Know you that reposing trust and confidence in your loyalty, integrity and ability we have constituted and appointed and we do hereby constitute and appoint you the said James Morrow Walsh to be chief executive officer of the Government of Canada in the Yukon district with the title of commissioner of the Yukon district.

"To have hold, exercise and enjoy the said office of commissioner of the Yukon district unto you the said James Morrow Walsh and for the purpose aforesaid we do confer upon you the necessary and requisite power and authority in the following matters, that is to say:—

"R. W. SCOTT,
"Secretary of State."

That no authority, statutory or otherwise, exists for the advice so tendered as aforesaid to His Excellency.

That the said commissions were and are wholly void and contrary to law.

That neither the instructions to His Excellency, the Imperial or Canadian statutory or other authority warranted such appointment of the said James Morrow Walsh, as aforesaid, or the conferring of the powers upon him as aforesaid.

That the record of the said James Morrow Walsh in the public service when superintendent of mounted police in the North-west Territories, and the evidence taken before a Board of Inquiry respecting his conduct while in office was of such a character as should have prevented his reappointment to a position of trust and responsibility in the Government service.

That subsequently the said James Morrow Walsh published the following in the said district:—

"YUKON PROVISIONAL DISTRICT OF "CANADA.

"Under the powers vested in me by my commission as chief executive officer of the Government of Canada in the Yukon District, North-west Territories, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 7th day of August, 1897, for the purpose of providing a suitable tribunal for the hearing and decision of disputes with regard to title in placer mining properties:

"I hereby amend the regulations governing placer mining in the Provisional District of the Yukon, North-west Territories (approved by Order in Council of January, 1898) by adding thereto the following sections:—

"The Gold Commissioner and the Mining Inspectors for the District of the Yukon shall each have power to hear and determine all disputes with regard to mining property arising within the Yukon District, subject to appeal by either of the parties, as follows:—

(a.) In case the appeal shall be from the decision of either of the mining inspectors it shall be heard by the Gold Commissioner of the Yukon District.

(b.) In case of an appeal from the decision of the Gold Commissioner, it shall be heard by the Minister of the Interior of Canada.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

"(c.) There shall be an appeal to the Minister of the Interior, not only from the decisions by the Gold Commissioner on cases originally tried by him, but also on cases decided by him on appeal from decisions of either of the mining inspectors.

"42. No particular forms of procedure shall be necessary, but the matter complained of must be properly expressed in writing, and a copy of the complaint served on the opposite party not less than seven days before the hearing of the matters contained in said complaint.

"43. The complaint may, by leave of the Gold Commissioner or either of the said mining inspectors, be amended at any time before or during proceedings in connection with the trial thereof.

"44. The complainant shall, at the time of filing his complaint, deposit therewith a bond fee of $20, which shall be returned to him when the complaint proves to have been well founded, but not otherwise, except for special cause and then only by direction of the Gold Commissioner or either of said mining inspectors.

"45. In all cases of appeal the appellant shall, at the time of lodging his appeal, deposit at the office of the Gold Commissioner, a bond fee of $20, which shall be returned to the said appellant if his appeal proves to be well founded, but not otherwise, except for special cause, and then only by direction of the person hearing the said appeal and rendering decision thereon.

"46. The appeal must be in writing, and must be filed at the office of the Gold Commissioner not more than twenty days after the decision appealed from has been communicated in writing to all the parties interested, and must state the ground upon which said decision is appealed from. Time shall not run against said appeal and the lodging thereof until said decision has been communicated in writing to all the parties interested, as aforesaid.

"47. If the Gold Commissioner or either of said inspectors decides that it is necessary to a proper decision of the matters in issue to have an investigation on the ground, or in the cases of disputed boundaries or measurements to employ a Dominion surveyor to measure or survey the land in question, the expense of the inspection or remeasurement or resurvey, as the case may be, shall be borne by the litigants, who shall pay into the hands of the person hearing such dispute in equal parts such sum as he may think sufficient for the same before it takes place; otherwise, it shall not proceed, and the party who refuses to pay such sum shall be adjudged in default. The person hearing and deciding each such dispute shall subsequently determine in what proportion the said expense shall be borne by the parties respectively, and the surplusage, if any, shall then be returned to the parties, as he may order.

"48. All bond fees adjudged as forfeited and all payments retained under the last preceding section shall as soon as decision has been rendered, and all entry and other moneys shall, as soon as they have been received under any of the foregoing sections, be paid by the recipient to the credit of the Receiver General in the same manner as other moneys received by him on account of Dominion lands.

"49. For the purpose of enabling said Gold Commissioner and mining inspectors to properly dispose of every case brought before them under these regulations and compelling the attendance of witnesses where necessary, I hereby confer upon said Gold Commissioner and said inspectors all the power of a justice of the peace, with reference to the issue of summons requiring the attendance of witnesses, and also with reference to the issue of such warrants as may be necessary to compel the attendance of witnesses who disobey any such summons.

"Given under my hand and seal of office this 2nd day of July, 1898.

(Seal.) (Signed) "J. M. WALSH,
"Commissioner Yukon District."

That on the 30th March, 1899, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to approve of an Order in Council rescinding "the aforesaid regulations issued by Major Walsh."

That though Major Walsh was appointed as aforesaid Chief Executive Officer or Commissioner of the Yukon District on the 17th August, 1897, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that his appointment was for no specified time ("Hansard," 1898, page 470) he had nevertheless made it a condition of his acceptance that he should not depart for the Yukon until the 15th September. (Mr. Sifton, vol. 1, "Hansard," 1898, page 582.)

That Major Walsh did not leave Ottawa until the 23rd September, 1897, reaching Winnipeg on September 27th. (Return to Senate, No. 38 B, 17th March, 1898.)

That the said officer only arrived at Lake Bennett on the 3rd March, 1898, and did not reach Dawson City until the 21st May, 1898.

That Mr. Walsh was also given a commission as senior officer of the North-west Mounted Police, and a commission as a police magistrate. (Vol. 1, "Hansard," 1898, page 1777.)

That the Honourable the Minister of Justice has officially stated:

"Major Walsh went up into that country in connection with the mounted police for the purpose of maintaining law and order, not for the purpose of organizing an independent Government there, but for the purpose of carrying on the executive government with which His Excellency the Governor General is entrusted, under the advice of his Ministers here, and we fully admit our responsibility for the manner in which that duty will be discharged."

That in reply to a formal inquiry in the House of Commons, the present Honourable Minister of the Interior stated on March 4th, 1898, that instructions were given to Major Walsh in addition to the commission and that they were verbal and general in their character. (Vol. 1, "Hansard," 1898, page 1777.)

That notwithstanding this official statement in 1898, in reply to a formal inquiry in the House of Commons the present Honourable Minister of the Interior stated from his place in this House on May 17th, 1899 ("Hansard," 1899, page 3365): "No instructions were given to Major Walsh, Commissioner for the Yukon District, when he went there, except what are contained in the commission."

That Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as already stated, informed the House of Commons in 1898 that the appointment of Major Walsh was for no specified time. ("Hansard," 1898, page 479.)

That the Secretary of State in 1898 announced in another place officially that "he, Major Walsh, was to remain there (in the Yukon) until order was restored to that country." (Senate Debates, 1898, page 201.)

That in 1899 the Minister of the Interior used the following language in the House of Commons:—

"In pursuance of the understanding with Major Walsh that I should appoint his successor as soon as possible." ("Hansard," 1899, page 852.)

That the Deputy Minister of the Interior in his annual Report for 1898, says that Major Walsh "was compelled through personal reasons to ask to be relieved of the duties of this office and his resignation was accordingly accepted." (Page XIII., Report of the Department of the Interior, 1898.)

That notwithstanding the foregoing, in a letter to the hon. the Minister of the Interior, Major Walsh wrote in 1899, and the Minister read to this House, as follows:—

"I engaged with the Government as you know to go to the Yukon for a year only, although my commission did not state so."

("Hansard," 1899, page 905.)

That the Honourable Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, explained from his place in this House that he did not appoint a lawyer as Gold Commissioner, because Mr. Ogilvie recommended a surveyor. ("Hansard," 1899, page 856.)

That on being requested to produce the said recommendation the said Honourable Minister produced the following extract from a report of Mr. Ogilvie, dated June 10th, 1896:

"I would respectfully call the attention of the department to the fact the services of a surveyor are very urgent in here and will be for some years to come, and I would suggest that one be appointed to look after and take charge of all the land interests of the district. He would find plenty to do and any work outside of departmental which he might be asked to do (and there is much of it and will be more in the way of engineering), would go materially to pay his salary which would of course in here have to be liberal."

That while the said recommendation was dated June 10th, 1896, the Order in Council appointing Mr. Fawcett is dated the 21st May, 1897.

That while the recommendation was for the appointment of a surveyor as land agent the appointment of Mr. Fawcett was as land agent and gold commissioner.

That the said the Honourable Clifford Sifton, as Minister of the Interior advised His Excellency to grant authority to the said Fawcett to act for the Minister of the Interior in matters relating to the administration of the district and that certain assistants of the said Fawcett, viz., Elnworth, Doran, Bolton and Gibbon should be authorized to act in his place during his absence, and His Excellency was moved by his advisers to approve of an Order in Council accordingly on the said 21st May, 1897.

That Thomas Fawcett, Esquire, Dominion Topographical Surveyor, so selected to represent the Department of the Interior in the gold district as gold commissioner, surveyor and land agent, did not leave Ottawa until the 1st May, 1897, when he left with a staff of two surveyors and four men, and he did not arrive at Dawson until 15th June, 1897.

That by Order in Council 21st July, 1898, the said Order in Council of 21st May, 1897, was rescinded.

That by Order in Council, dated 5th July, 1898 the said Thomas Fawcett was appointed gold commissioner for the Yukon Territory, his appointment to date from 1st July, 1898.

That on the 7th October, 1898, the said last mentioned Order in Council was rescinded, and one Gordon Hunter, barrister, said to be, by the Order in Council, of Vancouver, B.C., but in reality a resident of Victoria, B.C., was appointed gold commissioner in his stead.

That Mr. Hunter declined the appointment, and on the 26th October, 1898, Edmund C. Senkler, of Nelson, B.C., was appointed to the said position by Order in Council.

That the Deputy Minister of the Interior reported (Annual Report of the Interior Department, 1898):

"It was further felt that in order to facilitate the administration of justice both civil and criminal in the Klondike district, one of the members of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories should have his domicile in close proximity to the various centres of population that have recently sprung up in that region, and with this in view Mr. Justice Maguire, of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, has been transferred to Dawson City, vested with the fullest authority as regards any legal or criminal matters that may be brought before him."

The Honourable Mr. Justice Maguire did not reach Dawson till the 26th day of February, 1898, and he left there on the 16th August in the same year. ("Hansard," 1899, page 4185.)

That the Deputy Minister of the Interior also reported (1898, Annual Report), the appointment of "two inspectors, Mr. J. B. McGregor, of Brandon, Man., and H. H. Norwood, of Berwick, N.S. The duties of these inspectors will consist chiefly of inspecting mining locations and reporting thereon to the gold commissioner, with a view specially of supervising the collection of dues and the settlement of conflicting claims."

That the H. H. Norwood, aforesaid was also appointed inspector of supplies ("Hansard," Vol. 2, 1898, page 7120), and he was a naturalized citizen of the United States, and the uncertificated master of a whaler or small sailing vessel.

That the said J. D. McGregor, and H. H. Norwood were appointed on the 4th July, 1897; the said McGregor did not reach Dawson until 26th February, 1898, and the said Norwood did not reach Dawson until the 28th March, 1898. ("Hansard," 1899, page 3184.)

That the said J. D. McGregor was a livery stable keeper. That the said J. D. McGregor and H. H. Norwood were both incompetent for the proper discharge of the duties aforesaid.

That Mr. F. C. Wade was appointed Crown Prosecutor, Clerk of the Court, and Registrar, and acting Dominion Lands Agent for the district of Yukon on the 26th day of August, 1897, and subsequently legal adviser of the executive council, but did not arrive at Dawson until the 26th day of February, 1898. ("Hansard," 1899, page 3184), or about March 20th, 1898. ("Hansard," 1898, page 1879.)

That the Honourable the Minister of the Interior has informed the House of Commons that his "batch of Grit officials got to Dawson in February, 1898." ("Hansard," 1899, page 885.)

That the Government of Canada, appointed on the recommendation of the Honourable Clifford Sifton certain officials who were incapable, incompetent, inefficient and corrupt, to positions requiring experience, technical knowledge and integrity of character.

That the Honourable Clifford Sifton, the Minister of the Interior has been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories.

That as appears by a Return (83), 3rd Session, 8th Parliament, 61 Victoria, 1898 (Canada), the following parties applied for and obtained leases of good placer mining or gold dredging areas in the Yukon district:—

A. E. Philp, said to be of Brandon, for a lease on Bonanza Creek.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on S. Fork (Stewart).

G. Philp, said to be of London, for lease on B. Salmon.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Indian River or Creek.

J. A. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Teslin River or Creek.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

A. D. Cameron, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Stewart's River or Creek.

That Mr. A. E. Philp and Mr. A. D. Cameron, aforesaid were partners in business with the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Sifton, when that gentleman became Minister of the Interior, and all were members of the firm of Sifton, Philp, and Cameron of Brandon.

That by the said Return, it further appears that W. J. Lindsay, said to be of Ottawa, P. C. Mitchell, said to be of Brandon, and W. L. Parish, said to be of Ottawa, applied for dredging leases in the Yukon, whereas these gentlemen were residents of Brandon who first learned of these applications by a letter from A. E. Philp, aforesaid advising them that these leases had been granted in their names and inclosing a power of attorney from each of them in favour of said Philp, to enable him to dispose of them.

That in the list contained in the said Return are the names and addresses of the following purporting to be applicants for dredging leases:—

F. Burnett, Vancouver.

F. Burnett, Colborne.

J. G. Burnett, Edmonton.

F. Burnett, Colborne.

Frank Burnett, Brandon.

Whereas F. Burnett was never in Colborne in his life, but said Philp came from that place.

That the said Philp, heretofore a partner of the said Minister, represented in writing that he was engaged in a dredging venture in the Yukon, and in endeavouring to induce another to join him, represented in writing that Mr. Sifton, the said Minister, and Major Walsh, were also interested with him, but their names could not appear as he wrote "for obvious reasons."

That the Honourable Clifford Sifton gave to the said Philp a permit or authority signed by him contrary to law, which was offered for sale by the said Philp, for a large amount of money.

That chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 7, provides as follows:—

"No person employed in or under the Department of the Interior shall purchase any Dominion Lands, except under the authority of the Governor in Council, or shall locate military or bounty land warrants or land scrip or act as agent, of any other person in such behalf.

And the word land "by the provisions of the said Act includes mining claims."

That chapter 51, section 31, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, being the "Territories Real Property Act," provides as follows:—

"No registrar, deputy registrar, or clerk in any land titles office under this Act shall directly or indirectly act as the agent of any person investing money and taking securities in real estate within his registration district, nor shall such registrar, deputy registrar or clerk advise for any fee or reward or otherwise upon titles of land, nor practice as a conveyancer, nor shall he carry on or transact within the registry office, any business or occupation whatever, other than his duties as such registrar or land clerk. The expression "land" by the provisions of the said Act means, among other things, mines, minerals, &c."

That on repeal of chapter 51 aforesaid and the enactment of the Land Titles Act, 1894, it was provided by section 31 thereof as follows:—

"Neither the inspector of land titles offices, nor any registrars, deputy registrars, or clerk in any land titles office shall directly or indirectly act as the agent of any person investing money and taking securities on land within any regulation district, nor shall the inspector of land titles office, nor any registrar, deputy registrar or clerk advise for any fee or reward or otherwise, upon titles to land, nor practice as a conveyancer, nor shall he carry on or transact within the lands titles office any business or occupation whatever, other than his duties as such inspector, registrar, deputy registrar, or clerk."

The word land is defined by said Act to include mines, minerals, &c., &c., &c.

That the Minister of the Interior, the Honourable Clifford Sifton, gave his express sanction and approval to Mr. Wade, hereinbefore mentioned, holding and becoming financially interested in Dominion lands or mining claims in the said Yukon District, and the said Wade did, with the said Minister's express consent and approval, hold and was financially interested in such property, contrary to the provisions of the statutes in such cases made and provided.

That unsanitary conditions have unnecessarily prevailed in the district.

That there have been gross abuse in connection with liquor permits.

That in Dawson City, containing at a moderate estimate, some 25,000 of a population, there was not, on the 1st April, 1899, a single road, bridge or drain, nothing that might be termed a public work in any form. In Dawson City there was neither pavement, roadway, drain or ditch, no water supply nor lighting, and the matter of the disposal of refuse had up to that date been one of individual responsibility only.

This condition of affairs resulted in an epidemic of typhoid fever in 1896.

That official favouritism and partiality has been shown and extended to the representatives and interests of the North American Trading Company of Chicago and Seattle, in the Yukon district.

That Major Walsh did not send by each and every mail a full report in writing to the Minister of the Interior, as commanded by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, or as required by the Order in Council purporting to appoint him to his office as aforesaid.

That Major Walsh, while acting as Commissioner and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Government, wilfully adopted and countenanced a system in the Yukon Territory tending to inspire a reasonable distrust of the justice and good faith of the Dominion of Canada.

That Major Walsh, acting as Commissioner and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Government in the Yukon Territory, in sundry instances acted in a manner repugnant to the honour and policy of the Dominion of Canada, and contrary to the principles of constitutional and parliamentary government, and thereby brought the Canadian Government and the Queen's authority and name into contempt and caused injury to the Queen's subjects and others domiciled within Her Majesty's dominions.

That Major Walsh, while acting as Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Government in the Yukon, was guilty of the crime of misbehaviour in office.

That Major Walsh was guilty of doing acts directly contrary to the design of his office as Chief Executive Officer of the Dominion Government.

That in September, 1897, Major Walsh employed six Indians from Fort William Mission Band, upon an engagement to send them home in October, 1898, at the expense of the Government of Canada. That Philip Walsh, a brother of the said Major Walsh, and employed by the Government, was in charge of the said Indians (Return to Senate, 17th March, 1898, No. 38B). That these Indians located and recorded mining claims for and on behalf of Major Walsh. On the return of the Indians these claims were transferred to Lewis Walsh, another brother of Major Walsh; and Lewis Walsh and Philip Walsh, aforesaid, left Fort William on or about 10th May, 1899, to look after the said claims.

That the following correspondence deals with certain and clear and well-known provisions of the Canadian Parliament:

" Department of the Interior,
" Ottawa, 23rd June, 1898.

" Sir,—I am directed by the Minister of the Interior to request your advice upon the following question:

" By section 92 of the North-west Territories Act, 49 Victoria, Chap. 50, no intoxicating liquor is permitted to be imported or brought into the North-west Territories from any province of Canada, or elsewhere, except by special permission in writing of the Lieutenant-Governor.

" On the 13th June, instant, an Act was passed declaring that the Yukon District should no longer form part of the North-west Territories. The Administrator of the Territories had, however, on the advice of his Executive Council, issued a number of permits under section 92 of 49 Victoria, Chap. 50, expressly authorizing the persons to whom they were issued to take liquor into what is known as the Yukon District; and the question now submitted for your consideration and advice is, as to whether or not such permits authorized the holders thereof to take liquor into the Yukon District after the 13th day of June instant.

" I have the honour to be, sir,

" Your obedient servant,

" (Signed) JOHN R. HALL,
" Secretary.

" The Honourable the Minister of Justice,
" Ottawa."

" Ottawa, 27th June, 1898.

" Department of Justice,

" Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, in which you ask for an opinion as to whether permits authorizing the importation of intoxicants into the Yukon District issued by the Administrator of the North-west Territories under section 92 of the North-west Territories Act before the 13th instant, upon which date the Act of last session providing for the government of the Yukon District became law, continue in force so as to authorize the holders of them to take liquor into that district after the 13th June.

In reply, I beg to state that the Act of last session referred to, the Yukon Territory Act, contains a section providing that, subject to the provisions of the Act the laws relating to civil and criminal matters as the same existed in the Territories at the time of the passing of the Act, shall be and remain in force in the Yukon Territory in so far as the same are applicable thereto until amended or repealed by the Parliament of Canada, or by any law or ordinance of the Governor in Council, or the Commissioner in Council made under the provisions of the Act. Under this section the prohibitory provisions of the North-west Territories Act are still in force in the Yukon District, in so far as the same is applicable, and I am to state that the Minister of Justice is of opinion that, such being the case, any order or regulation validly made thereunder also continue in force so far as it may be applicable. Of this nature are the permits referred to, and the Minister is of opinion that they are of the same force now as if the Act of last session had not been passed.

"The Minister is of opinion also that these permits continue in force by virtue of the provisions of section 7, paragraph 50 of the Interpretation Act, to the effect that whenever any Act is repealed wholly or in part and other provisions are substituted, all the by-laws, orders, regulations rules and ordinances made under the repealed Act shall continue good and valid in so far as they are not inconsistent with the substituted Act, enactment or provision until they are annulled or others made in their stead. The Act of last session effected the repeal of the Territories Act so far as the latter Act vested executive and administrative powers over the Yukon Territory in the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, but in accordance with the rule of interpretation laid down by paragraph 50, above referred to, such repeal did not affect the validity of any orders, regulations, &c., made under the repealed Act, and the permits in question, therefore, remain good and valid by virtue of that paragraph until they are annulled under the provisions of the law as it now stands.

"I have the honour to be, sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"(Signed) A. POWER,

"Acting Deputy Minister of Justice."

That notwithstanding the foregoing, and that it is provided by section 138 of the Criminal Code, 1892, that every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, without lawful excuse, disobeys any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or of any legislature in Canada, by wilfully doing any Act which it forbids, or omitting to do any act which it requires to be done, unless some penalty or other mode of punishment is imposed as provided by law; Major Walsh, aforesaid, did, on March 5th, 1898, issue an order to the Superintendent of the North-west Mounted Police in the Yukon, forbidding him to recognize "permits for the importation of liquor into the Yukon District, unless issued by the Department of the Interior or Inspector Wood."

That Major Walsh subsequently advised representatives of the gambling and liquor saloons that the Governor of the North-west Territories had no jurisdiction, and that local magistrates and North-west Mounted Police would be instructed not to entertain charges laid for infraction of North-west Territories ordinances or regulations (which were then in force), and that any one could retail liquors subject only to this restriction that none should be sold on Sunday.

That Major Walsh subsequently permitted one Lucille Elliott to keep open on the Sabbath a stand for the sale of cigars and light drinks, and the said Lucille Elliott sold spirituous liquors by virtue of this order, and in contravention of outstanding and unrepealed ordinances and regulations.

That Major Walsh illegally interfered with liquors imported under liquor permits which had been issued according to law, and when applications were made to the Honourable Mr. Justice Maguire for injunctions to prevent such illegal conduct, Mr. F. C. Wade, the Crown Prosecutor, falsely represented to the court that the Act respecting the Yukon which had not reached Dawson, provided for the cancellation of such permits, and so succeeded in obtaining an adjournment of such cases and in frustrating the enforcement of the laws of the North-west Territories.

That Major Walsh illegally assumed authority to permit spirituous liquors to be brought into the Yukon district, and illegally and vindictively exercised his authority in seizing or holding spirituous liquors which came into the Yukon under legal permits.

That application to the Minister of the Interior and political influence became and was necessary in order to secure respect for permits issued under the law, and a Liberal lawyer was enabled to charge a large sum to secure the good offices of the Minister in consequence of irregular and illegal conduct under his administration.

That while acting as the chief executive officer of the Canadian Government, Major Walsh carried on in the Yukon a liaison with one known as Lucille Elliott, who was permitted to enjoy privileges, advantages and favours from the local authorities in the said district.

That while acting as the chief executive officer of the Government, Major Walsh was guilty of intemperate and immoral acts, which involved him in irregular and improper conduct in the discharge of his public duties, and brought contempt upon Canada.

That the regulations were not regularly enforced, but certain of them (as for instance, those relating to the royalties on mines and mining claims), were allowed by Major Walsh to be violated, and claims were allowed by him to be staked and recorded at 500 feet in length in lieu of 250 feet in length, as prescribed by the regulations.

That Major Walsh illegally exempted individuals from the law and regulations respecting the payment of royalties.

That the Crown Prosecutor, F. C. Wade, declined to act in the enforcement of the laws, ordinances and regulations of the North-west Territories.

That Mr. Wade actively practised his profession of the law in the said district while holding the official positions aforesaid, and appeared before the court of the district, the Gold Commissioner and other officials as the paid advocate of private parties having business transactions with the various departments of the Government.

That the Gold Commissioner's legal adviser accepted retainers and fees from persons contesting claims before the Commissioner.

That the acting Dominion Lands Agent, Registrar, Clerk of the Court, Crown Prosecutor, has accepted retainers, fees or remuneration to procure or for procuring, or attempting or promising to procure, grants or title or possession of Dominion lands and mining claims.

That an officer of the Government was guilty of blackmailing persons engaged in the sale of spirituous liquors, and keeping of gambling saloons.

That Mr. Wade, while holding the position of registrar of lands, clerk of the court and Crown attorney was financially and personally interested in the disposal of lands known as the Water Front.

That officials in the employment of the Canadian Government in the Yukon Territory have been guilty, directly and indirectly, of accepting and agreeing to accept offers, proposals, gifts, promises, compensation and consideration for their assistance and influence for and in the performance of work and in the procuring of mining claims, mining interests, land interests and information from public offices and public records, contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

That officials in the employment of the Canadian Government in the Yukon Territory have been guilty of directly and indirectly accepting or receiving gifts, compensation and considerations for assisting or favouring certain individuals in the transaction of business with the Government, contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

That officials in the employment of the Canadian Government in the Yukon District have been guilty of fraud and breaches of trust affecting the public, contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code.

That the official records in the Government offices of the Yukon District were kept secret and inspection thereof was not allowed, which practice led to, among other consequences, what has become to be known as a system of "grafting," and to other abuses so that, for instance, after application for a record of a mining claim, if the property were found by or through officials in the mining office to be of value it was staked and recorded in a name other than that of the first applicant, but in a name of some one who represented the interest of an official, and to a system known as the "side door," whereby officials were permitted to and did exact private fees for official work, and official information, and it became and was difficult to secure the performance of work during office hours.

That this "side door" system prevailed at the post office, and involved abuse and wrong-doing on the part of officials and employees of the Government.

That a system of bribery among Government officials was rendered necessary by the inability otherwise to procure them to perform their duties.

That blackmailing by officials of persons applying to record claims has prevailed.

That unfair and fraudulent use has been made by officials of knowledge acquired in the discharge of their duties.

That timber inspectors or officials engaged in the inspection and protection of the Government timber lands and interests in the Yukon District have become interested financially in the said timber interests and have secured sums of money over and above their official fees in connection with the performance of their duties, contrary to the provisions of the statute in this behalf made and provided.

That Arthur Young Wilson, of Dawson City, in the Yukon District of the North-west Territories of Canada, prospector, is a resident of Dawson City, in the Yukon District of the North-west Territories, and is a citizen of the Dominion of Canada and a British subject, having been born of Canadian parents at the town of Simcoe in the county of Norfolk, in the year 1858.

That the said Wilson went into the Yukon country in the fall of 1897, arriving at Dawson City on or about the 9th day of December, 1897, and became engaged there in the occupation of a prospector.

That on or about the 12th day of June, 1898, he saw T. S. McFarlain, Crown Timber Agent for the North-west Territories at Dawson City at that time and applied to him for a timber berth one mile square and being situated on the west side of the Yukon River, opposite Dawson City, and he assured Wilson that he could have the same on paying the necessary Government license therefor and royalty on the timber cut therefrom and the said Crown Timber Agent instructed him to go and stake out the berth wanted, and how to go about it.

The said Wilson, acting in accordance with the instruction of the said Crown timber agent and under his directions did forthwith thereafter take a man with him and measure off a square mile on the said west bank of the Yukon River, according to the following measurement and description:—Commencing on the west bank of the Yukon River directly opposite to the Yukon

Mining Exchange in Dawson City, thence north along said west bank of the Yukon River one mile, thence west one mile, thence south parallel to the west bank of the said Yukon River one mile, thence east to the place of beginning, and such measurement was completed on or about the 15th day of July, 1898, and the necessary notices posted up thereon.

That on or about the 16th day of July, 1898, the said Wilson put in a formal application to the said Crown Timber Agent, T. S. McFarlain, for the license and right to cut the timber from the berth described in the next preceding paragraph thereof, and paid to such timber agent, the government license fee, $250, and received therefor the receipt of the said timber agent, which receipt is as follows:—

" Dawson, June 16th, 1898.

" Received from Mr. Alf. Wilson the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, being deposit for timber berth applied for.

" (Signed T. S. McFARLAIN,
" Crown Timber Agent."

That the Crown Timber Agent at the time of accepting the said license fee explained to Wilson that he might begin cutting the timber when he chose, but he would also be subject to the payment of the government price (or royalty) per cord for wood or per thousand feet for timber, for all wood or timber cut or caused to be cut thereon and taken therefrom, to which Wilson agreed.

That a few days after Wilson obtained the license hereinbefore mentioned, one J. W. Willison came to Dawson City and assumed the duties and office of Crown Timber Agent and he refused to recognize Wilson's grant or license upon the alleged ground that the berth for which the same was given was to be reserved for the use of the citizens of Dawson City, and was not to be sold to any persons, and notwithstanding the utmost protests from Wilson he was not allowed to cut the timber thereon and sell the same, and he lost much valuable time in consequence thereof, and suffered great loss and damage financially.

That after taking all steps which seemed necessary to enable Wilson to secure his rights respecting the said timber berth, and finding the same ineffectual, Wilson applied for the repayment of the $250 which he had paid therefor, and on or about the 24th day of August, 1898, the same was returned to Wilson by the said T. S. McFarlain.

When returning the said money to Wilson the said T. S. McFarlain told Wilson that "it is a shame that Willison would not allow you to have the timber, and that Willison had no right to go back on anything that I had done and I promised you the berth and it was wrong to take it away from you."

The timber on the berth hereinbefore described was afterwards sold by the Crown Timber Agent J. W. Willison to the Messrs. Bartlett Bros., of Dawson City, for the price or sum of 75 cents per cord, and the purchasers caused to be cut thereon and sold therefrom over 1,000 cords of wood, at a clear profit of at least $5 per cord.

That the said Wilson had three men hired in addition to himself for the purpose of cutting the timber on the said berth and by reason of the wrongs suffered by Wilson the time of the men so hired by him was lost to him and Wilson lost at least 53 days' work which, at the rate of wages obtaining at that time in Dawson City, $10 per day, makes up for the four, whose time was lost, the sum of $2,080.

That there were upwards of 1,000 cords actually cut by the subsequent licensees or purchasers, Messrs. Bartlett Bros.

That, as appears by the Departmental Report for 1898, page xlii. :

" THE YUKON TERRITORY.

" Pursuant to the provisions of the Act assented to by Parliament on the 13th June, 1898, intituled "An Act to provide for the government of the Yukon Territory" (61 Victoria, Chap. 6), an Order in Council was passed on the 7th July last, authorizing the employment and defining the duties of the various chief executive officers and clerks whom it was deemed necessary to appoint, in order to properly carry on the work connected with the administration of the Territory."

This Act provided, among other things, for the appointment of a Chief Executive Officer and for the constitution of a Council to aid the said officer in the administration of the said district.

That by this Act it was also provided that the existing laws should remain in force in the said District until altered by the authority constituted by the said Act.

That Major Walsh left the Yukon District on the 4th August, 1898.

That Mr. William Ogilvie was appointed Chief Executive Officer under the provisions of said Act, but did not leave Ottawa for Dawson until the 4th August, 1898, and did not reach Dawson until long afterwards.

That Mr. Justice Maguire left Dawson on the 16th August, 1898, and his successor was not appointed until 7th October, 1898, and did not reach Dawson until long afterwards.

That Samuel Benfield Steele, Superintendent of the Mounted Police, was appointed a member of the Yukon Executive Council on the 7th July, 1898.

That Joseph Edward Girouard was appointed registrar of lands and a member of the Yukon Executive Council on the 7th July, 1898, by Order in Council.

That Joseph Edward Girouard, while registrar of lands and a member of the Executive Council in said district practised and practices his profession as a member of the bar and solicitor, &c., during office hours, and became and is financially interested in mining claims in said district, while holding the aforesaid position.

That the following is an extract from a report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on the 17th October, 1898 :

" P. C. No. 2432. Interior.

" That Mr. William H. P. Clement, barrister at law, Toronto, be appointed legal adviser to the Council of the Yukon Territory, vice Mr. F. C. Wade, resigned. Mr. Clement's salary to be at the rate of $2,500 a year; and his appointment to date from 7th October, 1898. Mr. Clement shall not be permitted to accept retainers, or to act as counsel, attorney or solicitor in any action, suit, matter or transaction involving the title to a mining claim or mining property.

" That under the authority of section 5 of the Act of the Parliament of Canada, assented to on the 13th June, 1898, intituled, ' An Act to provide for the government of the Yukon Territory,' Mr. Clement be appointed a member of the Council to aid the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory in the administration of that district, vice Mr. Wade, resigned.

" (Signed) JOHN J. MCGEE,

" Clerk of the Privy Council.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

" To the Honourable the Minister of the Interior."

That Mr. W. H. P. Clement is a member of a law firm which practices before the Gold Commissioner and acts professionally in matters within the purview of said Council.

That Mr. Justice Dugas was appointed a judge for the Yukon Judicial District on the 7th October, 1898, and became a member of said Council by virtue of his office.

That the said Mr. Justice Dugas, while a judge for the Yukon Judicial District, and while a member of the Executive Council thereof, became, was and is pecuniarily interested in mining claims in said district.

That confidential information has been illegally revealed by officials in the office of the present Gold Commissioner who has been obliged to dismiss an official for the offence.

That gross and scandalous abuses have occurred in the Department of Customs in the Yukon District, United States vessels having been admitted to the Canadian registry in the said district upon fraudulent undervaluation, as in the case of the steamer " John C. Barr," which was worth at least $60,000, but was allowed to be passed at the customs at a valuation of $10,000.

That the Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis H. Davies, appointed to the office of inspector of steamboats one Russell who had been previously dismissed from the said service of the Government on account of improper conduct, and detailed said officer to Dawson to act as steamboat inspector.

That the laws respecting the certificates of masters and mates have not been properly enforced in the Yukon District, but uncertificated officers, and officers disqualified have been permitted to act as officers upon Canadian registered vessels, contrary to law, to the detriment of Canadian mariners holding certificates under Canadian laws.

That the Honourable the Postmaster General was guilty of gross neglect in the administration of the Post Office Department and from the year 1896 to 1899 did not provide a reasonably efficient postal service to and from the Yukon Territory, but, on the contrary, appointed insufficient, inefficient and corrupt officials and provided such inadequate and unsuitable accommodation and postal arrangements that a large community consisting of the inhabitants of Dawson, N.W.T., suffered distress, inconvenience and pecuniary losses.

That F. Harper was postmaster of Dawson City and gave the exclusive right of delivery of letters in Dawson to a company known as the Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company.

That upon a personal visit by the special correspondent of the London " Times " newspaper, and after inquiry it was found necessary by that responsible person to report through the " Times " to the business people of the world :

" It is deplorable to have to admit, but it is idle to ignore the fact that the administration of the Klondike district and the relations which exist between the representatives of the Government and the public leave almost everything to be desired. The population remains, on the whole, orderly and law-abiding, but it is in an open and emphatically expressed anticipation of changes which, to give satisfaction, must include within their operation both the system and the personnel. To put the position as plainly as is daily and hourly stated on the mining fields and in the streets of Dawson, there is a widely prevalent conviction not only that the laws are bad, but that the officers through whom they are administered are corrupt. It is hard on innocent and upright individuals whose administrative duties may be performed with scrupulous integrity to be associated in the sweeping charge which is made against the whole official body, but there is no disguising the universal dissatisfaction, and innocent and guilty stand at present together. It is impossible to talk for five minutes on business with any one on the mines or in the streets without some allusion occurring to the subject, and it is a painful experience for Englishmen proud of the purity of the British system of government to be compelled to listen to the plain-spoken comments of Americans and foreigners.

"Apart from the graver charges, there is much dissatisfaction with imperfections of organization, which are ascribed to inaptitude and inattention to business on the part of the responsible officers. That there are, as yet, no roads, no trustworthy mail arrangements, no sanitary organization of any kind, and no clear distribution of streets and town lots in a town of nearly 20,000 inhabitants are conditions which are held to be wholly unnecessary in view of the amount of the revenue derived from the mines and the fact that the town is now two years old. There can be no question that in these respects "gold fever" has had the effect of diverting energy and attention from all but mining interests. The unsanitary condition of Dawson, situated as the town is upon a swamp, and devoid of the most elementary provisions for cleanliness and health, is a standing menace to the community. Typhoid is permanently in the town; the death-rate is abnormally high; and there are as yet no signs of any measures to be taken to avert the danger of a serious outbreak of epidemic. That mining districts cannot be surveyed, that claims in many instances cannot be recorded, that necessary information with regard to districts already staked is not open to the public are facts which have come to be regarded by the public as so many purposely designed channels for individual bribery. A half or a quarter interest is frequently quoted as the price at which good claims can be recorded, and scarcely a day passes in which some fresh story does not become current of the number of dollars which it has cost to obtain letters from a nominally unsorted mail or to make good an entrance on business into one of the public offices."

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency to desire that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to give immediate orders to his Attorney General that the most effectual means be taken for discovering the facts in any way relating to the above charges, and that His Excellency will also be graciously pleased to order the issue of a royal commission to two or more judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, or to any two judges of the Superior Courts of any province of Canada, granting and conferring the fullest possible powers for a complete effectual and exhaustive inquiry with a view to the discovery of the truth of the statements and charges aforesaid, and to this end that His Excellency be advised that in the opinion of this House such a commission should be clothed by a special Act containing similar provisions, powers, jurisdiction, discretion and authority as are conferred by the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 10, being "An Act respecting inquiries as to corrupt practices at Elections of members of the House of Commons."

Mr. Speaker, I want to say, as this is part of my speech, that I propose to move, at a later stage, that resolution, and I want to add to the language that it contains, the following statement:—

I am prepared, moreover, to place my services gratuitously at the disposal of the Attorney General for Canada to assist the commission of inquiry in probing this matter to the bottom, whether those services be required at Ottawa, Dawson City or both.

In addition to whatever responsibility attaches to the action I have taken in this matter, I am prepared, if the commission is granted on the terms suggested, to abide by the result and to consider that by failure to substantiate the charges made I will have forfeited my right to sit in Parliament or to hold any office in the gift of the Crown.

I make that statement after the most careful consideration I can give to it in order to convince Parliament and convince the country of my sincerity. While I am taking advantage, undoubtedly, of my privilege as a member of the House of Commons to bring straight to the front and in the light of the information I believe to be based on fact, and while I could not, nor could any man in Canada, unless he were a millionaire, undertake that responsibility outside of the privilege of this House, and summon from the north, the south, the east and the west, all the witnesses and prepare the case as it should be prepared, in order to show a court of law his right and his authority for making statements, I must, to satisfy public opinion of my sincerity, go a great length. I consider I have the right to exercise the privilege a member of the House of Commons possesses to make these statements without incurring any greater responsibility than the laws of Parliament contemplate or impose. But I waive all that, and in this Parliament, in the face of the country—my native country—I am prepared practically for all the pains and penalties, in the discretion of Parliament. I am prepared for more than that; I am prepared, that great good might come out of this investigation, as great good will come out of it, and great benefit to Canada, to incur the risk I have mentioned—no small risk to a man even of ordinary ambition, that is to be considered that he has, by failure, after taking an important step of this character, disintitiled himself to the confidence of his fellow countrymen in any public matter, and disintitiled also to the confidence of the representative of the sovereign in connection with any matter of political preferment or within the gift of the Crown. According to the understanding which, I think, was reached, informally, today, I now move the adjournment of the debate.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has stated that he is not in very good health, and I have consented to agree to an adjournment, but it must be on the understanding that we shall sit later to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Certainly.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

REPORT.

Report of the Department of Public Works for the year 1898.—(Mr. Fielding.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 28th June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 53) to authorize the Bank of Nova Scotia to issue sterling notes for circulation in the Island of Jamaica.—(Mr. Borden, Halifax.)

DISMISSALS FROM MONTREAL POST OFFICE.

Mr. QUINN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What are the names, religions and nationalities of all persons dismissed from Montreal Post Office since June, 1896 ?

What are the names, religions and nationalities of persons appointed to Montreal Post Office since June, 1896 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). That question had better take the form of a motion.

YUKON—CONSTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What was the date of the Order in Council authorizing the construction of a Government telegraph line into the Yukon ?

2. What amount of money has been expended to date on this work ?

3. From what moneys voted by Parliament have these expenditures been paid ?

4. Have the supplies so far purchased for this work been purchased by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have been furnished by the department with an answer, but it is not as complete as I would like to have it, and I will ask the question to stand.

VALUATION OF BINDERS, &c., FOR DUTY.

Mr. WALLACE asked :

What are the values and bases of valuations fixed by the Department of Customs on the importation of binders, mowers and horse-rakes from the United States, for the purpose of collection of duty thereon ?
Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The valuation of mowers, binders and horse-rakes from the United States has been fixed for the purposes of customs duty, upon a basis which takes into account the prices of these articles for home consumption in the country of export and the terms and conditions of sale there.

PROPOSED CANADIAN NAVAL RESERVE.

Mr. BRITTON asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to take any steps towards the formation of a naval reserve, or a naval brigade, or a marine militia of any kind in Canada, whether in connection with the present militia force or otherwise ?

2. If so, when are such steps to be taken ?

3. Where, and under whose direction are the first corps to be organized ?

4. Has there been any correspondence with the Imperial Government, or the Imperial Naval or Military authorities on this subject ? If so, what has been the tenor of such correspondence ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The whole question of the formation of a naval reserve or brigade in Canada has been for some time under the consideration of the Government. No definite conclusions have yet been reached, nor is it thought possible that any scheme can be submitted to Parliament this session. There has not been any correspondence with the Imperial Government, and the only correspondence with the naval and military authorities on the subject is confidential.

MAINTENANCE OF ROADWAYS ON THE GRENVILLE CANAL.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Did the Government of Canada in the year 1845 enter into a written contract with the farmers whose lands are crossed by the Grenville Canal, that upon the condition of the said farmers surrendering their rights to private bridges and accept a single bridge crossing at Lock No. 3, the Government would guarantee good roadways on both banks of the canal for the use of said farmers to and from their farms ?

2. Did the Government allow the engineers in charge of the improvements now being made on the Grenville Canal to stake off the farmers' roadway, and did the Government allow the contractors, Messrs. Pigott & Inglis to excavate away the farmers' roadway on both banks of the canal and to place the material so excavated right alongside the cut, completely blocking the farmers' roadway for seven months in 1898 and for six months of the present year, without first providing a roadway for the farmers ?

3. Did the Government engineers in charge of the improvements now being made on the Grenville Canal know that the farmers' roadway was destroyed and blocked for seven months in 1898 and for six months of the present year ? Did said engineers notify the Government of the fact? Did the Government send down a Mr. Pope as commissioner to try and compromise with one of the farmers who controlled the situation? Was the Government notified by telegram that Mr. Pope threatened that the Government would put the farmers in jail if they pulled a rotary derrick off the farmers' roadway that completely blocked them from their spring's work?

4. Did the Government receive a petition signed by all the farmers who were deprived of their roadway in the spring of 1897? Was said petition a petition in equity setting forth all the facts of the case and pointing out the amount of damage these farmers had suffered in consequence of being deprived of their roadway by the Government?

5. Did the Government relieve itself of the responsibility to provide a roadway at all times on both banks of the Grenville Canal for those farmers whose lands are leased for said canal according to said agreement entered into by the Government of Canada on the 8th day of December, 1845? If the Government has not relieved itself of this solemn compact, why does not the Government settle with these farmers for damages and annoyances caused by them being deprived of their roadway for seven months in 1898, and for six months of the present year?

6. Did the Government send Mr. Pope for the second and third time as commissioner to settle with Mr. Weldon for road damages, who was never deprived of a roadway to his farm, and left unpaid all those farmers who for seven months in the year 1898 and for six months of the present year and who at the present moment have no roadway on either bank of the canal fit for traffic?

7. Were the Government notified that the contractors making the improvements on the Grenville Canal caused the farmers who suffered a loss by being deprived of a roadway by compelling them to sign off a claim for damages before they or their teams were allowed employment by the public works carried on by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The Government did undertake by written document to maintain a good road for the use of the farmers. 2. The Government in making the improvements to the canal, did have staked off a part of the roadway and allowed the contractors to excavate a part of the roadway on the bank of the canal, but endeavoured to compel the contractors under the terms of their contract to provide a roadway for the farmers. 3. The engineers of the Government were aware that the road was blocked by the contractors and called upon them to provide a sufficient road for general traffic, and they contended they had provided amply sufficient accommodation for the traffic. Mr. Pope was sent down to value the land taken by the Government for a raceway and at the same time at the request of the contractors, with the consent of the department, valued some damages for the contractors done to one Weldon, for which they paid. The Government so far as is known, was not notified by telegram that Mr. Pope threatened to jail the farmers if they disturbed the contractors' derrick. 4. The Government did receive a notice from the farmers that the road was blocked and each making a claim for damages. 5. The Government have not relieved themselves from any legal liability, but it is not aware that any damage has been suffered, but if any damage was suffered, the contractors under their contract, engaged to settle them, and for this reason, the Government has taken no action in the matter. 6. The Government on more than one occasion made an endeavour to effect a settlement with Mr. Weldon for land for raceway, and sending Mr. Pope for the purpose and on behalf of the contractors. The agent of the Government endeavoured to settle with Mr. Weldon for various damages, and came to some understanding or agreement with him, the Government paying for the land for the raceway and the contractors for the damages. So far as is known, no sum has been paid other farmers for any damage. 7. The Government were notified by Dr. Christie and the farmers that the contractors were compelling the farmers to sign off a claim for damages before they or their teams were allowed employment by the contractors, but we have no other information.

THE CROWN vs. THE BRITISH AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton) asked :

Has an action been recently begun by the Government against the British American Bank Note Company, and if so, when?

2. What is the nature and amount of the claim involved in the action; when did it originate, and over what period does it extend?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Yes, an information against the British American Bank Note Company was filed in the Exchequer Court of Canada on the 18th of May, 1899, and served upon the defendant company on the 20th May, 1899. 2. Under the terms of the several contracts entered into, it was provided that all the stamps should be printed from engraved steel plates, but the defendant company without the consent or knowledge of Her Majesty's officers, as the Crown charges, supplied during the continuance of the contract, a large quantity of stamps which were not printed from engraved steel plates but were printed from stone by the process called lithography. The stamps printed by the process of lithography are not worth as much as engraved stamps by 60 per cent, but are inferior in workmanship and are very easily imitated and counterfeited; and the Government claim from the defendant company as damages for breach of contract the sum of $300,000. The defendant company, as a defence to the information, set up, first, a general denial; and second, substantially, that the work required to be done under the contract, was done under the supervision of an officer of the Government of Canada; that the stamps were supplied subject to the revision and approval of the Minister of Inland Revenue for the time being, and that the stamps were accepted by the said Minister under the said contract.

SETTLEMENT PRIVILEGES IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to a reply he made to a question which I put to him on the 10th of May, and to ask him if he has formulated any plan for giving to the sons of farmers and others in Ontario the same privileges as have been given to the Doukhobors and Galicians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to my hon. friend, I have to say that I have not been able to give the matter such attention as would enable me to formulate a plan. The answer I gave to the question expressed my view and my intention in the matter, and the intentions of my colleagues. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is quite impossible for me to devote much time to a matter of that kind in the midst of the work of the session. I hope, however, after the session is over to get the matter into such shape that our intentions can be carried out.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—TELEGRAPH LINE TO THE YUKON.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say a few words on a question of privilege. I have in my hand a file of the Victoria "Daily Times," of the 22nd of June, which contains an article headed:

Useless Obstruction—Another All-night Sitting of the Dominion House of Commons—Col. Prior Objects to an all-Canadian Line to Dawson—Fighting against the Interests of the Province of British Columbia.

The article then goes on to say:

(Special to the "Times.")—Ottawa, Ont., June 22.—Col. Prior was the means of starting a field day in the House yesterday over the Government's action in rushing through the telegraph line from British Columbia to Dawson City, and the adjournment was only reached at 6.35 this morning.

Col. Prior and some others of the Opposition side talked in favour of the Northern Commercial Company, because one Roche, of the British House of Commons, seems to have made the friendship of Prior while visiting Canada.

Hon. A. G. Blair did not hesitate to tell Col. Prior that his friend, whom he was supporting against the best interests of the country, and particularly of British Columbia, was no gentleman. Roche not only so far forgot himself as to publish a private letter, but he tried to do what was equally as bad while in Ottawa.

All this did not prevent Col. Prior, who was ably assisted by Mr. Earle and Sir Hibbert Tupper, the latter of whom sat out the debate to play the part of "copperhead" and do all that lay in his power, along with his colleague and the man who wants to lead the Tories in British Columbia, to defeat a measure which is calculated to assist the province in every way.

The scheme of Prior, Earle and Tupper meant a cable to Seattle.

Sir Louis Davies told Col. Prior what he was doing, and how he was abusing the confidence of the people who elected him.

Premier Laurier pointed out that he would have no cable scheme such as Prior was fighting for, but insisted on what the Government was doing, an all-Canadian line. The Premier showed that Tagish and Lake Bennett were now connected by telegraph, and the line would be continued on to Dawson. From Bennett a spur was built to Atlin. All this would be done this season, and next year the line would be continued from Bennett to Quesnelle, to connect with the British Columbia telegraph system. In this way Canada would not only have an all-Canadian route, but places along the way, largely in British Columbia would be benefited. The Northern Commercial Company never did a turn until such time as the Government commenced work.

If Col. Prior had his way, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier truly said, the Government should not have given any telegraph connection between Dawson and British Columbia, but should have waited until such time as his friend and client, Roche, wanted to act.

Last year Senator Macdonald (British Columbia) was put up to denounce the railway connection between British Columbia and the Yukon, and now we have Prior, Earle and Tupper sitting all night and fighting by all kinds of obstructions and otherwise, a grant of $25,000 to commence operations of building a telegraph line from British Columbia to the Yukon country. The item, however, was passed, as the Government determined to put it through.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that this is a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end. I am not very much surprised at seeing it in that paper, knowing the source from which it emanated.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman has risen to make a personal explanation, he must not attack anybody, even outside of the House. Of course, if he wishes to go further, the hon. gentleman must make a motion.

Mr. PRIOR. I will move a motion after I get through, Mr. Speaker. I say I am not surprised at that article, as every few weeks there has been something of the same kind put in this paper in reference to myself and my colleagues. I wish to state, as will be seen by reference to "Hansard," that neither I nor any of my colleagues have at any time resisted this scheme for a telegraph line to Dawson. I only wished, when I brought forward that motion and the papers connected with it, to show what I considered the unfair and deceitful dealings of the Government with the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company, the company I was talking about; and when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) attacked me about my conduct in sitting all night, I defied him to find one word in "Hansard" that I had uttered against the scheme. I was not against the scheme; I was anxious to see an all-Canadian line; and the company I was talking about offered to build an all-Canadian line instead of a line by Skagway, through American or disputed territory. This article says that the scheme I supported meant a cable to Seattle. So far as I know, Seattle as a terminus of the telegraph line was never mentioned in this House; it never entered my brain to have a telegraph line from Seattle to Dawson. The charter of the Northern Commercial Company was for a line from Vancouver to Dawson. It certainly went through American territory, or rather, I will say, presumed American territory, because the territory is in dispute; but the company offered to build the line which the Government are building now. I never, by word of mouth or in any other way, offered any opposition to that line being built; but I did object to the Government building it without offering some compensation to the company or giving the company a chance to build it. The company could build it as quickly as the Government. But any one who looks at "Hansard" will find that I never said a single word against the scheme. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Motion negatived.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: That the Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before continuing the line of observations which I was addressing to the House when it adjourned last night, I would like to refer to a suggestion which has been made to me that possibly I had overlooked chapter 33 of 52 Victoria when referring to the difference in the powers given to Mr. Ogilvie and the powers granted under the Corrupt Practices at Elections Act, in regard to the pardoning of witnesses. I did not overlook that Act, because Mr. Ogilvie sets out in his report the section from it in full, and refers to it. But since the matter has been mentioned, I would compare section 3 of chapter 33 of 52 Victoria with section 9 of chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes in order to make clear the point to which I referred yesterday. Now, having mentioned the resolution which I propose to put into your hands, and the responsibility that I am prepared to take in regard to this matter, I proceed now, as briefly as the subject will permit, to give some additional reasons not contained in that long resolution, which I purposely made as full as possible, why the positions taken in that resolution should commend themselves to this Parliament. One may note that the charge of gross neglect, incapacity, &c., at the outset of that resolution is due largely to the extraordinary delay on the part of the Government in filling the position of Minister of the Interior. I will not here refer to the negotiations, arrangements and manipulations that were going on until late in the fall before the way was made clear to the Treasury benches for the present Minister of the Interior, but I would refer to the fact that attention was drawn, in the most marked manner, to the vacancy in that important portfolio. On September 8th, 1896, the leader of the Opposition formally called the attention of the Government to the delay in appointing the Minister of the Interior. On September 10th, the Prime Minister replied that public reasons required delay, and again on the 23rd September my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) repeated the inquiry, and the Prime Minister said, to use his own words: "The department must remain in abeyance yet." And on that occasion the leader of the Opposition referred to the importance of the department, especially at that moment. Again, the hon. member for York said that he objected to granting the $1,000,000, then being asked in the Committee of Supply, when there was no Minister to explain the policy, and he insisted that the delay was damaging to the public interest. Again, the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) called attention to the interests of the vast North-west and the necessity of having a Minister to represent them.

The point touched by the resolution, that though the Minister of the Interior, when he finally did settle down into office, was aware of the enormous influx of population that was going into the Klondike region, and had been aware of it long before, nevertheless he took no active steps or measures at all, though pressed continuously to do so by his subordinates, is shown by the minutes of Council, based on a report of his own, dated 28th February, 1898. In that report he says:

It is apparently beyond any question that what is known as the Yukon District will be occupied by a large number of people during the coming season.

But to make that point stronger, I shall refer to his observations in this House on the 16th February, 1898, when he said:

There are at present thousands of people on their way, and thousands more who are making their preparations to go to this district. What will be the condition of affairs if 40,000 or 50,000 people should struggle through these mountains and find themselves at the end of the summer 40 or 50 miles down in the northern part of the district.

Again, he said:

We have to consider that, no matter what warnings are addressed to the people, no matter what this Government or the United States Government may do or attempt to do, immense numbers of people will find their way into that territory. What will be the condition of affairs if it should happen that 40,000 or 50,000 should be there in the fall.

In the same speech, he referred to a statement in the New York "Herald" to the effect that a quarter of a million gold-seekers would go from Seattle alone this year. And again, he said, "that 7,000 had sailed in the last eight days," and he referred to "what is known as the movement to the Klondike district. Again, he said :

We are told, too, that the transportation agencies in Europe are booking tens of thousands of people for the Pacific coast and that the immediate object of these people is to procure transportation to the Klondike district.

Again, he said :

Everything points to the fact that the greatest rush that has been seen for many years on this continent will take place during the next few months towards the Klondike district.

What steps did the hon. gentleman take to prepare for that rush? What organization did he contrive to prepare for it? Will one of his officers tell us? This comes out in the private correspondence, produced before the Ogilvie commission, as can be found on page 207. And, remember, as I read this extract from Mr. Deville's letter, what is stated in the motion that I have referred to and to which the Minister of the Interior himself referred this session, where the Surveyor General pressed him to take this matter up and pointed to him the danger arising from the delay that had already occurred, and that, if my recollection serves me right, was about the month of March.

On the 28th July, 1897, there was the following letter from Mr. Deville, in which he tells Mr. Fawcett :

Since you left, I have continued to urge action upon all of Mr. Ogilvie's recommendations, and I am glad to say that the Council have at last taken up the matter in earnest, so much so that some decisions are rather unexpected.

Then follows on that page the things that were done as pertaining to the organization of a proper staff. It was in March, 1898, that Mr. Deville again had to call the attention of his Minister to the neglect that had occurred with regard to this region, to which the Minister himself admitted there was a great and unexpected rush. When the hon. Minister finally set to work, when he began to mean business, when he began to issue instructions, he certainly went with a rush. He became the Napoleon of the west in earnest, and as a despotic Minister, or an incapable or an impetuous Minister, wildly rushing here and there, he ignored the Governor General of the day, he ignored all forms of procedure, he ignored our parliamentary system and the rules of parliamentary government. All those points are touched upon in the motion and they are important. They transcend, of course, the other evidences of extraordinary haste in connection with the confusion of names and the confusion of addresses of some of the most important officers whom the Minister sent out. Although the Minister of the Interior had been a close friend and intimate with Major Walsh for some fifteen years, although the Minister and Major Walsh had been thrown together previously to this, the hon. gentleman forgot the name of Major Walsh, so that the Order in Council and the illegal commission which His Excellency was induced to sign appointed the wrong man. Afterwards other officers of some importance were given their wrong addresses, and all these things had to be corrected; and then, without any justification and in disparagement of the high office of His Excellency the Governor General of that day, this Minister, forsooth, without authority of any kind, wired to his officers, or one of them—and the telegram is set out in my motion in full—that he had appointed Mr. Walsh, on the 12th August, to the high position, which afterwards, if you please, His Excellency was induced to formally confer. But, whereas on the 12th August John M. Walsh was appointed by the Minister of the Interior, the Governor General did not know until the 17th August, that it was the intention or wish of his advisers that John M. Walsh should be appointed. And then the commission under the Great Seal followed to John M. Walsh, with the extraordinary powers, extraordinary and illegal powers, to which I have already referred. And then he waked up, did this Minister, in a hurry, this Minister, who seemed to have had no time for constitutional considerations, no time even to obtain the correct names of and addresses of the men upon whom he intended to confer large powers—he waked up, to find that there was no John M. Walsh, though he had been appointed by His Excellency himself; there was no such person as the one mentioned in the commission issued under the Great Seal. But the commission to John M. Walsh was not rescinded, it was not cancelled, it was not revoked. But His Excellency is asked to appoint James M. Walsh, and His Excellency does appoint James M. Walsh, who succeeds John M. Walsh. And so, we have outstanding the two commissions, the one to John and the other to James. And, if any student of parliamentary practice or constitutional law is curious enough to follow this matter up, he will find that the law relating to issue of proclamations was disregarded in a most extraordinary manner. In the first place, with these duplicate commissions, with the powers given therein, or purporting to be given therein, we are brought face to face with the fact that there is no authority whatever on the part of this Government, or on the part of the Governor General, to confer these powers or to issue these commissions, either the one to John or the one to James. This, of course, is important in more senses than one. I cite this evidence to show that everything was allowed to get into such a state of confusion that the constitution was trampled upon, and all these powers, all these questions of jurisdictions and authority, were ignored, or were completely unknown or unappreciated by the advisers of His Excellency. In this House, the Minister has told us that the commission to Major Walsh was issued under the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 19, section 1, as amended by 56 Victoria, chapter 14. Further inquiries brought out the fact that the only Order in Council issued under these statutes was the Order in Council of September, 1893. Therefore, it will be found that no Order in Council has ever yet been approved by any Governor General in Canada under the provisions of these statutes which would permit him to issue the commission under the Great Seal to other persons than are mentioned in the Royal Instructions; and no such officer as Major Walsh, as a chief executive officer, anywhere is mentioned in the Royal Instructions. The Queen's prerogative in that regard cannot be exercised by the Governor General without statutory authority. And the statutory authority in this case, in which the Minister of the Interior is under the impression that he has justification, has never been acted upon, for the Order of September, 1893, only fixes fees, and does not extend the list of the officers to whom these commissions under the Great Seal may issue. Then again, as to the gazetting; paragraph 2, chap. 14 of 56 Victoria requires the publication of the notice of these appointments in the "Gazette," the list of the commissions to be laid on the Table within fifteen days after the commencement of the next session. Waiving the point as to the right of His Excellency the Governor General to issue a commission under the Great Seal to either James or John, the only compliance with the provision was in the case of John. This did not exist in the case of James, in whose case we have simply the notice erratum of August 28th, 1897, respecting James Morrow Walsh. No list was laid on the Table of parties to whom commissions were issued. Parliament met on February 23rd, and it was not until March 4th that the commission was laid on the Table. So, these important provisions of Parliament—and none will deny their importance, none will deny the great solemnity attached, under our constitution, to an action in respect of these things—were entirely overlooked or ignored. But we have had, in this whole matter, such a system of arbitrary government, such a series of illegal acts on the part of the advisers of His Excellency, that I believe there is no parallel in the history of this country for the state of things that followed. These gentlemen, one and all of them—for they are all involved in this—had got into a hurry, and the rush had bewildered them. Let me briefly refer to constitutional points that require no elaboration. The powers of the sovereign, under our constitution, are limited. To use the old expression, "The sovereign cannot touch a blade of grass or take an ear of corn without the authority of the law." But what do these gentlemen care for rules that prescribe the powers of the sovereign? What do these gentlemen care for constitutional safeguards in regard to parliamentary government and the limitation of legislation by Order in Council? They ignore, in these cases, all these important principles, so that one is obliged to turn to the Privy Council decisions, and read again, as I do, from the case of Cameron & Kyte as to the powers of the Governor. I have referred to the sovereign authority. But, wide as these powers may be, in the case of the Governor, it is laid down as follows:—

But if the Governor be an officer merely with a limited authority from the Crown, his assumption of an act of sovereign power, out of the limits of the authority so given to him, would be purely void. * * * No authority or dictum has been cited before us to show that a Governor can be considered as having a delegation of the whole royal power in any colony, as between him and the subject, when it is not expressly given by his commission.

You have two sources, and two only, for the authority of the Governor General in Canada in regard to the royal prerogative. One source would be considered his instruction, and the other source the statutes of this country. I have dealt with the statutes. Now, turning to Lefroy and to Clement, whose name has been mentioned in another connection, we find this question of prerogative powers, and limitations of it by instructions, dealt with. The five classes who may be appointed, outside of special legislation, by commissions under the Great Seal, are as follows:—(1) members of the Privy Council, (2) Senators, (3) Speakers of the Senate, (4) Judges, (5) Deputy Governors General. Under none of these heads would come the case of a chief executive officer for the Yukon territory. Nor can it be said that under any statute comes the case of the chief executive officer of the Yukon territory. Parliament met, Parliament sat, and Parliament was prorogued during this time. But these gentlemen, good, easy Ministers, as they were, caring nothing either for the question of the prerogative or the responsibility of the Queen's representative, cared less for Parliament. We could have given them the power, we could have given them the powers that were obtained aforesaid by limited acts in regard to a country that was about to be organized and about to be governed like the old Northwest Territories. But they had an easier and shorter road than all that. It means bother to come down to Parliament and ask for parliamentary authority ; so, in this case as, unhappily, in many others, these gentlemen simply did as they pleased, and from that day to this they have not taken the trouble to come down and ask for an act of indemnity, and plead the exigency of the case, and lay before Parliament the state of affairs, and to say that, owing, first of all, to their unpardonable neglect in appointing a Minister of the Interior, and then owing to his incapacity, and to his allowing the state of affairs to become so confused, and the rush of people to become so great, they had to do all these things. They did them with good intentions, and, therefore, as under constitutional rules, they could ask the House to give them an Act of indemnity. But that has become a matter of form ; they feel safe in relying on a parliamentary majority, and with that they do not think it is worth the bother and trouble to pass Acts of that kind. As to the executive authority, let me do, as the Prime Minister once said this side of the House proposed to do, remind the House of the A B C of parliamentary government. Todd says :

The executive has a limited power of legislation by Order in Council, and rules framed by the Department of State, but only where the exercise of such power has been authorized or sanctioned by Parliament. It is a fundamental law of the English constitution that the sovereign can neither alter, add to, nor dispense with any existing law of the realm. The ancient prerogative of the Crown in legislating by Order in Council has been subjected to the control of Parliament, and is now mainly exercised as a deputed and not as a prerogative at all.

That is the case of the sovereign, but as I pointed out, no Governor General and no Government of any British colony stands even in that position. Therefore, you have these high principles trampled on, and the spectacle of a Governor General of Canada, not only induced to trench upon the royal prerogative improperly and illegally, but you have the spectacle of a Governor General under his commission, and his responsible advisers asking him to sign an Order in Council deputed to Major Walsh, of whom I shall have much to say before I sit down, powers that this Parliament never deputed to a Governor General in Council, legislative authorities given to this man without the slightest sanction of Parliament, directly or indirectly—that is the condition of affairs, and enough to turn this man's head, as it did. The Governor General, sitting in Ottawa with his Council, were limited in regard to what they might do ; Major Walsh, under the Great Seal, away in the Yukon, was an absolute despot, and he exercised his powers in the most despotic manner. Cared he for the legislation of this Parliament ? Not a bit. Whether it related to the North-west Territories, or whether it related to matters in the Yukon, he would look to his commission and to his Order in Council, and plead, as he did, according to newspaper reports, and certainly as his acts show, that he was governed by no law ; he was, as I said before, practically and verily, a law unto himself. Now, as to executive officers, Charles on Powers of Executive Officers, says this :

Officers are employed by the state to put into actual execution the laws or some portion of the laws of their country.

But in this case this gentleman was put in that position, and clothed ostensibly with authority to repeal laws or to make laws, and he did so, or attempted to do so ; and yet the Minister of Justice, in another place, stated in regard to Major Walsh all that I have been contending for, but contrary to the expressed authority to which I refer, for he said :

Major Walsh goes there, and he goes there to act under the law and in accordance with the law ; we could not protect him if we instructed him to violate the law.

They did instruct him to violate the law, he violated the law ; will he be protected ? Have these gentlemen new light on the subject, and do they think that they are compelled to act in that particular ? I refer to this question of ministerial responsibility in regard to all this action, in my motion ; I will refer to Votes and Proceedings, page 362, to support the position I take, that for all of these acts, at this time and under the circumstances to which I refer, the Government of the day stand responsible to Parliament and responsible to the country. Is this subject an important one to which I have referred for the last few minutes ? I venture to believe it is as important to-day as it was in the case of India when the trial of Warren Hastings took place, and these questions were examined and inquired into. Warren Hastings was charged with exercising arbitrary power, and his plea was ignorance, his plea was that he was not a lawyer. I would ask the House to remember that when Burke impeached him for high crimes and misdemeanours, he said :

He impeached him as a British Governor answering to a British tribunal, not as a subahdar, as a Pacha of three tails. He considered it monstrous that an English Governor, tried as a British subject, should be heard to declare that he governed upon the principle of arbitrary power.

When dealing with Hastings's plea, that he assumed sovereignty, he said :

Whether or not such power or powers of that nature were delegated to me by any provisions or any Act of Parliament, he confessed himself too little of a lawyer to pronounce.

That was the condition of things. Burke disposed of the plea of ignorance by saying that if that were admitted, no one but a lawyer would be eligible for high office. In regard to arbitrary power, Burke says :

He have arbitrary powers ! My Lords, the East India Company have not arbitrary powers to give him ; the King has no arbitrary power to give him ; your Lordships have not ; nor the Commons ; nor the whole legislature. We have no arbitrary power to give, because arbitrary power is a thing which neither any man can hold nor any man can give away.

Again, in his speech on that occasion, and dealing with this subject, he said :

Those who give and those who receive arbitrary power are alike criminal, and there is no man but is bound to resist it to the best of his power, wherever it shall show its face to the world. Nothing but absolute impotence can justify men in not resisting it to the best of their power.

Again, on page 93, he says :

In short, follow him where you will ; let him have eastern or western laws ; you find everywhere arbitrary power and speculation of governors proscribed and horribly punished—more so than I would ever wish to punish any human creature. If this then is the case, as I hope and trust it will be proved to your Lordships—that there is law in these countries, that there is no delegation of power which exempts a Governor from the law—then, I say, at any rate a British Governor is to answer for his conduct, and cannot be justified by wicked examples and bad practices.

The applicability of that language to the case under consideration, is apt ; it condemns the Government, the advisers of the Governor General, and it condemns the man who acted under their illegal authority, in consequence of this attempt to clothe Major Walsh with these powers that the Government themselves did not possess, and dared not exercise. Who was Major Walsh ? What was his record ? How did he serve the country, and how did he leave the service of the country ? That is an interesting question at the outset to consider, in view of the facts which have come out in this extraordinary investigation conducted by Mr. Ogilvie. Go to the North-west Territories and ask about the record of Major Walsh when he was Superintendent of the Mounted Police. I do not wish, nor is it necessary for me, to attempt to detract from the reputation that he got there for courage. I do not wish to detract, if I could, from the reputation that he got for having done the state some service when affairs were in a disorganized condition, when he showed British courage to Indians, and, notably, in the case of Sitting Bull, though I could give versions from that part of the country that do not altogether accord to Major Walsh the credit that has been given to him down in this part of the country. But, when this man, who served his country for some years, from early in the seventies down to 1883, was permitted to retire from the service without one kindly word being said about him in this Parliament, and this Parliament is not lacking in generosity to its servants, when no vote was brought down in regard to the gratuity to this officer, but when it was in an amount paid out of a lump sum, and this man was permitted silently to retire into private life, it was impossible not to ask why this was so, and it was impossible not to learn that he retired under a cloud. Knowing this, believing this, remembering all this, I attempted, before making this speech, to acquire official information and official facts. I approached the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and asked him for permission to see the records in regard to the charges that were made, charges that were notorious and that were referred to by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite on the floor of this House, charges in regard to the disappearance of supplies and stores under the charge and responsibility of Major Walsh when he was in the Mounted Police. With his usual courtesy, the right hon. Prime Minister gave me authority to have access to these files. On coming in contact with the officer to whom he had referred me, I discovered that these files had been burned. I discovered also that a board of inquiry, presided over by the present head of the Manitoba penitentiary, Col. Irving, I think, had met, and that this board had considered the condition of things. I gained some information, not very explicit, but sufficient to confirm my impression that it was Sir John Macdonald's condemnation of Major Walsh's conduct in the matter by permitting him to retire, the other alternative being to further prosecute the matter and hold the Major responsible, for the shortage in the supplies under his command, a shortage of supplies that the late Hon. M. C. Cameron, afterwards appointed by the Treasury benches Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, referred to on the floor of this House. It was at this time that Sir John Macdonald used the facetious remark to the effect that the mice were said to have got at the supplies, some of which supplies were nails and spikes, and that it was a fact that the mice in that part of the country had suffered from indigestion for a long period afterwards. Major Walsh was appointed by the Conservatives. He left under the Conservative regime, and that he did not leave altogether in a happy frame of mind was indicated by the fact that he joined the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite. But to come back to the subject with which I was dealing I asked, as these papers were burned, that the Controller of the Mounted Police should record the official conversation I had with him under the direction of the right hon. Prime Minister, that he should submit that record to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask the Prime Minister to allow him to let me have that official record for the purpose of using it in this House, but to my amazement I am left without it ; I am denied the privilege, in fact, the right. Here you have the disappearance of the record ; here you have no official paper in Ottawa concerning a most important feature of this very case, and I asked that the information that was given to me by the officer of the Government, with the sanction of the right hon. Prime Minister, should be put in the shape of an official memorandum, and that I should be permitted to say that this official statement was the recollection of the officer thoroughly familiar with the whole transaction. All of that is denied me, and, consequently, I can but refer, in the way I have, to the general knowledge in the country, and which is borne out by a Liberal paper of the 1st September, 1898. I would prefer to have read the official memorandum if I had been permitted to read it to the House, but I am forced to have reference to a statement published by the Regina "Leader" of September 1st, 1898, a paper in sympathy with this Administration. No one doubts that statement, because the paper says so. It proceeds:

Major Walsh, when he arrived in the Klondike, seems to have imagined that he was again empowered to deal as a man is justified in dealing in a "Sitting Bull" emergency—that is, to be a law unto himself, and follow or disregard any rule, regulation, precept or statute as his instinct leads him to think will be best at the moment. About the first thing Major Walsh undertook to do in the Klondike was to issue liquor permits at $2 a gallon—a thing which he had as much right and authority to do as the editor of the "Witness." * * * In view of the circumstances—and we say it as an admirer and supporter of the Minister and the Government under which Major Walsh held his appointment not one whit less warm than the "Witness"—we fully coincide with Mr. Haultain in the belief that it is fortunate for the country that Major Walsh's power as Yukon Commissioner has ceased, and that such a man could not leave the district too soon.

I may say, as I proceeded to read, I thought that was the issue of the paper containing a reference to the shortage of supplies. Later on, I may be able to give the House that particular reference made openly in the press, charging Major Walsh with responsibility in that regard. Further, in connection with the Major's assumption of authority, and his illegal action I refer to Mr. Bulyea's report. I shall not read it; it was brought down and is of public record in the North-west legislature. But Major Walsh, in his report attached to the departmental report for 1898, at page 323, informed the hon. Minister as follows:—

I have written you previously that I should not recognize the authority of the North-west Territories Government in this district.

The Regina "Leader," of August 5th, 1898, contains the report of the speech by Mr. Haultain that everything at Dawson was in disorder. Referring to Mr. Bulyea, he says he went in to prohibit or regulate the sale of liquor. He associated himself with the Superintendent of the North-west Mounted Police and another federal officer. That was a superintendent other than Major Walsh. A retail license was fixed at $2,000: there was to be certain accommodation for boarders, sale on Sunday was prohibited and gambling in bars forbidden. Mr. Haultain said that Major Walsh undertook to openly urge and support and encourage breaches of the law which was as much a law of the Yukon as it was of the North-west Territories; and that if his conduct in this particular could be taken as an indication of his ordinary attitude Major Walsh could not leave the country too soon. So said Mr. Haultain. I need not further deal with this subject because my motion sets out very fully the reference as to the opinion of the Department of Justice being sought about the subject as to whether the laws of that country did not prevail in a portion of the Territories to which they were especially applicable. It is inconceivable how such a question should be submitted.

I again call attention to the carelessness of the Government in respect to the organization of this country, and to the lack of proper checks upon the officers appointed. We have a provision in the statutes requiring all officers who have to do with the revenue to give bonds. I asked the other day how many officers had given bonds in the Yukon territory, where so many officers are under a cloud of suspicion—and unfortunately those who have done no wrong have to suffer from being included in any general language concerning the others—and the Minister gave me the names of certain officials in the customs and three in the post office. On one occasion he said in Supply, as I thought, that no officers in his service had given bonds, but "Hansard" having reported him in the other sense that there were no officers who had not complied with the statutes, I ventured to write to the Minister of the Interior some days ago to know if he were correctly reported, and to that letter I have had no reply. I have been unable to elicit in the House, and he apparently has been unable to give me the names of any officers appointed by him who have complied with this statute concerning public officers and the 5th section thereof. Let us see what class of officers in the old times and before the advent of these gentlemen to office, did give these bonds. You will find in the returns of 1897-98 that sheriffs, land registrars in the North-west, agents of Dominion Lands, several of them, the sheriff of another district, even the acting agent of Dominion Lands, all gave bonds; and in 1898 Dominion Land agents and sheriffs in the North-west Territories outside of the Yukon, registrars of titles, and so on, all gave bonds. When I asked the Minister of the Interior formally what officers appointed in the Yukon since February, 1897, gave bonds under the provisions of that Act, he gave me only the names of certain officials in the customs and three in the post office. Then we have an interesting return in regard to these public officers. The point has been made with great force in the case of Indian officials to which I have referred, where officers were appointed with salaries wholly inadequate in that country; salaries which were good in England but wretchedly small in India, and that suggested to the great critic of the Government, that in that fact itself there was suspicion that officers could not be expected to withstand the temptation surrounding them when their salaries were so small. I understand that the Government urge this contention against that view: When you speak of small salaries do you know that the Government provide board and living allowances for these officers, and in consideration of that is it fair to say that these salaries are too small. On that I have been unable to get definite information this session. I have tried with a pertinacity that may have been annoying to the Minister of the Interior. The information he has brought down may be sufficient, and it may be my stupidity that will not enable me to be satisfied, but let me say to the House that on this important question the only authority I can find for granting quarters and rations to officers is furnished to me at my request by the Auditor General. I went to the Auditor General and asked him if he knew of any authority for supplying rations, and so on, and what do you suppose the date of that authority is? It is the 7th July, 1898. But look at the officers that were appointed to the service as shown by the return, and look at their salaries. It would be tedious to refer to this matter in detail, but I ask you to recollect these extraordinarily small salaries paid to officers who were invested with extraordinary great powers. I have mentioned the delegating of the powers of the Governor General in Council to Major Walsh, but these powers were delegated to Mr. Fawcett and to three clerks under Mr. Fawcett, and let us see how these clerks were paid. This return shows the names of timber agents, paid $60 a month; two or three cooks $60 a month; deputy registrar, $60 a month; clerks in the Gold Commissioner's office, who rightly or wrongly are involved in the evidence in regard to the purchase and sale of passes and privileges as doing work before hours and after hours; these officers received $2 a day. Assistant cooks got $60 a month; janitors, like Villeneuve, got $60 a month; surveyors, $3 a day; surveyors' assistants, $1.50 a day, and the housekeeper for the judge, $60 a month. There may be authority by Order in Council from the man who absolutely ignores Parliament, but none has been produced for paying some of these allowances. The other day I had a conversation across the floor with the Solicitor General with regard to judges, and although the House is not formally supplied with information on that score, nevertheless we have judges who are appointed without provision for their board and their allowance. There is a correspondence (not brought down) that took place after these officers were appointed in regard to their allowance.

But what authority was there to pay Judge Maguire over and above his salary. I shall pass that point by referring to some interesting names. I find Philip Walsh as a timber agent, and Philip Walsh, as the evidence shows was a pretty active speculator, and I have charged in my motion Philip Walsh in connection with a very serious matter. I find E. McKeown a secret service officer. Did any one in this Parliament ever know that since Parliament ceased to vote supplies for secret service, there was a secret service in the country.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Customs has one.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) reminds me that the Minister of Customs has a little fund for that purpose, but he got that fund openly and above-board. The funds that were supplied in a matter of that kind were supplied by the free vote of Parliament; but, in the case of Mr. McKeown, what services did this secret officer perform? Who was he? If my recollection is right, he was something of a prizefighter; he was practically ruined in the general elections in Manitoba; and I believe he was not far from trying his fisticuffs with Major Walsh before they got through their secret services and their government of the Yukon territory; and he has disappeared from the service. But we now found another name—W. H. Lynch, Dominion ranger, $20 a month and $620.70 expenses. Now, according to tolerably good knowledge and certain notorious facts in regard to when he went there and when he came back, his ranging was from the eastern townships to the Yukon and back. What he did besides write a report, and, I believe, a supplementary report as well, neither of which has been brought down to the House, will perhaps be explained. But in regard to these officers, I have only this in addition to say. Mr. Philip Walsh, Crown timber agent, was a brother of Major Walsh. He left the service on August 31, 1898. Mr. Willison, a cousin of the editor of the "Globe," was Crown timber agent. William Wright, employed in the Crown Timber Office at Dawson, is also a relative of the editor of the "Globe." But there is an interesting name here to which I wish to refer. Some attention would be paid to his evidence, I fancy, for he is given a position of great responsibility and trust. R. C. Miller was appointed mining recorder and Crown timber inspector at Tagish, Yukon territory, on the 1st of March, 1899, at a salary of $1,500 per annum. Now, my information may be considered as coming from one who is a little biased in matters of this kind. What do we think of Mr. R. C. Miller, who has the confidence of the Government to such an extent? Before he was appointed he went to the Yukon territory, and he formed an impression such as I have formed, in regard to the prevalence of corruption under Government management in that country, and he wrote to the press not long before he was appointed :

Since I have reached Dawson I have almost been forced to a like conclusion, and have no hesitation in declaring that if they do not take strong and speedy steps to end the orgie that is in progress here, they will not only have become partners in the dirt themselves, but shall have permitted the continuance of a system which must result in a very great financial and moral injury to the Dominion.

I shall not read all of his letter, though it would bear it ; time will not permit me.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the date ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This was some time in the fall of 1898. It appears in the press of the 15th of October, 1898. Mr. Miller was the editor of the Pembroke "Observer," a Liberal paper, and he wrote these letters to that paper, one of which, I am told, was so bad that the Liberals of the place would not have it published. But in this letter, which is bad enough, in all conscience, he says :

I have seen enough to convince myself that it is worse even than the mind of an honest man can conceive. That the mining laws are being set aside on a colossal scale is beyond all question, and that barefaced bribery is the rule of the day is equally certain.

Now he has been rewarded by the Minister of the Interior with an office at Tagish. How much, I wonder, is he given besides $1,500 a year ? Board and allowance ? At any rate, this is witness No. 1. Now, in my resolution I impeach the Minister of the Interior straight for having issued an illegal permit to an old partner of his, and for having violated the laws of this country. The defence has not been suggested, that he violated the law in many other particulars ; I hope no such defence or answer is to come. But I defy any member of the Government to give authority in the laws of this country for this document which the Minister of the Interior undoubtedly gave to this man, who tried to sell his great privilege, whether he succeeded or not :

Ottawa, 13th May, 1898.

To the Officers and Officials in the Yukon Territory.

This introduces Mr. Philp, who has a permit to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may see fit to take with him, without regard to the usual regulations.

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Every customs officer, every Mounted Police officer, every inland officer included in that direction ; and every officer who would disobey that injunction, would do so at the awful peril of offending the Napoleon of the present Administration. What was done with it ? Here is a letter which was addressed to Mr. W. H. Bunting of the "Mail and Empire," Toronto :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

October 4th, 1898.

W. H. Bunting, Esq.,
"Mail and Empire," Toronto.

Dear Sir,—When in Victoria, B.C., in June last, a gentleman introduced himself to me, and in substance said he had a permit to take a large quantity of liquor into the Yukon district, and wanted to know if I knew a certain distiller. I replied in the affirmative, and wished to see before taking hold of the deal in any way, the bona fide nature of the transaction. A telegram was sent at my suggestion to Victoria, where the original order or permit was held ; an answer came back, which I saw, stating that the original, signed by Clifford Sifton, could be forwarded by next steamer if necessary. The party in whose favour the permit was was Mr. Philp, partner of Clifford Sifton, of Brandon. I asked who was interested in the matter beside the party who offered it to me ; he said that Philp was to receive $5,000 in cash when order or permit was handed over, and one-third of the profits at the end of the deal. I then would have nothing to do with it : did not think seriously of having anything to do with it at any time.

It is fair to say all that I know in defence of this high-handed, illegal transaction, that is, that at that time Mr. Philp was not a partner of the Minister of the Interior ; that Mr. Philp, having sent a wire at the same time to the Minister of the Interior to know whether this covered liquor, was told that it did not cover liquor. But these people, or any person dealing with Mr. Philp, had simply the language of that to go upon ; and the official to whom that might be presented by any one entering the Yukon territory, had simply that document to go on. I charge that document to have been an illegal document. I charge that the Minister of the Interior, with daring to violate the laws of this country, and to violate them in connection with his former partner, a man who undoubtedly made an improper use of this document, from any point of view. Though my desire is to give to the House as fully as possible the sources of information on which I am taking this important step, I cannot venture to read all that is in my possession. At this stage, when I am asking for a commission, and undertaking all the responsibility that can attach to any hon. gentleman in this House in such a position, I think it would serve no good purpose for me to give even the names of the parties who are willing that I should give them. But, in order to satisfy the House that there is in my possession material that should force—not the Government ; I make no appeal to the Government in this matter, let that be understood—but force the House, a majority of this Parliament, to see that the reasonable request of my motion is complied with, and that a proper commission is constituted which will enable these matters to be probed to the bottom, and far more satisfactorily than under the Government commission that was issued, was possible or has happened.

I have in my hand a statement from a Liberal, a man who tells me at any rate that he is a Liberal, and a respectable man. I shall not, for the moment, give his name, though I have permission to do so. He says:

That he was compelled to pay women $1 or $2 to go in a side door of the post office for his mail. Police would not allow men to go in. This was the door from which men came out after having gone in. Police took money to let the public into the mining recorder's office. Kennedy went in by the Mackenzie River and Yukon route in 1897 and left in September, 1898. He got two letters while there, dated the 11th and 12th of April, and received those about the 1st July of that year.

Another young man who was in a bank, writes on the 29th May, 1899, and I ask the attention of the House to this particularly, because there is a formal charge in my motion in connection with the same subject, although this is not the case mentioned:

I have just returned from the Yukon, where I have been for the last two years. I was one of the many unlucky ones. We had one good chance of making a little stake. Mr. McLaughlin, at one time timber agent, gave us a grant of a mile of timber land near Dawson. We had our money up, $250, when a new timber agent arrived, who took the grant from us. He said the Government did not intend to grant any timber berths within three miles of Dawson—yet in less than ten days he had given the same berth to Messrs. Bartlett Bros. They (Bartlett Bros.) sold the timber to other parties for $10,000. We would have this much or more out of it.

Couple that with the Wilson case, for exactly the same thing happened to Wilson. He had paid his $250 to McLaughlin, he had his receipt, he had his promise of a berth, when suddenly the same timber agent said to him that all this was to be reserved from the public. The agent gave back the $250, and Wilson did not get the berth, but Bartlett Bros. later on got it.

I would refer to the interview already published of A. C. Anderson, of Toronto, in the "Mail and Empire," of April 10th, 1899, and I refer to it for this reason, that Anderson has written to me stating that that interview is based on facts, and he can testify to it. He wrote me on March 30th, 1899, from Dawson, as follows:—

The laws, administration and conduct of the officials here are a disgrace to Canada. The recent Royal Commission was a farce from the start to the finish.

Then remember that while I am free to admit, and I certainly hope from the bottom of my heart that there is some improvement in the Yukon at present, while I believe that Mr. Ogilvie himself is an honourable and conscientious man, I am satisfied—and the reasons are recited in my motion—that he is not surrounded by upright, independent and honest men, that the council which was constituted controls Mr. Ogilvie, rather than he the council. Take the case of Mr. Sinclair, whom I gladly exempt with other names I will exempt from the sweeping charges I have made.

An hon. MEMBER. Name.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have named the men that I have evidence against, and other names will appear as I go on, but I do not wish it to be said that at any time I desired to charge against those officers in general any single thing direct or indirect. Where I have heard the name, I mention it, and where I know nothing of the conduct of the men I do not wish to include them. But I say that the difficulty that confronts us now is this, that because there has been no spirit shown by the Government to ferret out the criminal that might exist and still be carrying on his nefarious schemes at the Yukon, you are putting a premium on the men there to continue to do wrong. I say, in my motion, that there are men who are violating there the laws of the country at present, and I have named them.

Take the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) who sits in this House. I believe that he made some observations on the subject. I am informed that Mr. Oliver, a good friend and supporter of his, publicly stated that after the return of the hon. member for New Westminster from the Yukon, he said that he could not have believed that such a damnable wholesale system of corruption existed had he not gone there. Now, I am told that the hon. gentleman did not lead this House to think that that was his opinion. Mr. Oliver may have, therefore, referred to him improperly, but Mr. Frank Burnett, another Liberal in Vancouver, was so shocked when he heard that the hon. member for Westminster had since expressed different views, that he wrote to the Liberal paper in the province of British Columbia on April 21st, in which letter he says:

It would now be in order, I think, to ask Mr. Morrison what he meant when he informed another member of the House, immediately on his return from Dawson, "that half the iniquities had not been told."

A gentleman writing me from England, after the discussion took place in this House, under date of 11th April, 1899, said:

I think, however your salutary protest is bound to cleanse the Augean stables, and promote a healthier atmosphere for the future. It must have needed a good deal of cotton-wool to stop the ears of many, as those stories of corruption were notorious, and I, thousands of miles away from the Klondike, had no doubt of their truth after seeing, as I did, so many people from Dawson City.

Mr. Freeze, a respectable citizen of the county represented by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Robinson) in the province of New Brunswick, writes to me, in answer to my own letter, as I had been given his name as one of those who had come from Dawson:

Doaktown, May 11th, 1899.

Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 9th instant to hand re Yukon officials. Was prospecting on Henderson Creek last June, found the whole valley and its branches claimed, as appeared by the notices on trees and stakes as far as I went—probably 15 miles or so—and only saw two men working or representing claims in the whole distance.

Found what I thought might pay on a certain branch of the creek, which was also claimed. I then went to Dawson, knowing that according to the mining law claims could not be held in that way. Upon inquiry at the recording office, was told in an insulting, peevish manner that "all the claims on Henderson Creek were recorded last fall."

I explained that the claims I was most interested in were those on a branch coming in two miles above the forks of the stream on the south side, and observed by the notices posted that they were not claimed until April and May, 1898.

"What is the name of the gulch?" was the question, in a Scotch accent and same peevish way. I replied that I had no means of knowing whether it was named or not, but if he showed me a map I could point it out to him. "Oh, we got no map," was the reply. I drew from my pocket a list of the claimants' names, with the numbers of their claims, taken from the trees on the ground, and, handing that to him, asked if those men whose names he saw there had recorded claims on Henderson Creek or its branches, and he refused pointedly to give any such information.

That is my experience at the Dawson recording office. The question arises, what is the office kept for, and, if it is a public office, was I not entitled to the information sought, and does it not give good cause to suspect that there was money made there by refusing information, as stated above?

Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL FREEZE.

Then Captain John Cotes—I did not intend giving his name but have given it—is referred to by reputable men as one who went into the Yukon with Mr. Wade. And Wade told him he had his tracks covered. I am also informed that a man named Dan Stewart, of Vancouver, formerly of Brandon, had got a post on the White Pass, in connection with, I believe, the customs, at a very small salary, and my information is that this man took $20,000 into Dawson within a month or two of his appointment on the pass. He got his post on the pass through the Minister of the Interior. I am also told that Isaac Burpee, jun., wrote a letter to J. M. O'Brien, of the Vancouver "World" in the summer of 1898. This paper, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, is an open defender of the Government in regard to the maladministration of the Yukon, so I am going to use simply this statement. I am credibly informed that this letter was written, my information being a man who says he saw it, and whose evidence would certainly be taken in court until it was shown that he was not worthy of belief. And in that letter, Isaac Burpee, jun., writes that the officials were undoubtedly corrupt, that Lucille's influence with Major Walsh was great and notorious; that a lemonade stand (with whisky inside) under her control, was permitted to be open on Sunday; that she practically kept a land office, and that she had been traced to Walsh's tent on different nights. Then, another witness, whose name cannot at present be given, but whom I believe to be a credible witness, and who will be forthcoming at the proper time, staked his claim, and was without doubt entitled to have it recorded, but when he went to the office for that purpose was told that an objection had been filed. A name was given, but he never could find any one who answered to it. He waited several weeks in a vain effort to get his papers. He happened to be going up the river with Colonel ———, and told him about his difficulty. On their return to Dawson the Colonel offered to get the claim recorded for the modest sum of $100. He at first objected to pay anything, but finding his efforts fruitless, he at last, to save further loss of time, paid the price asked, and received an envelope containing a slip of paper which he passed in to the recorder, when instructions were at once given to have his papers made out. When I say "the Colonel," I do not know the name of the person referred to. I do not wish it to be understood that I refer to any one in this House. A strong Liberal writes from Dawson to a correspondent in Manitoba, but as the statements are general, I will pass this letter by. In the main, it is in accord with the statements I have already made. In the London "Standard" of April 8th, there is a letter published by a lady as from her son:

But I have no doubt you have read in the papers of the corruption of officialdom here in Dawson—how a man would prospect a piece of ground, come in and record it, and would be refused on some trivial grounds. Then the clerks would immediately send some friend out to stake the ground in return for a half interest. I never was ashamed of the British flag until I came up here; but the rottenness and corruption of the Canadian Government, as represented in this section of Canada, makes me feel indignant to think that it is a part of British soil.

Now, some of this information was corroborated by the Minister of the Interior. But the other day he pleaded ignorance of the facts. So, even according to the hon. gentleman himself, there is something to be inquired into. My informant told me that Joseph Clark, of Toronto Junction, was employed as Assistant Gold Commissioner during Mr. Fawcett's time, and he was a deserter from the Mounted Police at Fort Macleod. My informant was in Dawson for about two years, up to the end of December, 1898, and he is also authority for the statement that it was well-known that Lucille Elliott had what was called a strong pull with the leading officials, and that $10 and $15 tips were paid to get into the Government offices. Now, in the public press there are very strong statements over names and addresses of those who were responsible for those statements. I refer, for instance, to the Kincardine "Review" of Thursday, 18th May, 1899, where Angus A.

Mackenzie, who is spoken of as a son of the late John Mackenzie, makes statements charging the officials with corrupt conduct. I shall not trouble the House with that, as it has been published. A man who was in the Yukon and well known to me, now in Atlin, writes—this will be heard, I hope, in connection with the evidence I referred to yesterday :

Major Walsh was instrumental in closing Dominion Creek until a certain date to locaters, and on the morning of that date the record office was to issue permits to those who desired to locate claims on the creek. Two days before that date the officials started men for the creek, and A. P. Hughes, of London, Eng., tells me that Major Walsh secretly told two English ladies, by name Mrs. Edgecombe and Mrs. Arthur, to go at once to Dominion Creek and locate claims, as they were not going to issue permits. The following day the miners found there were to be no permits issued, and the result was that when they finally arrived on the ground, very few got claims.

It was impossible to record a good piece of property until Mr. Fawcett and his subordinates found they couldn't handle it to their immediate advantage. To my knowledge, the clerk in the office had as much as forty interests in placer claims procured by recording property to the men that suited them, and Fawcett knew perfectly well what was going on every day under his very eyes in the office. * * * My later experience in July was a smooth talk to Fawcett and $50 to one of the clerks, and I got my transfers, records, &c., in four hours.

The proprietors of games of chance (and all gambling is illegal) were forced to pay Mr. Wade the sum of $500 each (for, as he said, a subscription for a hospital) or close down.

Then, the Sherbrooke "Gazette" of April 7th 1899, has some specific statements in regard to the corruption in that country, sent by A. S. F. Rankin, his letter being dated February 24th, 1899. I shall not trouble the House with these documents, as they have already been published, further than to give the reference to the names and dates. Then, in the "Ontario Gleaner" appears a letter from H. C. Eyers, from Dawson City, dated January 14th, 1899, and to much the same effect. Then, in the Ottawa "Citizen" of April 8th, 1899, appears an interview with one F. N. May, formerly of Ottawa, but now of Dawson. In the "Daily Sun" of New Westminster, March 29th, 1899, there are very serious statements of fact. At the end of a long period of allegations in regard to a lady official, a Mrs. Miner, and the extraordinary favour granted to her in regard to the claims she recorded, the observation is made, speaking of Mr. Hurdmen, who is involved in this :

He is invited to observe that a clerk in a subordinate office, on October 5th, during the incumbency of himself, Mr. William Ogilvie, as Yukon Commissioner, did in some manner acquire a piece of ground in size contrary to the laws then in operation or in existence at this time.

This is addressed to Mr. Ogilvie :

We ask him to take notice that at the date of recording, October 5th, by Gold Commissioner's, Thomas Fawcett's, rulings there were two whole claims and a fraction in the ground recorded by Hurdman for a fellow employee. That this was in direct violation of the orders from Fawcett to his subordinate.

I refer also to the statements of an Ontario man whose name I have and whose permission I have to give his name ; but for reasons mentioned, and considering the undertaking I have made myself in regard to these charges, I refrain at present from giving his name. The date is November 1st, 1898. This is the conclusion of the letter. The writer is a man very well known to Sir Mackenzie Bowell :

So you have the timber inspectors, if a poor devil brings a few logs to Dawson, he wants to know how much there is in it for him—and all the others is the same.

I would refer also to an interview with one H. T. Monk. I have the paper, but I have not the date ; however, it has been published, and I refer to it as corroborating the statements that I have made in general. The letter is written September the 20th, to a friend in Ottawa, by Mr. H. T. Monk, a young Englishman in the Klondike. Then, take an article in the "Wide World" magazine of May, 1899, where there are the name and address of a lady who went up to Dawson after her husband. This lady was Mrs. Lillian Agnes Oliver, of Chicago, and her letter appears on page 53 of the magazine of May, 1899. I think I am correct in saying that her mission was to relieve her husband, who was there ill, and this is what she writes :

Dawson, July 13th.

Three letters reached me to-day, and though I have been here a week I have not been able to get my mail. Post office only opens a few hours a day, and there are hundreds waiting outside. Ladies are being let in by a side door ; but the mail men are slow in sorting, and one has to wait ten days or two weeks ere a mail can be distributed, after arriving. The brutal way these men at the post office speak to the people would cause a lynching on the American side. They treat the men like dogs. Everything is grabbed here, people having to pay for everything. The miners are holding a meeting to protest against the way they are being treated. If a man stakes a claim he must first take a license, for which he pays $10 ; or to record a claim, $15. That is, if they let him have it. If work is not done within the year he loses it, and also his right to take up another claim in that district. On recording a claim they will not give an answer to a man for sometimes six weeks. In the meantime, they send out a "grafter" to investigate, and if the "find" is likely to turn out rich, the unfortunate prospector loses it. Their answer is : "I am sorry, but that claim was staked before" ; and the poor man, not being allowed to see the books at the recorder's office, cannot protect himself. These claims are being sold "under the rose" to some one that will give an interest in them to parties in power. This is no secret in the Klondike, and, therefore, no place for the poor man.

Now then, a book was brought out this year by Charles Scribner's Sons, an eminent firm in New York, and it is called "In the Klondike." This book is in the library of Parliament, and is written by Mr. Frederick Palmer, a gentleman who has already published in two reviews, statements that I propose to read to this House. I made inquiry of Scribner's Sons, because, being a reputable firm, their reply would be credible as to who this Mr. Palmer was, and the Scribners write, on May 12th, 1899, that Mr. Palmer is the author of a book of note on the Greco-Turkish war, and is a journalist of recognized ability. He was sent by the New York "World," as special correspondent to the Phillipines. He gives in this book the substance of what he saw in Dawson. Substantially the same article appeared in a current number of the "Forum" of June 18th, 1899. The New York "Nation" calls his work in the Klondike a lively and truthful picture of life in the Klondike. I would refer to page 202 of this article, under the heading of "The Government of Canada's policy in the Yukon province—Gold Commissioner's Office," and so on. This is what Mr. Palmer writes :

Major J. M. Walsh, who was chosen commissioner, did not go to Dawson in the autumn of 1897. His corps of civil officials preceded him, while he remained behind in camp on the Lewes Lakes, with a considerable force of police, in order to escort to Dawson the United States relief expedition.

Among the foremost charges of maladministration made against the civil officials was the one in connection with the water front, data of which were given to me by several leading men. The Canadian law provides that the main street of a new town shall be at all points a certain distance from the bank of the river. In order not to have a crooked main street, the men who staked the town-site of Dawson agreed to follow this measurement, from the greatest indentation of the bank, in a straight line. Those who bought lots on the main street supposed that they were securing river frontage, which is invaluable. The spring of 1898, however, saw a long row of buildings, whose back-doors were towards the river, and which faced the original row. The officials had leased the water front to an individual for a nominal sum in the name of the Government. The sub-lessees said, with a shrug of their shoulders, that they did not care to say to whom they paid their heavy rents, and that they were satisfied as long as they were left undisturbed.

Captain Constantine, who had been transferred from the charge of the police at Forty-Miles to the same position at Dawson, was an old-fashioned executive. His departure in the summer of 1898 was agreeable to him as well as to the other officials, because he was alone among un congenial company. He understood the miners, and they knew that, though gruff, he was honest and incorruptible. Even the lawless ones admitted this much ; for in no community is simple integrity, enforced by a strong will, better appreciated than in a mining camp. Had he been retained as administrator of the whole district, with the power to choose his own assistance, Dawson would have been a phenomenally well governed settlement from the start, and the development of the great wealth of the region would have been less retarded. Instead of men who had spent their lives among pioneers, the Dominion Government sent, as the reward for party service, men whose experience was limited to local politics at home. With hundreds of experts to choose from in British Columbia, an ex-captain of a whaler and an ex-livery stable-keeper were made inspectors to collect the royalty of 10 per cent on an output of eleven millions of gold.

Considering the expense of recording a claim, the owners of claims and the prospectors had at least the right to expect from the Gold Commissioner's office reasonable attention to duty. To have posted in a public place a detailed map of the district, with all claims and the names of their owners recorded, would have required little labour and no expense ; but it would have ruined the business of the clerks in furnishing information. Considering the number of policemen with idle hands, mail received in the summer might have been sorted with despatch and distributed at different windows under different heads. But a delay of two or three days, and the prospect of waiting in line for several hours before one could even ask if there was a letter for him, were strong incentives to miners who wished to hurry back to their claims, to put a few dollars into an itching palm, and in return to receive immediate attention at the side door of the post office.

Unfortunately, the arrival of Major Walsh in Dawson in the spring was not productive of the reforms which an oppressed population had hoped for. The acts of the officials, except that of a representative of the North-west Territories in placing a tax of $2,000 each on saloons and gambling-halls, seemed to meet with the favour of the commissioner. He maintained that the territorial government was infringing on the special powers granted to him by the Dominion Government ; and he issued an order that any one who chose might sell liquor without any form of license.

The buildings on the water front stood in the way of even a primitive system of sewerage. Simple sanitary rules were not promulgated, much less enforced. Absolutely no precautions were taken against the epidemic of fever, which was responsible for so many deaths. Private beneficence built the two hospitals, and it now maintains them and carries on all charitable undertakings. Whatever has been done in the way of improvements has been paid for by public subscriptions. The full measure of the Government's public spirit was the construction of the barracks and stockade for the police on the Government reserve. Had some of the money collected from the claim-owners and the prospectors been expended in constructing trails and on a system of sanitation, there would have been less ground for complaint.

That is sufficient reference to that book. Then, there is Dr. H. A. Bonnar's opinion, published in the Winnipeg "Telegram" of October 22nd, 1898. Mr. Bonnar, of Chesley, Ont., is well known, and is said to be in this paper a strong Liberal in politics, and at the last general Dominion elections was Liberal candidate for North Bruce. My hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), who sits here, happily, for that riding, will know Dr. Bonnar. I will only read a short paragraph of what Dr. Bonnar says in this interview, speaking of Major Walsh :

Taken as a whole, he was in every way unfitted for the position he occupied, and it was a fortunate thing for the country, as well as for the Government, that he resigned from the office he should never have been appointed to fulfil.

Later, there is a passage speaking of the unsanitary condition of the city. He said :

Speaking of the sanitary condition of the city, he stated the city had been built in a swamp without drainage of any kind or other provisions for the protection of health. The consequence is a great deal of sickness, and the hospital staff is kept busy all the time. He left Dawson City on September 22.

So that, he was there during the whole time of Major Walsh's regime. Published in the Shawville "Equity," there is a letter from David R. Macfarlane. He is, I am informed, a prominent Liberal from Pontiac county. He went into the Yukon country and wrote back as follows. At the end of his letter there is a passage. It is short, but, coming from a Liberal source, it may have more effect with the majority in this House than if it had not come from another source. I will read it :

I have been a pretty strong Liberal all my life, but unless they improve the way in which they have been administering here, I am afraid I will not be with them next election. Nearly every Government official here is corrupt, and are open for any kind of a deal or steal which they can make anything at. About 70 per cent of the miners are Americans, and our laws are so administered as to make me almost ashamed to acknowledge being a Canadian.

Mr. Ogilvie's son is an important witness, as I am informed. I have had no conversation with him nor do I know him. He is a graduate of Kingston Military College, and in Vancouver, on his way out this spring, he met another graduate of the Kingston Military College, a young gentleman esteemed by every one who knows him, George A. Walkem, son of Mr. Richard Walkem, of Kingston. Both of these young men graduated from the Kingston Military College. Mr. Ogilvie represents a syndicate in Montreal, and he told Mr. Walkem, in that conversation, that he had a considerable feeling of disgust at the way things were even then being done under the regime of his own father. He did not blame his father, but I am informed that Mr. Ogilvie said that his father was powerless, because he was only one of the council, in reference to much of the maladministration now going on in the Yukon. He corroborated these facts in connection with Major Walsh during his career, and he was there during the time that Major Walsh was in that place. Mr. Frank Swan, of Longbridge, sent to the Birmingham "Gazette," a letter from Messrs. Edward and John Whitehouse, formerly of Northfield, England, and now in Dawson, as follows :—

The bribery and corruption which has been going on among the officers equals anything that has happened on the American side. If you wanted to record a claim you could not do so unless you had a $5 or $10 bill to grease the palm of the officer. I had heard lots of people say that this is the first time they have felt it a disgrace to be under the British flag. Besides the police, who do good work, the Laurier Government have sent a lot of Canadian regulars, 165 men, at the cost of $250,000 ; they have nothing at all to do, and cost twice as much to keep as they would in eastern Canada. There is a commission of inquiry going on now into the charges of bribery and corruption among the officials ; but it is a complete farce, as no evidence is taken on oath,—

As to the evidence not being taken on oath, Mr. Ogilvie explains that that was in connection with the difficulty when they came to deal with Mr. Fawcett's request that charges against him regardless of the limitation of time and of jurisdiction should be investigated. Where they could get solemn declarations after the witnesses gave their evidence they were got. That was in case the witnesses were willing :

—and no charges will be heard which were not filed before August 25th last. Most of the charges against the officials have been filed since last October, so you see what a farce the commission is.

I cannot refrain, in support of this inquiry, from reminding this House that, before there was anything like a controversy between the Government and this side of the House as to what should be done, Liberal papers from one end of Canada to the other, said there should be an inquiry before an impartial commission. Take, not only the Liberal papers, but the statements of prominent Liberals. Mr. Martin, Attorney General of British Columbia, out on the coast, meeting these people as I have met them, coming and going, is on record as saying :

The fact that the most bitter protests come from British subjects is significant, and it is very difficult to believe that bribery and corruption of officials has not been rampant.

That is the statement of a gentleman who is in sympathy with the Liberal party and who is a leading Liberal. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) will know how true a party organ the Kingston "Whig" is. Mr. Gardiner wrote to that paper on April 11th, 1899, as follows :—

It is nothing but a system of boodling from beginning to end that prevails in the Klondike. The Government, as the district was so far away, gave the officials too much power, and they have used it despotically. There is no service of the Government there which is not corrupt.

Then the paper edited by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), the "Globe," a strong Liberal organ, contained the following statement from a correspondent in the Yukon :

Every official is looking out for his own interests only, and if a miner without influence wants to find out anything he has to grease somebody's dirty paw. One cannot even see the mining records to find out what claims are or are not recorded without bribery and corruption.

Then, I have referred to the Pembroke "Observer." I have referred to the letter which I was informed was written by Isaac Burpee to J. M. O'Brien, of the Vancouver "World." I was told that by a gentleman who said that he saw the letter. The "World" corroborates that statement, for before it was opposing me for pressing for an inquiry; this is what it said:

From letters received from reputable gentlemen at Dawson we have the declaration that more than one of the Dominion officials feathered their private nests pretty well while paid to look after the interests of the public.

When I spoke of Mr. Gardiner I referred to the Rev. D. Gardiner, Methodist minister, who has been seven months in the Yukon. Of course, that would give more importance to the statement he made. In the Edmonton "Bulletin," this statement is made:

As a matter of fact, Canadians and Liberals are as little pleased with the administration of the Yukon as Yankees or Conservatives.

Mr. Andrew McRae, a strong Liberal of Guelph, is quoted in the "Mail and Empire," of April 17th, 1899. I shall not read his statement, but I refer to it, and I refer also, to the Rev. Dr. Steele, of Grahamsville, as referred to in the same issue and in the same line.

Now, we come to this question of the water front, which has been so much discussed. I think that the commission taken with the public reports that are before us and some other information, show the necessity of probing this matter in the most thorough manner before an absolutely impartial tribunal. The Act respecting Dominion lands, 1894, chapter 26, section 3, provides:

The Governor in Council may authorize the sale or lease of any lands vested in Her Majesty which are not required for public purposes, and for the sale or lease of which there is no other provision in the law.

My charge is, outside of the language of my motion altogether, but connected with that, in regard to the water front, that Mr. Wade corruptly—and my motion covers that, so that I take the responsibility of saying that he corruptly disposed of it. I go further, and say, most illegally. He had no more authority to deal with the water front, or to pretend to lease it, than I had. There was, of course, no formal lease, but there was correspondence, and this piece of property was undoubtedly illegally disposed of by him; I charge, corruptly, and it is fair that I should mention some reasons for that. We have several official reports on the matter, and they do not agree. We have the report of Major Walsh; we have Mr. Wade's interview; we have the position of the Minister of the Interior, and we have Mr. Fawcett's account under oath, and none of them agree. Mr. Wade's interview may have been improperly reported, and I attach no importance to it; but we have Major Walsh's report, contrary to Mr. Fawcett's sworn testimony, and we have the position of the Minister of the Interior, contrary to all. At page 323 of the Report of the Department of the Interior, 1898, Major Walsh reports: That Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett, representing the Dominion Government, leased this property. Major Walsh says that tenders had been made to Messrs. Wade and Fawcett. According to Major Walsh, these two gentlemen were the gentlemen responsible. They called for tenders, and, acting for the Government, they closed this whole bargain. If that statement were correct, it would show that the law was violated, because no authority was ever given to the Governor in Council that would enable these gentlemen to close the bargain and put Messrs. Macdonald and Morrison into possession. This session I questioned the Minister of the Interior, and what did he say? I asked:

Under what statutory authority, if any, were Messrs. Morrison & McDonald put in or allowed to take possession of or enjoy the control of the land known as the water front in Dawson?

The Minister replied:

Under section 4, chap. 22, R.S.C., the Minister of the Interior has control of all Crown lands except those under the control of other departments mentioned in this section.

There was nothing erroneous in that statement, but this part of the reply was erroneous:

The public lands in the Yukon territory are under his control, and Mr. Thomas Fawcett was authorized by the Governor in Council to act for the Minister of the Interior in matters relating to the administration of the Yukon territory.

The Governor in Council had no such authority to delegate to Mr. Fawcett powers that had been delegated by this Parliament to the Minister of the Interior, and, therefore, it was wholly illegal. Now, mark this portion of the answer, because a good deal will turn on it. Major Walsh says that Wade and Fawcett did this; the Minister (Mr. Sifton) says that he was authorized to dispose of these lands, and that the Governor in Council delegated the power which Parliament gave him, to Mr. Fawcett. Mr. Fawcett is put in the breach. The Minister further answers:

The question whether Mr. Fawcett's action regarding the water front was within his power had never been formally determined. The Government has taken no action respecting the leases referred to.

This is a very significant fear, or hesitancy, or whatever you like to call it, in the position of the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Fawcett says he has power given him by the Governor in Council, and the Minister says the Government took no action in regard to the matter. This confirms my contention as to the law, that there cannot be governmental action in connection with the transaction described. When Mr. Fawcett is in the box, and this thing is pressed upon him, he, evidently knowing the scandalous conduct of Mr. Wade in reference to it, unloads the whole responsibility on Mr. Wade. Before coming to that, I will refer to the interview in the Klondike paper that is said to have taken place with Mr. Wade :

When application was made for the lease by Wm. Bourke on March 24th he was informed by Fawcett and Wade that it could not be leased for more than one month at a time. Two days afterwards, when Alex. McDonald makes an offer which is endorsed by Mr. Fawcett (according to the reporter as Mr. Wade's account) as very good, and recommends it to Mr. Wade's consideration. Wade, therefore, puts it upon Mr. Fawcett.

On the 28th of March Messrs. Morrison & McDonald made, according to this statement of Mr. Wade, an offer of so much, and then the leases were given.

We will take up the evidence, and see what Mr. Fawcett thinks of sharing the responsibility in this matter. Before I read the evidence, let me summarize. Mr. Fawcett simply says that he was a machine. It happened that the Order in Council referred to him, but Mr. Wade did the whole thing, and Mr. Fawcett knew nothing about it. Mr. Fawcett says that Mr. Wade told him to sign, because under the Order in Council he was the person to sign, and he did what Wade told him. I read from Mr. Fawcett's evidence, pages 220, 221, 223 and 229 :

Mr. Wade, as Dominion Lands agent, attended to all the terms of this letter, and for the Minister I signed it.

Q. What authority had you to act?—A. I had authority to act for the Minister of the Interior.

Q. Who decided the question of giving this to McDonald?—A. Mr. Wade; and, of course, I approved of this myself.

Q. Did you know McDonald & Morrison were the highest bidders?—A. I did, as far as I know, it was represented to me that they were.

Q. Who represented that to you?—A. The land agent.

Q. Then you took no part except signing the lease?—A. Practically signing the lease.

Q. Were they ever removed at all?—A. Farther back to allow 60 feet.

Q. You never thought you had a right to object to his course?—A. No; of course there were some things I wouldn't have done.

Q. You gave a lease of that bank, with the people on it, to Morrison & McDonald?—A. I authorized it in so far as to put my name to the lease to make it a legal document.

Q. I don't understand you?—A. I put my name on the lease to make it a legal document. It was prepared by Mr. Wade as the Dominion Lands agent, and I was the representative of the Minister here.

Q. Did the fact of you representing the Minister entitle you to sign leases?—A. I had that authority.

Now, remember, Mr. Speaker, there never was a lease at all. Here is Mr. Fawcett's statement, trying to disassociate himself from the transaction altogether, and he said he simply signed his name to the lease because he had authority, as representing the Minister. There never was a lease, but still it gives you an idea of what Mr. Fawcett thought of that transaction, and how unpleasant it was for him to be considered as sharing any responsibility in the matter. Compare what I have read of this evidence with the sworn testimony of Alex. McFarlane, given at page 225. He deposes :

Q. Had you anything to do with the water front at that time?—A. No, nothing more than I tried to get a location on the water front. I asked Mr. Fawcett about it. It was pretty well on in the fall. I wanted to build on the water front. He refused. He said it was against his wish to have the water front taken up in that way. There were a large number of buildings there and he would have to have them removed; he thought it would be inflicting a great hardship on them, and he would not let me have it. I didn't get it. I spoke to him several times on the subject.

Mr. Fawcett, so far as I can find, does not contradict the statement of McFarlane. He was opposed to any lease at all, but afterwards, without knowing why except that the land agent, Mr. Wade, told him, he signed the leases and he seems to be ashamed of it, and the Minister of the Interior is also ashamed of the transaction, because he says the Government has taken no action respecting the leases referred to. I now refer to where Mr. George is being examined, on page 227; but before I read this evidence, I wish to say that it confirms a statement that a member sitting in this Parliament made to me personally, that Major Walsh informed him that Mr. Wade got $10,000 for giving this lease to McDonald and Morrison. Now, I want to read some sworn testimony from Mr. George in regard to a conversation which he said he had with Mr. Wade :

I remember one question distinctly : "Mr. Wade, what part of this money did you get of this water front?" He said : "I got no share of it." I waited a while and repeated the question again : "Is there any of this money coming to you?" He replied (by the way, I would like to preface my remarks by saying that this was a public interview; it was for the press; I had my note-book and pencil in my hand at the time). He replied, none, unless a certain fee he had received from Mr. Alexander McDonald could be considered in that light of a division of the profits. I got him to make me a statement of what that fee consisted. He said he had immediately after his decision which gave Morrison & McDonald the water front, he had been retained by Alex. McDonald for his attorney for one year, and had been given a handsome bonus as a retainer fee. I asked him what the amount of the retainer fee was, but he didn't tell me; I asked him if it was $10,000,—

This is the sum that Major Walsh told a member of this House that Wade did get out of the water front——and while he didn't say (I don't recollect whether he said yes or no) he left the impression on my mind that that amount was the retainer fee.

The Commissioner.—The amount can be ascertained.

Mr. George.—I am not arguing the case, I am merely giving facts. I asked him if he had done any services for that beyond giving the water front lease to these gentlemen; his reply to this I am not quite positive of, but to the best of my recollection, he said as yet he had not rendered any services. I think that is all.

Dr. Bourke.—All I want is what people know; I have no questions to ask you.

The Commissioner.—Did you ask him particularly if this was a retainer, or whether it was for services to extend over a period of time?

Mr. Tabor.—Presumably—

Mr. George.—I looked at it and laughed, and said Mr. Wade's explanation would be satisfactory to a number of people; by the way, I never published that interview.

The Commissioner.—I just wanted to know that point, if it was for special services, or a year's services.

Mr. George.—That's all I know; he claimed it for a retainer fee for one year's services.

Q. The amount he didn't state?—A. My impression was that it was $10,000, and that the space of time between the retainer fee was given Mr. Wade and he awarded the water front lease to Morrison & McDonald was within a few days of one another.

Now, can it be said that a matter of this kind, with this fact appearing on the surface, is not of itself a matter that should be probed to the bottom by a most impartial commission?

I said yesterday that I unfortunately had to refer to Judge Maguire as well as to some of the other officials, from the evidence that comes out at this very inquiry before Mr. Ogilvie. Permit me to turn to page 249 of the evidence, where you find the letter of Judge Maguire appearing apparently for the first time, and where it is shown that he has been advising Mr. Fawcett, for he writes a legal opinion, and Mr. Fawcett says he acted on his advice. On this page you will find his letter "re placer claim 160 below o: Dominion." On page 251 you will find the following evidence:—

By Dr. Bourke:

Q. I want to ask Mr. Fawcett: on one or two occasions you gave an extension of time, and Judge Maguire, as it appears from correspondence in the office, got an extension on a number of claims?—A. Yes, sir.

Here is the officer taking this advice, which no judge should have given to him or to anyone else; and here is the officer exercising his discretion in a most extraordinary manner in favour of the judge; for every one who is at all familiar with these matters knows that an extension of time under these regulations is not a matter of course, but a matter of discretion, and the exercise of that discretion is a matter of very great importance and requires great care. The evidence in regard to the extensions continues:

Q. How many?—A. I think four.

Q. I should like to ask you the reason you had for extending that privilege to Mr. Maguire?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

—A. Judge Maguire said by letter that he was going out of the country on Government business—

That shows that he was going home—going to leave the country entirely——and asked for an extension until he returned or other arrangements were made, which was granted; the privilege didn't extend one year.

Q. There was no work done?—A. I don't know. It was newly located; I think the claims had just recently been clear.

Q. Would the same answer apply to Mr. Wade?

There is no doubt that Mr. Wade, with the express sanction and permission of the Minister of the Interior, was allowed to violate the law of this country, and here comes the iniquity of the whole thing. Here is this legal adviser, this officer holding three or four different positions, dragging Mr. Fawcett through this deal, as in the case of the water-front business, out of which he profited largely and corruptly, and compelling Mr. Fawcett to exercise his discretion in his favour in all these matters. After reading all this evidence, it requires no argument to show how wise was the law which prohibited an officer from placing himself in a position to influence his brother officers for his own advantage. The evidence goes on:

Q. Would the same answer apply to Mr. Wade?

—A. Yes, the same answer applies to Mr. Wade; he applied for quite a number of claims; those claims that he acquired himself I granted him an extension on, but those that he got through other persons I did not—he represented them. He said he was going out on Government business.

Q. Did he say Government business?—A. Yes, I knew he was Dominion Lands agent.

Q. Did he mention it?—A. He did not need to; he was a Government official.

Q. So that every Government official that went away went on Government business. He said it was Government business that took him away?

A. I don't know whether he mentioned it in his letter or not.

Q. As to Mr. McGregor?—A. He was called away.

Q. I admit that?—A. He applied on the evening that he left.

Then, a little further on:

Q. You spoke of a company; what company? What reason have you to use the word "company"?—A. Well, when a group of claims is brought in like that I generally suppose that more than one person is interested; I suppose there is a partnership arrangement of some sort.

Q. That may be, but I take it in the case of an official it didn't matter how many claims he had, he was entitled to representation to them?—A. It did matter; in the case of an official I only laid over those he acquired himself.

Referring to the system that existed there, he said that in some cases he would require the man's own name, and in others he would require another party's name, and this leave of absence was granted always to an official where the claim was in his own name and declined where it was not.

Q. Any official if he wanted to go out for any reason he was allowed representation on these claims?—A. That's all.

Q. You told me there was no exception to that practically on which you refused?—A. I don't think any one went out for himself.

On page 253 of the evidence, I find the following:—

Dr. Bourke.—That was not Chief Maguire's reason why he left the district; I can't understand how he went out on public business.

The Commissioner.—Can you prove it was not his reason?

A fair indication, I think, of a little bias on the part of the commissioner to ask this gentleman, whose name is mentioned in the evidence, why he suggests such a thing as that.

Can you prove it was not his reason?

Dr. Bourke.—He told me he did not intend coming back.

Mr. Tabor.—Judge Maguire is still judge of the territorial court?

Dr. Bourke.—We will put that to one side. Even if he went out on Government business, is it necessary that the Government official, because he is a public servant, is not expected to represent his claims? I will put it like that?

Mr. Fawcett.—I am not going to argue this question.

When he is pressed by a very proper question, in cross-examination, that is Mr. Fawcett's reply.

Mr. Fawcett.—I am not going to argue this question. All claims that were laid over—

Q. They were not asked to represent them as ordinary citizens?—A. They were laid over for one year.

Q. Because they were Government officials? (No answer).

Time will not permit me to go into the favouritism shown to Mr. McDonald, but I think I referred sufficiently to that yesterday. With regard to the gross, cruel neglect, so far as the sanitary condition of Dawson was concerned, I need simply refer to the statement in my resolution, for my formal charge largely follows the language of the Government officials. In this connection, you will find that Faith Fenton, who was correspondent for the Toronto "Globe," and who figured as one of the Government officials, described on April 26th, 1899, the frightful neglect of all sanitary precautions in Dawson City, the prevalence of fever and all that kind of thing.

With regard to the scandal which I charge in the administration of the post office, I want to read a succinct statement from Mr. W. E. Dawson, formerly mayor of Charlottetown, in a letter of the 16th May, 1899, to myself. He writes as follows:—

I have P. C. or letters from my son regularly, and to quote from one or two of them, on the 11th December, he writes:

"The first mail this winter, in fact the only one since 1st October, got here a few days ago and was delivered on the 19th, bringing me letters all the way from April 16th to October 2nd."

On the 8th February, he writes:

1911

"Yours of the 20th and 28th November just received, the first and only letters I have from you since yours of October 1st. I understand that this mail came right through from Skagway and that there are hundreds of bags of mails lying between here and there. There is no reason in the world why we could not have a mail every week, as the trip over the ice from Skagway can now be made easily in twenty days. It looks as though the Government wanted to make this country harder to live in than it really is. In fact they are killing this country, and it may have a very bad effect on the whole of Canada, as there are men here from all over the world, and they, not knowing anything different, think the whole Dominion rotten, and run by a rotten Government. It is no use one trying to uphold one's country here, and even if you could, you have not the heart."

He writes, 17th March:

"Mail arrived here at least two weeks ago and is not open yet. I got the following after several calls at P. O. daily, when it was open, as they close up a day to sort and open the next, Sept. 24th, Oct. 19th, 16th, 30th, Nov. 4th, 6th, 13th, Dec. 4th, 26th, so you see I am not getting more than about half my letters, and on asking the clerk when the whole of the mail would be opened, his answer was 'some time next week.' I asked how much more they had to open, and he said 200 or 300 registered letters. This made me hot, and I told him if this office was on the outside, things would be different, but supposed that while we were in Siberia all that could be done was to wait. There is no excuse for this sort of thing, as they have a larger staff than Charlottetown."

On the 21st inst. I received a letter from my son, dated 11th December, in which he said:

"The only mail since 1st October got here a few days ago, delivered on the 9th, bringing me letters of August 7th, September 4th, 11th 18th, October 2nd, and April 16th."

Some reference was made to my having had a detective in Dawson City. There is, of course, no truth in that, but what gave rise to any such statement was possibly the fact that I had a partner there. However, when I undertook to make the charges I did on a recent occasion, the mail service was so vile that I had no communication of any kind whatever from my partner, Mr. Smith, who went to Dawson some time last fall. And therefore, while I have no doubt whatever that he would not hesitate to write me anything interesting, it was impossible, when I made that speech, for me to say anything on his authority. In April, for instance, I was informed by letter from my partner, and this is apropos of the present statement:

I have just received a long letter from Smith, dated March 4th, in which he says: "I have just this morning received yours of the 31st January, and yesterday got a letter from you dated October 1st."

Showing the absence of any statement received by me from Mr. Smith whatever. I would refer also to a letter from Prof. J. W. Good, published in the Winnipeg "Tribune," and dated February 12th, 1899, in which he says:

I got my second letter from Winnipeg yesterday. The first arrived in October, so it was a long wait. Newspapers, of course, hang fire at Skagway. The company which agreed to bring in the mail were somehow unable to do the work, and so the police have had to do the whole work; and so too much has been thrown on so limited a force.

Then, the "Market Guide," of Chatham, Ont., refers to a statement of Mr. Hale, the son of Mr. Hale of that place, and who is now in Dawson. Then, the Toronto "Globe" of April 22nd, 1899, has this statement from Faith Fenton:

The splendid dog teams, with their laden sleds, came in day by day, bringing in mail of September, October, January and February—a jumbled heap—but welcome as the first May flowers will be in the Yukon.

With regard to the scandalous neglect of the Government, I have charged three departments—the Department of the Interior, the Post Office Department, and, I regret to say, the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I can hardly conceive of greater carelessness and more reprehensible conduct, in so far as irregularities are concerned, than the course taken by the hon. Minister of Marine in connection with a man dismissed by the Governor General in my time. The law provides for the Minister of Marine appointing an inspector of steamboats in a very summary manner, for these out-of-the-way places, but so far as the return brought down shows, this Yukon country, with all its development of steamers and all these ships going in and so on, has been neglected to this very day.

The inspector for British Columbia, without being given any powers, authority or jurisdiction whatever, was appointed for the Yukon district, was actually told—in fact, he suggested—that he should take a run up to Dawson. And he did take a run up to Dawson and there he collected fees that he had no authority whatever to collect, and inspected and reported a certain number of steamers and then returned. So that, practically, those laws which are equally important with others, have been largely a dead letter. But the scandal behind this is the man who was given the authority. What was his record? I asked for a return and I shall give briefly the facts taken from the return now before the House. In the first place, there was the Act of 1898, assented to on June 13th, 1898. Section 4 refers to the appointment of inspectors. Subsection 4 of section 5 provides that, in the North-west Territories, the Minister may assign the duties of such inspector to the inspector of boilers and machinery, or such other person as he temporarily employs. There was no pretense of going through that form, but an officer was sent up in the careless manner I have mentioned. Russell was the name of the man sent. He was appointed inspector of steamboats on the 3rd of December, 1896, for the province of British Columbia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

In 1897, he was notified that, as an officer of the Government, he could not engage in outside work, and to confine himself strictly to the duties of his office. That was in addition to what the law provides, with which law he was supposed to be conversant. Complaints were made in 1888 that he was not obeying these instructions. He replied that he had given friendly advice to private parties, but had made no charge for his advice. He was then charged with having demanded a fee of $500 from Mr. Rithet, a well-known man in Victoria, for his work on the "Etta White." Later on, he applied to be permitted to act as inspector for a private company, and he was told that he could not so act. Complaints were renewed in 1889, charging Russell with taking bribes; and in January, 1890, Capt. Devereux was appointed a commissioner to investigate the charges. I think that Capt. Devereux and two other officers, Mr. Smith, and the chairman of the board, endeavoured to retain Mr. Russell in the service, but the evidence was of the character I shall mention, and the Governor General disagreed with these gentlemen and considered—and I think there is no question that the decision was right and proper in the public interest—that this officer was not the man for a position of trust. After the investigation was over, Russell admitted, in writing, that writing being on file, having taken $100 from Mr. Rithet. You will remember his denial in the first place. But he afterwards admitted having received $100, but denied that he had charged $500. He admitted that on the 4th of June, 1887, he received $20, and on the 4th of May $25, from parties for drawing specifications for boilers. These were the boilers it was his duty to inspect. Mr. Russell thought that he ought to receive $500 for his services in connection with the boilers being built by the Albion Iron Works. After some discussion, he accepted $150. Shortly afterwards, when a steamer was being built at the Albion Iron Works, Russell said that the boilers would not be passed because Mr. Rithet had not treated him right in the other case. Mr. John Henderson stated that he had paid Russell $100 for the supervision of a boiler. Russell made no charge, the amount being voluntary. The captain on the Navigation Pacific Company testified that he knew that Russell was paid some small sum. Accordingly, Russell was dismissed. It was shown that he had been untruthful in the statement of the case to his department. He was convicted, therefore, of falsehood, as well as of violating his instructions and of taking money, which he called fees, but which others would call bribes, which made it impossible for him to be independent, taking these moneys from the owners of boilers, machinery, &c., on the plea of drawing specifications, which machinery he afterwards had to inspect as a supposed independent officer working for the Government. On the 24th of June, 1890, it was reported that Russell had neglected to deliver the records of his office and was using his office as a bedroom. He disappeared, finally, from the service. Evidently some pressure was brought to bear upon the department, for, on the 4th of February, 1898, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries writes Mr. Russell that he had read the papers in this matter—the papers brought down and from which I am giving the statements I am now making—and said :

While I think you are to blame in having accepted work outside of your office business, after receiving notice that you would be expected not to accept outside work, I at present see no reason to conclude that the sin was serious enough to prevented you being appointed, other things being equal.

Now, if you have regard to the solemn oath an officer has to take before he is appointed to this office, if you have regard to the temptations that surround an officer with such work to do, surely, when an officer has been dismissed for violating his oath of office and taking money under the circumstances contrary to his oath and contrary to his express instructions, as well as contrary to the law of the land, it is not an extraordinary thing to say that he had forfeited his right to reinstatement of that kind. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries took the view that such a man was quite eligible for reappointment. I challenge that view. On the 13th of April, 1898, Russell was appointed steam-boat inspector for British Columbia, the very district in which he had violated his trust and his oath. Apparently, he was appointed on the recommendation of the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) and Senator Templeman, because in this return appear two letters dated immediately after his appointment, one to each of these gentlemen, telling them that he had been appointed. Sixteen vessels are reported on August 21st, 1898, by Russell at Dawson, in which months he issues certificates of inspection. Mark you, vessels had been on the Yukon, vessels had been on the Hootallinqua and on the Lewes in 1897; and, so far as we can learn from any public record or from this return, no officer was sent up to perform these important duties which are contemplated to be performed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In August, he issued these certificates of inspection, every one of them illegal, not one worth the paper it is written on. I make such a statement, and I venture to say the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself will not contradict it. On the 15th of June, the chairman of steamboats reports that there were no reports received from Russell while at Dawson City. The reason of his going to Dawson is suggested in a letter of June 25th, 1898, from Vancouver, in which the chairman of the board says: I understand there are a number of vessels on the Yukon, but whether it will warrant his going there or not, he did not know. His reply is that he should go to the Yukon if there are vessels on that route. During this session another thing with regard to this officer cropped up. In "Hansard" of this session, page 3159, will be found the statement by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that complaints were made to him of Russell's personal habits; and again at page 4856 he says: I had my attention called to Russell's conduct by some hon. gentleman, that Russell was in the habit of drinking. This is the officer sent up to perform this important duty.

I quoted from Parkman's "Montcalm and Wolfe," because I remembered a passage once quoted from the same work by the right hon. Prime Minister. The sad state of affairs in Quebec during the last days of the French régime, were, I regret to say, very similar to the condition of affairs in the Yukon, if one-half of what we have been informed be true. The right hon. gentleman smiles, but if he believes even the evidence I have referred to taken before their own official, Mr. Ogilvie, if he believes one-half the evidence I have referred to, much that cannot be disputed, is this quotation from Parkman not applicable to that far-off part of our country? Speaking of the days of Montcalm, Parkman writes:

Canada was the prey of official jackals—true lion's providers—since they helped to prepare a way for the imperial beast, who, roused at last from his lethargy, was gathering his strength to seize her for his own. Honesty could not be expected from a body of men clothed with arbitrary and ill-defined powers, ruling with absolute sway an unfortunate people who had no voice in their own destinies, and answerable only to an apathetic master 3,000 miles away.

I would sincerely hope that there is no analogy, and that the language is not fairly applicable to the condition of things in the Yukon. But nevertheless, until the information that I have frankly brought to the knowledge of this House, is removed or explained away, and the impression founded thereon removed from the public mind, as it alone can be by a thoroughly impartial and judicial tribunal, a tribunal clothed with powers that Mr. Ogilvie has never pretended to have, and does not possess, powers that are required now to be given by special legislation as in other cases of corruption this legislature itself agreed should be given to tribunals investigating matters of that kind, the public will inevitably be reminded of the condition of affairs under the French régime as described by Parkman. If a commission of that character were granted, I would willingly sink into a position of obscurity, into a position of contempt, into any position that this House or the people of this country would place me, so long as by the fact of a thoroughly fair, judicial and impartial tribunal, the good name of Canada was upheld, and the reputation of Canada, which never aforetime deserved the odium that has been cast upon it, was restored. Whether hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches will use their influence and their power to prevent this inquiry, I do not know. I have said several times that the time had come, and come it has, I believe, in the minds of most people in this country and of a great many people in the mother land, when Parliament should take this thing up. The responsibility is on Parliament. I say seriously, Mr. Speaker, that I do charge the Government with gross neglect and incapacity, followed by a carnival of corruption in the Yukon; but had as all the crimes may have been in that district, it will be a national scandal and a national shame for this Parliament to refuse a judicial commission of inquiry upon the fair and reasonable terms covered by my motion which I have put in your hands, and the statement of which I have already read, and wish to be considered responsible for as therein stated.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MONTREAL ISLAND BELT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. MORRISON moved :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider Bill (No. 112), respecting the Montreal Island Belt Railway Company.—(Mr. Lemieux.)

Mr. MONET moved, in amendment :

That the order be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, to consider the objections of the harbour commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), who has charge of this Bill, is unavoidably absent to-night, and he requested me to see that the Bill went through the usual course. In addition to that, I happen to have followed this matter in the Railway Committee, and I think that, certainly, it is incumbent on the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monet) who has moved that the Bill be referred back, to state upon what grounds the Bill should be referred back.

Mr. MONET. Mr. Speaker, I made this motion on behalf of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, or, rather, on behalf of their lawyers who represent them here. This Bill, as it reads now, gives the company the right to divide its undertaking into sections, which shall be designated and known as :

(a) Section 1 : that part of the main line extending from a point in Hochelaga ward in the city of Montreal northerly to Rivière des Prairies in the parish of Pointe aux Trembles, a distance of about 13 miles, and including all branches therefrom.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

(b) Section 2 : that part of the main line extending from the southern limit of the city of Montreal westerly to St. Anne and thence northeasterly to the northerly end of section 1.

Subsection "c"—and this is the one I want to draw the attention of the House to particularly—is as follows :—

(c) The Montreal section : consisting of that portion of the railway of the company extending across the city of Montreal, as located and defined on the company's franchise from the city of Montreal, passed before O. Marin, notary, on the 13th day of March, 1895, together with a connecting line from a point at or near Montcalm Avenue to the point in Hochelaga ward mentioned in paragraph (a) of this section, and consisting also of all terminal lands (and works thereon), branch lines, sidings and spurs, constructed, purchased or otherwise acquired by the company in connection with its railway across the said city of Montreal.

The section refers to rights granted under a certain notarial deed passed before O. Marin, notary, in March, 1895. I will read an extract from this notarial deed, which gives the company the right to pass, construct and operate their railway, as follows :—

Commencing at the point at or near the western end of St. Gabriel levee; thence easterly on and along said levee and along the river front to and across the Lachine Canal, &c.

Owing to this notarial deed, the company would have the right to build and construct their elevated railway, not only in the city of Montreal, which is the business of the city council of Montreal, but they would be granted the right to build their elevated railway along the river front, and especially along St. Gabriel levee. I am told that the St. Gabriel levee belongs to the harbour commissioners, or, rather, they are trustees of the property, which belongs to the Crown. If this Bill carries, as it reads now, I understand that the company will have the right to expropriate that property without paying any indemnity to the harbour commissioners. Such a thing is never done, but it will be done in this case, if the Bill passes in its present form. It was practically understood, if not explicitly, at least implicitly, between the harbour commissioners and the company, or the agent of the company who represented the company before the Railway Committee, that there would be an agreement between the company and harbour commissioners, in order that certain rights might be preserved in favour of the harbour commissioners, these rights consisting in a certain control that the commissioners would keep as to locating the line of the company, so that there would not be too great an encroachment on their property when the work is proceeded with. The commissioners see that such an agreement is not incorporated in the Bill, and they have some very important objections to make to the Bill, as it now reads. I think this question is of importance enough to grant the motion that is made.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot understand the ground that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monet) takes now on this Bill, because in the Railway Committee, when we had that question up, and I asked if that point was provided for, I think he was one of the parties who stated that the harbour commissioners were perfectly satisfied with the Bill. It was understood that everything was arranged satisfactorily.

Mr. MONET. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is quite mistaken. I was in the committee, but I did not hear a single word of objection made by the hon. gentleman. I never said the commissioners were satisfied. On the contrary, the commissioners never noticed that such a change was made in the charter asked for this year.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was stated, on behalf of the commissioners, that it was perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is unusual for me to support a reference back to the committee of any Bill of this description, but I think, in view of the statement, which I have heard for the first time, of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monet), it would be better to refer this Bill back. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is, no doubt, mistaken as to the gentleman who answered, but I did raise the question, and he, no doubt, heard that somebody did answer that the harbour commissioners were satisfied with the Bill as it was. The reason I, as chairman, did not ask for any further information or perhaps take any interest in looking into the question was that the solicitor of the city of Montreal was present on behalf of the city, and I supposed that he was also looking after the Bill in the interest of the harbour commissioners. However, Mr. Speaker, what I want to point out is this, that if I am not mistaken, this property is the property of the Dominion of Canada, and if through oversight or any other reason so important a point as this has been overlooked, the harbour commissioners, who I understand are merely the trustees of this property in the interest of the Dominion, are responsible. Therefore, under the circumstances I think it would be better if the House would agree to refer this Bill back to the committee until we hear what objections have been raised. I must also add that the Board of Harbour Commissioners, in view of the notice given and the publicity given to the discussion of this Bill from time to time, were very careless in not having found it convenient to give us their objections before now. However, under the circumstances I would feel it my duty to support the reference back.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my hon. friend before he sits down if he has satisfied himself that it does affect the property of the Crown?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not; but I doubt very much if even a gentleman of legal training could satisfy himself at once, from the reading of a document such as that, whether it did or not. I did not think so when the Bill was going through the committee, but I would not like to take the responsibility as a member of this House of saying that it did not. Nor do I see that any harm could come from further consideration, considering the importance of the point that has been raised.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I am not going to offer any objection to the motion to refer this Bill back to the committee; but I would like to make an observation or two on the subject, because I am rather under the impression that some gentlemen are misapprehending the effect of this Bill. I followed the Bill somewhat closely when it was going through the committee, and I formed the opinion that so far as the Montreal Board of Harbour Commissioners were concerned, there was no interest which they represented that was prejudicially affected by the Bill, nor would this Bill take away any of their rights. There was no person present on the occasion representing the board, but it was, I think, very generally understood that they were not opposing it. But even though that had not been understood, I would have felt satisfied in my own mind that this Bill did not prejudicially affect them. Hon. members must always have in mind that there is a principle which governs legislation that is applicable to the present case, namely, that unless the Crown is, not merely referred to by implication, but distinctly and explicitly mentioned in legislation, Crown rights are not interfered with; and there is certainly nothing on the face of this Bill, and nothing that would arise from it by implication, which would injuriously affect the rights of the Crown. That is at all events the view I entertain, and I would have thought the Bill might go as it is; for, if it was contemplated by this company, as a portion of the undertaking, to erect an elevated railway along the front of the river, they would have to get permission and authority from the owners of the property for that purpose. If any portion of the line crossed private or other property, they, the company, would be obliged to indemnify the owners for the property they were taking. I do not think the mere fact that a company is incorporated to build a railway from A to B enables the company to traverse the property from A to B and lay down their tracks in entire disregard of the rights of the owners of the property which they may cross. I take it as simply an authority from Parliament that such a railway may be constructed, but subject to all the conditions that usually apply, one of which is that the company must under the law procure the right to cross property and pay the compensation fixed by the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can they confiscate the Crown property ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is no authority here, in my view, to take the Crown property; and if there was a right to the railway to cross property belonging in the Crown, unless it were distinctly stated that that right could be exercised without compensation, I do not think the statute would carry it. I think the Bill would have to be very clear and explicit in order to convey such a meaning. However, I have no objection to the Bill going back to the committee. I am sure it is the desire of all parties concerned—I think it is the wish of the company themselves, though I have not conferred with them—not to have any right conferred by this Bill which is not in accord with the views they had when they started to promote the undertaking. My hon. friend, the Chairman of the committee, suggests that the committee might take up the Bill to-morrow morning. It need not occupy a great deal of time, and the Bill, if taken up to-morrow morning, should be disposed of and come back to this House without very much delay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals has said that he has no objection to the Bill being referred back; but he has made a very strong speech to show that it is entirely unnecessary to refer it back, and that the grounds on which it is proposed to refer it back have no real existence. Considering the difficulty there was in the Railway Committee to get the parties all to agree on the Bill as it now stands, I think there ought to be some absolute necessity or some solid ground for referring it back after it has reached its present stage, and the Minister of Railways and Canals has quite convinced me by his speech that it would be a great mistake to refer it back, because there is really nothing to refer it back for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite willing that it should not go back, and I am quite willing that it should.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself I have always opposed referring Bills back to the committee, except on very strongest grounds, and I submit that my hon. friend has not advanced any ground for the motion he has made. I have failed to catch what his reason is for wishing to have this Bill referred back, except simply that he wants it referred back. As a member of the committee I feel certain that every opportunity was given to the harbour commissioners of Montreal and to every person who could possibly be interested in this Bill, to appear before the committee. But they did not appear. It was adjourned, I think, more than once, and still they did not appear. Besides, it must be known to members of the House that this Bill has been several times before that committee. It was amended in 1896, and none of the harbour commissioners appeared; therefore, we are safe in assuming that the harbour commissioners at that time had no objection to the Bill. Last session it was also amended, and none of the harbour commissioners appeared. It was up again this year and none of them appeared. After being fully considered by the committee, it came down here; and we are asked in the most cavalier way to have it sent back. Now, the gentlemen who are interested in the Bill, and who took pains to appear at the various meetings of the committee prepared to answer any question that might be raised, anticipated, for reasons best known to themselves, that there would be objections to the Bill. I understand that the objection, if there is any, is in respect to the word "franchise" occurring in the Bill. The reason for the use of that word is this. By subsection 2 of section 3 of the former Act, the company was authorized to build a subway across the city of Montreal, along the river front, on such location as the city of Montreal defines. In 1895 the city council of Montreal defined its location, and a contract defining the same is termed a "franchise," and is referred to in the Bill as such. That is what the word franchise means, and if the gentlemen who now wish to have the Bill referred back to committee admit that is their objection, I am advised by Mr. Lemieux, who has charge of the Bill, that the promoters are willing to elide from section 1 the words from "Montreal" down to the word "together." This objection being removed, there will be no necessity to refer back the Bill. If there is any other objection, I would like to know what it is. Speaking for myself, I shall, on general principles, oppose the sending back of a Bill under these circumstances. I believe it is a bad precedent, and I believe that those who ask to have a Bill sent back to the committee, should give very good reasons for their request. This Bill in no way, expressly or by implication, affects any rights of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, and if it did, I do not think there would be any objection to sending it back.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. WOOD. I had an interview with the Montreal harbour engineer on Friday last, and he told me they did not know a solitary thing in reference to this matter until he came up here anxious to see in what shape the Bill was. The president of the Montreal harbour commission was here yesterday, and he also stated that he knew nothing of what this Bill contained, and therefore they wished to have their rights preserved. They do not want to interfere with the road if it does not interfere with the harbour commissioners, and therefore in order to have the rights of the harbour commissioners considered it is desirable to have it referred back to the committee. The chief engineer of the Montreal harbour and the president of the harbour board know more about the necessities of the Montreal harbour than a gentleman living so far from the city of Montreal as my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) does. I am in favour of the Bill being sent back to the committee, so that the harbour commissioners can present their case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have listened very carefully to the argument of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), and I cannot see that he has advanced any reason why the Bill should not be referred back, except on general principles.

Mr. MORRISON. The onus is not on me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true, but we have the right to ask what possible harm can be done by sending it back. The House will certainly be just as wise when the Bill comes back as they are at the present time. Although it is a good plan to adhere to general principles and to practice, at the same time if there is a possibility of any one's rights being invaded, or if there is a possibility of the best interests of the public not being served by the Bill in its present form, it is clearly the duty of the House to send the Bill back for reconsideration by the committee.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On behalf of the city of Montreal and as representing the city of Montreal on the harbour board, I fully endorse what has been said by the mover of this motion (Mr. Monet). There is no doubt that the Bill as printed and first presented was not what it is to-day. That is to say, it was reprinted as proposed to be amended in the Railway Committee, and that, I presume, misled the harbour commissioners, and is probably the reason why they did not before this advance their objections against it. As the Bill stands now, there is no doubt that the harbour commissioners' rights will be infringed upon unless they are protected by some amendments to it. The amendment that was suggested to the promoters of the Bill was not accepted by them, but I think if a reference is made to the committee we can come to some understanding. The Bill as it stands, surely should not be passed, because the rights of the harbour commissioners of Montreal would be infringed upon by it. More than that, the rights of the city of Montreal itself are concerned. There is a reference made in the Bill to an agreement made between the city of Montreal and the company. By that agreement, which is referred to as before March, not-ary, the works contemplated were to be commenced on the 1st of July, 1896, but none of that work has been commenced yet. According to the Bill, this agreement is ratified in a very indefinite way, and is supposed to be yet binding between the company and the parties interested. I have no doubt that the committee will arrange in some satisfactory way that the rights of the Crown, as represented by the harbour commissioners, should not be sacrificed, and I think the House should consent to refer the Bill back for reconsideration by the committee to-morrow morning. As a member of the harbour commission and as a representative of the city of Montreal, I may say that we have no objection to the Bill if it is amended properly, and if the rights of the Montreal harbour commission are properly protected.

Mr. BERGERON. No reason has been given to the House why the unusual course should be adopted of referring this Bill back to the committee. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine) speaks of the rights of the harbour commissioners, and the rights of the city of Montreal, but the Bill was considered at two sittings of the committee, and Mr. Ethier, the city attorney of Montreal, spoke on the two occasions, and declared himself perfectly satisfied with the Bill as passed by the committee.

Mr. MONET. He declared himself satisfied provided it were amended.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. At the first meeting of that committee Mr. Ethier moved an amendment, but he accepted afterwards the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), and declared himself perfectly satisfied with that amendment. At the second sitting of that committee, Mr. Ethier was present and he could move any amendment he thought proper, but he did not do so, and he again stated that the Bill satisfied him. As far as the Montreal Street Railway is concerned, Mr. Archer, the partner of my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) was present at the two meetings. He spoke at the first one and accepted the amendment, and at the second never said a word, showing that he accepted the Bill as passed by the committee.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is not the harbour commission.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is not defending the harbour commissioners, but the Montreal Street Railway.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I beg your pardon, I deny that.

Mr. BERGERON. The harbour commissioners were notified, as well as the whole public, that that Bill was coming before the committee, but they paid no attention and the reason is very simple. This Bill does not change in the slightest degree the charter of the Belt Line Railway Company, which was accepted by the harbour commissioners in 1894. There is not one word in this Bill changing the position of the Montreal Belt Line Company, so far as the harbour commissioners are concerned. These objections are futile. The Montreal harbour commissioners have been told, since the Bill was passed in committee, that it contains an infringement on their rights, but that is not true, and if the Bill be sent back to the committee, it cannot be changed in that respect. At the last meeting of the committee, on Monday, my hon. friend the chairman of that committee, on behalf of some of the harbour commissioners, asked that the Bill might be postponed until this evening, so that the harbour commissioners might have time to examine it—which they should have done before—and made some suggestions to-night, but these harbour commissioners have gone home.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They have not.

Mr. BERGERON. I know they have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Look up in the gallery.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, they went away, but may have come back. I do not see any of them here any way. I was told the other day that the promoter of the Bill, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) stated in the House that the members of the harbour commission, after listening to him, were perfectly well satisfied, and no doubt they were, because there is not a word in this Bill changing the charter which was first passed by Parliament. It would be unjust to send this Bill back without reason to the committee. It has already been postponed once, and we are asked to follow an unusual course when advised not to pass the Bill to-night. As a rule any Bill sanctioned by one of the committees of this House is accepted by this House, unless for some very grave reason, because the committees represent the House, and we have confidence in their action.

Mr. TISDALE. I would like to ask the hon. member for Maisonneuve if he is a member of the Montreal harbour commission.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Is he interested at all in the Montreal Street Railway?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not a cent.

Mr. TISDALE. Then, the hon. gentleman speaks as a member of the harbour commission?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On behalf of the harbour board and as a representative of the city of Montreal.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand that the harbour board, as such, had no representative at the meeting of the committee.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It had not.

Mr. TISDALE. We must remember that the harbour commission are trustees for the harbour of Montreal and that Montreal harbour is a subject in which the whole Dominion is interested. Therefore, when the Montreal harbour commission prefer this request to us, we should pause before refusing it. As trustees they occupy a different position from that occupied by disputing interests, not of a public nature, and, therefore, it would be a rather serious thing not to allow a board that represents the maritime interests of the Dominion to be heard in the committee on this Bill. Were it not for that fact, I would not for one moment consider the question of referring it back to the committee, especially when it has been so fully discussed in that committee.

Motion, that the Bill be referred back to the committee, agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 151) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's motion in amendment thereto.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has to leave to-morrow for England on business before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and he has two or three Bills which he is most anxious to dispose of before leaving. As the hour is very far advanced, and it will be impossible to complete this debate this evening, I have to propose that the debate be not now proceeded with, but that it be adjourned until to-morrow, so as to allow the hon. Solicitor General to go on with these Bills.

Mr. McGREGOR moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 91) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the amendments?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The amendment to section 40 of the Bill is to provide that, when a vessel is seized, certain security should be given in reference to the seizure. Section 40, with the changes made, is as follows :—

40. Every seizure and detention made under this Act shall be at the risk, cost and charges of the owner or master of the vessel, or the owner of the goods seized,—

(a) Until the amount of all sums due and penalties incurred, and of all costs and charges incurred in the seizure and detention, and of the costs of any conviction obtained for the infringement of any provision of this Act, or of any by-law in force under this Act, has been paid in full ; or—

(b) In the case mentioned in paragraph (c) of subsection 1 of section 38 of this Act, until the injury done has been repaired by the master or crew, or on their behalf, and all the damages, costs and charges mentioned in subsection 2 of the said section 38 have been satisfied ; or—

(c) In any case, until sufficient security, either personal or otherwise, has been given for—

(i) Payment of the amount mentioned in paragraph (a) of this section ; or—

(ii) Payment for such amount for the repair of the injury referred to in paragraph (b) of this section and for damages, costs and charges, as may be awarded in any suit therefor brought against the owner or master of the vessel.

That is for the purpose of protecting the owner of the vessel against any seizure that may be made. The amendment was made at the instance of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are two earlier amendments to sections 19 and 38.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The first of these amendments has practically no effect. It simply refers to returns they are obliged to make to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The amendment to section 38 involves the addition of a clause giving a preferential lien on vessels for the amount of damage done.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Government agree to these amendments ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, they are not amendments of any importance.

Amendments agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT AS TO RAILWAY DEBTS.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 159) respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to railway debts.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved :

That section 1 be amended by inserting the words "before or after" after the word "receiver" in the 18th line.

He said : I propose this amendment, so as to give jurisdiction to appoint a receiver before the maturity of the bond, as well as after.

Motion agreed to, and Bill, as amended, read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 155) further to amend the Post Office Act. He said : Mr. Speaker, this Bill contains three provisions. Section 1 proposes to add to section 9 of the general Post Office Act a clause entitling the Postmaster General to provide for late mailable matter being despatched, on the payment of an additional fee, to be fixed by the Postmaster General, and also to add a clause to that same section 9, entitling the department to establish a system of indemnity for the loss of registered mail matter, such indemnity in no case to exceed $25 for any one registered piece. Section 2 provides for striking out of the section of the Act passed in 1894 the words "to their subscribers." The object is to allow papers that are called sample copies, mailed by publishers, to contain within them the same things that may be inclosed in newspapers sent from the office of publication to the regular subscribers. At present the publishers are allowed to inclose in papers notices informing subscribers that their subscriptions are about to run out, and asking them to renew, and also envelopes to contain the reply, with the subscription money. By some accident, that privilege was limited to papers, sent to subscribers, and not extended to sample copies. It is customary for newspaper publishers, from time to time, to issue sample copies, which are not, therefore, within the meaning of the section, as it is to-day, not being sent to subscribers. It is proposed to strike out the words "subscribers." This has been asked by some of the publishers. Section 3 of the Bill proposes to allow the promotion of a railway mail clerk to be made from any clerk in the railway mail service. At present, superintendents must be chosen from mail clerks who have been practically running on the cars. This removes that restriction, and allows the choice to be made from those who may have been ten years in the railway mail service ; part of the ten years on the cars, and part in other branches.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This provision would seem to do away with the principle of promotion after a lengthened term of service, and it would enable the authorities to overlook the regular promotion that ten years in the railway mail service now gives, and allow parties to be brought in who had not that amount of experience in the railway mail service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The present statute states that except, in British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed superintendent unless he has served ten years at least as a railway mail clerk. That means has actually been engaged running on the cars for ten years.

Mr. BERGERON. Why change it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because there are men who may not have served ten years running on the cars, but have been in the railway mail service, which also embraces service in the office of the superintendent. There are superintendents in Ottawa and London and Toronto, and other railway centres. Each has a staff of clerks, and it might be advisable to choose from that staff. I assure the hon. gentleman that there is no person in view at all. This has been recommended by the head of the service as a necessary amendment to the Act.

Mr. DAVIN. There is a very large number of persons in the North-west Territories and Manitoba interested in this legislation, and I do not think that the reason given by the Postmaster General should commend itself to the House, because it is perfectly clear that an injustice will be done to the railway mail clerks. The Postmaster General tells us that his object is to enlarge the sphere of choice for promotion. Hitherto the promotion has been confined to the railway mail clerks running on the railway mail trains, and now the Postmaster General wants to enlarge the field whence competition will come, and he necessarily does an injustice to a body of men who really are, I believe, the most deserving civil servants we have in the post office employ.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the very last object of the Bill. It may be that a railway mail clerk has shown himself specially deserving, and for that reason he may have been taken off the road and brought into the superintendent's office. The whole policy of the Government in the railway mail service is to reward merit. If you get a deserving man who served five or six years as railway mail clerk, and you promote him to the superintendent's office, it may be that he would be the fittest man to succeed the superintendent himself. This Bill is really to reward merit. I repeat there is no person in view. The controller recommended this amendment as the result of his observation, and when he drafted the original clause, (because it was he who drafted it), he would not have limited it to those actually engaged on the mail cars if it had occurred to him.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the Postmaster General would accomplish what he aims at by defining that any time spent in the office would count the same as if it were spent on the train.

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is what the Bill does.

Mr. SPROULE. No. The Bill would allow the Postmaster General to make a selection from amongst those who perhaps had served no time on the train.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am perfectly sure no man would be appointed to the inside railway mail service who had not practical training in running on the mail cars. It is a special technical branch of the service, and it cannot possibly happen that the controller would recommend any one as superintendent who had not practical experience as a railway mail clerk.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, why do you not so provide in the law?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will consider that in committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. ELLIS. Perhaps the Postmaster General would explain why he adopts the idea of giving any special privilege for late mail matter. It appears to me that there should be an equal privilege, without a special fee, to all the people in the country, with regard to mailing matter at the last possible moment. I can conceive, as one result of this, that there might be a tendency on the part of post offices, particularly city post offices, to close the mails earlier, and not to be as expeditious in the despatch of the mails, if there were a fee charged upon letters that came in late—not for the purpose of collecting the fee, for I do not think that would influence postmasters very much, but in order to expedite the work, without much regard to public utility. But probably the Postmaster General can say something on the question which does not strike my mind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hardly think any postmaster would deliberately alter the carrying on of the work of his office, in order to tax the public. But there has to be some hour for closing the mails fixed, for there is a good deal of work for the staff in the office to perform after the receipt of the mail matter before it can leave the office for the train; and each office must be the judge of the time for closing, because so much time is required in the case of a heavy mail, and a different time for a lighter mail. So there has to be some regular hour, so many minutes before the departure of the courier to the station, to enable the indoor staff to make up the mail. But in order to meet the case of accidents, or of persons who are most anxious to despatch matter at the latest possible moment, it is proposed to establish a system of having an officer or a staff wherever it is deemed practicable, to take to the train such mail matter as is posted at the very last moment; and for that extra expense to which the department will be put a fee will be imposed. I think the fee will probably be a cent on small matter, such as letters, and there may be large packages also; that is why the Bill says "fee or fees," for it may be considered advisable in the working of the measure to have a larger fee than a cent for matter which would be more expensive to handle. I think the system works well in England; for it is nothing original with me, but simply the adaptation to our conditions here of a system that has been tried and found to be a public convenience in great centres in the old country.

Mr. HENDERSON. In country towns and villages it is a common practice, after the mail is made up by the postmaster, for the mail courier to take letters that may be brought into the office or handed to him and convey them to the railway station. I would like to know if the proposal now made by the Postmaster General would in any way interfere with the mail courier doing that without an extra stamp being put on?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. The stamp would only be required where the carrying of the letters to the station after the hour for closing the mails would put the department to any additional expense. I fancy that this will not have application except in the large centres. It is not proposed for the sake of making money, but simply to add to the convenience of the public.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the Postmaster General if he has matured any plan of applying this new method in the centres of population? Will it be possible under it to mail late letters at all the branch offices, or in the letter boxes, or will it be confined to the central office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to go into the details as far as my hon. friend desires. We will no doubt commence at the main post office, and probably develop the system from there as experience warrants. It may be possible to extend it to branch offices. The adaptation of the electric system in the collection of letters may yet produce a revolution in the mail service in large centres like Toronto, or wherever the automobile system may be adopted. I am in hopes that we may be able before long to adopt that system, in some places at all events, where the climate will admit of the operation of automobile cars. I have been thinking that over, but have developed nothing on the subject to offer to the House at present.

Mr. CLARKE. What will the fee be?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill says a "fee or fees." In cities like Toronto, for instance, it might be possible to despatch small mail matter within five minutes of the departure of the train by bicycle. In the case of letters and other small matter the fee will probably be a cent. In the case of more bulky matter, which could not be so carried, it might be necessary to have a larger fee.

Mr. BENNETT. Section "v," while commendable, may lead to difficulties. As I understand, in case of a person inclosing say, $25 in a letter, the department guarantees that if the contents are abstracted or tampered with, it will make good the amount. That being the case, it would seem to me that difficulties may arise. Assuming that a person wished to be dishonest, and passed over a letter to the postmaster, had it registered, and afterwards made a complaint that the letter had contained $25 but that when it reached its destination the amount had been abstracted, the issue would then be between the post office and the claimant as to whether the amount should be made good. In that case, would the Postmaster General explain what would be the procedure? Would it be necessary for the claimant to institute an action, or would the amount be paid forthwith by the department? It seems to me that the provision would result in putting a premium on dishonesty, and lead to considerable litigation between claimants and the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the working out of the scheme regulations may have to be established. The section provides for regulations. It may be thought advisable that one of the regulations should be that if a claim is intended to be made for the contents of a letter said to contain such an amount, the said amount may be endorsed upon the registered letter, and then the receiver shall open it in the presence of the postmaster delivering the letter. In the case of express companies, for example, they have a system of tying the letter up in a certain way, and putting their own seal on it in different places, which practically renders it impossible to be broken open without detection. We will endeavour to surround the system with safeguards so as to prevent fraud. In some countries the delivery of the letter is supposed to discharge any liability, whether there be anything of value in the package or not. In England, I think they insure practically all registered matter, the premium of insurance being part of a regular registration fee, and no proof of loss is required. If they cannot deliver the package, they assume that it contained the amount, to insure against the loss of which the fee is paid, just as in the case of a life insurance policy the premium is taken as a test of the amount insured.

Mr. BENNETT. The regulation suggested might result in this fraud being practised.

A letter, when received at its destination and opened by the postmaster, may not contain any money at all, and the person who sent the letter might give evidence that a certain amount had been inclosed, although when received it contained nothing, and the result would be that the department would be forced to make the payment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT. Would not that be placing a premium on dishonesty, for a man might inclose a piece of brown paper in the envelope to make the package appear bulky, and then give evidence that he had inclosed money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be nothing to prevent the same precautions being adopted at the beginning which are adopted at the end, namely, to require the sender to inclose the money in the presence of the postmaster who would then seal the envelope. Then, if the letter is registered, and the contents should be missing, we could have proof of the contents.

Mr. DAVIN. The fee will be graded, I suppose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, but the fee is not yet fixed. We will endeavour to make it as small as possible, so as to save the department from loss.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, there would be the evidence of the remitter as against the evidence of the postmaster, and what would be the result in that case?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a question of fact.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. gentleman made up his mind as to what the minimum fee will be?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not in a position to discuss the rate at present. The registration fee to-day of five cents is pretty high. Discussing the matter with the accountant, we thought that the minimum fee, say, for an amount of $5, might be one or two cents for the insurance, and then, perhaps, increase the fee one cent for every extra $5 up to $25, or something like that.

Mr. FOSS ROBERTSON. All the amendments in this Act are excellent, and, to my mind, in harmony with the present progressive administration of the department. I think that the fee idea which, I presume, is adopted from the English plan, should apply in the large cities and towns and be confined to the central post office and the post offices adjacent to the railway stations, but what I would like to know is whether this would apply to packages as well as to letters. I would also ask what is meant by striking out the words "to their subscribers," as provided in the second clause.

Mr. BENNETT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reply to the first question, the clause is large enough to make it applicable to all mailable matter. The words "mailable matter" in the Post Office Act includes everything that can pass by mail. The Bill says "mailable matter" in the third line of subsection u, but at the beginning it would, perhaps, be prudent to apply it simply to letters only, and then, later on, make it apply to all mail-matter as rapidly as we can develop the system. With regard to the second question, as to what is the meaning of the provision to strike out the words "to their subscribers," there is a provision in the Act, chapter 54, of the statutes of 1894, imposing a penalty for inclosing anything in a newspaper except accounts and receipts of newspaper publishers, printed circulars inviting subscriptions, and the printed envelopes addressed by such publishers to their subscribers. These may be inclosed in newspapers sent by the publisher to their subscribers, and it is proposed to strike out the words "to their subscribers," so as to enable newspaper publishers to inclose circulars in sample copies of their paper, inviting subscription, and sent to parties who are not subscribers.

Mr. CLARKE. Referring again to subsection u, I would suggest that if this late letter posting is to be of practical value to people in large centres of population, it ought not to be confined to letters posted in the general post office, but should be made applicable to certain branch offices that might be named as soon as the law is to be put in force. I hope that when this law is put in operation, it will apply to branch offices in different sections of large cities, such as Toronto, so that late letters may be mailed at these branches.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite admit that the extension of the system as suggested would be in the public interest, and the hon. gentleman may be sure that I will remember his suggestion and endeavour to carry it into force, but, of course, I must go slowly and with a reasonable degree of caution.

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to the registration clause, I draw the attention of the Postmaster General to this point, that there may be some difficulty in the case of inclosures in parcels other than money. For example, suppose a person should mail a gold ring in a registered letter, alleging that it is worth $25, when it may be spurious and not worth 5 cents. Now, who is to be the judge of the value? The postmaster may see the inclosure, but may be unable to determine the value. If the article is lost, the party may recover $25 for a thing that is not worth $1. How would he get over a difficulty of that kind?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If a person incloses a thing alleged to be worth $25, and pays the insurance fee on $25, and if it is abstracted en route, that is one of the ordinary incidents against which the insurance would apply. That is a different case from that suggested by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), of no inclosure at all. But, if the article is inclosed, whatever fraud is committed, is committed, we will say, by the post office officials, because the letter is in the custody of the post office from the beginning. But, considering how few articles are lost in the mail, then, applying the doctrine of chances, it would not pay a person to pay the insurance fee on $25 on the chance of some useless article not reaching its destination.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that this mailing of late letters will only apply to large cities or towns, and not to small towns or villages ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not possible at present to say how far the system will extend. It should be extended to every place where it will add materially to the public convenience. But in most small places no advantage will be gained over the present system. In each of these places there is a courier, whose duty it is to carry the mail to the station, whether the letters are inclosed in a bag or delivered to him by hand. That courier probably starts at the latest possible moment to catch the outgoing train. I do not see how we could add to the public convenience by adopting this system in such a place. But in the large centres the quantity of mail matter is so large that the hour for closing is fixed a considerable time ahead of the time for the leaving of the train. That is necessary to afford time to make up the mail. But this does not apply in the smaller centres, because the few late letters are carried by the courier, as part of his contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I had in mind particularly such a case as this. Mails are closed at a certain time in the evening, but they might be closed a great deal later and still catch the train. In such a case, this late system would be a great convenience. In most small places the mail closes at eight or nine o'clock.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Do you mean the post office building.

Mr. SPROULE. They close at eight or nine o'clock, but they might close much later and still catch the train. In such a case, this new system would be relatively as great a convenience as in a city.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The inspector fixes the time for the closing of the mail. There is no fixed time for the postmasters closing their offices ; they are supposed to keep them open for a reasonable hour at night. I doubt if it would be practicable to have the postmaster keep his general office open to a later hour in order to handle the few late letters that would come in.

Mr. SPROULE. But the late letters could be dropped in the box after the post office is closed, and, if the carrying of such letters to the train could be secured by means of putting on a special stamp, it would be a convenience to the public.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whenever it is practicable to apply the system in the public interest, it will be applied. There are different conditions in each office, so that no general rule can be adopted for the whole country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it would be well for the Postmaster General, either in this Bill or by regulation, to define the post offices to which this late-letter system is to apply. The postmaster in a small place of one or two thousand people might have no conveniences to carry out the system, yet might leave himself open to dismissal or censure for not doing so. It would be well that every postmaster should understand distinctly his duty in this respect.

Mr. BRITTON. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) say that, where there are already good facilities for getting letters to the train just before it leaves, this will not be interfered with. I notice there is great difference in the time at which post offices in different places close for the despatch of mail matter. In some of the towns of Ontario, for instance, you cannot have a letter despatched unless it is dropped in at eight or nine o'clock in the evening, while others despatch letters received up to midnight. The latter is the case, for instance, in the city of Kingston, where I live. This would cover the great bulk of the letters ; it would be very rare indeed to have one posted later than that. But, as I understand, the Postmaster General simply takes power to give facilities where they do not now exist, and provides for the charging of a small fee for the service. This seems to me a capital thing to have in the Post Office Act, and such rules could easily be made as would be necessary to carry it out. As to the other point, the insuring of registered mail matter, I am satisfied that the post office will make a little something out of that, because comparatively few of the registered letters go astray, and comparatively little of the large sums sent by mail are abstracted. Though we hear occasionally of a loss, when you consider the large amount sent, that loss must represent a very small proportion of the whole. And, when an opportunity is given to the sender to insure, no doubt many will take advantage of it, so that it will be a source of revenue to the Post Office Department. I believe both these reforms are in the right direction.

Mr. DAVIN. I think there is not the danger that my hon. friend behind me anticipates in regard to late letters. I would ask the Postmaster General whether in England there are not boxes specially for late letters, so that letters can be dropped in and the clerks, when the limited period has arrived for late letters, can go there and take them out. Am I wrong in that impression?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there are a number of receiving stations throughout the city of London where late letters are posted and stamped with a peculiar stamp.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. It is not a particular stamp.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I know there are a number of late letter-boxes in various parts of the city.

Mr. MOORE. This section gives power to the Postmaster General, not only to fix a fee for late mailable matter, but also to make regulations with respect to the despatch of late mailable matter. He undoubtedly has been made aware that difficulties often arise between postmasters and patrons of the post office regarding the issuing of post office orders and the mailing of registered letters. In many of the post offices in railway towns the mail has to be despatched at a certain specified time, and if a person wants a post office order, and the postmaster has not time to make it out and make up his mail in time to be despatched, it often occasions annoyance and ill-feeling. I think it would be well to make regulations that would exempt postmasters from issuing post office orders and registering letters for a certain length of time before the mail is despatched. Possibly such regulations have been made, but if not, it would be well to make such regulations and avoid the difficulty that has been occasioned in that way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I fancy there is sufficient power at present to have such regulations made as the hon. gentleman refers to for the guidance of postmasters. If not, I will take his suggestion into consideration.

On section 3,

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to that section, I think the Postmaster General will admit that the committee has been very kind in allowing this Bill to scamper through, and that the last clause should be postponed. If that clause were passed an injustice would be done to the railway mail clerks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made a suggestion that I am prepared to give effect to. He thought that perhaps, the controller might recommend some person as superintendent, or some person might be selected as superintendent who had not been actually a mail clerk at all. Now, to guard against any such contingency, I would be quite willing to have this section limited in such a way that the superintendent must be chosen from those who have been in the railway mail service, not for ten years, but that they should have served at least one-half of such period as railway mail clerks. That will get over the danger that the hon. gentleman anticipates.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I think that would still be an injustice to these men. There can be no danger that in so large and intelligent a body of men a superintendent could not be found. But if there was any danger to the efficiency of the service, I would at once yield to the Minister. But I cannot see any reason whatever for making this change. I certainly will move against it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). On the third reading.

Mr. DAVIN. No, we will vote against it now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the hon. gentleman quite understands the working of the system, otherwise he would not make this proposal. I would like to satisfy him upon its merits, because both he and I have the same object. Now, in the railway mail service we take, for example, the city of Ottawa. In this city the railway mail service consists of the railway mail clerks, the superintendent's office, and the staff in his office. The staff in his office have served more or less as railway mail clerks, they are probably the men best versed in the workings of the local service.

Mr. DAVIN. How many form the staff in the office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps four or five. In the city of Toronto there are, perhaps, half a dozen. Now, those positions in the inside service become prizes for mail clerks. There are many mail clerks who become incapacitated to run on the trains. It is a severe service, and it becomes necessary sometimes to transfer from the outside to the inside men who become physically unable, but are perfectly competent to manage and organize and maintain discipline. It will be a misfortune, it will be unfair, if a mail clerk who, because of his merits is promoted or transferred from the cars to the inside service should be excluded from the chance of being superintendent, because he has not served the actual ten years on the cars. I am sure my hon. friend does not want to do that injustice to those in the inside service.

Mr. DAVIN. How many are in the inside service in Toronto?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps six. I think, mail clerks.

Mr. DAVIN. How many railway mail clerks in the Toronto division?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think I mentioned forty-one. Now, I am willing to guard against the accident of a man becoming superintendent who has not had actual practical experience on the cars. But I do not think that we ought to shut out of the chance of promotion to the superintendency those who have been mail clerks, and who have been transferred to the inside service, either because they have been selected for their special merit to be inside, or because of accident, or the breaking down of their health, they are unable to work on the cars. I am willing to meet the criticism of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) by putting in some limitation so that the superintendent should have been at least five years on the cars, the balance of the period having been put in railway mail service elsewhere.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Postmaster General's defence of the clause is more commendable than the ill-considered clauses we have already passed. I think he has justified the insertion of this clause by the amendment which he is prepared to accept, providing that clerks in an office shall have been at least five years on the road as railway mail clerks.

Mr. DAVIN. You have forty-one who are active mail clerks, and the Postmaster General holds that it is necessary, for the efficiency of the post office service, that he should turn away, say in Toronto, from the forty-one mail clerks, and go to those inside.

Mr. ELLIS. Oh, no; that is not it.

Mr. DAVIN. I know he can take them from the 41, but there is the bare fact that he has 41 outside men who have hitherto had this prize to look forward to. As he said himself, it is a distressing service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said a severe service.

Mr. DAVIN. A severe service. Well, severity distresses. It is a severe service in Manitoba and the North-west where you have cold nights in winter, and you are diminishing the chances of promotion of the railway mail clerks who are now actively employed in the railway mail service. I think the committee will come to the conclusion that it is unjust to take a course of this kind.

Mr. ELLIS. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has quite a logical mind. It would appear to me to be perfectly plain. These men engaged in inside work are usually persons who have filled the positions of railway mail clerks, and it would be somewhat unfair to say that they should not have the chance of promotion simply because they have been taken inside. I think every man in the railway mail service should be allowed to look forward to the chance of promotion in the railway mail service. When the hon. Postmaster General has made the provision that men shall serve five years on the train he has made a liberal provision in respect to these men.

Mr. DAVIN. The clause to which this amendment refers, is as follows:—

Except in British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed such superintendent unless he has served at least ten years as a railway mail clerk.

Under that clause not one of these six men in the inside service, who had not served for ten years, would be eligible, and what the hon. Minister wants to do now, at the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), is to say, or, at least, what it comes to, is this:

Except in British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed as superintendent unless he has served at least five years as a railway mail clerk.

Mr. ELLIS. That is it; that is not so very bad.

Mr. DAVIN. If he is going to do it in that way, then, any of the railway mail clerks who have been five years in the service might be made a superintendent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The clause will then read as follows:—

Except in British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed such superintendent unless he has served at least ten years in the railway mail service, at least one-half of which period shall have been passed as a railway mail clerk.

That means ten years in the railway mail service, one-half of which must be served as a railway mail clerk.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if the gentlemen who have been selected already to act as superintendents have had ten years' experience in the railway mail service? Has any difficulty been experienced in selecting from the men who have served ten years as railway mail clerks and have these gentlemen been qualified in that way to act as superintendents?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would say to the committee that there always have been superintendents in the service, and I have not displaced any superintendents except where there has been an abolition of centres. I have never had occasion to see whether the present superintendents have served ten years or not as I have taken them as I found them. I have only made one appointment of a superintendent, and that was in the case of Mr. Plumb in the Ottawa division. I think that is the only appointment I have had to do with as superintendent. Mr. Plumb was appointed superintendent on my recommendation on the 1st of July, 1897. He was appointed mail clerk on the 23rd May, 1882, so that he had been fifteen years in the railway mail service.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if Mr. McLeod was more than ten years on the road?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What division is he in?

Mr. CLARKE. Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not recollect the case of Mr. McLeod. I simply appointed those that the controller selected. I do not know all the mail clerks. The controller is an old officer in the department; he organized the branch, and every recommendation he made I acted upon. I do not consider myself competent to sit in judgment upon him, because his branch is a most responsible one; he is responsible to me, and, of course, I to Parliament for the choice made.

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. Minister say what set of circumstances are before his mind that suggests this reform?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), to begin with, that I have no object whatever in view except to make the measure a good one in the public service. First of all, if he has any suspicion that any person is in question, let me disabuse his mind of that. It is not the case. The controller called my attention to this provision of the Act. He thinks it is not advisable to shut out from promotion to the office of superintendent those of the staff in the railway mail service who are in the inside. He wants to be able to draw from the active mail clerks, for superintendents or deputy superintendents, the most efficient men in the service. If, to-day, he wished to transfer to the inside service a railway mail clerk, who had been only eight or nine years acting as a railway mail clerk, he would for ever make it impossible for that man to be a superintendent. That is not a desirable state of affairs. It would render him ineligible for promotion should a vacancy occur, and this Bill simply enlarges the class from which superintendents may be chosen, yet will limit it to those who are engaged in the practical working of the railway mail service, and, when I have changed the time, to at least, five years. my hon. friend should be satisfied.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. DAVIN. On whose suggestion is the promotion to be made? The hon. Minister gets advice from somebody. Who advises him?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The controller.

Mr. DAVIN. Are those who are in the office constantly in contact with the controller?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not in his office. A superintendent is a man under him; the controller is over all. He does not come in contact with the men in the office except he might do so in Ottawa. He is stationed in Ottawa, while the superintendents and staffs are in the cities and railway centres of Canada. He may not see them any more frequently than he sees the railway mail clerks.

Mr. BENNETT. When a man accepts an office at the present time under what is known as a railway mail superintendent, he accepts it with the full knowledge of what his duties will be. That is to say, that his duties will be of a clerical character appertaining exclusively to inside work. The position of railway mail clerk is one of the greatest danger, and rarely a serious accident takes place that a mail clerk is not found among the killed or injured. In addition to that, there is great danger to the health of these clerks, for while working in a heated car in winter with their coats off, as is necessary for the despatch of their work, the door has to be opened every few minutes, so that the clerk is liable to catch cold, and the experience is, I think, that few of those clerks live to an old age. These clerks know now, that after they have been ten years in the service they may attain to the better position of a railway mail superintendent, but under the proposed system in the Bill, a clerk in the inside office who has not undergone the risk, may get that promotion. There is a Mr. Croker, in the Toronto division, under Mr. McLeod. I know him personally, and to my knowledge he has been more than ten years in the Toronto postal division. Now, the Postmaster General might appoint Mr. Croker to the position of superintendent if even he served five years on the cars, notwithstanding that he has been for years discharging the quiet work of the inside duties of the office. There are clerks in the Toronto division who, I assume from their age, have been running on the road for over twenty-five years, taking all risks to their life and health, and yet, if this clause goes into force the controller might recommend a man who has only served five years on the road. It seems to me that this clause is unfair to the men who have been running for a good number of years on the road. The best proof that there is no necessity for the amendment is that when the present service was organized every gentleman chosen as superintendent was taken from the clerks who had been running on the trains. It was pointed out by the hon. member (Mr. Davin) that the controller, in moving about the country will necessarily come in contact with the clerks in the different divisional offices, and he will probably make acquaintances in these offices when he would not in all probability meet the clerks running on the railway. The result might be that the controller would select men in the offices and not men who had been exclusively engaged in the railway mail service. Considering the risk to the health and life of these mail clerks, I do not think that their only hope of promotion should be removed by this Bill.

Mr. MOORE. The point taken by the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is quite forcible, but it occurs to me that what the country requires is, that a man should have experience enough on the road to make an efficient officer. If ten years' service is liable to imperil the man's health, it would be better to take him off the road after five years than to keep him on the road until his health is ruined. Five years is long enough for a man to inform himself of all the details of the work in the division to which he is appointed; and, consequently, I think the proposition in the Bill is a reasonable one.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE. The Postmaster General promised last session, I think, that he would give consideration to the question of insuring the lives of railway mail clerks. As my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has pointed out, these officers have particularly arduous duties to perform and they are obliged to work in a part of the train where if an accident occurs, they are specially liable to be injured. Has the Postmaster General made any progress in working out a scheme for giving to the families of the mail clerks some security in the way of insuring the lives of these officers?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think I promised to bring down any scheme of that kind. I recognize the special risk that this class of officers run, but, perhaps, it is a risk that they have to take. When there are accidents they have their claims against the railway company, if the railway company is responsible for the accident, and I know that in many instances the railway companies have been found responsible. For example, very recently an accident happened between Toronto and Ottawa, in which one railway mail clerk was killed and another seriously injured, and I have been told that the injured clerk received a considerable sum of money from the railway company. Since taking office I have had to deal with a number of cases where there was no recourse against the railway, and the House has been good enough to adopt several proposals providing compassionate allowances. As long as Parliament is willing to proceed in that way, and until some other scheme is adopted, that, perhaps, is the best insurance that the mail clerks can have. I do not know that Parliament is prepared to assume a legal responsibility for the mail clerks, that would be simply relieving railway companies of their liability. The country ought not be liable for the railway companies if the railway companies, which are primarily liable, must give compensation.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to ask the Postmaster General whether he has considered the matter which I brought before him in previous sessions, with regard to giving to the mail clerks in Manitoba and the North-west Territories an extra allowance to meet the increased cost of living in Manitoba and the Territories as compared with other parts of Canada, and of which extra allowance these officials have been deprived. I wish the hon. gentleman would consider that.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) further to amend the Act respecting the protection of navigable waters. He said: When I introduced the Bill, I explained its object and purport. It is a declaratory Act to remove a doubt as to the meaning of the law prohibiting the depositing of ballast in public streams of less than 12 fathoms in depth. The question was raised, whether the law would interfere with the discretion of port wardens, within the limits of a public harbour, to order ballast to be deposited in a certain place. The Bill contains a proviso declaring that the Act does not interfere with the provisions of the Harbour-masters' Act in that regard. That is the only alteration made.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the Ottawa River is to-day full of new sawdust, floating down the stream and destroying the river, as it has been doing for years, notwithstanding that there is a law on the statute-book prohibiting it. I would like the Minister to explain to the House why he permits the law to be flagrantly violated right under his eyes every day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman should not put it in that way—why I permit the law to be violated under my eyes. It is not my special province to attend to it. The law makes any person who deposits sawdust in the river, liable to a penalty, and anybody can sue for it.

Mr. WALLACE. Have not the Government given permission?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. that has all expired. The Government gave no permission. Parliament extended the exemption to the Ottawa River up to the 1st of June last. I may say, in fairness to some of the gentlemen who are still depositing sawdust, that an experiment was made last year for the purpose of utilizing this sawdust; and I am informed by those engaged in the experiment, that it has proved eminently successful, and they are now actually constructing, on the foundation of the old Booth mill, which was burned some years ago, a large mill for the purpose of consuming the sawdust. A very large amount of money is being expended in the construction of the mill, and a large amount will be expended in its operation. I have a letter from Mr. Booth, making that statement, which I shall be glad to bring down, when we go into Supply. He hopes that the sawdust not only will not be dumped in the river, but will be used in a most lucrative way by those engaged in the enterprise.

Mr. WALLACE. Suppose there was no such establishment, as there is not to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, they are liable for the penalties to anybody who chooses to prosecute them.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 29th June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TIME FOR POSTING PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. SCRIVER moved :

That the time for posting private Bills under rule 60 be reduced from one week to three days for the remainder of the session, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 8th report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. WALLACE.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 166) respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—(Mr. McAlister.)

Bill (No. 165) to incorporate the Yukon River and Atlin Lake Improvement Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 164)—from the Senate—respecting Loan Companies.—(Mr. Fielding.)

Bill (No. 163)—from the Senate—further to amend the Winding-up Act.—(Mr. Fielding.)

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS IN THE VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to some typographical errors in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of the 28th June, 1899, where the resolution that was moved by me is printed. On page 530, about the 17th line from the top, "1899" should be "1896." On the same page, about the 18th line, where the name of the Hon. Clifford Sifton is printed, "not a member of this House" should be "not then a member of this House." On page 540, about the middle of the page, the words "representing in writing" should be "represented in writing." On page 541, about the 18th line "gross abuses" should be "gross abuse." On page 543, 13th line, the word "enforced" is used instead of "imposed." On page 547, "Harpsr" is printed for "Harper" in the middle of the page.

Mr. BERGERON. I am informed that the French copy is a great deal worse. The translation is badly done, and the name of Mr. Walsh appears in two or three places where another name was used, making the thing perfectly incomprehensible. If corrections are to be made, the French translation should also be revised.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House has taken a note of the corrections, and will see that the motion as printed is made to agree with the manuscript, and that the French translation is revised.

CONSTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT YUKON TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What was the date of the Order in Council authorizing the construction of a Government telegraph line into the Yukon ?
2. What amount of money has been expended to date on this work ?
3. From what moneys voted by Parliament have these expenditures been paid ?
4. Have the supplies so far purchased for this work been purchased by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I beg to reply : 1. 13th March, 1899. 2. The sum of $15,000 was advanced to Mr. J. B. Charleson upon his departure for the Yukon, to be accounted for by him with properly certified vouchers. In the discussion of the subject a few days ago, I stated, on the authority of the Deputy Minister of Public Works, who was in attendance at the time, that the amount of this advance was $13,000. The deputy has since informed me that in his statement to me, speaking from memory, he confused this advance with one that had been made to another official. The correct amount is $15,000. In that amount was included the sum of $2,500 specially chargeable to telegraph lines in British Columbia. As soon as Mr. Charleson's accounts come in and all the bills rendered for supplies are examined and certified to by him and the apportionment made, we will be able to say how much of the advance made is applicable to the telegraph construction. 3. The above advance has been drawn as follows:—$10,000 from the appropriation for "surveys," for which a vote of $25,000 was granted at the last session of Parliament; $2,500 from the appropriation for "Dredging, B.C.," for which a vote of $15,000 was also granted for the current fiscal year; and $2,500 from the appropriation for "Telegraphs in B. C.," for which there is a vote of $12,000. 4. Quotations for the wire were asked for from two firms in eastern Canada: Messrs. Lewis Bros. & Co., of Montreal, and Mr. W. G. Charleson, of Ottawa. The quotation of Mr. W. G. Charleson, of Ottawa, was the lowest and the contract was awarded to him. The other supplies were obtained by Mr. Charleson, superintendent of works, without tender.

CHANGES IN LIGHTING PARLIAMENTARY CLOCK.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Has the light in the tower of the Parliament buildings been changed ?
2. Since when, and why ?
3. What advantage has been gained ?
4. By whom has the new light been furnished ?
5. What amount was saved per night, if any ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I beg to reply: 1. There has been a change in the lighting of the dials of the clock. 2. Recently; to try a new system. 3. Better light at one-fifth the cost. 4. The Ottawa Electric Company supplied the light under the old system and under the new. 5. The dials were previously lighted by four 50 candle power lamps each, making sixteen 50 c.p. lamps in all, at a cost of $100 per annum. They are now lighted by one 40 c.p. lamp each or four 40 c.p. lamps in all, at $20 per annum for the whole. The economy is effected by a change of system.

ESQUIMALT DRY DOCK.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Have any petitions been received by the hon. the Minister of Public Works, or any other member of the Government, protesting against or in favour of the latest reduction in docking rates at the Esquimalt dry dock ?
2. If so, when were they received, and who are the signers of the same ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). No such petitions have as yet been received. But we have a telegram from a Mr. Shaw stating that a monster petition was being signed and would be forwarded. Written protests against the reduction of rates at the Esquimalt graving dock have been received from the following:—E. P. Davis, dated 3rd June, 1899; Hon. F. Peters, on behalf of Mrs. Bullen & Co., dated 12th June, 1899; Victoria Board of Trade, dated 14th June, 1899; Vancouver Board of Trade, dated 15th June, 1899.

EXTENSION OF LOBSTER FISHING SEASON.

Mr. McLELLAN (by Mr. Gibson) asked :

1. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries determined upon any extension of the lobster fishing season for Prince Edward Island ?
2. If so, in what localities will such extension apply this year ?
3. What will be the limit of such extension ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I beg to reply: 1. Yes, to report to Council favourably. 2. To those localities defined by the report of the Lobster Commission between West Point and Carleton Head in Northumberland Straits. 3. Up to and including the 31st day of July.

VANCOUVER DRILL HALL.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Government awarded the contract for the erection of the drill hall in Vancouver, B.C. ?
2. If so, to whom, and at what price ?
3. Does the contract awarded, if any, include all the work required to complete the building in accordance with the plans and specifications as approved by the Minister of Militia and Defence ?
4. How many tenders were received for the work, from whom received, and at what figures ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The contract has not been awarded. It is not expedient, before the signing of a contract, to give the information that is asked for.

DRY DOCKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I beg to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following resolution, which His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter thereof, recommends to the House :—

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend chap. 17 of 45 Vic., 1882, entitled : " An Act to encourage the construction of dry docks by granting assistance on certain conditions to companies constructing them," by providing, in lieu of section 1 of said Act, that if any incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to construct a dry dock for the reception and repairing of vessels, at a place, and according to a plan and specification providing for all proper and necessary equipment, machinery and plant, such plan and specification to be approved by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place, and to be completed within a time to be limited by such agreement, then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done ; the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of a subsidy not exceeding two per centum per annum on the cost of the work, during twenty years from the time of its completion and acceptance by the said Minister : provided, that such subsidy shall not exceed $20,000 per annum, and that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work as estimated by the said Minister ; and the subsidy shall not be payable for any portion of the said twenty years during which the dock shall not be in complete repair and working order ; and that it is expedient to further provide that if any incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to enlarge and extend any existing dock for the reception and repairing of vessels according to a plan and specification approved by the Governor in Council on a report of the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public where the said existing dock is located, and to be completed within a time limited by such agreement, then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of a subsidy not exceeding two per centum per annum on the cost of the work during twenty years from the time of its acceptance by the said Minister : provided that such subsidy shall not exceed $10,000, and that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work incident to such enlargement and extension as estimated by the said Minister, nor shall such subsidy be payable for any portion of the said twenty years during which the dock shall not be in complete repair and working order.

Mr. FIELDING.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply and the amendment of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper thereto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The somewhat premature breakdown of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), after speaking only nine hours upon this motion, made it necessary for me to arrange that I should not proceed to reply until this afternoon. According to rumour, the hon. gentleman spent between three and six months in preparing his motion and the oration to which he treated this House during the last two days of its sittings. And I should have thought that the hon. gentleman would see fit, at an early period of his remarks, to place in some intelligible form before the House grounds upon which he is asking that this proceeding be taken. However, after speaking seven hours and a half upon other, and largely irrelevant, subjects, the hon. gentleman condescended to state, in some degree, the evidence upon which he intended to rely as grounds for the proceeding which he was asking the House to take. The House will at once perceive that, as these references were read rapidly, it was most difficult, in fact quite impossible for me to appreciate their significance, so that I was compelled to leave over my remarks upon the subject until to-day, in order that I might have an opportunity of looking at a report of the hon. gentleman's speech and judging of the significance of that which he has laid before the House.

It was a matter of common knowledge for some time before the present session of Parliament began, that the hon. gentleman had charged himself with the duty of leading an attack upon the Administration in connection with the affairs of the Yukon district. He made that attack ; and the circumstances of that attack and the manner in which it was made are within the memory and the knowledge of the House. I replied to the hon. gentleman at that time. I went somewhat fully into the history of the administration of the district, and I think I showed, to the satisfaction of the House and to the satisfaction of the country, that there had been no neglect and no mismanagement, so far as the Government itself was concerned. And I stated then, fully and fairly, what the position of the Government was. I pointed out that the government of the Yukon had been organized as early as possible last summer, and that officers who had been sent there, had since been in charge, and that, so far as known, no serious complaint, nothing that could be called a complaint, had been made in regard to the administration of affairs since Mr. Ogilvie and his coadjutors took charge. And it is, therefore,—and I desire to call the attention of the House somewhat closely to the fact—in reality, in regard to the administration from the spring of 1898, when Major Walsh left—some time in the month of June—to the month of September, when Mr. Ogilvie took charge, that these questions altogether arise. The hon. gentleman seems to have realized, in the address he formerly delivered on this question, that it was necessary for him to make some strong statements in order that he might justify the position he took. And he did make a number of very strong statements. I went into those statements and analysed them carefully, with all the information that was at my disposal or at the disposal of the officers of the department. I showed how foundationless, how groundless, they were. I showed that, in every case in which a specific statement of fact had been made, where the means of investigation were at my disposal, the statement was untrue; and I concluded my remarks by saying that I did not think that a speech had ever been made in this Parliament that contained so many untrue statements as that made by the hon. gentleman. It is worthy of remark that, up to this moment, no gentleman on the other side of the House has seen fit to controvert my remarks in that respect. But the hon. gentleman has learned caution since his effort. It was expected, I think, by the members of the House that he would be more specific, when he came to deal with the question again. But the hon. gentleman is not more specific: he is very much less specific. If anybody will take the trouble to read the motion—I suppose we must call it a motion—which has been placed before the House, a document which takes, I think, one hour and fifteen minutes, by the standard time, to read, I think he will see that the greatest possible care has been taken, in nearly every possible case, to avoid anything in the nature of a specific statement, to avoid giving anything that would enable anybody to understand what the statement was intended to refer to. And let me point out to my hon. friend, and to the House—not so much, I may say, to my hon. friend as to the House—that in one special case, where the hon. gentleman undertook to charge me with impropriety, to say that a lawyer in Victoria had applied to me by letter, or by telegram, for the purpose of getting a liquor permit, and had obtained it by letter, or telegram, and had charged a large sum therefor, I denied that statement, I denied it point-blank upon the spot, and I deny it now, for there is not a solitary word of truth in it. Now, in that case, what does the hon. gentleman do? In this very resolution is a clause intended to convey to the public the impression that he is reiterating that charge. I will read that clause in a little while—I cannot find it at the moment. I would not take the trouble to refer to it, if it were not for the fact that it shows the principle upon which this resolution has been framed. The clause in the resolution to which I refer says that a Liberal lawyer was enabled, by reason of political influence to charge a sum of money—for what? Was it to get a permit, as the hon. gentleman said, when he charged me before? No, but to get the recognition of a permit that had been issued by the Government of the North-west Territories. The hon. gentleman had made a specific charge against me, which charge I had denied. Now, the hon. gentleman was called upon to do one of two things, either to stand to his guns, to repeat his charge and try to prove it, or to accept my denial. But he does not do either. I explained that there was not a shadow of truth in the charge; I pointed out to the House just what had been done. I desired to put the House in the fullest possession of the facts. I explained that I had had correspondence by telegraph with Mr. Archer Martin, that Mr. Martin had telegraphed to me, asking me to issue authority to recognize a permit that had been issued by the Government of the North-west Territories. I was advised by the Minister of Justice that the permit was a legal permit and ought to be recognized, so I telegraphed Mr. Martin in reply to that effect. If the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had telegraphed me in the same way, he would have had the same answer; if the holder of the permit, or any one else, had telegraphed me to the same effect, he would have had the same answer. I had the opinion of the Department of Justice that the permit was good and legal, and I simply acted on that. And that simple and proper transaction, which I explained to this House fully and completely, the hon. gentleman has drawn his clause in this resolution to cover with the object of making it appear that he is reiterating the statement which he made here before, and which he is utterly incapable of substantiating. That will give the House a slight idea of the honesty of purpose with which the various clauses of these resolutions have been drawn, and of the hon. gentleman's idea of fairness in political debate, and of his anxiety, which he declared to us at such wearisome length during the last two days, that everything should be done fairly, and properly, and honourably for the sake of the good name of Canada. Now, the hon. gentleman does not stop there. He goes on in the same way all through those resolutions, and we find that wherever there is any danger that the resolution might convey an idea of what the specific charge was, it is put in such language that no possible information upon the subject can be gathered. Now listen. The hon. gentleman charged me that a lawyer in Victoria had got $500 for telegraphing or writing to get a permit, which I denied. Now this is what he says :

That application to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and political influence became and was necessary in order to secure respect for permits issued under the law, and a Liberal lawyer was enabled to charge a large sum to secure the good offices of the Minister in consequences of irregular and illegal conduct under his administration.

He has drawn it in such a way that the facts, the perfectly proper facts which I laid before this House, may support a charge which he intends that the public shall understand as a reiteration of the charge from which he has backed down because he knows he cannot prove it. Then we find a statement that an officer of the Government was guilty of a certain thing. An officer of the Government—no name, no particular. We find the statement that officials of the Government have been guilty of fraud. Did ever anybody hear of a charge being brought against an official in that way, or a Government being asked to indict publicly the official administration of a whole district upon the statement that officials of the Government have been guilty of fraud ?

But before dealing with those phases of the question, I desire to take up that particular phase which is personal to myself and personal to other members of the Government. For some reason which I have not yet been able to fathom, it has fallen to my lot, since I have been a member of this Government, to be subjected to a peculiarly virulent and constant stream of abuse. I have no knowledge of the reason. I have no complaint to make of it, if it suits the gentlemen who are politically associated with him on the other side of the House. But I am satisfied that it does not affect the reputation which I enjoy amongst my own friends. Rather the contrary, Mr. Speaker, would any friends that I might possess be influenced to stand more firmly by me when unreasoning abuse and vilification are directed against me. Well, amongst the gentlemen who seem to have conceived—I do not know what it might be called, an unusual amount of venom and bitterness against me—is this hon. gentleman who represents Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in this House. I need not call to the attention of the members of the House the fact that this hon. gentleman seems to have been delegated to make an attempt upon every possible occasion and in every possible way to lead the House of Commons and the people of Canada to suppose that there is something radically wrong, vicious and defective about my public conduct. I am bound to say that during the last few days he has transferred his attention considerably to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), but until that time I think I was easily the first in the hon. gentleman's consideration.

Now, every one who was in this House when the hon. gentleman spoke of this question upon the Address, will remember the manner in which he spoke, the style of his utterance, and the insinuations that he conveyed from beginning to end of his remarks. Everything that it was possible for him to do without making a specific and definite statement, to convey the impression, to lead the public to believe that I was personally corrupt and personally involved in improper transactions in the administration of this district, he did. Not only has the hon. gentleman done that, but the press which supports my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House, have been extremely liberal in insinuations of improper, dishonest and corrupt conduct on my part. Therefore, it becomes a matter of some interest to the House of Commons, the majority of whom are responsible for my political conduct, now to appreciate the position which these gentlemen take at the culmination of their efforts upon this subject. The hon. gentleman, as I said, has spent six months in preparing himself. He has placed in your hands a resolution which, as I said, took an hour and fifteen minutes to read, and in that resolution, Mr. Speaker, he has not dared to make one single charge of personal dishonesty or corruption against me or any member of the Government. That is the position to which the hon. gentleman has brought himself by the proceeding which he has taken. Now, Sir, that of itself would not be discreditable to the hon. gentleman if he were prepared to take a manly position in connection with it, and I do not see why a manly opponent should not take such a position. Sir, in the few years I have been in political life, I have never charged an opponent of mine with corruption ; I have never, upon a public platform or in the legislature where I last sat, or here—I have never charged in my life a political opponent with corruption or with dishonest conduct, and I do not think my political career has been any less successful on that account. It would not be any discredit to the hon. gentleman to say : I do not believe in your administration, I think your administration has been incapable, I think your officials are corrupt ; but let us fight it out on that basis as gentlemen should. But the hon. gentleman has not done that, he has taken an entirely different position ; and I propose to show, I think to the satisfaction of this House, that when the hon. gentleman stood here and undertook to risk his position as a public man, he will not have very much of a position to risk by the time I have finished. What does he say in the first place ? He starts in by saying that the Minister of the Interior has been guilty of scandalous neglect, delay and mismanagement. Now, I want the members of the House of Commons to pause for a moment and think of a gentleman who has been Minister of Justice for Canada, proposing to refer to a commission of judges the charge that a Minister of the Crown has been guilty of delay and mismanagement in connection with the Yukon. Members of the House of Commons of the least experience will know that the highest functions of a House of Parliament is to decide whether a Minister has been guilty of delay or mismanagement. Since when, Mr. Speaker, was the conduct of a Minister of the Crown, was the question as to whether a Minister was to remain in office or not, was the question whether his administration was effective or not to be settled by a commission of judges? If in any sense I have been guilty of neglect I will answer for my conduct to the House of Commons; I will answer for my administration of the Yukon, and I will place that administration beside the administration of these hon. gentlemen, beside their mismanagement of the North-west Territories, which became a by-word all through that country. This hon. gentleman says that I have been guilty of partiality and favouritism. What are partiality and favouritism? If I have been guilty of partiality and favouritism in the discharge of my office, if in the exercise of the powers conferred upon me by law, he means that when I wanted to appoint somebody to office, that I was partial to my friends, the Liberals as against the Conservatives, if that is what the hon. gentleman means, it is true; there is no question about that. But that is not a misdemeanour: that is a question of policy. I imagine I see a commission of judges sitting upon the question as to whether a Minister has been guilty of partiality or favouritism. That would be rather a new departure in the proceedings of constitutional government. Let me say that every member of this House, who has any experience in connection with matters of this kind, knows that you could not get a respectable judge in Canada to accept a commission of that kind, or for one instant to undertake an investigation into a question of administration which is in conflict between the members of the Opposition and the Government. What does the hon. gentleman do? He says the Minister of the Interior has been guilty of favouritism and corruption. I will read it:

That the Hon. Clifford Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, has been guilty of favouritism and partiality—

Not corruption; he did not say corruption. He was careful not to say it.

—in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories.

Now, what follows? He does not say "in proof of that" he cites the following, but he cites the following in order that it may be taken as proof of it:—

That as appears by a Return (83), 3rd Session, 8th Parliament, 61 Victoria, 1898 (Canada), the following parties applied for and obtained leases of gold placer mining or gold dredging areas in the Yukon district:—

A. E. Philp, said to be of Brandon, for a lease on Bonanza Creek.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on S. Fork (Stewart).

G. Philp, said to be of London, for lease on B. Salmon.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Indian River or Creek.

J. A. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Teslin River or Creek.

A. D. Cameron, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Stewart's River or Creek.

That Mr. A. E. Philp and Mr. A. D. Cameron, aforesaid, were partners in business with the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Sifton, when that gentleman became Minister of the Interior, and all were members of the firm of Sifton, Philp & Cameron, of Brandon.

These gentlemen were partners of mine until I became Minister of the Interior, not "when," but a short time before that partnership was dissolved:

That by the said return, it further appears that W. J. Lindsay, said to be of Ottawa, P. C. Mitchell, said to be of Brandon, and W. L. Parish, said to be of Ottawa, applied for dredging leases in the Yukon, whereas these gentlemen were residents of Brandon who first learned of these applications by a letter from A. E. Philp, aforesaid, advising them that these leases had been granted in their names and inclosing a power of attorney from each of them in favour of said Philp, to enable him to dispose of them.

That in the list contained in the said return are the names and addresses of the following purporting to be applicants for dredging leases:—

F. Burnett, Vancouver.

F. Burnett, Colborne.

J. G. Burnett, Edmonton.

F. Burnett, Colborne.

Frank Burnett, Brandon.

Whereas F. Burnett was never in Colborne in his life, but said Philp came from that place.

These are two remarkable statements to appear in a state document. These are all the allegations that refer to this particular matter. The hon. gentleman says that I was guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of my department, and he cites as a reason, that certain gentlemen, who were formerly partners of mine, have procured certain dredging leases as shown by this return. Now, I desire to point out that, if the facts, as stated, were correct, it would not be proof of either partiality or favouritism. The regulations, which are published regarding the mining affairs of Canada, give to every citizen of Canada the same right, and I have no power on earth, justly or properly, in administering my department, nor have the officers in that department any right or power to refuse Mr. Philp, or Mr. Cameron, or anybody else, his just rights under these regulations. If these gentlemen file applications in my department, and under these regulations they are dealt with by the chief clerk of the department, they are entitled to what they are assigned by that clerk, and neither I nor anybody else has a right to deprive them of that. It would be rather a peculiar doctrine that, because a man had been my partner, he would not be entitled to the same rights as any other citizen in connection with the affairs of the Government of Canada. But while this is abundantly clear it is not at all necessary for us to settle that point in connection with this particular transaction. I have in my hands Return No. 83, which the hon. gentleman cites in this resolution, the product of three months of assiduous and careful labour by the hon. gentleman; I have in my hand this return which the hon. gentleman cites as proof of the statement which he makes. Would you believe it that the hon. gentleman cannot read a return when it is brought down to the House of Commons? What does the return show? The return shows that Mr. Philp, and all these gentlemen who are named never got any leases of any kind whatever. One would expect, that, when the hon. gentleman takes three months to prepare a motion and moves for returns, and when returns are brought down and laid on the Table of the House, that he could read them. A boy ten years old would not have made the blunder that the hon. gentleman has made. Here it is—a lease on Bonanza Creek to A. E. Philp. Here at the top of the return are the names of the persons who have applied for leases to dredge the localities, and so forth. The various columns are all worked out so that anybody could see—"name of applicant," "address," "river or creek," "number of miles leased," "rent paid," "assigned." Here we have:

Name of applicant, A. E. Philp; address, Brandon; river or creek, Bonanza; No. of miles, leased, none.

Every one of these gentlemen is in the same position. On page 10:

Philp, A. E., address, Ottawa; river or creek, South Fork, Stewart; number of miles leased, none; rent paid, none.

The clerk of the Mining Branch informs me that Mr. Philp was staying in Ottawa at the time, and he wrote his letter from the Russell House, Ottawa. The clerk got the letter here and took his name down as belonging to Ottawa, and so, that is the fraud, that is the corruption, that is the rascality on the part of the department, which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) refers to. The fact that a man came here and wrote a letter of application from the Russell House, and that the clerk of the Mining Branch entered his address as Ottawa, is cited here as a fraud by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). So, we see that in this case, Mr. Philp got no lease and paid no rent. Again, on page 16 of the return:

Name of applicant, G. Philp,—
Mr. SIFTON.

That should be A. E. Philp.

Name of applicant, A. E. Philp; address, —; river or creek, Big Salmon; number of miles leased, none; rent paid, none.

Name of applicant, A. E. Philp; address, Ottawa; river or creek, Indian; number of miles leased, none; rent paid, none.

F. A. Philp,—

It is printed here "F. A.," but it should be "E. A."

Name of applicant, E. A. Philp; address, Ottawa; river or creek, Teslin; number of miles leased, none; rent paid, none.

Again, on page 17:

Name of applicant, A. D. Cameron; address, Ottawa; river or creek, Stewart; number of miles leased, none; rent paid, none.

That is a proof of gross favouritism and partiality, according to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). While I am on this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement to the House, just briefly, because it may be a matter of some interest to some of my hon. friends. I am aware of the fact that some of my hon. friends have, perhaps, thought that I was a little lacking in personal attention to matters connected with the Mining Branch, when applications were made to me. I want to say this to them. It has been my invariable rule since I took charge of that department, to exercise no discretion whatever in connection with mining applications of an individual character. When an application comes in for a mining concession of any kind, it goes to Mr. Ryley, the chief clerk of the branch, and it never comes to me unless it is a case in which Mr. Ryley has to ask for instructions, cannot deal with it under the regulations, or in which there is some confusion or some doubt concerning which he thinks he ought to have the direction of the Minister. If it is a matter for which there is no regulation, then it is brought before me in order that I may consider whether special action should be taken in regard to it or not. Now, Sir, as to these applications for dredging and mining concessions in the Yukon which are referred to by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), the fact is, that I absolutely knew nothing of any one of them, that I absolutely had nothing whatever to do with them. I framed the regulations after consultation with Mr. Ryley, and then I said to Mr. Ryley: Now, I do not want to know the name of a single man making application for a lease; I want you to take these papers and deal with them according to the regulations, each on its merit, and according to their priority as each man is entitled to them under the regulations. I am perfectly aware of the fact that such a course prevented me from giving any of my friends any particular favours, or leaning the scale one way or the other in their favour. I was satisfied to take that position, and I am satisfied that every member of this House—and there are many of them—who have come to my office and consulted me about mining matters, will remember that the course I have adopted on every occasion has been to refer them to the regulations, or to the clerk of the department who had charge of that work.

Now, Sir, I have taken the trouble upon this particular point to procure from the chief clerk of the Mining Branch a statement which I will lay upon the Table of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This gentleman is not an officer appointed by me; although I do not know that he would be any the worse if he were, but he is not. He was appointed by the late Government, and he is an excellent, praiseworthy and competent officer, so far as I am aware, and I have had a very large amount of business in connection with that branch, which has brought me closely in contact with him. I took the statements of which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had made, sent them to Mr. Ryley, and asked him what he had to say in regard to them, because if there were any partiality or favouritism in connection with the transaction it would be the clerks of the department who are guilty and not me. This is the reply which Mr. Ryley made:

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, June 28th, 1899.

Memorandum.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, in the course of his speech, stated that the Hon. Clifford Sifton had been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories.

With reference to this assertion, I may say that favouritism and partiality in connection with the leasing for dredging purposes of portions of rivers and creeks in the Yukon territory could not have been shown without my knowledge, as all applications passed through my hands and were dealt with personally by me. So soon as regulations for the disposal of leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of rivers were promulgated, I personally asked the Minister of the Interior whether he desired that each application should be submitted to him for his instructions. In reply he instructed me that all the applications should be dealt with strictly in accordance with the provisions of the regulations in that behalf, and according to their priority of date of filing in the department, and that none of the applications need be submitted to him. These instructions were fully carried out, and the first applicant, irrespective of who he was, obtained a lease of the stretch of river applied for, provided he paid the rental within a given period. I may add that the Minister never saw the list of the applications filed in the department until I handed him the return for Parliament, which has been numbered 83.

Sir Charles further stated that it appeared by the return 83 that the following parties applied for and obtained leases of good placer mining or gold dredging areas in the Yukon district:—

I want to say here, Mr. Speaker, that it would be just as reasonable to suppose that the Minister of the Ontario Government who has charge of the registry offices in that province knew who were the registered owners of land in a remote county of Ontario; as to suppose me to have a personal knowledge of the persons who have mining connections through my department; quite as reasonable. There must be thousands of leases. I brought down a return here at the beginning of the session of Parliament, which, I think, embraced eight or ten thousand names, and it takes a whole staff of clerks to handle it, and the very idea of a Minister having any personal knowledge of them is simply absurd on its face. Mr. Ryley goes on to say:

1. "A. E. Philp, said to be of Brandon, for a lease on Bonanza Creek." Mr. Philp applied for a lease of a portion of this creek, but it was not granted, as will be seen by referring to page 4 of the said return.

2. "A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on South Fork of Stewart River." Mr. Philp was in Ottawa at the time the application was made. No lease was issued in favour of Mr. Philp, as will be seen by referring to page 10 of the said return.

3. "G. Philp, said to be of London, for lease on Big Salmon." No lease was issued in favour to Mr. G. Philp, as will be seen by referring to page 16 of the said return.

The hon. gentleman seems to have neglected to refer to the return—

4. "A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Dominion River or Creek." Mr. Philp did not receive a lease, as will be seen by referring to page 17 of the return.

5. "J. A. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Teslin River or Creek." This should be "F. A. Philp," who applied for a lease on Teslin River, but no lease was issued, as will be seen by referring to page 18 of the said return.

6. "A. D. Cameron, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Stewart River or Creek." No lease was issued in favour of Mr. Cameron, as will be seen by referring to page 17 of the said return.

7. "That by the said return it further appears that W. J. Lindsay, said to be of Ottawa, P. C. Mitchell, said to be of Brandon, and W. L. Parish, said to be of Ottawa, applied for dredging leases in the Yukon, whereas these gentlemen were residents of Brandon who first learned of these applications by a letter from A. E. Philp, aforesaid, advising them that these leases had been granted in their names and inclosing a power of attorney from each of them in favour of said Philp to enable him to dispose of them." The name of Mr. W. J. Lindsay appears on page 4 of the return as an applicant for a lease of a portion of Stewart River, but no lease was issued in his favour.

Mr. P. C. Mitchell obtained a lease, as will be seen by referring to page 4 of the return.

Mr. W. L. Parish received a lease of 10 miles of the Hcotalinqua, which will be seen by referring to page 3 of the return.

Sir Charles further stated "that in the list contained in the said return are the names and addresses of the following, purporting to be applicants for dredging leases:—Frank Burnett, Vancouver; F. Burnett, Colborne; J. G. Burnett, Edmonton; F. Burnett, Colborne; F. Burnett, Brandon; whereas Frank Burnett was never in Colborne in his life, but said Philp comes from that place.”

It appears that Mr. Philp was acting as Mr. Burnett's attorney.

The applications from Mr. Burnett headed Colborne were forwarded to this department by Mr. Philp when he was on a visit to that place, and as the letters were headed “Colborne,” the return gave that place as his address.

That seems to be a very natural and ordinary transaction. There does not seem to be any reason why that should be made the subject of a motion in Parliament.

The applications referred to appear on pages 4, 5, 10 and 14. J. G. Burnett lives at Edmonton, and his application was not filed in this department by Mr. Philp.

(Sgd.) G. U. RYLEY,

Chief Clerk, Timber and Mines Branch.

Now, I have given the statement of a man who has something to lose. This gentleman is a permanent officer of the department. His career for life would be ruined, absolutely ruined, if a word of that statement could be shown to be false. And that statement, let the House understand, is not volunteered by Mr. Ryley at all. It is a statement which I asked him to make, which as head of this department I required him to make. I am charged by a gentleman on the floor of this House with partiality in connection with a certain branch. I send the applications which came in in connection with that work to this gentleman, who is the head of that branch. I want to know whether any one under him has been guilty of favouritism, and I demand that he shall make a report to me for presentation to Parliament in connection with that matter, and this is that report. The hon. gentleman will not, I think, take much comfort out of that portion of his resolution. Neither do I think the hon. gentleman himself will now conclude that it is necessary to have that assertion referred to a commission of judges to decide.

What further does he do? I said that I could respect a manly opponent, and I can. I have been in quite a few political contests, some of a rather warm character, and I have never respected a man any the less because he has been a good fighter. But I can see no object whatever in a gentleman insinuating what he cannot prove, making statements which are calculated to leave on the minds of persons who read them, an impression that is not justified by those statements. It is easy, as the hon. gentleman knows, as any lawyer knows, to draw a statement which the casual reader will think is an assertion which is no assertion. Let me give the hon. gentleman a sample of that. The hon. gentleman says, in his resolution, on page 6036 of “Hansard”:

Mr. SIFTON.

That the said Philp, hereinbefore a partner of the said Minister, represented in writing that he was engaged in a dredging venture in the Yukon, and in endeavouring to induce another to join him, represented in writing that Mr. Sifton, the said Minister, and Major Walsh, were also interested with him, but their names could not appear as he wrote “for obvious reasons.”

Now, what is the statement here? Is the statement that I was interested in that venture? Does the hon. gentleman take the responsibility of charging me with being interested in that transaction? No, he does not do anything of the kind. He is afraid to do it; he dare not do it. Let the hon. gentleman make that charge, and it will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in fifteen minutes. But he wants to refer to a commission of judges—what? The question of whether or not another man said I was interested. And when we get before the commission of judges, and I say: “I am here to be tried, I am charged with an offence,” the hon. gentleman says: “Oh, no; I did not charge you with an offence, all I have got to prove is that this man said so.” Now, Sir, I want the hon. gentleman. I want his friends, to consider for a few minutes whether they think this is the kind of proceeding that the Parliament of Canada ought to be treated with. I told the hon. gentleman what I would do. He said in grandiloquent language that he would read the challenge I made, and that he would take it up. He did not read the challenge and he did not take it up—neither the one nor the other. What did he do? He read part of the challenge. He left out the part that gave the point to it. On page 6022 of “Hansard” the hon. gentleman refers to the remarks I made on the Address. I closed my remarks by saying this—and hon. gentlemen who were in the House will remember it:

I ought not to sit down without referring to the fact that throughout the speech of the hon. gentleman there has been a continuous trend of suggestions that there was some improper or corrupt connection between myself or some members of the Government with the Klondike district. I want to say that I challenge the hon. gentleman, the leader of the Opposition, I challenge the members of his party in this House, I challenge the members of his party outside this House, I challenge the press of his party, to produce their private detectives, to come here upon their responsibility and press their charge. I challenge the member for Pictou or any man in this House, to lay upon the Table of the House the charges he has to make, and declare his ability to substantiate them by evidence, and he will get his investigation, and I will be able to convince the hon. gentleman who makes that charge that discretion on his part would have been the better part of valour.

Now, Sir, what does the hon. gentleman do? He starts to read my challenge. My challenge was in reference to the charge of personal dishonesty or corruption. I challenged him to make such a charge. He said he would take up the challenge. I leave the House to say whether he has taken it up or not. There is not the shadow of a charge of personal corruption in the resolution he has moved; and I think that this Government, so far as a question of personal wrongdoing is concerned, needs no better vindication than the fact that the hon. gentleman, after six long months, has been compelled to place on the Table of this House a resolution which is carefully drawn to avoid in the slightest degree any responsibility for the statement that any member of this House has been corrupt or dishonest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the personal matters in relation to this motion may be considered as disposed of; and when the hon. gentleman gets ready to take up my challenge and to make any personal charge against me, he will not require to make a nine hours' speech to get an investigation. He will just require long enough to read his charge and it will be followed by a motion for an investigation. But it will have to be a charge. It will have to be something different from what he has given here. It will not do for the hon. gentleman to write out a statement that somebody else said something about me. He will have to make a charge; he will have to make a definite and positive statement.

I desire to deal somewhat briefly—and I can relieve the anxiety of the House by saying that my remarks are not to be very much extended—with the general question of whether we have been guilty of neglect or delay in connection with the administration of this district. I dealt with that question fully in the debate on the Address, and I think I then succeeded in convincing the House that the charge laid at our door was not justified by the facts, but wholly unwarranted. I want no better evidence that the House was fairly well convinced of the justice of my position in connection with this matter than the fact that throughout the continuance of all that debate, as it went on, after the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), who held the hon. member's brief in his absence, was through, practically the whole case was abandoned by our hon. friends opposite. Certainly, no attempt was made to controvert the position I had taken in connection with the general course of our administration in that district.

Let me briefly put before the House the proceedings that I took. The hon. gentleman went at such length into the details that the House might well be excused for being confused by his lengthy address. If I have any fault to find in connection with this discussion by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is this, that they persisted in discussing this matter as though the administration of the Klondike district had been undertaken under the most usual and ordinary circumstances, in which the same rules could be applied and everything done as though that district were only a few yards away. But we cannot deal with it in that way. I have already pointed out that my attention was first called to the necessities of that district in March, 1897. I was sworn into office in November, 1896, and it was not until after the 1st January that I had practically got down to work. In March of that year, my attention was called to the necessities of the Klondike district. Immediately I took the question up, and decided that some officers of the Government had to be sent there. My hon. friend harps upon the fact that no appointment was made until the 21st May. If he had been studying the Yukon affairs for five or six months now, as he has been pretty steadily, he ought to know that the 21st May would be about the earliest date any of our officers could be despatched, because only then would the rivers be open and people able to get in. We despatched these gentlemen just as soon as it was possible for them to get in. They were sent at the time which the Surveyor General, with all his knowledge of that country, considered the earliest time practicable to send them. No political appointments were made, but the officers of the department were sent, men well recommended for that purpose. When the excitement took place later on, special measures were resorted to. Major Walsh and his officers were appointed, and everybody knows that at the time Major Walsh was appointed, it was a matter of general remark that we had made the very best possible selection for the position. The Government were generally complimented for having selected the man generally regarded as the best qualified to fill the position. I showed before, in discussing the matter, that the men sent out for the purpose of assisting Major Walsh in his administration had been selected on account of their special aptitude and ability for the work, and I explained in detail every particular appointment, and showed conclusively, I think, that every appointment was made carefully, under circumstances which fully justified it. There were difficulties and delays. These difficulties and delays were inseparable from the circumstances of the case. I need not detail all the mishaps and difficulties that took place in our dealings with that far-distant district, from which it was almost impossible to get information, and regarding which calculations turned out differently from what we expected, and all that sort of thing, but every possible effort was made to overtake the work that had to be done. Then, in the last session of Parliament, only a few months after Major Walsh and his party had been sent out, and before they got into Dawson City, I had an Act passed for the purpose of constituting the government of the district. A few days after the beginning of the session, that Act was assented to, and a few days later Mr. Ogilvie was here, his appointment as commissioner was recommended, his staff was selected, and he was instructed to go to Dawson City and take charge of its administration. I cannot understand how it could have been possible for the Government to have acted any more promptly than we did. I even cabled Mr. Ogilvie to return at once from England in order that he might not be delayed in going to the Yukon district. He did not get away until about the 4th August, and he was appointed on the 4th July. Himself and his officers took a certain amount of time in making preparations. Special things they required at the last minute, which they could not get without delay, which nobody could have known they wanted but themselves, and which were required in connection with the various matters expected to arise. Mr. Ogilvie and his party went forward as fast as possible and took charge of the administration, and there has not been the scintilla of a suggestion that since they took charge of the administration of Dawson City in September of last year—having gone up as rapidly as possible after the Act of Parliament was passed—the government of that district has not been properly and rightly carried on. What, then, in the name of common sense, is all this hullabaloo about? That is a question which must occur to every hon. member of this House. When you come to think of it, all these suggestions for a commission, for an inquiry, for an investigation—they refer to what? Why, to that little period of time between the 20th of June last year, when Major Walsh got in there, and the time Major Walsh came out, towards the fall. That particular little period of time is the period to which these charges and insinuations refer, and in regard to which it is demanded that this investigation shall take place. Of course, it is intended that the investigation shall cover everything and be for all time, but there is not the slightest shadow of what any reasonable man could accept as a reason for coming to the conclusion that anything which has taken place since Mr. Ogilvie took charge is the subject of criticism demanding an inquiry. The hon. gentleman himself said yesterday, whatever his opinion may be worth—and I do not know that it adds anything to Mr. Ogilvie's reputation—that Mr. Ogilvie was an honest man. He even admitted that Mr. Senkler was an honest man. I think that these gentleman would enjoy the reputation of being honest men even if the hon. gentleman thought differently. They are honest men, and well known to be of irreproachable character, particularly Mr. Ogilvie, who is recognized by the people in general as an honest and incorruptible public servant. He is in charge of and responsible for the administration of that district. Mr. Senkler, a son of Judge Senkler, whose father is one of the most respectable and honourable gentlemen in Ontario, whose reputation has come to him by heredity, if I may say so, was appointed Gold Commissioner. He is a man whose reputation is without spot or blemish. He is in charge of the entire business of recording gold claims in that district; and there is not a suggestion that all he does is not correctly, and regularly, and righteously carried on. So, Mr. Speaker, what we are called upon to issue this commission to investigate is the question, whether something wrong was or was not done during the few months last summer, before Mr. Ogilvie took charge of the government. Let it be well understood that there is no impeachment of the government in that district, as it exists at the present time; it is in regard to what took place a year ago, at a time when, under the peculiar circumstances existing, it was, humanly speaking, impossible to have a regular administration of the government.

Now, what is our position in regard to these charges? These statements were first made in definite form by the miners' committee. It has been stated in this House that we wasted months after that complaint before we took the proper means to have the investigation proceeded with. It has been shown, in answer to that, that we did not take months, that we hardly took days. We received that petition, and acted upon it, and I think that, within a week of the time we received it, the commission was issued and despatched to Vancouver, and by a special messenger, and directions were given to forward it to Dawson City. It would have been impossible for the Government to act more promptly than it did.

Complaint is made that the commission should not have been issued to Mr. Ogilvie, because Mr. Ogilvie, it appears, is unfortunate enough to be related to me. Before I deal with that phase of the question, or with Mr. Ogilvie's fitness for the work, or his actions in carrying on the investigation, let me point out this to the House—that, when we issued that commission in the fall of last year, we practically had before us everything that we have now. The labours of this hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in searching from one end of the country to the other, from Dawson City to Halifax, for the purpose of getting evidence to impeach the officers of the Yukon district, have substantially failed to bring out a single thing which was not charged by the miners' memorial, received by us last fall. I took the trouble to go through the printed report of what the hon. gentleman was pleased to style his evidence yesterday, and the evidence which, with such a flourish of trumpets, he had placed upon "Hansard," is nothing but a rehash of the same things charged last fall in the newspapers, the same things which he charged here on the Address, the same things which, when sufficiently specific to be dealt with, were promptly refuted and shown to be untrue. Therefore, I say, what we have before us at this moment is practically what we had before us when the commission was issued, is practically what Mr. Ogilvie was charged by the commission to investigate. I do not think there is a single thing which the hon. gentleman has referred to, in connection with the officers of the Yukon district, as being improper or corrupt, which was not covered by the commission issued to Mr. Ogilvie. Now, I desire to make that point clear, for it is a point that would be likely to be obscured by the hon. gentleman's much speaking. He speaks for several hours at a time; and if members of the House are called out from time to time, while he is speaking, they may naturally suppose that in their absence he has brought forward something new. I can assure hon. gentlemen that, so far as I have been able to examine—I am speaking generally—substantially the charges which the hon. gentleman has made are the charges which the miners' committee made, and which they could have established under the commission issued to them, if they had felt disposed and had had the evidence at their command.

Now, the miners' committee say that they are not properly met by the Prime Minister in issuing the commission, because the commission was limited to receiving proof of facts alleged to exist prior to the 25th of August. When that is stated, it leaves upon the mind an impression that there is something in it; it leaves upon the mind the impression that the commission should not have been limited, but unlimited, as to time. But just consider the matter for a moment. The miners' committee were in Dawson City during the whole period when this alleged corruption took place. There were 25,000 people around them. According to the hon. gentleman and his friends, these people were all being defrauded every day, every hour, by officials of the Government. This was going on, according to these gentlemen, all summer, from the time Major Walsh got in until he left; and, so bad did it become, that this miners' committee, on the 25th of August, forwarded to the Government a memorial, asking for an investigation. An investigation of what? An investigation of what had not happened? An investigation of what was going to happen? One would imagine that they were asking for an investigation of what had happened. And, if these gentlemen did not know of a single fact to substantiate the charges which they made in their petition, charges referring to what had happened before the 25th of August, their statement was false, and they were falsely charging the officials, without facts to back their statements. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if I ever heard of a more barefaced attempt to get out of a difficult position than that of which the gentlemen composing this miners' committee have been guilty. They sent down the most unqualified charges—vague and general, it is true, but most unqualified in their character—in regard to the officials of the district. They signed the statement, and dated it the 25th of August. And, when the commission goes up there, they say: We have no facts of what existed before the 25th of August; our statement was false. But we consider that you are treating us in an outrageous way, because you have not sent a commission to investigate something that might happen after we petitioned you. I do not think I ever heard of a more ridiculous or barefaced attempt to get away from a position already taken; I cannot conceive of a more complete admission on the part of the committee that they had not the first fact upon which to base the charges that they made against our officers.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that before a popular assembly, before gentlemen who may not take the trouble to follow everything in connection with a technical matter of that kind, a man might get away with such a proposition. But, Sir, I think I see my hon. friend going before a judge with such a proposition as that. I think I see a man coming up, a criminal lawyer, a Crown prosecutor, coming up before a court and making a proposition of that kind, that he could not prove the indictment, or that he could prove something that happened after the indictment was drawn against the prisoner. That is precisely the position the gentlemen who composed that committee have taken, and that is the position which this hon. gentleman says is the right position, and which he endorses on the floor of this House. Now, I am not prejudging the matter in any shape or form, I am not taking the position of deciding at this moment whether these officials were corrupt or not; I am simply pointing out that our officials in that district have got the benefit of the most complete possible admission on the part of the gentlemen who charged them with corruption, that they had no facts whatever on which to base it.

Now, it is said that we should not have sent the commission to Mr. Ogilvie because Mr. Ogilvie was related to me by marriage. Mr. Ogilvie is a man whom I never saw until I became a member of this Government. I never saw Mr. Ogilvie in my life until he came back from the Yukon district, a year after I became a member of the Government. I met him in a hotel at Vancouver when I was on my way to Skagway, and I had to be introduced to him by a gentleman who knew us both. It is true that Mr. Ogilvie married Mrs. Sifton's aunt; I never saw the aunt. But these genealogical facts are sufficient, it seems, to blast for ever the reputation of Mr. Ogilvie. Now, let us for a moment be serious in dealing with this question. The hon. member for Pictou is very serious. The hon. member for Pictou, as might be expected from a member of the distinguished family to which he belongs, is filled with holy zeal for the purity of the public service, and he is very serious upon this question. Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Ogilvie was brought into the public service and kept in the public service by hon. gentlemen opposite, for long years remained there, and earned an honourable and distinguished reputation in the Dominion of Canada as a public servant. He earned that reputation by his own efforts, he had no assistance from the hon. gentlemen. They did not do anything for him except to pigeon-hole his reports, and keep them from the knowledge of the public. He is under no compliment to them. He attained such a reputation that when he was appointed to the position of Commissioner of the Yukon district, it was the universal opinion of the people of Canada that he was the best possible man, the most honest, reliable and incorruptible man, that could be selected for that purpose. Everybody had the same opinion, Liberal and Conservative, the "Mail" as well as the "Globe," and that was the position that was taken all the way through. It was admitted that he was a fit man to take charge of the great interests of this country in the Klondike district, to exercise the great power and authority that are conferred on a gentleman who occupies the position of commissioner of the Government in that district. Now, if he was fit for that great and responsible position—and mind you, Mr. Speaker, a man in that position has greater discretionary power than any member of this Government, he has more individual power given to him, and necessarily so. He is not constantly subjected to the advice and to the control which comes from a council the members of which are mutually responsible to each other. He must be given a large amount of arbitrary authority, he is a man who is given tremendous authority, and necessarily so. Now, he was reputed to be fit for that position when he was appointed. When did he become unreliable? When did he become incompetent? That is a question which is pertinent to the issue. If he was fit for that great and important position then surely he was fit to find out whether the officials of the district, the subordinate officers were properly acting in the discharge of their duties. I cannot conceive of any man who would be better fitted for that position; I think he would be very much better fitted to take charge of such an inquiry as he has conducted than any judge who knew nothing about the people, who knew nothing about mining claims, who knew nothing practically about the Gold Commissioner's office, and who would inevitably be puzzled to death in order to form any conclusion whatever in regard to matters that came before him. Every practical man in this House will agree that it is not necessary a man should be a lawyer, or that he should be a judge in order to form a common-sense opinion about matters in that country.

Well, we appointed Mr. Ogilvie. I am not going to defend Mr. Ogilvie's reputation; Mr. Ogilvie's reputation stands alone, it does not need any defence. We sent a commission to him authorizing him to look into these matters, and so far as we are able to understand from the papers that are before us, he has looked into them as thoroughly and as carefully as it is possible for him to do. He has not shown any disposition whatever to shut out evidence. The hon. gentleman who makes this motion said that it was placing Mr. Ogilvie in a very awkward position. Why? Because, forsooth, the investigation might reflect on me and might cause me to resign. The hon. gentleman did not explain how. I cannot understand why, if an officer whom he appointed and sent out to the Yukon district, proves faithless to his trust, that is any reason for the Minister resigning. The hon. gentleman seems to think so; he said so. He said that if Mr. Ogilvie found—and this is the gravamen of the charge of appointing Mr. Ogilvie—that Mr. Ogilvie who, having married my wife's aunt several years ago, must be very friendly to me and be very much concerned about my political future, and if he found out anything that was likely to injure me, he would have no regard whatever for his oath of office, or for his duty as commissioner, but he would at once burk that evidence and prevent it from coming out. That is the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. And to give point to that he says that there was danger that something was coming out which might affect my political future and force me to resign.

Then he goes on to say that if it was proven that these officials were corrupt, then the Minister of the Interior, if he had any respect for himself at all, would proceed to resign. Well, I do not think so; I do not think that is the constitutional law, or the constitutional practice. But I will give the hon. gentleman an authority on the subject. I do not believe many members of the House will accept it as an important authority, but I believe the hon. gentleman himself will; it is the authority of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, which he will find on page 3035 of the "Hansard," of 1895. It was in connection with the Government's Curran bridge. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) will remember it. But he did not resign when that $200,000 was stolen down at Montreal. Now, what does the hon. gentleman say? He says that if the officials of the Minister of the Interior were found to be dishonest, if I appointed three or four men and sent them to the Yukon district and they turned out after they got there to be a little too human, and unable to withstand the temptation offered by the gold fields, it would be my duty to resign.

Now, what did the Minister do in a similar case where a couple of hundred thousand dollars were stolen, not in the Yukon district where communication was impossible, where I could not tell what was going on, where I had not any check upon the men, and had not any means in the world of knowing what they were doing or how they were conducting their business, but down in Montreal, right under the noses of the members of the Government?

This is what the hon. gentleman says, the present hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and the present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), having taken part in the debate:

Take the criticism of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and the evidence given by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), in regard to those details. What do they relate to? They relate to fraud, to trickery, to deception, to stuffed pay-lists, to all kinds of false pretenses; and if the case stood there, that the Government, knowing of that, had done nothing, the case would be grave indeed against this Government or any Government. But what information, I ask again, has any hon. gentleman in this House on which to base a case against the Government? Do they pretend that they make one solitary elector in any part of Canada believe that under a Liberal Government, or under a Conservative Government, under the present Government of thirteen or fifteen men, you could guarantee the people of this country against fraud and iniquity on the part of men employed by the Government? * * *

And, if the Government were to fall on that ground, if the Minister were to lose his standing—

Not even his position, but his standing.

—on that ground, what would be the position of Minister after Minister in the Imperial Government? How about the Ministers who are responsible for the construction of ships that, after having been built, are almost as speedily condemned? How about the Ministers responsible for supplying the army with bayonets that will not stand the slightest use? How about Ministers whose departments have been investigated time and time again in reference to other matters, and who have sheltered themselves, and sheltered themselves properly, behind the advice of experts?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just desire to say a word or two upon that point to show that the attack which the hon. gentleman makes upon the character of Mr. Ogilvie as a commissioner is perfectly absurd, and that nobody knows that it is absurd better than he does himself. Mr. Ogilvie had authority to investigate all things which occurred in regard to those matters up to the 25th of August, 1898. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the charge of the miners' committee was made on the 25th of August, and if it were true, if it were believed to be true, if it were supposed to be true, it referred to matters which had happened before the 25th of August. The letter which the hon. gentleman quoted last night as being written by Frederick Palmer, referred to matters that had happened before the 25th of August. The diatribes that appeared in the press throughout Canada, in one form or another, were all in regard to matters that happened before the 25th of August, and the hon. gentleman has practically added nothing new to the indictments, so that Mr. Ogilvie had authority substantially to investigate every charge that we knew of as having been made, or that we know of now, against our officers in that country. I do not say that, perhaps, some of the men who have made statements, might not have been referring to something that happened between 25th of August and some time in September, when Mr. Ogilvie got there, but there is no specification of a fact which we can get at. Mr. Ogilvie has held his investigation and his report is here partially. He has sent in his report as to the matters which he had, up to that time, investigated, and which he had received evidence upon. We have had this report before us for a few days. It was copied at once and sent to the printer. We have had it only a couple of days, because it could not be satisfactorily examined until it was printed. I would ask every hon. member of this House to read that report and the evidence, and I venture to say that there is not a fair-minded man upon either side of this House who will not say that Mr. Ogilvie has fairly and honestly tried to discharge his duty, who will not say that he has manifested, all the way through, a desire to get at the facts and disclose the facts as far as possible. Did he try to shut out evidence? Did he try to bully witnesses and keep them from bringing in evidence? Did he discourage charges? Mr. Ogilvie begged and implored the public to come in and make charges against the officials. They came in; they came in by committee and by counsel, and they came in themselves personally. However, they came, in whatever guise, or whatever kind of a charge they were desirous of making, Mr. Ogilvie was ready and willing to hear them and to hear them to the fullest possible extent. The evidence that was taken by that commission will make a lawyer laugh. If the hon. gentleman had a commission of judges, do you suppose that men would be allowed to give evidence such as was given there? I do not mean that the judges would not ask leading questions; I do not mean that the judges would not pursue an inquisitorial policy; not at all, but evidence is given there, statements are made there that no commission, inquisitorial or otherwise, would ever have allowed to be printed as part of the evidence—statements of the merest hearsay, street corner talk are put in there, and men are allowed to make their statements almost in any way that they see fit. Mr. Ogilvie was determined that the investigation would be thorough, and he was not going to allow any lawyer to dictate to him in regard to technicalities or the rules of evidence. We have the evidence before us, although the commission is not yet completed, and we have not the complete report. There were three or four gentlemen connected with the service, whose actions had been called in question, who were not present and who, therefore, could not be tried when the evidence, which we have, was taken and sent down. Mr. Wade, Mr. McGregor, Mr. Norwood, and, I think, another man by the name of Bliss, although, whether there was any charge made against him or not I am not sure, went back into that country in winter, over the ice, but they did not get in there until the evidence which we have was sent out. A telegraphic report, that I have seen in the press, states that these four men went before the commission, that charges were made against some of them, that Mr. Ogilvie had completely exonerated the whole of them, that, particularly, Mr. Ogilvie had investigated the water front transaction, which the hon. gentleman referred to, at such length yesterday, and the day before, and that he found that there was nothing corrupt or improper in connection with it. But I am not in a position to say that this is absolutely so. It is a newspaper report, and there may be some delay in connection with the official report, as they have to copy the evidence and get the report ready, but I presume—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Where is that evidence?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not received it yet. It has not reached here yet, but I expect that it will reach here in a few days. The information which we have, which comes from outside sources, is to the effect that the investigation of the charges against these gentlemen, made before the commission, has resulted in the entire exoneration of all of them.

I wish to say to the House what the position of the Government, in connection with these charges, is. The position is this: So soon as charges were made against our officers, we sent a commission to Mr. Ogilvie—the only man who was in a position to investigate them, because at that time we could not have sent a judge in over the ice—to make an examination. We had complete confidence in Mr. Ogilvie's integrity and in his desire to make a thorough and complete investigation. He has made an investigation; we have not yet received his full report; but what we say in regard to it is, that when we get the remainder of Mr. Ogilvie's report, we will give this whole subject, and the evidence that is contained in it, our fullest and most careful consideration. We will give every fact, every alleged fact, that is brought before the Government and brought before Parliament, our fullest and most careful consideration. And if there is the least ground for finding that there should be any further or more complete investigation, we will provide that that further and more complete investigation shall take place. But in order that there shall be a complete and full investigation, we do not deem it desirable and we do not deem it proper that the question of the administration of this Government, the political responsibility of this Government, shall be taken from the House of Commons of Canada and sent to a commission of judges to try. Sir, that is the position which the Government takes in regard to this inquiry.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I may be pardoned, Mr. Speaker—while not prejudging the case at all—I may be pardoned for referring to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is surely very reckless, when in the most unguarded and most unqualified language, he charges Mr. Wade with corruption in the transaction regarding the water front. When the report—not the official report—but the report in the press which the hon. gentleman no doubt is familiar with—is that this matter has now been investigated by Mr. Ogilvie, that everybody connected with the transaction has been put on oath, and that everybody connected with the transaction has sworn there was no corruption and no impropriety in connection with the matter; surely it would be sufficient, under those circumstances, for the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to make a much milder statement in regard to his belief respecting that transaction, and surely it would be sufficient for him to wait until the official report gets here in order that we may know whether there is any foundation for the idea that a further investigation ought to be held.

I shall refer for one moment to a transaction which the hon. gentleman spoke about. I am not going to analyse the evidence taken before Mr. Ogilvie, but I shall say here, that you can take a book of evidence of that kind and by taking little extracts from it here and there, you can make it look like almost anything. Every lawyer knows that. In order for any one to have an intelligent idea as to what is proved and what is not proved before that commission, it would be necessary for him to sit down and study that book, and I venture to say that no man in this House or out of it is competent to decide that, and to arrive at a definite and reasonable conclusion, without spending at least one solid week in comparing the various portions of the evidence with each other. It happens here and there that a witness makes a seeming misstatement. For instance, Mr. Fawcett made a statement in one place that a certain woman, Mrs. Koch, did not get a claim, while Mr. Fawcett in another place says she did get a claim. The explanation is, that when he was asked at first, he answered off-hand, according to his memory, but when he looked up the records afterwards, he found it necessary to correct his evidence. If you take one part of that evidence you would say that such and such was proved, and if you take another part you would say that such and such another thing was proved. You cannot come to any proper conclusion in regard to evidence of that kind, except by a thorough sifting and comparison of the whole evidence, and that would take any member of this House fully a week, and then he would not be sure that he had fully appreciated all the points in connection with it. I looked specially into one particular case which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) referred to at some length, and he referred to it, I believe, for the purpose of showing that Major Walsh had been guilty of some impropriety in connection with that case. It was the case of Mrs. Koch, who appears to have had a permit to locate a claim on Dominion Creek. I examined the evidence in that case specially, and in my judgment as a lawyer, the evidence in that case simply proves that Mrs. Koch, who was a cook or a restaurant-keeper, was informed by or through a man named Ambrose Cyrette, who was an Indian servant to Major Walsh, that he had overheard Major Walsh speaking about permits being granted on Dominion Creek. This woman Koch thought she would like to get a permit and locate a claim on Dominion Creek. She got another woman to see Major Walsh. It does not appear, and it is not stated anywhere in the evidence what the other woman said to Major Walsh, or what Major Walsh said to the other woman, but the other woman came back and told Mrs. Koch that she had better go and see Mr. Fawcett and ask for the permit. The woman went to Mr. Fawcett, and there the evidence begins to conflict. The woman says in her evidence that she did not mention Major Walsh's name to Mr. Fawcett, but Mr. Fawcett says she did, or he thinks the woman did, mention Major Walsh's name. There is a dispute about that; but anyway the woman went there and got the permit from Mr. Fawcett. Fawcett made a mistake; there is no doubt about that. He did a foolish thing in giving a permit. The woman showed the permit to Major Walsh's brother, and Major Walsh's brother went upstairs to see him. What happens?—and this throws light on the whole thing. Major Walsh immediately after came downstairs, and according to the evidence of Mr. Fawcett, and according to the evidence of the woman, Mrs. Koch, he said: It is a mistake; it should not have been done; that permit should not have been issued. That shows conclusively that he never intended to authorize the permit to be issued, and that he was not a party to it in any way. There is nothing remarkable about that transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. She gave it up.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, she did not give it back.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the whole statement of the case?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Oh, no. Then Mrs. Koch went out and she located her claim. Major Walsh, when he said "it is a mistake," said to Fawcett something to the effect that the permit should be got back. The woman was permitted to go out, and Fawcett said afterwards, when he was asked about it, that he did not think she ever got a claim, but when he came to look it up, he found she had gone out and located her claim, filed her application, and that some time in August, long after the creek was open to everybody, this woman had got her claim. Here we have a thing which might have happened to the most honest officers in the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A similar transaction might happen in my office.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It might happen in the Prime Minister's office; it might happen anywhere.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not accept any imputation from the ironical "hear, hear," of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I say that when the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) desires to charge me with anything dishonourable he has got the Table of the House before him there, and he can lay his charge on the Table. After a careful examination of the evidence, I say that with regard to that transaction, there is nothing in the evidence that shows complicity or impropriety on the part of any one, not the least. Here is a woman who, like other people there, was trying to get ahead of every one else. They all knew about this Dominion Creek; they were all trying to get claims, and the Indian servant overheard Major Walsh talking about it; the news leaked out; this woman got the permit from Mr. Fawcett, and Mr. Fawcett admits he was wrong in giving it. But where is the suggestion of dishonesty? Is there a suggestion that Major Walsh profited by that claim being registered? Is there a suggestion that Mr. Fawcett profited by it? And if they did not, and if it is not suggested, where is the question of dishonesty? Here is simply a question of official information leaking out to a servant, and of a mistake being made by an officer such as might happen under any circumstances or at any time, by the most honest officer in the world. And, Mr. Speaker, after all the talk there has been about the maladministration of the Yukon, when it comes down to this: that it is a question of whether they can prove that a cook accidentally got information which enabled her to get a claim upon Dominion Creek; if that is all the hon. gentlemen opposite have to base their attack upon this Administration upon, the hon. gentlemen are entitled to all the comfort they can get out of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are after the cocks.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I want, Mr. Speaker, to refer for one moment to the desire of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) for the purity of the public service, and to the great responsibility which the hon. gentleman, almost with tears in his eyes—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR—was prepared to take in this House for the purpose of purifying the public service, which, it appears, will never be properly and honestly carried on, so long as it is not controlled by the Tupper family. Sir, the hon. gentleman is willing to risk his seat in this House. It is not a very valuable commodity at the present time. The hon. gentleman has abandoned his constituents. His constituents are in Pictou County, N.S. I believe he has left his constituency. Not before his party was almost wiped out of existence through the instrumentality of my hon. friend the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) and his friends in that province.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman, knowing that his political career in Nova Scotia had come to an end, has betaken himself to the Pacific coast, and he sits in this House without responsibility as a member of this House, because he has no constituents to whom he intends to return for their endorsement. The hon. gentleman's prospect for parliamentary honours in future depends upon the remote possibility of his finding a constituency that will be so misguided and so reckless as to elect him. That is what the hon. gentleman has to risk in this House at the present time; and the hon. gentleman, in his holy zeal, says: "I, with the fullest sense of responsibility, on account of the great good that will come to Canada, am prepared to risk my seat in this House and my chance of political preferment for all time to come." Well, Mr. Speaker, I have said that the seat is not a valuable commodity at the present time, and I doubt very much if the hon. gentleman's chance of political preferment is a very valuable commodity to wager, either. But the hon. gentleman, a political orphan, as he is at present, is willing to wager his seat, if he does what? If he fails to prove—that is his statement—every statement that is made in that resolution. Sir, I have choked down his throat several of them to-day. One of the statements which the hon. gentleman has risked his political reputation and his chance of political preferment, if he does not prove, was the statement that these Philips got the mining permits and mining leases which he recites in that resolution. Is he going to prove that? I really do not think it would be possible for a member of this House to make a more utter and complete exhibition of himself than the hon. gentleman has done.

Sir, I am not going to pass this over without reference to one or two other matters. My hon. friend the member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) is one of the oldest and most respected members of this House. I do not think there is a member on either side of this House—I hope there is not—who has any unkind feeling towards the hon. member for South Grey. At my hon. friend's request, I sent his son, in a subordinate capacity, with Mr. Fawcett's party, when they went to the Yukon. The young man is there now, and I am happy to say that he is doing no discredit to the hon. member at whose request he was sent. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), in his desire to throw discredit on somebody, to blacken somebody, to show that somebody was doing something which he ought not to do, made the statement that the Surveyor General had written a private and confidential letter to Mr. Fawcett. The letter will be found on page 206 of the printed evidence taken before Mr. Ogilvie. The hon. gentleman refers to this private and confidential letter, and he does so for the purpose of trying to create the impression that there is some illicit and improper connection between myself, and the Surveyor General, and the hon. member for South Grey. Nothing stops the hon. gentleman; he does not care whom he bespatters. Here is the Surveyor General, a man who has for years been in the public service, an honoured and trusted public servant, a man without a blemish on his reputation; and the hon. gentleman jumps up in this House, and, without a moment's hesitation, accuses him of doing the most improper and outrageous thing. There is nothing outrageous and nothing improper in what he did. What he did was a perfectly proper thing, and there is not a man of common sense in this House who will say anything else. Here is the Surveyor General, an old officer of the Government, writing to Mr. Fawcett, also an old officer of the Government. They have been in the Government service together for many years. The Surveyor General sends to Mr. Fawcett his official instructions; and one day, thinking that Mr. Fawcett is out there, exercising great responsibility, he sits down and writes him a private letter of advice. Is there anything improper in that? Is there any man in this House who would suggest that there was anything improper in it? Yet we have a lecture from the hon. gentleman, in which he suggests that Captain Deville had done a thing so improper that it would warrant his dismissal from office; and, in order to throw across the House a most contemptible imputation upon my hon. friend from South Grey, he says, at page 5963 of "Hansard":

Then, we have the combination of Landerkin and Landerkin, a member of this House, who has his son sent out there. I would say nothing about it except that in the very evidence that comes up before this commission there is a private and confidential note from one of the Minister of the Interior's officers, asking Mr. Fawcett to say a good word for Mr. Landerkin in his official report.

I say the hon. gentleman's statement is untrue. I say there is no such statement in Mr. Deville's letter. Things have come to a pretty pass in this House, Mr. Speaker, when an ex-Minister of Justice, reading from an official document, printed and in his hands, will not read it as it is written, for the purpose of casting an imputation upon an hon. member of this House. Now, this is what Mr. Deville says:

When you write to us, do not forget to put in a few words about Landerkin.

Nothing about an official report at all. It might have been taken to refer to an official report, but he does not say so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Go on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (reading):

I will communicate them to his father, and he will be pleased.

The hon. gentleman puts in the word "good"—why? For the purpose of creating the impression that I had led the Surveyor General to communicate with Mr. Fawcett, that he might say a good word, and puff Mr. Landerkin's son, when he was making his official report.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was a shame.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I want to call attention to the fact that when we find a gentleman who cannot or will not read an official document correctly, but who, upon the spur of the moment, for the purpose of saying nasty things across the floor and hurting the feelings of a member of this House, will misread and change the meaning of an official paper which he has in his hand, it does not seem to me that he is a gentleman whose services the Attorney General requires for the purpose of clearing up matters in the Yukon.

I want to call attention to a few of the things which this hon. gentleman wants to have referred to a commission of judges. I will only give a few, but they are fair illustrations of the hon. gentleman's judgment and discretion as to what it would be proper to bring before a commission of judges, clothed with these special powers and sent to the Yukon district for the special purpose of making this investigation. These are a number of things which the hon. gentleman wants investigated. He wants investigated the statement that I took an opinion from the Department of Justice in June, 1898, and that Major Walsh violated that opinion in the previous March. That is one thing the hon. gentleman wants to have investigated, namely, that I got an opinion from the Department of Justice in Ottawa, in June, 1898, and that Major Walsh violated the terms of that opinion in the Yukon district several months before. I do not care to bother or delay the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But the hon. gentleman apparently does not understand the meaning of the simplest thing connected with these transactions, and gravely puts into this motion a recital of the opinion which I obtained for a specific purpose. When the Yukon district was separated from the North-west Territories, there were certain liquor permits which had been granted by the North-west Territories Government. It was a question of law as to whether a permit granted by the Territorial Government, before the separation of the Yukon district, would be good, and authorize those holding them to take their goods into that district after the separation had taken place. I submitted the question to the Department of Justice, and that department advised me that the permits were good. Consequently, I acted accordingly. The hon. gentleman recites that opinion, and then he proceeds to attack Major Walsh for having done something contrary to that opinion three months before it is given. I cannot imagine incoherence or silliness going much further. Then we have—and I think this is the neatest thing in the whole resolution, and I will trespass upon the attention of the House by reading it—I think it is really the most logical and pointed thing there is in the whole resolution. I would ask the House to observe the date. The hon. gentleman to-day was at great pains to correct a number of dates in connection with his resolution, and inasmuch as he corrected them all with great care and did not alter this one, I apprehend that this particular date has been the subject of much consideration on his part. On page 6037 will be found the following paragraph in his motion:—

That in Dawson City, containing, at a moderate estimate, some 25,000 of a population, there was not, on the 1st April, 1899, a single road, bridge or drain—nothing that might be termed a public work in any form. In Dawson City there was neither pavement, roadway, drain or ditch, no water supply, nor lighting; and the matter of the disposal of refuse had, up to that date, been one of individual responsibility only.

This condition of affairs resulted in an epidemic of typhoid fever in 1896.

Mr. Speaker, typhoid germs must be very vigorous there, if they should cause an outbreak of typhoid fever before the place had any existence. And the truth of this allegation is to be referred to a commission of judges. And, as my hon. colleague, the Postmaster General, reminds me, the hon. gentleman has declared from his place in the House that if he does not prove it, he will forfeit his seat.

Then the hon. gentleman's resolution goes on and he devotes four pages—space is nothing to the hon. gentleman—to the statement that four years ago the late Government sent up twenty policemen and a surveyor to the Yukon district. What he wants to refer to the commission of judges, in addition to this charge about typhoid fever, are, the various acts of the Administration which have taken place from the time we were charged with it until the present; the legality of the various actions of the Government: the itinerary of the officers of the Government, and, so far as he has been able to get them into this resolution, the dates when each officer left each particular place, and if it should turn out that any one of our officers did not leave the place on the date the hon. gentleman said he did in this resolution, the hon. gentleman will have to resign his seat in Parliament, because he has pledged himself to prove all these charges.

Then he has this startling proposition that I recommend to the attention of the House. He is going to refer to this commission of judges the startling allegation that Mr. McGregor was a livery stable keeper; that Mr. Norwood was a non-certificated master of a whaling vessel; that unsanitary conditions prevailed in Dawson City, and that abuses were connected with the issuing of liquor permits—but no statement as to what these abuses were. And then he is going to have investigated whether Major Walsh did or did not send a report by each mail. Also, that Major Walsh allowed a woman named Lucille Elliott—the judges would appreciate the dignity of investigating this question; it would add to the dignity of the bench of Canada—to keep a cigar-stand and sell light drinks on Sunday, mixed, presumably, with stronger liquors, and carried on improper relations with this woman; that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—who is a much worse man than I—has been guilty of the most outrageous maladministration; that the Postmaster General was even worse; and that the correspondent of the London "Times," Miss Shaw, said there was a widely spread belief that official corruption existed—not that the belief was well-founded, but that she said there was such a belief. That is what the hon. gentleman asks this House, composed of men of common sense and judgment, to send to a commission of judges of Canada.

If we could get into the inner hearts of hon. gentlemen on the other side, I would like to know how many of them are not ashamed that they are in any way responsible for this resolution.

Then, Mr. Speaker, what is the explanation of all this? Is it possible that a gentleman who has been the legal adviser of the Crown in Canada does not know better than to put such a farrago of rubbish upon the Table of the House as he has done? Sir, I cannot conceive that even a gentleman who could not read a printed return correctly would not know better than that. I am driven to the conclusion that the only possible explanation of the hon. gentleman's conduct is this—and it is an explanation that is not creditable to him or to anybody who acts in his support—that he has framed that resolution so that it will have to be voted down, so that no self-respecting House of Commons would adopt it. Will any man from the other side of the House say that it would be a proper thing for this House of Commons to refer the question of administration to a commission of judges? Would any one of them in his sober senses say that it would be proper to refer to a special committee of judges such stuff as I have read from the hon. gentleman's resolution? But if that was not clear, the hon. gentleman has made it clear. Why? Because, not satisfied with what I have said, he has imported into this resolution an attack upon a judge of the Superior Court. Sir, the hon. gentleman is a lawyer, but there is no laymen in this House who could not tell him that you cannot bring the question of the conduct of a Superior Court judge before this House in that fashion. Every man in this House, lawyer or layman, knows that we have a constitutional method provided for attacking a judge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Will the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not so cowardly as is suggested by the efforts—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I rise to a point of order, and ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to withdraw the word "cowardly."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I said that the Minister of the Interior was not so cowardly as this interruption would indicate. I rise—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I ask the permission of the Minister of the Interior to correct him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of the Interior, very properly, proceeded to criticise a position which he assumes I took; and I know he would not be adverse to my correcting him in regard to Judge Dugas. I did not attack Judge Dugas as a judge of the Superior Court—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are these hon. gentlemen the judges? I did not attack—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I speak with the permission of the Minister of the Interior. I did not attack, nor does my resolution attack, the judge qua judge; I attack him as a member of the Executive Council, and also as Judge Dugas—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Let me finish. The position is this—that Judge Dugas as a member of the Executive Council—I may be right or I may be wrong—has no right to be interested in the mining interests of the Yukon which he is attempting to administer under an Act of Parliament. I also refer to the—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the Minister of the Interior object?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but his cowards do.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) to withdraw that expression.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was about to say that—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I heard an hon. member of this House characterize some hon. members as being cowards.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What do you think yourself, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I refer to an expression used by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Sir Charles Tupper).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I finish what I was—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman making a statement, but I do object to his making a speech.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I heard an hon. member characterize some hon. members of this House as being cowards. I would like him to withdraw that expression.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper)—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh! Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What do hon. gentlemen mean? The hon. member for Pictou asked permission of the Minister of the Interior to make an important statement touching a point which that hon. gentleman had raised. The hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) received permission to make that statement, and he said that the hon. Minister was not so cowardly as the hon. gentlemen behind him would make it appear. What I said was that others were.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I heard the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) say distinctly "those cowards," referring to some hon. members of this House.

Mr. BERGERON. He spoke of those outside the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the expression should be withdrawn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, do you wish me to say that I think it was a bold act on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to refuse to allow an explanation to be made? I said it was a cowardly act, and I repeat it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What I say is that it is not permitted to an hon. member of this House to characterize any hon. members as being cowards; and I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw. Chair.

An hon. MEMBER. Name him.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before you proceed, I would appeal to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), who is the veteran of this House. It would be most distasteful that we should have need to take the unusual proceeding of naming an hon. member. He is the oldest member of this House; and, for my part, I should not like to have to take harsh proceedings against him. But he knows very well that the expression he has used is not parliamentary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask the right hon. leader of the House and of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) what he expects me to say? All I said was that it was cowardly on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite—

An hon. MEMBER. That is not what you said.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I said was that it was cowardly on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to prevent a member making an explanation which was authorized by the gentleman who had the floor. That is the position I took. I cannot recall the word; I cannot recall the opinion that it was cowardly—I did not say cowardly on the part of any hon. gentleman in particular but on the part of gentlemen who were interrupting—to deny an opportunity for the making of an explanation that the Minister of the Interior had given the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) permission to make. What would the right hon. gentleman do in my place?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very sorry, but, as I said, I heard the hon. member very distinctly characterize members of this House in these words—"those cowards." I think the circumstances—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that you are mistaken in saying that I said "those cowards." But if I used those words, and you rule that it is necessary for me to withdraw the statement, I bow to the decision of the Chair.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not finished my statement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will confine himself to a statement, I have no objection.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish also to withdraw the feeling I had which was expressed by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). I did not use the language, but I felt just what he said. I want to finish the explanation I had to make. It was, that I did not, nor does my resolution, attack Judge Dugas as a judge of the Superior Court. I understand that he cannot be impeached—and I want the Minister of the Interior to understand my position on that—but, being a member of the Executive Council, he is subject to this sort of attack, as any other judge in the land would be who should accept a position outside of his ordinary judicial duties to carry out the ordinary laws of this country. That is my position in reference to him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite anticipated the statement which the hon. gentleman has made. Any person of ordinary intelligence, in reading the resolution which he has drawn, would know that that was the explanation he would give of it. But, by giving that explanation and by drawing the resolution in this way, he has shown that he does not understand what he is doing, and that he does not understand the position in which he is placing himself. The government of the Yukon territory is carried on under the Yukon Government Act, and under that Act the judge is, ex-officio, member of the Council, and part of his duty as judge is to be a member of that Council. More than that; does the hon. gentleman mean to assert that that rule in regard to an attack upon a judge is confined to his action in regard to official matters? There is no such rule. The rule is, that the character or conduct of a judge cannot be attacked at all in Parliament, except proper proceedings be taken to impeach him. There are authorities to that effect, but I am not going to bother the House at this time with reading them, because I am not going into a discussion of constitutional law. But the authorities are perfectly clear, and have been enforced in this House before now, that an attack upon the character of a judge cannot be entertained by the House, unless it is founded upon proper proceedings, and unless proper proceedings are taken for the purpose of enforcing it, and for the purpose of giving the judge a proper opportunity of defending himself. But we have here the hon. gentleman taking this judge, and pitchforking his case in amongst the rest, and not giving the judge the courtesy of a notice that his character is going to be attacked, or in respect of what it is going to be attacked. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well—there is nobody in this House of the least experience in public matters but knows perfectly well—that no self-respecting House of Commons, in view of our law and constitution, would think of passing a resolution which was a direct imputation and attack upon the character of a judge, when no proceedings were taken for impeachment. We all know that, we all know that the proposition is indisputable, and the hon. gentleman has violated it, and, if there were no other reasons than that reason alone, the hon. gentleman has put his resolution outside of the pale of the support of this House.

Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman does more than that. In the course of his speech, he goes out of his way to attack the judiciary. He says that Judge Maguire has been guilty of the most outrageous conduct. In respect of what? Because Judge Maguire offered counsel and advice to the Gold Commissioner in Dawson City. Judge Maguire has been judge of the North-west Territories, he is judge of the North-west Territories now, and any man who is acquainted with the proceedings of government in relation to that country, knows that for many years in the past the judges there did constantly offer counsel and advice to administrators of the government in various capacities. But it was counsel of an advisory, of a friendly character; it was not paid for; it was the advice which one high member of the administration, removed from the ordinary advantages of counsel and advice in other ways, would naturally give to another member of the administration of the district. And I can imagine nothing that would be more absurd than for Judge Maguire to wrap around himself his robes of office in Dawson City, and refuse to give counsel and advice to the officials of the Government who were in need of it, under circumstances of special emergency. I do not think that there is the slightest shadow of ground for suggesting that Judge Maguire was wrong in giving counsel and advice to the Gold Commissioner; I do not think that there is the slightest ground for the suggestion that he was wrong, when he went in and sat upon a case which has been brought before us, the case of Nelson vs. Donnelly. What was there wrong about it? There was a judge of the Superior Court, there was a complicated gold-mining case. The law gave the Gold Commissioner power to deal with and to decide that case. The Gold Commissioner felt himself incompetent to unravel the evidence and decide upon the case, and he asked the judge of the Superior Court to come and sit beside him to sift the evidence, and to give his opinion as to the case. Is there anything improper about that? Why, the hon. gentleman says, it is an outrage to bring a judge into a matter of this kind; but it is not an outrage to bring a commission of judges into a dispute between two political parties. The hon. gentleman has in terms advocated a principle in one place which he denounces as most outrageous when the same principle is applied, in a very much modified degree, in another place, and when it was necessary in order that justice might be done. So, I say the hon. gentleman has done in this case what he ought not to have done, what he has no liberty to do, what the principles of our constitution and parliamentary law do not authorize him to do—he has not hesitated to make an unwarranted and unfounded attack upon the judiciary of this country, at the same time that he is arguing that the only men who are competent to pass judgment upon the public affairs of this country, would be a commission of judges.

Now, Sir, I want to say a very few words only about Major Walsh. Major Walsh has been violently and bitterly attacked in connection with his acceptance of office, and with his conduct of affairs in the Yukon district. I have said already, in a previous debate upon this same subject, that I had known Major Walsh fifteen or sixteen years, that I had known him as an honourable man, as a man who had a high reputation in the public service, as a man who had courage, who had nerve, who had capacity, who had resource, and who had never failed in the discharge of his duty, so far as I knew. That was the reputation which he had, that was the estimation in which the people of Canada held him, when he was appointed to that position. He accepted the office under the very greatest pressure; he had no desire to go; he had a strong desire not to go, and it was only upon the greatest pressure by myself, when the urgent necessity of the case at that time caused me to think that an experienced officer, like him, would be of some service to the country—it was under those circumstances that he accepted. I want to say, in the presence of this House, that, with all the knowledge that I have derived from the affairs of government in that district, from the information which has come before me, to this minute I do not believe that Major Walsh did a single act in connection with the administration of that territory which he did not believe to be in the best interest of Canada, and for the purpose of loyally carrying out his commission. There has never been a man in Canada that had in so short a time the same power of being corrupt, and corrupt for his own advantage, as had Major Walsh. We sent him there with extraordinary power: we sent him there when hundreds of thousands of dollars were being handed around in the most reckless way and when large sums of money were being paid over on the most shadowy grounds for claims and various kinds of property. We sent him there to do what? We gave him power to modify mining regulations, power to remit the royalty, with practically an absolute control of the entire business of that country. And, Sir, we are asked in the Parliament of Canada, because this man's cook got a mining claim, to declare that he was corrupt. Did you ever hear such a proposition before put before a lot of sensible men? Here is a man who had absolute control of the mining operations by virtue of his power to modify the regulations; he had power to change the value of property, power to elevate the value of property, power to depress the value of property, power which would have enabled him to make hundreds of thousands of dollars without the least difficulty, if he had been corrupt. But we do not find to this minute one single reputable man in Canada that will stand up, or will put over his own statement the statement that J. M. Walsh in any respect violated his oath of office, or did anything that was corrupt or improper in connection with the transactions of government.

But, Sir, an Indian servant lets out some information, and a cook, by a mistake of the Gold Commissioner, gets a claim which, perhaps, she should not have got, and this is brought before us as a corrupt act, as an indictment of Major Walsh and of his administration of the Yukon. So far as the hon. gentleman's charges against his private character are concerned, I have nothing to say. I am not here to answer for Major Walsh's private character, or the private character of anybody else. I refuse to be drawn into a discussion of that kind. But I will say that I thank God that I stand here to defend a brave man, to prevent him from being unjustly traduced and his character taken away, rather than in the place of the hon. gentleman, who is trying to hound and follow him into private life.

We have had lectures from the hon. gentleman in regard to commissions of investigation that have been issued in the past. We heard a good deal of praise from the hon. gentleman about a commission issued by Sir John Macdonald. That great statesman, in the generosity of his heart and in the desire for purity of administration, issued a royal commission. What was it to investigate? It was to investigate the conduct of his political opponents. It was not to investigate the administration of his own officers. There had been a change of Government. Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and his Government went out of power, and Sir John Macdonald issued a commission to investigate the conduct of his predecessors in office, for the purpose of trying to fasten upon them some wrong-doing. This is the case which the hon. gentleman cites as a precedent, and as a reason for the issue of a commission of investigation. What did the hon. gentleman do, when their own conduct was called in question? The hon. gentleman has heard of the Curran bridge. He says that an officer of the Government should be detailed to investigate the Curran bridge matter, in which $200,000 was stolen.

Mr. HAGGART. Was it only $200,000 that was stolen?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Two or three hundred thousand dollars. Who was sent down to investigate? Whom did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) send down to investigate? He sent down the officers of his own department, the very men who were responsible, if anybody was, in connection with that charge.

Mr. HAGGART. May I be allowed to answer the question of the hon. gentleman as to how that matter was investigated? It was investigated by the courts, and investigated for two months before the Public Accounts Committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Afterwards.

Mr. HAGGART. It could not be before.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officers of the department were sent to investigate this matter, to get information, and to examine into it. That is what was done, and what is being done in this case? An officer of the Government is investigating the charges, the evidence will be laid before Parliament, and if any further investigation is required, that investigation will be held. What happens when we get a little further on? When we come to the North-west Territories, when it was a notorious fact that the Indian tribes of the North-west Territories were fed with rotten food, and whereby disease and starvation, driven into rebellion, when it was a notorious fact that the parasites and friends of the Government attempted to steal the homesteads of the half-breeds of the North-west on the banks of the Saskatchewan River, when these men were driven into rebellion—as peaceable a class of people as ever lived in any country—when this was done, what investigation was held? Did these hon. gentlemen think that the fair name of Canada required that an investigation should be held, and that judges should be sent up there to investigate? When, after scores of lives had been lost, when millions of dollars had been lost, when the men who were sent up to that country to put down the rebellion, had plundered and robbed the people, were there any judges sent up to investigate? Sir, the hon. gentleman has a short memory if he expects that his talk about the fair name of Canada is going to impose upon any hon. member of this House, or upon any person in this country or is going to make them believe that he has the slightest idea of anything except a virulent desire to injure a political opponent by the action he has taken? The fair name of Canada! I can tell the hon. gentleman what it is that involves the fair name of Canada. The fair name of Canada is involved in the character of her public men. The fair name of Canada does not depend upon whether a cook gets a mining claim that she ought not to get in Dawson City; it does not depend upon whether an Indian dog-driver takes a bribe in Dawson City; it depends upon the character of the public men of Canada, and the hon. gentleman's resolution is a certificate that, so far as he knows, there is nothing against the public men of Canada as they are represented on this side of the House at the present moment. What did the hon. gentleman think when he was a member of the Administration? Did he think that the fair name of Canada was suffering when a member of the Government was driven from the Government by virtue of the fact that personal bribery and corruption were charged against him? Did he think that any action would be required to protect the fair name of Canada when one of his colleagues was proven to have taken $25,000 of money from a railway subsidy to corrupt the electors with, and I understand he admitted it in this House?

Mr. SIFTON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would say to the hon. gentleman that, so far as the reputation of Canada is concerned, it has never suffered when a Liberal Administration was in power, and if there is no change of Government, it will not be likely to suffer again.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, in presenting my observations to the House to-night, I shall endeavour to make them as brief as possible, consistent with the importance of the subject we are discussing. I suppose, Sir, that in the whole history of the Canadian Parliament, more serious charges have never been brought to the attention of the House of Commons. We have here charges involving the whole Government, but more particularly the Minister of the Interior, in whose department the administration of the Yukon largely lay, and charges involving also the Postmaster General of Canada, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the Minister of Customs. The Minister of the Interior has declined to submit his conduct to an impartial and competent tribunal of judges, and in his statement presented to the House to-day, I have been utterly unable to find that justification for his course which Parliament might have expected from him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) did not act with very much grace or courtesy towards the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), when he referred to him in a sneering way as not risking a very valuable commodity at the present time, when the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was risking his seat in this House, his position and reputation in the country, in preferring his charges on his responsibility as a member of Parliament. Well, Sir, I have had the glorious privilege of disagreeing with the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) on important matters of public policy, but I must say, that I found that gentleman as honourable and manly an opponent as I ever met in the Parliament of Canada. His reputation from the day he first became a Minister down to the present hour is such as should have saved him from such a jeer and such a sneer from the Minister of the Interior. As a Minister occupying a responsible position in the Parliament of Canada for eight or nine years, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) can point with satisfaction and with pride to the fact, that although he occupied this responsible position for so long, to-day no member of the House of Commons, no man in this country, dare make a charge of personal corruption or wrong-doing against the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He stands here to-day with as clean a record as any Minister who ever presided over a department of Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, and it comes with ill-grace from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who, now two years and a half in office, was not a Minister for six months until scandals were charged against him and his department, until charges were made, and until to-day these charges have culminated in the most direct, the most positive, and the most forcible indictment ever made against any Minister during the twenty years I have been in this Parliament. It comes with ill-grace from that Minister (Mr. Sifton) to make the sneering allusion that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's seat was not a valuable commodity at the present time. Mr. Speaker, I would a hundred times rather stand in the proud position of the member for Pictou, occupying a seat on the Opposition benches—even were I to be in opposition all my political career; I would a thousand times rather than occupy the position of the Minister of the Interior to-day. What is the position of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton)? The department over which he presides is charged with the most corrupt transactions, dishonest officials, dishonest acts by which he himself is surrounded and entangled; his partners, the men closest to him in his own constituency charged with corruption; all these winding a web around the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who, if those charges be true, was the centre and promoting figure in the wrong-doing that have taken place. I say, Sir, I would rather a hundred times occupy the honourable position of the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in this House, than occupy the position which the Minister of the Interior does. We had the boast of the Minister of the Interior some time ago that if any one dared on his responsibility as a member to make those charges, he would make him rue the day he did so. What becomes of his boasting now? He (Mr. Sifton) said in this House:

I challenge the member for Pictou, or any man in this House, to lay upon the Table of the House the charges he has to make,—

Not, as stated by the Minister of the Interior this afternoon, the charges that the Minister of the Interior would want him to make, but the charges which the member for Pictou wants himself to make. Sir, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had made these charges. Further, the Minister (Mr. Sifton) said:

—and if he declare his ability to substantiate them by evidence he will get this investigation, and I will be able to convince the hon. gentleman who makes that charge that discretion on his part would have been the better part of valor.

Where is the proud boast of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to-day? The charges have been made, and where is he to make the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) regret, and to show him that discretion is the better part of valor. To-day we have the humiliating spectacle of a Minister, charged specifically, as no other Minister has ever been in this House, with accumulated evidence, and point after point made definitely, complaining that the resolution took an hour and a quarter to read; which simply means that the multiplicity of the charges, definitely and specifically stated, is so great, and the maladministration of his department during the short time that he has been in charge of it, in one branch alone, is so extensive, that the recital of those charges takes an hour and a quarter. It shows still further that the hon. member for Pictou has not failed courageously to give full particulars of the evidence by which he substantiates the charges which he has made. Why, Sir, I have been amazed, when listening to the statement of the Minister of the Interior this afternoon, at seeing the course which the Government propose to take. Look at any other country under the sun which has as full a measure of self-government as we have in Canada; go to England, the mother of Parliaments and of free government, and what do you find there? The public men of England, those entrusted with the responsibility of office, are most jealous of their reputations, and they are continually on the watch to protect their departments from the tongue of scandal. Go to the United States, too. Last year we saw a thorough investigation, because there were charges of wrong-doing on the part of the Government which implicated the head of the Department of War. That investigation was most thorough. No Minister would have dared to burk it or prevent a full inquiry. And look at the history of our own country, until to-day, and we find that the Government were anxious and willing—because they had to be—to have an investigation into any charges of wrong-doing made against them. And, Sir, why should it not be so? Every Government is day by day upon its trial. A Government exists by having its acts criticised and examined, and it cannot refuse to permit an investigation into its affairs. What are we here for? We start in to investigate. I am free to confess that our investigations have often been hindered and delayed by the inertness of the Government, their want of responsibility to the demands of Parliament, their imagining that they are superior to Parliament, and that when Parliament makes an order they can obey it or neglect it as their fancy pleases. The theory of our Government, and the practice, too—although it may be stopped for a time—is that the Parliament of Canada is the supreme arbiter of the affairs of the nation. It is true, in this Government we have the extraordinary spectacle of each Minister being a law unto himself. We have not that government by Governor in Council that would combine all the wisdom of the Government to secure harmonious and united action; but we have, as has often been shown in this House, more particularly during the present session, each Minister running his own department without any reference to or regard for other departments. What has been the result? Just the other day we saw the humiliating spectacle for those who were engaged in it—and a spectacle that was humiliating also to the whole Parliament of Canada—of one Minister writing to a company: "Go on with your enterprise, the Government of Canada give you their sympathy and support, and will help you along with it"; and another Minister at the very same moment planning a whole campaign to do the work himself and to take away the business from this company to which the Parliament of Canada had given a charter. So the Government is largely a Government by each Minister, regardless of the Premier and the other Ministers, who ought to be consulted in order to have harmonious action.

Now, with regard to some statements made by the Minister of the Interior to-day. He thought he was doing a very clever and a very brilliant thing when he referred to the hon. member for Pictou as having put into his resolution the statement that in April, 1899, there were no streets, drains or sanitary arrangements in Dawson City, and that that was the cause of the typhoid fever in 1896. Every one knows that 1896 referred to the year 1898, in which there was an epidemic of typhoid fever. But even supposing that epidemic had taken place in 1896, the statement of the hon. member for Pictou would be as consistent and logical as could be desired. The meaning of the statement, and the statement itself, is this: that from the erection of the first building in that city until the 1st of April, 1899, there were no streets, drains or sanitary arrangements; and for any period previous to that in which typhoid fever had broken out he might very properly put the blame on the Government, so far as the Government could be responsible for failing to provide these sanitary arrangements; and the Government must assume full responsibility, and why? Because they have instituted no form of municipal government but that which they have authorized from here. They have appointed their officers to rule and govern in every direction, and I say it is a crying shame that in a place of 25,000 or more, with the Government drawing in money from every source, they have failed to provide such arrangements. It must be remembered that the inhabitants are nearly all men, and that, therefore, they would consume nearly as much produce and pay as much customs duties as five or perhaps ten times that population in ordinary parts of the Dominion. They have an enormous revenue from customs, and they have a large revenue, or should have a large revenue, from their 10 per cent tax upon the products of the mines. But if they had no sources of revenue, and if the people by the mere force of circumstances and necessity congregated in large cities in any part of Canada, it would be the duty of the Government of Canada to provide the necessary municipal and sanitary machinery and regulations in order to protect the lives of the citizens of the country. This they have utterly failed to do, and the only answer of the Minister of the Interior is, "Oh, he made the mistake of putting 1896 instead of 1898." The difference in the date is immaterial. The only question is when did the typhoid fever break out in that city? The typhoid fever broke out in 1898, and it was caused by the want of care of the Government, and the Government must assume the responsibility for that negligence.

There is another point. The hon. Minister of the Interior referred to the fact that Mr. Philp and Mr. Burnett and some other persons, whom the hon. member for Pictou mentions in his statement of charges, on page 540 of Votes and Proceedings, applied for and obtained leases of good placer mining or gold dredging areas in the Yukon district. These parties were :

- A. E. Philp, said to be of Brandon.
- A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa.
- G. Philp, said to be of London.
- J. A. Philp, said to be of Ottawa.
- A. D. Cameron, said to be of Ottawa.

And so on. I understood the hon. Minister to say that not one of these had received a license to dredge in the Yukon. If that were the case, there is much behind it. There is much farther on, which includes the Burnetts and the Philps and all these. What is that :

That the said Philp, heretofore a partner of the Minister of the Interior, represented in writing that he was engaged in a dredging venture in the Yukon, and endeavouring to induce another to join him, representing in writing that Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, and Major Walsh were also interested with him, but that their names could not appear, as he wrote, "for obvious reasons."

The Minister of the Interior did not refer to that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, he did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What did he say?

Mr. McMULLEN. Read "Hansard," and you will find out.

Mr. WALLACE. He slipped through that like greased lightning. It was a very damaging statement, and he did not want to read it. He said that no one of those parties received a dredging license, and he took up the return, which he said the hon. member for Pictou should have in his hand. What does that return show? Not that not one of those had received a dredging license. Here is one item :

A. E. Philp, of Brandon, Man., and the river or creek on which he had got his license was the Klondike.

Of all the rivers in the world, the Klondike, and how much did he get? Twenty miles of the Klondike, for which he paid $2,000. I think that a mining location up there is about 250 feet one way by 50 feet another. 250 feet across the creek would mean more than twenty licenses in one mile, but here are twenty miles. Multiply 20 by 20, and you have 400 mining claims granted on the richest river in the world. Yet the hon. Minister of the Interior says that not one of these parties got a mining license. With his own report in his hand, the Minister of the Interior makes that statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman not know that there is a difference between mining claims and dredging claims?

Mr. SPEAKER. Just allow me to repeat what I have already had to say before, and that is, that when an hon. member desires to interrupt, he must ask permission of the member who has the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, and you may tell that to the hon. member for North Wellington five times a day for a hundred days, and he will utterly disregard it the next day. That is my experience. He asks if I do not know the difference between a mining lease and a dredging lease. I can say that if on the bank of a river, you have to dig down twenty or thirty feet through clay or rock or sand, and if, right alongside, in the bed of the river, you have the whole mine exposed, I think I would prefer a dredging to a mining lease. Calculate twenty mining leases to the mile, along the length of that river, and you have 400 dredging and mining licenses, and you can mine on a dredging license just as well as on any other license. And all that was got on the payment of $2,000—all that twenty miles, which is one-half of the valuable portion of the Yukon river.

The charge was first that the Minister had partners, or these who had been his partners, who were getting these licenses, and the charge is made here in no vague and indefinite way, but by a positive statement, that this Mr. Philp, who had been a partner of the Minister of the Interior, wrote that he had a dredging lease in connection with the Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh, but that for obvious reasons the names of these gentlemen could not appear openly in this transaction. And this declaration was made, not by a man who, the Minister said, was so innocent and ignorant that he did not know, when writing out his application, that he did not reside in Ottawa, but gave the clerk to understand, by his innocence, that he lived in the city of Ottawa instead of in the city of Brandon, but it was made by a former partner of the Minister. With that serious charge, and a large number of other serious charges made against the Minister, we find him, after his vain boasting that if any one dared to put his name to a charge and place it on the Table, he would make him bitterly regret having done so, shirking his promise. Where is his courage to-day, where is his pledge to the Parliament of Canada? Does he propose to-day to have an investigation or an impartial inquiry into these matters? No, Sir, the Minister of the Interior, notwithstanding the array of definite and specific charges made, intends to fall back upon the jury that he thinks he has under his control. What are the charges? For instance, one that the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, has been guilty of scandalous neglect, delay and mismanagement in the administration of his department in the Yukon; another that the Government of Canada appointed, on the recommendation of the Hon. Clifford Sifton certain officials who were incapable, incompetent, inefficient and corrupt, to positions requiring experience, technical knowledge and integrity of character; another that the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, has been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon in the North-west Territories. And so it goes on with serious charges against the Minister of the Interior, against other Ministers and against the officials.

But these gentlemen say: Oh, we are not responsible for the acts of our officials. Mr. Speaker, for myself, and speaking only for myself, I am strongly in favour of the doctrine of ministerial responsibility. We know that some years ago an investigation was held in the case of one Minister of the Crown, Sir Hector Langevin. It was not proven that in any case Sir Hector Langevin had received a dollar of money improperly. But they said: wrong-doing was going on in your department; you were the watch-dog; you were the custodian of the Public Works, and as such you failed to detect wrong-doing. And Sir Hector Langevin had to leave the Cabinet. I assert the same doctrine of ministerial responsibility to-day. It will not do for the Minister to say: I appointed officers; they were a thousand miles away, and, if they did wrong, I disclaim all responsibility. Mr. Speaker, here was a succession of office-holders against whom charges were made in whose cases the hon. member for Pictou demands an investigation, an impartial investigation by judges of the land, a thorough investigation. The Minister of the Interior assumes that this is like a trial before a judge and that a man is to be found guilty or not guilty; and if found guilty, judgment is to be pronounced by the court. But, Sir, we are the court, we of the Parliament of Canada are the ones who are to receive the report of the judges with the evidence taken before them, and any conclusion to which they have arrived,

Mr. WALLACE.

if they arrive at any conclusion. So that the Parliament of Canada, to whom the judges will report, and the people of Canada behind the Parliament, will be the final court of appeal in this case. We want these matters investigated; we want the public to be informed of all the circumstances in connection with the matter. That inquiry is to be denied. They say: Mr. Ogilvie has been sent up there; Mr. Ogilvie is a competent man, a man with a high reputation; and, therefore, after Mr. Ogilvie has investigated and reported, there is nothing further to do. Mr. Speaker, I entirely dissent from that proposition. I say, in the first place, as has been stated by the hon. member for Pictou, that the investigation was started in a way that would almost kill it at the outset. No provision was made for the payment of witnesses. You expect men to come from all parts of the Yukon, from the four corners of the earth, for that matter to prove cases of wrong-doing at their own expense. Men will not do it. Then, if there were wrong-doing, it was committed, not only by the officials, but by those who paid them or bribed them to do wrong. It is no justification in law to say that they could not get their rights unless they paid money to bribe the officials, and so these men are amenable to the law. There was no provision, either, for the payment of witnesses or for their protection if they exposed wrong-doing in which they themselves were concerned. This was enough to block the investigation. But, as if that was not enough, the rule was made that there should be no investigation of acts committed after the 25th August, 1898. Sir, on the 25th August all wrong-doing did not cease. The Minister of the Interior said: Why, you are going to try men on charges respecting things that they had not committed when the charges were made. But this is not like a trial in court; this is inquisitorial—it is an investigation. The Government still continues in existence; they did not abdicate on the 25th August; they still control the management of affairs. If this were a Government that desired fairly and honestly to search out wrong-doing where it exists, they would give instructions for a thorough investigation up to the very day the investigation was held. Why not? Is there any reason in law, any reason in fair-play or common sense why such a thing should not be done? I know of none; I am sure the people of Canada will demand that there be a full investigation, that all the cases of wrong-doing shall be gone into. They tell us that Mr. Ogilvie implored people to come forward and give evidence. He might implore men to leave their $10 and $20 a day to come and give evidence and run the risk of being incarcerated for wrong-doing. Mr. Ogilvie could not clear these men from the penalties of the law; no such power was given him. So, Mr. Ogilvie vainly implored men to come and tell that they had broken the law in conjunction with Government officials. And now hon. gentlemen opposite say: Look at the investigation; it has not disclosed this or it has not disclosed that. The marvel to me is that it has disclosed as much of the rascality and the wrongdoing as it has.

There is another charge of wrongdoing; for instance, there is a charge that there was a lease of the water front to two men, Morrison and Macdonald. This water front was very valuable; it was the centre of the town, a town built within very narrow limits, and the business was done along the water front. Morrison and McDonald got a lease of land. We were told two or three different stories in this House about that lease. First, the Minister told us there was a lease carefully drawn up giving all the restrictions and so on. Later on, the Minister was forced to admit that there had been no lease at all. Mr. Fawcett, I think, swore before the court that there was a lease, and that he signed it, and that he was compelled to sign by some influences that he did not explain very clearly. Apparently, he was compelled to sign this lease. Now, I would like to have the lease produced; I would like to have some information about it. The statement is openly made that the lawyer who had this matter in hand, who was acting for the Government on one hand and for the lessee on the other, got a retainer fee from these gentlemen of $10,000. I think that the charge is of sufficient seriousness to warrant a full and thorough investigation to ascertain what are the facts with regard to it.

Yet the Ministers tell us by their course to-day, that they are not going to permit these charges to be investigated. Why, Mr. Speaker, every one up there appeared to be a law unto himself. There was no authority that they would not exercise, whether they had the power or not. In the first place, I think the Government utterly misunderstood the situation. They failed to realize the importance of the country and the conditions under which their administration of it was to be carried on. Why, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) tells us to-night that as soon as he knew that, he went to work with the greatest expedition. Sir, the records prove exactly the contrary. The records prove that these gentlemen did not at any time realize the facts, or if they did realize them, there were some sinister influences at work preventing them from carrying out improvements and making the laws effective, administering the affairs of government, and doing what a Government should do, having no municipal authorities there. But they utterly misunderstood the situation. The records show that in August, 1896, Mr. Ogilvie warned the Government of the fact.

Mr. Ogilvie reported to the Department of the Interior the richness of the gold deposits, and advised them that a great development was expected, and that a great rush was likely to be made to the Klondike.

Even in 1894 the Government sent up a small squad of the North-west Mounted Police; and I myself, as Controller of Customs, appointed the sergeant-major of police as collector of customs, and thousands of dollars of customs duties were collected there in the year 1894. The Government knew these things. In 1896 Mr. Ogilvie reported that a great rush was likely to be made for the Klondike. They had full knowledge of these things in the fall of 1896. What was done in 1896? The Government simply folded their arms and did nothing. While they were sitting here in Parliament, in March, of 1897, the Government had information from Mr. Ogilvie of the enormous richness of the Klondike; they did not communicate that information to Parliament or to the people, it was apparently locked up in the minds of the Government, or in their records in the department, and the Minister of the Interior, for some purpose which we do not know to-day, and which we can only surmise, did not let the people of Canada know, in March, 1896, as he should have done, the report that Mr. Ogilvie had made of the enormous richness of the gold findings. But it appears that in July or August, 1897, returning Klondikers coming out with enormous quantities of gold, set the whole country on fire. Well, many people went in then, but the Government knew there would be an enormous influx of settlers next year. The whole country, the whole of Europe, Australia, South Africa, the United States, were amazed at the marvellous reports from the Klondike, which had been verified and found to be accurate. Then, if at any time, the Government might have been expected to do their duty, but there was a supineness, a negligence, a carelessness, a disregard of everything excepting one thing. We found that there was to be a railroad built in there, we found it under circumstances that have made the people of Canada suspicious ever since that behind that railroad scheme there was the most enormous piece of jobbery that Canada has ever seen, and there was too, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about that. If these men had got that enormous heritage that they were to get in the Yukon regions for building that narrow gauge tramway, they would have made tens upon tens of millions of dollars profit at a very small expenditure indeed. But outside of that there was apparently very little done. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Pictou they neglected sanitary precautions, they neglected all those things that they had taken upon themselves to do. If they had established municipal government, if they had given the people the management of their own affairs, then they might have said: We have conferred powers upon the people and if they neglect them it will be to their own cost. But the Government here delegated no powers to the people, gave them no opportunities. I am not finding fault with them for that, if they had justified the retention of power by themselves by doing what was required in the interest of humanity and of civilization. But they failed entirely in their duty, and the Minister of the Interior is the one, I presume, upon whom rests whatever responsibility there is. Then I say that not only was the Minister of the Interior responsible for wrong-doing, but other Ministers are also. Take the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who is so calmly slumbering—and I hate to raise my voice for fear I will awaken him. We are told that a vessel was taken in there and transferred to the Canadian Register because it could then do the local business, and that although that vessel was worth $60,000 before it was taken in, they valued it at $10,000. That is the statement we hear. We would like to hear from the Minister of Customs an explanation of that transaction. I have no doubt we will. But I only mentioned this to show that not only the Minister of the Interior but other Ministers in other departments were negligent of their duty. It is charged, too, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) appointed a man with a most unsavory record to be an inspector. Well, Sir, if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has any defence to make to that, and to the further charges that are made here against him—because there are other charges besides that—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, yes:

That the laws respecting the certificates of masters and mates have not been properly enforced in the Yukon district, but uncertificated officers, and officers disqualified, have been permitted to act as officers upon Canadian registered vessels, contrary to law, to the detriment of Canadian mariners holding certificates under Canadian laws.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the Minister of Customs.

Mr. WALLACE. No, that is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of Customs does not give certificates to masters and mates.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, but he sees whether they go on the vessels.

Mr. WALLACE. The charge is that these men have been given certificates, and officers disqualified have been permitted to act.

Mr. WALLACE.

Look at that statement in the London "Times," and last year the hon. Minister of the Interior sneered at the London "Times," as he does at everything that does not suit himself, but you cannot afford to ignore statements that are made in papers of such great authority and influence as the London "Times."

Mr. McMULLEN. Or the Toronto "Mail."

Mr. WALLACE. "Or the Toronto 'Mail,'" the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says. The correspondent of the London "Times," who visited that country, said:

It is deplorable to have to admit, but it is idle to ignore the fact that the administration of the Klondike district and the relations which exist between the representatives of the Government and the public leave almost everything to be desired. The population remains, on the whole, orderly and law-abiding, but it is in an open and emphatically expressed anticipation of changes which, to give satisfaction, must include within their operation both the system and the personnel. To put the position as plainly as is daily and hourly stated on the mining fields and in the streets of Dawson, there is a widely prevalent conviction not only that the laws are bad, but that the officers through whom they are administered are corrupt. It is hard on innocent and upright individuals whose administrative duties may be performed with scrupulous integrity to be associated in the sweeping charge which is made against the whole official body, but there is no disguising the universal dissatisfaction, and innocent and guilty stand at present together. It is impossible to talk for five minutes on business with any one on the mines or in the streets without some allusion occurring to the subject, and it is a painful experience for Englishmen proud of the purity of the British system of government to be compelled to listen to the plain-spoken comments of Americans and foreigners.

It is humiliating to every Canadian to know that such things are stated in the London "Times," and scattered broadcast, without any contradiction being given to them. The contradiction made by the Minister of the Interior is not worth anything, because his denial here to-night of things that are recorded against him, his simple denial of this commission, his refusal to have a thorough investigation, shows that he is not desirous of having the whole truth come out in regard to these matters. Take another point, and it is the supineness and carelessness of the Government from start to finish. They appointed Major Walsh with a great flourish of trumpets to the world, and pointed to his reputation for bravery, saying: You want a brave man up there. Well, I have been in British Columbia; I have been in the mining regions of Rossland, where six or seven thousand miners from all parts of the world are congregated. When I was there, Constable Kirkup was the only officer amongst the whole six or seven thousand people. You could go through the streets of Rossland any hour of the day or night in perfect security. Patsy Clarke told me that he never saw anything like it. He said that he had been in the mining regions of the United States, where he had 100 American soldiers protecting himself and his men, and he added: "I did not feel as secure as I do in Rossland with a population of 6,000 or 7,000 and only one policeman. The Government sent up 200 of the permanent force of Canada, and I am told that they also sent up 250 of the North-west Mounted Police. I understood, of my own knowledge, that only 175 police were sent up. That would make 450 altogether. Have they demonstrated the necessity of that great force? Look at the enormous cost of maintaining those men there, and the enormous expenditure entailed in sending them in. Look every way, and you see the grossest extravagance, the grossest mismanagement, the most culpable neglect and carelessness in every direction. Major Walsh, as I say, was heralded as a courageous and brave man, and he was to be placed where brave men were required. He was called out in hot haste, apparently, because his services were required as an administrator, as one who should be in charge of the Mounted Police and the military force and who should control the whole government of the Yukon. He received his appointment on the 17th August, 1897; I think that is the date of the Order in Council appointing him. We heard that, although Major Walsh was appointed—and I certainly was amazed to hear it—he was not going out just yet. There was this extraordinary influx into that country, the necessity for soldiers and Mounted Police, the necessity for a strong hand, such as Major Walsh possessed, and which justified his appointment; but Major Walsh goes waltzing around the province of Ontario. He does not start for the Yukon on the 17th of August, nor the 18th of August, and the 18th of the next month still finds him in Ontario. It was not until the 27th of September that he started for the Yukon, and he stopped at Winnipeg and some place else. Then, when he was stranded on the way, we have the hon. Minister of the Interior telling us that he was not to go into Dawson City at all, where the miners were, where tens of thousands of people were, and in the direction of which they were expected to be rushing, but he was to stay at some wayside station. He was appointed on the 17th of August; he reached his destination on the 21st of May of the following year, nine months afterwards. What was the country doing? You see, these men take a long time to come in, but, when they are coming out, although they have to walk the stream, they do it in a very much shorter time than when they go in. This is one example of the bad management of this department. Here is a man whose presence, we were told, was necessary in the Yukon, a man of courage and energy, a man who could control these unruly elements that were going up there, and that would be a menace to free government and British institutions. There was no necessity for that large force of soldiers, or for all those mounted policemen. It was, I do not know why, a period of incapacity and of blundering. This Government, that boast that they are a business Government, that they have, in themselves, the business faculty to a greater degree than any Government that ever preceded them, although they have been most fortunate in many ways and have had the current running with them, at every step they have taken in connection with this matter to which I have called the attention of the House, have been guilty of mismanagement and blundering.

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us that over again.

Mr. WALLACE. I might repeat it, Mr. Speaker, a hundred times, and it would not have the slightest effect on the hon. member for North Wellington.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have heard it more than that already.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that the whole course of the Government has been one of colossal and extravagant expenditure. They have taken funds that they have collected from the percentages given by the miners, from the customs returns, from the payments that were made by miners on their claims, and from all the sources, and they have expended all these moneys. I do not know the particulars, but I would like to know the full particulars of the course that the Government take in the collection of their revenues there, particularly in reference to the Department of Customs. It appears to me that in that community, which consumes an enormous quantity of goods, which paid the highest duties, such as liquors, tobaccos, wines and ales, we ought have had a very large revenue from it. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) gave me the statement, so far as he had received it, but these returns were not of very recent date, and were, I am sure, not satisfactory to the Minister (Mr. Paterson) himself. And now, with regard to the Postmaster General, who is absent to-night.

An hon. MEMBER. He is up in a back seat there.

Mr. WALLACE. If any Minister utterly neglected his duties it is the Postmaster General of Canada. When a new population gathers in any part of the country, the first duty of the Government is to provide it with mail facilities. Upon the first knowledge the Government had of the enormous finds of gold, the Post Office Department should have immediately organized a scheme for transmitting the mails. Indeed, Sir, if that had been done, it would have saved the Government many times over the necessary expenditure that would be incurred. The Postmaster General failed in his duty, and as I understand from his own statement, he made no proper arrangement for carrying the mails until this very date, the first of July of the present year. The Mounted Police, and other agencies were employed in the mail service; but as Faith Fenton tells us in the "Globe," couriers were charging $1 a letter, and thousands of people were glad to pay that high sum to have their letters taken out. That is an extraordinary state of affairs. The Government themselves were the chief sufferers from the neglect of the Postmaster General. They have had to confess in this House that the mail was so slow and so uncertain, that they could not know what was going on in the territory, and that, therefore, they could not be held responsible. That being the case, the Postmaster General, in failing to provide the necessary mail facilities in the Yukon was grossly culpable and negligent. In view of all this mismanagement and wrong-doing by the Government, the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has taken his political life in his hands, and he tells the country that if he fails to make good his charges against the Minister of the Interior and against the others, it will be his duty to walk out of this House, and lose his position and reputation as a member of Parliament. In the face of a member of Parliament doing that, the Government now deny the privilege of a proper investigation. They tell us that Mr. Ogilvie made an investigation, but I tell them that Mr. Ogilvie was utterly debarred from making a thorough investigation. Mr. Ogilvie is a relative of the Minister of the Interior, and he is an official under the Minister of the Interior, and it is the Minister of the Interior who is the principal man aimed at by these charges. He surrounded himself with these officials. It is charged that he is in collusion, it is charged that he has been in with these men and their wrong-doing. I do not care what Mr. Ogilvie's qualifications otherwise may be, the very fact that he is an official of the Minister (Mr. Sifton) debars him from sitting in judgment upon his superior officer, and in addition to that he is a relative. These two things utterly preclude Mr. Ogilvie from being a judge in this case. He may judge these officials who are under him, but he cannot judge the man who appoints him and has full control over him. The Government refuse an investigation. They believe they have a majority behind them who will without investigation and without evidence vote them all right. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another jury to judge them. That jury is the people of Canada, who do not care very much which political party is in power, so long as they get honest and capable government. The people will be appealed to and they will give their verdict. Sir, if I am not very much mistaken, that verdict will be against the present Government, who, today, in this House of Commons, deny any proper inquiry into their misdeeds and bad government.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of continuing this debate in the tone maintained by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) who has just taken his seat. This debate, in my humble opinion, is now at an end. It was completed and finished by the admirable and thorough and paramount reply given this afternoon by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to the indictment presented against him by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I rise simply, in pursuance of the duty which is incumbent upon me as head of the Government and as leader of the House, to present the policy which I think the Government must assume upon this question, and to express what is the conduct which I believe it becomes the duty of the House to pursue. I have followed, as it was my duty to do, with close and minute attention every syllable that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I was anxious to know what were the new facts which he had to bring forward, what were the arguments which he was to base upon these new facts, and what were the conclusions which he would derive from them. I may say, and I call the special attention of the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to this: That if he was in earnest and sincere in his professed desire and object of attaining that investigation into the administration of the Yukon, he selected a strange and an absolutely unexampled method of attaining his object. I cannot resist the conclusion expressed by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, that the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had not for his object to obtain from this House an investigation and the granting of his motion, but simply to place before the House and before the country, an indictment which he knew the House perforce would have to reject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I say that the statement made by the Prime Minister is out of order in imputing to me insincerity, or any other object than that which I expressed in the most emphatic and direct language which it was possible for a man to use in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. It did not occur to me, when I heard the remarks of the First Minister, that there was any wilful misrepresentation imputed to the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

The PRIME MINISTER. I will go further, and I will assume the position which is taken by the hon. gentleman. If he disclaims that that was his view, which I do not attribute to him so positively as he maintains, and that his object was merely to obtain an investigation and the granting of his motion—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. If he disclaims it, I accept his disclaimer without any qualification; I accept it in toto. But I must say that if it was his object, I cannot admire his judgment. Sir, the hon. gentleman has followed a course which is absolutely unprecedented in matters of this kind. This the hon. gentleman will not deny. There have been precedents by the dozens and the scores in this House, of motions to investigate the conduct of governments or of individual members of governments, and will the hon. gentleman ever point out a motion such as we have before us to-day? Will he not admit at once that the course which he follows on this occasion has never been followed before? Whenever a motion of this kind has been made, whenever a member of this House has thought it his duty to charge against the Government or against a member of the Government anything that he thought should be investigated, he has done it by first making a solemn declaration from his seat that he was credibly informed and thought he could prove such and such facts, and thereupon he has made a substantive motion. But when before this occasion, I ask the hon. gentleman, was ever such a motion moved—not as a substantive motion, but as an amendment to going into Committee of Supply? This is the first time it has ever been done, and if it was not done with an object, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what it was done for?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will tell the hon. gentleman if I may. My object was that the vote of this House should be direct and not on any side issue—either the inquiry or not, and not as on a former occasion, when my motion was met by an amendment.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman cannot, I think, assume any more wisdom than other members of this House. I suppose he will admit that there have been other members of this House as wise, as learned, and as anxious for the public weal as he is. No one has ever before been afraid to offer a motion which could bear the brunt of the criticism of the House; but the hon. gentleman has just stated that his intention is to present a motion which cannot be amended. It has to be voted on as it is, whether right or wrong—as a whole, without any exception. This motion, which covers twenty pages of the Votes and Proceedings of this House, which it took the Speaker an hour and fifteen minutes to read, must be voted on without the omission of one single syllable. If there are in it propositions which are untenable or offensive, and which ought not to be inquired into, the House is not at liberty to eliminate them. There may be in this resolution charges which ought to be investigated; but there are others which ought not to be investigated. In what position, then, are we? Either the resolution has to be negatived in toto or affirmed in toto. Either the charges which ought to be investigated have to be refused investigation, or those which ought not to be investigated have to be given an investigation. This is the proposition before us, and this is the object which the hon. gentleman with his own mouth now tells us he had in view in making it.

But, Sir, I will go further. The hon. gentleman has a certain position in this House; but even after the speech which was delivered by the hon. Minister of the Interior this afternoon, the levity—I speak advisedly—which was displayed by the hon. gentleman is incredible. It is not worthy of the position he occupies in this House. It was not worthy of him to make charges against my hon. friend in a solemn document, which even at this moment, before an investigation is granted, are proved to be baseless and false.

The House, I maintain, could not grant this investigation as it is demanded in that resolution, because it would involve a procedure which would be unconstitutional. It would involve a breach of the constitution of this country, and I am sure the House could not consent to that. Sir, if we have to take this resolution as it is framed, carefully framed, with an object, as we know from the lips of the hon. gentleman himself, it includes, wilfully and deliberately, a charge against Mr. Justice Dugas. The hon. gentleman told us this afternoon that he did not propose to proceed against Mr. Justice Dugas as Judge Dugas, but as a member of the Executive Council of the Yukon district. Sir, it was proved this afternoon against the hon. gentleman, who has been clamouring day in and day out for returns, that he did not read the returns when they were brought down. I say he has not read his own motion, for I will show immediately that the charge which he has made against Mr. Justice Dugas is not made against him simply as a member of the Executive Council of the Yukon district, but is at the same time made against him as a judge. The allegation does not read this way: that the said Mr. Justice Dugas, while a member of the Executive Council thereof, became, was, and is pecuniarily interested in mining claims in said district. If such were the language of the motion, my hon. friend could disclaim any intention of proceeding against Mr. Justice Dugas as Judge Dugas. But what is the language of the motion?

That the said Mr. Justice Dugas, while a judge for the Yukon judicial district, and while a member of the Executive Council thereof, became, was and is pecuniarily interested in mining claims in said district.

What is the consequence of this accusation? Is it not stated here and now that

Mr. Justice Dugas, if he became pecuniarily interested in mining claims, violated his duty both as a member of the Executive Council and as a judge? So that the hon. gentleman makes a direct charge against Mr. Justice Dugas, not only in one capacity, but in both capacities which he occupies in that district. And the hon. gentleman, seeing now that he cannot wriggle out of the position he has taken, says: "We must divide Mr. Justice Dugas into two parts; one is impeachable, but the other I impeach; I do not attack the judge; I simply attack the member of the Executive Council." I have shown that the hon. gentleman has forgotten his motion already, or he has not read it carefully, for it attacks Mr. Justice Dugas as a judge. But, Sir, I may say at once to the hon. gentleman that I care not whether or not the accusation is made against Mr. Justice Dugas, not in his capacity as a judge, but as a member of the Executive Council. I will show the hon. gentleman that he cannot take refuge in that pretense. I need not remind the House that there is nothing in the constitution or the laws of England so carefully guarded and protected as the honour and dignity of the bench; and this feature of the laws and constitution of England has been imported into our constitution. The British North America Act provides that no judge can be attacked except in a certain solemn manner:

Section 99. The judges of the Superior Court shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on an Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. And the hon. gentleman knows very well that it is not open for him to attack a judge in this House except for the purpose of removing him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. Minister allow me to interrupt?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to follow the right hon. gentleman intelligently. I would like to ask him whether he is arguing that because a judge is not removable without an Address of both Houses, this House cannot inquire into the conduct of a judge, but is constitutionally prevented from doing so, even though the charge be made here—or whether he is not, for instance, responsible in a court of law for crimes outside altogether of this procedure that the right hon. gentleman refers to, contemplating his removal?

The PRIME MINISTER. If a judge commits a crime, he is indictable before a court of law, but if he commits an act which is not of such a gross nature as to impel his dismissal upon impeachment, the hon. gentleman has no right to bring that to the attention of Parliament. The hon. gentleman must know that, or he ought to, if he does not. Here is the duty of the House in that regard, as defined in Todd, at page 873:

Bearing in mind the general responsibility of the Ministers of the Crown for the due administration of justice throughout the kingdom, and the obligation which they owe to the dispensers of justice to preserve them from injurious attacks and calumnious accusations, it is necessary that, before consenting to any motion for a parliamentary inquiry into the conduct of a judge—or even for the reception of a petition complaining of the conduct of a judge and not asking for his removal from office in accordance with the statute—or not alleging reasonable grounds for such a proceeding—Ministers should themselves have investigated the matter of complaint, and be prepared either to oppose or facilitate the interference of Parliament on the particular occasion.

Therefore, before the matter is brought to the attention of Parliament, the Ministers must be informed of the accusations themselves, they must have the opportunity of looking into it and advising Parliament whether or not it is a fit subject for inquiry.

I see some hon. gentlemen opposite laughing at this. Shall I again read the language of the authority:

Ministers should themselves have investigated the matter of complaint, and be prepared either to oppose or facilitate the interference of Parliament on the particular occasion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Suppose they do not?

The PRIME MINISTER. Have the Ministers been informed? Have they had an opportunity of investigating? Are they able to-day to advise Parliament whether Parliament should interfere or not? And here is the principle laid down, in clear language, that before Parliament can be called on to investigate, the matter must be brought before the executive and the Ministers must advise Parliament. Was this matter ever brought before the Ministers? Was this simple elementary justice to Judge G. Dugas ever done? Who ever complained of Judge Dugas before we saw this motion? The Government never were made aware of any complaint. So that the first safeguard which protects the judiciary has been violated. Let me read further:

That the House of Commons should not initiate, and Ministers of the Crown ought not to sanction, any attempt to institute criminative charges against any one, unless upon some distinct and definite basis; and, in the case of a judge, such charges should only be entertained upon allegations of misconduct that would be sufficient, if proved, to justify his removal from the bench.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Unless a charge is brought against a judge which, if proved, would justify his removal from the bench, such a charge should not be entertained. Consequently, if this charge brought against Judge Dugas is sufficiently grave in its character to warrant his impeachment, that is the course which should be resorted to. The writer then goes on to say :

But it is immaterial whether such misconduct had been the result of an improper exercise of his judicial functions, or whether it was solely attributable to him in his private capacity, provided only that it had been of a nature to unfit him for the honourable discharge of the judicial office.

Here is the elementary law, that no judge ought to be impugned unless the matter has been brought before the executive, so that it may be prepared to advise Parliament whether or not the charge is to be entertained. No judge is to be impugned before the charge against him has been brought to the attention of the executive. Parliament has not the initiative, but the executive must first be advised of the charge. These two conditions have been violated, and this motion is absolutely unconstitutional. But there is more than that. Whoever heard of a judge being impugned before Parliament before he had been given an opportunity of defending himself? This is a simple, broad statement of law applicable not only to judges, to the humblest subjects in the land, that no man is to be traduced except he is given the opportunity of a fair trial. Who will tell me that Judge Dugas has had a fair trial, when he never heard the charge brought against him? Here is the law again :

That no address for the removal of a judge ought to be adopted by either House of Parliament, except after the fullest and fairest inquiry into the matter of complaint by the whole House or a committee of the whole House, at the bar ; notwithstanding that the same may have already undergone a thorough investigation before other tribunals.

The application of this principle will obviously necessitate that the person complained of shall be duly informed of the intended proceedings against him at every stage of the inquiry.

Judge Dugas never heard of this motion, yet the hon. gentleman does not scruple to ask Parliament to pass judgment upon him and to traduce him before a commission of judges, who are to inquire into whether or not he is guilty of the charges brought against him.

There are precedents in this matter. Judges have been traduced before in this House, and these principles laid down by Todd have always been rigidly adhered to. In 1877 a motion was made to impeach Mr. Justice Loranger. On the 15th February, 1877, the following motion was moved :—

Moved by Mr. Béchard :

"That a special committee, consisting of Messrs. Béchard, Holton, MacDonnell (Inverness), Appleby, Kirkpatrick, Irving, Masson, Desjardins, Brooks, Baby, Jette, Taschereau and Laurier, be appointed to inquire into the administration of justice in the district of Richelieu, in the province of Quebec, and that the petition of F. X. A. Biron, notary, and others, of the said district of Richelieu, complaining of the conduct of the Hon. Thomas Jean Jacques Loranger, judge of the Superior Court of the said province of Quebec, and petition of the Hon. Justice Loranger be referred to the said committee, and that the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Now, Sir, this was the last stage of a series of proceedings that had taken place. This was not the first petition which had been presented against Mr. Justice Loranger. A petition had been prepared and sent to the executive, and by the executive sent to Judge Loranger, who sent his reply, and then the whole was investigated. Hon. Edward Blake at that time was Minister of Justice, and no greater authority upon such matters ever lived in this country, and this is what he said :

A person approached me on behalf of the learned judge, and represented that, as he had not had an opportunity of answering those petitions which, it was presumed, contained charges against him, it would not be proper to bring them down in the manner proposed. I quite agreed in that view. It was subsequently thought proper not further to delay in the matter, and the complaint was transmitted to the learned judge. From ill-health and other causes he delayed his answer until very recently ; indeed, until within a few days from the opening of the session. The answer was in very considerable detail, and the petitioners had been allowed to make observations upon it. I have not had time or opportunity to verify the allegations of the answer, but I think it due to the learned judge to say that, assuming his statement to be in the main correct, it dissipates the allegations of that particular article of the charge.

And upon this Mr. Blake advised the reference of the case to a committee, the committee met and the matter was adjudicated. Now, none of these precautions have been taken here ; none of these safeguards which have been brought down from remote ages for the security and dignity of the bench, and for the independence of the judiciary are observed. This motion is unconstitutional, yet the hon. gentleman asks, without preliminary investigations and without observing any of these formalities, to refer this case of Judge Dugas to a commission of judges to investigate his conduct. The hon. gentleman appealed, not to the Government, but to the House. I also appeal to the House. I appeal, not to this side of the House alone, but to the other side ; I appeal to the members who sit on that side, and I ask them if they are prepared, any one of them to say that they will drag Judge Dugas before a committee of investigation without his having had an opportunity to hear these charges and answer them. I appeal to gentlemen on the other side, not for any favour, but I appeal to fair play, for simply British fair-play for Judge Dugas on this occasion. And I shall be much surprised, indeed, if this appeal is not listened to. Now, this case alone is enough to compel the House not to grant this investigation, even if on other points the House thought there was a case for investigation. My attention is called to an authority, which is not Todd, it is true, but which I hope, in the eyes of the hon. gentlemen, will be considered at least equal to Todd—I wish to quote the language of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper himself. In a speech delivered this very session, this is what the hon. gentleman said :

Now, in these cases regard has heretofore very properly been had to the solemn and careful steps that are taken in the case of an impeachment of a Superior Court judge ; that is to say, the Government is bound, before even calling on a judge to answer charges that have been presented to the proper department against his conduct, to see that these charges are themselves so specific and so exact that they are not only ready for issue to be taken upon them, but that they are of such a character that, if established in the form in which they are presented, they would constitute a case for the removal of the judge from his position.

What are the special charges brought against the judge ?

That the said Mr. Justice Dugas, while a judge for the Yukon judicial district, and while a member of the Executive Council thereof, became, was and is pecuniarily interested in mining claims in said district.

These are all the particulars given to Judge Dugas upon which to defend himself. And he has not even seen that much, little as it is. But there are, in this indictment, if I may so dignify this long rigmarole of incoherent sentences put together, there are other charges, which I, for one, am not prepared to refer to a commission of judges, though there is not the constitutional objection to them which I have shown in the case of the charge against Judge Dugas. For my part, I am not disposed to call upon the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, Sir Henry Strong, a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to investigate the charges made here, for instances, of delinquencies which may have been committed by Levere Villeneuve, a dog-driver of the Mounted Police. This is purely ludicrous. But there are things which are odious as well as ludicrous. I am not prepared to call upon a commission of judges to determine whether or not Major Walsh, while discharging his duties, was intemperate. Sir, it is not a commendable thing for any man to appear, not merely in the discharge of public duties, but to appear at all, under the influence of liquor. Of course, it becomes him who is without sin to cast the first stone.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I rise with the permission, no doubt, of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to ask whether he wishes to insinuate anything in the observation which is received with cheers and jeers by his followers, and which seems to refer to a remark or two with which I was interrupted during my speech, or does he wish to make a specific charge ?

The PRIME MINISTER. In this matter my object is to cast the mantle of charity. I think the hon. gentleman would have done well, even if Major Walsh had been guilty of anything of the kind, not to cast the stone of obloquy upon him, but to let his act pass into oblivion. The hon. gentleman is absolutely without excuse.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the right hon. gentleman answer my question, whether he wishes to insinuate that I was under the influence of liquor during the discharge of my public duty ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I never insinuated anything ; when I wish to make a charge I make it. I have no charge to make against the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He is not in issue. I do not understand the interruption of the hon. member for York that I had "better not," or something of that kind. I am the judge of what I shall do, and he has nothing to say.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has—

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say the hon. member for West York, I said the hon. member for York.

Mr. WALLACE. He said the hon. member for West York.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. But there is more than that. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) not only charges Major Walsh with being intemperate, but charges him with immorality. And he says he wants a commission of judges to investigate the charge he makes :

That while acting as the chief executive officer of the Canadian Government, Major Walsh carried on in the Yukon a liaison with one known as Lucille Elliott.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And more.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will come to that presently. I will cite the sentence with which the hon. gentleman concluded. But before I quote that I want to reiterate and emphasize what I said a moment ago—that the hon. gentleman is absolutely without excuse for having brought the name of Lucille Elliott into this matter to make a charge against Major Walsh. Now, I quote what follows, for here is the charge :

That Lucille Elliott was permitted to enjoy privileges, advantages and favours from the local authorities in said district.

There is a charge ; it might be investigated, perhaps it will be investigated. There might be an investigation as to whether these privileges and favours were illegally granted to that woman. But, Sir, if these undue and illegal favours were granted to that woman, does the alleged immoral relations of Major Walsh with her, whether before or after these illegal favours, make the charge any stronger ? Why, Sir, if these undue and illegal favours were granted to that woman, Lucille Elliott, the charge against him would be just as strong, if his relations with her had been absolutely innocent. Therefore, how can the hon. gentleman make his charge any stronger by proving the indictment of immoral relations ? The hon. gentleman ought to remember that Major Walsh has a wife and children. He has pleaded his duty. It may be sometimes the duty of a brave man to be severe on another man, but I never can conceive that it is the duty of any man to be cruel to a defenceless woman and innocent children. I, for one, am not disposed to appoint a judge to investigate into the relations, proper or improper, between Major Walsh and Lucille Elliott. There might, perhaps, be some colour of excuse in the fact that Major Walsh was a civil officer of this Government ; but Major Walsh is no longer an officer of this Government, he is a private citizen. But, even though all the hon. gentleman's allegations of immorality were true, how could they effect the case ? Sir, it was simple, wanton cruelty on the part of the hon. gentleman to add those charges. The hon. gentleman might have been justified in bringing in anything and everything that would strengthen his case, but he had no excuse to bring in needless charges of immorality, which can only give pain to some people, and which cannot add an iota to the strength of the case which he has brought before the House.

Now, Sir, I will say, without any hesitation, that there may be things which might be the subject of inquiry ; there may be things which may still be the subject of inquiry. We know there have been reports and charges of improper conduct, and we have appointed a commission to investigate them. Now, whether the commission which we have appointed to investigate them is sufficient or not, will depend upon the report which has been brought down, and a further report, which is yet to be brought down. The commission has gone a certain length ; we have a report here, which report has been printed and has been in the hands of members of this House for three days. How many members of this House have read that report ? There are not ten, there are not five, there is not even one. The hon. gentleman himself may have looked into it cursorily, but he has not read it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have read it from cover to cover.

The PRIME MINISTER. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement without reservation ; but, if he has read it, he has only read it very cursorily, and I am sure he has not digested it, as his speech proves. But that is only one report ; there is another report to come. We know that there is now on the way down here a further and conclusive part of this report. When it arrives, and we have taken cognizance of it, then we shall know whether this investigation now going on will be sufficient or not.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman yesterday dilated for about one hour—if I remember rightly—upon the case of the water front, which he alleged had been improperly, illegally and corruptly sold by Mr. Wade to a certain firm of which McDonald was a member. We know that Mr. Wade has given his evidence upon this transaction, and, when we have this final report, then our duty, will be, as a Government to determine whether the investigation on this point has been sufficient or otherwise. But, until these reports have come down, until we know their tenor, I say that we should not be called upon to order any further investigation. But I will say this, speaking under my responsibility as head of the Government, that if this investigation is not sufficient, another investigation will be ordered. We must probe these Yukon delinquencies, so-called, to the bottom. No officer of the Government must be allowed to rest under any suspicion.

As I said a moment ago, we have already had an investigation carried on by Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie has been assailed, but, while everybody must admit the great merit of that gentleman, let me add to the testimony in his favour given by two members of the Government, and by officials of the Government in the Yukon territory, a paragraph that was published in the Montreal "Gazette" on August 1st, 1898 :

According to our Ottawa correspondent, Judge Dugas, of Montreal, has not yet been formally appointed judge of the Yukon district, but the matter is practically settled. The Government and the judge are alike to be congratulated. If all appointments were as justifiable as those of Judge Dugas and Mr. Ogilvie, the Opposition's task of criticism on this head would be a sinecure, but of that there seems little danger.

The Montreal "Gazette" will not, apparently, appreciate the fair criticism of the hon. member for Pictou. Now, Sir, I have only a word to say with regard to the personal charges made against my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend rightly called attention to the fact that no personal charge of corruption is made against him in this indictment. It is true, however, that in one single paragraph the hon. member for Pictou came near to making an assertion of that nature, but he did not. This is the nearest that he came to it :

That the Hon. Clifford Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, has been guilty of favouritism and partiality in the administration of the laws and regulations applicable to the district of the Yukon, in the North-west Territories.

That, as appears by a Return (83), 3rd Session, 8th Parliament, 61 Victoria, 1898 (Canada), the following parties applied for and obtained leases of good placer mining or gold dredging areas in the Yukon district:—

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Bonanza Creek.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on S. Fork (Stewart).

G. Philp, said to be of London, for lease on B. Salmon.

A. E. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Indian River or Creek.

J. A. Philp, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Teslin River or Creek.

A. D. Cameron, said to be of Ottawa, for a lease on Stewart's River or Creek.

Now, Sir, the Minister of the Interior has shown this afternoon that this statement is absolutely incorrect. None of the Philp's have obtained any of the leases there mentioned. I will come to the other point presently in regard to which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) shakes his head. But this indictment goes on to say:

That Mr. A. E. Philp and Mr. A. D. Cameron, aforesaid, were partners in business with the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Sifton, when that gentleman became Minister of the Interior, and all were members of the firm of Sifton, Philp & Cameron, of Brandon.

There is an insinuation, not a charge, that Messrs. Philp and Cameron, being partners of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), had obtained, because of that partnership, this lease. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says so, but as a matter of fact they were no longer partners of the hon. Minister of the Interior. The hon. member for West York came to the rescue of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and how did he meet the charge? He said that Mr. Philp obtained a dredging lease on the Klondike. Well, Sir, is that a charge against the hon. Minister of the Interior? Is it alleged here in this indictment that Mr. Philp has obtained a dredging lease upon the Klondike? There is not a word in the indictment, and the answer given by the hon. member for West York is altogether out of the indictment. It is possible that Mr. Philp may have obtained a dredging lease on the Klondike. I do not know that Mr. Philp was not just as open as anybody else to have that lease, but how could the hon. Minister of the Interior answer that insinuation when it was not to be found in the indictment? The hon. Minister of the Interior, having demolished the indictment these hon. gentlemen say that there is something beside that. When the charge is made the hon. Minister of the Interior will answer it, but he is not bound to answer it until the charge is made. Let me say to the hon. member for West York, and to the hon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

member for Pictou that if these hon. gentlemen or any one else will say that Mr. Philp has obtained that dredging lease on the Klondike through any corrupt collusion with the hon. Minister of the Interior I have only here to repeat what the hon. Minister of the Interior said a moment ago, he will have a commission of investigation, the very minute that such a charge is made. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior showed conclusively this afternoon that we are not to surrender the privileges of Parliament. It is not to a commission of judges that we have to answer. It is to Parliament and to Parliament we are responsible. If any hon. gentleman will move for a committee of investigation and charge a corrupt act against us he will have that committee immediately, and we will take the responsibility. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has had the honour to have brought upon his head the ire of the Opposition. Let me say to hon. gentlemen opposite and in so saying I am sure that I voice the feeling of every man in the Liberal party, that we love him for the enemies he has made, and we have every confidence in him for the ability and courage with which he has discharged the duties entrusted to his care.

Mr. GEORGE E. FOSTER (York, N.B.)
Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rose with the expressed idea of heightening the tone of debate, of raising it from the somewhat low level to to which he alleged it had been degraded by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). Well, the right hon. gentleman was almost immediately successful in so elevating the tone of debate as to attribute to an hon. gentleman, on this side of the House, dishonest motives in bringing in the resolution which has been brought in by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I doubt if his subsequent remarks, in the heated and somewhat angry tone in which he has addressed them to the House, have been conspicuous as a successful effort to raise the tone of debate to the dignified level to which it was his aspiration to have it elevated. I am, I may say, a little diffident at taking upon myself the liberty of addressing any more remarks to this House at this stage, when my right hon. friend has declared, in his strongest terms, that the debate is now ended. It was ended he says by the admirable address of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I suppose I will bring down upon my devoted head the ire, not only of the hon. gentleman, but of his followers, if I pretend for a single moment to doubt that it is ended and to follow with a few remarks even after the "admirable" speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior, supplemented by the no less admirable speech of the right hon. Prime Minister. At least I will plead my privilege as a member of Parliament to question the statement that this debate is ended. My right hon. friend was very anxious for new facts, and the same anxiety was observable in the whole address of the hon. Minister of the Interior. New facts are what they want. On this side of the House we have the idea that the old facts are quite sufficient, and until the old facts have been met and disposed of it is rather inviting disaster for hon. gentlemen to be over anxious for new facts. My right hon. friend has strained at the gnat and swallowed the camel. In his anxiety about some little matters in reference to the outside of the platter he has called upon his devoted followers to assist him in preventing the cleansing of the platter itself. What are these tremendously heavy and weighty matters which intervene between this Parliament and the appointment of a judicial commission to make inquiry into what the right hon. gentleman, his Government and his party have, over and over again declared, by their action in this House, ought to be inquired into. Almost the last sentence that the right hon. gentleman used was that this inquiry should not stop until everything was probed to the bottom as long as any cloud of suspicion rested upon any official of this Government. I think, then, my right hon. friend has given away the ground entirely as to the necessity for new facts and as to the desirability of the investigation not being pressed. The simple difference between this side of the House and the other seems to be not in the conviction if we might attribute sincerity to words, not in the conviction that inquiry is necessary, inquiry that goes to the bottom and probes this matter, and does not rest until the shadow of suspicion is removed from every official of the Government. I think the only difference between us, then is a difference as to how this might be best carried out. The Prime Minister says: Not by a commission of judges as prayed for in the resolution of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) Oh, no. Why not? Because, he says, the method is unexampled. The essence of the matter is to get at the truth and probe it to the bottom. But no, he says, you must not do that if it be by an unexampled method. You must not do it if the object is not an honest one, and my right hon. friend implied, yes, directly asserted—so did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) who made that admirable address—that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was not honest in his preferment of this indictment. It is said that he was looking for some party advantage, in the sense that he strove to have an indictment put before this House of such a nature that, perforce, Parliament could not accept his motion and approve an investigation on these lines. We are told that the course was never followed before. We are told in effect that a man must get up and say that he was credibly informed and he must then make a substantive motion. There was the whole of the absolute difficulty my right hon. friend met in this line of investigation. Reduced down to a point it was: that the hon. member for Pictou had not made a substantive motion; that if he got up in this House and moved the very same series of resolutions in a substantive motion, everything would have been right, in the estimation of my right hon. friend. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) chose to move it as a motion, about which the hon. gentlemen on the other side cannot quibble and shift and evade, a motion which must be taken as it is put, and voted upon as it was designed. And because it was moved in that way, and not as a substantive motion, there is a mountain in the way of its being adopted by Parliament.

The Prime Minister told us: Some charges in it may be investigated, others may not. I will take the right hon. gentleman on his own ground. If he has any sincerity in making that as one of his arguments, and feels that it is a vital one, the right hon. gentleman could easily have pointed out to his followers these things in the motion which he considered involved subjects that ought not to be investigated, and told his followers: Vote this motion down, and I will put before you a motion embracing these things which it is proper to investigate, and to investigate in this way. My right hon. friend did not do that. There was another course open to him. If he is really desirous that this matter should be probed to the bottom by a competent commission, as this motion has been before this House for some time, he could have suggested to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that it might be amended in certain ways in which the Government would accept it. There are various ways by which a gentleman who is really anxious not to throw his own weight and the force of his Government between the investigation of wrong and the wrong itself, might have had this matter arranged so that the House could have voted it. My right hon. friend did none of these. He simply raised these as mountains—veritable mole-hills they are—and presented them before his followers as reasons why they should not vote for this motion. But there was another reason given by him, and that was the extreme levity with which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) conceived these resolutions, and spoke to them afterwards.

The right hon. gentleman told us that the procedure is unconstitutional. Why? Because, he said, within the four corners of that resolution there is one clause that mentions a judge, and if that one clause mentions a judge, no matter in what capacity the judge may be mentioned, that is unconstitutional. Consequently, the constitution of Great Britain and of Canada must be invoked against the desire of good meaning men on the opposite side of the House, to see that an investigation is carried on by a competent tribunal. I am not a lawyer, I am not even a constitutional lawyer, but if the right hon. gentleman appeals to the constitution, I shall appeal to common sense, which, I believe, is prior to any constitution, and is the foundation of all the best constitutions. And, Sir, so long as I am a member of this House, and so long as this Government make judges a part of the executive to carry on any portion of the Government of any part of this country, just so long I will exercise my right as a member of this House to criticise the conduct of that judge as an executive officer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Todd was read, and the ghost of a great constitutional writer was brought up in order to frighten this House from voting these resolutions. I have not been able to read all that Todd wrote with reference to that in the short time since my right hon. friend quoted the authority, but I venture to say that all the cases that are cited, and consequently the whole force of the writing of Todd and the conclusions of Todd in that respect, go upon the assumption that judges are being charged as judges, that their conduct is being investigated as judges, and not as executive councillors appointed by a party government, undertaking the execution of the machinery of government in any district, under the instruction of gentlemen who form a party government, and who are consequently responsible for carrying out these matters. I do not think that within the four corners of Todd you will find that he contemplates a judge as an executive officer, as an officer in a political capacity rather than that of a judge; so that, therefore, none of the principles that Todd lays down, or the strictures he makes are predicated upon that assumption or upon that possibility at all.

Any way, Sir, common sense teaches me, and teaches, I believe, every other member in this House, that if a party is going to appoint judges to help them in governing this country, make mining laws, constitute themselves judges of claims, do all these things that a Cabinet may do, that executive officers may do in the Yukon or any other part of this country, they must expect that these men's actions will be criticised as they ought to be criticised, with reference to the duties which they have been appointed to discharge as executive officers. My right hon. friend would like to shelter himself behind that doctrine, but the common sense of the people of Canada will give him no shelter there. Carried to its absurdity, all my right hon. friend has to do is to appoint a council composed entirely of judges, and this House would be absolutely debarred from any criticism of the council of the Yukon, unless upon what? Unless on the initiative of the precious party Government that appointed them for their own purposes. That is the direct and the absolutely logical conclusion of the principle that my right hon. friend has laid down. I am willing to rest that with the common sense of the people of this country, and I say again, and with all respect for judges as judges, that if Judge Dugas is ten thousand times a judge, if he does what I think is wrong as an executive officer of a party Government, I will criticise in him what I think is wrong.

My right hon. friend followed the cue of the admirable speaker of the afternoon (Mr. Sifton), and what was the cue of the admirable speaker of the afternoon? One fair criticism of the admirable speech is this: that while the Minister (Mr. Sifton) very deftly laid hold of two or three unimportant points, he rested his whole case on these. That was the trick of a smart advocate, of a clever lawyer: but he left the weighty charges which are involved in that resolution severely and discreetly alone. I will give the House one example. Wonderful speech! Admirable speech! And oh, the weight of the argument! The typewriter in rewriting the resolution of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made a mistake in a date and put it down "1896," when it should have been "1898." And what was the charge involved? It is one of the gravest that has yet been brought against that gentleman's administration—that, forsooth, in the town of Dawson, where some 10,000 to 20,000 people congregated, had to live summer months and winter months, with an unlimited treasury at his disposal, with millions taken out of the Yukon itself; that up to a late period there was not a sign of nor a step taken with reference to the simplest sanitation of the town of Dawson, and that as a consequence discomfort and disease and epidemic visited that city and wrought its havoc on the people who had to live there. That was the charge. That was an important charge. How did this admirable speaker deal with it? He dealt with it in this way: "There was an epidemic charged in 1896. This Dawson City grew up after that, and this Government's powers were exercised after 1896. Therefore, the member for Pictou has charged that on account of certain actions done after 1896, an epidemic broke out before the actions were done. Now, he says, "let the member for Pictou vacate his seat." That is the way this admirable gentleman settled this debate, so that there is no longer any chance for argument.

Mr. BERGERON. They applauded that for five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, as my hon. friend says, they applauded that. The weighty things of the law were never touched, but the little tithes of anise and cummin, of smart, shrewd and not very honourable pleading in a Minister of the Crown, tickled the palates of his followers, and made them say, as I heard one saying out, "That is the strongest and most admirable speech I ever heard in that House." That is the way my admirable friend made his admirable defence.

One other thing he touched and proved to his own satisfaction, and it is now before this House—that the member for Pictou, in a certain compilation from a report that had been brought down to this House, had wrongly quoted, in so far as it appears, with reference to leases having been obtained; and he dwelt upon that, which was simply an error, without concealment, because my hon. friend quoted the return itself, which every man in this House could read, with no purpose of deceiving at all. Why, it would have been silly to have done that, with the report given by himself and in the hands of the members of this House. One of two things may be said in reference to that. It may be an error in taking out these items from the report; or it may be that my hon. friend is able to prove what the report does not show on the face of it, and what hon. gentlemen opposite have not successfully contradicted.

Now, then, those two points, and those two alone, were the only points that the Minister of the Interior was effective upon at all. He dwelt on those lengthily and to his own satisfaction; and, after you have taken the pith of them, they are the merest froth on the top of the topmost wave; whilst he did not attempt to touch the strong foundation charges which were made in the indictment of my hon. friend from Pictou. Yet this admirable advocate settled this debate by his admirable speech.

Again, strong eulogies were passed on two gentlemen, Mr. Senkler and Mr. Ogilvie, but nothing was said of a number of others. That was the old trick of the former discussion carried on in this House by the hon. Minister of the Interior—to slip very lightly over the doubtful and charged ones, and to make a strong eulogium upon those whom no one attacked; and my right hon. friend follows the same admirable method, and quotes from the "Gazette," an article to show that the appointments of Mr. Ogilvie and Mr. Justice Dugas were good and fit appointments. Good and fit for what? Nobody has challenged that the appointment of Mr. Dugas was a fit appointment as a judge. Nobody has challenged that the appointment of Mr. Ogilvie was a fit and good appointment as a commissioner for the Yukon territory. But Judge Dugas, acting as an executive councillor, and Mr. Ogilvie acting as a judge commissioned to try a case, are two very different things from Judge Dugas as a judge, and Mr. Ogilvie as the commissioner of the Yukon appointed to carry out his civil functions in that district. Now, Sir, what we say is—and we say it with no detriment to him as a man—that Mr. Ogilvie is not the fittest person for the best carrying out of an investigation into these charges, and for several reasons. One of them has been made very light of. First, we say that it is not meeting the sense of fitness in Canada and in the British Empire, which is seized of these allegations or facts, whichever you may call them, to take a man who is a subordinate and in the pay of the Minister himself, and to appoint him to hold a court of inquiry into the malfeasance, as is alleged, of the officials under that same Minister's department and under that Government. Whatever you may say about relations—and I believe this admirable speaker, prompted by my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), was almost on the point of saying that he had never seen his aunt to whom Mr. Ogilvie is married—the very moment you appoint Mr. Ogilvie to take the place of a judge and hold a court to investigate matters under his own and his superior's administration, that moment you should be careful to keep relationship entirely out of the position of the judge who is to preside and make the inquiry. Why, that is the plainest principle that obtains with judges on the bench. Not only is relationship debarred, but the least interest is debarred on the part of judges. In every court you will find instances of a judge absenting himself from a case because he has some slight interest in it, in some way or other, and you will find judges refusing to adjudicate on cases because they are related in some way to some of those who have the case before them. It is the simplest principle, for the protection of judges and the judicial authority, that they should be kept as far as possible from the suspicion of interest, either pecuniarily or in the point of relationship. That is why we say that the sense of fitness and justice has not been met by the appointment of a relative, and paid officer of this Minister to conduct these investigations into his own administration of the Yukon.

But there is one thing which the right hon. gentleman consoles himself with, that from this time forth he is able to love this admirable Minister of the Interior; and one of the strangest grounds on which affection from my right hon. friend is placed, is not, for instance, even the admirable qualities of this admirable Minister—not even his great abilities as they show themselves to my right hon. friend. No such well-reasoned and sensible grounds for basing his affections for the Minister of the Interior. No, he loves him because the member for Pictou hates him. That may be a very good reason, a very good ground on which to base one's affections, but generally we would think that there should be a better reason, a better basis, for affection and friendship than that. But what is the cause of all this attempt to draw pity to the poor Minister of the Interior? Because he is hounded bitterly, and abused, and followed. In what sense has he been hounded, or followed, or bitterly abused? I have failed to see or hear it in this House. He presides over a department in this Government. With reference to his management of that department, he is open to criticism. He has been criticised, and will hereafter be criticised; but, because the Opposition criticises the department and the head of the department on account of what they believe to be the inefficient, the neglectful way in which it is managed, it by no means follows that they abuse him, or follow him, or hound him. We love this admirable Minister of the Interior, and we love him not because anybody hates him. We love him just as far as his loving and lovable qualities will give us a basis for our affections and no further. But we do not consider him of such majestic mien or wonderful power that we are hurling all the envenomed shafts of hatred and bitterness against him as a shining mark. We have no such thought as that in our minds. He and his colleague, the hon. Minister of Railways, both suffer from a little halucination in that respect. They are not, however, so important in the eyes of the Opposition and the country as they think, but they happen, whether by accident or otherwise, to have very important departments under them at present. And, consequently, they become, not in their personality, but in their administration, shining marks for good and reasonable criticism on the Opposition side—only that, and nothing more.

Now, I think I must come for a little while to the admirable speech of the admirable Minister of the Interior. I have already said that the genius of his speech, if you may call it such, consisted in his deftly catching two or three unimportant points, making the most of them, and sliding over the difficult ones, the fundamental charges that were made. I beg leave to say that, although he disparaged the value of the seat of my hon. friend from Pictou, although he seemed to think it had not much commercial value—he may be a judge at that; I do not know—he evidently does not intend to put his own seat, whatever value it may have, in any jeopardy. He distinctly argued this afternoon that, because he himself was not charged with personal corruption, though we might prove that all the appointments he made were corrupt, and his whole management corrupt, inefficient, shamelessly inept, grossly negligent, he, the admirable Minister, intended to hold on to his seat. I venture to say that Canada is a different country from what he thinks it is, and public opinion is a little more alive than hon. gentlemen opposite nowadays think it is, and that if these charges were once put before a thoroughly independent commission, and if even a tithe of them proved, the present admirable Minister of the Interior could not long be a Minister in this country. You may talk about ministerial responsibility this way or that way, but the man who is at the head of a department is supposed to keep his eye upon that department, and, if he does not do it, if his appointments are unworthy, if his administration is careless and more than careless, he cannot retain the confidence of his party as a Minister of the Executive and the Government, and there will be found a very speedy way of translating the present Minister of the Interior to some office of emolument within the gift of the Crown, and the installation of some one else in his place. But it will not be with the will and the agreeable acquiescence of the Minister of the Interior. He has served that notice on his party already. With the coming statement of the Prime Minister, to which I would attach much more force, if it had not followed about a thousand in order of other statements and promises made which have not been fulfilled, during the career of my right hon. friend; but, with that statement in prospect, the hon. gentleman, I think, was trying to serve notice upon the party that, through this probing to the very bottom whatever might be proved with reference to official corruption, he, at least, was not going to vacate his seat and to relieve the Government of his place in the Cabinet to make room for any one else.

There was one moment of intense relief and intense elation on the other side. It was when this admirable Minister, as a sequence to some of his first remarks, turned around to his followers and declared that in the whole length and breadth of this indictment there was not one charge of personal corruption against him or any member of the Government. We then heard the welkin ring with the cheers of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Evidently, suspense was relieved; evidently, that announcement was a surprise, and they congratulated themselves, and sent their pæans up to the gods that they were spared what they had feared—the personal indictment of some one of their Ministers.

But there is another great difficulty. The constitution is in danger again—in danger, according to the admirable Minister of the Interior; in danger again, according to the erudite leader of the Government. In what respect? Another great constitutional principle is involved. Turning to their followers, both said: Are you going to relegate to judges your duties as members of Parliament? We are responsible to Parliament, and not to the judges. Therefore, we cannot have a commission of judges to inquire into official corruption, as it is alleged, in the Yukon district. Now, whilst I advocate ministerial responsibility, while it is the basis of our parliamentary system, I do not think there is anything inconsistent with parliamentary responsibility, that Parliament should inform itself, and inform itself by a commission of whatever character it chooses, judges or not. Nobody supposes that the judges are to go into this investigation and depose the Minister of the Interior, or the Postmaster General, or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is a special sinner in this case, through having put that man Russell into an appointment of honour and responsibility in British Columbia and the Yukon. No one supposed that the judges were going to decapitate these gentlemen, however much they may merit decapitation. All that the judges were to do was to inquire into this matter, to probe it, as my right hon. friend said, to the bottom, and give information to the members of this House, upon which information parliamentary responsibility could rest secure. Information is needed, needed by members on both sides of the House. Despite all that has been written, all that has been said, all the rumours and all the facts that have been current throughout this country and throughout the British Empire for the past year and a half, how little specific information members on either side of the House as to what has been going on in the Yukon. All that time, and I charge it against the Government, all that time, whilst this flood of accusation, and of suspicion of misconduct, and proof of misconduct in case after case, have been current the world around, this Administration has been interposing its bulk between a thorough investigation of these allegations and charges and the great outside public who want to know, who want to purge Canada's good name and to purge the name of popular self-government as represented in Canada. They have great advantages; they do not have to fight on the aggressive. All these gentlemen have to do is simply to maintain a position of masterly inactivity; time and distance will do the rest. That dispersion of evidence which inevitably takes place in a country like the Yukon, with its thousands going and coming over immense distances, makes it impossible to produce to-morrow the evidence which you have under your hand to-day. All that you have to do is by dilatory methods, to keep the thing over for three months, for six months, for nine months or for a year—and by that time you will have buried any evidence that could possibly have been got together at any time to convict these men. Here is another principle enunciated to-night. In the kaleidoscopic changes that are taking place, all the officials of yesterday will be out to-morrow. And the doctrine is laid down here to-night that the moment an executive officer, no matter what he may have done while in office, is out of office you have no right to follow him into private life. Everything will work lovely for these gentlemen if they will just be dilatory a few months longer. What a most absurd and unworthy position it was—for the Minister of the Interior—that admirable gentleman—to take, that this miner's committee which suffered under and was cognizant of the evil which afflicted the community from January to the 25th August, 1898, that that committee having been in Dawson, where the evil was rife, and when six months after the commission was opened they could not prove anything, that shows that they had no reasonable case and had no evidence upon which to base their charges. I say, Sir, that in a period of six months, or even three months, in a mining camp like Dawson, things could easily have been proved at the time the charges were made and the facts were current would be absolutely impossible of proof except by the most herculean efforts. Yet the commission was limited. The miners did not ask it to be limited; the mining community in Dawson did not ask it to be limited; Mr. Ogilvie himself did not ask it to be limited. Yet this Government took the liberty to limit it to the 25th August. And Mr. Ogilvie, against his own wish, and will, and opinion over and over again expressed, was forced to confine the investigation to what took place before the 25th August, much as he regretted it. What were the charges? Lack of confidence in the officials. Is that a matter which must be kept to a certain period of time when the same officials were in office? If the court is open there, and a man comes into court and says: I have a piece of evidence of an occurrence that took place yesterday which will prove that an official is inefficient and unworthy, the judge must say: Your proof is entirely irrelevant, sir; this charge was made on the 25th August, and no matter what may be the failings, the incapacity, the actual fraud and cheaterly of these officials since, it is of no account at all; you must not bring any evidence that has not to do with an act committed before the 25th August, 1898. That is the action of a Government which wants to probe to the bottom, which will not rest satisfied until every shadow of suspicion is lifted from that land of the midnight sun. How the professions and actions of these hon. gentlemen are poles asunder. I say, Sir, that after their eulogiums upon Mr. Ogilvie, after the statements that have been made through every part of the country as to Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie's opinion may now be quoted against themselves and quoted with great force. Mr. Ogilvie's opinion was that it was an unfortunate thing that the investigation was limited to what had occurred previous to the 25th of August. I want to prove that. I will read only a few of the statements made by Commissioner Ogilvie. At page 72, of the evidence, it will be found that the commissioner, being asked for his ruling and being pressed to rule that he could not take evidence upon what had occurred subsequent to the 25th August, said:

Do you want it now? I have consulted with the legal adviser here and have come to the conclusion that I can only hear charges under that commission that occurred before the 25th of August. If there is any way in which I can go and hear others, I am quite willing to do so,—if there is any legal method—and, further, I intend to refer the matter to the Minister, and ask for another commission or an enlargement of this.

Again, on page 73, when Mr. McDougall, one of the miners' committee, or acting for them, is urging the hardship upon them of confining it to what had occurred previous to the 25th of August, he says :

They refer to certain actions made from day to day, and made still, and it is utterly impossible to read it any other way than that this investigation should consider charges up to the present time.

The Commissioner.—Unfortunately, it is otherwise.

Again, on page 73, he makes about the same admission. On page 74, when Mr. Tabor is urging the legal objection, he (Mr. Tabor) says :

It may be a questionable point whether this very commission would be entitled to inquire into the acts of civil servants, because there is another Act provided for it.

The Commissioner.—That is a misfortune.

That is the way he designates the commission. Again, in reply to Col. McGregor, who says :

The way I understand it was the commissioner that was to investigate into charges was not limited to the date of the commission, but up to the time that his labours would be considered to be completed.

The Commissioner.—I wish it had been so.

Col. McGregor, a little later, says :

I have no desire to induce you to go beyond that power.

The Commissioner.—If there is any other legal way to take the investigation up, I will do so, and will urge the Minister by the next mail to extend this commission, or have a new one. * * * Even the Minister does not always utter the law. Even the Minister cannot override the law. I am sorry I am stopped.

On page 75, he declares again : Meanwhile as I cannot go on any other way than to limit myself to what occurred before the 25th of August :

Meantime, I will ask the Minister for another commission or an extension of this.

Again, on the same page, Mr. McDougall says :

Can you be surprised that any one cannot carry on a prosecution which commences, say the 25th of February, before which no matters can be brought up which occurred after the 25th of August ?

The Commissioner.—It may be surprising, but all I can say is I am quite as much surprised and disappointed as you are. I regret it, but I will take such steps by any legal method I can to go on with the investigation, and if you wish I shall ask for an enlargement of the commission, or a new one, to end on such a date, so that everybody will be satisfied. I cannot override the commission ; there is no use.

That, Sir, is but a sample of many statements made by Mr. Ogilvie himself, every one of which goes to show that his matured opinion was that it was a pity, a misfortune and a mistake that this commission was limited to the 25th of August, and that it should have gone on to take in cases up to the date of the sitting of the commission.

Now, Sir, when the Minister of the Interior undertakes his defence, he says that such officers as were to be appointed were appointed as soon as possible, and as soon as it was practicable. First, so and so went up ; then Mr. Walsh and his staff went up, and Mr. Walsh was thought to be the right man. The Minister evidently all the way through strives to ward off responsibility for his appointment under the statement that the country generally approved of the appointment of Mr. Walsh. That does not alter the Minister's responsibility for his appointment one single iota. Only a little period any way, says the Minister, should be investigated, that is the little period from June to September, 1898. It is only a past wrong, no wrongs are now alleged. It would be difficult to understand what wrong could be inquired into except a past wrong. Future wrongs are indefinite, and may never transpire. But the hon. Minister's argument was this, that it is past, and that it is all folly to talk about investigating anything during the period from June to September, 1898. It was a little period, and, therefore, it does not amount to much. He says that the miners' committee being in Dawson at the time of these occurrences are said to have taken place, and remaining there, ought to have been able to prove their charges if the charges were true, and if they had any proof upon which they based them at first. He goes on to say that the charges were false, that the men were false, and that it was simply, as he puts it, a bare-faced attempt of the miners' committee and those they represented to bring opprobrium upon the Government.

There is a point that has been dealt with by the gentlemen who have spoken, but I do not think it can be too often dealt with, namely, the extreme difficulty of getting proof and presenting charges under the circumstances in the Yukon. What were the circumstances, in brief ? In the first place, a disorganized state of society, where men are going and coming every hour of every day during every month of the year, and where the men were the principals in an action or wronged by an action of to-day, may be thousands of miles away or hundreds of miles away to-morrow, and proof impossible to be obtained except at great expense and trouble. That is one thing. Now, when you take that into account and look through all the ramifications of that one circumstance which is ever present, the difficulty comes to be seen as enormous for any gentleman or any lawyer to undertake to press a case before him. For, mind you, Mr. Ogilvie did not sit there as a commissioner of inquiry, he did not sit there with a desire every hour that he sat there to probe into these matters; he sat there, as he was advised to sit, as a judge in a court of law asking parties to formulate their charges. Having Mr. Tabor at his side, and Mr. Clement, he would not allow even a witness to mention another man's name in the course of his evidence if it was thought that he might imply a charge against the other man, until a specific charge had been formulated against that other man. He demanded that in every case specific charges should be formulated and supported by evidence, that these charges should be put into the hands of the persons charged, and sufficient time given to them to prepare their defence. That was not a committee of inquiry, that was an imitation of a court of law, where the judge sits on his bench and does not do anything except by a question now and then to help to the elucidation of a point which is being discussed before him, or a fact in evidence. It is not an inquiry into a state of things alleged to have taken place, an act alleged to have been wrong and bad. That was how Mr. Ogilvie sat, that was how that investigation went on; and the very moment when the men who were trying to conduct a case came up point blank against something or other which they wanted to prove, and said they could prove, by evidence, that happened after the 25th of August, they were ruled out, it was impossible to bring in that evidence. That is a fact which is patent on every page of the evidence produced by the Government with reference to that investigation. What other thing is patent? We find that there was no provision at all for procuring evidence. First, there was no provision that a man who gave evidence should be properly protected, because in many cases no safeguard could be given by the commissioner, and second, there was no provision for the expenses of witnesses, in the least, provided. Now, you put these things together and the difficulties were simply enormous. With untrained men, working with their own private resources, at their own expenses, and at the neglect of their own business, without sufficient legal advice, or power to get it, I say the difficulties were enormous for these men to carry out an investigation and to go to the root of the matter. I venture to say that no hon. gentleman can read that evidence, as I have read it from cover to cover, without being impressed with the fact that that investigation was totally inadequate to bring out the true state of the facts which were alleged to have existed and to exist at that time. I do not think any sensible business man, or any lawyer, could read through the evidence without coming to that conclusion. I state that without any implication against men who were trying to conduct this business. I go further and I say that the last half of the investigation which was carried on, the difficulties of which are shown in about the last half of the evidence, where we had the investigation, which could not go on, under the terms of the commission, and where Mr. Ogilvie endeavoured to get witnesses to state their evidence and to make a statutory declaration to him, shows that, in almost every particular, the investigation was not well conducted, but that it had degenerated into a farce. Why? From inaptitude on the part of those who had thrown upon them the onus of carrying out this investigation and because of the utter lack of any kind of machinery for getting at the real statement of the case, for defraying the expenses of witnesses and for safeguarding them against incriminating themselves, or any of those safeguards necessary to inquire into the facts. So that I think the case is not proven at all to the satisfaction of this House, that the hon. Minister of the Interior and the Government are free of blame entirely, because, under these circumstances, the investigation has not brought out the facts which were alleged by the miners' committee. It is stated that the Opposition have a desire to blast Mr. Ogilvie's reputation. I do not think so; I do not think a single word can be cited to show that. We may be perfectly well agreed that Mr. Ogilvie is a first rate man, a good man, in the line of his professional occupation, but we may have a totally different view as to his capacity to take the place of judge, or, as to his eligibility, under the circumstances, to be in the position of a judge, to pass upon the administration of his own employer and of his own relative by marriage. When, says the hon. Minister of the Interior, did Mr. Ogilvie become incompetent? If you will allow an answer to that question, in a guarded way, in the view of the Opposition, Mr. Ogilvie became incompetent when he was appointed to take charge of the investigation into the department of his own Minister and to occupy the place of a judge, and his incompetence is no disgrace to him. Every man is not born a judge. Every good surveyor, every good general man of business, every good honest man is not necessarily the proper man to conduct a judicial inquiry and to probe these matters to the bottom, as the right hon. gentleman said they ought to be probed. The hon. Minister of the Interior says that he begged for charges. That does not help the matter. What, if a few notices were sent out here and there over the Yukon district, telling the miners, that if they have any charges against men who hold every fortune that they have got within the hollow of their hand, they may prefer them when they must walk in from their claims at their own expense, neglect their work and face all the legal ability and a court constituted as this one was! I tell hon. gentlemen that it is simply absurd to tell us, with a notice sent out in that way, that this was an adequate inquiry. What, then, is the Government's position? They say, first, that they are waiting for the full result. They have been waiting for the last year and a half. All they have to do to stave off the inquiry is to await about a year longer, and every official will have passed away or every scintilla of evidence that could have been gathered will have been dissipated. They say: If the grounds are shown we will further investigate. That means simply taffy for their followers. We know that the grounds will be judged by these hon. gentlemen, and the way they will judge the grounds may be taken from the manner in which they have acted for the last year and a half in reference to these charges. They say that their political responsibility would be taken from Parliament and handed over to the judges of the land. No one asks them to hand it over. The only question is as to whether this Parliament is properly informed on these matters. In no way can parliamentary responsibility be fairly carried out with an uninformed set of members of Parliament, speaking, of course, with all respect, of hon. members. If it is necessary for the best parliamentary responsibility that the clearest and surest information should be got, the argument is that you should get the best tribunal to gather the information and then you will be in a position to discharge the duties of members of Parliament and to judge with discretion, with knowledge and with information. Says the hon. Minister of the Interior: Mr. Wade has been attacked, and by the reports Mr. Wade has been exonerated. The hon. Minister declares in the end that it is all boiled down to this: On what does the fair fame of Canada rest? On the character of her public men, not in the fact that Major Walsh's cook accidentally got a permit. Now, Sir, I do not want any sentence more damnatory than that from the hon. Minister of the Interior, as a member of that Government, when an hon. gentleman, occupying the responsible position that he does, having heard all that has been said, knowing all that has been alleged, knowing all that has been actually proved, comes down, and with the dignity and from the position of a member of the Government declares that it is all boiled down to this that a cook of Major Walsh accidentally got a permit and that all this pother is about that. The fair fame of Canada, he says, rests upon the character of its public men, and the character of its public men is shown by their acts. The fair fame of Canada, he declared, has always been safe with Liberal Governments. That is sufficient for his followers and for his party. But the memory of this country is not absolutely deadened, and we do not have to go back many years to the impersonification of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec under a certain Mr. Mercier, in whose Liberal hands the fair fame of the province of Quebec was safe. The Pacauds flourished then like the green bay tree, and the right hon. gentleman who sits there as Prime Minister of Canada partook in the results and fruits of the plunder that Pacaud stole from the public treasury of the province of Quebec. And the gentleman who sits behind the Minister of Marine and Fisheries participated in the plunder that was taken from the province of Quebec and used it in the elections in the province of New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me to make a remark?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to say that what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) states is utterly and entirely untrue. I never handled a dollar, I never saw a dollar, I never participated in any shape or form in the expenditure of a dollar of money which came from any such source?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) deny that a cheque for $5,000 came from the province of Quebec for use in the New Brunswick elections, in behalf of the party and the Government that he led at that time in the province of New Brunswick?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do unquestionably deny it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) denies it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I am bound to take his denial, but the last has not been heard on this question. But there is no denial possible of the first statement that I made, or the right hon. gentleman who leads this Government would get up and deny it. His majority sits here today, a majority which was propped up, supported, bought by the plunder which was taken from the provincial treasury of Quebec under a Liberal Government, in whose hands the fair fame of Canada can always be trusted.

Mr. Hardy leads a Liberal Government in this province of Ontario—and, under Liberal Governments, the fair fame of Canada can always be trusted. What is this revelation that has lately come from Elgin? This revelation in which a Liberal candidate became a Liberal member by the grossest frauds that were ever brought to light in any country; I do not care if you go back to the rotten borough days of old England.

Mr. COCHERANE. Where is Preston?

Mr. FOSTER. Preston now in receipt of a larger salary from this Government. was the man, I believe, who planned that campaign, who established the Liberal organization, which reaches into every county, and which reached into that county, which personated honest men as keepers of the ballot-boxes, slept over night with the ballot-boxes, and fixed them to their liking; imposed on a sheriff too willing to be imposed on, too easily lending himself to be imposed upon; who stole the constituency under the flying banners of the Hardy Liberal organization in the province of Ontario; kept it in spite of all decency and conscience, until the damning facts came out, and then gave up what had been stolen and made a disclosure, poor innocent man, that he never knew such a thing was going on in his county. And yet, the fair fame of Canada is safe in the hands of Liberal Governments.

The Postmaster General sits there, the man who goes cheek by jowl with that organization on the side lines of every contested Dominion election in this country, who herds with them, sleeps with them, who carries on this business in connection with them. And yet, under a Liberal Government always the fair fame of Canada can always be trusted.

Mr. GIBSON. The high tone of debate.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the admirable Minister of the Interior and the high tone of debate that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) is talking about. Why, we are getting very high-toned. I was somewhat surprised when the Prime Minister put in his voice for high tone to-night, but we expected it of him. I am very much surprised that the member for Lincoln finds fault with the tone of debate, especially when that tone shows him something of the fallacy of the appeal of the Minister of the Interior, that under Liberal Governments the fair fame of Canada could always be trusted to remain unsmirched.

Now, Sir, about this Mrs. Koch who accidentally got a permit. When the Minister of the Interior was going over that bit of evidence, I asked him if that was all, and after he had finished he said it was all. To my mind it is not all, and I propose to ask the attention of this House to what I consider is a very important point which is developed in this evidence such as has been gained, and which I think it is right this House should be made cognizant of from first to last. Would you believe it, that this gentleman who acts as judge in this commission to probe to the bottom and make his report to this House, actually had unfolded before him by unqualified and uncontradicted testimony, one of the foulest things that has been perpetrated in that Yukon territory with reference to Dominion Creek permits and claims, and whilst this commissioner was very anxious to put as fair a gloss as possible on every other case, he never mentioned that by one single word or one single line. Neither was it mentioned by the admirable Minister of the Interior, who is certainly admirable in avoiding all the weak spots of his case. But, Sir, the evidence is there, and I propose to put some of that evidence before the House to-night. In the fall of 1897, trouble arose on Dominion Creek. Mr. Fawcett was the Gold Commissioner. There was overlapping, and bad descriptions of the different claims, and in the end Mr. Fawcett thought the easiest way out of it was to close Dominion Creek, and he closed it on the 15th November, 1897—the creek alone and not the hills and benches. There was part of the creek even which was afterwards opened, but the main part where the difficulties of description and overlapping of claim existed is not yet open, or was not at the date that this evidence was closed. Now, after he had closed Dominion Creek he awaited a survey. The creek was closed in November; the hillsides and benches were not closed, and men prospected on the hillsides and benches, and they brought down their applications and made them, but Mr. Fawcett recorded none of them. He said to them in effect: Go ahead, prospect, make what description you can, make your application here, and when we get the surveys made, these will be taken into account and we will have these matters fixed up. So it remained until Mr. Walsh came into the country, and on the 30th day of May, Major Walsh and the council stopped this privilege of prospecting on the hillsides and benches of Dominion Creek, and closed not only the creek which Mr. Fawcett had closed, but closed the hillsides and benches as well. Mr. Fawcett said: that is not fair, Mr. Walsh; I have allowed prospecting on the hillsides and benches that have never been closed; I have taken their applications; I have given them to understand that these applications would have prior right with me; if you close all of these you close them out, and when you do open them everybody will have an equal chance to go in there, and that is unfair to these men who have prospected under my permission, and in fact under my directions. And so it happened, that after a fortnight's time he prevailed, and a proclamation or notice was issued that permits would be allowed on and after the 11th day of July on Dominion Creek. But, Sir, what happens? It happens that Mr. Walsh sends down one day a notice to Mr. Fawcett to be signed. Mr. Fawcett, worried and bothered, and with the discussion which had been going on between himself and Mr. Walsh, took that notice as it came to him, and just signed it and sent it back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the date of that?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it was the 6th of July.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think you are wrong there. I think it was about the 27th of May.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it was not so early. But, as my hon. friend has raised the point, I will refer to the references. I suppose there is no doubt about the notice that was issued making those accessible for permits on and after the 11th of July. That was posted on the 30th of June. Now, on page 89 of the evidence, I will read, first, the notice closing the hillsides and benches, issued by Major Walsh :

Any locations made on a creek after it has been closed will not be recognized or put on record. This includes hill and bench claims as well as creek claims.

Dominion Creek having been closed since the middle of November last, it has been decided that the creek shall remain closed until further notice. This decision applies to hill and bench claims as well as to creek claims.

This was passed by the Council, and posted on the 30th of June. Mr. Fawcett objected to that :

Q. Did you object to that being done?—A. I did.

Q. Why?—A. Because a great many miners had gone to the hills with my permission and staked their claims, made applications and had the applications accepted as far as protecting of claims, so far as we could pending the returns of the survey. I considered I had granted them a right, and this motion was taking the right away from them; that is why I objected; I would not have had any objection had that not been the case; I did object on that ground.

Q. Your objection was overruled?—A. I was in the minority.

Q. How long did that remain closed in accordance with the resolution?—A. I brought up this matter on several subsequent meetings; I carried the bench claims book up with me about two weeks later, and showed the commissioner that it would be an injustice to these people who had gone out with my permission and staked this ground and had their applications accepted, if their ground should be taken away from them in that way, and that, in my opinion, they would have ground for complaint. The commissioner seemed to acquiesce in this. Mr. Pattullo in the meantime turned to this resolution, and he said: "I think that was disposed of two weeks ago," and read these clauses I have just read. Major Walsh said: "Certainly, that was disposed of; we can't take cognizance of it any more; we can't be doing and undoing; so that practically settles that."

Q. Well, then, were the hill-sides open after all?—A. They were open upon the publication of that notice (pointing to the notice).

That is not the notice I have been speaking of, but is another notice.

Q. What led to the issuance of this notice?—A. There was a good deal transpired between; there was a notice posted in June notifying the people that after a certain date permits would be issued.

Q. What date?—A. I think it must have been about the end of June, or somewhere near this; it was to have been posted on the 30th June or the 1st of July, stating that permits would be issued on the 11th.

Mr. FOSTER.

Q. Have you a copy of that notice now?—A. No. The first time I noticed that notice with my name in large print was when I saw the notice posted up. My objection to the whole thing was, their considering that I didn't say anything that would seem to be in favour of my idea that there was no occasion for closing the hill-sides.

Q. Was that your signature?—A. Yes.

That is, the second notice.

Q. Did you issue it?—A. Well, on one occasion Mr. Pattullo came with a notice, asking me to sign it; it was in relation to closing the hill-sides, but I objected on the ground that I considered there was no basis for the hill-sides being closed; I still maintained my objection to what had been done in council as Gold Commissioner, and I refused to sign the notice. Major Walsh sent and summoned me before him, and he gave me a very strong reprimand. As near as I can remember, he said: "Mr. Fawcett, I want you to understand that it is impertinent on your part to question anything that has been decided in council, and when I sent that notice for you to sign, I want you to sign it." On the spur of the moment I signed this notice without reading it.

Why did he sign that? Because, by the powers vested by this Government in Major Walsh, he had the supreme authority over every officer, and he could dismiss him, or do anything he liked. No wonder that Mr. Fawcett says: "On the spur of the moment, I signed this notice without reading it." Then the commissioner asked him:

Q. Were you not simple in not reading it?—A. Yes, I was simple; I acknowledge this.

Q. Don't you think you should have kept a copy for your own protection?—A. I never thought of the thing at all.

Q. Don't you think you should have made a copy of it before you let it go?—A. Well, I never thought anything would arise out of it. I didn't think any blame or weight would be attached to me.

No wonder he did not. The lord high admiral was in the land, and the lord high admiral had a sword put into his hand by this Government which gave him the power to dismiss instantly any officer in the civil or the military force at that time in the Yukon—every one except the judge of the Superior Court.

Q. What was in this notice?—A. It stated that on and after 11th July that permits to prospect bench claims on Dominion Creek would be granted—for prospecting and staking, and I think there was something that applications would be accepted if approved of by the mining inspector.

Then he was asked, if he could get a copy of that notice, and after a while the copy of the notice was given, and here it is. This is the notice which Mr. Fawcett signed without reading it:

HILL AND BENCH CLAIMS

On Dominion Creek are now open for Location and Prospecting by all Free Miners.

Those claims shown in the appended sketch, with one exception, will be open only to those who made application for them prior to the completion of the survey, which application was filed at the office of the Gold Commissioner.

Dated at Dawson, Yukon district, this 8th day of July, A.D. 1898.

By order,
THOMAS FAWCETT,
Gold Commissioner.

When Mr. Fawcett saw that notice, which he had signed without reading, at the command of the man who could have cut his head off instantly, if he had not obeyed, he found that his long-time contention was entirely done away with, and that the men to whom he had given assurances that if they made application, their applications would be considered, were entirely left out, he sits down and writes a letter to Mr. Walsh on the 7th July, in which he puts his views strongly before him. That letter I shall not take up the time of the House in reading, but it will be found on page 99 of the evidence, and in it he reiterates his own ground. Now, when was this 2nd notice dated? It was dated on the 8th July. Who put in the date? Not Mr. Fawcett. Mr. Fawcett was for carrying out his good faith to the miners. He signed that notice, and, when he had it in his mind, and after he had signed it and found out what it was, he signed it, as he says, and meant that it should not bear date until the 11th July, so that these men who had prospected and made their applications to him, might have a chance to get their permits, and not be done out of them by the general mining public, who might rush in there without having done any previous prospecting at all. On the 8th July it was signed. The very moment it was signed, Dominion Creek was opened. The 11th July was three days distant. The very moment that was signed, and before it went to the printer, it was a document that had force, and Dominion Creek was opened for anybody who could get the information. What was done by the judicious commissioner and his entourage? Mr. Swineheart, of the printing office, was called up to Major Walsh's office, and was asked when he could do some printing, when he could get it out; and finally was told what it was, and he joked with the commissioner about it, and wished he had a miners' license, for, if he had, he would start at once, and get his stakes down, and get his claim. The notice went down to the printing office. Man after man was at the commissioner's office in order to get hold of this document and ascertain its date. The printer refused any who did not bring an order from Mr. Walsh. Ultimately, an order was brought from Mr. Walsh, and these notices were taken out on the 9th to be posted. But what happened? This happened, that on the 8th July, the very date the order was signed and dated by Mr. Walsh, some people knew that Dominion Creek was opened, and they could make tracks for it. Who made tracks for Dominion Creek? Mr. Fawcett, in his evidence, page 94, when he was pressed, said:

1954

If you wish to know whether I knew of any parties who had information, I think I knew of a person who, I subsequently heard, had information, who went and staked a claim and left Dawson on the evening of the 8th.

Q. Who is he? A. Mr. Carbeno.

Let us look a little more into Mr. Carbeno's position. On page 102, Mr. Carbeno himself is asked to stand up, and the commissioner asked him:

Can you give us the names of those men who accompanied you out to Dominion Creek?—Mr. Carbeno, the Colum boys.

Q. Can you say if they are in the country?—A. No, sir, they are not; they went out with Major Walsh. There was a man named Marseille; he didn't come into Dawson with us; he went out from Bennett.

Q. Do you know if he staked a claim elsewhere?—A. He staked a claim on Phil Walsh Creek, below the Big Salmon.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge that he was in the same contract that you were?

Carbeno, it appears, was in a contract.

A. Yes, the same agreement was drawn up.

Q. And he had likewise to give a three-fourths interest?—A. He drew up an agreement on the typewriter, as I remember it, and Marseille got an agreement.

So, Carbeno says that the Collum boys went out with him. What is the next step in this? Turn to page 258:

Louis Carbeno, called and sworn.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. Where were you on the 8th July?—A. Well, I was in camp until about 10 o'clock.

Mind you, this 8th July was before the notices were printed and put up, but after they had been signed by the order of Major Walsh.

Q. Where?—A. It would be at the hospital.

Q. In what capacity were you working?—A. I was working for Major Walsh.

Q. Were you there all that day?—A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. On the evening of the 8th July?—A. Until evening.

Mr. Fawcett is examining, and seems to do it with a right-good will.

Q. Where were you later on in the evening?—

A. I was up Bonanza.

Q. For what purpose?—A. Going up to Dominion.

Q. Why were you on the way to Dominion?—A. Because I was informed that it was going to be opened on the 9th.

Q. Informed when?—A. About 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. On what date?—A. The 8th.

Q. Where did you acquire the information?—A. I received that from one of our dog-drivers.

Q. Who?—A. McBeth.

Q. Is he here now?—A. Yes; he is an Indian.

Q. And he told you it was open?—A. Well, he didn't tell me; it was rumoured about the camp. I asked Major Walsh's brother if the creek was going to be thrown open on the 9th, and he said he thought it was.

Q. Where was McBeth at this time?—A. He had been down the street.

Q. Where was he when he gave you this information?—A. In camp.

Q. Where was McBeth?—A. He had been down the street, and he came back to camp.

Q. Was Major Walsh present?—A. No.

Q. Was McBeth working for Major Walsh?—A. Yes.

Q. And he told you that the creek would be opened on the 9th?—A. He said he heard it would be opened on the 9th.

Q. That was on the afternoon of the 8th?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you how he came by that information?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you stake your claim?—A. I staked it on the 9th, about 10.30.

By the Commissioner :

Q. In the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Fawcett :

Q. You subsequently recorded that claim?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you start?—A. At 10.30 on the evening of the 8th.

Q. Would anybody have any interest in giving you any information as to this creek being opened on the 9th?—A. No, not that I know of, except Major Walsh's brother.

Q. What interests had he?—A. He didn't have any interests. I suppose it was his interest, in one way, to give me information.

Q. What arrangement was there between you and Major Walsh or any of his brothers with reference to any claims you might stake?—A. There was a document drawn up between him and his brother to give me a three-fourth interest in anything I got in the country, providing he paid all my expenses, and the working of any ground I took up in the country.

Q. Would you recognize that agreement if you saw it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you tell me if this is the document? (Showing an agreement between Louis Carbeno and Lewis Walsh) which reads as follows:—

Port Arthur, 23rd Sept., 1897.

This agreement made this day, between Lewis Walsh, known as the party of the first part, and Louis Carbeno, of the town of Brockville, known as the party of the second part,

Witness that in consideration of the party of the first part furnishing the party of the second part with an outfit, and paying all expenses necessary for the working of any claim that the party of the second part may discover or take up in the Yukon district, in the North-west Territories, the party of the second part hereby agrees to give the party of the first part a one undivided three-quarter interest in the said claim, reserving to himself a one-quarter interest.

LEWIS WALSH.

LOUIS CARBENO.

Witness : PHIL. WALSH.

Q. That is your signature?—A. Yes, sir; that is the agreement between me and Lewis Walsh.

Q. Where was that made?—A. That was drawn up and signed at the Big Salmon last winter.

Q. Where was it drawn up?—A. In Port Arthur.

Q. When did you sign it?—A. Last winter; there was another agreement which his brother drew up, and I wouldn't sign it.

Q. Phil. Walsh drew it up?—A. This was made at Port Arthur and forwarded to Big Salmon.

Q. Why was it dated the 24th of September?—A. That was the date on which we made the arrangement.

Q. You were at Port Arthur on the 23rd of September?—A. Yes; that was dated then.

Mr. FOSTER.

Q. You didn't sign it till last winter. Who was the witness?—A. Phil. Walsh.

By the Commissioner :

Q. You staked the claim in the way you said?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with that claim?—A. I turned it over as I agreed.

By Mr. Fawcett :

Q. According to that agreement you made for part of that claim, did you—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you convey that?—A. To Phil. Walsh.

Q. Is that something like the bill of sale? That is the bill of sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was given after this agreement which you signed?—A. Yes, sir.

Then the commissioner takes a hand in :

By the Commissioner :

Q. Why did you give this to Philip Walsh and not to Lewis?—A. Because Major Walsh instructed me he did not want Lewis's name brought into the office, and it would be just as well to have the property made over to him.

Mr. McLENNAN. Who is Lewis?

Mr. FOSTER. Major Walsh's brother.

I told him that it was not proper; that the agreement would not stand law, and I couldn't get anything, and asked him to make out another agreement. He argued the point, and I told Mr. Pattullo and Pattullo drew that agreement up; he said it would be all right, and I went to work and signed it.

Q. What consideration did you receive?—A. Not a cent.

Q. What were you to receive for the three-fourths; you were to receive one-fourth instead of what belonged to you?—A. He was to look after it, and pay any expenses of any mine I took up.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is Mr. Pattullo?

Mr. FOSTER. Major Walsh's private secretary.

Q. Had this agreement been made before you left down east?—A. We talked the agreement over, but the agreement hadn't been drawn up, and it had to be signed at Big Salmon.

Q. Did you think at that time that this was a fair agreement?—A. I didn't.

Q. Why did you sign it?—A. Because I was in a position and I couldn't very well get out of it; I didn't want to go out of the country.

Q. If you had refused, what would have been the result?—A. I wouldn't have been permitted to go; I would have had to have gone out.

Q. What position did you hold?—A. He promised me the position I have now—cooking for the officials; and I suppose if I hadn't signed that document I would not be in the position I hold now.

Q. Who promised you?—A. Major Walsh.

Q. Do you think you would have been in the same position now if you hadn't?—A. No, I don't think I would; nothing said about that.

Q. Was there any compulsion of any kind used to make you sign that?—A. He laid in his tent—

That is Major Walsh.

—not over 15 feet away; he knew it was wrong and I knew it was wrong.

Q. He didn't in any way try to compel you to sign it?—A. No.

Q. What reason have you for saying that you did not think you would be here?—A. I said I wouldn't have held the position I am holding now if I had not signed it.

Q. What were you doing then?—A. Cooking.

Q. How much were you getting?—A. $60 a month.

Paid by this Government.

Q. What now?—A. $100 per month.

Paid by this Government.

Q. When did you get an advance in your wages?—A. Last August; but he told me he would give me 125, then he cut it to 100. I said I would take the hundred and stayed in.

Q. You don't mean to connect his saying that with this bill?—A. No; I told his brother when they drew it up it was not right.

Q. What value would you place on the consideration you got for this?—A. The agreement was that we were to receive a prospecting outfit.

Then, he goes on to say how much that was worth.

Q. The Government paid you wages and living expenses, so that has nothing to do with the case?—A. I think about $40 or $50.

That is the expense of an outfit

Q. You would place the value of an outfit to stake a claim at forty or fifty dollars. Well, before you left camp to go on that trip,—

Out to Dominion on the 8th of July, at 10.30 o'clock.

—did you ask Major Walsh's permission?—A. I did.

Q. Did you tell him what you were going for?—A. I told him I was going to Dominion Creek.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said yes.

Q. Did you tell him you were going to stake?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you think he knew?—A. Yes, he would not think I was going for a walk; that was in the evening, about 8 or 10 o'clock.

By Mr. Tabor:

Q. Did any other officials go with you?—A. Yes, one, an Indian; and when I had gone five or ten miles I was joined by another Indian.

Q. Were these Major Walsh's Indians?—A. Just the two of them.

Q. Who were they?—A. Two of the Cullum boys.

I read you his evidence before that two of the Cullum boys went with him. So that these were two of Major Walsh's Indians, and one of whom went with him, while the other caught up with him before he had gone more than ten miles out.

Q. In saying an outfit worth $40 or $50, what do you mean?—A. Going to Dominion Creek and coming back.

By the Commissioner:

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of the standing of these Indians; were they going to stake on the same terms as you did?—A. Yes, going on the same terms; I don't know whether they signed a contract or not; I know there was an agreement, but I am not positive about the contract.

Q. Similar to yours?—A. Similar to mine.

Q. Did they transfer a three-quarter interest to Philip Walsh as you did?—A. Yes; you will find duplicates there in the recording office.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any other person on behalf of any official of the Government?—A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. No knowledge of any other but yourself and these two?

—A. No other; that is all that went or came.

Q. Were these men employed in the camp?—A. They came in with us.

Q. Were they employed around the camp?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They would have to get permission from Major Walsh, the same as you did?—A. Yes, sir.

Then Mr. Galpin comes in.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is he?

Mr. FOSTER. He is a lawyer, I fancy.

By Mr. Galpin:

Q. You say you waited until 10.30 o'clock on the 8th July, Friday night. Will you tell us how many people you overtook, or overtook you, before you got to stake the claim?—A. Twenty or thirty; there was quite a lot of people who passed us, but we passed the whole outfit.

And so on. Now, if you will look over Mr. Swinehart's evidence—I am not going to read it—you will find that Mr. Swinehart, who printed the notice, swore that Major Walsh when this came up—and it soon leaked out—got uneasy; and Mr. Swinehart put some questions to him as a newspaper interviewer. Major Walsh got so uneasy that he sent down a typewritten document purporting to be a statement of Mr. Carbeno, but unsigned, in which Carbeno was made to say that he did not get any information from Major Walsh and that Major Walsh did not know he had gone out. Now, at page 262, Mr. Fawcett asked Carbeno, evidently with a good deal of gusto:

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. Did you ever make a statement which was typewritten to Major Walsh that you didn't receive information, and didn't start out to Dominion Creek on the night of the 8th, you never did?—A. No, sir.

Then the commissioner asks:

Q. How long did it take you?—A. I left for Dominion at 10.30 Friday evening; went to Dominion and staked and came back to Mr. McCormick's that night—Saturday night at 9 o'clock. Didn't leave there till 10 o'clock Sunday, and arrived here about 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

By Mr. Galpin:

Q. When did you come to the office to record?—A. Monday morning.

Q. What time?—A. About 3 in the afternoon.

Q. At the side door?—A. No, sir.

Q. Took your turn?—A. Yes, the same as anybody else.

Mr. Swinehart comes in at this point, asking Carbeno:

Q. Did he ever make out a statement for Pattullo or Major Walsh regarding this matter when the rumour came up after Major Walsh gave him a tip? It was reported around town that he—

That is you—

—went out and located as a result of information that he had received. Did he—

That is you—

—make a statement and give it to Major Walsh or Pattullo to hand to the "Midnight Sun"?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Did they ask you any questions?—A. Never.

Q. You are positive of that?—A. I am positive.

Q. Never made any statement?—A. Never was asked to do so.

Now, Mr. Fawcett comes in:

Q. In your examination yesterday, Mr. Carbeno, in answering one of the questions, you stated that you thought your present position was the result of signing that agreement, or something to that effect?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there not part of the evidence in that connection which you forgot to give us yesterday?—A. I forgot to say that other papers were drawn up and I would not sign them.

Q. When was this?—A. Coming up on board the "Quadra."

Q. You would not sign them—why?—A. I said the papers were not legal, and would not sign them till I got legal ones. That afternoon I was called to Major Walsh's state-room, and he asked me if I had made an arrangement at Port Arthur before I left.

Q. You said you did?—A. He said: "Why didn't you sign the papers?" I said: "I didn't because they were not legal." He said: "If you don't sign those papers, when this boat goes back I will send you back on it." That was all that was said until we got to Big Salmon, then other papers came on, and therefore I signed them.

By the Commissioner:

Q. Why did you consider those papers illegal?—A. Because they were not drawn up by a lawyer; he drew them up with a lead pencil.

Q. Who?—A. Phil. Walsh.

Q. Where were they drawn up?—A. On board the "Quadra," when we came out.

Q. You had made an agreement with Lewis Walsh at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why were these not signed at Port Arthur?—A. Because he said he had not time.

Q. The document is dated the 23rd. Is it the document we have here?—A. No. The document he drew up on board the "Quadra" is not the same as I agreed to it.

Q. What was the nature of the terms?—A. He left it where I was to be paid my expenses in coming into the country, and furnish me with an outfit.

Q. How could that be when the Government was paying your expenses?—A. That was stated in the agreement before I left.

Q. That was understood at Port Arthur—that they were to pay your expenses to come into the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the same time you were employed as a Government servant. Don't you think it was inconsistent to offer to pay your expenses if you came in as a Government employee?—A. Well, I was giving the way it was agreed to.

Mark that. The commissioner is very anxious to know if this poor man does not think it a little inconsistent to have Major Walsh pay his expenses and the Government also; and within the covers of this report that the commissioner has sent down, there is not a word as to the impropriety of all this truck I have been reading over, not one single word.

Q. Then this lead pencil document admitted that?—A. Yes, it is in this way only. (Mr. Carbeno reads the document.)

The Commissioner.—There is no reference there for your expenses to be paid into the country. It would grant the expense of working the claim, but not the expenses in connection with your entry here.

Mr. FOSTER.

By Mr. Fawcett:

Q. You refused to sign this lead pencil document on board the "Quadra"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were told if you didn't you would be sent back?—A. Yes, sir; and I said I would not sign any paper until a proper one was drawn up.

Q. When you signed this at Big Salmon did it seem strange to you that it was dated at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the actual date of the signature?—A. I could not exactly tell you. I think it was in June some time.

Q. Three months after the agreement had been entered into?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any cause—was the question mentioned at all? Was it dated at Port Arthur—why not at Big Salmon?—A. Well, I didn't ask any questions; they brought in the document and I signed it, that was all. I saw the signature, and I knew it came from him.

Q. Whose signature is it?—A. Lewis Walsh's. His signature is on the bottom of it.

Q. Have you any reason to know his signature?—A. Yes, I will swear to it.

Q. You have no reason to assign why the document was dated 23rd September, and executed at Big Salmon some time in June?—A. No.

Q. This agreement you entered into at Port Arthur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This document you refused to sign, on whose behalf was it made?—A. Lewis Walsh's.

That ends the evidence and this investigation. In reference to that whole transaction, if that evidence, uncontradicted and unrefuted as it is, borne out by the documents which the commissioner and Mr. Fawcett had before them, if that evidence is true there was not a more reprehensible transaction in the whole Yukon business than this transaction the history of which I have read from the evidence gathered by Mr. Ogilvie himself.

Now, Sir, who benefited by that information? Who was the repository of that information and should have guarded it? Who benefited by it? There is only one answer to all these questions, it was Mr. Walsh, the gentleman who was at the head of everybody. Now, I say that when it appears, as it does appear, that the judges were getting mining claims, and some of them giving opinions to the Gold Commissioner on mining claims, when it appears that Mr. Wade was getting mining claims for himself, in his own name and an interest in many others, when it is shown that the other officials were doing the same, there you have it from the head of the Government, more despotic than the Czar of Russia, entrusted with authority that these gentlemen did not have and could not confer, but holding the authority and carrying out that authority as if it were absolute, and absolute and good, when from that executive head of the Government down through the judges, the land registrars and the clerks in the department, they were all getting claims for themselves in their own names, and interests in others, when they were getting these held over for a year because they had influence and were Government officers—when all this was going on, is there any wonder that the official life of that country from one end of it to the other was permeated with the idea: They are all in it, let us get everything we can. Hurdman worked over hours, too busy during office hours, gave the information which he was paid as a clerk to give, and received therefor fees of $5 and $10. In the evidence of a lawyer, Mr. Lisle he tells us that he paid over and over again, $5 and $10, and was quite willing to do it; in fact Mr. Ogilvie himself says treats it as a matter of course that the clerks took these fees, that the door-keepers held out their pockets, and held out their right hands, and took these fees for getting men in off the regular line. All that was going on, and Major Walsh's cook, and Major Walsh's Indians, and Major Walsh's brothers, under an agreement made whilst they were on the way to that country with the knowledge and interest of the High Commissioner under the high obligations and responsibilities entrusted to him by this Government, plotting and successfully carrying out their plots to loot the country of its best claims through wrongful and illicit knowledge. When Major Walsh came to the conclusion, or his council came to the conclusion, that they should open these bench claims against Mr. Fawcett's proper ideas, in my mind, against all that is fair as shown by the records, and dated them on the 8th so as to forestall those who were trusting the public notice to get them on the 11th, then the information went out, and Major Walsh's Carbeno, and Major Walsh's Cullom boys started with his knowledge and consent, and I can see the smile of Carbeno as he virtually told him to go up to Dominion Creek, starting him at ten o'clock at night.

I say that this state of things is shown to be as rotten a state of things as could possibly be disclosed. There is the Government, which stands behind it all. They apologize for it all, and they stand between Parliament and any thorough investigation of that rottenness; they take the responsibility of teaching the civil service of this country: Steal while you can. We have the Government telling the honest electors of this country: We put men into that country; we make them high commissioners, lords of all; we give them the totality of inside information, and then we sustain them when they filch out from the gold regions the choicest spots by chicanery, by trickery and by agreements which they formed and drew up under the very noses of the members of the Government, whilst they were appointing them, seeking to make gain, even paying men for prospecting the claims they have out of Government money and charging it to the people of this country. Yet there is nothing to investigate. Yet Major Walsh, because he is not now high commissioner, must go scot free, and Mr. Wade must go scot free.

I tell you that no unprejudiced man, reading that evidence there, inadequate as the investigation was, can come to any other conclusion than that there was a state of things in that country which ought to be investigated for the fair name of Canada and in the interest of honest government. That right hon. gentleman who sits there, had the effrontery, in the city of Toronto, and in other places, to get upon the platform before the electorate, previous to the elections of 1896, and say, naming men in the late Government: Whatever you get from a Liberal Government, you will get pure men and pure government. This is the way they carry it out, from the Prime Minister down to least Minister. They stand back of this official looting of claims in the Yukon by the men to whom they gave sovereign powers, to whom no man in that country dare say no, who simply walked down and called Mr. Fawcett out, and said to him: "Sign that." "No, I do not believe in it." "Sign it; I will have no impertinence like that. When I say to you to sign it, sign it." What became of Mr. Fawcett's responsibility? Do you not see what that meant? It meant the undermining of the responsibility of every official in the Yukon, because every official was put at the mercy of one man, who could absolutely suspend him. Mr. Fawcett said: "I do not take any responsibility; Major Walsh has the responsibility, and he should take the responsibility." That is a state of things that is absolutely proved up to this present day by evidence which is unrepudiated, and which is undeniable. Yet there is no need for an investigation. These hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, if they have ever had it, seem to have lost all idea of the balance of things in a constitutionally governed country. Will the right hon. Prime Minister say that when this House is prorogued, next August, or September, if it is prorogued then, that when we have gone home, he and his Cabinet, when they sit in that chamber over there, can make laws and carry them out in this country? Have they legislative authority? No, not even if they will say so; but they gave Major Walsh legislative authority, and sent him to exercise it, and he exercised it. They gave him what they did not have—legislative authority. If we pass a mining law, or any other law, and we enact the principles and clauses of that law, and then we say that, under this, regulations may be made by the Governor in Council, what other white man can make these regulations but the Governor in Council? No one constitutionally or legally. These hon. gentlemen gave Major Walsh the power to enact legislation, to make laws, to add regulations, to place fees, to gather revenues, to put taxes upon certain goods, all of which he did; but, above all things, they gave him power to make judges, justices of the peace, and he actually made justices of the peace up in the North-west. These hon. gentlemen think this is all right. They have come to the conclusion, evidently, as one of their hon. members expressed it not long ago: You fellows may talk, but the country does not take any stock in what you say. These hon. gentlemen evidently believe that the country takes no stock in what is being done, and that all they have to do is to go out and say: We are Liberals; we can do no wrong, and that they will keep the confidence of the country. They are mistaken. Has one of them uttered a word of excuse, of palliation, of defence, of their illegal acts in conferring these powers on Major Walsh, some of which they do not possess themselves, and not a single one of which they can delegate to any person? Where, in Heaven's name was the Governor General, when an order of that kind was signed, granting to Major Walsh the power to legislate, the power to make justices of the peace, the power to put on taxes and to impose fees? Was it necessary? Absolutely unnecessary. It was done in defiance of constitution and law. Yet these hon. gentlemen sit there, as dumb as men can be, simply with a sort of obstinate expression: We did it, and we will do it again; we do not care whether there is any constitution or law at all. We are supreme in this country. And the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) will sit behind them and sanction this sort of thing. When the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was talking about Major Walsh imposing a permit fee of $2, and speaking of what he did in regard to these permits in the Northwest, an hon. gentleman nudged his fellow-member, and said: He could not do it. The hon. member for Halifax knows that he could not, but he will not stand up on his legs and say so. He will vote for these hon. gentlemen; he will stand behind them in a transaction in which a cook and a doctor, both of them ladies, were concerned, one of whom got a claim illegally, and the other came very near getting a permit: in which the Collum boys and Carbeno entered into an arrangement, to which Major Walsh was a party, when on the "Quadra" he said: If you do not sign that paper, Carbeno, I will send you back to Brockville.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have heard that a dozen times to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not see my necessity? I have such a rebellious lot to talk to, and the conscience of hon. gentlemen who were, at one time, such zealous and honest defenders of all the principles of good government and economy have become so dulled that I must take line upon line, precept upon precept, to try to impress them. Conscience has so deteriorated that I must use precept upon precept, line upon line, to try to impress my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen). I am not sure that if he and I as good friends just sat down and had a smoke together, and talked business over, as we may sometimes—I am not sure we would be miles apart in our ideas. Honest Indian now? I think we would be pretty close together. I have faith yet in my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen), and I know, by the smile of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell), we would be right in each other's arms upon this question.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. COCHRANE. What about the Postmaster General?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I give him up. I think he has had too much to do with the McNish business, and the like of that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is quite forgetting himself in making that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. What?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is making an abuse of his position on the floor of this House in making that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. That will simply be a difference of opinion between myself and the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is a highly indecent statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) had better curb his tongue.

Mr. MILLS. Is the word "indecent" in order?

Mr. TALBOT. Yes, it is in order.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes, it is in order, but I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) had better curb his tongue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has certain experience recorded not far back when he was in Opposition, and when he used language compared with which my language would be a mild panacea. Any way, I have no hesitation at all in saying, that we have never heard, and I do not believe we ever will hear one word of condemnation from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) for methods such as he has been pursuing in the by-elections.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) state what methods he refers to?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I am not adverse to teaching in a fairly reasonable way, but when we have newspapers in this country, and fairly enterprising ones, with all that is spread on their pages, and when my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) can read, I do not think I need take up the time of the House in attempting to teach him as to what happened in West Elgin.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am being interrupted, and just as I was coming to my peroration.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish to say—if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) allows me; if not, I will not trespass on his time.

Mr. FOSTER. Go on.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has any observations to make reflecting upon my honour in connection with any elections, there is a proper way for him to make these charges, and I challenge him or any one else to make any charge he likes against me. If it is a proper subject of inquiry, he shall have an inquiry, but I object to his insinuating, as he has done to-day—I am told the word "cowardly" is not in order, and I do not wish to get out of order—but I will not let him make any insinuations, and have them pass uncontradicted and unchallenged in my presence.

Mr. TALBOT. It is in the nature of the "baste."

Mr. SPEAKER. That last observation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) is entirely uncalled for, and very improper.

Mr. FOSTER. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your ruling.

An hon. MEMBER. Make him withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) must not call a gentleman in this House a beast, and he should apologize.

Mr. TALBOT. I did not mention any one in particular.

Mr. SPEAKER. I know, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) cannot get out of it in that way. There is no doubt whatever that language like that addressed across the House is exceedingly undignified. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) will be good enough to apologize for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. I repeat, the hon. member (Mr. Talbot) will be good enough to apologize for that language.

Mr. TALBOT. I did not mention anybody in particular.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. TALBOT. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Apologize.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) will please apologize.

Mr. TALBOT. I cannot apologize to anybody, because I did not mention any one.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) called across the House to an hon. member in very improper language. I shall insist upon an apology. I shall absolutely insist upon it no matter what the consequence may be.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) must submit to the Chair, and give an example of obedience to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. TALBOT. To whom will I apologize?

Mr. SPEAKER. To the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster).

Mr. TALBOT. I did not mean the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Apologize to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) did not mean the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), he will be good enough to apologize to the House.

Mr. TALBOT. I will apologize to the House, under your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I have any more observations to make on this subject. I am in favour of the motion of my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who so ably moved and supported these resolutions. I do not believe that any proper investigation has been made into these matters in the Yukon, I do not believe that a proper investigation can be made by the commission appointed. I believe that the public sense of this country and the public sense of all British countries where these allegations have been made requires that something adequate should be done, as the right hon. gentleman said, to probe this thing to the very bottom. I, therefore, am in favour of a commission of judges, not to take away our parliamentary responsibility, but to furnish us with that information which shall be unbiassed, full, and absolutely certain; which will enable us the better to carry out the responsibilities which we have as members of this Canadian Parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Mr. Speaker, at this late hour I will promise the House to be very brief. I do not think I would have intervened at all before the vote, if it were not that the department of which I am the head has been specially charged with delinquencies in the resolution of the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper)—not so much charged in the resolution which he proposed, as in the speech with which he supported it. I would not have intervened, I say, because I am perfectly satisfied that there has been such a thorough discussion on the main points which the House has to decide upon that no further remarks are needed. I agree with my right hon. friend and leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the debate was ended on this resolution when the Minister of the Interior finished his speech this afternoon, and if I had had any doubts upon that point, these doubts would have been entirely removed by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). Why, Sir, what has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) for the last hour and a half been trying to prove? He has been reading evidence taken before the commission issued by this Government, laid on the Table of this House and placed before the country, to prove that there has been such a thorough and exhaustive examination into all the facts in connection with Dominion Creek, that something must be done by the Government of the day to punish those, who, he says, are proved to be guilty. He tells us that not a stone has been left unturned by Mr. Ogilvie and by those who prosecuted before him, to lay bare the entire facts. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has proved to his own satisfaction and proved to the satisfaction of his friends around him, that these facts have not only been thoroughly exposed, but that they have been exposed so as to put Mr. Walsh in peril of prosecution. It, therefore, rests with this Parliament and this Government, if they come to the same conclusion as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) does, to initiate that prosecution against any public officer who has been proved by this evidence to have been guilty of any common law or statutory offence; but what that has to do with the resolution before the House, except to disprove the necessity for the tribunal the resolution calls for; I am at a loss to understand. What have we got here?

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has talked—I was going to say by the hour—about all manner of irrelevant subjects. He has failed to devote himself to the kernel of the question. He has failed to show that the investigation which has been held, and the results of which we have partially received, has not been thorough and complete, and that there should be a further one; but he has devoted himself on the contrary, so far as he has devoted himself at all to the evidence—to show that that part of it on which he has informed himself, has been thorough and complete, and has convicted certain persons of certain offences; and he has, therefore, proved that there is no necessity for any further investigation on those points at least.

Now, Sir, I am going to pass very rapidly over the evidence, because the few remarks which I have to make will be made with reference to my own department. We have a resolution brought in by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Herbert Tupper) asking for the appointment of a commission of judges to investigate certain alleged charges of wrong-doing in the Yukon. How is that resolution brought before the House? It is brought before the House and proposed in a form in which it cannot be amended—in a form in which, if it contains false or untrue statements, members must vote for those false or untrue statements if they vote for the resolution at all. It is brought in a form in which judges are unconstitutionally and illegally impeached; in a form in which members of this House are asked to violate every principle which heretofore has controlled the House in relation to—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to rise to a question of order. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you propose to allow the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to charge an hon. member of this House with having made false and untrue statements?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have made no such charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has just made the declaration that this resolution contains false and untrue statements.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I said the resolution was brought in a form in which, if it contained false or untrue statements, members who voted for it would have to vote for false or untrue statements.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is what I understood.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not what I understood.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I want that to be thoroughly understood. For reasons of his own—I do not know what they were, and I do not care what they were—the hon. gentleman has chosen a method of bringing this matter before the House which forces every member of the House who votes for the resolution at all, to support every single statement of fact it contains. There were other methods which the hon. gentleman could have adopted. He could have moved this as a substantive resolution before the House, when it could have been amended. He could have moved it so that a very large proportion of that which is objectionable, and which we hold to be untrue, could be eliminated from it; and if the House were determined to have at present another commission of investigation, it could be done after the objectionable matter in the resolution was removed. But the hon. gentleman has not taken that particular mode of moving. He is forcing hon. members, even if they did desire at the present moment to have another investigation, to take that investigation coupled with all the irrelevant and as I say incorrect and improper statements which his resolution contains. Well, Sir, what does the resolution contain? The hon. leader of the Opposition says I charge the hon. member for Pictou with making false statements. I make no such charge; but I do charge this, that it was proved beyond peradventure to-day that the statements which the hon. gentleman made, purporting to be quoted from returns brought down to this House, are untrue—seven or eight of them. They were the kernel, the crux, the great charges about which all the others grouped themselves, imputing personal wrong and corruption to the Minister of the Interior in connection with certain mining leases alleged to have been given by him to his former partners. Why, Sir, the whole country was ringing with the hon. gentleman's charge made directly against Sifton for having, under the cover of his late partners' names, practically giving mining leases to himself. And now it turns out—it requires no argument—every member on both sides of the House knows it now—that the returns brought down, from which the hon. gentleman's alleged quotations were made, proves that every one of those charges was improperly, incorrectly and untruly stated, and that the very opposite to what was stated is true. Hon. members of this House possessing self-respect are asked to put themselves on record as declaring that to be true which the record shows is untrue, and to falsify themselves and their consciences before this country. Sir, can they do it? Is the hon. leader of the Opposition himself, with that resolution unamended, prepared to put himself on record as affirming that to be true which he knows now is not true? Is the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), who will go as far for his party in his vote or statement as any other man in public life in Canada, prepared to so far forget himself as to vote in favour of statements in the resolution which he must know now are not true? Are hon. gentlemen behind him going to do it? And still, Sir, they ask hon. members of this House to vote for this resolution and to vote for these statements. I would not say that it is cowardly, because that is unparliamentary; I would not say that it is indecent, because that is unparliamentary; but I say it is unconstitutional and unjust to ask an hon. member so to vote in the House, and I do not believe any hon. member who values his independence will do so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. member allow me to say, because I think that is a misconception of his, that no member in the House, in voting for this resolution, votes to endorse one single statement; but that the part which the members of the House are asked to commit themselves to is, that a commission be appointed to inquire into the truth of these statements.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. First, the resolution affirms a certain thing to be true, and then it asks the House to send a commission of judges to the Yukon to report upon the truth of that statement; and the fact that it is untrue, as proved by the records lying on the Table of the House, and from which the hon. gentleman undertook to quote—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise again to a question of order. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if you decide, as you have ruled again and again in the case of gentlemen on this side of the House, that an hon. member cannot charge that a statement made by another hon. member is untrue, you cannot permit the hon. gentleman to say that it has been proved that a statement made in this resolution has been proved to be untrue. You have again and again ruled that that statement cannot be made by one member of this House to another, and I must ask that the same rule shall apply to one side of the House as to the other.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Speaking to the point of order, such a ruling has never been made in my hearing in this House. I cannot charge that a gentleman states wilfully a thing which is untrue; but I can make a charge that a statement in itself is not true. I say here is a document on the Table which shows that no lease was issued and no payment made—which says that a statement is not true which the resolution affirms is true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Allow me to say this. You quoted the authority and showed that the word "untrue" could not be used. You ruled that it might be said that a statement was not founded in fact, but you distinctly ruled that it was not permissible to say that it was untrue.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me that the point does not apply in this case. A statement made by an hon. member on his personal honour or assurance should not be questioned, and the word "untrue" or "untruthful" should not be applied to it. This is, of course, a charge—an official, formal, public charge—made against the Government, and I think that parliamentary debate could not go on if the Government were not entitled to refute that official charge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman, in this resolution, moved at a time when he knew it was not amendable, making charges which are disproved by the official records, also makes an illegal and unconstitutional attempt—one which he must have known to be unconstitutional—to impeach a judge in this roundabout way. There is no member of this House who, judging by the repeated statements he has made, has posted himself more thoroughly as to the practice which ought to prevail with regard to impeaching a judge, than the hon. member for Pictou. Time and again he has laid down in this House the proper mode of procedure to adopt, and has called members to order who attempted to deviate in the slightest degree from those constitutional rules which experience and usage have consecrated. Last session, I very well remember the hon. gentleman calling my hon.

friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to order for some statement he made with respect to the judiciary. What did the hon. gentleman say? I am quoting from "Hansard," of 1898, page 6154. He said :

I rise again to a point of order. It is quite clear that the object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is to bring into contempt the judges of the land, and I have under my hand an authority which would, I think, warrant the members of the Government in protecting the judges from these aspersions and insinuations which I submit are not manly. The authority is this :

Bearing in mind the general responsibility of Ministers of the Crown for the due administration of justice throughout the Kingdom, and the obligations which they owe to the dispensers of justice to preserve them from injurious attacks or calumnious accusations, it is necessary that before consenting to any motion for a parliamentary inquiry into the conduct of a judge, or even for the reception of a petition complaining of the conduct of a judge, and not asking for his removal from office in accordance with the statute, or not alleging reasonable ground for such proceeding, Ministers should themselves have investigated the matter of complaint and be prepared either to oppose or facilitate the interference of Parliament on the particular occasion.

The other day he also laid down the law in almost similar terms, and gave the quotations from Todd which my right hon. friend the leader of the House gave us this evening. He then said :

Now, in these cases regard has heretofore very properly been had to the solemn and careful steps that are taken in the case of an impeachment of a Superior Court Judge ; that is to say, the Government is bound, before even calling on a judge to answer charges that have been presented to the proper department against his conduct, to see that these charges are themselves so specific and so exact that they are not only ready for issue to be taken upon them, but that they are of such a character that, if established in the form in which they are presented, they would constitute a case for the removal of the judge from his position. That is following, as I say, the procedure in a case of impeachment where a great many preliminary forms having regard to the exalted position and the many important considerations attaching to it, are regarded, tabling the articles practically, having them carefully considered, having them sent to the party affected, before any other stage in the procedure is taken. So, following on after these specific charges have been formulated and carried up to the standard which I have mentioned, the very proper procedure and practice have been to communicate those to the judge, and even in that case should the charge be serious enough and come under the rules that I have mentioned, still it does not follow that a commission should issue ; in that case it is still necessary to ascertain from the judge what explanation he may have to give.

What one of these preliminary forms has this hon. gentleman condescended to take before attempting to impeach Judge Dugas, before demanding the issue of a commission to go up to the Yukon to try him? Not one. After repeatedly insisting on the very great necessity there is for observing these preliminary forms, he is the first one to break down every rule which has ever been established, and to ask this House to impeach this judge without giving him notice of the charge brought against him, or without a preliminary investigation by Her Majesty's executive to ascertain whether the charges have any foundation. The resolution asks us to destroy every constitutional rule and practice, and to launch out into a new procedure which he has gathered I do not know where.

We have here a commission issued by this Government ; we have a portion of the evidence returned and laid on the Table, and I venture to say very few members have read two dozen pages of it. The evidence upon one of the main charges has not been returned, but it has been taken. The commission is closed, the evidence is on its way to Parliament, and the hon. gentleman, before all the evidence has reached Parliament, before we know where it is complete or conclusive or not, before we can tell whether it should be supplemented or not, asks us to say that in our opinion the evidence has not been properly taken, to declare, in point of fact, that it is not worthy of consideration, and to send out a new commission to take new evidence. How can the hon. member justify such a request? Is it not common sense that we should have the complete report before us so that we may examine it, and ascertain if in any respect it is wanting, before asking Parliament to go to the expense and trouble and delay of issuing a new commission to go to the Yukon and take further evidence.

We are asked to violate another constitutional rule of the very highest importance. If there is one rule which Parliament in this country, and at home, and in all the British colonies, has cherished and guarded with the utmost loyalty, it is this, that, so far as parliamentary government is concerned and the conduct of a Minister is concerned, that shall be regulated, and controlled, and approved, or condemned, by Parliament itself or by a committee of Parliament. And, if the Ministers of the Crown have proved themselves false to the trust which Parliament reposed in them, if they have been parties to wrong-doing in their departments or in any other position in relation to the Government, Parliament, acting as a whole or by its committee, will call them to account ; but Parliament will not delegate to any judge or any other person that right, which belongs solely, and should belong solely, to itself. Why, the idea of issuing a writ of ejection to try before a judge whether a Minister of the Crown is entitled to retain his position or not, is such an amusing misconception of the relation which the Minister of the Crown bears to the people and to Parliament that I am astonished—I was going to say, I was ashamed—that a gentleman who has occupied a position as a Minister of the Crown, should propose it. But the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr.

Foster) says that one of the gravest charges we are asked to investigate is the unsanitary condition of Dawson. It appears, Sir, that this is the point around which the question is going to revolve; and the hon. gentleman pronounced it one of the gravest charges. It appears that Mr. Ogilvie, who has spent the best part of a lifetime in that country, is not competent to take evidence upon such a matter; but that the question whether the proper number of drains have been laid, and whether the proper number of closets have been built, must be referred to a judge of the Supreme Court. Why, Sir, the matter need only be stated to make it a laughing-stock. I venture to say that every hon. member who has not allowed his party feeling to carry him away, would willingly concede that Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner, is better qualified to take evidence and report his opinion to this House upon that question than is any judge of the Supreme Court or of any Superior Court of Canada. Let us remember also, Sir, that Mr. Ogilvie was not there as a judge to pronounce judgment upon the evidence he took. He was sent there as an experienced commissioner, having a knowledge of the country and a knowledge of the miners, a better knowledge of the country and the miners than anybody else could have. And he was sent to do what? To take from any and all of those people who choose to give it, any evidence they chose to give upon specific charges which were presented to the Government on the 25th August last, whether that evidence was favourable or unfavourable. And, as we heard from the Minister of the Interior to-day, the commissioner did not regulate his conduct as a commissioner by those rules which would control a judge, but allowed all sorts of evidence, even hearsay, which a judge would not permit. The commissioner reports that evidence to the House. It does not matter what Mr. Ogilvie's opinion upon it is. It is Parliament that is to pronounce as to that evidence. The commissioner having reported the facts, it is for Parliament to pass judgment upon the facts and to say who are or who are not incriminated by them.

It is also alleged here, as a crime against Mr. Ogilvie, as something wrong, that he required charges to be made before he would allow them to be entered upon. I say it is not only common sense, but it is British fair-play and British justice, to observe that rule. No man should be allowed, at his mere will, to make a charge against an official which might imperil that official's character for ever, unless and until the charge was submitted to Mr. Ogilvie beforehand, so that the official might have notice and have an opportunity to answer it. Otherwise, the most innocent man in the Yukon territory might have had his character destroyed by evidence which would put on record forever, without having the slightest information or notice that he was to be attacked at all. I say, therefore, that Mr. Ogilvie, in requiring that before evidence impugning the official character or conduct of any of the officials up there would be received, notice should be given to him of the intention to make the charge, so that the official so incriminated might be notified, was only doing what any honest commissioner would have done under the circumstances. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that when we issued this commission, we should have pronounced and declared that the witnesses were to have every immunity for any statements they made before the commission. And the hon. member for York stated that that was not given. Well, Sir, he may be right; but, if he is right, I fail to understand the English language.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a moment? I endeavoured to explain a misapprehension that appeared in the press. The point is this—not that there was no immunity possible for witnesses, in so far as the statements they made were concerned, but differing from the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act, there was no provision under which the witness who made a full revelation, should be pardoned. In one case no one could be indicted for the offence which had been confessed in giving testimony. In the case before Mr. Ogilvie a man could be indicted, and evidence outside his statement could be used against him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Precisely. I was referring to the statement made by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), which I took down, that no immunity was offered to witnesses in giving testimony before this commission. At page 7 of the commission of inquiry, the commissioner states the following to be the law:—

No witness examined before such commissioners or before any commissioners appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of any province of Canada to conduct any inquiry into and concerning the good government of such province, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, or the administration of justice therein, or in reference to any municipal matters, shall be excused from answering any question put to him on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate him; but no evidence so taken shall be admissible against any such witness in any criminal proceeding, except in the case of a witness charged with having given false evidence at any such inquiry, or with having procured, or attempted or conspired to procure, the giving of such evidence.

That was the law. That law was promulgated by the commissioner throughout the Yukon. When the debate took place in Parliament before, I had in my hand copies of the "Klondike Nugget," at or about the time the commission sat. The official statement of Mr. Ogilvie that witnesses could give their evidence without any danger of criminating themselves or of being prosecuted was proclaimed in every issue of the "Nugget" during the whole time the commission was sitting, and witnesses were implored to come forward, if they had any evidence, the statutory assurance being repeated day by day, that they could do so with perfect immunity from subsequent prosecution for the evidence they gave.

Then, the hon. gentleman said the commission should not have been limited to the 25th August. I do not know whether any further remarks are necessary on that subject, because the hon. gentleman's arguments have been answered already. Hon. gentlemen can take the return brought down by Parliament, and they will find in it the petition of the miners themselves, dated 25th August, 1898, reciting the grievances under which they laboured, the charges they had against the officials, and which they were prepared to prove, if the Government could be successfully moved to issue a commission to enable them to do so.

Why, Sir, the Government could not do anything more than act upon the statements which the miners had submitted to them. They said: We are prepared to prove thus and so, not something that is going to happen in the future, after the 25th of August, but something which had happened prior to the 25th of August; send us out a commission and we will give evidence, and we will prove these charges. The Government sent out the commission, the commission recited the very petition which they had submitted to the Government, and it was held, and I think most lawyers will agree, correctly held, that the commissioner was limited in taking his evidence to the date when the charges were made. I regret it, I have no desire to see this inquiry either burked or controlled by dates, or limited in any way as to person or as to time. I desire, and I believe every member of the Government desires, that the inquiry should be thorough and should be exhaustive. What have we to gain by shielding any of these officials? If they have been guilty of wrong-doing, let the facts come out, let the facts be probed to the bottom. If it turns out when Mr. Ogilvie's full report is in, if the evidence shows that it is defective in any respect, if it shows that a further commission would probably bring forth fuller or further evidence, why, Sir, I have not the shadow of a doubt that that further commission will issue, and that further evidence will be taken; we have had the pledge of the Prime Minister to do that. So I say that with these facts before us there is no justification for any member of this House who values his good name, fame or reputation, voting for this resolution which the hon. gentleman has presented.

Now, Sir, it is stated here as one of the charges—I do not think it is involved in this resolution, although the hon. gentleman dwelt a great deal upon it, and the hon. member for York, who followed, seemed to assume that everybody conceded the point—that Mr. Walsh's commission was altogether illegal. Sir, I challenge that assumption; it is not a true statement of the law. I say that the Governor in Council was justified in issuing Major Walsh's commission. There may be a question as to one part of the powers conferred on that commissioner, but that the Government had power to issue that commission I was astonished to hear anybody deny, laying claim to a shred of constitutional knowledge. What powers have the Governor General in this country? Does he not possess the same powers in relation to Canada that the Queen does in relation to her Empire?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I say he does, in regard to these matters of which we are talking, I say he does. Look at the instructions to the Governor General and see what they say:

We do further authorize and empower our said Governor General to constitute and appoint in our name and in our behalf all such judges, commissioners, and justices of the peace and other necessary officers and Ministers of our said Dominion as may be lawfully constituted or appointed by us.

So that any commissioner, Minister or official necessary for the due administration of government in this Dominion, can be as constitutionally appointed by a Governor General of this Dominion as by the Queen herself, and she has delegated her power to him. I am astonished to know that any hon. gentlemen possessing the experience of the hon. member for York should stand up here and challenge that to be a correct statement of constitutional law. Well, if that is true, we have there an unsettled part of this Dominion, an unorganized part of the North-west Territories, a part of the North-west Territories—and I speak now under correction—over which the ordinances of the North-west Council do not extend, a part of territory, therefore, that the Queen herself would have a perfect and absolute right to send a commissioner to administer. And if the Queen had the right to send a commissioner to administer it, so had the Governor General, under the letters patent which he held and the instructions I have just read. Therefore, I say the commission to Major Walsh to go to the Yukon, to the unorganized North-west Territories, and there to administer the laws of the land, to secure peace, order and good government, was a legal, a proper and a constitutional commission. But the hon. gentleman may say—and on that point I admit there is some argument: But you gave him power to amend the mining laws. Well, let us look at that. How did the Queen, how did the Governor General issue that commission? By virtue of the statute? Not at all, not by virtue of any statute; that commission issued by virtue of his prerogative power.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) answered the question across the House that the commission was issued under the statute.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember what the hon. gentleman said; I am arguing the law point now.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman asked the question by what authority the commission was issued under the great seal. The statute referred to gives authority to the Governor General in Council to decide what commission shall be issued under the great seal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The commission itself, the parchment, was issued under the great seal, but the authority and powers contained in it, were vested in Commissioner Walsh, not by virtue of any statutory power which the Governor had, but by virtue of the prerogative power of the Queen, which she had vested in him by royal instructions, and I will challenge any hon. gentleman on the other side possessing a knowledge of constitutional law, to deny the accuracy of that statement. But while that commission vesting him with full power to constitute government there, to depose officials and appoint others, to do all that was necessary to secure peace, order and good government—while that commission was perfectly legal and constitutional, the point may come up whether he had power, as it was given in the commission, to amend the mining regulations. And how does that stand? The Dominion land law of this country prescribes the method by which the lands of this Dominion shall be sold and disposed of. But the Dominion Lands Act, in its 47th clause, especially exempts the mineral lands from the operation and from the regulations of that statute. It says in so many words, that these mineral lands shall be disposed of in such manner as the Governor in Council may by regulation appoint. Now, is that an enabling statute? Is that an enabling clause enabling the Governor to do something that he could not otherwise do? Not at all; the Governor, by virtue of his prerogative power, the Queen, by virtue of her prerogative right, could dispose of those mining lands unless her prerogative power had been controlled by statute, and that declaration in the 47th section of the Dominion Act may well be argued to be, not an enabling statute, an enabling clause, but a declaratory clause of what the law was. If that argument is correct, and it can be fairly well argued, then I say that the commission giving Major Walsh power to amend the mining laws was in itself good as a power conferred by the Governor out of his prerogative power. And so I say this twaddle which we have been listening to for hours and for days about Major Walsh administering the Government illegally and improperly, his commission not being worth the paper on which it was printed, and all that kind of thing, has no foundation whatever in fact. The only point which, in my humble judgment, is arguable, and I admit that to be arguable, is whether the Governor could by his prerogative power confer upon Major Walsh the right of amending the mining regulations. That would depend very much upon whether that section of the statute is held to be an enabling section, or whether it is a declaratory section.

I have taken very much longer than I intended to speak upon these general matters, and I now propose to call the attention of the House, before I sit down, to the charges which have been made by the hon. gentleman against myself in the administration of my department. Sir, I do not complain of the statement which the hon. gentleman has placed in the resolution:

That the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies, appointed to the office of inspector of steamboats one Russell, who had been previously dismissed from the said service of the Government on account of improper conduct, and detailed said officer to Dawson to act as steamboat inspector.

I do not complain of that statement so much but what I do complain of, what I have the right to complain of is that the hon. gentleman should have supplemented that statement with the remarks in the speech he made, at a time, after I had brought down and placed before him, in the form of a return, all the facts in regard to Mr. Russell's former dismissal. What did the hon. gentleman say? The hon. gentleman made a statement in this House calculated to lead this House and this country to believe that Mr. Russell was a man who had been dismissed from office because, when he was in office in 1890, he had accepted bribes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman cheers that. I will quote his language and we will see, in a moment, how very far that statement is from the facts which have been proved, and which the hon. gentleman has in his hands. All I can say is that if the hon. gentleman's statements and charges, in respect to the officials in the Interior Department, are as far removed from the facts as his statements in respect to this official in my department, I would not give much for any one of the statements in the resolution. I am in a position to contradict formally and distinctly this charge in reference to Mr. Russell. I will do it so that the hon. gentleman himself will acknowledge that he has misstated the facts, and that this man ought not to be allowed to remain under the cloud in which he has attempted to envelope his character. The hon. gentleman says, in his statement, at page 6255 of "Hansard":

Later on, he applied to be permitted to act as inspector for a private company, and he was told that he could not so act. Complaints were renewed in 1889, charging Russell with taking bribes; and in January, 1890, Capt. Devereux was appointed a commissioner to investigate the charges.

That is correct. Captain Devereux was so appointed, Captain Devereux made his report, and now the point is: Was it proved and did the report show the hon. gentleman whether it was proved?

Mr. PRIOR. It is true.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) says it is true. I think that is a very improper statement to come from him. He was, as the records show, the gentleman who forwarded these charges to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. His letter is there to-day, as well as the report made by Captain Devereux. He was the politician who was seeking to oust Mr. Russell from office in 1890, and it will be shown in the report, that the charges were untrue.

Mr. PRIOR. They were true; I do not care what the report is; they were true.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman stands up here and has the hardihood to take advantage of his position in this House to make a statement—

Mr. PRIOR. I will do it outside.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Had he the pluck to go before Captain Devereux, the commissioner, and make charges when he had the opportunity?

Mr. PRIOR. I will do that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman had the opportunity. When Captain Devereux went there and held an investigation in 1890 into a charge preferred by the hon. member himself, did he go before the commission and sustain it? No, he had not a word to say. But the hon. gentleman comes here nine years afterwards and talks about it. What does the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) say further:

He was convicted, therefore, of falsehood, as well as of violating his instructions and of taking money, which he called fees, but which others would call bribes.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The hon. gentleman goes on to say that the man was convicted of taking bribes, and that he was dismissed for it. I say he was never convicted of it; I say he was not dismissed for it. The hon. gentleman had his report in his hand, and that report showed that on his own recommendation the man was not dismissed for taking bribes, but upon the following grounds.

Mr. PRIOR. He took them just the same.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think it is honourable for that hon. gentleman to make that statement. No hon. gentleman should make such statements.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must request the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) not to interrupt, unless he obtains the permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report made to Council by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the hon. member for Pictou, says:

Taking, therefore, into consideration the evidence adduced at the investigation and the definite instructions given to Mr. Russell by the department, and in view of the necessity of an inspector being above suspicion and free from the influence of owners of boilers and steamboats, whose property he is required to inspect in his official capacity, the undersigned has the honour to submit that in his opinion it will not be in the public interest, after the disclosures made, to retain Mr. Russell as steamboat inspector, and to recommend that his services be dispensed with.

Is there one word about his having taken bribes in that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are the disclosures referred to?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The disclosures will not show that he was guilty of taking bribes. When the hon. gentleman made that statement he had a report in his hands from one of the most experienced Deputy Ministers that has ever been in the public service, the late William Smith, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That gentleman had reported on the evidence to the Minister, and he had reported to him that there was no evidence whatever that this man had taken bribes in any instance. I will read the report from beginning to end. I do not know Mr. Russell, I never saw him.

Mr. PRIOR. We do.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You may know him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) evidently bears a bitter animus against him, and I think it would be becoming in him if he concealed his animus a little more than he does.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) allow me to make a remark?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I prefer to read Mr. Smith's statement. I say that I do not know Mr. Russell, and I never saw him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Neither did I.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Russell is reported to me a gentleman and a scholar, and he has certificates from Captain Devereux and Mr. Meneilly, chairman of the Board of Boiler Inspectors, of the Marine and Fisheries Department. What does this report say? Mind you, this report was made by the Deputy Minister for the hon. gentleman who was then the Minister to act upon, reporting what the evidence proved and what it did not prove. It is as follows:

The accompanying report of Capt. Devereux relative to the investigation into the charges made against Mr. Russell, the steamboat inspector, is herewith submitted for your consideration. I have not sent the evidence along with it until I hear from you, as it is too bulky; but I think there is enough in Devereux's report and Russell's statement to enable you to form an opinion on the matter.

I do not consider that anything is proved against Russell beyond what we know very well about him, viz., that certain steamboat owners pressed him to prepare plans and specifications of new boilers, which, when built, there would be no difficulty about getting passed, and that in certain cases he prepared such plans and specifications and made a charge for them. In the most of cases they appear to have been very reasonable.

If he made plans and specifications at all they could not expect him to make them for nothing, as it took up a good deal of his spare time, and would by any possibility be looked upon as a bribe to pass inferior work. In fact, some of them seem to think he was too strict with the boilers, and Captain Irving, the manager of the C. P. N. Co. is of opinion that he has done a great deal of good in British Columbia by elevating the standard of the machinery and boilers of steamboats.

That the late Mr. Dunsmuir, the coal millionaire, said to me he considered it was a great advantage to British Columbia that he was appointed inspector, and if it would have been sanctioned by the Minister he would have been glad to have given him $500 a year just to look after a boiler or machinery which he required to have made. He told me he was the best engineer he had ever known in British Columbia.

On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that there is no evidence whatever that he was bribed on any occasion, but that he did certain work to oblige steamboat owners and got paid for it, he does not at all deny. If this system is to be stopped, and I presume it should be stopped, he should be informed of it, but I think $1,200 is too small a salary if he cannot do anything to supplement it. I think it would cause a great deal of difficulty to get another man who could come from British Columbia here and pass an examination and take the situation at $1,200 salary.

When he got it before he only tried for it because nobody else, named by the members, could pass the examination, and I believe we will never get a better inspector at a similar salary.

I think he should be given another trial with a letter of his instructions not to work for anybody or take pay for extra work.

I think he would have no difficulty whatever in getting $2,000 a year in San Francisco, as Mr. Risley told me he considered him a first-class educated English engineer.

(Signed) WM. SMITH.

6th March, 1890.

Ottawa, 4th March, 1890.

The Chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspection, reports:

The charges against Mr. W. A. Russell of taking money improperly or in any way of bribes from manufacturers of engines and boilers and from owners of steamboats, have not been sustained by the evidence submitted by the commissioner, Mr. John Devereux.

(Signed) W. J. MENEILLY,

Chairman.

5th April, 1890.

On the 4th ult., when the foregoing was written, did not know of letter of 5th January, 1887, from the department to Mr. Russell, instructing him, "you will be expected not to engage in outside work, but confine yourself strictly to your duties of office." In the absence of proof there is a probability Mr. Russell did not get this instruction, and would incline to give him the benefit of the doubt.

(Signed) W. J. MENEILLY,

Chairman.

So that the only offence that I could discover Mr. Russell to have ever been guilty of, was neglecting to obey a caution said to have been sent him from the department not to engage in outside work, and with regard to which the Chairman of the Board of Inspectors reported, that the preponderance of evidence showed, that it never reached Mr. Russell at all. There is not a scintilla of moral wrong reported against Russell, and there was no reason in the wide world why he should not be reinstated in office. Hon. members of the House cannot but have watched the animus which evidently prompts the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) to interrupt so frequently in this matter, Mr. Russell was dismissed and I reinstated him, why?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, why?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will tell the hon. gentleman. In the first place, because I saw there was no more wrong committed, and that the deputy of the department reported that in no possible way could he be held guilty of having taken bribes of any kind whatever; that he was a first-class educated engineer, and the best man that could be got in British Columbia. In 1898 when it was reported to me that it was necessary to have another boiler inspector, because of the increased shipping arising out of the Yukon trade, I sent out the chairman of the board to British Columbia to publish a notice calling on all persons who desired to do so to come forward and pass the examinations if they could. There were only three who presented themselves, and two of these failed to pass ; and the only one that did pass was the second engineer of the "Quadra," and I have a report at the time from the chairman of the board, that he was not satisfactory. What was I to do ? This gentleman was recommended to me, I looked at his record and found he was reported to be the best engineer in British Columbia. I found he had done nothing wrong, I believe he was dismissed to gratify the political animus of some of our opponents, and under these circumstances I had no hesitation in appointing him. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says I appointed Mr. Russell illegally, and although he ought know better, the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says, that the work Mr. Russell did in the Yukon was illegal. I deny it. I say that his appointment was as legal as any appointment ever made by His Excellency.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) does not understand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentleman does.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Wait a moment, I want this point cleared up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not say that his appointment as boiler inspector was illegal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You said it was illegal, so far as the Yukon was concerned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I said that detailing him to the Yukon was illegal. I said that there was a way in which he could have been detailed there, that that was not done, and that all the work he did there was illegal ; taking fees was illegal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Let us see about that. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) if he looks at the statute will see, that inspectors of boilers are appointed at some particular places, but for no specified district and the appointing of them for a specified district is a matter of administrative detail alone. The inspector of boilers appointed at Toronto, at Vancouver, or at Halifax can legally inspect boilers anywhere throughout the Dominion, and the inspection made by the Halifax officer at Vancouver, if he is sent there by me, is just as legal as the inspection made by him at Halifax. The law does not say that he is to be appointed for a particular district. It says you must appoint an inspector at certain places. We appoint one at Halifax, one at Quebec, one at Toronto,

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

one at Kingston, one at Vancouver, and then we define the districts in which they are to do their work for administrative purposes, so that they will not clash one with the other. I define, as a rule, within what lines they are to work, but from time to time we called them from one district to another. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did so when he was Minister. This morning I looked up the records to see whether he did not do what the law contemplates should be done. I looked through the statute, and I find that the statute, section 41, expressly provides for this :

Any inspector may at any time visit any steamboat and inspect and examine the same.

Therefore, I say, that any inspector at any time may be called upon by the department to inspect any steamboat, whether it is within the bounds of the district that he is instructed to confine himself to in the first instance or not. His appointment is general and for the whole Dominion. What did my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) do when he was Minister ? Did he follow that rule which he now condemns ? Certainly he did, and every other Minister of Marine did so. Why, the chief inspector to-day, who was then the inspector at Kingston, was by the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) when Minister of Marine, on the 7th day of October, 1889, instructed to leave Kingston and go up to Toronto district and inspect a steamboat boiler there. Was that inspector's work all illegal, was the then Minister (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) incompetent, as he designated me for making a similar order ? I ordered this man to go from British Columbia, if necessary, up to the Yukon to inspect the boilers there, and the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did a similar thing when he was Minister. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did more. He did not scruple to send some of his inspectors out of the Dominion altogether.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have an order in my hand where he sent an inspector to Boston to inspect boilers there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Was the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) acting illegally then, and was he incompetent when he did that ? Why, Sir, the contention of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is ridiculous. The appointment of Mr. Russell, made by the Governor General, was that of measuring surveyor of shipping both for British Columbia and the Yukon district, and the appointment as steamboat and boiler inspector was for British Columbia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman say that he was appointed as boiler inspector by Order in Council ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. He was appointed, after the revised Act of last session, as Inspector of Hulls. As inspector of boilers, he was only by law to be appointed at a particular place, and the place at which he was put was in British Columbia ; there was no other man there, but he was ordered by the chief inspector to go to the Yukon and inspect there, as any other inspectors are ordered to go from one place to another and report, just as I ordered Mr. Stevens, the other day, to leave Halifax to inspect some boilers at Quebec. The law provides for it, and everything that man did was strictly legal and proper, strictly in accordance with the precedent which the hon. gentleman himself set, when he was Minister of Marine. And so this bugaboo which the hon. gentleman has raised about Mr. Russell, has not a single shred of foundation on which to stand. The man was not dismissed from office for any offence of an immoral character or any offence which would disqualify him from being appointed again to an office. But he was dismissed from office because it was alleged that he did not obey a caution which had been sent to him in a circular letter, which letter there was no evidence he ever received at all. Under these circumstances, I claim that, so far as the charge made against my department is concerned, it rests upon an absolutely baseless foundation ; and, if the charges against the officials in the other departments are as baseless and void as those against my own, the hon. gentleman's resolution ought not to have the support of a single member of this House.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). It is not my intention to delay the House for more than a moment or two ; but I do not feel inclined to give a silent vote on this occasion. The matter we are discussing is one of very great gravity. It is one that has attracted the attention—it would scarcely be too much to say—of the civilized world. It is one which, at all events, has attracted the attention of the mother country, the United States, our friends in Australasia, and many countries in Europe besides the mother country. A question of that kind is one which cannot be lightly set aside. It is a question which involves the fair fame of this country. Now, it has been suggested, because there may be inaccuracies in the indictment which has been placed in your hands by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that the whole of this inquiry which he desires to have made, should be set aside, and that no one should support this resolution. It seems to me that the principle of the resolution is, that there shall be an inquiry by an impartial tribunal ; and, if the hon. member for Pictou has accidentally substituted a return for leasing for a return for dredging, I do not think that is a reason why I should vote against the resolution. I am firmly of opinion that it is of the utmost importance that that should be done which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister himself says he desires to have done, which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) says he desires to have done, that is, that this matter should be probed to the bottom. Taking these statements of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in good faith, as I am sure they are so made, it seems to me that the only difference that exists between the two sides of the House is as to the method of the inquiry. Both sides of the House are desirous to have this matter probed to the bottom. The right hon. gentleman supports one kind of inquiry ; the hon. member who has moved this resolution supports another. The right hon. gentleman supports an inquiry by a commissioner. Now, I do not wish to say anything disrespectful of Mr. Ogilvie ; quite the reverse. I have the highest opinion of Mr. Ogilvie. I think he is a most upright and honourable man ; but that is beside the mark, to a large extent. I do not think that, outside of Canada, in those countries whose attention has been directed to this matter, it will in any degree enhance the reputation of this country that it should be known that, when grave charges of this kind have been preferred, and when a demand for an inquiry has gone abroad, we, in Canada, appointed a gentleman, no matter how great his integrity may be, who is an officer and a subordinate of a Minister who is involved in these charges, and who is a relative of his. I do not think it is fair to Canada. I think that one fact alone, that a gentleman occupying that position should be appointed to investigate these charges, is a reason for the gravest complaint in regard to this matter. When the Government refuse to allow these charges to be investigated by an impartial tribunal, and an expert tribunal, I feel satisfied that the people of this country will think that there is something behind which the Government desire to conceal. Now, I have listened to the speeches that have been made. I heard the very clever speech of the Minister of the Interior ; but I thought that he went a great deal too far for his own sake, because his speech went to show, so far as I could gather, that there had been no wrong done at all. He proved too much. Then I listened to the eloquent and impassioned speech of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. I did not gather from that speech that my right hon. friend was really grappling with the main issue here, as to whether we should have an inquiry by an impartial tribunal or not. I did not hear him take that question up and argue it. I have not heard any one gentleman on the Government side of the House who has addressed the House, venture to argue that question.

The argument which has been addressed to the House in support of that position is absolutely unanswered. The difference between the Government and the Opposition is whether the inquiry shall be conducted by Mr. Ogilvie or by a commission of judges. The right hon. gentleman says he wishes the commission to be thorough. So do we. He says the investigation should go to the root. We also wish it to go to the root. He says that if this commission, which he has appointed, turns out to be defective, he will do something else. Why, the commissioner appointed by the Government says it is defective. Over and over again the commissioner distinctly tells us that it is defective, but still the Government do not do anything. Does the right hon. gentleman say that if this commission is defective, he will appoint a commission of judges? Perhaps my right hon. friend will do me the grace to answer that question. I think it is a fair question to ask, because otherwise we are arguing somewhat in the dark. My hon. friend will not answer, although I think it is a fair question, and one to which the country has a right to have an answer. I do not see, from my point of view, on what ground the Government can persist in not answering a question of that kind. Over and over again, the commissioner has told us distinctly, in this book, as read here by my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), that the commission is defective. What is the good then of the Government telling us that if it is defective they will appoint another commission. Without desiring to say anything out of order or discourteous, I must say that my right hon. friend is practically trifling with the House and the country. This is too grave a matter. It is not a matter between the Minister of the Interior and my hon. friend from Pictou, but it is a question involving the fair fame of this country. It is something in which the people are deeply interested, and I think it devolves upon every member of this House to do his utmost to endeavour to have the fair fame of the country cleared of the stain that rests upon it at present.

No one can doubt, no one does doubt, that there has been a condition of things existing in the Yukon which is a disgrace to Canada. Let us have the matter, as my right hon. friend says, probed to the bottom, and find out all about it. How can my hon. friend contend that he is really desirous of having this matter probed to the bottom, and yet at the same time refuse now to say that he will appoint another commission? If my right hon. friend will remember that his own commissioner tells him that this is a defective commission, he ought at once, if he wishes to have the matter probed to the bottom, to say here and now: I will have another commission appointed at once. I will consider what commission ought to be appointed, but one will certainly be appointed. That is not what has been done, however. On the contrary, it seems to me, the desire has been simply to deal with the technicalities of the resolution before the House, but this is too grave a matter to be decided solely on technicalities. If my hon. friend desires to deal with it in the way it ought to be dealt with, the technicalities could be disposed of very easily by consent. If there are technical defects in the resolution, that difficulty could be easily settled by consent. I think this is too grave a matter to have technical objection interposed between the House and its decision as to whether we are to have this matter thoroughly investigated or not. I shall vote for this resolution on the ground that it is of the utmost importance this matter should be probed to the bottom as my right hon. friend has said he desires it should be.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I shall not take up very long the time of the House by attempting to answer what has been so ably answered by hon. gentlemen on this side who have preceded me. The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. McNeill) will pardon me if I do not make allusion to what he has said. His speech struck me as that of one who felt he would be in a very peculiar and awkward position if he had to vote for the resolution before the Chair. He seemed to be very anxious to be relieved of that duty. With that remark, I will address myself to a paragraph in this long resolution reflecting on the Department of Customs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him? I wish to ask the right hon. leader of the House whether he thinks anything will be gained by our sitting later. Very few persons want to speak on this side, and we might arrange to take the vote before six o'clock tomorrow afternoon. In that case, perhaps the hon. Minister of Customs would prefer to move the adjournment of the debate.

The PRIME MINISTER. We ought to finish the debate during this sitting.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will just confine myself to the short allusion made to the department over which I preside. The hon. gentleman, in his resolution, did not do myself or my department the honour of making any direct charge against us. But the paragraph relating to the Customs Department, reads as follows:—

That gross and scandalous abuses have occurred in the Department of Customs in the Yukon District, United States vessels having been admitted to the Canadian registry in the said district upon fraudulent undervaluation, as in the case of the steamer "John C. Barr," which was worth at least $60,000, but was allowed to be passed at the customs at a valuation of $10,000.

That is all that is stated with reference to the Department of Customs. If it proved to be true that, by false and fraudulent under-valuation, of a vessel worth $60,000 was entered at $10,000, that is a matter that would have to be dealt with. But I think it is not a matter that will require two judges of the Supreme Court to ascertain, it is a matter that appertains to the department, and it is their duty to attend to it—and I think the department will be able to attend to it. I can only say that action has been taken in reference to the matter. On the 3rd of May the following notices appeared in the notice paper :

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper—On Friday next—Inquiry of Ministry—Can the Honourable Minister of Customs, without inconvenience, state the names and tonnage of United States built boats which have been given Canadian registry by the Collector of Customs at Dawson, from July 1st, 1898, to latest date known at Ottawa, the duty paid, the amount of valuation of each vessel and by whom such valuation was made, and the names of British owners of the same ; and will a complete return as above, down to date, be laid upon the Table at an early day ?

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper—On Friday next—Inquiry of Ministry—Has the Department of Customs any report as to the value of the SS. "John C. Barr," recently admitted to Canadian registry at Dawson ? If so, what was the valuation for customs purposes ?

When these notices appeared the Commissioner of Customs, on May 5th, when he received the notices, immediately wrote the following letter, addressed to Mr. D. W. Davis, collector of customs, Dawson City, Yukon :

I inclose copies of two inquiries of Ministry proposed to be made in the House of Commons to-day by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. Please forward to this department, without delay, all the information asked for in these inquiries so as to enable the department to answer the questions fully.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner.

When the hon. gentleman came to ask the questions, I answered him that I was unable to give him the information with reference to the first question. As to the second question, the answer was as follows :—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The steamer "John C. Barr" was entered for duty at Dawson, 6th October, 1898, on application for Canadian registry, upon a valuation of $10,000.

Then, Sir, having given the hon. gentleman the information, on the 21st May, in discussion upon the Estimates, the hon. gentleman made an allusion to this answer of mine, and made the statement that he understood the vessel was worth $60,000, and that she had been admitted for $10,000. I considered that was a statement that should be attended to at once, that it was my bounden duty as administering the department, to inquire into the matter without delay. I mentioned to the commissioner what had been stated in the House, and asked him to get the "Hansard" and cut out the statements that were made and send the page to Mr. Ogilvie, who, besides being commissioner of the Yukon district, has been clothed by the Department of Customs with all the powers of inspector of customs. The commissioner sent this to Mr. Ogilvie in the following letter :—

W. Ogilvie, Esq.,
Commissioner of the Yukon District,
Dawson, N.W.T.

Sir,—I send you herewith pages 3162 and 3163 of "Hansard," of May 12th, 1899, containing statements respecting the valuation of the steamer "John C. Barr," upon application for Canadian registry.

Please investigate this matter and ascertain, by the best means in your power, the fair market value of the vessel at the time of application for Canadian register and report the facts for the information of the Honourable the Minister of Customs. The question of undervaluation can be dealt with in due course under the provisions of the Customs laws.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

Of course, to that we have no answer as yet. Now, what is to be said about a case of this kind ? At Dawson we have a collector of customs. He is far away, as the House well knows, and very difficult to get at. He was not appointed by me or by this Government ; he was appointed by the late Government ; he was a colleague in this House of the gentlemen who sat on this side for many years. He was appointed by the Government of which the mover of this resolution was a member. He was, therefore, I may say, the nominee of the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) himself. I might ask at this point how the hon. gentleman knows that this vessel was worth $60,000 ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have been credibly informed by those in the business.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Has the hon. gentleman seen the vessel ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) will remember I told the House very frankly that I had no personal knowledge, no direct knowledge of the facts that occurred at Dawson ; I never was there in my life ; but I said in the resolution that I had been credibly informed and believed. And I may remind the hon. gentleman that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) stated in the House that he had seen the vessel, and, if my recollection is right—and if so the statement will be found in "Hansard"—he said the vessel was worth $60,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think he did say something like that. Perhaps he is different from the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and may have seen it. But even on the testimony of the hon. member for Pictou, who has given it upon the authority or upon the judgment of the hon. member for New Westminster—who, if he said so, no doubt believed it to be true—I do not think that I could do more than seek to learn the facts, and, when the facts are ascertained, deal with the case. I confess that I can hardly conceive it possible that the facts are as stated. I take it that the gentleman who was appointed by the late Government to be collector of customs at Dawson, being appointed at such a distant place must have been one in whom they had more than ordinary confidence.

If he was to be sent away where there could be no supervision over him, where he could handle customs fees, where no inspector could reach him, where he would be the sole custodian of the funds, with no one to give account to, with no mails going out scarcely, and remittances only once in a while, I therefore took it for granted that when they had appointed a collector there they had by that fact declared that he could be trusted honestly to fulfil the duties of his office. That is the gentleman who made this entry. An inquiry has now gone up to Mr. Ogilvie to ascertain the facts in reference to this, and if it should be found, as the member for Picton has charged, that a vessel which was worth $60,000 has, by that officer, been admitted at $10,000, then, as soon as the facts are ascertained, action will be taken by the department in reference to that matter. But what blame can be attached in any shape to the department? Would the hon. gentleman ask me, upon his mere statement here, that I should suspend D. W. Davis from being collector at Dawson, without giving him a chance to answer, or without having a report from an officer? Yet he puts it in that position. It is a singular charge that he makes against the department in this matter. I believe in giving an opportunity to every officer to defend himself, but if the charge is true, there will have been in the meantime something that should have gone into the treasury that has not gone in; but the public revenue, I think, is not in serious danger from the fact that the vessel is there. The question of undervaluation can be dealt with. Similar questions are being dealt with frequently, questions submitted by able officers, questions going on some times for weeks before they can be dealt with. This will be dealt with when we have the proper information to enable us to deal with it.

Now, Sir, I will, with your permission and with the consent of the House, because it is alluding to a previous debate mention another matter to show how unsafe it is to give heed to the statements that are made and to much of the testimony which is embodied in this resolution of the hon. member for Picton. It will be remembered that upon a previous occasion when the Yukon debate was up, the hon member for Victoria, B.C.

Mr. PATERSON.

(Mr. Prior) made this statement in his speech on the 16th of June:

It was a common practice—they told me—I do not say it prevails now, for them to get their goods through at a small sum compared with what they should have paid. I will give you one instance—the case of a man called Charles Beam. He went out, and at Lake Tagish was stopped by the collector and showed the goods he had that were dutiable. The duty came to $350. This is what I am informed by a man who says he knows the facts of the case.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). About what date would it be?

Mr. PRIOR. I do not have it down here, but this man told it to me. It is within six months, I think. He said the duty came to $350. The collector's name was Thorne; he was the collector or the collector's subordinate, and he says he gave him $5 and a flask of whisky, and that this man passed his goods through for $150. The duty which he should have paid was $350, but by giving a $5 bribe and a flask of whisky, this custom-house officer passes his goods for $150.

Mr. MAXWELL. Would the hon. gentleman kindly give me the name of that man again?

Mr. PRIOR. I was informed that it was a man by the name of Charles Beam.

Mr. MAXWELL. No, but the name of the customs official.

Mr. PRIOR. I am told that his name is Thorne.

As soon as that statement was made, when I reached my office the next morning I mentioned the fact to the commissioner, and said that I wanted to have instant and full, inquiry made into it. We ascertained that this man was one of the North-west Mounted Police, acting as an assistant to the customs officer, that he was not now in our service, but was in the service of the North-west Mounted Police. I will read to the House the correspondence that took place on the subject:

Customs Department,
Ottawa, April 14th, 1899.

Fred White, Esq.,
Comptroller of North-west Mounted Police,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I send you herewith an extract from a speech made by Col. Prior, M.P., in the House of Commons on the 6th instant, containing charges of misconduct against F. P. Thorn, one of the North-west Mounted Police, who appears to have been acting as a customs officer at White Pass in 1898.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

Commissioner.

North-west Mounted Police,
Ottawa, 29th May, 1899.
Office of the Comptroller,

Sir,—Referring to your letter of 14th April last, enclosing an extract from a speech made by Col. Prior, M.P., in the House of Commons on the 6th of that month, containing charges of misconduct against F. P. Thorn, one of the North-west Mounted Police acting as customs officer at White Pass in 1898.

I transmit herewith a copy of the investigation into this matter, which I trust will be satisfactory to the Honourable the Minister of Customs.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

FRED WHITE,
Comptroller.

John McDougald, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

Customs Department,
Ottawa, April 14th, 1899.

Fred White, Esq.,

Referred to Supt. Wood for thorough investigation and report at the earliest possible moment.

North-west Mounted Police,
Tagish, May 8th, 1899.

The Comptroller, North-west Mounted Police,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In compliance with your instructions contained in a memo. forwarding the Commissioner of Customs' letter of the 14th April, I beg to forward herewith evidence taken under oath regarding the charge made by Col. Prior, M.P., against Reg. No. 2440, Constable F. P. Thorn.

The latter denies the charge, and is supported by Sub-collector of Customs Peele and Customs Officer Stevens, who state that Constable Thorn did not accept entries, and therefore was not in a position to pass any one through. He was simply a landing waiter, whose duties were to check goods by the invoices after the latter had passed through the customs officials hands. Mr. Peele himself signs the customs receipts, which are afterwards presented here by persons entering the country.

Col. Prior says he thinks the alleged case of bribery occurred during the past six months. Now, there has been no collector of customs, nor customs official here since 11th February, 1898, or for more than a year past.

No such name as Charles Beam appears on customs books since 1st July, 1898, when the books were opened.

During the time there was a collector here, Constable Thorn had nothing to do with the customs, so could not any one.

He has been in the force for eight years, has borne a good character, and only a month ago I strongly recommended him for promotion. He has been in charge of the Skagway detachment since February last, and, in my opinion, would not accept a bribe under any circumstances.

Inspector Cartwright and Mr. McMartin, of the Customs Department, both of whom were acting as sub-collectors when Constable Thorn was acting as landing waiter, are now in Dawson, so I have forwarded a copy of charge and evidence to Supt. Steele, to get their statements.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. G. HOOPER,
Commanding Tagish District.

Inspector Jarvis, Bennett.

Investigate this matter as quickly and thoroughly as you can and report.

Call upon any witnesses Constable Thorn has.

Log Cabin, Bennett Sub-District, 4, 5, 99.
North-west Mounted Police,

To the Commanding Officer,
Tagish District.

Sir,—I have the honour to attach herewith file of papers in case of Reg. No. 2440, Constable F. P. Thorn. I also attach the evidence taken and sworn to before me. In connection with this case, I beg to report that I have examined the Outport cash book of customs station of White Pass, B.C., from 1st day of July, 1898, which was the date the customs business was taken over from the North-west Mounted Police by Customs Inspector Clute, to the 28th February, which is the date Constable Thorn was transferred to Skagway to take charge of the police there. Between the dates mentioned no such name as Charles Beam appears on the books of the customs station.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) A. M. JARVIS,
Inspector.

Reg. No. 2440, Constable Thorn, F.P., on his oath says: I have been in the Customs Department since March, 1898, until February, 1899, when I was sent over to Skagway, Alaska, to take charge of the office and forward all supplies into the Yukon. I do not know any man by the name of Charles Beam. I have never had any connection whatever with the customs at Tagish, and, in fact, only visited there once with a freighting party, and that was before I had any position in the Customs Department at all. This was in February, 1898; I stayed there over night, leaving the following day. My position in the customs was that of landing waiter, performing the duties of checking goods as per invoice. This charge made by Mr. Prior is ridiculous and false. If I had wished to do such a thing it would be an impossibility, as the collector was there all the time. I have never acted as collector, but only as landing waiter.

(Signed) F. P. THORN, Constable.

Taken and sworn before me at Skagway, Alaska, this 3rd day of May, 1899.

(Signed) A. M. JARVIS,
Inspector.

Percy R. Peele, being sworn, states: I am acting sub-collector, outport of White Pass, B.C. I took charge of this station on the first day of September, 1898, succeeding Mr. Jas. H. McMartin, now of the customs, Dawson City, Yukon Territory. From the time I took charge until the time Constable Thorn was sent to Skagway, which was in February last, I have no record of any such man by the name of Charles Beam ever having cleared goods at this outport of White Pass; furthermore, upon looking over the outport cash book of this station, which dates July 1st, 1898, until the time I took charge, there is no record of any such name. Constable Thorn was never in the customs service at Tagish, and while on this station was engaged as acting landing waiter. His duties consisting solely of checking goods according to invoices. He never handled any moneys, nor accepted entries, and I have always found him a thoroughly trustworthy man in every respect.

(Signed) PERCY R. PEELE.

Taken and sworn before me at Log Cabin, B.C., this 4th day of May, 1899.

(Signed) A. M. JARVIS,
Inspector.

David Stevens, being sworn, states: I am customs officer on duty at Log Cabin Outport, B.C. Frank P. Thorn was on duty with me from the 26th January to 24th February, 1899, and am fully convinced that he was not open to bribery. I have looked through the customs records as far back as July the 1st, 1898, and have been unable to find any entry made by Charles Beam.

(Signed) D. STEVENS.

Taken and sworn before me at Log Cabin, B.C., this 4th day of May, 1899.

(Signed) A. M. JARVIS,
Inspector.

Inspector Strickland, on oath, states: I was acting collector of customs on White Pass Summit from 27th February to 27th March, 1898. Constable Thorn was not on trail duty, though he was stationed at the Summit. It was impossible for Constable Thorn to have passed any one through while I was in charge at the Summit.

Since 27th March, 1898, I have been at Tagish. The sub-collector of Customs, Mr. John Godson, left Tagish on the 11th February, 1898, and since then no duty has been collected here nor has there been any customs officer or collector here.

As far as I know, no such man as Beam passed here.

(Signed) D. A. STRICKLAND,
Inspector.

Sworn before me at Tagish this 8th day of May, 1899.

(Signed) Z. T. WOOD,
J. P.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the indulgence of the House. I thought it was only fair to the House to place these statements before it, and I think that they will illustrate the value of the statements we have heard the hon. member for Victoria and of the statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) against the characters of men in the service of the Government. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) was evidently impressed with the truth of what this man said to him.

Mr. PRIOR. I was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He accepts that statement as true, comes and puts it on the records of the House, and a man who had been in the Mounted Police eight years, who, according to the testimony of his superior officers, has borne an excellent character, a fact which is emphasized by his promotion for his services, suffers this injustice. Yet these statements are put upon the records of this House, and they go down for every one to read that he has been solemnly charged by the hon. member for Victoria with wrong-doing. When these charges were investigated it is found that they do not amount to anything. In regard to these other statements, we are told that, so far as the investigation goes, the charges have not been sustained. We know that from the newspapers; the full reports have not yet reached us of the later investigation, but we are told that these gentlemen have been exonerated by Mr. Ogilvie. But, hon. gentlemen say, you cannot accept that; it is a biased report. The commissioner is married to the aunt of the wife of the hon. Minister of the Interior. But here is a case in which a charge is made against an officer in regard to the Tagish office when that office has been closed for six months after the time that this irregularity is said to have happened. But the inspector investigated the charge and sent over to the White Pass, to which the custom-house has been removed, and after taking statements on oath, he cannot find any such man as Beam. Then you have the declaration that this man did not handle money at all, that he did not make entries, but that his sole duty was that when goods were opened up to be examined, he was employed at $1.50 per day to put them back. I venture to say that the hon. member for Victoria has as good a foundation for bringing that statement into this House as the hon. member for Pictou has for bringing in many of the statements he has, and placing them on record here. He asks that two judges of the Supreme Court shall be solemnly appointed to ascertain whether the customs office at Dawson allowed a boat in at an undervaluation. The Customs Department will attend to that. That does not need any commission of judges. I said I would not speak further. The answer that has been given to the hon. gentlemen who have sought to impugn the character and the transactions of officials under the Government by other speakers who have preceded me has been such as to bring discomfiture to these hon. gentlemen making the charges. I will not detain the House. But I think that in putting on record the result of the investigation which has been made into this charge the House will agree with me that it is but doing common justice to the man himself who has been referred to.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker, the remarks that I shall make will be brief, and will simply concern one or two points raised by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—one of which was advanced by the Prime Minister himself. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) made an appeal to gentlemen on his own side of the House, informing them that if they voted for this resolution they would vote for the truth of all the allegations contained in the charges. Just what the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) meant I do not know, but I must assume his meaning from the statement he has made. With respect to that matter, I may say that with the exception of two or three allegations of fact, in the opening paragraphs of the information, as I might call it, laid before the House by the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) which are found on pages 528, 529 and 530 and top of 531 of the Votes and Proceedings of yesterday—with the exception of these statements which no one in this House will question in the slightest degree, there is not an item contained in this information but which is alleged, as a matter of belief and information, as follows:—

That Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, a member of the Privy Council of Canada, and a member of this House, having stated from his place in Parliament that he is credibly informed and believes that with the same co-operation (and through the supervision of the Department of Justice) as was given by the Government of Canada to the said Hon. Clifford Sifton, as indicated by the said correspondence hereinbefore referred to, and the evidence contained in the report of the said committee, he can establish before a commission comprised of eminent judges and clothed with powers as hereinafter suggested, the following facts and charges:

Thus, every charge that is made by the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is made as a matter of information, "he is informed and believes." Then, the conclusion of the information or charge is in the resolution in these words:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency to desire that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to give immediate orders to his Attorney General that the most effectual means be taken for discovering the facts in any way relating to the above charges, and that His Excellency will also be graciously pleased to order the issue of a Royal Commission to two or more judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, or to any two judges of the Superior Courts of any province of Canada, granting and conferring the fullest possible powers for a complete, effectual and exhaustive inquiry with a view to the discovery of the truth of the statements and charges aforesaid, and to this end that His Excellency be advised that in the opinion of this House such a Commission should be clothed by a special Act containing similar provisions, powers, jurisdiction, discretion and authority as are conferred by the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 10, being "An Act respecting inquiries as to corrupt practices at Elections of Members of the House of Commons."

I simply cite this for the purpose of showing—were it not unparliamentary I would say the insincerity of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; a gentleman of his standing at the bar, a gentleman who is perfectly familiar with the language and form of an information, that is made as a matter of practice almost always on information and belief—to attempt to rope his followers into line by assuring them that in voting for this resolution they were voting for the truth of the different allegations and charges set forth in the information, places himself in an unenviable position. That statement of the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) is, at least, calculated to incite considerable dubiousness in the minds of sensible men, as to the sincerity of the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite of their belief that there is no truth in these charges and allegations. I am not going now to refer to these charges and allegations, for the simple reason that so much evidence has been given by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) in support of them, that it would be a work of supererogation. However, Mr. Speaker, I shall direct attention to another point that is attempted to be made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and that is: That this action of the hon. member for Pictou is an unconstitutional proceeding because it contains a charge against a judge. I beg leave to take issue squarely with that statement of constitutional law. The right hon. the First Minister read an extract from a very authoritative book, "Todd on Parliamentary Government." After Todd discusses the question of judges in relation to the Crown, he sums up in five or six sections, the procedure with respect to charges against them. The first it is unnecessary to read. I shall read the second:

2. It is also evident that the action of Parliament for the removal of a judge may originate in various ways. It may be invoked upon articles of charge presented to the House of Commons by a member in his place, recapitulating the cases of misconduct of which the judge complained of has been guilty; or, after a preliminary inquiry—by a royal commission (at the instance of Government, or at the request of either House of Parliament, or by a Select Committee of the House—into the judicial conduct—

Mr. Speaker, I emphasize the term "judicial conduct."

—of the individual in question; or, upon a petition presented to the House from some person or persons who may have a cause of complaint against a judge; provided, that, while the interposition of Parliament may be sought by petition for the application of the remedy prescribed by law for a special grievance in any particular instance, no petition should be received by either House, that otherwise reflects injuriously upon the character or conduct of the courts of justice. And no petition impugning the conduct of a judge should be permitted to remain upon the Table of the House, unless within a reasonable period, some member undertakes to invite the House to proceed upon the charges contained therein.

3. Bearing in mind the general responsibility of Ministers of the Crown for the due administration of justice throughout the kingdom,—

I would commend this to the leader of the Government and his followers in respect to a matter which was brought up in the House the other day, namely, the responsibility of Government in respect to the legislation of this House:

—and the obligation which they owe to the dispensers of justice to preserve them from injurious attack or calumnious accusations, it is necessary that before consenting to any motion for a parliamentary inquiry into the conduct of a judge—or even for the reception of a petition complaining of the conduct of a judge, and not asking for his removal from office in accordance with the statute—or not alleging reasonable grounds for such a proceeding—ministers should themselves have investigated the matter of complaint, and be prepared either to oppose or facilitate the interference of Parliament on the particular occasion.

4. That the House of Commons should not initiate, and Ministers of the Crown ought not to sanction, any attempt to institute criminative charges against any one, unless upon some distinct and definite basis; and in the case of a judge, such charges should only be entertained upon allegations of misconduct that would be sufficient, if proved, to justify his removal from the bench. But it is immaterial whether such misconduct had been the result of an improper exercise of his judicial functions, or whether it was solely attributable to him in his private capacity, provided only that it had been of a nature to unfit him for the honourable discharge of the judicial office.

The meaning of the last section is this: That the Parliament is not confined to matters which are judicial sins, but that if a man is disreputable in his character and private life, Parliament has a right to investigate this matter and to dismiss him for it. These rules are laid down with respect to offences; with regard to what we may call "judicial offences." If the right hon. gentleman had taken the pains to look to the authorities that are relied on by Mr. Todd, and upon which these propositions are based, he would find that there is not a single one of these authorities, with the exception of one, that touches in any way on offences by a judge in his private capacity. In that particular case the proceeding was different, and the round of procedure that was claimed by the First Minister to be applicable to this case was not followed. This case before us is an exceptional case, and the only authority I know of I will cite. It is not apparently given in Todd, but I am familiar with the case, and from Nash's Biography of Lord Westbury, I am enabled to get its date.

The difficulty in this case is that where there are two personalities, so to speak, in a judge, one political and the other judicial. This House, which has power to inquire into the doings of every one exercising a political function, can pursue the investigation of charges committed by him in his political capacity, utterly regardless of the requirements of the law in respect to a judicial personality, if the offence is political. As proof of this contention I will cite the case of Lord Westbury, who, as we all know, was Lord High Chancellor of England, the highest judicial functionary in the British Empire. That office caused him to perform what may be called two functions—the judicial function of hearing cases on appeal in the Chancery Court and in the House of Lords, and political function as a member of the executive. As Lord High Chancellor he had considerable patronage, and in the exercise of his political function the disposal of this patronage became the subject of a scandal which came before the House of Commons. Let us look at the course which the House of Commons in England pursued with respect to Lord Westbury. His case and the case of Judge Dugas are exactly parallel. In the case of Judge Dugas, we have a gentleman who unites in himself two personalities—first, that of a judge, and secondly, that of a political officer. Lord Westbury united in himself the two functionaries—that of the highest judge in the British Empire, and that of an executive officer. What was done when the matter came before the House? It came before the House in this way. From Nash's History I got the date, and then I consulted "Hausard," and got the facts from the original source. On May 15 a gentleman of the name of Farrand asked a question of the Attorney General on the floor of the House as to the resignation of a gentleman of the name of Wilde, whom Lord Westbury had asked to resign his position in order that he might appoint his son to the vacancy. An answer was given to that question on May 15. Farrand followed it up with further questions on the 16th, and asked that a certain letter which had been written to Lord Westbury be laid on the Table of the House. This was done. Now, mark you, without any communication having been had with Lord Westbury, Mr. Farrand on May 19 placed on the notice paper a notice that on May 23 he would move for a committee of Parliament to inquire into the scandals respecting Lord Westbury. On May 23 he made his motion. Lord Palmerston, who was the leader of the Government at the time, said that the Government had no objection whatever to the motion being proceeded with immediately. It was discussed, but there was no opposition offered to it. The consequence was that on that day the motion was passed unanimously by the House, and the committee of investigation was appointed. It went to work, and made a report, which was presented to the House on July 3—and here I may say, for the information of the House, that Lord Westbury was completely exculpated from any personal act of even impropriety, but the committee thought that he had scarcely exercised that degree of diligence which he should have exercised as Chancellor over the affairs of his department; and on this mild criticism of his position, Lord Palmerston thought, after an adverse vote of the House, that Lord Westbury ought to resign his position as Chancellor, which he accordingly did on the 4th of July, 1865. The position taken by the First Minister is entirely inconsistent with this, which is the only real precedent I know of in English parliamentary history. The right hon. gentleman has cited cases in which the man is a judge, and the act complained of is in the exercise of his judicial functions or by virtue of his judicial capacity or in his individual capacity.

Mr. POWELL.

Again, under the procedure as laid down by Mr. Todd, the Government have been rather slow. When a gentleman from his place in Parliament casts any reflection upon a judge in the exercise of his functions of his office, it is the duty of the Speaker, to stop him then and there. It is the duty of the member who is going to prefer the charges to communicate with the Government and let them know what charges he intends to prefer, and give them a copy of the charges, so that they can consider them and send a copy to the judge. After the member does that, he can introduce his resolution or petition to the House or Table in the ordinary way. Even if the contention of the Government is right, this matter has been allowed to go on after the copy has been given to them; the motion has been allowed to be made and the discussion entered into. At this late stage, under a contention which has no precedent behind it, the Government attempt to burk inquiry. Instead of shirking the inquiry on the contention that the course pursued by the hon. member for Pictou is unconstitutional, the Ministers should boldly face the charges. They must know that it is not only constitutional, but stands on all fours with the case of Lord Westbury, which is quite a late precedent.

There is another matter to which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries referred. It was in reply to the statement of the hon. member for Pictou, who complained that in Mr. Ogilvie's investigation there was not given to the witnesses a guarantee that they would not be prosecuted. In reply to that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries grew very excited indeed. He assumed the air of one talking upon the stump, and in the strongest terms of declamatory invective assailed the hon. member for Pictou for having made a statement which he claimed that gentleman knew to be incorrect. Now, Sir, the very statement of commission which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries read was the condemnation of the statement he made. Mr. Ogilvie stated to the witnesses that any statement they made would not be used in the case of any prosecution against them. There is immunity from what? Not immunity from prosecution, but immunity from having the particular testimony they were giving put in evidence against them. What was wanted? Does not any practising lawyer know that in nine cases out of ten what you do not want your opponent to know are the exact facts which could be got from the witnesses before Mr. Ogilvie by a skilful cross-examination. So that the immunity guaranteed by him was practically no immunity at all. What the witnesses required was immunity from prosecution which could only be given by the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown, the prerogative of pardon. I shall not detain the House longer, except to say that these charges are very serious matters, and, when I heard the Minister of the Interior—and I must say I admired the calm and strong speech that he made, the astuteness with which he marshalled his facts, and also the very deliberative and shrewd manner in which he selected the points he felt to be weak in the armour of the hon. gentleman from Pictou—I regretted he did not grapple with the main points of the indictment, which contains the matters this country desires to be enlightened upon. These constitutional niceties the country does not wish to be enlightened upon, but there is one thing on which it does wish to be enlightened, and that is, whether or not things are rotten in the Yukon. That suspicion which is in the public mind, will never be allayed by any report brought in by the man who is the uncle by marriage of the Minister responsible for the administration of the Yukon. The interests of these gentlemen themselves, the interest particularly of the Minister of the Interior, if his skirts are entirely clear, if there is nothing he is ashamed to have brought out by the most searching investigation, demand that he should court an independent inquiry, that he should court the judgment of an independent commission, which would carry conviction to the mind of every man in Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. He should ask for it himself.

Mr. POWELL. Certainly. Any man who felt the strength of innocence, whose "strength is as the strength of ten, because his heart is pure," would court the fullest and most independent inquiry, so that his character might be freed from the aspersion which political or other enemies have cast upon it. He especially, who is one of the custodians of the honour of Canada—for I agree with him, that the honour of any country does rest in its public men—should see to it that he is not besmirched, and that his Government should present to the world the appearance of a Government free from these grave charges, which have been so widely scattered throughout the whole civilized world, and which, rightly or wrongly, are believed by the great majority of men.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Before the question is put, I wish to say a few words to explain the vote I am about to give. We heard my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, I think, at his best. I do not think I ever heard from him an abler speech, and the right hon. gentleman the leader of the House rose to the plane of eloquence to which he is so capable of rising. But I find that these hon. gentlemen gave their attention entirely almost to the form of the motion of the hon. member for Pictou. And, as the right hon. Prime Minister made what seemed to him a very strong point respecting form, I rise to point out to any gentleman here who may have been impressed by the argument of the First Minister, that I think my right hon. friend put that argument hastily. He argued that this motion was unconstitutional, because a judge was assailed in it, and he went so far as to say that you cannot assail a judge in this House in that manner. Let it be assumed, for argument's sake, that the hon. member for Pictou did assail Judge Dugas. I think the First Minister was hasty in his contention, and I will give him my authority very briefly. The position which has just been taken by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), namely, that you can divide a personality, like a judge, and try him, either as a judge or as a member of the Executive Council is the correct one; but, supposing you cannot divide his personality, are the members of this House to be debarred from discussing the conduct of a judge, or even accusing him? I myself will not say that you can here accuse a judge in his judicial capacity. A private member has actually done it, because I remember, in 1894, the member then from L'Islet, now Minister of Public Works, accused Judge Bossé, in the strongest terms of actually taking bribes from Mr. McGreevy, and of misconduct on the bench; and he also accused Judge Oimet in very strong language. I then expressed the opinion, which I still hold, that the conduct of the Minister of Public Works was improper, and the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy spoke as follows:—

I had intended to make a few observations somewhat in the same strain as those of the hon. member for West Assiniboia, who has just taken his seat, but I do not desire to use language quite so strong. I will not characterize those proceedings as disgraceful, but as painful in the extreme.

When the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte), now Minister of Public Works, assailed the judiciary of Quebec, who came to the rescue of the present Minister of Public Works? I do not think that the Prime Minister, to use his own language, with regard to another person, will dispute the authority of the parliamentarian to whom I now refer. The right hon. gentleman then said:

I do not care, at this period of the session, to enter into any controversy with the right hon. gentleman as to the conclusion he has arrived at with regard to the accusations brought forward by my hon. friend from L'Islet. This is a subject which it is altogether too late to discuss as fully as it might be discussed. This, however, I think may be said, that it is the undoubted privilege, not only the privilege, but the right, of any member of this House to accuse any man in this country, let him be high or low, against whom he has charges to bring.

That authority of the right hon. gentleman, who now leads the House, annuls the authority of the right hon. gentleman to-day. In my opinion, he puts that altogether too strongly; I do not think it can be supported, especially with his own authority against himself, which I have just read, that it is the undoubted privilege, aye, the right, of any hon. member of this House to accuse any man, be his position high or low. The speech of the Minister of the Interior was, as I say, a clever speech. It struck me as too clever, if anything. He thought he saw, and he did see, an opportunity of making points of a popular kind against the form of the motion, and certain features of it. He was content with making largely technical points. There evidently is a mistake in the extract from that return 83. There may be other points that, for instance, I myself would differ from. But when it comes to a question of voting on the subject of a more thorough inquiry, would these things justify anybody in voting against the motion? I confess that I do not think the position of the Minister of the Interior that we must vote for everything in this long motion if we vote for it at all, is tenable; I consider that all we vote for in supporting it is a thorough and exhaustive inquiry. In voting for it, as I will if I am in the House, I do not take it that I shall be voting for everything in the motion. I might be inclined to say that I differ from the form of the motion—probably improperly, because, I think, from his experience and for other reasons, my hon. friend from Pictou could frame a motion of that sort better than I could. Still, I myself would not have framed the motion in that form. But, would an objection of that kind justify me in voting against it? I do not think it would. And for this reason—the Prime Minister himself acknowledged that it is necessary to probe these charges to the bottom. Having this and the admission of Mr. Ogilvie himself, as well as the outcry from hundreds of people that the commission of Mr. Ogilvie has failed, how can we vote against a motion for a thorough inquiry on the ground that there are some minor features of it that we individually do not agree with? The Ogilvie commission failed. It could not but fail in the Yukon. It would have failed anywhere, because what was wanted was an inquisitorial inquiry, with power to send for persons and papers, with power, and with instructions, to initiate investigation and with power to pay witnesses. I ventured, on a previous occasion, to refer to the precedent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission. I refer to it on this occasion more readily because it was referred to—but referred mistakenly—by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. Here is an inquiry of an inquisitorial character. The commission was issued to three persons—Judge Clarke, Mr. Miall and Mr. Keefer. They sat here in Ottawa, and they went to Winnipeg, and I think they went elsewhere. They subpoenaed men—Tom, Dick and Harry; Brown Jones and Robinson—anybody who could give information in regard to the matter into which they were instructed to inquire. The result was that every subject that came within their purview they ran to earth, and got the fullest information concerning it. That is a precedent that might well be followed. The Minister of the Interior said that it was a commission to inquire into the acts of the opponents of the Government of Sir John Macdonald. I have the commission here. There are some seventy-two contracts inquired into, as well as a large number of other questions; and anybody who looks into it will see that we inquired carefully, inquisitorially, not merely into the contracts made by Mr. Mackenzie, but into the contractors made by the Conservative Ministers. We had Sir Charles Tupper before us. I think, for four or five days, and examined him very closely in regard to every transaction that had passed through his hands connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The late John Henry Pope, who was Minister of Public Works, did not want to come before us. We adopted the course, with regard to men of any distinction, of sending them a polite message saying that we should be glad to have them present themselves for examination. Mr. Pope refused to come. I myself went to Sheriff Powell and had a subpoena issued and had Mr. Pope before the commission, and we examined him inquisitorially. My hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said very properly that this commission was issued without any instructions whatever. The language of the commission is of the widest—merely to inquire into all the acts regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway from its inception to the issue of the commission. I can emphasize that with a little private history. I took the liberty, when coming from the Rideau Club one day in company with the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, to broach the subject of the commission to him. I said: "That commission is very wide; it might take until 1900 to finish the inquiry." And I ventured to ask: "What is its object? Is there any special object in it?" He turned to me and said: "There is your commission; make your inquiry without fear or favour, no matter whose body you go over. And the inquiry was made without fear or favour, and it is an inquiry like that that we want on the present occasion."

Now, there will be a great disappointment throughout the country, in my opinion, and great disappointment in the ranks of the supporters of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself unless we have such an inquiry as is called for by the latter part of this resolution. The right hon. gentleman says that if it is found that this inquiry is not such as to satisfy the public conscience there will be a further inquiry, and that everything will be probed to the bottom. In saying that, he admits that he himself is convinced that there are things to be searched into.

Well, Sir, we have to face the dissatisfaction that exists to-day in the public mind; we have to take into account the fact that men came away from Dawson and would not go before Mr. Ogilvie because they were not able to secure the attendance of witnesses to complete their case. I may mention that I have letters here from men occupying important positions, who would have been glad to go before Mr. Ogilvie if they were sure that the inquiry would have been thorough, but they came away from Dawson without giving their evidence. I have a letter from a gentleman living in Paris, if I mentioned his name his respectability would be known to gentlemen in this House. It is dated March 29th, 1899, and as the letter is written in French, I will translate it. He thanks me for having brought as much of the Yukon case as I did before the House. He assures me that the position I took would be entirely maintained, and says he is ready to go before such a commission as I happened to indicate and such as is asked for by the motion of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I had said that there must be a thorough inquiry, and he concludes by saying that he is ready to go before such a commission and give his evidence. I do not want to give that gentleman's name, but I will in confidence let anybody see it who wishes. There are dozens of such letters. I do not see why the Government, whatever views they may take about the form of this motion, should not be willing to meet the wish of the country and to grant an exhaustive and inquisitorial inquiry. This inquiry has not failed merely because we could not inquire about anything that occurred after a certain date in August; it has failed in regard to things that occurred before that date, and it has failed because of the character of the inquiry. Nobody supposes that in Dawson or anywhere else you can tell a man to sit down and say: Now, I am ready to hear any evidence that is brought before me, and in that way an inquiry that will satisfy the public conscience. I say it is admitted by friend and foe, in fact the only gentleman who seems to take a different view is the Minister of the Interior. There were parts of his speech that justified what my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) said, and which seemed to indicate that he did not think there was any wrong-doing at all. He seemed to justify Mr. Wade, he seemed to justify Mr. McGregor. I have here a letter about Mr. McGregor, signed by a thoroughly respectable man. I will not read the letter, but it is at the disposal of any one who wishes to see it. Here we have Mr. Wade and Mr. McGregor declaring that they violated the Order in Council, and yet the report comes from Dawson that before Mr. Ogilvie, Mr. Wade stand completely justifified. I repeat that I did not intend to address the House at all; I had hoped there would be a vote earlier in the evening. But after the statement made by the right hon. gentleman that this was unconstitutional, and the reason he gave, I thought it desirable I should quote his own authority against himself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I do not intend to discuss the general issue of this resolution here but to confine my observations to a portion of it which refers to the Post Office Department. I may, however, be permitted to make a slight exception in reference to a portion of the indictment, if I may so dignify it, which has confessedly failed on the admission not only of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Davin), but of other members of this House. The general charges may be divided into two classes; one class which attacks Ministers, and another class which attacks those who have been employed by the Ministers carrying on the public business. The most serious, of course, is the class which aims at the Ministers; and probably it will be conceded that the most serious charge of all is that made against the Minister of the Interior in connection with the alleged granting of mining leases. Now, the ex-Minister of Justice, in his resolution, declares that he is credibly informed and believes that if an opportunity is afforded him he can prove conclusively the charges contained on page 540, namely, that the Philps and Cameron applied for and obtained mining leases. Does the hon. gentleman now, in view of what has taken place, adhere to that statement? The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), with a frankness that I think the House will appreciate, admitted that that portion of this charge has absolutely fallen to the ground. I cannot pass from the observations of the hon. member for West Assiniboia without saying that I was struck with the fairness of his observations, especially considering that as a rule he and the Minister of the Interior at times take very widely different views upon public questions. I think he showed good taste in dealing with the matter as he did. But I come back to the ex-Minister of Justice. Now does he, as a man of honour, as a member of this House, adhere to his statement in this resolution, or does he withdraw that portion of it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman put that question for an answer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to answer it. Does he now say, in view of the light that has been thrown upon matters since this discussion began, does he now adhere to the statement contained in this resolution that he is informed, and believes, and can establish, if the opportunity is given, that these persons, the Philps and Cameron, obtained the leases named on page 540?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) will sit down for one moment, I will explain. I do not wish to argue the matter. I only rise, with a great deal of pleasure, to answer the question. The hon. Postmaster General is the first hon. gentleman who has been good enough to put a question to me on the matter of that kind. It is quite clear that the statement, as it is in the resolution, is inaccurate. I never supposed any one would imagine that there was an intention to conceal anything. The hon. Minister of the Interior charged ignorance on my part and carelessness. But the point I wish to make, and in which I wish to be frank with the House, is this, that, of course, the language, as it is, is inaccurate in part. It does not appear by the return to which I referred, and which is on the Table of the House, that all of these parties who applied for these leases, obtained them; but, supposing I had the opportunity of being heard before a commission, and afterwards there was a return showing that these applications were not all granted, my point would be, that, out of this return, showing these applications by the Philps and Mr. Cameron, the law partners of the Minister, a dredging lease was got, and that Mr. Philp represented in writing to a gentleman, known to me, that the hon. Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were both interested in this dredging lease. I could not charge more. I very properly stopped there, for I did not know, although informed directly that the statement is true. I do not think I am taking undue advantage of the opportunity given me. Nevertheless, the point lay largely in the fact that Mr. Philp was found describing himself in these different ways in that return, that Messrs. Philp & Cameron appeared from the return to have obtained a dredging lease out of these various applications, and there was the statement by Mr. Philp, that the hon. Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were both interested, but that, for obvious reasons, their names could not appear. It would not be urged against me that I had, in this motion, made a reckless and false charge, supposing I proved that much, because it appeared by the return which was produced, and which is referred to here, that there were several applications not granted. That is the explanation, and I do not think it is an unreasonable one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has gone so far as he has, and he has not completely, I think, vindicated his course.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a matter of opinion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is my opinion. There is a great deal between a dredging lease and large number of mining leases.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not for the purpose of this charge.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have it now from the hon. gentleman that he must fail to prove that important charge contained in the resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I say I can prove the substance of that charge.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This charge must absolutely fail. I submit that the framing of this charge is open to serious criticism. I could understand perhaps the inference that the hon. gentleman desires to be drawn from this language, but that is an inference which the language does not bear out, namely, that the hon. Minister of the Interior took advantage of his position and was guilty of a breach of trust that he profited in some way by the granting of these leases which were never granted. But, assuming that they had been granted, the hon. gentleman is not frank and courageous enough to make a charge in an unmistakable way. He simply states two separate things and asks the public to assume that these must lead to certain conclusions. This is not the sort of treatment that one member of Parliament is entitled to receive from another. If it is intended to make a charge against an hon. gentleman that would ruin him in the minds of the public, if true, I think it is due both to the accused and the accuser that a charge should be made frankly and in an unmistakable language. If the hon. gentleman could have proved everything in this charge it would not have led to the conclusion that he seeks, apparently, to impress upon the public mind. If he means to charge the hon. Minister of the Interior with having abused his position, committed a breach of trust, having been guilty of malfeasance in the way he administered his office, surely clear language could be discovered and the charge could have been put in such language. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman seriously exposes himself to criticism, as not being fair and frank, and as lacking that courage that he has claimed to himself in connection with this matter.

I do not intend, as I say, to go into the general issue, but just to refer to the portion of the indictment which refers to the Post Office Department. The language of the resolution is as follows :

That the Honourable the Postmaster General was guilty of gross neglect in the administration of the Post Office Department and from the year 1896 to 1899 did not provide a reasonably efficient postal service to and from the Yukon Territory, but, on the contrary, appointed insufficient, inefficient and corrupt officials and provided such inadequate and unsuitable accommodation and postal arrangements that a large community consisting of the inhabitants of Dawson, N.W.T., suffered distress, inconvenience and pecuniary losses.

That F. Harper was postmaster of Dawson City and gave the exclusive right of delivery of letters in Dawson to a company known as the Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company.

These are all the allegations I discover. In regard to the first charge that the Postmaster General was guilty of gross neglect in the administration of the department, I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the defective pleading there. If it is intended to limit the charge to gross neglect in the Yukon, it should have been so stated, but it is not so stated, although other portions of the paragraph refer to the Yukon. The charge is that the Postmaster General was guilty of gross neglect in the administration of his department. I would have to speculate as to whether this is to be limited to the Yukon or not. I would like to know if that would be the proper form of a charge, because to say that the Postmaster General has been guilty of gross neglect in the administration of his department, the ramifications of which extend over this vast country, is vague and indefinite, and I think, condemns itself. I assume that the hon. gentleman has no particulars except those we have in the resolution. He charges that from 1896 to 1899 I failed to provide proper mail facilities for the Yukon. There we have a date and a charge that the facilities were not reasonably adequate. What are facts? There was no pretense, or effort, to provide mail facilities for the Yukon in the early part of 1896. I assume no complaint could be made because the Government did not extend its various branches of the public service into the Yukon until the gold fever began, and it was not until well on into the summer of 1897.

A few explorers had worked their way in; rumours began to come out in the winter of 1896-97, and in that winter the police did attempt to bring in the mails. At that time there was little or no travel through the Passes. An avalanche overtook them, the mail bags were buried in the snow and could not be recovered until the spring of the year 1897, and I do not know that the police or any other human agency could have prevented that occurrence. The mails were placed in the hands of the Mounted Police, and it is, therefore, not a question to be decided by judges, but it is a question that can be dealt with by any person having a fair mind, as to whether it was wiser exercise of judgment to place the service in the hands of the police than in the hands of some other persons. I think it was the only possible way to accomplish it at that moment, and I think so still. I do not think there is any person who considers the subject who will not say, that until the country becomes better known, until there are better facilities for carrying on the service, it is safer to keep the mails, to some extent, in the hands of the Mounted Police. It does not require a tribunal of judges, it does not require evidence to determine whether it is wise or unwise to put the mail service in the charge of the police. They have carried it on with varying success, and if they have not made an unqualified success of it, the question is would any other body of men have done so. They have had all the resources of the service to enable them to carry it on. It is a service, the difficulties of which are not equalled on the face of the earth to-day. It is a service penetrating into the Arctic Circle and thousands of miles away from the seat of Government. I would like to know where there is any similar service on the face of the earth to-day, maintained in the same state of efficiency as the service in the Yukon. I propose, as long as it seems wise, to leave the service in the hands of the Mounted Police.

Mr. WALLACE. What were the terms of the arrangement with the Mounted Police?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Mounted Police first tried to perform a monthly service, and later on when they got their huts established and their force strengthened, and the number of dog trains added to, they maintained a fortnightly service. This coming year we may be able to maintain a weekly service. It is charged here that Mr. Harper was postmaster at Dawson City, and that he gave the exclusive right of delivering the mails in Dawson to the Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company. A question was asked me in the House about that, and it appears on the Journals of the 27th of March, and if that question correctly sets forth what is said to have occurred, I may read it to explain what seems to have happened:

The North-west Mounted Police,
Dawson, August 23, 1898.

To whom it may concern: The Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company is going to endeavour to establish a service for the delivery of mail in the town of Dawson. They have interviewed me regarding this service, and I have agreed to help them in any way I can in giving them letters for those who may wish to avail themselves of this accommodation for a small charge. This is entirely voluntarily on any one's part who may wish to obtain their mail through this source, and is done entirely for the public benefit. As a good deal of expense will be incurred in connection with this delivery, I have given the within mentioned the sole right of delivery for the time being.

FRANK HARPER,
Postmaster, Dawson.

Now, Mr. Frank Harper is an inspector of the Mounted Police; he was appointed to the service by the late Administration; he had been in the service more than ten years when we took office; he is in the service still. He was not postmaster in the full sense of the word. The Administration of the Post Office Department in the Yukon was vested in the Mounted Police, and the supreme control of it in that district given to Major Walsh, and subsequently to Mr.

Mr. MULOCK.

Ogilvie. Frank Harper was one of the Mounted Police officers, and as such I suppose he was put in the office as postmaster. He is not postmaster now, because last fall the Post Office Department appointed a postmaster outside of the police. All that appears to have occurred was, that Mr. Frank Harper, solely in the interests of the public, stated, that if any people of Dawson City chose to employ this company to bring their mails to them, instead of going individually to the post office he would endeavour to facilitate their doing so. It was entirely voluntary with the citizens as to whether they chose to obtain their mails in that way. If these are the facts, and I believe they are, I would like to know what inquiry is necessary to tell the House what should be its judgment as to whether or not Mr. Frank Harper adopted a wise or unwise, a corrupt or an honest course in that matter. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), will not here say, that Mr. Frank Harper was guilty of any corrupt act or intent in adopting that measure in connection with the Dawson post office. The hon. gentleman must know Mr. Harper. Mr. Harper is, I am told, one of the most trusted officers of the North-west Mounted police. He was the choice of the late Government, and the present Government found him in office. How is it he becomes unworthy of confidence when we took office, when he was for ten years a trusted officer of the Conservative Government. The very fact that the Conservative Government appointed him and retained him and permitted him to have their confidence, gave us a prima facie right to think he was trustworthy.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is Mr. Harper still in office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think he is inspector of the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is he postmaster?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou)—was he dismissed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was not dismissed for any supposed wrong-doing or anything of that kind. Apparently the hon. gentleman was not listening to me when I explained that last fall a postmaster was appointed at Dawson City outside of the police, and then Mr. Frank Harper, I presume resumed his ordinary police duties.

Mr. WALLACE. Who was appointed to the postmastership at Dawson?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. J. J. Hartman.

Mr. WALLACE. Of North York?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He once had the honour of being in North York; a most respectable man, a man of great experience, a man deserving the confidence and enjoying the confidence of the country.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Was Mr. Harper dismissed on account of his instituting that service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was not. The change in the postmastership was made last fall, and I never heard of this until it was brought to my attention in the House this spring. That the Mounted Police have not altogether failed in their duties I may say that I received a letter a short time ago from Mr. Shakespeare, the postmaster of Victoria, B.C., in which he writes:

Victoria, B.C., 19th April, 1899.

Sir,—By the inclosed letters which I have received, it will be seen that the Canadian mail service to the Yukon is evidently preferred to that of the United States. Almost every mail I receive similar letters.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
N. SHAKESPEARE,
Postmaster.

He sends me a number of letters.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do these relate to the service before 1899, or since?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This letter is dated April 19th, 1899. If the hon. gentleman is curious I will give him some of them. The hon. gentleman will see whether they bear on the service prior to their dates or not:

Dear Sir,—Will you please be so kind as to forward this letter to Dawson, as I have heard the Canadian mail makes unusually quick time, and oblige,

MISS HATTIE PALMER.
Hotel York,

Seattle, Wash., April 10th, 1899.

The Postmaster, Victoria, B.C.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly forward inclosed letter? Many of our letters to the Klondike failed to reach there, but we are told that those with Canadian postage are always delivered,

Respectfully,
MRS. O. H. HENDERSON.

Yankee Jims, Cal., April 6th, 1899.

Salem, Mo., April 11th, 1899.

Postmaster, Victoria, B.C.

My son, in the Klondike, says that the Canada mail is the most reliable, so I have procured some Canada stamps and would ask you to kindly mail this letter at your office, and oblige,

Yours truly,
E. B. SANKEY.

Mr. WALLACE. I would ask the Postmaster General if there is any other mail than the Canadian mail going into Dawson?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Where from?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will deal with that subject later on. I have also a letter from J. C. McLachlan, of Toronto, dated April 28th, 1899:

Dear Sir,—Herewith we beg to hand you an envelope mailed in Dawson City on the 23rd February last, and received in Toronto on the 3rd April. We consider this to be good mail service from Dawson.

Here is a letter from the Alaska Commercial Co. to myself:

Alaska Commercial Co.,
Dawson, Y. T., March 22, 1899.

Sir,—We take the liberty of addressing a few lines to inform you of our appreciation of the present management of the Dawson Post Office, which is being conducted by Mr. Hartman in a truly efficient and satisfactory manner.

Only those who have lived on the Yukon and experienced the annoyance of having letters delayed months, and even years, in transit, can understand and appreciate fully the relief of having such service as is at present in force, and which is as nearly perfect as we can expect.

The North-west Mounted Police are sending the mail here, and Mr. Hartman is distributing same, with a promptness and regularity which is highly commendable.

We may also add that the feeling of satisfaction in Dawson is general.

Respectfully yours,
ALASKA COMMERCIAL CO.,
(Signed) Per WM. M. HAM, Agent.

An hon. gentleman a few moments ago remarked that it took a letter 30 days to reach Dawson City. Here is a letter bearing on that point:

Ottawa, April 26th, 1899.

The Hon. Wm. Mulock, Postmaster General.

Sir,—In regard to the mails arriving from Dawson, I take pleasure in saying that I lately received a letter from my son there in the short space of 25 days from Dawson to Ottawa.

Respectfully yours,
JOS. McTELLERVEY.

I would also read to the House an extract from a letter which appeared in the Toronto "Globe" on April 29, 1899, signed by Rev. L. Minehan, pastor of St. Peter's church, as follows:

On the 20th of last month a letter was written to me by my brother Thomas, a member of the mining party sent out from Toronto a year ago by the Telford Company. The writer was then working on one of the creeks of the Stewart River, upwards of 90 miles from Dawson City. As the letter was dated March 20th it probably did not reach the nearest postal station for a day or two afterwards. It was delivered at my address on the morning of April 20th. In a month (or less if a margin be allowed between the date of writing and posting) this letter had travelled some 700 miles at least from a creek of the Stewart River to Lake Bennett, thence 22 miles to Sunset camping ground, then over the White Pass to Skagway, all this distance being covered by dog teams. The next stage of the journey was a trip of more than a thousand miles from Skagway to Vancouver with probably a delay of some days before a steamboat called. After the western outpost of the C. P. R. was touched a stretch of some three thousand miles remained to be traversed before the letter in question reached me. Considering the immense distance to be covered and the tremendous difficulties to be encountered, I doubt if any postal administration on earth to-day could parallel the achievement I have recorded.

I read an extract from the Montreal "Witness" of May 20, 1899, containing a copy of a communication of the correspondent of the New York "Tribune" in the Yukon, who wrote in April last this communication, and I will read a portion of it :

The writer recently made the trip from Dawson to Skagway in nineteen days by using the greatest exertion and having a first-class dog team, but a police mail team followed him out of Dawson and made Skagway in nine days, with five hundred pounds of mail, averaging sixty miles a day

Of the many thousand Americans living along the Yukon west of Dawson, on the Alaskan side not one has received his mail since last summer, and except from persons coming in, no one has heard that the war is over. Until last month, and since last September, the American mail has been hung up at Lake Bennett. The United States Government contracts with men who have not the means to forward it, and her citizens suffer accordingly. Eight tons of letters are somewhere between Lake Bennett and Dawson for the people on the American side. People who have heard nothing from their families and friends are anxious. Eight tons of letters would ease their minds and Colonel Steele has undertaken to please these Americans. He has, with the approval of the Governor General, and the American consul at Dawson, ordered his wonderful police force to pick this mail up and take it to the American line at Eagle City, and to handle all the American mail from now on the same as they do their own Canadian mail. The police are handling this bulky American mail over the rough ice and snow in weather which New Yorkers would call a continuous blizzard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that would go to show that the mail service is being as efficiently conducted as possible, and I doubt if there is any better or more effective way. It is merely a question, then, whether or not it was a wise exercise of judgment, to entrust the Yukon mails to the Mounted Police. I can only repeat that I adhere to the view I took when the mails were placed in their hands as the only available or effective means, unless it can be possible to secure guarantees from strong companies, and even then I would hesitate entirely to remove the mail service at present from the Police, lest private contractors should break down. I contemplate attempting to divorce the mail service from the Police, but gradually ; so that should private contractors fail, there will not be a total failure, but the portion entrusted to the police will to a large extent prevent any serious public inconvenience.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). When this question was before the House the last time, I voted against the motion for a judicial inquiry. I objected to the stand taken by the mover of that motion with regard to the inquiry then going on, of which we now have the report. It was contended at that time that that inquiry was not adequate and could not bring about any good result, but I held it was a proper inquiry and, in all reasonable probability, would bring about good results. That inquiry has been held, we have the report, and I consider that the character of the report justifies the position I took on that occasion. I said at the time that I had not that belief in the righteousness of the Yukon officials, which some other hon. gentlemen on this side had. I consider that the evidence submitted before Mr. Ogilvie and his report on that evidence, substantiate the position I then took, and fully substantiate the reports we have had, from time to time, from the Yukon concerning the actions of the officials there. Mr. Ogilvie states in his report that it has been proven that the door-keeper did take money, that the officials inside did work for pay from outsiders, that on Dominion Creek two discovery claims were allowed to be located, which resulted in a confusion of claims. These were the principal allegations made against the administration of the Yukon, and these have been proven by Mr. Ogilvie's investigation. But I consider something more than an investigation is needed. I consider that a great wrong has been done to many people who went out as pioneers to that country ; and while it may be impossible to redress these wrongs, it is not impossible to punish those who perpetrated them. I will vote for the motion of the hon. member for Pictou, not because I support all that his motion contains or the position he takes in every particular, but because I wish to place before the House and the country, in the most emphatic manner possible, my desire that the offences which have been committed against the pioneers of the Yukon by certain officials of the Government should be punished and punished as severely as possible, as the result of any investigation that may be held. I consider that it is necessary to hold an investigation for the credit of the officials as well as for their punishment. All were not guilty and all were not equally guilty, but that certain officials were guilty has been proven by the departmental investigation held by Mr. Ogilvie. It is desirable for the good name of those who did no wrong and the punishment of those who did wrong, that the right should be sifted from the wrong.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Before the motion is put, I wish to make a brief explanation. When the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) moved his resolution, some two or three months ago, the Government asked that we should wait until Mr. Ogilvie's report came down. I felt then, although I did not consider that Mr. Ogilvie was the proper man to make the investigation, that the request of the Government was a reasonable one, and therefore voted against the motion of the hon. gentleman, but in explaining my vote, I made the statement that when that report came down, if it was not satisfactory to any considerable section of the House, so far as I was concerned, I would vote for the fullest inquiry. I have followed the doings out in the Yukon closely for a year or two, and am satisfied that a great deal of skallawaggery has taken place there. I believe that the Government and the country have nothing to lose in having the very fullest investigation possible into the wrong-doings. I never entertained the view that the Government is in any way connected with this wrong-doing, and I think the very able speech from the hon. Minister of the Interior this afternoon must have convinced the majority of the House that the Government is very little to blame, if at all, in this matter. But I take the view that if any wrong has been done, if any miner has been wronged, reparation should be made. No harm can come from the very fullest investigation into the matter. I do not approve of the resolution in its entirety. The right hon. leader of the House tells us that some portions are unconstitutional. If they are, I presume that the tribunal, which it is proposed to appoint, will take cognizance of that and not inquire into matters that are unconstitutional, but the way I look at it is this. Supposing I refuse to vote for this resolution, how am I to appear before my constituents and the country as supporting the fullest possible investigation into what I am satisfied is wrong-doing. I thought at first of voting against the resolution and then introducing one myself, but after studying the matter over very carefully for nearly twenty-four hours and given a great deal of worry to it, I have come to the conclusion that it is my duty to vote for the fullest inquiry into the Yukon, and that being the case I propose to vote for this motion.

House divided on amendment of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), who is in the House, has not voted.

Mr. POWELL. I was paired with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert) has not voted.

Mr. CALVERT. I am paired with the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Committee rose and reported progress.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 167)—from the Senate—to provide for the administration of criminal justice in the territories of Manitoba and Keewatin, north of Ontario and Quebec.—(Mr. Sifton).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business does the Government intend to take up to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.50 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 30th June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That from this day to the end of the session Government Orders have precedence on Mondays after routine business, and that an hour be devoted to private Bills from half-past seven o'clock p.m., as on Wednesdays and Fridays, under rule 19.

Mr. RICHARDSON.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose there will be no objection to questions by members being put before Government orders.

The PRIME MINISTER. No objection.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to take the opportunity of saying to my right hon. friend that I am not sorry to see this motion passed, having reached a stage in the session when I think every one is anxious to get through the business as rapidly as possible. I see it stated, however, in the press, with some degree of minuteness, that I have an engagement in London on the 3rd August, and will sail on the 20th of this month from New York. This is all news to me. I hope to have the pleasure of remaining in the House until my right hon. friend opposite leaves with me, and the earlier that can be brought about, the more agreeable it will be to me.

Mr. BRITTON. Can the right hon. Premier give us any idea as to the length of the session. So many people are very anxious to know about their arrangements for pleasure and business during the heated term, and if we could know when the session will end, it would be a great advantage to all of us.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say that the Government have no business to introduce except what is generally expected. We propose to introduce early next week the supplementaries of next year. We may have to introduce some railway resolutions and the Senate Resolution, of which I have given notice. That is all I propose to introduce this session. If it were agreeable to the House, we might consider the propriety of meeting at eleven o'clock and having morning sittings.

Mr. BERGERON. The committees are busy in the morning.

The PRIME MINISTER. The committees will soon be over, and then perhaps we can sit in the morning.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sorry my hon. friend has taken away our private day so soon. He might leave us one more Monday, because I find very important measures on the Order paper, one or two of which my hon. friend the member for East Assinibola (Mr. Douglas) has charge of. I do not see him in his place, but they are very important measures. However, I suppose there is no use in fighting against fate.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is very true, but my hon. friend has forgotten the very important notice he has on the Order paper relating to the woes of Ireland; but Ireland has been suffering so long, I suppose she can suffer patiently a little longer.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not entirely forget that, and, if the opportunity presented itself, I think something very worth while pondering by the right hon. gentleman would have been brought to his attention.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I call attention to a very important Bill which will be thrown over and in fact might be thrown over in any event, owing to the point of order suggested, and possibly well taken by the right hon. gentleman. I refer to the Bill on Chinese immigration. Not long ago the right hon. gentleman said that legislation in that direction by the Government was under consideration. Can he inform us whether the Government have reached any conclusion?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will be able to make an announcement on the subject on Monday.

Mr. CLANCY. Might I ask what progress has been made by the committee to which the Bill by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) was referred, and whether it is likely that Bill will receive the consideration of this House during this session. I ask this question because the measure is one of considerable importance, and I think that, when the motion to adjourn the debate was granted, the promise was made that that was not for the purpose of sidetracking the measure.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is under the impression that I am a member of that committee, but he has as much power as I have in regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. We are justified in the belief that the intention was to sidetrack the Bill, since nothing has been done and the committee to which it was referred was selected by the right hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest, before leaving this subject, that it would perhaps be convenient, as the last private day is thus taken away, to make an exception and run over the list of unopposed motions, say, on Monday next.

The PRIME MINISTER. We can do that on Monday next.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion, then, is amended so as to allow questions to be asked before Government orders.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SUPPLY—MEASURES AGAINST TUBERCULOSIS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. THOMAS G. RODDICK (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, if in order, before going into Supply, I should like to make a few remarks with reference to a very important question, a question that is now engaging the attention of the whole civilized world—the subject of tuberculosis both human and bovine. I have in my hand, a series of resolutions recently passed by the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Montreal, one of the largest and most important medical societies in the Dominion of Canada. With your permission, I will read these resolutions, and then, perhaps, make a few remarks upon them:

That whereas tuberculosis is exceedingly prevalent in this as in other countries and contributes largely to the mortality rate, and

Whereas it is fully recognized that pulmonary tuberculosis is a communicable and infectious disease, and

Whereas a room or house which is or has been occupied by a person suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis must be considered a source of infection to healthy persons thereafter occupying such compartments, and

Whereas the expectoration of tuberculosis sputum in public places and conveyances is another great source of infection, and

Whereas the successful treatment and comparative eradication of the disease can only be carried out in special institutions adapted to this end,

Be it resolved that the Medico-Chirurgical Society hereby recommends to the Government of the Dominion the enactment of such laws by the Parliament of the Dominion as shall ensure the diminution of tuberculosis, and recognizing that the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament in these matters extends over large areas of territory which have not provincial autonomy, humbly begs the Government to take such steps as will ensure passage of laws applicable, if not to Canada in general, at least to those territories under the direct jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament—laws so framed as to bring about the following for the public good:—

1. The compulsory notification in local boards of health in the cities and towns of this Dominion of all cases of pulmonary tuberculosis occurring within the limits of these cities and towns by the physician attending such cases, to the intent that specially infected areas may be detected and means taken to arrest the spread of the disease.

2. The disinfection of domiciles by the municipal authorities following upon the occurrence of death from tuberculosis in those domiciles, or of the removal of a tuberculosis patient from the same.

3. The posting of notices in railway and street cars, on steamboats, public markets and municipal buildings, courts of justice and public waiting-rooms—prohibiting spitting.

4. The ready conviction and punishment by fixed penalty of offenders found spitting in public places, contrary to above.

5. The establishment of provincial sanatoria for the treatment of tuberculosis patients who are unable to pay for such treatment.

Further resolved that the above resolution be transmitted to T. G. Roddick, Esq., M.D., member of Parliament for the St. Antoine division of this city, begging him to take such steps as are proper to present the above resolution to the Government of the Dominion.

J. GEORGE ADAMI, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.E., President.

ALFRED T. BAZIN, M.D.,
Secretary.

The second of series of resolutions have to do with bovine tuberculosis, and are as follows :—

That whereas the connection between tuberculosis in the human being and tuberculosis in cattle and other lower animals has been definitely established, and

Whereas the well-being of the cattle of the Dominion is a matter of national import, and the existence of tuberculosis among these cattle a cause of very serious loss to farmers, and

Whereas by the employment of tuberculin it is possible to detect with great certainty the existence of this disease in individual cattle, and

Whereas further, the observations of the veterinary inspectors of this Dominion would seem clearly to have proved that, relatively to other countries, this Dominion is in a most favourable position, in that the proportion of diseased to healthy cattle is apparently less than has been found in any large extent of territory in the old or in the new world, and

Whereas further it is not anticipated that the cost to the Government for compensation will be excessive, and it will be to the credit of the Dominion and to the great augmentation in the value of our cattle, if this disease can be practically eradicated from the Dominion.

Your petitioners, the president, council and members of the Montreal Medico-Chirurgical Society, respectfully recommend that the Government of the Dominion take such steps as will lead to the eradication of bovine tuberculosis by means of systematic inspection of the cattle throughout the Dominion and by compensation where found necessary, and by prohibition of the movement of such cattle as react to the tuberculin test.

Resolved further that the above resolution be transferred to T. G. Roddick, Esq., M.D., member of Parliament for the St. Antoine division of this city, begging him to take such steps as are proper to present the above resolution to the Government of the Dominion.

J. GEORGE ADAMI, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.E., President.

ALFRED T. BAZIN, M.D.,
Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, with reference to this subject, I may say that as you are doubtless aware, a very important congress has recently been sitting in Berlin—in fact it only rose the other day—composed of representatives from almost every civilized country on the face of the globe. Our country, Canada, was represented by Dr. Farrel, a very able member of our profession, and one who has done much in the direction of promoting public health. This congress was called by the German Government and the German profession with a view of comparing notes with the other countries of the world regarding this great subject of tuberculosis. They took it up in all its aspects; they took it up as occurring in the human form in its various phases, pulmonary tuberculosis, glandular tuberculosis, brain tuberculosis, abdominal tuberculosis, and also skin tuberculosis. And they also went into the question of the erection of proper buildings and the treatment of the disease in both human and bovine cases. The Germans were roused to action some years ago, from the fact that they discovered that they had in Germany one million persons suffering from this disease alone, and that they lost over a hundred thousand every year. They began at once to arrange for the erection of buildings for the purpose of isolation. They arranged buildings for the better classes and also for poor persons, and separated those who were curable from those who were incurable. And after four or five years they thought it their duty to call together the profession of the world in order to let them know exactly what they were doing. I think that we in this country should not be behind in this important matter. Already South Australia has moved. The other day in the legislature of South Australia a Bill was introduced providing that every medical man, whether attending a patient or in consultation, who should see a case of tuberculosis should be obliged to report the case to the proper authorities.

It may be said, Sir, that this is not the place to bring this question forward, that it is a matter to be dealt with through the several provinces. But I think this is a greater question than can be overtaken by the provincial authorities. It is a question of a national character, and it is simply and absolutely impossible for disjointed, disconnected provinces with a series of boundary lines imaginary or otherwise to carry out a proper scheme of war against this great plague of our race. Though one province may endeavour by every possible means to eradicate this disease, an adjoining province may be lukewarm and indifferent, and the consequences is that the state of things remains most unsatisfactory. Exactly how this desired result is to be accomplished I do not know, but there are several phases of this question that can be dealt with by the Government. In the first place, the employment of persons in factories may be very properly dealt with by this House. It is well known now that a great many cases of tuberculosis occur in our factories. It has been demonstrated conclusively that a girl with consumption, for instance, may contaminate another person at a distance of not more than from five to ten feet from her, if the two are obliged to be constantly in each other's company. Another matter that this House might properly consider in regard to this disease is immigration. That question is becoming a live one for this nation, and I think the time has come when our immigration department should see that all immigrants are examined for tuberculosis elements in their bodies before they are allowed to depart from the other side. We know that there are countries in Europe especially where tuberculosis is very prevalent, and it happens that the two countries of the world where it occurs most frequently, Russia and Austria, are the two countries from which we have recently received large numbers of immigrants. Therefore, I think it is not sufficient to stop the immigrant when he reaches our shores, but he should be carefully examined before he leaves the other side, if such a thing be practicable. Now, there are certain portions of this country, our extensive territories, where the Dominion Government has exclusive control of questions of this kind, and where this Government can act without regard to any provincial legislatures. Another thing that I hope this Government will take up vigorously is the matter of statistics. At present it is impossible to find any sanitary statistics of an intelligible character regarding this Canada of ours. I have looked everywhere, and those that I can find are disjointed, disconnected and very unsatisfactory. There is no possibility with such statistics as are now compiled, of obtaining any satisfactory results, and I hope this Parliament will also take this matter into consideration.

Now, with reference to the subject of bovine tuberculosis, that, of course, is entirely under the control of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), so that it can be dealt with by this Parliament thoroughly. All I have to say is that I quite concur with the method he has adopted, with the assistance of his veterinary surgeons, in connection with the tuberculin test, which is now proved to be not actually infallible, but only very accurate, so that the disease can be detected in an animal in almost the very first stage, I say that test should be very carefully made, and whenever possible, it should be placed in the hands of a veterinary surgeon, because we know that if done by farmers it is usually very indifferently done, and the result is not so satisfactory. I would also impress upon him the necessity of a more careful supervision of the milk supply. It is known that in order to get sterile milk, it must be removed from the cow as if you were performing an antiseptic operation; that means that the udder of the cow should be thoroughly cleansed as well as the hands of the person who milks the cow. The milk should also be introduced into tins instead of the old-fashioned buckets, and these tins should be thoroughly sterilized in boiling water. The hygiene of the animal must also be attended to. We know now that tuberculosis in one animal will contaminate a whole stableful, for the simple reason that the amount of air space is not sufficient. A cow requires as much air space as a human being. A cow giving milk should have at least 2,000 cubic feet of air, and we know that very often cows do not get more than 200 cubic feet of air each. That much, at least, can be done in the right direction. I maintain that where there is any doubt as to the presence of tuberculosis, not with a view of destroying the animal, but in view of the milk supply, the tuberculin test should be made in order that the public may be protected from the use of affected milk. The milk, at any rate, may be carefully examined. We know that very often tuberculosis does not come from the interior of the cow, but it comes from the udder itself. The udder is very liable to tuberculosis ulcerations, small sores, which are almost imperceptible, and which require to be carefully guarded against. I have felt impelled to make these remarks with a view to elicit some expression of opinion from hon. members in the House, so that the world may know that in the Dominion of Canada we are fully alive to this question, and that we are prepared to go as far as any other country in trying to stamp out this great plague, consumption, called the white plague, in all its phases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the House is deeply indebted to my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick) for the very able and concise observations which he has made to the House. However anxious we may be to proceed with public business, there is no question that could intervene more important than that which the hon. gentleman has submitted to us. I am, perhaps, less qualified than any of my professional brethren in this House to speak on this subject, because I regret to say that fifty-six years ago, when I took the degree of doctor of medicine in the University of Edinburgh, any person would have been laughed at for making such a speech as the one we have just listened to with profound attention from my hon. friend from Montreal West (Mr. Roddick). The modern view of the contagious character of consumption is in antagonism with the view that prevailed at that time, when almost the entire profession held that consumption was a strictly hereditary disease, and that when the parents on both sides were suffering from consumption it was all but hopeless to expect that their children would escape an early death from the same cause. But subsequent great discoveries in medicine have effectually dispelled that idea, and at this moment there is a consensus of opinion in the medical profession throughout the world that consumption, instead of being a hereditary disease and one that must necessarily prove fatal, may be entirely prevented by taking proper measures to protect one's self from its contagion. While parties who otherwise looked upon their future with despair owing to the consumptive character of their parents, have been relieved, the general public have learned with great surprise and great alarm that the strongest man is not, perhaps, equally, but, is absolutely exposed to the contagion of consumption, provided he is subjected, for any length of time, to the causes which may produce it. The result of these great discoveries tend to show that it is the most fatal, the most formidable form of disease to which the human constitution is subject, but one that is absolutely curable, and with proper care and proper precautions in its early stages, its extension may be prevented. The importance of this discovery only requires to be mentioned to those who know anything of the statistics of the disease and especially of the character of tuberculosis, to attract attention. I regret to say that, unfortunately, this House has not the power that it should have in regard to this matter. Tomorrow we will enter upon another year of the confederation. Any person who will take the trouble to recall the great difficulty of dealing with so comprehensive a subject as that which presented itself in 1864 must come to the conclusion that, if we were now, after thirty-two years, in the light of our present experience, taking up the question of confederation, there are very few matters upon which we would be able to make any very important improvements, but, I say, that one of the blots that, undoubtedly, in my opinion, does exist in the Confederation Act is, that the question of the public health was remitted to the provinces, and the Federal Parliament deprived, to a large extent, of the power that otherwise, in such an important emergency as the present existing state of things, they would be able to exercise. What the United Kingdom can do, in regard to this important question, is entirely different from that which lies within the scope, under our present constitution, of the federal authorities of Canada. But, to whatever extent that power can be exercised, I am certain that, after listening, with the attention that the House has listened to my hon. friend, hon. members will come to the conclusion that anything and everything that this House has found to be in the power of this Parliament to do in connection with this great question of the prevention of the contagion of consumption, or tuberculosis, will be cheerfully done by the Government, and that Parliament will be most ready to support it. The question, unfortunately, under the present state of things, is one which largely devolves upon the provincial authorities. I quite admit that is true as respects the portion of the question bearing on tuberculosis in the human family, but when you come to the question of tuberculosis in cattle, fortunately for us, this Government and this Parliament are clothed with supreme power and we are the only parties who can attempt to effectually grapple with this question. My hon. friend, who has evidently given this subject a great deal of attention, from both points of view, that affecting the human family and cattle as well, has pointed out, by a fertile source of tuberculosis, affecting directly all persons who are at all predisposed, in any of its forms, to consumption, is tuberculosis in milk. The means of dealing with that subject, the discoveries that have been made, although, perhaps, they are not actually and technically perfect discoveries, have gone far enough to show that by the use of tuberculin in bovine cattle, you may determine almost to a certainty whether the disease exists or not. My hon. friend has pointed out that there are few countries in a better position, owing to the general healthiness of the climate and the cattle in the country, to deal effectually with this subject, than the Dominion of Canada. The attention, I am sure, of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and of the Government, will be drawn to this matter, and every means and every precaution will be taken, and, perhaps, a certain amount of public money will be authorized in the effort to exterminate this disease and to get it under control, with the view of entirely eradicating it from the cattle of Canada. Such an effort, I believe, would meet with the hearty approval of the House and hearty support of the country. I do not intend to take more time than to merely say that the subject introduced by my hon. friend with perspicuity and ability, and with such a thorough knowledge and grasp of the whole question, is one that is attracting the attention of the civilized world, and I hope that Canada will not be behind other countries in taking hold of the new and great discoveries that have been made that touch such a vital matter as that of human life, and that they will be considered of such importance as to receive the attention from the Government and from Parliament that they deserve.

Mr. JOHN G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest and appreciation to the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick), who introduced this important subject to the notice of the House. It is very gratifying to see that the medical profession are at last taking the interest which they ought to have taken in this particular phase of the question many years ago. I may say that the profession to which I belong, the veterinary profession, long years before the discovery of the bacillus, by Koch, in 1882, came to the conclusion that the disease existing in cattle and in the human subject under the name of tuberculosis, was one and the same disease, and the better class of veterinarians, as far back as thirty years ago, were constantly cautioning people against the use of milk and meat from tuberculous cattle. It was in 1882 that the medical profession began to take up the connection between the disease in cattle and the disease in the human subject. While I am fully aware of the great risk which exists of the contagion spreading from one human being to another, I am still more convinced that the great cause of the spread of this terrible disease, which decimates countries throughout the civilized world, is the use of milk from tuberculous cows. I am satisfied of this, and any one who will look into the statistics and the history of the disease, will be convinced in the same way as I am. There are countries in the world where tuberculosis is unknown, and these are the countries where the dairy cow is also unknown. In Egypt, although human tuberculosis has been introduced time and again, it seems to get no hold and does not spread, simply because dairy products are little used in that country. I understand that the disease was unknown in Australia until the introduction of the dairy cow, and when one studies the subject thoroughly he will become convinced that the great source of the evil is the use of the milk of tuberculosis cows.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Now, Sir, this is a very alarming disease. Over 10 per cent of the deaths which occur in the civilized world from all causes are said to be due to tuberculosis, and the percentage of infant mortality from this cause is simply tremendous. When we bear in mind that these forms of the disease which attack infants, are exactly the same forms of the disease which attack calves, when fed with the milk of tuberculous cows, it is certainly a very striking corroboration of what I have stated. I am in sympathy with all the efforts which the medical profession are making to prevent the spread of the disease by contagion, from one human being to another. With that subject, however, I am not in a position to deal as thoroughly and effectively as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick) who introduced the subject, or his fellow-members of his honourable profession. But on the particular phase of the question, as to the part which the dairy cow plays in this disease, I claim that I have some little right to speak. Following the example of my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick), I would like to read a short resolution which was passed by the Veterinary Association of Manitoba last February, and which deals with this subject. This particular phase of the question is, as has been mentioned, completely under the control of the Dominion Government, and it is for the Minister of Agriculture to deal with the matter from the point of view of bovine tuberculosis. This resolution deals more in detail with the particular matter which was mentioned in this connection by the hon. gentleman from Montreal. It reads as follows:—

Whereas it has now been fully recognized by the highest medical and veterinary authorities that there is a great danger to human and particularly infant life, from the use of the meat and milk of tuberculous cattle, the disease being identical in the human and bovine species; and whereas stock-owners generally are alive to the fact that the presence of tuberculous animals in their herds is a source of serious financial loss and detrimental to their interests generally; and whereas the general consensus of opinion, after full trial and experiment, is in favour of the reliability and efficacy of the tuberculin test as a diagnostic agent; therefore the members of the Veterinary Association of Manitoba feel it their duty to urge upon the Dominion and local governments, municipal councils, the public generally and stock-owners in particular, the advisability of, in their several capacities, adopting at the earliest possible date, systematic measures for the suppression and eradication of the disease among cattle. Such measures comprise: 1. An intelligent use of the tuberculin test by properly qualified and responsible men.

I would say here, Mr. Speaker, that the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick), in regard to the use of this test being confined to professional men, is a very wise and a very important suggestion, and for various reasons. In the first place, no one but a thoroughly qualified and very careful professional man can make a satisfactory tuberculin test. In the second place, there is a peculiar condition existing in regard to this test, for, after one or two tests, the animal, as a rule, unless very far advanced in tuberculosis, ceases to react, and an unprincipled or dishonest stock owner by making repeated tests on his herd would be able to sell animals subject to the tuberculin test which would pass that test, on account of the immunity conferred by previous tests. The innocent purchaser might, consequently, become possessed of an animal whose system, though full of disease, at the same time, would not, owing to the previous tests, react to the tuberculin test, and the purchaser would in this way be deceived. This is a very serious risk, and, while my feelings are very strong in favour of the test, I am convinced that the use of tuberculin by any other than a thoroughly qualified medical man, or veterinary surgeon, should be proscribed by law. I do not think that any layman should have the right to purchase or use tuberculin, because in the way I have pointed out, what is one of the greatest benefits and blessings to mankind, namely, the tuberculin test as a diagnostic agent in cattle, is capable of being rendered useless and unreliable.

2. The destruction and proper disposal of the carcasses of all animals showing physical signs of tuberculosis.

This is important. It refers to animals which have clinical symptoms. There are many animals, and, I may say, many human beings, who are affected with tuberculosis, but who present no physical or clinical signs of the disease whatever. The autopsies held in the various hospitals throughout the country, show, in a very large percentage of cases, the existence of old tubercular lesions in the organs of the body, which were not suspected by anybody, not even by the people themselves, when alive. Many who have died from other causes have been found, on examination, to be affected with this disease. In the same way, in the ordinary abattoirs and slaughter-houses throughout the country, animals in the pink of health, seemingly, and in perfect condition, are slaughtered for meat, and we find in them those tubercular lesions. The carcass of any animal in that condition, with localized tuberculosis cysts throughout the internal viscera, is not necessarily unfit for human food. The disease is there confined to a limited area, and the general tissues of the animal are not affected, and so it would be a very foolish policy on the part of the Government to order the destruction of such carcasses. It would be a sinful waste of good food, and quite unnecessary in the interests of public health. But the carcasses of all cattle showing physical or clinical signs of tuberculosis should be utterly destroyed.

3. The isolation of all animals reacting to the tuberculin test, with the view to their subsequent slaughter and the utilization of such carcasses, as after inspection may be deemed fit, for human food.

It is also very important to keep them isolated, but that point was covered by my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick), and it is unnecessary for me to dilate upon it, except to say that the greatest risk is in the large dairy stables in the neighbourhood of cities, where the cubic space per head for the cattle is far from being adequate for proper ventilation or hygienic conditions. Such dairy stables should be thoroughly examined and inspected, and a careful standard of ventilation kept up.

And, as a meantime measure, the careful pasteurization of the milk from cows so affected, whether intended for human food or for the lower animals.

I may say that, after careful consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the aseptic process described by my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick), that is, milking the cows in the same way you would conduct an aseptic surgical operation, is not practical, but, as a safeguard, the pasteurization of the milk, by which all the germs are destroyed and the milk rendered safe for use, is preferable. That can be thoroughly carried out without going to anything like the expense or trouble which would be involved in the somewhat complicated system the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick) has advised. In the latter part of that sentence of the resolution with regard to the lower animals, calves or pigs, it is very important that the milk from tuberculous cows should not be fed to the young of these animals. In a series of experiments conducted under the control of the government at Copenhagen, Denmark, by Professor Bang, he has been able to demonstrate that calves from tuberculous mothers, if removed from these mothers, and if the milk from these same cows be sterilized and fed to them, the calves will remain immune, and that, although the mothers themselves may be badly affected with tuberculosis, still the calves will remain healthy, provided they are kept away from the dams and not fed with their milk in an unsterilized condition.

4. The careful disinfection of premises in which affected animals have been kept.

That has been very much neglected up till now. Herds have been destroyed, and the premises have been reoccupied by other cattle, and it is very important that all these premises should be carefully disinfected.

5. Careful attention to light, ventilation, drainage and general sanitation of stables.

Mr. McNEILL. I did not quite understand from the hon. gentleman how the milk was to be treated, according to his view.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. It is to be pasteurized.

Mr. McNEILL. How?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. It has to be heated up to, I think, between 160 and 170 degrees, and allowed to suddenly cool down. I cannot give the exact temperature from memory, but it is to be heated to that point, and cooled.

Mr. RODDICK. One hundred and sixty degrees.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Yes, it has to be heated to 160 degrees, and suddenly cooled. In that way it is rendered sterile, and there is very little risk in using it. While the heat destroys the germs, it does not affect the flavour of the milk at all. Then careful attention should be paid to light, ventilation, drainage and general sanitation of the stable. So far as the present Act is concerned, I have no particular fault to find with its wording. I would like to see it amended, however, in some particulars; above all, I would like to see the arrangements for carrying on this work perfected, so that the system would be entirely reliable. I am satisfied that the greatest cause of this disease in human subjects is milk from tuberculous cows; and while I am prepared to support, with all my heart and soul, any reasonable measure which the medical profession may suggest in the interest of humanity in coping with tuberculosis, I cannot refrain from expressing myself forcibly as being of the opinion that the true root of the trouble is in the dairy cow, and that attention to that phase of the question will produce far greater results than all the measures which may be adopted having a bearing solely upon the human race.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would not say anything on this subject but for my desire to give whatever support my position in this House may enable me to give to the suggestions made by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick). All will agree, I think, that no more important question could engage the attention of this House. But it seems to me that we are limited within the sphere of practical action by the British North America Act, which assigns to us but two subjects which we can deal with in connection with this matter—one is quarantine and the establishment of marine hospitals, and the other is census and statistics. As the matter of the public health has been relegated to the provincial legislatures, it is practically out of our domain; but it has always seemed to me to have been a mistake that at confederation that subject was not put under the jurisdiction of the Dominion instead of being assigned to the provinces. In my judgment we can only remedy the mistake by having a conference with the provincial governments for the purpose of securing an amendment to the Imperial Act giving that power to the Dominion. Not having that power, all we can do is to deal with the diseases which come to our shores from foreign countries, by means of quarantine. I admit that we can do a great deal in that respect, because we can, as the hon. member for Montreal suggests, examine all immigrants who propose to come to our country before they leave the place of debarkation. We exercise that right to-day over children coming to the country, and, therefore, by parity of reasoning, in my judgment, we could exercise it over adults as well. We need not incur the trouble and expense of bringing immigrants to our shores and disposing of them afterwards, if found diseased and unfit for settlers, if we make provision for having them examined before we import them. Again, while I have always thought that we ought to have isolation hospitals in the country to deal with contagious and infectious diseases, we have not the power to control these matters. All we can deal with is the marine hospital, which is of very little advantage to us in the interior of the country. I am quite sure that the hon. leader of the Opposition, who has given a great deal of attention to this subject, and has spoken of it many times before in this House, to my knowledge, is well aware of the limitations that surround us in carrying on a system which might otherwise be of great benefit to the country. I know that as one of the fathers of confederation, and as one who was instrumental in outlining the Confederation Act, he has many times seen its defects; but, like many others, I presume that he finds it more difficult to amend the Act than it was to get the provision in it at first. With regard to tuberculosis in cattle, it seems to me that we might do something. We might pass a law making it compulsory to have dairy herds inspected from time to time, and subjected to the tuberculin test. I have no doubt that the time will come when that will be the rule in every province in the Dominion, especially in those provinces which are alive to the health of the people. While an effort was made in Ontario a few years ago, especially around the large cities, to enforce some such regulation, through the boards of health, I regret to say that it was allowed to fall into disuse after a limited trial, and to-day it is practically a dead letter, especially around Toronto, Hamilton and London. But I believe the time will come when no dairyman will be allowed to supply milk to towns and cities whose cattle have not been inspected and subjected to the tuberculin test from time to time. There is another way in which we could help to eradicate disease in the country, which is within the power of the Minister of Agriculture. We should pass a law making it compulsory on those who import cattle for the improvement of stock to subject them to the tuberculin test before being allowed to bring them into the country. I know that importers who have an eye to their own interest do that at the present time, and will not purchase in the old country any cattle which have not been subjected to the tuberculin test before being exported. We might very well go further and make that system compulsory on everybody who imports stock for the improvement of the stock of this country. In that way we would avoid importing disease from abroad. Then we might devise ways and means to eradicate disease in the country. These are the two lines on which we might attack it. With regard to census and statistics, we have control over that subject, and it has been a matter of surprise to me that the statistics supplied to us are of such a crude nature. I agree entirely with every word uttered by the hon. member for Montreal. If you endeavour to collate statistics with regard to the conditions of health and mortality in the country, or on similar lines, and to base a judgment upon them, you find our statistics to be very crude and unsatisfactory. They are not by any means carefully prepared, and, therefore, they are of no great value to us at present. That is a subject under the control of the Minister of Agriculture, and in my judgment there is room for improvement in them. A few years ago that subject was taken up in this House, and a commencement made in the direction of improvement by the late Minister of Agriculture, Sir John Carling; but I regretted to find that after a fair commencement was made, the system was not elaborated on the lines suggested at the outset. But it was dropped almost immediately after its inception. I say that these are the lines on which we could, in my opinion, employ our time to practical advantage. We can only do it on the lines on which we have the power to act, and that is, by checking the immigration and the importation of cattle. We need not import a single head of cattle infected with tuberculosis, because we have the power to stop the importation at any time. Then, afterwards, whether by the provincial government, or whether by an amendment to the British North America Act, we are given power to do so, we may hope to stamp it out throughout the country much more readily by preventing the importation of diseased cattle. It would be very important to establish isolation hospitals. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) declare that this subject had engaged the attention of veterinarians before it did the attention of the medical profession. I understood him to say that it was only within the last few years it was taken up by the medical profession. Why, I can remember very distinctly some 35 years ago—

Mr. RUTHERFORD. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, what I said was that the connection between bovine and human tuberculosis was recognized by the veterinarians long before it was acknowledged by the medical profession. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the medical profession did not devote proper time and attention to the subject of human tuberculosis, but bovine tuberculosis they considered beneath their notice until the discovery of the bacillus proved they were identical.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman cannot be well informed on medical works, because—and I can refer to the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick) to substantiate what I say—there is scarcely an important medical standard work that did not deal with this question at least as far back as half a century ago. The question was, no doubt, not as well understood then as it is to-day, but it was dealt with as one of the most important questions in the medical colleges, and I remember distinctly the lectures given me some 35 years ago on the relationship between the two and the danger of communication from the bovine to the human species.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Did the medical profession ever take any precaution or instruct their clients to take any precaution as to whether the cows from which they were getting their milk supply were diseased or sound, until after 1883?

Mr. SPROULE. I can remember, in 1865, 1866 and 1867, lectures being given us on the subject, and we were admonished, in the strongest possible language, of the desirability of, as far as possible, avoiding feeding milk to children and adults from animals infected with tuberculosis and other diseases. The hon. gentleman's impression can only be due to the fact that he is not as conversant with the standard works of the medical profession as those engaged in it. I think that one of the acts carried out by the present Administration militates rather against any improvement in the health of the country. I refer to the Act doing away with the quarantine regulations which existed between us and the United States, because, in my judgment, the regulations formerly in existence were very important, inasmuch as they tended to restrict freedom in the importation of cattle. No doubt, on its face, that

Mr. SPROULE.

Act appeared to be a great advantage to the farmers, but there are dangers that lurk in a too free importation that are outside the notice of the ordinary human mind. The importation of insidious disease cannot be prevented as effectively to-day as when the former regulations were in force. To-day we are importing diseased cattle from the United States over and over again. There is most perfunctory inspection made of the cattle, and I do not think we will be doing what we should in the way of preventing such importation until we enforce more stringent quarantine regulations.

I am also inclined very strongly to the opinion that the immigration now coming to our shores, and which was mentioned by my hon. friend from Montreal—for instance, the Doukhobors from Russia, who, I am told, are literally rotten with disease, is a source of great danger to the health of our people. These people are allowed to come in here without being subject to anything save the bare requirements of the quarantine regulations at the frontier, to determine whether they are infected with any contagious disease. Under these regulations, that disease only can be detected which is apparent to ordinary inspection, and we are doing incalculable injury to our people by the unrestrained importation of that class of immigrants. These immigrants we are bringing from the very hotbed of the disease, from a country which is literally becoming depopulated by it. We are told that one in every five hundred in that country, die of it every year, yet we are bringing these people in by the thousands, and take no precautions beyond the ordinary examination required at the frontier to see whether they have some infectious disease that may be apparent at a glance without closer inspection. In this respect, we are not doing our duty, and the present Government is far behind its predecessors. It has introduced a very dangerous innovation, which is going to have great and far-reaching results to the detriment of the people of this country, and the sooner that state of things is remedied the better. The sooner we amend the British North America Act, and give the Dominion power over health, the better, because then we could devise a system applicable to every province, and the country as a whole. If the medical men of this House will take the interest they ought to take—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So far as immigration is concerned, we have the power.

Mr. SPROULE. But I say that if we could bring the control of the health in this country under the Dominion Government, we would be taking a great step in advance, and if the medical men would take the matter up, a conference might be had between this Government and the provincial governments, and an understanding arrived at to obtain such amendment to the British North America Act as would give us the power to deal with the public health. The sooner we do that the better for the country.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). I believe that this is one of the most important questions in connection with stock that we can take up: It is one that reaches to the foundation of the very best stock we have in Canada to-day. I have been a farmer for the last thirty-six years in this country, and have learned long ago that the buildings we keep our stock in ought to be disinfected every year, whether the animals are healthy or not. There is as much need to keep the stables of healthy animals in as good conditions as the dwellings of human beings. My own buildings are all whitewashed every year with hot lime down to the boxes the animals feed in. One of the great causes that lead to disease is the fact that the buildings are not properly disinfected every year, and not well ventilated and plenty of good sunlight allowed to enter. There is something also that prevails largely in Canada to-day, and that is breeding from immature animals. This leads to a predisposition to that disease, because the animals that are born under such conditions come into the world with weakened constitutions and are thus more particularly subject to infection.

There is one statement made by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) with which I do not agree, and that is that a law should be passed preventing any individual from using the tuberculin test except experienced veterinary surgeons. I am a farmer in the province of Ontario, and have been for the last fifty-six years, and my impression is that every young farmer should go to some veterinary college and get a few lessons to qualify himself properly to use the tuberculine test. I believe we shall never get the disease entirely eradicated until something of this kind is done. Why do I say this? Suppose a farmer has a good herd of cattle, and sells certain of the animals, and it is then found that there is one diseased animal in the herd, the fact ruins that farmer's herd for many years to come, so far as sales are concerned. But if the farmer himself or one of his sons is trained to make the tuberculin test—and there is an opportunity now given in the Agricultural College of Guelph for young men to go there and, under practiced veterinary surgeons learn to make the test, and I believe they can make it successfully—it will afford a means of stamping out the disease which we can never have so long as the use of this test is confined to veterinarians. From my experience, farmers are not always behind veterinary surgeons in their knowledge of this matter. I saw one animal that had been under the care of a veterinary surgeon for three months and he could not
