Grain Field Judges Meet.

The judges for the competitions in standing fields of seed grain met at Dominion Experimental Farm, Indian Head, on Aug. 12th. The forenoon was spent in discussing the points and use of the score card and in the afternoon several fields were scored by all the judges. This preliminary training gives uniformity to the work of the judges throughout the province. Largely due to the education and inspiration received from these standing grain competitions and the seed fairs, the quality of the fields now entered in the competitions shows marked improvement. So much have the fields improved that now requires very careful work on the part of the judges and severe scoring for even minor defects in order to select the prize winning fields. This year's perennial sow thistle or Canada thistle are present in any appreciable quantity, and a large deduction is made for noxious weeds. Also for even a trace of other varieties or other kinds of grain fields are severely scored and if not 99 per cent pure are thrown out.

This year 49 societies are holding competitions, some with a very large number of entries. Grenfell society has 42 entries. The judges will visit nearly 700 fields, which is ample proof of the earnest efforts which the farmers of Saskatchewan are making for the production of only the best possible in their grain crops.

RAILROADS ARE RACING

Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern Fighting for Western Territory—Hill and Harriman Having a Tussle Also.

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 12.—With J. Hill and E. H. Harriman fighting for railroad supremacy in Central Oregon, the former throwing new feeder lines into Canadian Pacific territory along the international boundary in the prairie country, and the C.P.R. planning to slap back at Hill and at the same time outwit the G.T.P. and the C.N.R. in the mountain country, the railroad business is decidedly active in Canada and the northern States just now.

Recent moves on Hill's part in Oregon remove all doubt as to his being the dux ex machina behind the anti-Harriman movement in that region. Developments with direct bearing on the titanic fight that is being waged there just now have come thick and fast within the last few weeks, and all of them point directly to Hill.

The latest step planned by the C.P.R. is the building of a short line between Spokane and Vancouver. All that will be necessary to accomplish that will be to construct from the town of Midway to Vancouver. This will give a continuous route from Spokane to the coast and one that is shorter by several hours than any other. This should hold James J. Hill for quite a little while.

The first move in assuring this short route was taken by the C.P.R. not long ago, when it obtained a charter over a road built between Midway and Vernon four years ago by a concern that was unable to complete the work.

By carrying this step of retaliation into effect the C.P.R. will not only add to its own strength of position and throw down the gauntlet to Hill in no ambiguous manner, but it will enhance the value of the system in the district affected by no small degree. The cut-off to Spokane will be in operation in about a year if the present plans are followed at once.

But this is not all. There are many who have to do with railroading and who occupy more or less the position of very much interested spectators as this struggle between the Hill lines and the Canadian Pacific who are willing to wager that within a year or a little later the latter road will have its tracks into Seattle and will trade between that city and Spokane and Tacoma and Portland.

While the C.P.R. is framing up this little deal for James J. in the far west, the Oregon Trunk people are getting busy with E. H. Harriman in the central part of that state. They are planning to run a bridge across the Columbia and carry their lines to a connection with the north bank road. The rights are owned by the Porter Brothers, and the latter have engaged the astute and foxy attorney James B. Kerr, the Hill lawyer who whipped the Harriman force at every turn when the O. R. & N. was trying to block the Hill line down the Washington shore of the Columbia.

Now that litigation may develop between the Deschutes River road and the Oregon Trunk, Mr. Kerr has been at work getting the threads of the situation knitted into a cloth with which to blanket the Harriman claim when it comes up.

WHEAT DRIVES OUT CATTLE

P. Burns Gives Warning to Alberta Farmers—If Present Methods Are Continued Meat Will Have to Be Imported.

Calgary, Aug. 13.—P. Burns, the pioneer packer of Alberta, states that farmers attracted by $1.00 wheat are selling off their cattle with a view of increasing their wheat areas. As a result the province will, in present method of grain farming be continued, forced to import beef within three years. Sheep have been imported from Australia and the United States for a number of years and two-thirds of the bacon used in the province is purchased in the United States. Live stock value will increase rapidly, but unless our farmers have live stock to dispose of they cannot reap benefit from increased values.

It is the story of the cattle passing away and is of interest to all the people of the west.

And this is the burden of the warning: "Take heed, ere it be too late, or in three years, perhaps in two years, Alberta will be compelled to import its beef for local consumption. Importing beef into Alberta will mean that householders will pay two or three cents per pound more than they do now for their meat."

A few years ago Alberta was the home of immense herds of cattle. There were then many ranching companies, each shipping annually from Setting the Naval Question.

London, Aug. 15.—While the Imperial defence conference had little difficulty in elaborating a scheme for the army, the delegates found the naval question a hard problem to solve. All the colonies readily agreed to pay a fair share of the cost of the navy, but discussion as to the particular form of the contributions disclosed a sharp difference between the admiralty and the Canadian and Australian delegates.

This was particularly true with respect to Great Britain's recent policy in the Pacific. When the Anglo-Japanese treaty was signed Great Britain withdrew the greater part of her fleet from the Chinese coast and entirely abolished the North Pacific fleet, both of which could be used in conjunction with an Australian squadron to protect British trade and British possessions in all parts of the Pacific.

The home government sees no danger in that part of the world and has full confidence in her eastern ally. The colonial delegation, however, persistently pictured Japan as a rival who might some day become possessed of a desire for more territory. They, therefore, while agreeing to contribute to the maintenance of the main fleet, should be exerted to provide defences for their own coasts and trade.

Australia already is building torpedo boats as a nucleus of the fleet and Canada purposes to do the same. The admiralty believes that these fleets will prove a greater use if controlled from London, but to this the Canadians do not agree. The fleet they say, would come to the assistance of the mother country in a time of need but it must be absolutely under the control of the Canadian government. Before building her ships, Canada, it is understood, will extend her present dock system.

Her first ships will be modern cruisers and the Canadians think that these should be placed in the Pacific. The home authorities on the other hand, want them in the Atlantic, whence they could join the main fleet in the North Sea, on the shortest notice.

The delegates are in daily conference, and the admiralty hopes that a scheme will be completed and ready for presentation at the conference on Sept. 1. New Zealand, South Africa and the smaller colonies have agreed to make direct contributions to the British navy and to depend upon it for their protection.

The city council at a meeting last evening heard a deputation from the Saskatchewan Rifle Association which asked for a grant of $300 to help finance the team which is being sent to Ottawa. The council is giving the grant to the board of trade, who will in turn give it to the association.

Six Millions for West.

Winnipeg, Aug. 13.—Six million dollars of ten millions raised in England will be spent in west, said Wm. MacKenzie, president of the Canadian Northern Railway yesterday. Mr. MacKenzie declared that during his stay in Great Britain he realized that Canada was now occupying an unprecedented position in the minds of the public. Not only were the newspapers and other publications paying more attention to Canadian affairs but financiers, and the investing public are especially interested in any enterprise with which the name of Canada is attached.

Calvin Presbyterian Church.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new Presbyterian church for South Regina and Sherwood. The building is being erected on the N.E. ¼ of S. 23-14-20. It has a brick basement and the building proper will be brick veneer. It will be heated with a furnace. The size of the building is 30x46 and will have a seating capacity of about 300.

The corner stone will be laid on Thursday, the 19th inst. at five o'clock by F. C. Tate, M.L.A. Among others invited to attend and take part are ministers of other congregations.

Rev. W. Cross of Grand Coulee has charge of the mission. The trustees board consists of Messrs. R. W. Kerr, chairman; W. Elliott, McEachern, P. Horn, D. Witherspoon and R. Moore, sec-treasurer.

ANDERSON GOT THREE YEARS.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—John A. G. Anderson was brought up for sentence this morning. Corley explained how the forgery was done. Anderson forging letter of credit had stamped it with Bank of Montreal "Accepted" stamp which he had made. All through he used his technical banking knowledge to help him. T. C. Robbette pleaded youth, previous good character and cleverness of prisoner. Magistrate Denison said it was a bad case of forgery. He will spend three years in the penitentiary.

LAKE DISAPPEARS

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 15.—Beautiful Lake Como at Hokab, Minn., a suburb of La Crosse, disappeared during the night. When the residents of the village rose this morning, they were surprised to find the area which the lake had covered was a mass of shifting sand. A dam 300 feet long at the foot of the lake, established by the C. M. and St. P. railroad company, thirty years ago, which had been used for power purposes by the Hokab Milling Company and other concerns, with a roar this morning disappeared.

ANOTHER RUSTLER GONE

If Sheriff Olson, across the border, continues on his career for much longer life in the border districts will soon become as dull and uninteresting as in the sleepy east. This week we have to record the disappearance of another of the fast gang of horse thieves who have made things lively for the past few years. The latest victim to Sheriff Olson's relentless campaign against law breakers is "Slim Bear," one of Kid Trail's gang. He was caught on Monte Golden's ranch, across the Montana frontier, and is now safely lodged with his pals at Williston jail.

Whitefish, Ont., Aug. 13.—Was Maurice Ryan hanged an innocent man at North Bay, June 5 for the murder of his brother Joseph Ryan, or is it a mere coincidence that the following autograph was found on the wall of Whitefish station this afternoon: "Joseph Ryan, Rutland, Vermont, June 1908, westbound." The signature was among hundreds of other autographs. At the trial a letter was introduced said to have been written by Joseph Ryan, from St. Albans, Vermont, and also evidence that he had been seen in North Bay in February 1908. Maurice Ryan stoutly protested his innocence at the trial and "an innocent" were his last words on the gallows.

EXCITEMENT AT EDMONTON

Edmonton, Aug. 13.—A Hungarian desperado, with a loaded revolver and a dangerous looking knife, dashing east down Grierson street and firing back as he ran at Sgt. Nicholas and other members of the R.N.W.M.P. who went in pursuit, was the thrilling sight which gave Edmonton all the appearance of the wild and woolly west. The man who created the trouble was eventually landed in the cells of the R.N.W.M.P. barracks without killing or wounding any of his pursuers or the spectators. His name is Max Obermeyer. He told the police this morning through an interpreter that he came to Edmonton a few days ago from Calgary and that he had been in Canada about fourteen months. He is being held by Inspector Morley till further inquiries are made with reference to his antecedents.

BIG IMMIGRATION SCHEME

Edmonton, Alta., Aug. 15.—Dr. Paul Faber, general immigration agent for the Canadian Pacific Railway company with headquarters at New York and Montreal, accompanied by Prof. Bernido Attolcow, inspector of immigration for the United States and Canada, are in the west on an inspection trip, and left here last night for Calgary. The object of the trip is to ascertain conditions in various provinces with reference to the location of a large party of settlers in this section with immigrants coming from Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Austria, Germany and other countries, and numbering many thousands. Looking over the country with a view to establishing a colony in this district in British Columbia they will set aside a block of land which will be occupied by some of the best horticulturalists in Canada.

BAD MAN AT ROULEAU

Rouleau, Aug. 12.—John Mitchell was committed for trial here at a very serious nature. The offence with which he is charged was in connection with a young girl who has been around the country for some time, and who has hitherto borne the best of reputations. Fortunately for Mitchell, the charge which is laid against him is not so strong as it might be, owing to the fact that the attempt he made failed in its purpose. He has been known around here for some time and it appeared in evidence that he had been in the habit of leading a fast life. The public were excluded from the court during the hearing of the case, and the girl left the town for Moose Jaw tonight. She has gone there in the hope of securing work. The utmost sympathy has been expressed for her in this district.

NEW TRUST COMPANY FORMED

Montreal, Aug. 15.—The Hon. Philippe Roy of Edmonton, who has just returned from Paris, announced today that the new trust company to be known as the Canadian Mortgage association which he has been promoting for a year is now an accomplished fact. The papers are all signed with a leading French bank, and the concern will open its doors during the coming fall, doing the same kind of business west of the Great Lakes as the Credit Foncier Franco-Canadian in eastern Canada. The headquarters of the company will be in Winnipeg, although branches of the company will be opened sooner or later at Edmonton and other points in the three provinces. The capital of the Canadian Mortgage association is $3,000,000 and the senator says that Canada is now very favorably looked upon as a field for investment. He thinks a great deal of money will be sent over from that country.

BADDECK MAKES FLIGHT

Ottawa, Aug. 12.—After several days of waiting, first on account of high wind and afterwards because of the unavailability of the motor, the aerodrome Baddeck made a successful flight late this afternoon. The drome ascended, or rather "hopped" a distance of seventy feet at the height of ten or twelve feet from the ground. Inventors were particularly well satisfied with the first flight of the new airship and promised another flight tomorrow forenoon. Among those who witnessed the flight this afternoon were Col. Offer, General MacDonald, Col. R. W. Rutherford, and Col. Placet, all of the militia council and Major Maunsell, director of engineer services. The aerodrome inventor, Col. Placet, who is deputy minister of militia, said this evening that Canada would purchase no airships at present, but would wait to see results of experiments and enquiries that Britain is making.

AMERICANS CATCH MOST

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 13.—Taking the view that American salmon canners are catching nine-tenths of the available salmon in traps while the Fraser river has a comparatively short season for fishing, Vancouver canners are up in arms today with the proposal that Canada should cease all efforts at conservation and permit Canadians to take all the fish they can catch and "let us have no more closed seasons, open the river, kill the industry entirely within the next two years rather than allow American canners to reap the results of Canadian expenditures in building hatcheries and propagating the fish." This is the declaration of the canners today. They say that Pure Sound canners are breaking American regulations and securing 75 per cent of the financial benefits of the salmon run which belongs to the Fraser river. On the Fraser river last night the catch was better than the average from 190 to 200 sockeyes each.

MOTHER SAVES CHILDREN

Montreal, Aug. 13.—Prompt and heroic action on the part of Mrs. M. L. Ranger alone saved her two small children from a horrible death in flames which almost destroyed the family residence, 14th avenue, Lachine, last night. With her little ones safe in the street Mrs. Ranger fell unconscious to the ground and was only resuscitated after some difficulty. The family home which represents the savings of a life time, was almost a total loss. The fire which nearly ended in a triple tragedy, started early in the evening, while Mrs. Ranger was away from home. The accidental ignition of kerosene which was being used to start the fire in the kitchen stove, was the direct cause. In some way, which Mrs. Ranger is unable to explain, the can containing the oil was fired, and in an instant the entire room was a huge furnace of flames. Through this inferno Mrs. Ranger succeeded in dragging her children to the street, only to fall unconscious when they were in safety.

WAR ONLY SOLUTION

Greece and Turkey in Trouble Foreign Powers Sending Warships as an Intimation that Turkey's Rights Must Be Respected.

Constantinople, Aug. 13.—The porte had decided to address a note to Greece in which it would be stated that Greece's reply to the Turkish ambassador concerning Crete is unsatisfactory.

London, Aug. 13.—The Daily Telegraph correspondent says it is difficult to discover the influences under which the Turkish government is acting, but that in military quarters the talk is wholly of war with Greece.

Malta, Aug. 13.—The British warship Swiftsure has left here for the island of Crete. It is understood that the other powers, Russia, Italy and France, also will send warships to Crete as an intimation to the islanders that they are resolved to enforce respect for the rights of Turkey.

Canea, island of Crete.—The Greek flag which was run up over the fortress and the Cretan military barracks here on July 27, the day after the evacuation of the island by the international troops, was lowered today as a result of the protests of the four protecting powers.

Athens.—The Greek government has handed to the Turkish minister a formal reply to the porte's note of several days ago which asked Greece to express disapproval of the American agitation in Crete and formally to declare that Greece had no ambitions regarding the island.

The reply is a lengthy document. It protests formally against the complaints contained in the Turkish note and gives instances of Greece's constant endeavor to maintain a friendly and frank relation with Turkey and to draw closer the bonds uniting the two countries.

Also in the Cretan question, the note continues, the Turkish government itself has general times had the occasion to proclaim that the conduct of Greece has been frank and loyal. Then, declaring that Greece can only leave the question of Crete to the protecting powers and conform to their decision, the note repeats the assurance that Greece, being in no way implicated in the annexationist movement in Crete, will preserve the same correct and loyal attitude that it has in the past. In conclusion the note says:

"We trust that these frank explanations will dissipate all misunderstandings and help to inaugurate an era of cordial and loyal relations between the two countries and to their mutual advantage."

RUSSIANS HANG FLIRT

Details of the lynching of a young and beautiful woman by a crowd of jealous women are to hand from St. Petersburg. The affair took place last week in the village of Volokhsina. The victim had incurred the hatred of the other women in the village by her flirtations with the men of the neighborhood, both married and single, and feelings reached a climax when it became known that on her account one of the young men of the village had broken his promise to marry another girl.

HARRY THAW STILL INSANE

Justice Mills Decides That Thaw Should Still Stay in Asylum—Story of Thaw's Case as Justice Sees It—Paranoiac Insanity.

White Plains, N.Y., Aug. 12.—The state of New York won a complete victory over Harry K. Thaw today, when Justice Isaac H. Mills, decided that the slayer of Stanford White is still insane and sent him back to the criminal asylum at Mattawan. Not one of the many contentions made by Thaw during the three weeks of his recent hearing, was sustained. He is somewhat better off, however, than before he brought the present suit, because Mr. Mills in his decision and the suggestions amount practically to orders, says that Thaw at Mattawan be restored to the privileges he enjoyed during the first three months of his stay there, and that his white haired mother be allowed all possible privileges and be treated with every consideration when she calls to see him. Thaw received the news of the failure of his second attempt to escape from Mattawan today with very slight display of emotion. His manner indicated that he had expected an adverse decision. The information was brought to him first in the local jail by the Associated Press representatives.

"Have you heard Justice Mills' decision?" he was asked. "No," said Thaw without moving from his chair. A copy of the court's opinion was handed to him. He read it rapidly and without comment until he came to the sentence "By those beliefs constituted delusions in his mind when he committed the homicide, they are the same now."

"That's not so," he said and marked the lines with his pencil. Thaw was smoking a pipe when he got the news and as he read he puffed faster and faster until the air about him was a cloud of smoke. In no other way did he show any perturbation. He referred questioners as to his future plans, to his attorneys.

Thaw's attorney, Charles Morschauer, was not in town this morning when the decision was rendered. None of the prisoner's family could be found. At their hotel, it was said they had locked themselves in their rooms and given orders that they would not see anyone. White Plains, N.Y., Aug. 12.—Justice Mills handed down a decision this morning declaring that Harry K. Thaw is insane. He dismissed the writ of habeas corpus under which Thaw endeavored to secure his release from Mattawan asylum and remands him to the custody of the state authorities at that institution. After discussing the evidence Justice Mills draws the following conclusion. The insanity with which Harry K. Thaw was affected on June 25, 1906, at the time he committed the homicide, was of the kind known as chronic delusion insanity or paranoia. This conclusion rests with the following facts which appear to be clearly proven: There was, in his ancestral stock, a substantial, but not very strong, trace of insanity, by that not one of his direct ancestors was very insane, upon the maternal side, two uncles were of unsound mind, each at least for a portion of his life, and on his father's side an aunt was at least an epileptic and perhaps insane, though as to them, the evidence is not quite clear, but that there had been insanity in one of his ancestral lines, is shown in the prisoner's descent.

As a young child, he was physically weak and puny, exceedingly nervous and abnormally wakeful. Older he was subject to violent spells amounting to paroxysms of excitement without any naturally adequate cause. He attended various schools for different periods from the age of six upwards, but made little progress in study. While, at school especially in his earlier years, he had frequent outbursts of uncontrollable excitement in which his facial appearance was wild and staring.

Continuing his history of Thaw's life, Justice Mills says: "About 1901, he became enamored of a woman, Miss Nesbitt, whom he afterwards married. She was then by common reputation well known to him, the mistress or a mistress of Stanford White. She soon assumed that relation to Thaw and obviously to account to him for her former position with White told him various wild and grossly improbable stories of the inception of that relation. Although he, Thaw, evidently was himself far from a moral man and was then engaged or soon thereafter became engaged in practices of a bad character, as revealed by the testimony of the Merrill woman, which with the corroboration afforded by other witnesses in the case, appears credible, he gave absolute credence to the tales told him by Miss Nesbitt about White. He obtained similar information as to White's conduct from other women, either directly from them or through Miss Nesbitt, all of which information was of the same wild and improbable character, evidently grossly exaggerated. To all, however, he gave implicit belief. His mind became absolutely possessed with these stories. Such belief, to such extreme extent was plainly a delusion. In that mental condition at the roof garden, he came into the presence of White, doubtless unexpectedly, and publicly shot him to death in a spectacular and theatrical manner. In so doing, he believed that he was acting as an agent of providence and performing a praise worthy act like that of David in slaying Goliath or St. George killing the dragon.

Regarding Thaw's suspicions of a conspiracy against him by his early counsel, the court says: "Such belief, that is as to his purpose, was utterly without foundation and a clear delusion. "All this," continued Justice Mills and according to the weight of expert testimony is plainly the history of a paranoiac. This court concludes therefore, that Thaw is insane at the commission of the homicide was of the kind known as paranoiac, and not all of the brainstorm, sane half a minute before and half a minute after variety, if such variety really exists."

YUKON RAIN MAKERS

There is an interesting article in the August issue of the World's Work on "The Rival Rainmakers of the Yukon," by C. H. E. Askwith, former editor of the Yukon World in which light is thrown on the farcial attempts which were made to secure rain in the Klondyke. He says: "Seldom, if ever, has a great infernal dependency been placed in such an absurd position as resulted from the farcial outcome of the rain making experiments conducted under the auspices of the government of the Yukon Territory of Canada four years ago. The remarkable series of coincidences whereby the medicine men of the tribe of the Mooschide Indians were able to accomplish what had baffled all the resources of modern science, and the consequent turning of their tribe from the teachings of Christianity to the gods of their savage fathers, is a denouement worthy of the boldest of the dramatists.

The Yukon territory is entirely given over to the production of placer gold. Now, those not familiar with placer gold countries cannot understand how much the entire prosperity of the district depends upon a plentiful rainfall during the summer months. With sufficient water, the largest pile of "dirt" may be washed out in the sluices and the impurities of the stream are carried down, and the consequent turning of their tribe from the teachings of Christianity to the gods of their savage fathers, is a denouement worthy of the boldest of the dramatists.

But this was not all. The rains descended continuously and the floods came. Day after day, the sun was obscured by showers, downpours, drizzlings and fogs. For the first time for weeks the miners had enough water to sluice out their gold. Everyone in the Yukon was happy, and prosperity descended upon the entire camp.

But the old chief and the gloomy, saturnine Noonan were happier of all for had they not brought the rain and the prosperity. And would not the young braves of the tribe, who had so long run after the strange religion of the palefaces, come back to their belief in the ancient tribal faith?

Two Sundays later the Rev. Adam MacLaren, a Scotch missionary, who had been laboring among the tribal villages, but who had been away for a couple of months, returned to the village to hold the regular semi-monthly services in the little mission hall that stood near the wigwam of the chief. He waited till long past the hour of the service, but no one appeared. Then from the other end of the village he heard sounds to which the place had long been a stranger—the old sacrificial chant that had been abandoned when the tribe accepted the Christian religion a dozen years ago.

Prowling, he walked in the direction of the noise, which grew ever louder and clearer. As he turned one of the hill corners he came upon the entire tribe assembled in a great circle, in the middle of which stood a weird, gesticulating figure arrayed in skins and paint. It was Noonan, the high priest of the resurrected tribal stone of sacrifice, which the missionary thought had been thrown into the Yukon a dozen years ago.

He pleaded to them to come to the mission, but his words fell on deaf ears. For huddling in a pot over the fire was the body of a white puppy, and presently when the incantation was finished, they would all squat about in a great circle, each chewing a bone of the sacrifice. For this was one of the most sacred observations of the old time faith, giving courage, long-life and luck to the tribe.

The missionary walked slowly back to Dawson. To him it was a tragedy—the upsetting of the results of years of patient work. But in the villages of the Mooschides all was happiness and contentment, and many presents littered the wigwam of the high priest.

country's rainfall, he never permitted anyone to approach it. Not far from the dome on which Hatfield was at work dwelt the tribe of the Mooschides. Among the tribal villages were many old and middle aged men who remembered the palmy days of Alaska before the white man set foot on the land. Their old chief Silas, often spoke of the times, not so long past, when the tribe went forth a thousand strong to battle when the wigwams swarmed with children and the women were tall and beautiful. But all had changed. The firewater of the paleface, the corruption of gold, of soft living, the insidious influence of the presence of thousands of the white men had caused the glory of the tribe to depart forever. Instead of following the great herds of moose and caribou through the long summer days, or under the glory of the aurora borealis, the braves now worked in the mines or on the river steamers, and—oh! what a fall was there—brought their meat from a Dawson city butcher.

All the misfortunes of the tribe, Silas, the hereditary chief, attributed to the adoption of Christianity by the tribe. Silas and Noonan, the gloomy medicine men of former days, alone stood firm in their belief in the gods of their forefathers. The old chief and his mysterious looking assistant were the old disposition—remnants of the tribe's heroic age.

The rain making preparation around the interest of the entire tribe as nothing had done for a generation. It was something they could understand for did not Noonan assist the former medicine man to sacrifice gifts in the still remembered summer over fifty years ago—long before the white man's day—when no rain fell for months, and the grass withered in the valleys and the streams were still; when the Moose and Caribou died by the dried-up springs and the mighty Yukon itself was but a trickle?

To make a long story short, the Hatfield experiment was a howling failure. There was the warmest July on record, Hatfield stole out of the Yukon before the month was over. Silas, the chief, then announced that he would bring rain, and advised everyone to get under cover. The writer goes on to say:

In the working of nature's law of averages and compensation, some queer results are occasionally produced. No rain had fallen for a month, an unusual thing in that country, so it was not very extraordinary that on the afternoon of August 1 heavy clouds should gather and burst causing one of the heaviest rainstorms of the decade.

But this was not all. The rains descended continuously and the floods came. Day after day, the sun was obscured by showers, downpours, drizzlings and fogs. For the first time for weeks the miners had enough water to sluice out their gold. Everyone in the Yukon was happy, and prosperity descended upon the entire camp.

But the old chief and the gloomy, saturnine Noonan were happier of all for had they not brought the rain and the prosperity. And would not the young braves of the tribe, who had so long run after the strange religion of the palefaces, come back to their belief in the ancient tribal faith?

FORESTRY ASSOCIATION

Meets in Regina on September 3rd and 4th—List of Subjects to be Dealt With and Some of the Speakers Who Are to Attend.

A special meeting of the Canadian Forestry Association will be held in Regina, Sask., Friday and Saturday, Sept. 3 and 4, 1909. The meetings on Friday will begin at 8.30 a.m., and at 3 p.m., in the City Hall and there will be an evening meeting at 8 o'clock, when illustrated lectures will be delivered. On Saturday there will be an excursion to Indian Head to inspect the Forest Nurseries and Plantations.

The subjects dealt with will refer particularly to conditions in the prairie provinces and will embrace: Tree Planting on Eastern and Western Sections of the Prairies, Forest Reserves, Game Protection, Growing wood for Fuel and for Windbreaks, the Relation of Forestry to the Conservation of Moisture, etc.

His Honor the Lieut.-Governor has kindly consented to open the meeting and representatives of the provincial government, the city of Regina and the board of trade will welcome the delegates and take part in the discussions.

Among those who will read papers are: Mr. Angus MacKay, Superintendent of the Dominion Experimental Farm Indian Head; Mr. Norman M. Ross, Chief of the Tree Planting Division; Mr. J. P. Turner, Secy. Manitoba Fish and Game Protective Association; Mr. A. Knechtel, Inspector of Dominion Forest and Game Preserves; Mr. A. H. D. Ross, M.A., M.F., Lecturer in Forestry, University of Toronto; Mr. A. Mitchell, assistant, Tree Planting Division; Mr. T. N. Willing, Chief Game Guardian, Saskatchewan.

It is expected that the following among others will be present to take part in the discussions: Dr. William Saunders, Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa; Senator T. O. Davis, Prince Albert; Mr. R. H. Campbell, Superintendent of Forestry, Ottawa; Mr. C. E. E. Usher, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, C.P.R.; Mr. Geo. H. Shaw, Traffic Manager, C.N.R.; Mr. J. B. Whitman, Bridge-town, N.S.; Mr. J. N. Bayne, Depy. Municipal Comm., Regina, and a number of representatives of the governmental, lumbering, farming, and mercantile, commercial and professional interests in all parts of Canada.

Some United States forestry experts are also expected. The railway companies have kindly granted a single fare for this meeting regardless of the number attending. Delegates must purchase, first-class one-way tickets (the fare for which must not be less than 50 cents to Regina or the nearest junction point if a through ticket cannot be obtained) and secure a certificate to that effect on the standard certificate form where the ticket is purchased. Railway ticket agents are supplied with standard certificates and are instructed to use them on application. At the meeting these certificates must be handed to the secretary for signature by him and the special agent of the railway companies. At the time of validation, the special agent will collect from the holder of each certificate a fee of twenty-five cents.

From points east of Port Arthur, tickets will be good going Aug. 28 to Sept 1 inclusive, returning until Sept 8. Delegates from eastern Canada will also be able to avail themselves of the reduced rates to the Seattle exposition, and the British Association meeting in Winnipeg.

Parliament Opens in November. Ottawa, Aug. 12.—If the present expectations of the government are realized, parliament will be called to meet on Thursday, Nov. 4. It is possible that unforeseen contingencies may delay the opening until a week, or even two weeks later, but the event is bound to occur before Nov. 18. The estimates are being prepared by the various departments so they may be ready by Nov. 4. The insurance bill is ready to be put before parliament again. It has been considered for several sessions and last year was advanced through the commons, but did not reach the senate in time to become law. It will be put through this year. An amendment to the Bank Act will probably figure on the sessional program.

The speech from the throne will contain an announcement regarding Canada's share in the naval defence. The precise terms of the announcement will not be determined until the government is able to consider the report which Sir Frederick Borden and Hon. L. P. Brodeur make of the work of the imperial defence conference which is now being held in London. The new Franco-Canadian treaty will also form an item in the speech from the throne and a bill ratifying it is likely to be put through before the Christmas holidays are reached. It is probable that the opposition will be more aggressive than last session, but with a substantial amount of progress with legislation before Christmas prorogation should take place at a reasonably early date in the spring.

TEXT BOOK ON BURGLARY The police of New York found upon a burglar, arrested by them, a treatise on safe cracking that is said to be the most remarkable document that has ever fallen into their hands. The contents are so well compiled that the police unhesitatingly declare the author a past grand master in his profession, and are somewhat anxious to find out just how many copies are in circulation throughout the country. For the most part the manuscript is in the yegg code, a lingo freely used by thieves the country over. It describes the two kinds of safes recognized by the profession, namely, the fire-proof and the burglar-proof, asserting, however, that there is no genuine burglar proof safe, and the kind that are drill proof are only called so by courtesy. Minute directions for cracking a safe are given, together with diagrams to illustrate the treatise.—From August number of Popular Mechanics.

Chapter Thirteen

THE last of the transparencies died out. The dim and infrequent glimmers shone up the street of the Fountain and St. Michael's square. They revealed still down at the Hotel de Paris, whither Max von Hollbrand and a dozen others had hurried with the news of the evening's great event. But here, on the balcony of the old north quarter, all grew still—the Golden Lion empty, the townsmen to their beds, the soldiers to barracks, a full talk and fears and threats. Yet a light still burned in the rooms above the keep of Suleiman's tower, and the commandant's servant still expected his royal master, Peter Vassip, a sturdy son of Volsen, had no apprehensions, but he was very sleepy, and he and the sentries were the only ones awake. "One might as well be a soldier at once!" he grumbled, for the men of the hills did not esteem the regular army so high as it rated itself.

The commandant lingered in the street of the Fountain. Sergius Stefanovitch was half a Bourbon, but it was the intellectual half. He had the strong, concentrated, rather narrow mind of a Bourbon before the family decadence. On it his training at Vienna had grafted military precision, perhaps a pedantry, and no little added scope of what men called liberty and citizens' called rights. What rights had a man signified in the country? His country was in his king, and to the king the army was his supreme instrument. So ran his public creed, his statesman's instinct. But beside the Bourbon mother was the Kravonian father, and Marie had the long line of mingled and conflicting fortunes which drew descent from Stefan, lord of Praslok, and famous reiver of lowland herds. In that stock the temperament was different—indolent to excess sometimes, but mad as a cat at others, moderate seldom.

And for any young man the fight in the fantastically illuminated night, the virgin with the broken lamp, a near touch of the scythe of death and a girl's white face at the window and the commandant's stern wrath—may, beside, and soon before it, for the moment dazzling his angry eyes—came the bright gleams of romance.

He knew who lodged in the sign of the Sitter Cock. Marie Zerkovitch was his friend, Zerkovitch his zealous follower. The journalist was back now from the battlefields of France and was writing articles for the Patriot, the leading paper of the city. He was in the prince's confidence, and his little house on the south boulevard often received this distinguished guest. The prince had been keen to hear from Zerkovitch of the battles of Marie's life in Paris. With Marie's name came the name and what she knew of the story of Sophie de Gruche. Yet, alas, in spite of her prizes of her friend, Marie had avoided any opportunity of presenting her to the prince. Excuse on excuse she made, for his curiosity ranged around Casimir de Savres' bereaved lover. "Oh, I shall meet her some day, all the same," he had said, laughing, and Marie doubted whether her reluctance—reluctance to herself strange—had not missed its mark, infusing an interest which it had meant to balk. Why this strange reluctance? So far it was proved baseless. His first encounter with Marie behind his repulsive glances sped. Then came a swift, impulsive decision. He caught up the bronze finger and entered the porch. He knew Meyerstein's shop and that from it a staircase led to the upper floor. The other door was his mark, and he knocked on it, rising first with a cautious touch, then more resolutely, the old brass hand with hospitably beckoning finger which served for a knocker. Then he listened for a footstep on the stairs. If she came not, the venture some night went ungraced by his crowning adventure. He raised the latch and found the hand that saved him before he slept.

The door opened softly. In the deep shadow of the porch on the winding, windowless staircase of the old house, it was pitch dark. He felt a hand put in his and heard a low voice saying, "Come, monseigneur!" From first to last, both in speech and in writing, she called him by that title and by none other. Without a word he followed her, picking his steps, till they reached her room. She led him to the chair by the window. The darkness was somewhat less dense there. He stood by the chair.

"The lamp's broken, and there's only one match in the box," said Sophy, with a low laugh. "Shall we use it now or when you go, monseigneur?"

"Light it now. My memory rather than my imagination!"

She struck the match. Her face came upon him white in the darkness, with the mark on her cheek a dull red, but her eyes glittered. The match flared and died down.

"It is enough. I shall remember."

"Did I kill him?"

"I don't know whether he's killed—he's badly hurt. This lady here is pretty heavy."

"Give her to me. I'll put her in her place." She took the figure and set it again on the window sill. "And the big man who attacked you?"

"Mistich? He'll be shot."

"Yes," she agreed, with calm, unquestioning emphasis.

"You know what you did tonight?"

"I had the sense to think of the man in the porch."

"You saved my life."

Sophy gave a laugh of triumph. "What will Marie Zerkovitch say to that?"

"She's my friend, too, and she's told me all about you, but she didn't want us to meet."

"She thinks I bring bad luck."

"She'll come to renounce that heresy now." He felt for the chair and sat down, Sophy leaning against the window sill.

"Why did they attack you?"

He told her of the special grudge which Mistich and his company had against him and added: "But they all hate me except my own fellows from Volsen. I have a hundred of them in Suleiman's tower, and they're stanch enough."

"Why do they hate you?"

"Oh, I'm their schoolmaster, and a very strict one, I suppose, or, if you like, the prun- ing knife, and that's not popular with the rotten twigs."

"There are many rotten twigs?"

She heard his hands fall on the wooden arms of the chair and pictured his look of despair. "All—almost! It's not their fault. What can you expect? They're encouraged to laziness and to riot. They have no good rides. The city is left defenseless. I have no big guns." He broke suddenly into a low laugh. "There—that's what Zerkovitch calls my fixed idea. He declares it's written on my heart—'big game'."

"If you had them you'd be master?"

"I could make some attempt at a defense, anyhow. At least we could cover a retreat to the hills if we came."

He paused. "And in peace—yes, I should be master of Slavonia. I'd bring men from Volsen to serve the guns. His voice had grown vindictive. "Stenovics knows that, I think." He roused himself again and spoke to her earnestly. "Listen. This fellow Mistich is a great hero with the soldiers and the mob. When I have him shot, as I shall, not on my own account—I could have killed him tonight—but for the sake of discipline, there will very likely be a disturbance. What you did to-night will be all over the city by tomorrow morning. If you see any signs of disturbance, if any people gather around here, go to Zerkovitch at once, or, if that's not possible or he comes to me in Suleiman's tower, and I'll send for Marie Zerkovitch too. Will you promise? You must run no risk."

"If I come if I'm afraid," he insisted.

"Or if you ought to be?" she asked, laughing again.

"Well, then—or if I ought to be," she promised, joining in his laugh. "But the king—let's be with you?"

"My father likes me. We're good friends. But the father dislikes me, they say of the Stefanovitches. I'm a martinet, they tell me. Well, he isn't. Nero fiddled—you remember? The king goes fishing. He's remarkably fond of fishing, and his advisers don't discourage him. I tell you all this because you've committed to our side now."

"Yes, I'm committed to your side. Who else is with you?"

"In Slavonia? Nobody! Well, the Zerkovitches and my hundred of statesmen's tower, and perhaps some old men who have seen war. But at Volsen and among the hills they're with me. Again he seemed to muse as he reviewed his scanty forces.

"I wish we had another match. I want to see your face close," said Sophy. He rose, with a laugh, and leaned forward to the window. "Oh, no; you're nothing but a blur still!" she exclaimed impatiently.

Suddenly the prince awoke from his reverie—perhaps from a dream. To Sophy he gave the impression, as he was to give it more than once again, of a man pulling himself up, tightening the reins, drawing back into himself.

"I linger too long," he said. "My duty lies at the tower yonder. I've thanked you badly, but what thanks can a man give for his life? We shall meet again. I'll arrange that with Marie Zerkovitch. You'll remember what I've told you to do in case of danger? You'll act on it?"

"Yes, monseigneur."

He sought her hand, kissed it and then dropped his way to the stairs. Sophy went with him down to the porch.

"Be careful to lock your door," he enjoined her, "and don't go out tomorrow unless the streets are quite quiet."

"Oh, but I've a French lesson to give at 10 o'clock," she remonstrated.

"You have to do that?"

"I have to make my living, monseigneur."

"Ah, yes," he said meditatively. "Was, slip out quietly and wear a veil."

"Nobody knows my face."

"Wear a veil. People notice a face like yours. Again thanks, and good night."

Sophy peered out from the porch and watched his quick, soldierly march up the street to St. Michael's square. The night had brightened a little, and she could make out his figure, although dimly, until he turned the corner and was lost to sight. She lingered for a moment before turning to go back to her room—lingered musing on the evening's history.

Thus Sophy's action loomed large in the king's eyes, and he was indolently indifferent to the view taken of it in the barracks rooms and the drinking shops of Slavonia. Two days after Mistich's attempt he received Sophy at the palace with every circumstance of compliment. The prince was not present—he made military duty an excuse—but Countess Ellenburg and her little son were in the room, and General Steenovics with Markart in attendance, stood beside the king's chair.

Sophy saw a tall, handsome, elderly man, with thick iron gray hair more artfully arranged. The care of it was no small part of the duty of Leppage, the king's French body guard, and his military manners were dignified, but not formal. The warmth of greeting which he had prepared for Sophy was evidently increased by the impression which she made on him. He thanked her in terms of almost overwhelming gratitude.

"You have preserved the future of my family and of our dynasty," he said.

Countess Ellenburg closed her long narrow eyes. Everything about her was long and narrow, from her eyes to her wings, taking in on the way her nose and her chin. Steenovics glanced at her with a smile of uneasy propitiation. It was no particularly important to be gracious just now—gracious both over the preservation of the dynasty and over its preserver.

"No gratitude can be too great for such a service, and no mark of gratitude too high." He glanced around the room, and called good humoredly, "You, Markart, there, a chair for this lady?"

Markart got a chair. Steenovics took it from him and himself prepared to offer it to Sophy, but the king rose to take her in his arms, and she presented to the favored object of his regard. Sophy courted him; the king waited till she sat. Countess Ellenburg stood on a low stool on the left, and looked on with a smile of wintery congratulation.

"But for you these fellows would have killed me," she said, "I think, have killed my son in the street. I'll drink to you, and I'll send for Marie Zerkovitch too. Will you promise? You must run no risk."

"If I come if I'm afraid," he insisted.

His Shipwife.

The suburbanite was entertaining a friend who followed the sea. Showing him his room after his arrival, the host noticed that there was but one pillow on the bed.

"By the way, captain," he asked, "do you use more than one pillow?"

"Well, I use one for my head," replied the captain, "and one for a shipwife."

"Shipwife! What in the world is that?"

"It's evident that you're a landsman. Every seaman knows what a shipwife is. It's an extra pillow placed under the legs or arms to ease the position. It isn't so necessary on land, where you have a wide, comfortable bed, but it's almost a necessity at sea, where you are cramped up in a narrow berth, with no room to stretch. Any one who has been at sea for a long period knows what a shipwife is. We get so used to using one that we're not fully at home on land unless we have one. Better let me have another pillow for a shipwife, John."—New York Press.

Chapter Thirteen

KING ALEXIS was minded that all proper recognition should be made of Sophy's service to his family. It had been her fortune to protect a life very precious in his eyes. Taken from his own in temperament and pursuits, he had, none the less, considerable affection for him. But there was more than this. With the prince was bound up the one strong feeling of a nature otherwise easy and careless. The king might go fishing on most lawful days, but it was always a Stefanovitch who fished—a prince who had married a princess of a great house and had felt able to offer Countess Ellenburg no more than a morgue and a coffin. The work his message had begun his son's was to complete. The royal house of Kravonia was still on its promotion. It lay with the prince to make its rank acknowledged and secure.

Thus Sophy's action loomed large in the king's eyes, and he was indolently indifferent to the view taken of it in the barracks rooms and the drinking shops of Slavonia. Two days after Mistich's attempt he received Sophy at the palace with every circumstance of compliment. Lord Rosebery, in his life of William Pitt, the younger, relates an excellent story that he himself heard from the lips of Lord Beaconsfield. The anecdote cannot be better related than in the author's own words: "Mr. Disraeli," he writes, "in the more genial and less majestic days before 1834, used to tell a sardonic story of the time. When he first entered Parliament he used often to dine at the House of Commons, where he was generally served by a grim old waiter of peevish reputation, who was supposed to possess a secret treasure of political tradition. The young member sought by every graceful art to win his confidence and partake of these stories. One day the venerable domestic related, 'You hear many lies told as history. Sir, he said, 'do you know what Mr. Pitt's last words were?'"

"Of course," said Disraeli, "they were well known: 'Oh, my country, how I love my country!' for that was then the authorized version.

"'Nonsense,' said the old man, 'I'll tell you the truth. Let me see. One night he was called out to bed by a messenger in a post-chaise shouting to me outside the window. 'What is it?' I said. 'You're to get up and dress and bring some of your pork pies down to Mr. Pitt at Putney.' So I went; and as he drove along he told me that Mr. Pitt had not been able to take any food, but had suddenly said, 'I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork pies.' And so I was sent for post-haste. When we arrived Mr. Pitt was dead. There was his last words: 'I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork pies.'"

The continuous use of Wilson's Fly Pads will prevent all danger of infection from such sources by killing both the germs and the flies.

"Why did they used to call writers of occasional and fugitive poems?" asked the Sweet Young Thing of her journalistic lover.

"I suppose," replied the latter, because the editors of those times got after 'em with bloodhounds."—Baltimore American.

Corns are caused by the pressure of tight boots, but no one need be troubled with them when so simple a remedy as Holloway's Corn Cure is available.

His Shipwife.

The suburbanite was entertaining a friend who followed the sea. Showing him his room after his arrival, the host noticed that there was but one pillow on the bed.

"By the way, captain," he asked, "do you use more than one pillow?"

"Well, I use one for my head," replied the captain, "and one for a shipwife."

"Shipwife! What in the world is that?"

"It's evident that you're a landsman. Every seaman knows what a shipwife is. It's an extra pillow placed under the legs or arms to ease the position. It isn't so necessary on land, where you have a wide, comfortable bed, but it's almost a necessity at sea, where you are cramped up in a narrow berth, with no room to stretch. Any one who has been at sea for a long period knows what a shipwife is. We get so used to using one that we're not fully at home on land unless we have one. Better let me have another pillow for a shipwife, John."—New York Press.

A Hazardous Undertaking.

We've accident insurance cover which pay for lots of harm. That come to mortals—broken toes and broken legs and arms. But won't it make the money go when clever cupid starts an accident insurance cover? To pay for broken hearts?—Boston Post.

How She Know.

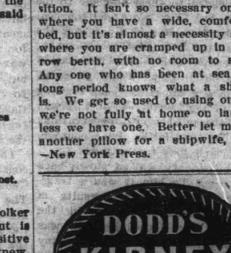

"I do think," exclaimed Mrs. Tolker indignantly, "that Mrs. Gadabout is the most aggravatingly inquisitive woman I met say so, I ever knew. Why, I never pass her on the street but what she invariably turns her head and stares back at me to see what I've got on and how it sits behind."

"That's not so, I was wondering, my dear, how you found out that the mean thing looked back. Some one tell you?" inquired Mr. Tolker innocently.

And Mrs. Tolker straightway turned the question on her indignative woman. "I must say so, I was wondering, my dear, how you found out that the mean thing looked back. Some one tell you?" inquired Mr. Tolker innocently.

Chapter Thirteen

KING ALEXIS was minded that all proper recognition should be made of Sophy's service to his family. It had been her fortune to protect a life very precious in his eyes. Taken from his own in temperament and pursuits, he had, none the less, considerable affection for him. But there was more than this. With the prince was bound up the one strong feeling of a nature otherwise easy and careless. The king might go fishing on most lawful days, but it was always a Stefanovitch who fished—a prince who had married a princess of a great house and had felt able to offer Countess Ellenburg no more than a morgue and a coffin. The work his message had begun his son's was to complete. The royal house of Kravonia was still on its promotion. It lay with the prince to make its rank acknowledged and secure.

Thus Sophy's action loomed large in the king's eyes, and he was indolently indifferent to the view taken of it in the barracks rooms and the drinking shops of Slavonia. Two days after Mistich's attempt he received Sophy at the palace with every circumstance of compliment. The prince was not present—he made military duty an excuse—but Countess Ellenburg and her little son were in the room, and General Steenovics with Markart in attendance, stood beside the king's chair.

Sophy saw a tall, handsome, elderly man, with thick iron gray hair more artfully arranged. The care of it was no small part of the duty of Leppage, the king's French body guard, and his military manners were dignified, but not formal. The warmth of greeting which he had prepared for Sophy was evidently increased by the impression which she made on him. He thanked her in terms of almost overwhelming gratitude.

"You have preserved the future of my family and of our dynasty," he said.

Countess Ellenburg closed her long narrow eyes. Everything about her was long and narrow, from her eyes to her wings, taking in on the way her nose and her chin. Steenovics glanced at her with a smile of uneasy propitiation. It was no particularly important to be gracious just now—gracious both over the preservation of the dynasty and over its preserver.

"No gratitude can be too great for such a service, and no mark of gratitude too high." He glanced around the room, and called good humoredly, "You, Markart, there, a chair for this lady?"

Markart got a chair. Steenovics took it from him and himself prepared to offer it to Sophy, but the king rose to take her in his arms, and she presented to the favored object of his regard. Sophy courted him; the king waited till she sat. Countess Ellenburg stood on a low stool on the left, and looked on with a smile of wintery congratulation.

"But for you these fellows would have killed me," she said, "I think, have killed my son in the street. I'll drink to you, and I'll send for Marie Zerkovitch too. Will you promise? You must run no risk."

"If I come if I'm afraid," he insisted.

"Or if you ought to be?" she asked, laughing again.

"Well, then—or if I ought to be," she promised, joining in his laugh. "But the king—let's be with you?"

"My father likes me. We're good friends. But the father dislikes me, they say of the Stefanovitches. I'm a martinet, they tell me. Well, he isn't. Nero fiddled—you remember? The king goes fishing. He's remarkably fond of fishing, and his advisers don't discourage him. I tell you all this because you've committed to our side now."

"Yes, I'm committed to your side. Who else is with you?"

"In Slavonia? Nobody! Well, the Zerkovitches and my hundred of statesmen's tower, and perhaps some old men who have seen war. But at Volsen and among the hills they're with me. Again he seemed to muse as he reviewed his scanty forces.

"I wish we had another match. I want to see your face close," said Sophy. He rose, with a laugh, and leaned forward to the window. "Oh, no; you're nothing but a blur still!" she exclaimed impatiently.

Suddenly the prince awoke from his reverie—perhaps from a dream. To Sophy he gave the impression, as he was to give it more than once again, of a man pulling himself up, tightening the reins, drawing back into himself.

"I linger too long," he said. "My duty lies at the tower yonder. I've thanked you badly, but what thanks can a man give for his life? We shall meet again. I'll arrange that with Marie Zerkovitch. You'll remember what I've told you to do in case of danger? You'll act on it?"

"Yes, monseigneur."

He sought her hand, kissed it and then dropped his way to the stairs. Sophy went with him down to the porch.

"Be careful to lock your door," he enjoined her, "and don't go out tomorrow unless the streets are quite quiet."

"Oh, but I've a French lesson to give at 10 o'clock," she remonstrated.

"You have to do that?"

"I have to make my living, monseigneur."

"Ah, yes," he said meditatively. "Was, slip out quietly and wear a veil."

"Nobody knows my face."

"Wear a veil. People notice a face like yours. Again thanks, and good night."

Sophy peered out from the porch and watched his quick, soldierly march up the street to St. Michael's square. The night had brightened a little, and she could make out his figure, although dimly, until he turned the corner and was lost to sight. She lingered for a moment before turning to go back to her room—lingered musing on the evening's history.

"DIZZY'S" STORY.

Lord Rosebery Tells of a Tale by the Great Beaconsfield.

Lord Rosebery, in his life of William Pitt, the younger, relates an excellent story that he himself heard from the lips of Lord Beaconsfield. The anecdote cannot be better related than in the author's own words: "Mr. Disraeli," he writes, "in the more genial and less majestic days before 1834, used to tell a sardonic story of the time. When he first entered Parliament he used often to dine at the House of Commons, where he was generally served by a grim old waiter of peevish reputation, who was supposed to possess a secret treasure of political tradition. The young member sought by every graceful art to win his confidence and partake of these stories. One day the venerable domestic related, 'You hear many lies told as history. Sir, he said, 'do you know what Mr. Pitt's last words were?'"

"Of course," said Disraeli, "they were well known: 'Oh, my country, how I love my country!' for that was then the authorized version.

"'Nonsense,' said the old man, 'I'll tell you the truth. Let me see. One night he was called out to bed by a messenger in a post-chaise shouting to me outside the window. 'What is it?' I said. 'You're to get up and dress and bring some of your pork pies down to Mr. Pitt at Putney.' So I went; and as he drove along he told me that Mr. Pitt had not been able to take any food, but had suddenly said, 'I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork pies.' And so I was sent for post-haste. When we arrived Mr. Pitt was dead. There was his last words: 'I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork pies.'"

Expatriating the Officer.

A recruiting officer, who is of a rather choleric disposition, questioned two recruits just brought in by the sergeant.

Officer (to first recruit)—"What's your name?"

Recruit—"Watt, sir."

Officer—"What is your name?"

Recruit—"Watt, sir."

Officer (impatiently)—"What's your name?"

Recruit—"My name is Watt, sir."

Officer—"Humph! Where do you come from?"

Recruit—"Ware, sir."

Officer—"Yes, where do you come from?"

Recruit—"I come from the town of Ware, sir."

Officer—"Oh, that'll do." Turning to second recruit—"What's your name?"

Recruit—"Mee, sir."

Officer—"Mee, you. What's your name?"

Recruit—"Mee, sir."

Officer (by this time fairly out of temper and evidently thinking the man was working a joke, shouted)—"Will you have secrets? Here you not one secret greater than all!"

Recruit—"My name, sir, is John Mee."

Officer—"Humph! And where do you come from?"

Recruit—"Hoo, sir."

Officer—"Confound it, you, sir; where do you come from?"

Recruit—"I come from the village of Hoo, near Chatham, sir."

A Simple Water Test.

All drinking water should be tested in town or country frequently, as there are so many impurities besides sewage which are quite as deadly, and every citizen of water is liable to be a source of blood poisoning. Mice, rats and other pests must have water, and many a case of typhoid is set up by such as these falling into the system and remaining there for months in a decomposed state. To detect this impure condition is very simple and unobtrusive. Draw a tumbler of water and drop into it a piece of white lump sugar into it and place it on the kitchen mantel shelf or anywhere that the temperature will not be under 60 degrees F. In about five minutes, if pure, will be perfectly clear. If contaminated by sewage or other impurities the water will be milky. This is a simple and safe test, well known in chemistry.

Blotting Pads and Sectets.

The ability to read backward what has been impressed on a blotting pad and the secrets which the latter will yield when reflected in a mirror are dangers against which the foreign office is especially on its guard. It was the last place where pepper casters of sand were used to dry the written word, and for a time black blotting paper was especially manufactured and used, but it was found not to be absolutely mark proof, so that absorbent rollers were introduced for blotting documents. When such a roller has run over letters sideways and up and down a few times, to decipher the impression would defy even Sherlock Holmes.

The Proud Man.

He was a proud man—proud of his family, so he would not disgrace it; proud of his reputation, so he kept it clean; proud of his ability, so he developed it; proud of his broadmindedness, so he was not a snob; proud of his courage, so he met failure bravely; proud of his achievements, so he never gave up and eventually succeeded.

Moral—Pride goeth before a rise.

Brevity Takes Time.

A Scottish minister was once asked how long he would require to prepare a speech. "That depends," said he, "upon how much time I am to occupy in its delivery. If I am to speak for a quarter of an hour, I should like a week to prepare; if I am to speak for half an hour, three days will do; if I am to go on as long as I like, I am ready now."

Lord Tredegar in a Pageant.

Lord Tredegar, of Balclutha fame, has consented to play the part of Owen Glynder in the Welsh national pageant. The Marchioness of Dute and Lady Ninon Stuart have also agreed to fill leading roles.

For Ways That Are Dark.

The man ran his eye over the casual assortment of cigars in the case at the end of the bar. He was a stranger to all of the brands.

"How that two for a quarter over to the left hand corner?" he asked.

"That's a dandy, boss," said the colored gentleman who was officiating as bartender. "It's the kind I always smoke."

This sounded like a dubious recommendation until he added: "When you want to get the best cigar in the house just ask the bartender which cigar he smokes when the boss is out."

KEEPING HIS BALANCE.

H. H. Middleton, who has had charge of the ladies' ready-to-wear department at the store of the Regina Trading Co., has accepted a position with the T. Eaton Co., at Winnipeg.

W. J. Rutherford, deputy commissioner of agriculture, has been chosen as one of the judges for the International Live Stock Exhibition to be held in Chicago in November and December.

There is a slight outbreak of scarlet fever in the east end, but the city health authorities are taking immediate steps to have it stamped out. So far, however, one death has been reported.

The contract for trenching, hauling pipe and calking, and backfilling the trench for the new pipe line from the compensating basin to the city has been awarded to Messrs. McVean & Craig of Moose Jaw, the price being $13,336.

At the recent meeting of the Dominion Fair Board, L. T. McDonald was appointed manager, and it is understood he will attend the Toronto and other exhibitions to secure information regarding the conducting of big exhibitions.

The recent matches of the Saskatchewan Rifle Association held at the barracks ranges proved a distinct success, and have shown that there are many good marksmen in the province. W. M. Williamson has been re-elected president, and C. H. Gordon, sec-treas. of the association.

Wm. MacKenzie, president, and H. McLeod, general manager of the C. N.R., were in the city on Saturday and interviewed the city council on matters affecting the union depot. Mr. MacKenzie had with him on this tour a number of British financiers.

Editor McKee, of the Rouleau Enterprise, was in the city on Friday and Saturday, having driven over to get some repair work done for his press. Mr. McKee states that the crops between here and Rouleau are looking splendid and show no damage from hail. Cutting will soon be in order.

Cutting has commenced in different parts of the province, and this week will see the binders busy in every district. Where there has been no hail the crops are simply magnificent. Wheat in the Regina district will yield over thirty bushels to the acre. All that is needed now is dry harvest weather.

A real live peer of the realm, Sir John L. Langham, visited Regina on Monday and was shown about by H. C. Lawson. Sir John made a name for himself in the South African war by his labors in looking after the sick and wounded. He erected hospitals and paid for their maintenance out of his own pocket.

In the first of the international football games, played in the city on Tuesday evening, the Scotchmen defeated the Canadians by a score of 6 to 1. The next game of the series takes place at Railway Park next Saturday evening when the Scotchmen meet the Englishmen to decide the championship.

A Mr. Bielby who was working in the trenches on North Scarth street laying pipes, was the victim of a cave-in on Saturday morning. He received injuries which injured his head severely, and in fact he had his jaw dislocated. He was taken to the Regina hospital for treatment and is progressing favorably.

A party of United States agricultural newspaper men visited the city on Saturday and were entertained for the day sightseeing. They had luncheon at the King's Hotel and afterwards were driven out to the country to see the crops. They were met here by C. W. Peterson, of the C.P.R. irrigation department and conducted farther west on their trip.

A party called at this office on Monday and informed us that he had seen a party leading a beef cow towards one of the abattoirs on Sunday and that presumably it would be killed for beef. The suggestion has been made that every animal slaughtered should first be examined by a veterinary and the suggestion is a good one. Is it beyond doubt that only pure meat is offered to the citizens for food?

Squaw Piapot, widow of the late Chief Piapot, has been in the city for the past few days begging. She carries with her authority to do so. Is it not strange that the government does not better look after its wards? Piapot was one of the Indians who remained loyal during the rebellion, and it looks queer to see his widow begging. The department should look into this matter for the sake of Canada's honor.

C. M. O'Brien, member of the Alberta provincial assembly for the constituency of Rocky Mountain, was in the city on Sunday and addressed a meeting in Trades Hall in the afternoon on socialistic subjects. In the evening he attempted an open air meeting at the corner of Rose street and South Railway. A large number had gathered to listen with the result that the street became blocked. A policeman happened along and suggested a move so that the streets might be cleared. No move was made however, and O'Brien was taken to the police quarters. He was released on bail and appeared next morning before the police magistrate, who fined him the costs of the court and bound him over to keep the peace with an option of six days confinement. O'Brien said he had no money and could not offer any securities, and consequently he was taken in charge by the police. Later in the day, at the instigation of Dr. Cowan the costs were paid, and the bonds for his future good behavior were produced and accepted. Dr. Cowan and Jas. Simson are the sureties.

Was Misrepresented.

Ottawa, Aug. 17.—"An altogether erroneous impression has been spread in regard to the alleged endorsement which I gave to the recent reported gold find at Lac La Ronge," said Mr. H. Rowatt, head of the timber and mines branch of the Interior Department, when interviewed in connection with this and other reported gold discoveries in Canada. Some time ago word came of the most remarkable discoveries since the Klondyke finds, and Mr. Rowatt, who was in Prince Albert then, was said to have declared the specimens sent to him to be assays to be of a very rich character. "I know really nothing of the Lac La Ronge discovery," said Mr. Rowatt, "and the impression that I endorsed it as a good thing given in despatches sent east is entirely wrong."

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Reports reached here tonight from Thessalon board of trade that a new silver field said to rival Cobalt, has been discovered in Otter township, 25 miles north. Already a large number of prospectors are in the district.
