CHAPTER XLV.

"Pooh! I should never let my wife's temper trouble me," said Captain Egerton, contentedly.

"You don't understand. However, Basil, we have been true friends, old comrades—you will not desert me now? Stay with me until this month is over; then I will, if possible, run over to Paris with you for a week, just to disperse the mists a little."

"I will see you through it. Yours is the worst case I know, Ronald. Most men get through their honeymoon in one way or another; you are the only one I know who has absolutely failed."

For his lordship had failed most signally. He could no longer do without amusement and excitement; and, when he found that Diana took no interest in dog-fights or in any of his favorite pastimes, he felt that he was destitute of any resource wherewith to engage his wife. He could not converse on any of the subjects in which she was interested, no matter how much he tried. He hardly ever opened a book; the only reading he really enjoyed was that which the sporting papers provided. It was little wonder then that he invited friends to come to his rescue.

Lord Alerton was another old comrade. In the course of the previous year he had married a City heiress, whose money had repaired the damage done to a large inheritance by reckless extravagance. In return, he treated her with good-natured contempt. Lady Alerton herself was a nice, pretty girl, without much mind, quite content to pass through life worshipping her husband.

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Lady Shafto, another invited guest, was an intrigant suspected of knowing more than she ought of political undercurrents, and even Cabinet secrets, a brilliant and witty woman, whose mission in this world seemed to be to amuse persons of the opposite sex. She was very popular, and her bons mots were repeated everywhere.

Miss Shafto had but one delight, and that was music. She played and sang from morning until night, and would even sing the night through were she permitted. Sir Henry Dilke, the last invited guest, was a ponderous, handsome Englishman who lived for sport, and who seldom uttered a word on any other subject.

They were all just a little in awe of the beautiful stately mistress of Ronald's Court. Diana had no smiles for the men, Lord Clanronald's friends, whom she disliked instinctively. Lady Alerton had no special characteristics; there was nothing in her either to love or to hate. Her life was simply engrossed in that of her husband; she had no interest away from him. Lady Shafto was a most brilliant companion; but then she preferred the society of the other sex. Still, unconventional as these people were, they were quite in his element. They were a new type to Diana, these men who lived so entirely for their own amusement, whose sole idea of life was simply to enjoy its pleasures. She could not help feeling a kind of contempt for them. Her father, even with three millions of money at his command, had never been idle, but had always found something useful and honorable to do; Sir Royal read and studied; Richard was always hard at work; while Sir Lisle filled his life with the highest and noblest pursuits. She had never been thrown into the society of idle men, and their habits surprised her. They did not know what the sweetness and freshness of the morning air was like; it was doubtful whether any one of them had ever cared to see the sun rise, or knew anything of the beauty of the morning skies. Except when "sport" was the order of the day, they rose late, consumed vast quantities of "brandy and soda," lounged about until luncheon-time, brightened up then, rode or drove, dined well, and sat up until the early hours of the morning playing billiards. She, who loved early rising, activity of mind and body, hardly understood such a profitless life. She said nothing; but she looked at them at times with a gleam of scorn in her flashing eyes, and in some vague way that looked acted upon them like the lash of a whip.

CHAPTER XLVI.

There was nothing that Diana missed in her new home more than the terrace at Ferness. At Ronald's Court the drawing-room opened on to a well-kept lawn, smooth as velvet, with a few grand old cedars forming a somber background. A fountain stood in the center of the lawn and threw its crystal jets into the air, the sun's rays tinting the spray as it fell. Here and there was a statue; chairs and garden seats stood at the base of the stately trees; on one side the sweet syringas and the white acacia mingled their foliage. The spot was picturesque enough, but it was not like the terrace at Ferness.

In the evening the large glass doors were thrown open, and the guests went in and out at their pleasure. Miss Shafto seldom left the piano, and the music sounded delightfully soothing as it was carried along by the gentle breeze.

"Ronald," said Captain Egerton, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself! Look at your wife, sitting there alone!"

"She likes to be alone," he answered. "I always have an idea that she would rather be alone than with me."

"Nonsense! Let us join her," urged the other.

He was an admirer of beautiful women, this handsome worthless man; Diana, as she sat apart, her dress of light blue brocade lying in graceful folds about her, was striking enough to attract a less impressionable man than Basil Egerton. He could not get away from her. His ignoble nature, recognizing the purity of hers, almost quailed before her unsmiling goodness. She never uttered a word of rebuke—indeed she said little to him at any time—but the gleam of her eyes, the haughty curl of her lip were far more eloquent than words. In her own mind she resented with hot indignation the admiring glances that he gave her. He never won from proud Diana a single smile in return. She knew little of the lives of such men as Basil Egerton;

WITH FINGERS!
CORNS LIFT OUT

Freezone is magic! Corns and calluses lift right off—Doesn't hurt a bit

A few cents buys a tiny bottle of the magic Freezone at any drug store. Apply a few drops of Freezone upon a tender, aching corn or a callus. Instantly that troublesome corn or callus stops hurting, then shortly you lift it out, root and all, without any pain, soreness or irritation. These little bottles of Freezone contain just enough to rid the feet of every hard, soft, corn between the toes and the calluses on bottom of feet. So easy! So simple. Why wait? No humbug!

but her own innate sense of delicacy made him repugnant to her. Now, as Ronald and he came toward her, she did not raise her eyes, but shrank instinctively from her husband and his friend.

"A lovely night, Diana," said his lordship.

Diana was unhappy, and the loveliness around her only intensified the misery she suffered. She declined to reply to her husband, and relapsed into the reverie in which she had been indulging.

"Where is Miss Shafto?" asked Lord Clanronald. "Let us have some music. I should like something more cheerful than the murmuring of the wind."

"I will find Miss Shafto, and ask her to sing for us," said the captain; and he went away, leaving husband and wife alone.

"What a glorious face! But how proud she is! One look from her eyes is enough to make a man shake in his shoes," the captain thought.

He found Lady Shafto talking in her most entrancing style to Lord Alerton, and stopped for a few minutes to speak to her.

"Our hostess looks like a beautiful statue," she remarked, glancing toward Diana.

Basil Egerton turned his eyes in the same direction, and then asked:

"Do you think, Lady Shafto, that any power on earth could make that woman feel?"

"I do," she answered. "When my daughter was singing last night, I saw tears in her eyes."

"Tears in Lady Clanronald's eyes!" he cried. "Excuse me, Lady Shafto—I can never fancy such proud, bewitching eyes softened by tears."

"I have seen them so," said Lady Shafto.

"She has the most lovely face I have ever seen," he said; "but it has always been proud and cold to me. I should like to see it as you say."

"You can, if you watch her while my daughter sings," returned Lady Shafto.

"Just as I thought," he said to himself.

self, as he sauntered away. "She is full of romance and poetry, and she beats it down with an iron hand. Why did she marry poor Ronald? There never was such a mistaken marriage."

He found Miss Shafto, and told her that there was a general request for some music; and then he returned to his host and hostess, who still occupied the seat under the syringas. He stood near them, speaking now and then to Lord Clanronald, while he watched Diana's face. He was determined to find out for himself whether this beautiful woman had a heart to be moved, for he was interested in her.

Presently there came floating over the lawn the prelude of a melancholy song, soft, sad, and sweet. The words fell clearly upon the ears of the trio:

"He was one man in the whole wide world,
Yet the whole wide world to me;
And I was a flower 'till he stooped to take,
Because it bloomed on the sea."

"He held his life in his careless hand,
As God holds our souls, we hear;
I led his moods by a silken string
For the space of half a year."

"And he was a man as few men are,
Loyal and courteous and gay;
I hung on his pleasure night and day,
And worshipped him near or far."

"What does it matter how things go wrong,
When there are a hundred ways?
What does it matter how it began?
It set both our hearts ablaze."

Could she feel? Did she feel? Basil Egerton could not tell, for she rose suddenly and walked to a little distance, and did not turn until the last chord had died away. Was it because she was indifferent to the pathos of the words, or because she could not hear them? He must know. She interested him more than any one he had ever met, and he was determined to fathom her character, to see if there were in her any capability for love, deep, passionate love. He was firmly resolved to find out why she had married this man whom he knew to be worthless; and then—well, even in his boldest thoughts he had not decided what might follow. As he stood watching her, he thought of Owen Meredith's beautiful ballad, "La Marquise—"

"Could we find out her heart through that velvet and lace?
Can it beat without ruffling her sumptuous dress?
She will show us her shoulder, her neck, and her face,
But what the heart's like we must guess."

"With live women and men to be found in the world—
Live with sorrow and sin, live with pain and passion—
Who could live with a doll, though its locks should be curled,
And its petticoats trimmed in the fashion?"

"'Tis so fair; would my bite, if I bit it, draw blood?
Will it cry if I hurt it, or scold if I kiss?
Is it made in its beauty of wax or of blood?
Is it worth while to guess at all this?"

He laughed as he remembered the words; but the loveliness on which he gazed was not like that of Madame la Marquise. There was life and fire and passion in it. He caught a glimpse of Lady Clanronald's face as the notes of a martial ballad came pealing out; it was alive with intensity of feeling and passion.

"So fresh and fair and dimpled,
But, oh, what a soul there lies,
Melting to liquid agate
Those tender womanly eyes!

"How it quickens under the music,
As if at a breath divine!
And the rippling lips departed,
Drink in the sound like wine."

Ah, yes, womanly feeling was there! All the pride and coldness might try to hide it, but they did not; there were poetry, romance, and passion in the lovely face.

Miss Shafto's melodious voice came floating across the lawn again. This time she was singing a ballad of autumn.

"All through the golden weather,
Until the autumn fell,
Our lives went by together
So wildly and so well."

"But autumn's wind uncloses
The heart of all your flowers;
I think as with the roses
So hath it been with ours."

"Like some divided river
Your ways and mine will be—
To drift apart forever,
Forever till the sea."

"And yet for one word spoken,
One whisper of regret,
The dream had not been broken,
And love were with us yet."

Surely Diana grew paler! Surely that was quiver of pain on those perfect lips!

"The dream had not been broken,
And love were with us yet," repeated Basil Egerton, as he drew near to her.

Both Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Steele, Ala.—"During the Change of Life I had hot flashes, was nervous, run down, and had sick headaches for two or three days at a time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am much stronger and better in every way than I was. My daughter's health broke down last June from teaching school without a rest, and she has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Blood Medicine with good results. She is much better and teaching now and I give your medicine the praise. You are welcome to use this letter for the benefit of other suffering women."—Mrs. F. A. GAINES, R. F. No. 1, Steele, Ala.

Women who suffer as Mrs. Gaines did should not hesitate to give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial, as the evidence that is constantly being published proves beyond question that this grand old remedy has relieved much suffering among women.

Greek Premier Warns of Turks --- Fight Over Alien Res War Honors List Book.

LONDON, Nov. 16. The eastern coast of the Black Sea from Yezentzki to Sechy has been seized by an insurgent army of seventy thousand men operating in the rear of army of Gen. Denekine, the anti-Bolshevik leader on the southwestern Russian front according to a wireless despatch from Moscow.

PARIS, Nov. 16. The failure of the Peace Conference to expel the Turks from Europe would spell bankruptcy of the peace, said Eleutherios Venizelos, the Greek Premier, to the Associated Press to-day. Neither the Greeks, Bulgarians, nor Roumanians will consider the Baltic question settled so long as the Turk remains in Europe, M. Venizelos continued. We seek no mandate for Smyrna. The holding of the commission which is investigating in Smyrna are vicious, and I ask that they be considered null and void. There was no question of temporary occupation and political annexation and Frank Wilson asked the Greeks to occupy Smyrna. I am confident that although President Wilson disagrees with me on the question of Thrace, we are fully in accord as to Smyrna.

LONDON, Nov. 16. When the Aliens' Restriction Bill is before the Commons last night stiff fight was made to secure that any alien shall not be permitted to return for seven years without the same Secretary's permission. Two years was suggested by the Government. A. Hopkins, a former soldier, protested against the perpetual ban of the Germans who, he said, had set up a magnificent fight of over ten years and on some occasions nearly beaten us. THE ALIENS' RESTRICTION BILL.

LONDON, Nov. 16. When the Aliens' Restriction Bill was before the Commons last night, still fight was made to secure that enemy aliens shall not be permitted to return for seven years without the Home Secretary's permission. Two years was suggested by the Government. A. Hopkins, a former soldier, protested against the perpetual hatred of the Germans who, he said, had set up a magnificent fight of over four years and on some occasions had nearly beaten us. Sir John Burdett expressed amazement and dis-

M. P.'s Who Are Nervous

Mr. Lloyd George's surprising confession that he still never rises to address the Commons without a "quaking of the knees and a strong desire to bolt from the House" is after all only an echo of similar confession made by almost every great statesman.

Mr. Gladstone never made any concealment of the fact that he was a "victim of his nerves." "Every great orator," he once said to a friend, "from Demosthenes to Burke, has suffered from nervousness on the eve of an important speech; and although I cannot claim to share their gift of golden speech I can claim more than a fair share of their defect of nerves."

For some days before his famous speech introducing the Home Rule Bill, he was in a state of such nervous unrest that he could not remain long in any one position; and it was only the soothing and tactful influence of his wife that prevented him, as she afterwards said, "from making himself quite ill."

John Bright, in spite of his aspect of composure and even of stolidity, was essentially a nervous speaker. Towards the end of his life, when he was admittedly the greatest orator in England, he said, "I suppose I ought to be ashamed of myself; but the fact is that I never rise in the House without a trembling of the knees and a secret wish that somebody else would catch the Speaker's eye and enable me to sit down again."

Although probably the late Lord Salisbury never suffered from this excess of fear, it is known that he was, in spite of his impassivity, a man of nerves. The only outward and visible sign of his nervousness was the restless movement of his hands or his knees when he was about to speak.

But nervousness is the heritage of the Cecils, and has perhaps reached its culminating point in Lord Hugh, whose nervousness when addressing the House is very patent. Indeed, when he made his maiden speech, his motion, as evidenced by his quivering lips and broken sentences, was quite distressing.

His cousin, Mr. A. J. Balfour, was equally nervous in his early years of Parliamentary speaking; and even now, when he makes a prepared speech, he says, "I am so oppressed by a presentiment of failure that I would give anything to be allowed to turn tail and run away."

When Sir William Harcourt was once asked whether he felt any nervousness when speaking in the House, he answered, "Of course I do, and if I didn't I should think it quite time to retire." And even Lord Curzon, in spite of his seeming assurance once declared, "I cannot imagine a worse future punishment than an eternal anticipation of a House of Commons speech when one is always waiting to catch the Speaker's eye."

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited. Gentlemen,—In July, 1915, I was thrown from a road machine, injuring my hip and back badly and was obliged to use a crutch for 14 months. In Sept., 1906, Mr. Wm. Outridge, of Lachine, urged me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT, which I did with the most satisfactory results and to-day I am as well as ever in my life.

Yours sincerely,
MATTHEW X BAINES,
mark.

Lord's Prayer on a Shilling.

It is recorded that Thackeray was one of the neatest of writers and boasted that he could write the Lord's Prayer on a shilling.

Keats wrote like a clerk, and Gray, Tom Moore, Leigh Hunt, and Sir Walter Scott all used running hands which were legible without any marked characteristics. The same may be said of the writings of Anthony Trollope and Professor Tyndall, none, perhaps, of these writers being much given to subtlety of expression. Carlyle, on the other hand, is said to have produced the most untidy and awful scribble that ever puzzled a compositor, and Victor Hugo, Browning, and Tennyson were nearly as bad.

Then there is the memory of Napoleon, who wrote a hand that he could not read himself, and Macready, the actor, whose order for the theatre was once taken for a prescription for a cough mixture.

Professor Won Over the Arabs for Allies.

Lieutenant-Colonel Laurence, who, by most astute propaganda, won the Arabs over to the allied side, has slipped out of the picturesque role, and has gone back to teaching at Oxford University. Laurence was a most picturesque figure in the Eastern theatre of the war. To get into touch with the Arabs he adopted their kit and their tongue. So secret were his doings that newspapers were forbidden to publish his photographs, even when many of his exploits were known. Now, since the excitement is over, his Asia Minor mysteries are like the Arabian Night tales.

Oceans Overhead.

HIMALAYAS OF THE SKY.

Did you ever lie on your back on a lawn or hillside and watch one of those huge cumulus clouds, known as "thunder-heads," drifting slowly and solemnly overhead?

If so, have you ever considered the marvels of such a cloud? Has it occurred to you that you were watching a cloud mountain containing water enough to fill a large reservoir?

Such a cloud is a Himalaya of the sky. It may be miles deep. It has been discovered that the temperature of the summit of one such cloud was seventy-five degrees below zero centigrade—as cold as the ground temperature of the far Arctic in winter.

The summit, of course, in such a case was composed of ice, and the clouds were many layers ranging from dry air to vapours so thick and heavy that, but for the upward rush of warm air from the earth, it would have fallen in torrents that would have flattened all vegetation, washed the earth from the hillsides, and probably drowned you where you lay.

When Clouds Burst.

Sometimes, owing to exceptional causes, a cloud of this kind does break up suddenly and fall in roaring torrents. This sort of thing is more common in tropical countries than in temperate, but does at times occur in England.

If you visit Longtoft, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, you may see for yourself the ravages caused by such a deluge.

It was on a Sunday evening, and all day it had been bright and hot. After sunset one of these great thunder-heads rolled up. There was one flash of lightning, one shattering crash of thunder, then pitch darkness and solid sheets of water falling from the sky.

Inside a minute, snys an eye-witness, the road was a foot deep in water. The whole hillside was gouged out in chasms, and houses were razed to the ground. After the storm was over, it took several acres lay at the foot of the valley. It was reckoned to contain some 12,000 tons of water. Yet that was only a fraction of the total which had fallen.

After a summer storm in June, 1914, half lay twenty inches deep near Hexton, in Hertfordshire. That meant, roughly, 800 tons of ice on each acre. And all from one cloud.

In the island of Alderney, on September 8th, 1903, two inches of rain fell in half an hour, and flooded everything. The fall was all on a couple of square miles, while around the island the sky was blue and clear. It was just another case of some curious electrical action suddenly releasing the whole contents of one of those cloud-reservoirs.

But these cases do not compare with what can happen in hotter climates. At Malta, in October, 1913, eleven inches of rain fell in seven hours—over 1,000 tons of water on each acre of land.

Baguio, in the Philippines, holds what is probably a world's record. Within eight hours twenty-four inches of rain fell. That is equal to London's rainfall for a whole year. Imagine 2,400 tons of water being dumped on each acre in one-third of a day and night!

The rainfall of the British Isles varies from twenty to nearly 200 inches yearly, according to locality. One inch of rain over the whole of the British Isles would weigh nearly 3,000 millions of tons, or enough to cover the whole of London to a depth of between eighty and ninety feet. If we could sell the water at a penny a hundred gallons, it would bring in a sum of over seventy millions sterling.

The record day of rain in England was on August 26th, 1912, when at Norwich the fall was eight inches in twenty-four hours, and over 2,000 square miles of Norfolk and Suffolk four inches fell during the day. The damage was terrible.

Nancy Four Made Another Record Flight.

Washington, Nov. 13.—Pilot Lieut. Commander Read, of the naval seaplane N.-C.-4, which made the first transatlantic flight from Trepassey, recently established a new non-stop record for that type of craft when, carrying 17 passengers, it flew from Pensacola, Florida, to Memphis, Tenn., a distance of 535 nautical miles, the Secretary of the Navy announced today. Due to bad winds, speed of only 55 knots per hour was maintained. The total flying time was nine hours and forty-three minutes, about ten minutes less than the flying time made by the N.-C.-4 in its flight from Punta Del Gada to Lisbon in the transatlantic race.

Lusitania's Captain Quits.

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 13.—There is still no word of the members of the crew of the American steamer Polar Land, which sank off Scattered Island last Sunday, and hops for their rescue is beginning to run at low ebb. Yesterday, C. H. Harvey, local agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department, received a wireless from Capt. MacDonald, of the Government steamer Aramora, which has joined in the search for the missing men, stating that at eight o'clock his vessel was in latitude 44.15, longitude 57.53, the locality in which the catastrophe occurred, but had seen no trace of the crew or their boats. The steamer Ninian which has been seeking the men, without success, had continued on her eastbound voyage after sending word of the accident to all west-bound ships. Some shipping men in Halifax seem to be of the opinion that there is small likelihood that the crew of the Polar Land were able to escape from their vessel before it foundered, on account of the difficulty in successfully launching boats in the heavy gale. On the other hand, it is pointed out that there is possibility that the crew, having got away from the sinking ship, were subsequently rescued by some sailing vessel or steamer without wireless and therefore unable to report their safety.

Slightly Misunderstood.

The reading-lesson was droning on its most unhappy way, and when Willie Smith's turn came to spell out his paragraph he stumbled over the word "heirloom."

The kindly teacher put him right as to the pronunciation of the word, when up shot Tommy Johnson's hand.

"P-please, teacher, what is the meaning of 'heirloom'?" inquired that hopeful and somewhat inquisitive youth.

"Oh, Tommy," was the reply, "I am glad to see you take such an interest in your lesson. 'Heirloom' means something that is handed down from father to son—in other words, a 'relic'."

"Oh," replied Tommy, thoughtfully, "that's the funniest name ever I heard for a pair of trousers!"

Cold "Don't's."

This is the season for colds. If you want to avoid one—Don't be afraid of fresh air. It cannot of itself ever give anyone a cold in the head.

Don't forget exercise, and add as much fat as possible to your daily consumption of food.

Don't overburden yourself with thick clothes. Ventilation as well as warmth should be aimed at.

Don't toast yourself by the fire. This only heats one side of the body, while the other may be chilled by a current of cold air.

Don't treat a cold as a trivial matter. It may lead to influenza and serious illnesses.

Don't sneeze without covering your mouth with a handkerchief. A man with a cold can easily throw his poison germs left by a sneeze.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURES COLDS, Etc.

Fear for the Ship's Crew.

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 13.—There is still no word of the members of the crew of the American steamer Polar Land, which sank off Scattered Island last Sunday, and hops for their rescue is beginning to run at low ebb. Yesterday, C. H. Harvey, local agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department, received a wireless from Capt. MacDonald, of the Government steamer Aramora, which has joined in the search for the missing men, stating that at eight o'clock his vessel was in latitude 44.15, longitude 57.53, the locality in which the catastrophe occurred, but had seen no trace of the crew or their boats. The steamer Ninian which has been seeking the men, without success, had continued on her eastbound voyage after sending word of the accident to all west-bound ships. Some shipping men in Halifax seem to be of the opinion that there is small likelihood that the crew of the Polar Land were able to escape from their vessel before it foundered, on account of the difficulty in successfully launching boats in the heavy gale. On the other hand, it is pointed out that there is possibility that the crew, having got away from the sinking ship, were subsequently rescued by some sailing vessel or steamer without wireless and therefore unable to report their safety.

A TRAGIC

There was a tragic item in the newspaper not long ago about two boys who were out gunning in a boat which developed a leak. The boat filled so rapidly that the boys could not make shore, and they were drowned. But had they been willing to throw aboard their guns and their heavy rubber-boots they might have been saved.

Of course, that strikes one at once as a most tragic waste of life. How could they, we say, sacrifice their lives for things.

And then on the heels of that comes another thought. This seems trifle because it was so sudden and tragic, but how about the millions who, day by day, year by year, are sacrificing our lives for things.

How About These People.

How about the man who goes back to the office or the factory and does prime work so that there may be finer set of furniture in the parlor.

How about the woman who sits up at night after night draining her strength and spoiling her capacity for daily enjoyment, to make elaborate clothes for herself and her children.

How about the man who lets himself be pushed into doing things that his conscience doesn't really approve in business, because he must get the money to buy that handsome automobile he has his heart set upon.

Sacrificing Living to Having.

aren't these people sacrificing life things, living to having? Of course, if the boys had realized that they were deciding between a pair of rubber boots and a gun they would have chosen life. But they didn't see the issue so early.

A TRAGIC WASTE OF LIFE.

There was a tragic item in the newspaper not long ago about two boys who were out gunning in a boat which developed a leak. The boat filled so rapidly that the boys could not make shore, and they were drowned. But had they been willing to throw overboard their guns and their heavy rubber boots they might have been saved.

Of course, that strikes one at once as the most tragic waste of life. How could they, we say, sacrifice their lives for things.

And then on the heels of that comes another thought. This seems terrible because it was so sudden and tragic, but how about the millions of us who, day by day, year by year, are sacrificing our lives for things.

How About These People.
 How about the man who goes back to the office or the factory and does routine work so that there may be a finer set of furniture in the parlor.
 How about the woman who sits up night after night draining her strength and spoiling her capacity for healthy enjoyment, to make elaborate clothes for herself and her children.

How about the man who lets his resources so that he may change last year's automobile for a better make, and had to scheme and worry about other bills.
 How about the man who lets himself be pushed into doing things that his conscience doesn't really approve of, in business, because he must get more money to buy that handsome house he has his heart set upon.

Sacrificing Living to Having.
 Aren't these people sacrificing life for things, living to having?
 Of course, if the boys had realized that they were deciding between a boat and a pair of rubber boots and a gun they would have chosen life. But they didn't see the issue so early.

And that's just the way with those of us who sacrifice our daily life for things—we don't see the issue clearly enough.

We Don't Realize We are Choosing.
 We don't realize that we are choosing between a mind at peace, time to read and think and be outdoors, self-respect, health, on the one hand, and more, and yet more things on the other.

Or surely we should choose the better part.

Heavy Taxes

A DROP IN GERMANY'S BUCKER.
 "The heaviest taxes will be only a drop in the ocean of our debts, even if Germans live like Chinese coolies," Mathias Erzberger, Minister of Finance, declared in introducing the country's greatest budget in the National Assembly. Erzberger announced that Germany's national debt had reached 212,000,000,000 marks. The new budget, which was adopted despite opposition of both the extreme radicals and extreme conservatives, provides for a balance of 74,000,000,000 marks. Expenditures during 1918 were 79,000,000,000 marks, while the ordinary revenues yielded only 9,000,000,000. Erzberger said the new taxes are expected to yield an additional 9,000,000,000.

Shortage of Overcoats in Paris.

Another "crisis," as the various shortages under which Paris is suffering are called—this time overcoats—has been added to the troubles of Paris. There is a great lack of either ready-made or tailor-made overcoats, which the low temperature of the last few days make essential. The list of these shortages, upon which the papers daily offer comment, include shortages of coal, small change, sugar, lodgings, transportation and milk, with an intermittent lack of butter, bottles and many less necessary articles.

Difficult.

A certain Judge, after passing sentence, always gave advice to prisoners. Having before him a man found guilty of stealing, he started thus: "If you want to succeed in this world you must keep straight. Now, do you understand?" "Well, not quite," said the prisoner; "but if your Lordship will tell me how a man is to keep straight when he is trying to make both ends meet I might."

RELIGION.

"It seems too bad," said he to me, "That you and I should disagree. What difference should it ever make Which road to heaven you choose to take? If you are ill, I do not frown Because you call in Dr. Brown. Nor do you sneer when I feel mean Because I call in Dr. Green. Though I prefer an allopath, You do not vent on me your wrath.

"In summer time you like the sea; The golf links have a charm for me. Where'er your days of rest you spend I still am proud to call you friend. Should I your glory then besmirch Because you choose a different church. Or should you fall me as a friend Because I somewhere else attend? Do not all Christian doctrines plan To worship God and better man?"

"I do not ask that you shall eat My choice of fish or fowl or meat, Nor read the books which please me most, Nor like the things of which I boast. I do not hold your friendship less Because you wear a different dress, Nor do you think the less of me For wanting sugar in my tea. You call me friend, and still maintain Your right to drink your beverage plain.

"The proof of all our varying creeds Lies not in printed words, but deeds. And Catholic, Protestant and Jew Shall all be judged by what they do. Men don't dictate or even care What garb their friends may choose to wear.

The Pirate's Gold.

(From the New York World.)
 A lawsuit in this day and generation, and in canny New Jersey at that, involving a delusive search for Captain Kidd's buried gold must cause surprise at the credulity revealed. Do men still seriously believe that the Atlantic seaboard is thickly sown with caches of pirates treasure? The fact brought out in the court testimony that the leader of a "spiritual congregation" and two women helpers, at the direction of a negro girl's "spirit," dug over the greater part of a 65-acre farm to find a chest of one of the pirate's gold would be scoffed at in work of fiction. Of all the myths that persist while the serious things of life have their day and pass that of buried treasure is no doubt the most enduring. It is two centuries and more since the Greenock sea-raider was hanged for his crimes, and time has gone on magnifying the amount of his loot. All the stealings of Kidd and of the buccaneers of the Spanish Main probably did not equal a modern private fortune of modest size. Yet certainly no similar amount of gold has caused as much delusion or inspired as much fruitless industry. If half the energy that has been spent in seeking pirate treasure had been devoted to digging for nature's treasures the world would be far richer. The New Jersey searchers for Kidd's fabulous gold could more profitably have tried their spades in the soil of Arizona or Oklahoma. But if men are "maestly fools," as Carlyle said, there is no aspect of their folly so persistent as this.

Unique Gift to Prince

BY MONTREAL HEBREWS.
 Gifts of many kinds have been presented to the Prince of Wales during his tour of the Dominion, but one that differed from the rest was that presented to him during his visit to the Baron de Hirsch Institute in Montreal on October 31st. A tablet of gold, on which were carved the Ten Commandments, was presented to the Prince, the tablet being handed to him by Sylvia Lillian Cohen, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. Lyon Cohen. The Commandments were in Hebrew characters, but the words "Presented to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales from the Jewish citizens of Montreal," were in English.

Changing Scenes.

With the resignation of the Government, which took place on Saturday morning last, it is now incumbent upon R. A. Squires, Esq., K.C., to present his Cabinet to His Excellency the Governor and take over the administration of affairs in this Dominion. That this will be done without excessive delay, as is the consensus of opinion, as it is believed that Mr. Squires and his party do not desire to remain without control any longer than they can possibly help. Having won the right they are not prepared to yield job or title of their present position as the dominating power.

It will be rather interesting when Mr. Squires announces his executive; interesting because there is a general feeling abroad that his appointment of seats will not be entirely agreeable to Mr. Coaker, who really holds the balance of power between the three parties constituting the new House of Assembly. Should such be the case then it is certain that trouble will ensue, Mr. Coaker not being of the quality of man who accepts rebuffs sitting down. With thirteen members ranged behind Mr. Squires and eleven (providing St. Barbe goes that way) backing up the President of the Fishermen's Protective Union, there are indications of lively times, unless the goods are delivered.

Great pains have been taken in the circulation of reports that the Squires and Coaker elements are working in perfect harmony, but these things have been heard before, and notwithstanding that the organs of the two parties are working overtime in their endeavors to show that "the birds in their little nests agree," there are evidence that an armed neutrality exists in both camps, and that the various moves of either leader are being closely watched by the other. Until, however, the new Premier submits his executive to the King's representative there will be much conjecture and speculation. It will not be an easy task to satisfy all the demands that will be made on the leader of the Liberal Reform Party. The big majority men will want either recognition or position or both, and the number of these is uncomfortably large, so much so that to satisfy all there will need to be a great exercise of diplomacy.

Big majorities in districts may count for popularity, but the discomfort to members receiving them is too obvious to call for comment. When the tail wags the dog, there is usually something doing, and in the present instance there is every reason to believe that this is just what is going to happen. While the outgoing Administration retains office, at the request of the Governor, for a few days, in order to give the incoming Premier time to select his executive, there is a possibility that complications may ensue, due to that extension of time, the results of which no one might prophesy. But be that as it may, it is no easy task for Mr. Squires to shape a course which will satisfy all the discordant elements which are ranged under his banner, and time alone will show how he has managed to steer clear of all the shoals which at present are plainly marked on his political chart.

The New Cabinet.

At 11 o'clock this morning the members of the new Government were sworn in, as follows:

Prime Minister and Acting Colonial Secretary—Hon. R. A. Squires, K.C.
Minister of Justice (Acting)—Hon. W. R. Warren.
Minister Finance and Customs (Acting)—Hon. H. J. Brownrigg.

Minister Marine and Fisheries (Acting)—Hon. W. F. Coaker.

Sir Edgar Bowring's Offer.

OF WATERFORD HALL, GOVERNMENT HOUSE, St. John's, Nfld., Nov. 15, 1919.

Editor Evening Telegram
Sir,—As President of the Women's Patriotic Association I am anxious to inform the Public, through your columns, that in answer to a request of mine to Sir Edgar Bowring for help regarding a Children's Hospital and Maternity Home, he has sent me the following cable:—
"I have not been able to ascertain when Waterford Hall would be free from soldier convalescents, but am prepared to place property free, when available, at disposal of the Women's Patriotic Association.

"As at present, on my part paying repairs, painting, fire premiums, extensions or alterations for purposes of Home (Children's Welfare Scheme) and Maternity Home (Children's Welfare Scheme) are efficiently managed and run approximately to its full capacity."
I think all will agree in thinking Sir Edgar's offer a very generous one indeed and one we are very lucky in getting.
We propose to accept this offer and to proceed as soon as possible with arrangements for turning Waterford Hall into a Children's Hospital. We are considering the advisability of establishing a Maternity Home in a building adjoining the Hospital, but this latter proposal raises further important questions which will need most careful consideration.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) CONSTANCE HARRIS.

Moistened Spaniard in Playful Mood.

A Spanish gentleman left the Seamen's Institute last evening caused some little anxiety on the part of the management of that place when, as a result of some moistening, he became somewhat playful and attempted to tickle the ribs of a companion with a cute little knife he had in his possession. The companion, who was a room-mate of his, became unnecessarily alarmed and did not enter into the spirit of the fun. Police being called, the gentleman with the funny disposition was escorted to H. M. Lodge.

Social Welfare Congress

NOTES ON THE SESSIONS.

The opening session of the Social Welfare Congress was commenced in Canon Wood Hall at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon, Mayor Gosling presiding. The general theme of the meeting was Child Welfare, and the following addresses were delivered:
"Conservation of Young Life," by Rev. Canon Vernon; "Training and Education," by Mr. R. Dunbar; "Delinquent, Defective and Dependent Children," by Rev. D. B. Hemmeon. Rev. Dr. Shearer also gave a most interesting and instructive address.
At one o'clock a luncheon was given in the Presbyterian Hall, at which the city clergy were present to meet the visiting speakers. These are Rev. J. G. Shearer, D.D., and Rev. Canon Vernon of Toronto; Dr. Clarence Hincks of Ottawa and Mr. Armitage of Washington, D.C. Dr. Shearer is Secretary of the Social Service Council of Toronto, and was one of the distinguished speakers at the Conference here two years ago. Rev. Canon Vernon is Secretary of the Anglican Council of Canada. Dr. Hincks is the Medical Director of the Canadian National Council for Mental Hygiene. Mr. Armitage is the special representative at Washington, D.C. of the Industrial Relations of the Inter-World Church Movement.

At the Cathedral last night Rev. Canon Vernon was the preacher. At George Street Methodist Church Mr. Armitage gave an address. Dr. Shearer preached at St. Andrew's.
This evening a meeting will be held in the Methodist College Hall at 8 o'clock, which will be presided over and addressed by His Excellency, Sir C. Alexander Harris. The special addresses will be delivered by Mr. Armitage of Washington, D.C., and Dr. Clarence Hincks, of Toronto, that by the latter being illustrated. The music for the occasion will be by the Presbyterian Choir under the leadership of Mr. Mavor.
A general invitation is extended to all those meetings, and it is hoped a deep interest will be taken in the proceedings.

ATLANTIC AGAIN FORCED TO LAND.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 16. The Handley Page airplane, which left Mount Jewett, Pa., this afternoon for the Glen I. Martin field here, made a safe landing at the North Randall Race Track, about 6 p.m., being unable to locate the Martins field in the dark. The plane left Mt. Jewett Friday morning on a non-stop flight to Chicago, and Vice-Admiral Gerr and his crew were forced to land at Mount Jewett Friday afternoon because of a broken water connector.

THOMAS URGES ACCEPTANCE.
LONDON, Nov. 16. General Secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, in a speech at Bristol to-day, urged the plan of the Government to give the men representation on a joint board of management and expressed the hope that the arrangement would be accepted. The Government proposes, Mr. Thomas said, that the railways be managed by a joint committee of executives, on which the workers would have three representatives with powers equal to those of the general managers.

RATHER LAME.
LONDON, Nov. 16. General Yudenitch has resigned command of the Russian North West army, according to a special despatch to the Daily Mail from Helsinki. General Ladloff, Commander-in-Chief of the Estonian army, has succeeded him. It is said that the resignation of Yudenitch was the result of his offensive, the object being to avoid the intervention of the Yudenitch army on entering Estonia.

D'ANNUNZIO LEAVES FIUME.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 16. Gabriele D'Annunzio, accompanied by his entire staff with the exception of General Tamasso, and with a force of 1,200 men, has left Fiume and sailed for the Dalmatian Coast. This news reached the State Department today from Trieste. D'Annunzio went aboard the destroyer Nullo with his staff, while 600 Italian shock troops and 600 Carabinieri boarded the Corazzado, the entire party proceeding to Zara where they landed yesterday morning.

THE PRINCE'S REST.
WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 16.—The Prince of Wales spent the first of his three days of rest here by walking ten miles, spending an hour in a swimming pool, and three hours, and in dancing for three hours.

At the Majestic.

The story of the martyrdom of Edith Cavell—Britain's heroic nurse—needs no telling. There is hardly one in the Empire who has not at one time or another seen references to that tragic event. The pictorial version is another matter. As in the case of "Joan the Woman," which gave the real story of Joan d'Arc for the first time, so in this the real and poignant inner meaning of the martyrdom of the noble woman who can be likened to the famous and immortal French girl, with no discredit to her. Produced by some of the master minds of the American picture world, this picture, "The Cavell Case," has been constructed in a manner that leaves no room for improvement. Cleverly contrasted, as the brutishness of the Germans who convicted, executed her, and the gentle, Christ-like behavior of the British sister are, the story will be seen with more than usual interest, and it is safe to predict that the picture will receive a reception second only to "Joan the Woman," which was rightly called the greatest picture that was ever screened in this city. To miss such a picture, then, is utterly impossible. At the Majestic to-night—see it there.

A Request.

Editor Evening Telegram.

The King and the People

(From the Toronto Globe.)
 The other day the Prince of Wales, in a frank speech to a Toronto audience, showed that he had a very democratic conception of the duties of the Crown. "The Throne," he said, stands for a heritage of common aims and ideals shared equally by all parties and nations in the British Commonwealth. The idea which he phrased so eloquently was expressed in homely but pungent language by his grandfather, King Edward VII, in a conversation with Lord Fisher, related by that sprightly veteran in his recent "memoirs."
 "I said to His Majesty once: 'Sir, that was a real low form of cunning on your Majesty's part sending to ask after Kehr Hardie's stomach-ache!' By Jove, he went for me like a mad bull and replied: 'You don't understand me! I am the King of ALL the people! No one has got me in his pocket, as some of them think they have!' and he proceeded with names I can't quote!"
 The world would like to have those names, but Lord Fisher revealed enough to give it an intimate look at the King's mind. The incident was creditable to His Majesty's heart and

Johnson's Goods.

Where Woman Rules.

POLISH WOMEN KEEN PATRIOTS AND INSPIRED COOKS.

(By Mrs. Cecil Chesterton in "John O'London's Weekly.")

Now that the Slav nations of Eastern Europe are released from Muscovite rule it is important to realize that the root difference between the Russian and other Slavs lies in the Mongol strain which is responsible for that indifference to life and human suffering which Russia has shown again and again.

Mother's Authority Supreme.

In Poland parental control is very strong, almost patriarchal. To this day no daughter uses the familiar "thou" to either father or mother, the third person is always employed. Thus a girl will say: "Did mother call?" Does mother say I may go out?—the direct form of address being considered not only impolite but insubordinate. The mother's authority is supreme; a Polish girl may die of a broken heart, but she will rarely marry against her mother's wishes.

Generally speaking, and unlike the French or the English, the Polish woman loves her husband more than her children. Capable of intense passion, she has a flaming constancy which domesticity cannot dull. The Russian woman is amorously venturesome; she changes her lover with her inclination. The Slav woman has a fidelity which outlasts all disillusion. The national proverb, "Fire of Straw," does not apply to her; she is steadfast in her affections as in her ambition.

Dominates Her Husband.

The Slav woman dominates her husband and her household, not only in family affairs but in concerns of wider issue. She is not in the least aggressive, your Polish wife is a most feminine person and understands the full importance of charm. She has always played a leading role in politics. "Germany's worst enemy is the Polish mother," said Bismarck, and in Russian, as in German Poland, it was the mother who kept the flame of patriotism burning. From earliest youth her sons and daughters were trained in the subterranean policy of defiance, which inevitably ended in discovery and imprisonment.

While I was in Warsaw I met a lady who had lost three sons in her country's cause. Two of them were shot in the insurrection of 1905, and one, a boy of seventeen, had been exiled to Siberia. Both her daughters had been imprisoned for attending secret political meetings, and she herself had served a sentence of five years for distributing revolutionary literature. She did not seem to think she had done anything out of the common—indeed, as I discovered, it is the exception among the intelligentsia not to have been imprisoned. "Sitting" is the euphemism for having been to jail. I remember a charming woman telling me with a radiant smile: "I was sitting for seven years for writing a history of Poland."

In England your political women is not as a rule a domestic character. In Poland politics are not allowed to interfere in household efficiency. The Slav woman, whether peasant or intelligentsia, is a wonderful manager, she has the French capacity for bargaining, and is a born cook.

At Christmas, Easter and other festivities she is preparing for weeks and keeps open house, pressing hospitality on all who come. There are no cakes in the world as nice as those they make in Poland, every kind and variety miracles of appetizing daintiness.

No Camaraderie.

While her political emancipation is complete socially her liberty is curtailed. Before Poland regained her independence revolutionary leaders included women, and at the present moment women members sit in the Polish Parliament. But while it was regarded as a matter of course for a girl to meet all sorts and conditions of men at any hour of the day or night for political purposes, it was and is impossible for an unmarried woman to go to dinner with a man unless they are affianced, and a young Slav girl does not dream of having an ice or a glass of tea with a boy friend.

This, I think is the effect of Russian rule. The Polish woman has an extraordinary fascination for the Russian, and the official and military caste always tried their utmost to gain access to the homes of the Poles. From a social point of view, however, the Russian was completely ostracized. No patriotic woman would speak to a Russian unless she were compelled, and as a consequence her attraction was intensified. Had the Polish girl been seen in public with young men of her own nation the Russian would have insisted on a similar privilege. Thus only engaged couples were seen together, and the Russian was left to agonize at the gates of the Polish Paradise.

A Keen Sense of Humour.

The Slav woman, unlike the Russian, has a keen sense of humour. It is this characteristic which I think accounts for her charity of judgment.

Essentially democratic in temperament, the countess and the chambermaid meet each other without any of the social embarrassment of English women. The method of address in speaking to a woman is the same for all classes. You preface a remark with the words "Proszę pani," which literally translated means "Please, madam." The Slav woman of the peasant class has an instinctive eye for colour. Her costumes, varying in each district, are the most beautiful in Europe, perfect settings for the dark-haired, dark-eyed, white-skinned type common throughout Poland, with an occasional variant of red-brown hair and blue eyes. The taste of the intelligentsia in dress is not so good. In winter they wear magnificent furs with picturesque small caps, but in summer they rather overload their gowns with colour, and their hats are not of the Parisian variety. The Polish woman has very small and well-shaped feet. Polish bootmakers are the cleverest in the world, and the most exclusive French and English shops were supplied before the war from the Warsaw factories.

Wit and Wisdom.

the height of fashion, stood before him. Said the visitor:

"I have called to collect a little matter of £1,000 for a friend of mine, Mr. Thomas Odell."

"I understand," replied Mr. Maxwell, who went to the safe, took from it several notes to the value of £1,000, and handed the money to the stranger.

The latter ascertained that the amount was correct, and placed the money in his breast-pocket.

"And the watchword?" demanded Mr. Maxwell.

"Do right and interfere not!" replied the burglar's confederate, with an assumption of dignity, and strode out of the office.

"Do right and interfere not!" joyfully exclaimed Mr. Maxwell, through the telephone. "And now you'll leave my premises, Mr. Odell, won't you? And as for my wife—"

"Have no fear, Mr. Maxwell," replied the man at the other end, "you have to deal with a burglar and a gentleman."

Mr. Maxwell at once left his office for the station, and, entering a train, was taken rapidly to his residence. The nearer he approached, the keener his fear of a catastrophe became. But as he stopped at the entrance, he noticed nothing out of the way. He sprang up the steps, and admitted himself with his latch-key. Then he hastened to the pretty boudoir of his prettier wife. She was quietly reading. "How you must have suffered, my angel!" he cried, and a sob shook his voice.

The young wife looked up, astonished. "Suffered? I?"

"That burglar, you know—it must have been awful. Oh, you poor darling!"

"Why, George, dear, what is the matter? You speak in riddles!"

"But why—didn't he gag you?" he asked.

"Now, my dear George, I wish you would talk sense! What do you mean?"

After Mr. Maxwell had finished the recital of his experience, he asked:

"Wasn't there somebody here using my telephone?"

"Why, yes there was," replied Mrs. Maxwell, "a young and well-dressed man came in, introduced himself to me as Mr. Odell, a stockbroker and business friend of yours, and requested permission to make use of your private telephone to send you a most important message on business. Of course I gave him permission. He used the telephone but a short time, and then came back into the room, thanked me for the favor I had done him, and went away, saying that the telephone was a most useful and admirable invention—it facilitated business so much."

"And that was all?" queried Mr. Maxwell. "He didn't gag you and the servants? He was alone, and did not offer violence to you?"

"Not at all. He was most polite and gentlemanly, quite as much as you are at this moment, George."

"By Jupiter!" exclaimed Maxwell, with a wild outburst: "how cleverly I've been sold—tricked by telephone! Excuse me, my dear, but I must leave you for a short time. I'll drive over and interview the police."

And that's what he did; but in spite of all the efforts of the detectives, nothing more was heard of the £1,000, or of Mr. Thomas Odell and his confederate.

In a Nutshell.

Like the sun, the modern gas fire warms solid objects—such as the furniture of a room or its occupants—without appreciably raising the temperature of the intervening air. At the same time the products of combustion in their passage up the chimney flue keep the atmosphere in healthy motion.

That is gas fire science and gas fire hygiene in a nutshell.

Fish That Cannot Swim.

It sounds strange to say that there are fish which cannot swim! Yet it is a fact.

A Brazilian fish called the maltha is one of these species of fish. It can only crawl or walk or hop. It has a long, upturned snout, and resembles, to an extent, a toad. The anterior fins of the maltha are quite small, and are not able to act on the water. They only move backward and forward, and are, in reality, thin paws, which are of no service for swimming, as are the fins of other fishes.

The star-fish, which can be seen at our seaside resorts among the rocks or on the shore, is another fish unable to perform the aquatic art. It can walk and crawl, whoever, as you doubtless have observed.

Another fish, which, although unable to swim, does not get drowned, is the sea-horse. It is a most peculiar-shaped inhabitant of the sea, and, unlike most non-swimmers, loves the water!

Then, although not strictly fish, it is interesting to note that such crustaceans as crabs, lobsters, crayfish, shrimps, etc., which live in the sea, cannot swim.

But the wonder is that they have not tried to emulate their briny brothers and sea-sifters which constantly pass them by.

Hard to Believe It Was Possible, Says Merchant

St. John's Man Got the Surprise
Of His Life By Taking Tanlac.

"It is hard to believe any medicine could do any one the good Tanlac has done," said George E. Squires, a merchant, who resides at 52 New Gower Street, St. John's, Newfoundland, a few days ago. Mr. Squires is an ex-soldier of the world war, and saw three and a half years of valiant service overseas. Continuing, he said:

"For over a year I nearly died with indigestion. I could not eat the least thing without it scouring on my stomach and I would bleed terribly, and would have the worst sort of pains. I would have the headache so bad it seemed like my head would split, and I became so dizzy at times I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. I had a pain in the small of my back nearly all the time, and also had the rheumatism nearly all over my body, and especially had in my limbs, which would swell something awful, and my knee joints were so stiff and hurt me so I could hardly get up and down. I became very weak and felt tired and run down all the time. I was so nervous I could sleep but very little and would get up in the morning completely fatigued."

"I had tried a lot of different kinds of treatments and medicines, but none of them did me any good. As I had read so much about Tanlac and several of my friends told me of the benefit they had received by taking Tanlac, I decided to try it, and I must say I got the surprise of my life. I had not finished the first bottle when I began to improve and I am now on my fourth bottle and feel 100 per cent better. I am hungry all the time and eat anything I want and never have the least sign of indigestion. I never have the headache or those dizzy spells and the rheumatism has entirely disappeared, and I never have a pain of any kind. My nerves are steady now and I sleep like a log and get up in the mornings always feeling good. I am strong for Tanlac and am always saying a good word for it."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative; in Harbor Buffett, by Theos Wakeley & Sons; in Eglarville, by James Murphy & Son; and in Topsail, by J. K. Bursell.

Switzerland has no coal of her own, and not even any peat or lignite. The Swiss burn wood, and drive most of their factories by electric power produced from waterfalls.

Norway is another coalless country; and Sweden has only quite lately discovered that she has good supplies. As in Switzerland, so in Scandinavia, wood is the usual fuel, while the towns and villages are electrically lighted by water-power.

The only other European country which has practically no coal-mines of her own is Holland, and during the war she was forced to rely mainly upon peat.

The principal reason why Argentine railway shares have slumped so badly during the war is that this huge country has always depended upon imported coal, and of late the companies have been paying £6 a ton for coal from the United States.

The best story told by Major Rogan, the veteran bandmaster of the British Army, who is relinquishing his office as Director of Music in the Coldstream Guards, concerns a music-hall manager of the old school who once entered the place during a band rehearsal. Soft music was being played and the trombone player was not required.

"Why ain't that chap playing?" demanded the manager. "Well, they are playing pizzicato, you see," was the explanation volunteered.

"I don't care a hang what they're playing," roared the irate one. "Tell him if he cannot play pizzicato or any other dashed tune that is put in front of him, he's to get out of my band."

Countries Without Coal.

Nearly every express train in Italy was cut off on August 1st last. The reason is that Italy has not a single coal-mine in all her territory.

During the war Italians have been paying up to £20 a ton for imported coal. Previously they got their coal from Germany or England at a cost of about £4 a ton.

Switzerland has no coal of her own, and not even any peat or lignite. The Swiss burn wood, and drive most of their factories by electric power produced from waterfalls.

Norway is another coalless country; and Sweden has only quite lately discovered that she has good supplies. As in Switzerland, so in Scandinavia, wood is the usual fuel, while the towns and villages are electrically lighted by water-power.

Tricked by Telephone.

By H. P. LEGGETT, in "Spare Moments."
Rogues and rascals are among the first to avail themselves of the latest inventions. This was well demonstrated in the Maxwell case.

housemaid, and your wife are lying here bound and gagged. The coachman has been disposed of. Some bundles of rags soaked in petroleum have been judiciously distributed about the house ready to be ignited."

"You scoundrel!" shouted the agonized husband, in an excess of emotion. "Don't excite yourself. Now, sir, here is my proposal. If you disappear from the telephone without according to it, I shall set fire to the house. It's no use applying to the police, for we'd be too quick for them. You will see, Mr. Maxwell, that you are utterly in my power. The only sensible thing you can do is to listen to my proposal, and to agree to it."

"Oh, I wish I had my hand at your throat, you villain!" shouted the other, shaking with rage.

"But you know you haven't, so what's the use of talking that way? Let us talk business instead. I need a loan of £1,000—cash. I need it at once. If you are inclined to lend me that sum without guarantee, I shall leave your house with my men in exactly the same condition in which I found it."

"You are a cold-blooded wretch!" groaned Maxwell. "And I don't think I have that much money in cash in the office safe."

"You'll force me to commit an atrocious deed," came the remorseless reply.

"All right, then—yes, I'll pay; but to whom?"

"It is now 5.15 exactly. At this moment my confederate has entered your office in Old Broad Street to receive the money. You will pay him, and he will tell you the watchword agreed to between us, which you must telephone to me at once!"

Mr. Maxwell turned round. A stranger of pleasant mien, dressed in

Sir Reginald Wingate.

Field-Marshal Viscount Allenby is to be High Commissioner for Egypt, where he has been acting as Special High Commissioner since March last. The peculiar appropriateness of this appointment at the present time is self-evident. Lord Allenby's services and qualifications need no emphasis. But it is fitting also to recall the services of the distinguished soldier and administrator who gives place to him at Cairo. General Sir Reginald Wingate has had more than thirty years of unbroken service in Egypt and the Sudan. His name will always be associated with his great Governor-Generalship of the Sudan (1899-1916), which he took over from Lord Kitchener when the latter was transferred to South Africa. He is as much the maker of the modern Sudan as Lord Cromer was of modern Egypt. His military achievement, which finally disposed of Mahdism and, at a later stage, of the formidable All Dinar, were equalled by his success as an administrator. We owe it mainly to his constant energy and keen interest in the development of the country, as well as to his wise and sympathetic handling of the native population, that the Sudan—once regarded as a barbarous and worthless wilderness—is now a peaceful and progressive country with a bright future.

Wingate left the Sudan with great reluctance and under strong pressure from the then Foreign Secretary Viscount Grey, to take over the post of High Commissioner for Egypt. At Cairo he devoted himself with characteristic energy and complete success to mobilizing the resources of Egypt for the war, and especially for the Palestine campaign. Lord Allenby has borne eloquent tribute to the loyal support and invaluable assistance constantly given him by the High Commissioner at Cairo. This was all the more to Wingate's credit, as the internal condition of Egypt was calculated to give him great anxiety, and might well have distracted his attention from the supreme requirements of the military situation. The war with Turkey and the general unsettlement in the Moslem world had given a fresh impetus to the latent Nationalist agitation. Indeed, during the whole of Wingate's time at Cairo signs of impending trouble were many, though the actual outbreak of last spring came after he had been called to England to confer with the Government. Upon his handling of the difficult internal situation which he found in Egypt it is too early to pass judgment, though it is certain that the recent disorders were due to causes operative long before his term of office, and aggravated during that term by external influences not under his control. We trust that when a period of well-earned rest shall have restored his naturally strong constitution to full vigour, his great abilities and exceptional experience will not go unutilized.—The Times.

WINDS.

The wind of spring is joyous, as pleasantly it whiffs its ghostly, fleet, it never does annoy as wailing notes. It seems to bring a rumor of blue and crystal seas; and with buoyant humor it swishes through the trees. We never hear it screaming, as though with stomach ache; it helps us in our dreaming, and soothes us when we wake. The sizzling wind of summer blows morals galley west; and clergyman and plumber denounce it, with the rest. Tumultuous and torrid, it goes its burning way, and makes us think up horrid and beastly things to say. The waxy wind of winter has little helpful use; evangelist and printer berate it like the dence. It numbs our nerves and senses as from the north it skirts; it adds to our expenses, and makes us soak our lids. But oh, the wind of autumn! It seems to sigh, my friends, of woe that has no bottom, of pain that never ends. It wails around my cottage, what time the daylight dies, when I am tired of swatting, and chasing of the flies. Now hush! now slowly, it whispers overhead; there's something so unholy, so weird, so full of dread. It sighs, in haunted crannies, of long dead men and maids, of old forgotten grannies, who walked the earth as shades.

Least Resistance.

A vast and determined-looking woman wore a very large hat one evening at the theatre.

"Madam," said the attendant, politely, "I must request you to remove your hat. It is annoying the gentleman behind you."

The massive lady turned and haughtily surveyed the complainant. "Do you mean that little weedy, undersized creature?" she asked.

"This gentleman behind you," the attendant corrected her.

The lady settled herself down in her place. "You will find it easier and much more pleasant," she said, decisively, "to remove him!"

Dredging Within the One Hundred Fathom Line.

(By Bonnycastle Dale, in October Rod and Gun.)

We were off the lonely and isolated island called Forester, due north west of the big Queen Charlotte group in the Pacific. This is the most southerly of the group of islands lying just north of British Columbia. There was much confusion hereabouts. The Alaska Award line was being pushed north rapidly—and too far west we all thought for Canada's good. All the coast was flapping along under tattered and mildewed canvas, in homemade craft; of divers and weird shapes—and we felt and knew we would be "good picking" for any of these gentry—just a naturalist and a boy, unarmed at that. So I bought, for specimen work—and the pot work, a Winchester Special, using .22 Special Long; and hung it on the wall of the shack—we went for a walk—so evidently did someone else for when we returned the rifle had walked off too. We at once tracked and traced a passer by and off we set for the nearest "I-la-hie" or "summer grounds" of a wandering fishing tribe. One member I knew slightly and it had been he who had passed my shack.

"I lost rifle this morning—stolen. It is not laid down by twelve I bring police in," I told him. I knew they were in great fear of the deep sea patrol that was hunting some desperadoes along this coast—still he could have popped us both over and it is a question if our bodies would ever have been found—still the bluff worked, and he was at my shack almost as soon as we were.
"What side you look?" I asked him in Chinook, still pretending to find a lost rifle.
"O-koke" ("this" he answered), then I knew it was on the other and started to look.
"Wake Kioshe" ("no good," he said after a long hunt and changed sides. Pretty soon he grunted in surprise and I went over; and there was the innocent little rifle hiding there in the ferns. I praised him for "finding" it, told him I would put a man in Skookum House (jail) next thing I lost. Then he slyly asked me, "If I missed anything else." "No," I told him and off he slouched.
Laddie, Jr., a short time after, went over to the pile of boxes of shells—too light—all emptied and put carefully back in place. We had bought a few hundred, as we kill our geese and brant with the rifle; and Tzum, as he was called—had Trumed the whole pile.

"Here comes the Nan-Itah!" said Laddie, Jr., and the new boat we had hired came puffing into the wee harbor. Translated she is "To-Seek"—I hope she does. All the boats we had used before seemed to just glide from the arrival to "Pay-me-Now" from the Jap, or Dane or Swede skipper. I guess they had had uncertain lessees before, as they always looked relieved when I promptly paid them. The Captain belonged to the "I can do it" tribe I think, as he always used these words. I explained several times that we just wanted to dredge for a few days in fifty fathoms and he always figured—"One day ban twenty-five"—"two ban two twenty-five," and so on and so on. He couldn't get far away from that daily price of his Seeker.
So behold, Laddie and I and "Ban" as the boy called him and "Chew-it-all" as Laddie called the other to-bacco devouring individual. He was actually polite, always pushing me carefully aside so that he might spit to leeward.
"I ban starting!" said the Norseman "Ting-a-ling" goes the bell—no start.
"Ole-le! Ole-le!" he yelled.
"You stay mit the engine," and off we puffed.
Now it needed both the men to get our big heavy drag-purse over, a net bag twenty by ten; with a ten by two iron frame open mouth. A "splash!" down she sinks and we are at last really dredging again. I just want to remark that dear as the opening day of shooting or fishing is to the devotee of gun and rod, so is the first appearance of the dredge above water on our first day to us.
There was a dull oily roll in from the restless Pacific, just enough to make one sleepy this bright young summer day, the soft coal smoke blew all about us and half drowsed us too, when "bump!" went the "gate" far below and "Ollie" rushed up and back. "She got stuck!" he yelled. Away he darted like a madman, put the engine backing against the run of the tide and soon the big purse mouth rode the boulder and on we went—at about a mile an hour gait.
"Stop!" signalled the Captain—and the drag rope was put on to the winch and up came the purse—belly-ing out behind—now the men seized the slack and hauled out—and we fell on our knees—examining. Evidently we had struck a mass of great polyps and gone right through their peaceful sea villa and scooped them all. There was a mass of sea pumpkins as big as toy balloons, almost transparent and coloured as fantastically as the lanterns about a Chinese Joss-house, great trembling masses of green and gold and purple and wondrous vari-coloured jelly—with their stomachs and interior departments plainly in view of their neighbours. You would wonder how they eat and breathe. What a sight of magnificence they must be in their deep homes when I tell you that some are illuminated by a wonderful phosphorescence and others—I suppose—use the Gen. Seabottom Electric Light Co.'s radiance supplied away down there by countless millions of diatoms; each golden blue in its glow.

"Look out—bite," warned Ollie.
The lad was taking out a green and white beauty of a well shaped fish. "Rat-fish," again. "Lookout!" warned the Swede. I tripped the jaw- opener. No wonder they called it Rat-fish. Its teeth were fully an inch long; and wide white cutting chisels they were. We were long on Ratfish, must have had a thousand and so we dumped them forthwith.
"Keep him!" both men burst out when I pushed many flapping Red Rock fish into the sea.
"Sell him—Prince Rupert," they told me—and I guess, we confirmed their opinion of our madness when sea bass and cod, herring and outicans, skate and flounder, halibut and rare mackerel followed suit—and we both loudly exulted over a strange thing called a Pommino, or dollar fish and speedily pictured the small, round fat fish.
"Here's a devil-fish," squealed the boy. "Oh I wish we had that fellow who wrote about them eating men, here, we'd make him eat this, and he lifted out of the foot deep mess of squirming Marine Zoology—an octopus, a nice five foot long bunch of eight grisly arms hung down like so much gristle from the boy's landing net, the Nature Fakirs stretch the arms wide out and call this a "ten-foot-terror-of-the-sea." This one weighed fifty pounds.
"I want him," said Ollie, appearing with a big butcher knife, so we handed it over and he cut off the eight tentacles and it appeared at dinner that day—just a tasteless mass much like the thicker muscles of an oyster or clam—simply not worth eating.
"Sharks," cried the boy, a pair evidently of little fellows, delicately gray as Milady's gloves, all fanned in wondrous manner from gillarch to tail, "snappy little brutes," quoth the lad, as one neatly engulfed a too inquisitive finger.
"Keep it in your own mouth now," he says I told him.
"Goot many things!" said Ollie as we lifted out a mass of most excellent shrimps. I found three kinds here and we got a true shrimp later, the first three were prawns.
"Say!" look at the five knitting needles! called Laddie Jr., as he picked up a group of polyps—each one almost forty inches long—just like a bone needle—Yes! white animal bone; and on the top a head as big as your finger and all luminous at night. "I'll bet they have a regular illuminated field of growing wheat down there when all the knitting needles are in position—and just think of a fish swimming through this phosphorescent mass down there and then all waving away as it passes. Oh! Joy," said Laddie. "And these are the things the Chinks eat," he said as he pulled out a ladle net full of sea cucumber, these long jelly-like, grisly things were most beautifully coloured—but excuse me from eating them please—I once had "bird nest soup" and sea cucumber, and pressed city duck served in a Chinese restaurant—and I guess they are there yet as I made a nice full meal of plain crackers. Thank you very kindly.
I guess they didn't name this one," said the boy as he picked up a thing that looked like a Japanese puzzle made out of bone—another polyp, a regular beautiful little bone basket, a real embroidery of bone.
The ooze, as you might call it of that first drug was a thing of wonder; we had animals so like sea weeds that we could not tell them apart—and sea weeds so like animals that no man may discover the dividing line—each a thing of wondrous beauty set away down where no man's eye should see it—What is this scheme of things we call Life, anyway?
Day after day, hour after hour, so long as we could afford that "one-day-but-twenty-five-dollar-boat" we took of the treasures of the deep—and re-deposited them to the amusement of the wondering Norsemen. We could not have kept the perishable eatable part had we wished to do so.
"Throw him all out," lamented the loquacious Ollie—as net full after net full was carefully liberated. We were getting into deeper water now and odd anemones and rare sea whips and strange jelly like masses came in hourly—and at times dark strange shapes devoured them as soon as we liberated them, ground or basking sharks and some odd doted tailed sharks. Yes! and the big mouthed cod were not averse to filling their stomachs with their late fellow captives.
"Whoop!" screamed the boy once

"Nothing Too Good For Our Men"

This cry of the leaders of great ventures into the frozen zones has sent our heroes into the white fastnesses with the confidence that wins, borne out of being well outfitted.

JAEGER wear has been chosen for over a quarter of a century as the only dependable protection for those exploiters of courage who race for honour to the Poles, when every life is valuable.

No time to risk experimenting with unknown brands. This is a TEST for the BEST.

It is certain that a great measure of the success of these expeditions must have been due to the reliability of the JAEGER products worn.

To-day the ordinary man may obtain in JAEGER everyday under and outer wear the same materials and scientific construction of garments that sustained the men in these historical expeditions.

JAEGER, cheaper than other brands, because as a great black shape suddenly rose near the dragging rope of the net astern, and a killer whale reared for a moment in sight. Once we ran into a stream of passing salmon with their attendant sea lions, long dim shapes that swam just outside the school—and ate one every time they got hungry enough. We took one wolf-seal, he snapped and rolled and displayed his terrible mouth and crunched to fragments every mussel or giant cockle shell which the boy threw into his awful maw; he was fully six feet of weird sea life. We got tons of the rarest sea weeds, but alas! we were not preserving, only picturing.

We lived like lords on any and all the known delicacies of the sea, but most carefully refused to serve any unknown bit of horribleness. At times, in the shallows, we took rare abalone and moonfish. These last were big shellfish as big as base-balls.
They can excite enough stick-emit to make any sea glue manufacturer die of envy—and they roll up and fashion out a nest that exactly resemble gray felt hats with the crown cut out.
At nights when we slept in the man nests made by those Norsemen, too short where they were long and too narrow where they were wide. I used to poke my head out for air, and all the tragedy of the sea was enacted in the moonlit waters down beside me—it seemed as if each chap at the next smaller one with intense energy—and they literally smacked their lips over it. When one big ground shark came flapping slowly along past the little Nan-fish, and rolled and fixed me with its bright green little eye I withdrew in haste—you see I had not lost any sharks.

More Heat on Less Fuel.

Many thousands of users in City, Town and Country have learned from natural experience that the Caloric, the Original Patented Pipeless Furnace, heats
 the homes better than they were ever heated before, in all kinds of weather. Also that it save one-third to one-half the Coke, Coal and Wood. If you want real winter comfort, if you want to turn your houses into homes, and if at the same time you want to cut your heating expenses to practically one-half, install a Caloric. The cost of installation and maintenance, in money and labor, is much less than the number of stoves required to heat the same space. Thousands of Caloric users have paid the first cost of their furnace through the saving of fuel. It can be installed as quickly in the old houses as in the new, frequently in a day, because it has but one register, and requires no pipes in floors or walls.
 More than fifty thousand Calorics are giving satisfactory and economical service in all types of homes, up to eighteen rooms in size, as well as in churches,
 stores, factories and other buildings.

Read the following testimonial from one of our customers:—

St. John's, Newfoundland,

I have installed the Caloric Pipeless Furnace in my home (it is also the first Caloric in Newfoundland) and find it to give all the satisfaction claimed by its manufacturers. I would therefore recommend it to anyone that wants the most perfect system of heating by the circulation of warm, moist air through one register.

FISHERMEN!

This is the great Fishkiller with which the Norwegians catch such large quantities of fish. Place a sinker with a swivel on each end about one fathom above the hook, which spins like a minnow, and the fish bite ravenously.

JUST TRY IT.
