CHAPTER V.

"If you are ill after this, Cousin Vane," she heard Stuart say, "I shall never forgive myself. The heat is terrific, you know. Are you quite sure you can manage it?"

"Quite," answered the woman's voice. "I want to see this poor doggie; besides, you tell me it is just as far back again as round this way."

"Just as far. Well, here we are! Poor Sir Charles, I hope the old fellow is better."

The two figures came into sight. They were about six yards from Margery, and were walking slowly. She could see the delicate blue drapery, the slender gauntleted hand, though she did not raise her eyes; and she drew back into her corner with a nervous dread such as she had never felt hitherto.

Mr. Crosbie led his cousin to a small outhouse immediately facing the kitchen door, and was about to open the door, when, looking round, he saw Margery. His face flushed for an instant; then, before his cousin could perceive it, his embarrassment was gone.

"There, Vane," he said, easily, opening the door and pointing to a large collic lying on a heap of clear straw. "Don't be afraid; he won't hurt you. Poor Sir Charles—poor old fellow!" He stooped and took up a bandaged paw. "I shall have you about in a day or two. He wants some fresh water. Margery—he left his cousin's side a little, and looked straight at the girl sitting up in the corner—'Margery, will you kindly ask one of the maids to bring me some water for Sir Charles?'"

Margery let down her book without a word, went indoors, brought a jug, then walked to the well a little to the left, and having filled the jug, approached him.

"Thank you. Why a trouble, Margery?" said Stuart, courteously. "How is your mother to-day?"

"She is no better, Mr. Stuart, thank you," returned Margery, in her clear, refined voice. "I am waiting for some things madame is kindly going to send her."

Vane Charteris had turned at the first sound of the girl's voice, and she was almost alarmed at the beauty of the face before her. Beside the golden glory of that hair, the depths of pathetic splendor in those eyes, the pale transparency of that skin, her own prettiness simply faded away. She noted the grace and ease with which Margery moved, and immediately conceived a violent dislike to this village girl.

"Vane, let me present to you one of my old playfellows—Margery Daw. You were wanting some one to point out all the beauties of Hurstley. I am sure no one could do that half so well as Margery."

Miss Charteris bent her head and smiled at her cousin.

"Many thanks, Stuart; but you forget we have planned to discover the mysteries of the country together without any assistance—a spice of adventure is always charming."

Margery turned away, with a bow to Stuart—she did not speak, or look at his companion—and she overheard Miss Charteris say, with a scornful laugh, as she walked back to her seat: "Dear Cousin Stuart, you should be more merciful; that girl's hair is so painfully red, it makes me quite uncomfortable in this heat."

Margery did not hear the reply—her lips were quivering and her hands trembling with mortification—and when she looked up again, the housekeeper was handing her a basket, and the cousins were gone.

"Madame sends your mother some beet tea, a bottle of brandy, and some fruit and jelly," said the housekeeper, closing the basket lid. "It is rather heavy; and mind you, carry it carefully. Can you manage it?"

"Yes," said Margery, steadily. "Thank you; I am much obliged."

She turned with her heavy load and walked across the courtyard, her heart no lighter than her basket.

That lovely looking stranger had made fun of her—fun—and to Mr. Stuart! Perhaps he had laughed, too. The thought was too painful. And was she not a slight? Look at her old pink gown, well washed and mended, her clumsy boots, her sunburned hands. The memory of that dainty figure looking like a fairy in her delicate garments rose to her mind, and her head drooped. Yes, she was a common village girl—madame treated her as such; and now Mr. Stuart would turn, too. Oh, why could she not tear aside the veil of mystery and know what she really was? Could that face treasured in her locket be only the face of a maid, or did her heart speak truly when it called that mother madame's equal?

Margery was pained and troubled as she took her way along the paddock—pained not so much at the woman's words as at the thought that the man had re-echoed them and deemed her stupid and plain. She had grown to look on Stuart Crosbie as something bright and delightful in her life. They had played together as children, and the memory of that friendship was the strongest link in the chain that held him as her hero. When he was away, Stuart had written once or twice to Margery, sending her views of the places he visited, and giving her long chatty accounts of his travels. When he came home, they renewed their intimacy; there was not a shadow of surprise or fear in Margery's mind when the young squire came so frequently to see her.

She had no suspicion that this friendship would annoy his mother or was in any way strange or uncommon. She liked Stuart Crosbie; she could talk to him of her studies, her pursuits—a sealed book in her home—and gradually grew to welcome him as a companion with whom she could converse easily and naturally, and as a friend who would never fail her. Mrs. Morris was too great an invalid to devote much thought to the girl's amusements, nor would she have been greatly troubled had she known how intimate the young squire and Margery had become; so the girl had had no constraint put upon her; she met, walked, and chatted with Stuart Crosbie as freely as she liked, and no cloud had dawned on her happy life till today.

The sight of that other girl, so different from herself, had brought a strange, sharp pang, but that was lost in the pain she endured when she thought that Stuart had agreed with the cruel remark, and that his friendship was gone forever. She wended her way along the paddock, and was turning through the gate to enter the gardeners' path again, when a hand was stretched out from beside her, took the basket from her, and, putting a finger under her chin, raised her head from its drooping position.

"Well?" said Stuart, quietly.

"Give me my basket, please, Mr. Stuart," Margery murmured, hurriedly, a crimson wave of color dyeing her cheeks.

"What for?" asked the young man, calmly.

"I must get home. I am very late as it is."

"Well, why don't you go?" Stuart inquired, watching the color fade from her cheeks.

"I cannot go without my basket," Margery answered, trying to be at her ease. "Please give it to me, Mr. Stuart."

"No," he answered, briefly.

"Then I must go without it!" she exclaimed, and, suiting the action to the word, she began to move down the path.

Stuart followed at once, and put a detaining hand on her arm.

"Here is your basket, Margery. I was only teasing you. What a time you have been! I have been waiting for you for the last five minutes." Margery's heart grew lighter again.

"You might have been better employed," she returned, with the quaint sharpness Stuart always admired. "But, if you have time to waste, I have not. Listen! There—it is striking six, and mother will wonder what has become of me."

"Yes, that is six," observed Mr. Crosbie, listening to the clock chiming from the castle. "You will get home by seven, Margery, if you start at once. Not that way!"—as she turned again down the path. "This is nearly half a mile nearer." He pushed open the gate and motioned her into the paddock again. "Now," he continued, slinging the basket on his arm, and turning beside her across the field, "why are you cross with me, Miss Margery?"

"I am not cross with you," Margery answered, hurriedly.

"Not now, perhaps; but you were," Margery was silent.

"What was it, Margery?" he asked, gently.

"I heard what that lady said about me just now," she replied, after a pause; "and—and—"

"You are angry with me. That is hardly fair—rough on an old friend, you know."

"I thought you might have—"

She stopped.

Knowledge

They list for me the things I cannot know:
Whence came the world? What hand runs out the light
Of yonder stars? How could a God of Right
Ordain for earth an ebbless tide of woes?
Their word is true; I would not scorn their doubt,
Who press their questions of the how and why.
But this I know: that from the star-strewn sky
There comes to me a peace that puts to rout
All brooding thoughts of dread, abiding death;
And too I know, with every fragrant dawn,
That Life is Lord; that, with the winter gone,
There cometh Spring, a great, reviving breath.
It is enough that life means this to me:
What death shall mean, some sunny morn shall see.

DO WE WANT A NEW CALENDAR?

We have entered upon another year with our old and unreformed calendar. Proposals for its simplification have often been made; but it remains complicated and erratic.

Last year we had five Fridays in February—a thing which, though it had not happened previously for forty years, will happen again after an interval of twenty-eight years. Yet normally it is only twenty-eight years before any one day of the week recurs as leap year day.

Why, then the long interval of forty years since February 29th previously fell on a Friday? Because, under the Gregorian correction to the calendar, three leap years are dropped in four hundred years at three successive century years, and because in the last interval a "double 0" year (1900) intervened.

Working for Nothing.
Some countries still use the Julian calendar, and consequently they make every fourth year a leap year. It follows that by their system each week day has its turn as leap year day once every twenty-eight years.

Another anomaly is that in a leap year persons who are paid monthly or quarterly have to give a day's work for nothing. If the salary is $1,000 a year, this means a loss to the worker of $2 1/2. The State, in particular, gains largely through this peculiarity. Pay is also affected by the calendar in a different manner. We sometimes have fifty-three Saturdays in a year, and consequently most workers receive an extra week's pay in it. This makes a great difference to big corporations, as well as to the State. Old-age pensioners, too, get an extra week's money.

Coincidence and Prophecy.
On the other hand, millions of people have to pay fifty-three premiums on policies in such a year—an enormous gain to the great industrial insurance offices, which do not suffer a corresponding loss either in the preceding or the following year.

A further peculiarity of the calendar is that occasionally two great anniversaries of the Church fall on the same day. Thus, in 1921 the Annunciation was on Good Friday, and it will be again in 1932. This coincidence is generally supposed to be referred to in the prophecy—

"When our Lord shall lie in our Lady's lap England will meet with a strange mishap."

Some authorities, however, consider that the coincidence meant is that between the Annunciation and Easter Day, as in 1894. Easter in that year fell on March 26th, the Feast of the Annunciation.

In connection with miscellaneous anniversaries, also, there are many curiosities. Some people, for instance, are unable to reconcile the date of a birth with some other date. This may be due to failure to allow for the difference between our former calendar and the present calendar.

A Fixed Date for Easter.
Let us take a single illustration. The anniversary of George III's birth is given as June 4th whereas in many books he is said to have been born on May 24th, 1738. So, in fact, he was. But when the calendar was altered in 1753 birthdays of all living persons were post-dated by eleven days as far as the law was concerned. After 1753, therefore, George III's birthday was celebrated on June 4th.

The question of a fixed date for Easter has often been raised. The variations in the date of Easter cause a great deal more inconvenience and disorganization in the community than is generally realized. School, university, and law terms have to be altered in accordance with the change in the date of Easter, while the date of Whitsun and the question of holidays also depend upon it.

Firemen's Services Appreciated

C. H. Hutchings, Esq.,
Inspector General Constabulary.

Dear Sir.—The Executive Board of the Methodist College Board of Governors has asked me to write you, extending the thanks and admiration which is felt by all the members of the Board in regard to the work performed by your fire companies on Monday evening last, when the fire occurred which destroyed the Methodist College Building.

The high state of efficiency and discipline which your force exhibited is greatly admired and appreciated by the Executive Board. I am instructed to hand you the enclosed cheque for one hundred dollars ($100.00) to be used as you deem fit as a recognition of the efficient services which your firemen rendered in this connection.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) R. F. HORWOOD,
Secretary.

INSPECTOR GENERAL'S REPLY.
R. F. Horwood, Esq.,
Secretary Methodist College Board of Governors.

Dear Sir.—I am to-day in receipt of yours of the 21st inst., enclosing cheque for $100.00, in recognition of the services performed by the members of the Fire Department at the Methodist College Fire on Monday evening last. I am sure every member will appreciate, as I do, your very complimentary references to their work, and regret that our efforts could not prevent the destruction of such a valuable edifice.

It is a very great personal pleasure to me to know that the efficiency and discipline of the members under my command is so highly appreciated. Knowing as I do the nature of their work, and the unselfish manner in which it is undertaken, often under exceptional hardships as particularly demonstrated at this and the recent South Side fire, I deem it a very high honour to be their chief officer.

Your cheque will be passed over to the men to be apportioned in the usual manner. Thanking you for this very liberal recognition, and expressing the hope that your valuable services in the interest of education will not be as seriously hampered as at first appeared, I am

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) C. H. HUTCHINGS,
Inspector General Constabulary.

Large Audiences Delighted With Artistes

THE END OF THE TRAIL A FASCINATING DRAMA.

Jacobson and Evans registered new triumphs last night. Their singing and musical acts won the hearty approval of the large audiences that attended the Majestic Theatre. Each and every item was applauded vigorously, and we doubt if at any time since the beginning of movies in this city, that two Artistes at any one particular time, won such popular approval as Jacobson and Evans, last night. The items "I Don't Care What You Used to Be", "Smilin' Thru", "In The Papers", "My Kid", and the combination of popular Airs, were extremely good and clever, and it is said the Artistes deserve the reception accorded them.

Those who saw "The End Of The Trail" in which Wm. Faroum is the Star, will remember it. Whilst the story has a semi-religious touch, in as much as a Priest and Nun are playing principal roles, the Trading Post of the rugged North is the location of the heavy plot that finds its way through the entire story.

In addition to this is a very humorous comedy "The Riding School" which evoked continuous laughter. To-night the same bill is repeated, when those who could not attend last night, should make it a point to do so to-night. A special word is given for

YET ANOTHER USE FOR MOTHERS.

Is there anything in all the world so beautifully vital as youth?

Youth with all its wild, gay and abundant, overflowing animal life, its carefree abandon!

Playing, running, leaping, dancing, singing for the joy of being alive!

The trenchant phrase of the poet cry: "Que je suis grande, and yet they never apostrophize being moment with the poet's plaint, "Stay awhile, you are beautiful!"

They Can't Slip It Slowly.

They are so prodigal of their youth, young folks. Life, to the young, is to be drained at a draught, would they ever think to enhance life by sipping it slowly. Life is all before them. It is like the alibi of the traveller who approaches lofty mountain whose summit he believes in a rosy mist. He climbed to the top to explore those airy, alluring heights, but when at the scaled peak the rosy mist disappeared and looking about he glowing below him in the low, whose beauty he had never known.

As Well They Cannot See.

Is better so, of course, better that better places on the hilltop should be shrouded in a rosy mist from the chief cause of the present inflated prices.

There is nothing to prevent a firm of brokers with the necessary "resources" from going to the tea sales and buying the great majority of the tea offered for sale by the simple process of out-bidding every other broker.

This process, which is actually in operation, raises the price of tea to the public, compels those who want tea to buy it afterwards from the brokers, whose percentage remuneration (½ per cent. on the value) depends on the selling price of the tea.

—Daily Mail.

Tea Too Dear

PENCE ABOVE THE PROPER VALUE.

Since the reduction of the tea last spring by 4d. a lb., tea is on an average 6d. per lb. dearer than it was in May last. Except for the period during the war, it is 2d. per lb. dearer than at any time during the past twenty years.

The advance is not due to any increase in the cost of production or transport, nor can it be accounted for by shortage of supplies, which is ample. In the last six months 12,000,000 lbs. more tea have been sold in this country than last year.

The advance in price is due entirely to operations in the market at Mincing-lane, London, which have created a fictitious value.

"Overbuying" By Brokers.

The opinion of leading tea merchants in the country—the heads of firms whose names are household words—was sought by a representative of the Daily Mail. Their unanimous verdict was that the resale price of tea has been artificially raised at least 5d. per lb. to its proper value. That means the housewives of this country pay an enormous addition to the cost of tea, since Britain consumes about 1,000 lbs. of tea a week.

In recent years it has become a fad among buying tea brokers to purchase tea at the London exchange on behalf of retailers—to "buy tea on their own account in relation to what they buy on their own practice of 'buying over' is

White Collars in Russia

It may seem a far cry from government operation of industry, which is termed public ownership in this country, and government operation of industry, which is called communism in Russia—and yet in principle it is the same thing. In Russia they have gone a step farther than we have in Canada in applying the theory that the state can do better for the people than the people can do for themselves. And what is the result? Writing in The Saturday Evening Post, Isaac F. Marcossou, who has been investigating conditions in the land of Bolshevism, refers to "the curious sensation inspired by being in a country where everything is either government controlled or operated." He continues:

In a preceding article I showed how nationalization of industry, with its lack of competition and attendant paralysis of individual initiative, has brought about almost complete stagnation. The same applies to hotels and public utilities. If service is bad, or if the guest or passenger is injured, there is no recourse, either in complaint or damage. It is literally a case of the public be damned.

In the city of Moscow there are more government officials and employees than workers of all other classes. The government pays its own employees and sets the wage standard of the others. The result is that of the workers not employed by the government more than two-thirds are unemployed because private industry cannot afford to pay government wages for the amount of work the workers are willing to do. A price of 30 cents for washing a collar is given as indicative; little wonder, as Mr. Marcossou points out, there are so few white collars.

The theory of state service is a lovely one, but the results in practice are far from satisfying.

Sheer stockings of cinnamon color are worn with buckle-trimmed slippers of rosewood satin.

Sea Water to Medicine

"The Curative Properties of Sea-Water" was the subject of a paper by Dr. Thomas E. Lawson which was read at the London College of Physiology.

After pointing out that all animal life originated in the sea, Dr. Lawson said that sea water, except that it was concentrated, was of the same composition as was the fluid which nourished the cells of the body. The elements present in sea water existed in the same form as in the body and in the same proportion to each other. For us in England the sea water was collected at spot in the Atlantic 20 miles from the north west coast of Ireland. Sterile drums were lowered into the sea and filled at the depth of five fathoms. After being filtered the water was diluted with spring water to bring it to the same specific gravity as the blood. It was administered by hypodermic injection.

"Sea water has an influence on so many diseases that a medical man approaching the subject for the first time must be strongly prejudiced against it," declared Dr. Lawson. Among conditions which he had successfully treated with sea water were anaemia, gastric ulcer, varicose ulcers of the leg, catarrh, neuritis, neurasthenia, and chronic headaches. It was also an unfailing tonic in all cases of debility, whether the liver or the nervous system be the underlying cause.

"The most fascinating province in which sea water works miracles," concluded Dr. Lawson, "is in treating the unborn child that it may not suffer from the sins of its father, and a healthy child may be born."

Little Jack Rabbit

By DAVID CORY.

Tippy tappy on the pane
Went the robin with his-bill,
Standing tiptoe in the snow
All along the windowsill.

"Who's that I wonder?" sighed Lady Love, the little rabbit's pretty bunny mother, dropping the stocking which she was darning and hopping to the kitchen door.

"Bobbie Redvest's at the window, Mother," shouted Little Jack Rabbit, but before he had time to open it the little robin fluttered in through the door which Lady Love had opened, after carefully peeping through the keyhole to make sure that Danny Fox was not outside on the back porch.

"I won't keep the Old Brown Horse waiting a moment," laughed the pretty little bunny lady on hearing from Bobbie Redvest that the good steed was waiting at the Old Rail Fence to take them all for a sleigh ride.

"I'll put on my pinky woolen bonnet with the yellow daisies on it," and off she hopped to her room. By the time she was ready the bunny boy had pulled on his cap and mittens. Then, carefully locking the door, the little lady rabbit hopped down the path through the bramble followed by her little rabbit son.

"Here they come," twittered Bobbie Redvest who had flown ahead.

"You're the only lady who has never kept me waiting," laughed the Old Brown Horse with a frisk of his tail as Lady Love hopped into the sleigh. "Mother's always on time," laughed the little rabbit, carefully tucking in the old buffalo robe so that Mr. North Wind couldn't nip her pretty toes. "And she is wearing two red roses, one in each cheek, and yellow daisies on her bonnet."

"So she is," answered the Old Brown Horse, turning his head around before starting off. Then away he went, being careful not to swish his tail too high and brush off the dashboard the red-vested little robin.

"Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Out across the snow!
Old Brown Horse, have a care,
Better go more slow."

sang Bobbie Redvest, for the old steed was so happy to be once more pulling the old sleigh that he was trotting along at a racing clip.

"Guess you're right," he panted, pulling himself in, and then down to a walk "I'll rest up a bit."

Just then Billy Breeze whispered in the little rabbit's nose. Yes, he did, Little Reader, although you may think it strange, he whispered the smell of old Danny Fox. That's what he did. The safest way, I'm sure. If he had shouted it in the little rabbit's ear maybe the old fox would have heard him—the last thing in the world that kind little wind would have had that old fox hear. And in the next story you shall read what happened after that.

The result is that of the workers not employed by the government more than two-thirds are unemployed because private industry cannot afford to pay government wages for the amount of work the workers are willing to do. A price of 30 cents for washing a collar is given as indicative; little wonder, as Mr. Marcossou points out, there are so few white collars.

The theory of state service is a lovely one, but the results in practice are far from satisfying.

Sea Water to Medicine

"The Curative Properties of Sea-Water" was the subject of a paper by Dr. Thomas E. Lawson which was read at the London College of Physiology.

After pointing out that all animal life originated in the sea, Dr. Lawson said that sea water, except that it was concentrated, was of the same composition as was the fluid which nourished the cells of the body. The elements present in sea water existed in the same form as in the body and in the same proportion to each other. For us in England the sea water was collected at spot in the Atlantic 20 miles from the north west coast of Ireland. Sterile drums were lowered into the sea and filled at the depth of five fathoms. After being filtered the water was diluted with spring water to bring it to the same specific gravity as the blood. It was administered by hypodermic injection.

"Sea water has an influence on so many diseases that a medical man approaching the subject for the first time must be strongly prejudiced against it," declared Dr. Lawson. Among conditions which he had successfully treated with sea water were anaemia, gastric ulcer, varicose ulcers of the leg, catarrh, neuritis, neurasthenia, and chronic headaches. It was also an unfailing tonic in all cases of debility, whether the liver or the nervous system be the underlying cause.

"The most fascinating province in which sea water works miracles," concluded Dr. Lawson, "is in treating the unborn child that it may not suffer from the sins of its father, and a healthy child may be born."

The Herb of Health

(By Leonard Matters.)

When you enter an Argentine country home the master or mistress first assures you that the house is entirely your own and then, hastily pouring water from the ever-ready kettle into a little black gourd, with a silver tube protruding from it says:

"Please!"

If familiar with the etiquette of the pampas you take the queer little pot, apply your lips to the tube, imbibe a liquid that is blisteringly hot and bitter, and wish to Heaven the same etiquette permitted you to refrain from swallowing it—that is, if it is your first encounter with yerba mate.

Nobody with anything like a normal palate can honestly declare at such a moment that the national drink of the Argentine is anything but what it resembles—a perfect sample of liquid fire, made ten times worse with gall and wormwood. There will come a time, however, when you will feel otherwise about it, for a liking for this herb tea develops, with a case of new pipes, new shoes, or strange drinks, by usage and custom.

The beverage is an infusion of the leaves and stalks of a bush known to botanists as flex Paraguayensis—hence the name for it in English of Paraguayan tea. It is indigenous to Paraguay and Brazil, and is now being cultivated in some parts of the Argentine. In most of the South American Republics the country people are inveterate drinkers of mate. Darwin described the beverage as "the ideal drink," and many an English man and woman has confirmed the accuracy of his judgment.

The method of preparing yerba mate is simple enough. It can be brewed in an ordinary teapot to be served with milk and sugar, but the water used should not be boiling. In the Argentine and elsewhere it is rarely taken in any other form than strong and bitter, and almost invariably through the bombilla, or tube, by which it is imbibed from the mate or gourd.

In the beverage are all the virtues of tea and coffee and none of their vices. At any rate there are no fitter or healthier people in the world than the Argentine country folk, who drink mate all day and would rather go without food than be deprived of it.

The Trench Silo

The introduction of the trench silo has made a great change in the silage situation in Western Canada, while the value of ensilage as a feed has been recognized very widely for some years, many who would have liked to have silos were deterred from doing so by the cost. The trench type consists of a whole in the ground which is long and fairly narrow and shallow. The sides are vertical or nearly so and at least one end is sloping. Instead of using the silage from the top down as in the upright construction, the owner of the trench silo uses it from end to end. Thus the smallest dimensions are exposed to both systems.

In order to test out the practicability of the trench silo one was dug on the Experimental Farm at Brandon during the summer of 1922. It was used during the ensuing winter, has been used again in 1923 and is now being dug for the second season. This silo as first dug was thirty feet long, twelve feet wide and seven and a half feet deep. It held, when rounded up, thirty-five tons of corn ensilage. One was left sloping for hauling out the silage, the remaining edges were made practically vertical. This silo has given particularly satisfactory results in both seasons. The only production given the silage was a layer of straw spread over it about a foot and a half in depth. In 1923 there was available which made an average of 1923 there having been no rain since threshing, dry weather had to be used and a little more silage took place. However, in neither year did more than a few inches of silage spoil on the top and there was no loss on sides or bottom. The loss was certainly not greater than that sustained in an ordinary upright silo. The silage came out in perfect condition. Although no protection was given to the exposed surface the heat was retained better than in the upright silos. No trouble with frozen silage was encountered at all, while anyone with experience with above-ground silos knows that under the best circumstances there is always some trouble with frost and a good deal of picking to get the silage out. All the silage was lifted in the trench silo with a manure fork. It came before the door-door used it, in a steamy condition in the coldest weather.

CONSTRUCTION.—The trench silo is therefore recommended as a perfectly satisfactory and reliable method of feed storage. The kind described here is of necessity a temporary device. The sides fall in as the frost comes out in the spring, and it has to be cleaned out and enlarged each year in order to keep it in the right shape. To make it a permanent structure, solid sides to keep the earth from falling in will be needed. Concrete would be best for this, though lumber and a good deal of picking to do in getting the silage out. All the silage was lifted in the trench silo with a manure fork. It came before the door-door used it, in a steamy condition in the coldest weather.

G.W.V.A. Annual Meeting
COMMANDER HOWLEY, R. N., NEW DOMINION PRESIDENT.

The annual meeting of the G.W.V.A. took place last night in the Gaiety Hall. Vice-President W. H. Crocker occupied the chair, with a large gathering of War Vets in attendance. Before the general business of the evening was conducted, the gathering took occasion to observe a two minutes' silence in memory of their comrades. Comrade H. M. McNeill was then moved to the chair and conducted the election of officers, which resulted as follows:—
 Hon. President—Comrade Harold Mitchell.
 Dominion President—Comrade Engineer Commander R. A. Howley, R.N.
 1st Vice-President—Comrade C. F. Garland.
 2nd Vice-President—Comrade W. A. Grace.
 Asst. Secretary-Treasurer—Comrade Chas. P. Parsons.
 Executive—Comrades Major J. W. March, Capt. J. Lops, Lieut. Harold Knight, W. H. Crocker, R.N.R., J. M.

McKinley, Lieut.-Col. C. Macpherson, Capt. H. McNeill, Lieut.-Col. L. Paterson, Capt. F. Marshall, Eric Robertson, P. J. Grace, J. J. Dooley, W. M. Chancey, B. Colton, R.N.R., J. Taylor, Lieut. W. B. Clouston. Owing to the last three having tied, and the hour being late, it was moved and seconded that a second vote should not take place, and that the matter be left to the Executive to decide at a later meeting. Commander Howley, the new President, then took the chair, and the new executive was installed in office.
 The President in his opening remarks thanked the Association for the high honor conferred on him. He was happy to accept office and promised to fulfil all duties in connection with the G.W.V.A. to the best of his ability. He thanked the retiring officers for the work they had accomplished during the last year and also the ladies of the Auxiliary. To the G.W.V.A. he said, 1924 was the greatest year in the history of the Association. It had witnessed the Dominion Commemoration, the visit from Earl Haig, and the completion of the great National War Memorial. These events will be long remembered by the Association and those taking part.

He made reference to relief work and appealed to all to see such a state of affairs remedied. Poppy Day, organized by the ladies of the Auxiliary, was a big success and went to show how fully the organization possessed the sympathy of the public. He hoped to see other branches of that body established in the outports. Requests for the formation of new G.W.V.A. branches have, in fact, already been received. The question of relief work is one of outstanding importance as Comrades and next of kin must be looked after. A special committee is already busy looking into personal employment, and when their report is made to the Government. It is quite probable that the report will deal with civil service appointments, and some sort of a scheme placed on foot for land development. The ship of state is not yet on an even keel but he hoped to see an amicable settlement of all grievances and, in closing, he hoped that the organization would rally together, work shoulder to shoulder with the executive, and not break faith with those who lie in Flanders Fields.
 Colonel Ross, L.S.O. of Canada, who was an early arrival at the meeting, was introduced to the gathering, and took occasion to speak a few words. Col. Ross expressed his pleasure in being present with the War Veterans of Newfoundland. In Canada the Vets have made themselves a power in all activities. They are not affiliated with any other organizations and avoid party politics. This has been particularly noticeable in Toronto. What problems confronted the War Veterans in Newfoundland, he did not know, but presumed they were the same as existed in Canada. The Government of Canada is doing its very best to assist the War Veterans into employment as in other countries. Col. Ross had four sons in the Great War, and he himself was in charge of the Canadian Army Mail Service. He advised the Veterans to play the game and not to allow all the burdens fall on the shoulders of their officers.
 A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker and was carried in the usual manner.
 The meeting then discussed relief work at some length, the speakers being Comrades Garland, Harris, Mitchell, Adams, Crocker and Woodford. Eight members volunteered to assist the regular committee with this work. It was suggested by one of the speakers to start another drive for increased membership, a drive similar to that initiated by Padre Nangle about a year ago. This matter was given consideration by the members and it was hoped that something would be done to boost the Association and make it a strong power in the Island.
 Comrade Howley recommended that a canvass be started, and at the same time work the outside districts and find out if any of the returned men in the outports required any help.
 During the evening Comrade Noseworthy presided at the piano, and the gathering spent an enjoyable evening singing songs from the song sheet. Comrade Macklin, R.N., contributed several songs which were greatly appreciated by the gathering.
 The meeting was a very enthusiastic one throughout and did not conclude until 11.45 p.m. with the singing of the National Anthem.

M. C. L. I.
 Through the kindness of the Methodist Guards Comrades' Association, the M.C.L.I. have been given the use of their rooms for their weekly debates, an act which the members of the Institute feel deeply grateful for, as evidenced by the many expressions of these feelings given vent to at last night's meeting. That the members of the M.C.L.I. feel deeply the loss of their rooms with the honour roll and records is not to be wondered at. At the same time no feeling of depression over the loss will prevent them from responding quickly to any call from the Board of Governors for such assistance as they may require to repair the heavy loss they have sustained. A resolution to this effect, adopted unanimously, will be forwarded to the Board of Governors.
 The debate last night, which was thought by some to be too heavy for the average member, turned out to be the most instructive yet held on the foreign affairs of the British Commonwealth. Both leaders were well prepared with a storehouse of knowledge and were ably supported by the other set speakers. It was also the liveliest debate of the present session. The subject was: "Resolved, That the direct participation by the Dominions in the formulation and control of foreign policy is a matter of immediate urgency."
 The leaders were: Affirmative, J. C. Paddister, Rev. H. Johnson, H. Wyatt, Negative, S. P. Whiteway, S. Barsey and E. Diamond.
 The affirmative claimed participation by the Dominions in foreign policy was a matter of immediate urgency in order to safeguard the interests of the British Commonwealth which without that participation was in danger of breaking up. In South Africa and in Canada were to be found those advocating separation from the Empire largely because they were of an extraction Army Mail Service. He advised the Veterans to play the game and not to allow all the burdens fall on the shoulders of their officers.
 A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker and was carried in the usual manner.

Pears' for Health and Beauty

Pears' Golden Series of toilet articles, as supplied to their Majesties King George and Queen Mary and to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, must necessarily be the choice of Ladies and Gentlemen everywhere. The toilet articles which comprise Pears' Golden Series and which have so justly merited the approval of Royalty, are unquestionably of first class quality; the containers indeed are not as ornate and expensive as certain continental productions; but they are at least in good taste, and Messrs. Pears are satisfied to cater to Ladies and Gentlemen who prefer to have value inside, rather than outside, the container. The Toilet articles selected for Pears' Golden Series are: Pears' Talcum Powder in pink and white.
 Pears' Nail Crayon and Cream.
 Pears' Brillantine.
 Pears' Baby Powder.
 Pears' Shaving Sticks.
 Pears' Dental Cream.
 Pears' Shaving Powder.
 Pears' Compact Complexion Powder.
 Pears' Vanishing Cream.
 All the above articles are exquisitely perfumed and are the result of 133 years experience in manufacturing high class products. You will find each of the best of its kind and well worthy of your approval. In addition to the above articles, you may obtain Pears' Shaving Brushes, guaranteed free from anthrax. Each brush is packed in an individual carton and sells for $2.25. A Pears' Shaving Brush will last a lifetime. Do you use Pears' Soap? For 133 years Pears' Soap has been the favourite of Ladies and Gentlemen.—Jan 23, 25

Following the set speakers a lively discussion took place in which Messrs S. Tucker, H. Soper, W. Dwyer, G. Jones, C. Sparks, H. Wyatt, G. Soper, H. Moore, B. Parkins, F. Moore took part. The vote resulted in favor of the Affirmative by a substantial majority. The chairman of the debate was Capt. A. Kean.

It does not try to solve any great world problems; it is not a satire on life; it does not attempt to present a new situation. It presents different phases of American life with which we are all familiar, handled with the skill of an adept. To Director James Flood, undoubtedly, should be given most of the honors, for it is conceded that a director can have an exceptional story and a wonderful cast and still make a terrible picture through poor technique. In this case, however, Harriet T. Comstock's story lent itself exceptionally well to screen translation, and the cast could not be improved upon.
 Beverly Bayne, who recently returned to the screen, and June Marlowe, a very new celebrity of the cinema world are especially convincing with many friends among women to whom his manner was always soft and courtly and never enamoured. The loneliness of that strange soul could never, apparently, be peopled by constant companionship or any interests that interfered with the ever recurring wanderlust. Each expedition was followed by a book, sometimes a lengthy one, in which the story was told. His friends in London sometimes were tempted to regard his stories as not entirely free from the notorious weaknesses of travellers' tales. This was especially the case on his return from an expedition to Tibet. Everybody knows the jealousy with which the Tibetans used to exclude the foreigner from any intrusion into the secret and sacred Mysteries of Their Isolated Land.

But when Savage Landor described himself as tortured with hot irons and various other terrible experiences there was some incredulity. He met the incredulity by readiness to show to everybody the marks of the wounds on his body, which were the living memorials of the sufferings he described. Here is Mr. Landor's own account of how he traced a Tibetan spy, sent by the Tibetan Government to see that their order forbidding his entry into Tibet was carried out. "One of them," he indignantly recorded in his book, "actually had the impudence to enter my room and to address me in a boisterous tone of voice. He declared that the English were cowards, and afraid of the Tibetans.

Laws We Break at Christmas

Has anyone ever wondered how far the customary merriment associated with the observance of Christmas Day is in accordance with the law? Here in many instances, though we are constantly reminded that ignorance of the law is no excuse for wrong-doing, the merry-maker may be tempted to conclude that ignorance is bliss and wisdom is folly.

For Christmas in its legal aspect is not quite the merry feast that we have made of it under the guidance of such writers as Charles Dickens and Washington Irving.

Under an Act of Parliament of King Edward VI, re-enacted by James I, Christmas Day is definitely listed as a holy-day—which is not quite the same thing as a holiday.

A short summary of the position accorded to Christmas Day by the combined effect of this Act of Parliament and of certain canons of the Church would seem to deprive it of many of the accompaniments of festivity with which custom has associated the occasion. To be observed as the law prescribes, the day should be spent solely in going to church, in public and private prayers, and in such works of charity as visiting the sick and poor.

The law, it is true, does not altogether forbid games and merriment on Christmas Day. But such indulgences are strictly limited. The ceremonies of the mistletoe are definitely a heathen revival, and there can be little doubt that they are strictly illegal. The games and pastimes that can be legally indulged on Christmas Day are those only which are sanctioned for use on holy-days in King James' "Book of Sports" of 1618.

They include "dancing, archery, leaping, and vaulting." It is consoling to find that dancing is legal. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that the law does not allow the acting of charades.

An Act of William IV, aimed at queering the pitch of the sportsman, forbids the killing of game or the pursuit of any sport accompanied by the use of dog, net, or gun.

Creation's Best

Bishop on the Place for Strength.

Speaking at the prize-giving at Victoria College, Bath, the Bishop of Bath and Wales, Dr. Wynne Wilson, formerly headmaster of Marlborough College, said that having had to do with boys for more years than he would like to tell he believed on the whole that they were the best form of creation, but they suffered from the serious tendency in modern education to deprecate discipline and the idea that boys and girls must get on without punishment, that everything must be done by kindness and moral suasion.

They would never make men by that method. Boys must learn to endure mental and physical hardness. A parent once told a headmaster that she believed in the mixture of strength and tenderness. He replied, "Yes, strength on the part of the master; tenderness on the part of the boy." (Laughter.)

THE SOFT ANSWER.

My neighbor came with swinging tread, that he was mad I could divine; "X o u r kangaroo," he gruffly said, "ate all the washing on my line, my Sunday shirt, of green and red, and socks and night-gowns supreme. I've stood for this blamed beast of yours too long, Jerusalem! too long; I am a voter who endures too patiently a grievous wrong, but when the time has come for cures, my remedies are always strong. And I have sought you at your home to say that you must make things right, or I will rearrange your dome, and drive your whiskers out of sight; so lay aside that dusty tome and oil your shoulder-blades and fight." I might have told this man of gulle his warthogs pestered me by day; by night his noxious crocodile would hang around my house and play; his wombats came, in single file, to eat my turnips and my hay. But that would merely stir his ire, and he would soak me on the nose, and I would bust him with my tyre, and kick him roundly with my toes, and we would battle and persevere until the village cops arrive. And so I say: "Oh, Neighbor Bunn, it's evil tidings that you spill; just estimate the damage done, and I will gladly pay the bill; though kangaroos must have their fun, men should not scold, and scorp, and kill." I pay him more than he demands, and place my blessing on his head; when parting we are shaking hands, and only friendship things are said; and I survey my rolling lands, and give three whoops and go to bed.

ADVENTURES ACROSS UNKNOWN LANDS.

One of the most vivid and adventurous personalities of his time has passed away in Florence of Mr. A. H. Savage Landor, author and traveller. He was the grandson of the famous Walter Savage Landor, author of "Imaginary Conversations," one of the classic of English prose, and inherited, in extent, the controversial spirit of his famous grandfather. He was a little man, with dark, heavy eyes, rather weak voice, and a somewhat retiring manner. Yet, despite his unimpressive stature, he possessed a commanding physical power. It was the story of his grandfather for Italy, especially of Florence, that attracted him to the fact that the grand old city was born in Florence. That was the reason the Savage Landor came to Florence, and his appearance there was a matter of course. The bright, dark eyes, the slight frame, everything about him seemed to bring to mind something of an Italian atmosphere; he was one of those globetrotters whose roots were cosmopolitan, and he had the eccentricities of that type which England alone produces. His education, in his early life was entirely Continental. He received his first education at the Technical Institute in Florence, then he spent some time in the University of Paris. His first intention was to devote himself to art, but the course of education will show that he was a painter and a sculptor. But the blood of the explorer was in his veins, and it is as an explorer that he must be considered. His habit was to disappear from London for weeks, sometimes for years, and to return as if nothing had happened and resume his life in London, engaged in tea fights and conversations.

Washington Letter

(By Our Own Correspondent.)

Jan. 12.—Chas. E. Hughes will retire from the United States cabinet on March 4, and Frank B. Kellogg, now Ambassador to London will succeed him as Secretary of State, the White House announced on Saturday evening. Mr. Hughes placed his resignation in the hands of his chief, reaffirming his loyalty to the President and his party, but with the insistent request that after twenty years of public service he be released from his official duties and permitted to retire to private life to take up the practice of his profession, the law. Ambassador Kellogg, already familiar with many of the outstanding problems of foreign policy through his service at a succession of European conferences, will probably come to Washington soon to serve a few weeks in the State Department before he takes up his new post in March. His successor in London has not yet been named.

Following are the texts of Mr. Hughes' letter of resignation to the President and the chief executive's reply:—

"My Dear Mr. President:

"The period of service which was in contemplation when I took office is now drawing to a close and, in accordance with the intention I have heretofore expressed, I beg leave to tender my resignation as Secretary of State to take effect on March 4, 1925. It will then be 20 years since I undertook public work in New York and during that time, with the exception of a little more than two years after the armistice, I have been engaged almost continuously in the discharge of public duties. I feel that I must now ask to be relieved of official responsibility and to be permitted to return to private life. As foreign affairs are perennial, I know of no more appropriate time to do this than at the end of the present administration.

"Permit me again to express my deep appreciation of the confidence you have reposed and of the privileges of serving under your leadership. I shall have an abiding memory of your unfailing kindness.

"Assuring you of my earnest support of your administration and of my hope that, although out of office, I may still be able to be of service, I am, my dear Mr. President, with highest esteem,

"Faithfully yours,
CHARLES E. HUGHES."
Text of Coolidge Reply
President Coolidge in his reply, dated Jan. 16, said:

"My Dear Mr. Secretary:

"Your favor of recent date advising me that you have irrevocably decided to adopt your long-cherished intention of retiring on the 4th of March, I have received with much regret. I can well appreciate that you are personally entitled, after 20 years of public service, to seek some of the satisfaction of private life. But I cannot refrain from expressing my feeling of personal loss at the prospect of your retirement, and also the loss that must inevitably ensue when one of your ability and experience goes out of an office, which he is so well qualified to fill.

"I realize, however, that this is in the nature of things, and so wish to put my emphasis on the appreciation that I feel for your loyalty at all times to me, your many expressions by word and deed of a friendship on which I could not place too high a value, and the exalted character and disinterested nature of the important public service that has come so constantly under my observation. I trust you may have a well merited repose and that satisfaction which alone can come from a consciousness that the duties of this life have been well performed.

"With kindest regards, I am, very cordially yours,

"CALVIN COOLIDGE."

However much Secretary Hughes' action in resigning from the cabinet may have been influenced by his desire to re-enter private life after a lengthy and admittedly useful public career, there is no gainsaying that one of the outstanding causes underlying his decision is the presence at the head of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee of Senator Borah with whom, on most essential points of foreign policy the retiring secretary could not hope, and perhaps would not desire, to be in accord. Borah's views are not those of Hughes and, although intense surprise was registered by many of the Senate and cabinet when Mr. Hughes' impending retirement was announced, it had early, been predicted that the Secretary of State and the incoming head of the Foreign Relations Committee would not stable horses. Not only has that prediction proven true but Secretary Hughes has taken time by the forelock and thus avoided any possibility of friction which might render his resignation later on less graceful than it is now. It is likely to conform to Borah's ideas of right and wrong, of expediency and expediency in matters of foreign relations and foreign policy, and if he does how far will they seek to override the views of the President who has been almost as one with Hughes on such questions, are questions only time can answer.

Before entering public life Mr. Hughes was prominent in the legal profession. He is head of the firm of Hughes, Rounds, Sherman and Dwight in New York, but has done little real practice since 1905. During that interval he has been Governor of New York, associate Justice of the Supreme Court, special government prosecutor, Republican nominee for the Presidency and Secretary of State, in which last named office he will have completed four years on March 4 when he will be within a month of his sixty-third birthday.

Almost coincidentally with the announcement of the retirement of Secretary Hughes and the appointment of Ambassador Kellogg to fill the vacancy came the appointment of Charles Beecher Warren to the office of Attorney General to be vacated by Harlan F. Stone, who has been appointed to the Supreme Court replacing Justice McKenna. Another retirement from the Supreme Court bench expected to take place on March 4, is said to be that of Judge Oliver Wendell Holmes.

An appropriation bill carrying $331,000,000 for the War Department was passed on Friday by the House by a vote of 182 to 81. The measure as sent to the Senate provides for continued maintenance of the Regular Army at its present strength of approximately 12,000 officers and 119,000 enlisted men, exclusive of 8,000 Philippine scouts.

President Coolidge thinks the railways should bring down their freight and passenger rates, and he is prepared to help them to do it. The railways owe the United States Government $350,000,000, and the President is of opinion that the Federal Government should reduce the interest rate, which is 6 per cent., the rate prevailing at the time the loans were made. The President is prepared to sanction legislation reducing the interest rate to five or even four and three-quarters per cent.

More Standardized Receiver Elements

PRIMARY AND TICKLER.

Some weeks ago we undertook to standardize two sizes of secondary tuning coils for use with two sizes of variable condensers. The idea has met with a good deal of approval on the part of broadcast listeners, and requests have come in for similar "standardization" of other parts of the set—chiefly the primary and the tickler.

When we speak of the primary we mean the primary of the antenna circuit, as "P" in Fig. 1. A year ago a separate primary was the exception rather than the rule—single circuit tuners reigned supreme. Happily, this condition no longer exists, and we now have the separate primary on most tuners. In many cases this is "fixed" in two respects: The value (number of turns) is non-variable, and the position of the primary coil to the secondary is also non-variable. The first condition is permissible and, for the sake of simplicity of operation, desirable; the second condition is not, in our opinion, any more desirable than the single-circuit. While, with a separate primary, the selectivity of the degree of selectivity must always remain the same when the position of the primary with respect to the secondary is unvarying.

Our standardized primary will be of the "fixed-variable" type. That is, its value is fixed, but its position is variable. This permits of almost any desired degree of selectivity the operator may wish. The arrangement is shown in Fig. 2. The primary is mounted on either a three-inch cardboard tube, or a three-inch wooden rotor ball at one end of the secondary winding. It should consist of 15 turns of No. 22 double silk-covered wire. With close coupling explained in previous article) loud signals will be had, but little selectivity; with loose coupling, the selectivity will be greater, but the signal strength less. Varying degrees of coupling may be had to suit interference conditions.

As to standardizing the tickler: We regret that we can't do it. The amount of tickler necessary for proper operation is going to vary with individual sets. Some sets will need more than others. Therefore, the only standardization we can make in this line is the size of the tickler rotor, which should be 2 1/2 inches in diameter. We suggest that about 25 turns of No. 26 d.c.c. wire be used, but, as stated, the number of turns may need changing for your set.

The weekly meeting of the Municipal Council was held yesterday afternoon. Mayor Cook presided and Messrs. Martin, Oatbridge, Vincent, Collier, Ryan and Dowden were present.
The usual preliminary business was disposed of, the following items were dealt with:
Higgins, Hunt and Emergent on behalf of Mr. Stewart Dewar served notice of their intention to bring an action in the Supreme Court to have the motor car of their own disposal, through what they considered negligent driving of one of the employees in the early part of last year. It was decided that a copy of the application be forwarded to the City Engineer.
An application was read from Mr. [Name] for position as driver on the [Name] truck. This was ordered.

The matter of the meter system of the Newfoundland Atlantic Fishery Commission was reported that it was out of order, and that it was necessary to have it repaired. The Company is to be asked to have the meter put in working order immediately.
Royal Garage, agents for Messrs. [Name] Bros. Ltd., stated they were on the market a number of [Name] and asked whether or not the Council would be interested in the purchase of same. It is not likely the Council will require another [Name] this season.

Newfoundland Light and Power Company, Limited, submitted statements showing the gross receipts of the [Name] Street Railway Co. for the year ended December 31st, 1924, $14,515.
The Collier, at the request of Mr. [Name], brought before the Council the question of the exits of the [Name] Church, St. Michael's, Casey St. Mr. [Name] desired all permits with regard to the permit given to the nature of this building. The Engineer stated he had given for certain alterations and that the [Name] gentleman above referred to would visit the building to the Council at its next meeting.

Removal of snow from the [Name] tracks along the belt line was dealt with, and it was pointed out that a rumour is abroad to the effect that the Company had undertaken work with a view to operating the line in question but that this is incorrect. The Council will not consider, under any circumstances, the interests of the [Name] generally, interfere with the [Name] of their charter, as regards removal of snow, and that the [Name] and Inspectors be notified immediately.
Vacant asked that a light be put on John Street. This was referred to the Lighting Committee.

Medical Officer of Health reported the case of Scarlet Fever at Typhoid in the city during the week. At the present time there are in the city nine cases of Scarlet Fever and five of Typhoid. At the time last year there were only some 107 cases of Scarlet and six of Diphtheria. The [Name] of late are welcome to the fact that they show a large decrease in number of cases of Infectious of the City Engineer, dealing with the Waterworks, Roads and [Name] Departments, was tabled, as was the report of the Sanitary [Name].

[Name] decided that tenders be called for the usual supply of hose for [Name] purposes during the coming [Name].
The granting of several [Name] and the disposal of many [Name], passing of weekly [Name], the meeting adjourned.

and the United States," the Post asserted.
"The alternative is anarchy. But all laws must be constitutional, in accordance with the expressed will of the people. When the law-making machine is itself a violence of the constitution, the violation of its laws by the people is made certain."
And then the Post criticized members of Congress, charging that it was their duty to observe the laws themselves.
"The first duty of all citizens and of Congress is to ascertain the will of the people. The second is to enforce and obey it. Congress is bound to obey the law as well as to enforce it."
Columbus Came, and Then—
"Four hundred and thirty-two years ago, as we now commemorate it, in the moonlight before dawn, an Italian sea-captain employed by Spain sighted a sandy island beach somewhere among the Bahamas," says Collier's Weekly. "That beach, unknown to us, and the tiny port of Pales in southwestern Spain, from which Columbus began his voyage, remain to-day unchanged."
"In our America all is changed. We have altered river mouth and shore line, plain, forest, and hill. And the making of this material difference but symbolises a mightier change in the world of men's thought. "Europe and Asia now look this way not, as then, into a vague terror of the unknown, but toward a land that bears its share of the tasks of civilization and reaps its share of the rewards. To what good end?"
"It is a calumny to represent the United States as the slave of mechanical civilization," says Edouard Herriot, and a famous British critic, Hilaire Belloc, wrote recently after a visit to the United States:—
"Wherever you go, in the whole of the vast territory of the States, you discover that sort of freedom in the soul which is the breeding soil of happiness. The American people live in truth. They are the happiest white people in the modern world."
"There are hours when one feels otherwise. There are those who see our free living chiefly as peril. But out among the hills now clothing their slopes in the burning glory of fall, out among the fields of gathered harvest, you will see for yourself that these friendly guests are right, that Columbus added immeasurably to a world worth while. For he helped discover not land only, but also the better day that it is in the heart of man to achieve."
