Mrs. Stanley, too, was a trifle ashamed that her good husband should so persist in making patchwork of his garments, but the kind soul had given up the argument long ago. The parson had been talked to about the deacon's peculiarity, but, as the deacon was a Christian in every other respect, gave to the church and her missions, helped the poor and did not neglect his family, this one sin—if sin it could be called?—was considered but a minor one, so the deacon escaped censure. sufficient stock subscribed to open this enterprise to an extent which will meet every necessity of shipping from this port of the Province. By a vote of the Stockholders present it was decided to enter upon business with the strength already gained, leaving remaining stock to be sold to the best advantage. A solitary voice demurred at a late stage of the meeting, on the ground that anyone desirous of raising objections might do so on the plea that there was a departure from the first prospectus, which provided that all the stock must be subscribed before entering on business. Mr. Delap met this effectually by declaring that any man who had doubts might now come forward and have his name erased from the books. Not a man moved. Prof. Caldwell sets out by stating certain things which, he thinks, may be considered settled in regard to the matter. They are these:—That green rodder may, with due care, be preserved for an indefinite length of time on the silo system; that cattle will eat ensilage readily and thrive on it; that a good yield of milk may be maintain a good yield of milk may be maintain and by the use of this food, and excellent butter made from it; that these d by the use of this food, and excellent butter made from it; that these good results have been obtained by feeding ensilage alone, also by adding a proportion of meal; that the cost of harvesting and packing the green fooder need not be over one dollar per ton, including interest on the outlay to hailding a sile, that the lotal cost of the for building a sile; that the total cost for building a sile; that the total questions of a ton of ensilaged fodder, that is, growing, harvesting, and packing it, may be estimated at about two dollars may be estimated at about two dollars money in building siles until the system per ton; and, finally, that the system money in building silos until the advantages are more conclusive advantages are more conclusive demonstrated. of securing a supply of succulent, demonstrated. pulatable fodder for winter use.

He next answers objections. The first is, the loss of nutritious matter by formentation. He considers that too nuch stress has been laid on this objection, and is of opinion that the loss is only trifling. As yet, however no comparative analyses have been made, in this country, of the green crop, and the ensilage from it, so that answered by saying, that those who character. have built these think their money There can be no question that the we'll invested; also, that cheaper structures can be made by those who many kinds of finishing work, barrels, are not willing to incur the cost of tables and counter tops, fine doors, and professor sums up as follows :-
