Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made recently by Lieutenant General Simonds, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to reconsider the proposed expenditure of $2 million in constructing a radar installation at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not know what is the meaning of that question. I will simply point out that there are going to be two research radar installations in North America, made necessary in consequence of the consideration given both by the military authorities and also by the scientific groups connected with defence, and I see no reason for a change in any way in so far as that prospective building program is concerned.

R.C.A.F.—REPORTED CHANGES IN TRAINING COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister confirm speculation that certain major changes are planned in the operation of the R.C.A.F. training command in the immediate future?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. Reductions in the R.C.A.F. NATO training program will lead to certain reorganizational changes involving a reassessment of the facilities required by the R.C.A.F. training command. No firm or positive action has yet been taken on this matter, and in any case no changes are planned for 1958, with the exception of the R.C.A.F. stations at Claresholm and London, which it is expected will be placed on a care and maintenance basis by the end of next year.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): A supplementary question. Can the minister tell us, then, that there will be definitely not cut-back in R.C.A.F. training other than NATO units?

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, that is correct.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In the light of the reported statement of Lieutenant General Guy Simonds, former chief of staff, that at least 80 per cent of our present defence expenditure is totally wasted, can the minister assure the house that he and his officials are engaged in a serious and realistic appraisal of Canada's defence position, and is he now prepared to recommend to his colleagues that a committee of the house be set up to investigate the situation?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I and the officials of my department have been making a very careful and realistic study of the problems to which he refers.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. In the light of recent international developments, has the Department of National Defence reconsidered the decision to continue with the development of the CF-105?

Mr. Pearkes: The decision was taken the other day to continue with the development of the CF-105 for another year because we believe that in the foreseeable future, if any threat from the air develops against this country the manned bomber will be at least an important part of that threat, and therefore we must have a manned interceptor capable of firing air missiles which will have a homing ability, enabling them to direct themselves on the target. We believe that to be essential.

ROLE OF MILITIA IN CIVIL DEFENCE—REPORTED STATEMENT BY GENERAL WORTHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is General Worthington's statement in the Kingston Whig-Standard of November 6 with respect to the militia's role in the civil defence set-up, a copy of which I gave the minister, a statement of policy respecting the new role of the militia in Canada?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for sending me a copy of what purports to be an interview with General Worthington on the subject of the militia's role in connection with rendering aid to the civil authority in an emergency. As I think the hon. member knows, General Worthington recently resigned his appointment as national co-ordinator of civil defence; therefore he would not be in a position to express government policy. He has been expressing his own views, and as he is a gentleman with wide experience those views will receive careful consideration.

H.M.C.S. "MARGAREE"—TRANSFER FROM EAST TO WEST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the destroyer Margaree being transferred from the east coast base at Halifax to the west coast base at Esquimalt on a permanent basis? If so, what ship will replace the Margaree at Halifax?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, H.M.C.S. Margaree is being transferred to the west coast on a permanent basis. This ship was commissioned in Halifax on October 5 of this year for service on the Pacific coast. Since she is a new ship and has never been in service in the Atlantic command, there is no question of a replacement.

INDUSTRY

BONAVENTURE, QUE.—REPORTED PROMISE TO BUILD PULP MILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the reply of the minister to my question regarding the establishment of a pulp mill at Bonaventure, I would like to ask him if his government recognizes any responsibility or jurisdiction in the matter.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know it is not the responsibility of the government to establish pulp mills.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY PREMIER OF MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Denis et (St. Boniface): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister care to comment on a statement made by the minister of health of Manitoba, which statement was reported in the press on November 1, 1957, that the national hospital insurance plan could have been started by July 1, 1958, if the government of Manitoba had received a reply to its letter addressed to the Prime Minister dated August 1, 1957?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the press report or, if I have, I have forgotten about it. Actually the act is set up as of this moment to go into operation when six provinces have their schemes in force. Now Ontario have notified us that they cannot operate before January 1, 1959, so I have nothing further to say.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fears expressed by Dr. G. N. Patterson, director of the institute of aerophysics, University of Toronto, and other Canadian scientists, as reported in a front page story in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, that government appropriations for research in this field are to be cut, will the Prime Minister assure the house that any economies will be made through a reduction in conventional defence expenditures rather than in this vital field of rocket and satellite research?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention to reduce the grants to universities for research purposes or to reduce the defence research expenditures in general in any way whatsoever.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I can ask the Prime Minister if there is any intention to increase the grants for scientific research and for education generally in line with the recommendations of the experts?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that question of course is a matter of government policy, but I would say this. The whole field of research and scientific expansion and development will receive primary consideration when the 15 nations in NATO meet in Paris in December. I hope as a result of that meeting there will be a general increase in scientific expenditure in order to meet the situation with which all of us are acquainted.

[Mr. Deniset.]

NATIONAL PARKS

SIGNAL HILL, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister in a position to make a statement at this time about the government's plans for the development of historic Signal hill in my constituency of St. John's East as a national park?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I wish to thank the hon. member for having informed me of this question just as I entered the house. I should like to take it as notice so that I may look further into the matter.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Does the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources not know that Signal hill was established as a national historic park under the previous administration?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Everything was done under the previous administration.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): What the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources knows will soon become apparent.

PUBLIC WORKS

NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works which is really supplementary to my question of yesterday. Will the minister inform the house if the report of Price, Waterhouse and Company, chartered accountants of Montreal, on the economic feasibility of the proposed causeway from Westmorland county, New Brunswick, to Prince Edward Island has been completed, and if so will the minister table the report?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, no such report has come to my attention as yet.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REFERENCE TO MINISTER'S STATEMENT RESPECTING AMENDMENTS TO ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Labour a question. I wonder if the Minister of Labour has reconsidered his previous attitude, indicated to the house on October 18, which was not to introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and if so will he advise the house whether such badly needed amendments will be introduced this session?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been given serious study and is under consideration by the government at the moment. As soon as a decision has been reached I shall be very glad to inform the house of our intentions.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO TRIP ABROAD BY PARLIAMENTARY ASSISTANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, whom I should like to congratulate even though it is not strictly according to the rules, on his well-deserved recognition. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is contemplating going abroad to encourage immigration, because I am sure all of us would agree that he would be a good advertisement for Canada.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could have been asked a nicer question on my first day in this office, and I assure the hon. member that if I am going to have a trip abroad I will consult with him first in order to learn the best places to go.

UNITED NATIONS

REPORTED INCREASE IN CANADIAN ASSESSMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Best (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister comment on published reports that the Canadian assessment by the United Nations is being increased over that of 1957?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was good enough to indicate to me his intention to ask this question concerning the Canadian assessment by the United Nations, which gives me an opportunity to draw attention to an error in certain published reports in this respect.

On October 28 a report emanated from New York and found its way into some Canadian newspapers to the effect that an increase in the Canadian assessment was being proposed in the report of the general assembly's committee in contributions from 3.09 per cent to 3.15 per cent. This report is erroneous. The fact is that Canada's percentage is being slightly reduced. The United Nations general assembly has set a ceiling of 33.3 per cent on the United States contribution, and has decided that no member should pay more per capita than the United States. Accordingly, when the United States assessment was reduced to 32.51 per cent it was necessary to reduce the Canadian assessment to 3.09 per cent to maintain the correct per capita relationship between Canadian and United States contributions. At these percentages, both Canada and the United States pay just under 10 cents for each man, woman and child in our respective populations.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the report confused the percentages. The fact is that the Canadian percentage is being reduced from 3.15 per cent for 1957 to 3.09 per cent.

AGRICULTURE

PRICES SUPPORT FUND—INQUIRY AS TO UNUSED PORTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. What is the unused portion of the $200 million fund established under the Agricultural Prices Support Act?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Kent, Ontario, knows that the $200 million is a revolving fund, and anything outstanding would be the value of the material the board is holding. At the moment, of that $200 million about $30 million is outstanding.

Mr. Huffman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize that possibly the parliamentary assistant cannot answer this question but would he take it as notice. Is it the intention of the government to place a floor under this year's crop of sugar beets, since there are sufficient funds in the vote to meet the request for a floor price of $14 a ton?

Mr. Charlton: The hon. member knows that is government policy, and it will be announced in due course by the minister.

BUTTER—STATEMENT ON PORTION OF INCREASE IN PRICE TO BE RETURNED TO PRODUCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I should like to answer the following question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Meadow Lake:

How much, if any, of the 5 cents per pound increase that the government has allowed dealers holding butter to charge consumers will be returned to the farmers who produced the butter?

The government has no authority to control the price of butter by dealers, and it does not attempt to do so. This point was explained by the Minister of Agriculture in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Springfield, as reported in Hansard, page 30, October 16, 1957.

As explained at that time, butter prices had risen by from 1½ cents to 2 cents per pound between August 3 and October 12, and prices paid to producers for butterfat had risen to the same extent. Since October 16 there has been little or no change in prices for butter and butterfat on the major Canadian markets.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

REPORTED SLOW-DOWN OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AT NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he is aware of the slow-down of the projects in scientific research at the national research council, and whether it is part of the cutting down of expenses which it is rumoured has been ordered by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I might remind the hon. member that this question was answered a day or two ago, and a question relating to the alleged reduction in appropriations for scientific research was answered today.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to restate my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether he is aware of the slow-down of scientific projects at the national research council?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in the national research council, and I am quite satisfied that they are continuing their studies without any slow-up at all.

FINANCE

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF MONETARY REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will this government consider setting up a monetary region in the Atlantic provinces distinct from the rest of Canada, where the tight money policy will not exist, as suggested on September 26, 1956, by Premier Flemming of New Brunswick?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I make no comment on the propriety of the question, but I do comment upon the inaccuracy of what purports to be the assertion of fact with which my friend closed his question. I may say to my hon. friend that so far as the tight money policy is concerned, that policy of the Bank of Canada, put into effect during the regime of the former government, is under constant study; and whenever there is occasion to make an announcement, that announcement will be made in the house. I think my hon. friend will appreciate that it is a matter of concern to all parts of Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: Arrogance at its best.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): A supplementary question. In view of the minister's answer, will he tell the house whether the government is considering an investigation into the monetary system of Canada by royal commission or otherwise, as suggested by the same Premier Flemming?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think my friend will understand that this whole matter is under consideration and under study at all times.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—,

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think two supplementaries following a question ought to be enough to clarify an answer. I think the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount has a supplementary.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have not asked two supplementary questions; I have asked only one on this matter, and I would like to be permitted to ask a second one.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I do not want to do the hon. member an injustice. My arithmetic may be at fault, but I understood him to ask a question and to follow it up with two further questions.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): One further question.

Mr. Speaker: Is that what the hon. member says? Then I will let him make it two, but I reserve the right to consider his question before it is answered.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Then I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the Atlantic provinces shall continue to suffer under the castor oil policy enunciated by Premier Flemming?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will now agree that I was right in not permitting him to ask the question.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the subject of tight money and the remarks of the Minister of Finance, would he not think it appropriate if he, on behalf of the government, were to tell us what measures his government has taken since taking office to reduce the tight money situation?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker I did that on a former occasion. Perhaps my hon. friend was not here to hear it, but he will find the reference to the subject in Hansard.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION START

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the promises that the South Saskatchewan river dam would be commenced within six months of the election of a Conservative government, can the Prime Minister indicate what steps are being taken to ensure a construction start by December 10; and would the right hon. gentleman also indicate when this government plans to accept the invitation of the province of Saskatchewan to discuss the proposal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are ready to discuss the proposal at any time. However, this does give me an opportunity to point out that the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan recently made a statement to the effect that in the construction of the South Saskatchewan river dam and power project the federal government was now expected to pay everything. That does not represent anything like the basis upon which consideration is to be given to that project.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that I am now very pleased to have the statement that I have been making ever since 1947 corroborated by the leader of the government, that the provincial treasurer in Saskatchewan was not prepared to accept any condition other than that the federal government pay the whole cost.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask the Prime Minister this supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the Saskatchewan government has been on record to the effect that it would bear the whole cost of the electrical installation and some other costs, but that since the government is to assist in the development of electricity in the maritimes Saskatchewan does not expect to be discriminated against by the government of Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can see that there is still quite a bit of controversy between the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and the hon. member for Melville. As far as the provincial government of Saskatchewan is concerned, we are willing to meet with that government at any time. I understood that a basis of agreement was determined two years ago. However, within the last few weeks the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan came out with a proposition apparently indicating a change of point of view, that the former agreed division was not acceptable and that the federal government was to assume all the costs.

We are ready to meet with the government of Saskatchewan and its representatives at any time. Our point of view regarding the South Saskatchewan river dam and irrigation project is unchanged. We will go ahead, but we do not want the provincial government of Saskatchewan to alter the rules between innings.

Mr. Gardiner: Might I just repeat, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think hon. members will agree that this seems to be developing into a first-class debate on the South Saskatchewan dam, which to my mind is not appropriate at this time, and I would ask members to let it go at this for today.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a matter of debate; it is a matter of the Prime Minister equivocating in his answer. He never answered one of the questions at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not one who asks for withdrawals. There is no equivocation and I do not ask for a withdrawal; but I do not want equivocation on the part of anyone else to this agreement and that is the reason I made the remarks I did.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just another broken promise.

OIL

REPORTED DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question. I wonder whether he would now be prepared to comment on the recent meeting between himself and Premier Manning of Alberta?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had the pleasure of reading what the Toronto Star had to say regarding the meeting. It was simply a meeting convened for the purpose of hearing the general situation resulting from the regulations imposed by the United States on oil importations into that country, and also the effect of the reopening of the Suez canal on the demand for Alberta oil in those portions of the United States comprised within what I believe is called district No. 5, the California district.

In the course of the meeting the premier of Alberta placed before me the situation respecting the export of oil from Alberta, and I must say it was a very co-operative meeting, in which views were exchanged very fully. I hope to be hearing from the premier of Alberta further information regarding the problem, and after that has been received, what representations should be made to the United States will be considered.

WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCES, INCOME, COVERAGE, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 28, to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

He said: As I indicated the other day when the house was in committee on the resolution, the bill which hon. members now have in their possession deals with seven sections of the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1952, and in addition proposes amendments to the two schedules which set forth the rate of allowance and the maximum permissive income for several groups of recipients. Associated with the amendments to the schedules is an amendment to the rate set forth in section 5 of the act.

Before I go into the details of the amendments I think it would be appropriate to review, for the benefit of the new members of the house, the background of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. This measure was first enacted in 1930. At the outset it applied only to veterans who had service in a theatre of actual war in world war I or were in receipt of a pension under the Pension Act, who had a low income or none at all, and who were either 60 years of age or permanently unemployable. The allowance must not be confused with a pension under the Pension Act. A pension is awarded for a disability connected with service, whereas war veterans allowance may be paid where there is no disability at all or where the disability causing permanent unemployability is not service connected. It may, and often does, happen that a war veterans allowance recipient is also receiving a small disability pension.

A pension under the Pension Act, as hon. members know, is paid to rich and poor alike. An allowance under the War Veterans' Allowance Act is subject to a means test because of the ceiling on permissible income. The maximum single rate was originally $240 and the married rate was $480; that was in 1930. The income ceilings were $365 a year for single persons and $730 for those qualified as married. Rates and allowances have been increased from time to time and are now, single, $720 a year, ceiling $960; the married rate is $1,440 a year and the ceiling $1,620 a year. In 1938 the benefits of the War Veterans' Allowance Act were extended to veterans of the South African war; in 1943, to widows whose eligibility flowed from the eligibility of their late husbands, and in 1944 to veterans of World War II and their widows. Other amendments were enacted in 1946, 1948, 1950, 1952 and 1955. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments to the schedules of rates and income ceilings are felt by hon. members, and by the veteran body at large, to be of paramount importance.

As I mentioned briefly during the discussion on the resolution preceding this bill, certain changes were made in the schedules effective July 1 of this year by means of a vote in the supplementary estimates. At that time the married rate of allowance was increased from $108 to $120 per month, but no change was made in the single rate which remained at $60 per month. The government feels not only that this action discriminated against the single recipient, but also that the monthly rate of $60 is out of line with present day costs. It is now proposed to raise the single rate of $60 to $70, thus restoring the approximate percentage balance between the single and married rates. With respect to income ceilings, it is desirable to maintain sufficient difference between them and the allowance rate to enable a war veterans allowance recipient to benefit from some of the other income which he may have. In addition, the increase in the cost of living has made it necessary to raise the level of ceilings.

Last July the difference between the single rate and ceiling was increased from $10 to $20 a month, and this differential is being maintained by the proposed increase in the ceiling from $80 to $90 a month. In respect to the married recipients, however, the differential was increased last July from $12 to $15 a month and the proposal now is to increase it to $25 by raising the income ceiling to $145 a month.

Most hon. members are aware, I believe, that the assistance fund can be used in cases of need to supplement the income of the war veterans allowance recipient up to the ceiling. For example, under the proposed amendments an eligible married veteran without other income will receive war veterans allowance of $120 a month. If his necessary living expenses show him to be still in need, payments from the assistance fund may be made up to a maximum of $25 per month which, added to the war veterans allowance, can equal the permissible income ceiling.

Furthermore, I wish to stress that casual earnings continue to be exempt income; that is to say, casual earnings are permitted over and above the ceiling of permissible income and do not have the effect of reducing that ceiling. It must, of course, be understood that a raise in the income ceiling makes eligible a new group of veterans whose income equalled or slightly exceeded the old ceiling.

Therefore a raise in the ceiling involves an additional cost by way of payment of the allowance to the new group.

The proposed amendments to section 5 of the act are exactly in line with those that I have been discussing. Section 5 permits the continuance to a widow of a war veterans allowance recipient of the married rate for one year after the veteran's death; it permits a continuance to the veteran of his married rate for one year after the death of his wife. This special award is made to enable the bereaved person to meet the period of adjustment following the death of the spouse. The rates in section 5 are increased to conform to the normal married rate and ceiling.

The act provides that a veteran of the Canadian forces qualifies from a service point of view for war veterans allowance by having served in a theatre of actual war. A veteran of Her Majesty's forces other than Canadian or of the forces of our allies qualifies in the same way provided that he was domiciled in Canada at the time of his enlistment. If such a man who served in world war I was not so domiciled in Canada he is required to have resided in Canada for at least 20 years. This required period of residence is reduced to 10 years by the proposed amendment, subsection 4 of section 30 of the act.

The bill proposes the same reduction in residence for a person who seeks to qualify under subsection 6 of section 30 of the act. These veterans have not served in a theatre of actual war in either world war I or world war II but they did serve in both wars. That is to say they are what is known as dual war veterans. In world war II they served with Canadian forces and in world war I they served with other commonwealth forces or an allied force but because they were not domiciled in Canada before their enlistment they are at present required to have 20 years residence in Canada as a condition of eligibility under the act. This period is also reduced 10 years.

The widow of a veteran who is qualified by any of the above methods which I have just described would also be eligible in her own right upon his death.

As many hon. members are aware there has been much dissatisfaction throughout the country in recent years because the widow of a veteran whose eligibility depends upon 20 years' residence in Canada could not become eligible unless he had lived here for that period of 20 years no matter how long she herself had resided in this country. I could mention various distressing types of cases such as that, where the veteran died 19½ years after coming to Canada or, again, where the veteran died with less than 20 years residence here but he and his wife had brought up a family of boys who served and perhaps lost their lives in world war II.

The proposed amendment remedies this situation and changes the 20 year requirement to 10 years to conform with the changes proposed in section 30. Under the amendment the widow will become eligible from a residence point of view from the earliest date upon which she has been resident in Canada for 10 years and upon which her husband, had he lived, would also have had 10 years residence. It will be observed that by requiring that the husband, had he lived, would have had 10 years' residence the proposal conforms with the basic principle that the eligibility of the widow shall flow from her husband's eligibility.

The present act provides that where a member of the Canadian forces on active service assigns pay to a recipient of war veterans allowance and where no dependent's allowance is paid to the recipient or to the recipient's spouse, the assigned pay is to be regarded as exempt income. This provision was enacted when active service meant in effect service in wartime. Since then the entire Canadian regular forces have been placed on active service and the original intent of the exemption has been lost. It was never intended that the father of a man or woman pursuing a military career should have an advantage of this kind over one whose children are pursuing a career in civil life and therefore the bill proposes that the provision be revoked.

In determining the income of a war veterans allowance recipient from any interest in real property, an exemption is permitted in respect of the value of the house in which he resides. This exemption was fixed at $6,000 in 1952 and it is agreed that since then the value of real estate has gone up. Canadian housing statistics show that the estimated average cost of a single family dwelling in Canada has been increased by 32 per cent from 1952 up to the second quarter of 1957. This percentage takes into consideration the cost of land, labour and material. The proposed amendment would increase the exemption from $6,000 to $8,000, being 33⅓ per cent. It should be noted that the exemption is not the market value of the property but the interest which the recipient has in the property. This interest is either assessed value established by the municipality or the equity of the recipient in the property, whichever is the greater.

The bill repeals section 8 of the act which reads:

> No allowance shall be paid in respect of any orphan who is in receipt of a pension under the Pension Act.

Heretofore, when the father's death was attributable to military service the maximum monthly payment under the Pension Act to or on behalf of one orphan is $40. Where the father's death is not attributable to service, the maximum monthly payment that may be made to or on behalf of one orphan under the War Veterans' Allowance Act together with a payment from the assistance fund would be $60.

It is true that there is a means test for the latter group whereas a pension is paid regardless of other income. However, the cases in which the orphan has private income are comparatively few and generally speaking the child whose father's death is not related to service receives more money from public funds than the child whose father died on the battle field. This is undesirable and the amendment provides that the pensioned orphan whose entire income is less than the war veterans allowance ceiling for orphans will be eligible for an award of war veterans allowance.

[Mr. Brooks.]

Subsection 1 of section 14 of the present act permits a recipient of war veterans allowance to be absent from Canada without loss of allowance for a period of three months in any calendar year, provided he returns to Canada within six months from the time he left this country. The bill makes two changes: it would permit the recipient to be absent from Canada for six months from the last day of the first month in which he absented himself, and it would also permit payment upon his return for a total of six, instead of three months in any calendar year.

In respect to the salaries of the chairman and other members of the war veterans allowance board, I remarked at the resolution stage that the government felt these were overdue for revision in line with salaries of senior civil servants and I believe there must be general agreement on that score. These salaries were last revised in 1955 and since then there have been two general salary revisions for civil servants. As a result the relativity which existed between members of the board and other senior officials has not been maintained. Civil servants whose salaries were in the same bracket as members of the board in 1955 have now had their salaries set at a level much higher than the rates now shown in the act and it is felt that members of the board should benefit from a comparable adjustment. The latest revision shows the senior officers grade I whose salaries ranged from $9,000 to $10,000 in 1955 are now paid from $11,500 to $12,500. The revisions proposed in the bill are well within the amounts granted to senior civil servants with comparable responsibilities, and I believe they will be acceptable to hon. members. The effective date corresponds with increases to the civil servants.

Finally, the bill offers a solution to a problem which has been the subject of strong representations by veterans organizations for some years. During world war II the United Kingdom was deemed to be a theatre of actual war whereas during world war I the United Kingdom was not so regarded.

A considerable number of men reached England during world war I and were retained in that country in the interests of the service. Senior officers will readily agree that the individual man in the ranks, and even the junior officer, had little to say as to the nature of the service that he would be called upon to give. Experienced instructional staff, men with peculiar administrative ability, men skilled in various occupations; many of these were retained in the United Kingdom against their wishes. My colleague the Minister of National Defence has from time to time drawn attention to the rigours of the training camps on Salisbury Plain, conditions that were not encountered in the well-housed training areas of world war II.

The bill extends eligibility for war veterans allowance from a service point of view to those who served in the United Kingdom during world war I for at least 365 days prior to the date following the armistice. This minimum period of 365 days conforms with the more recent recommendations of the Canadian Legion, and is considered by the government to be a fair basis upon which to establish eligibility.

The entire bill, except the portion dealing with salaries, is intended to come into effect on the first day of November, 1957. It will be noted that this date is also the effective date of the bill which amends the Old Age Security Act.

The main reason for selecting November 1 as the effective date of the war veterans allowance measure is to bring into effect, as soon as possible, the higher income ceilings and the other improvements that the bill covers. Another important reason for choosing the same effective date as that fixed for the old age security increase is to ensure that the higher income ceilings permit the war veterans allowance recipient who has reached the age of 70 to obtain maximum benefit from the increase of old age security pension.

I think I should take this opportunity to mention that some delay in processing all the accounts at the new war veterans allowance rate and ceiling will inevitably occur. Old age security pensions require no complicated computation such as results from the income ceiling of the war veterans allowance. The cheques for old age assistance benefits can therefore be written at short notice, whereas the war veterans allowance accounts must be scrutinized individually.

As some hon. members are aware, the income ceiling is attached to a continuous period of twelve months, known in my department as the VA year. This VA year commences to run from the date of the award of war veterans allowance or from the date of reinstatement of war veterans allowance following a period of cancellation. The VA year may therefore commence from any date in the calendar year, and hon. members will appreciate how complicated the computation of adjustments can be. The process is necessarily time-consuming, and to avoid anxiety among recipients who might think that they have been overlooked, I should like to make it as widely known as possible that every case will not be adjusted to the new rate during the month of November. However, the officials of my department are giving priority to the task of reviewing these files, and we hope that all adjustments will have been made within the next month or so.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that these remarks will have been of assistance to hon. members in clarifying the intent of this measure. I may say I shall be prepared to give further detailed information when we come to discuss the different clauses in the bill.

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to commend the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) on the very clear statement he has just given regarding the intention of the bill which is now before us.

I think I should observe at the outset that most hon. members who have had anything to do with veterans legislation will realize that this bill is of the same nature as those which have constantly been coming before parliament with regard to veterans affairs. As each step forward has been taken it has been found that further steps need to be taken in order to meet difficulties which arise or to iron out inconsistencies or inequities. Then, again, as the cost of living has risen it has been necessary to increase the amounts payable under this legislation. There has also been a feeling on the part of the people of Canada that assistance given to ex-service men should at the very least not lag behind that granted under the ordinary social welfare measures.

It was naturally to be expected that further steps would be taken with regard to war veterans allowances and pensions legislation in the light of the measures adopted by parliament in regard to old age security, old age assistance and the other matters with which we have already dealt.

I should say in this regard that many people think—I am inclined to agree with them—that where men have given service to their country at risk to themselves, as is the case with ex-service men, they should receive some extra consideration from the federal government, especially if they suffered in any way as a result of that service in respect of their ability to work or with respect to their position in life. This view was, of course, taken by the minister and by those associated with him when he was in opposition.

It is in the light of that attitude that I now propose to go over the bill which he has introduced today and make a few remarks in regard to it. As a member of the party whose government brought the veterans charter into existence and improved it on a number of occasions I naturally welcome this further improvement and I think all members of our party will welcome the improvements which have been mentioned by the minister.

The first improvement is in regard to increasing the monthly rate payable to single veterans from $60 to $70 a month. That, perhaps, is not going to make so great a difference as some may think, because, as the minister pointed out, a person who had no other means of livelihood was able to obtain assistance from the assistance fund, and augment that $60 a month. Nothing is proposed with regard to increasing the amount to be paid as a basic rate to married veterans, and the minister sought to excuse this omission by referring to the assistance fund and to the fact that the ceiling on income had been raised. I intend to deal with this matter briefly later on.

With regard to the proposal that veterans of the first world war who served only in the United Kingdom should receive the benefit of the act if they served at least 365 days in that country, I think most of us realizing that those who served in the second world war have always had this particular benefit have felt the time had arrived when it should be extended to those earlier veterans even though they did not get any further than the United Kingdom, and that the time had come to improve the position of the veteran of the first world war who was kept in England by order of his superiors and often against his own will.

I realize that the Canadian Legion has recently recommended that this be extended only to those who served one year in the United Kingdom and the bill follows that recommendation.

Naturally I am personally glad to see the government going that far in recognizing the position of these old veterans most of whom are now over 60 years of age and in need of more assistance than heretofore. Nevertheless, it seems to me that the same reasoning under which it is to be granted to those who served in the United Kingdom for one year should be applied to those who had any service whatever in the United Kingdom. There is no similar restriction of a year's service in relation to those who served in world war II as to receiving the benefit of the allowance and I think the same reasoning should apply in removing the restriction regarding those who served in world war I in the United Kingdom.

Because the Canadian Legion has gone only this far in its recommendation doubtless the minister feels he has gone far enough in recognizing the position of these ex-servicemen, but I presume he had another reason for so doing beyond that of recognizing the Legion's request and I hope he will reveal it to the house.

The next matter referred to in the legislation is the position of a widow whose veteran husband lived in Canada slightly less than 20 years. It did not matter how long she might have lived in Canada, she could not get the benefit of the War Veterans' Allowance Act after her husband's death if he had not resided here for 20 years or more before death.

The reduction in the residence qualification to 10 years is one which I think everyone will welcome but I would point out to the minister that in reducing the residence qualification to 10 years in this legislation he did only what was done this session already in the case of the other social welfare legislation affecting the recipients of old age assistance, blind pensions and old age security. As hon. members know people can receive old age security even though they may not be British subjects and may not have given the service to this country which our ex-servicemen may have given.

In reducing the residence qualification in this legislation to 10 years as has been the case in the other social welfare legislation what he is really doing is putting war veterans on the same basis of qualification as the recipients of social welfare who have no special claim as veterans have. In view of the attitude the minister adopted in the past when in opposition I am certain he will want to give some extra consideration to the veterans who served their country and to the dependents of veterans and putting them on exactly the same basis with those in receipt of social welfare could not have seemed to him generous, to say the least.

The next subject dealt with is the amount to be charged as income against a veteran in respect of a residence which he may own. The Canadian Legion has recommended that the value of the residence not to be so charged be placed at $9,000 so that no interest on this sum should be counted as income. The bill before us proposes raising this amount to $8,000. In view of the fact there has been a rise of approximately 187 per cent in the value of homes since the original amount was set at $4,000 I feel that an increase to $10,000 or $11,000 might have been justified. I think the Legion was extremely reasonable in suggesting $9,000 and I feel the minister should have gone at least that far. However, setting the value at $8,000 will mean an increase of $2,000 over the present amount and this will be helpful and, I am sure, appreciated.

I come now to the question of absence from Canada in regard to affecting receipt of war veterans allowance. Although I will deal with this question more fully at the conclusion of these remarks I want at this time to observe that here again the minister simply followed what has been done with regard to the other social welfare legislation. In going only this far the minister has not gone nearly as far as he and his colleagues insisted should be done when they were in opposition as I will draw to his attention in a minute or so.

I have already mentioned the fact that the minister offered as an explanation for not referring this bill to a committee the desirability of getting these cheques out as soon as possible. I appreciate what he said in regard to war veterans allowance cheques not being issued more or less automatically as old age security cheques are because I realize that any change in the law as to the basic allowance or ceilings entails a great deal of work in calculating the amount to be paid to each veteran. But I also have no doubt that the officials of his department are already lining things up on the basis of the proposed amendments and I suggest that referring this legislation to a committee would not delay getting the cheques into the hands of the veteran very much if at all.

I received in the mail last night a copy of the submission to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the cabinet prepared by the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League. This is a most carefully prepared submission and if a committee had been set up I am sure representatives of the Legion would have been glad to appear before it to adduce reasons for the position they have taken with regard to the various matters affected by the legislation. Looking at the situation as sympathetically as I can from the minister's viewpoint I fail to see why he did not agree to refer this bill to a committee where the positions taken by the various veterans organizations could have been presented to it. This could have been done without delaying the other business of the house. Dealing with the bill in the house with no reference to a committee means that it cannot receive the careful attention we all feel it deserves unless we are going to hold up other business.

Mr. Brooks: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member except to say that the president of the Canadian Legion told me only yesterday that they did not desire to have a veterans affairs committee this session; they did not think that it was necessary.

Mr. Tucker: I can understand the minister feeling that he should pay some attention to that, but in view of the fact that so many of their representations are not being carried out,—

Mr. Brooks: Not too many.

Mr. Tucker: —their requests are not being carried out, and in view of the fact that there is certainly a very real possibility of an election—I do not say it is justified by the situation, but judging by the remarks of the Prime Minister that an election may come at any time and the remarks of the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) in Toronto recently that we are in the midst of a campaign—I am rather surprised at the Canadian Legion not wanting to press for the things they ask for in their brief if they knew what a short distance in some respects the government was going in carrying out some of their requests.

Mr. Brooks: They are not as susceptible to rumours as members of the opposition.

Mr. Tucker: I hope my hon. friend is right because I think—the Gallup poll indicates it—that the vast majority of the people of this country expect the government to carry out some of their promises in regard to veterans, in regard to the position of the farmers—

Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: —and in regard to these matters on which they made very specific promises to the people of Canada. I think they expect the present government, if in carrying out those promises they get the support of a majority in the house, to stay right here and do that job and not be looking—

Mr. Cardiff: We are doing that.

Mr. Tucker: —for a dissolution before they have done it. I am sure that is what the people of Canada want and it is perhaps what the Canadian Legion expects.

Mr. Charlton: They wanted it before.

Mr. Tucker: I am just wondering whether we should not pay some attention to what the Prime Minister said. He has stated on more than one occasion that an election may come at very short notice. What is going to happen in regard to the veterans if this happens? The things they have asked the government for could not then possibly be brought into effect until after the election was held and a session called after the election. I really wonder whether they realize what seems to be the thinking of some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I hope that that thinking does not prevail, because I do not think it is in accordance with the wishes of the people of Canada. They have elected the hon. members and while they are in office and carrying out their promises —in the light of the statement on the throne speech debate made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) I agree with the hon. member there would be no excuse in the world for calling an election before some of these things are done—I take it from what he said—

Mr. Cardiff: Don't worry about it.

Mr. Tucker: I need to worry about it because I am here speaking on behalf of the veterans and I must take seriously the statement of your own leader.

Mr. Maloney: He is a veteran.

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friend is suggesting that I should pay no attention to the statement of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Cardiff: I did not say that; I said not to worry about it.

Mr. Tucker: He said I should not worry about it.

Mr. Cardiff: You are not worrying about that; you are worrying about the calling of an election.

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friend is suggesting I do not worry. I think my work in this house on behalf of the veterans will bear examination. I have done my best, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is this. I have every faith in what the Minister of Veterans Affairs said. I believe he has hopes of bringing in a bill dealing with all these veterans matters and referring it to a veterans committee at the next session which I presume will be held after Christmas. At that time all of these things could be gone into. If one were absolutely sure that that is going to happen, the situation would be different. I am not suggesting that the minister does not expect it to happen but I must say that when the minister said what he did—and I hope he will forgive me for saying this—there is more reason for the veterans and the country now to expect that there will be no dissolution unless it is forced on the government, until the Prime Minister's promises are carried out.

The next question that I said I would come back to—I do not want to take too long on it—is the question of the over-all maximum annual income which is allowed to the single veteran. As was pointed out by the minister, that maximum over-all annual income allowed to an unmarried veteran, without a child, or not residing with a child, has been raised from $960 to $1,080. The bill proposes to raise it that much. What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It means this. We will take a veteran who is over 70 and whose wife is over 70. Many of them are in that position. They will draw between them in old age security the amount of $1,320.

I started speaking about the single veteran and will deal with his position first. The single veteran will draw old age security in the sum of $660 and under this legislation he is entitled to draw $70 a month, which makes $840. Now that would give him an income of $1,500; but the difficulty is that the over-all limit placed in this bill is only $1,080. In other words, by putting this over-all limit in the bill at $1,080, it means that the recipient over 70 on old age security cannot draw in war veterans allowance a matter of $420 of the amount provided by this parliament. That has been criticized by the members opposite from time to time. For example, I would refer to the remarks of the Prime Minister, when he was in opposition, about the right of a person in receipt of old age security to get that and the war veterans allowance in full.

The Prime Minister, when he was in the opposition, spoke about this in this house on July 12, 1956, and I find it hard to understand how a government newly elected should ignore the words spoken in this house by their own Prime Minister before the election. Here is what he said; as reported at page 5897 of Hansard:

> I should now like to say a word or two with reference to a matter that has been discussed on previous occasions, namely, war veterans allowances. As the situation is at the present time, the ceiling on income for single veterans is $840 and for married veterans $1,440.

This is the present Prime Minister, then one of the spokesmen for the opposition, speaking:

> I find it hard to understand why the amount should not be increased to the level of that amount which, under the Income Tax Act, becomes exempt from income taxation. This question has been asked the minister before: where is the sense of fairness in this situation? Everyone is entitled to the old age pension, whether it is the Prime Minister who receives it or somebody else. Every citizen in our country is entitled to it at 70 years of age. Why should those in receipt of war veterans allowance find the amount of their old age pensions in effect reduced on the achievement of the age of 70 years? That is something that one hears universally complained about. It is something that is unjust for, by reason of the present ceilings, it places those who served and their dependents in a second-class position with respect to others who did not serve. It brings about a state of affairs that is unfair and unjust and it constitutes a discrimination that cannot be justified.

He went on to say:

> I ask the minister once more—as he has been asked on previous occasions—this question: why should such a state of affairs be permitted to continue?

In the words of the leader of the present government, in the words of their own leader, I ask why this situation should be permitted to continue which he states is unjust? The government has the power to bring in a bill to remedy this injustice about which their leader spoke with such eloquence in the house. Why have they not done so? Did they not mean what they said at that time? What is stopping them from doing it now? Nobody in the house has told them that they would not support them in that view. Certainly we expected it because it was put plainly not only by the present Prime Minister but by other members. For example, the present house leader, speaking on April 12, had this to say, as found at page 3477 of Hansard, just last spring. At that time the present Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Green), then in the opposition, said:

> So far as war veterans allowances are concerned, some increases have been made of which we all approve, but the needs have not been faced as they should have been. The ceilings on permissive income have been increased somewhat, but when the new parliament meets they will have to be raised to such an extent that when a recipient reaches 70 years of age he will get his full old age security payment without any reduction in his war veterans allowance.

This is the pledge of one of my hon. friend's colleagues. The minister will not say that promise has been carried out. He cannot. He did not pretend it was being carried out. What I do not understand is why, now that they have the chance to do so, they should not carry out the promise which they held out and on the basis of which they now occupy the position they do.

I have known the present Prime Minister for a very long time, and in effect in the campaign he said, "I am not making these promises in any irresponsible way; I am making promises that we intend to carry out." Now, are you carrying them out in this bill? Here is where the minister was speaking.

An hon. Member: What did you do in the last 22 years?

Mr. Tucker: We are not talking about what the Liberals did, we are talking about what you are doing after being elected to office.

Mr. Cardiff: I told you not to worry about it.

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friend says not to worry about it. Is it any wonder that I worry when we meet right after the election and the promises made by the present Prime Minister are not being carried out?

An hon. Member: You did not seem to worry too much about these matters.

Mr. Fraser: After the 1953 election you did not keep your promises.

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friends asked for support on the basis that the Liberals should have done this but now when they are in a position to act they are not doing it. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it not much worse for people who get elected on the basis of certain promises to ignore them?

Mr. Fraser: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tucker: You can laugh all you want to but I am sure that the hon. member who has laughed—I will not name him—was one of those who was most loud in his denunciation of the unfairness of this thing.

Mr. Fraser: Certainly I was.

Mr. Tucker: Why do you not get up now and say that you are not carrying out the promises you made?

Mr. Fraser: We have not been in office six months.

Mr. Tucker: Yes, but this is the first step you are taking now in regard to veterans legislation.

An hon. Member: Emergency legislation.

Mr. Tucker: You could have put this in the bill just as well as what you have. Is my hon. friend suggesting that it would take any longer to write into the bill a figure of $1,500 than $1,080? Does he require more than six months to make that change?

An hon. Member: You didn't do it in 22 years.

Mr. Tucker: As a matter of fact, hon. gentlemen opposite should not think that they are going to get away with not keeping the promises they made to the people by talking about what we did or did not do. They are in office now. They are the ones to whom the people are looking, and I tell them that if they proceed so flagrantly and defiantly to break their promises with regard to this matter the people will not think very much of them.

An hon. Member: Are you voting against the legislation?

Mr. Tucker: I must not let my good friend, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, get off scot free. I must admit that he was more cautious than some of the others over there. Here is what he said when speaking on July 6, 1956, as found at page 5751 of Hansard:

> I want to emphasize this afternoon that one of the first things to which the Department of Veterans Affairs should give attention is this matter of increasing the ceiling on the war veterans allowance. For instance, take the veteran who has reached the age of 70 years. If he has no other income but his war veterans allowance, owing to the ceiling he can obtain only part of his war veterans allowance because he is also a recipient of the old age pension.

Let me repeat what the Minister said:

I want to emphasize this afternoon that one of the first things to which the Department of Veterans Affairs should give attention is this matter of increasing the ceiling on the war veterans allowance. For instance, take the veteran who has reached the age of 70 years. If he has no other income but his war veterans allowance, owing to the ceiling he can obtain only part of his war veterans allowance because he is also a recipient of the old age pension. If he is single he can receive a total of only $820 a year.

He goes on to say:

Then there is the disability pensioner. These things are not new. I know hon. members have heard them discussed in the veterans committee. We brought in amendments and pressed for these considerations in 1952 and 1955.

Mr. Brooks: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Tucker: Well, the minister said there that the person should not receive a smaller amount of old age security on account of being able to draw the war veterans allowance.

Mr. Brooks: I said we should increase the ceiling, which we have done.

Mr. Tucker: What my hon. friend pressed for, and he will not deny it, was that these people should be able to get both in full. This is what they committed themselves to. I must say I think hon. members opposite should be so anxious. I can say things about their government that they cannot say, and I think they should be anxious that all possible is said to see that their government carries out the promises which they held out to the people in the election campaign. Instead of some of the backbenchers looking at me frowningly and finding fault, they should be saying, "Well, after all, this should be said to our government". We would like to have the government carry out its promises.

What is the position with regard to married veterans in this regard? This is one of the main things brought out by hon. members opposite when they were in the opposition. Take the ceiling for a married veteran. It is set at $1,740. If he is an old age security recipient he can get a total of $1,760. I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that when all they had to do was raise it another $20 to carry out their promises to the old married veteran they would not have actually appeared to break their promise for the sake of that amount. But they have not even gone that length with respect to the old veteran.

I am glad that they went as far as they did because I think there is a great deal to be said for what the Prime Minister, then in the opposition, and the present Minister of Public Works and others said about it. They said that old age security was paid to everybody as a matter of right, that the war veterans contributed to it and receiving it should not cut down what they would get by way of war veterans allowance.

But the thing that I find difficult to understand is what prevented the minister and the government from carrying out these promises. This is the question. They used to say, "Why does the government not do these things?" They used to hint there was perhaps some hidden hand. Surely any such alleged influence has not begun to operate already on the government which is so brand new in office. The brand has practically not worn off yet, and here they are not carrying out this fundamental promise.

Mr. Fraser: The hon. member is trying to belittle something he knows is good.

Mr. Tucker: I said this was the sort of bill that has been brought into parliament over and over again. We made this difference. Invariably, except in the session this spring, when we brought proposals into parliament we referred them to the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. Brooks: Not always.

Mr. Tucker: Almost invariably, I will say. Admittedly, I think there was some reason for not doing it in this spring's session before the election. However, I do not recall any time prior to that when this course was not followed. I do not insist that is so, but I say almost invariably this sort of legislation was referred to a veterans affairs committee. Almost all parties thought this procedure was good. I know the minister was one of those who thought it was a splendid thing because you could get representations from organizations of ex-service men; you could get representations from those in touch with the veterans through welfare organizations who know how hard it is to live on the amount granted by this legislation; you could get representations from those officials who are responsible for raising the money, and so on. Then, the veterans affairs committee, having given far more time to the study of this measure than we can possibly give in this house and do the other necessary business, could then make representations to the government.

As the hon. member knows, time and again the previous government acceded to those representations at times in a very great way. The other day I referred to an occasion I believe in 1948 when the government brought in a bill providing a 10 per cent increase in pension. As a result partly of representations before the veterans affairs committee the increase was raised to 25 per cent. I feel the minister, being the person who has championed that way of doing business, should not refuse to do the same thing and thus be the first one to break that great tradition. He was one of those who insisted on that course.

I do not believe he really considers that if this had been sent to the veterans affairs committee the measure would have been delayed more than one week. This would not have delayed the payment because the measure is effective from November 1. It would not have changed the total amount the veteran would receive. I do agree these men should get these cheques before Christmas. If I thought there was a chance any substantial number would not get their cheques before Christmas I would feel differently. However, I have such great confidence in the department over which the minister presides, their efficiency and their ability to do a great job under pressure, that I am satisfied if the measure had been referred to the committee the cheques would have been delayed only a matter of three or four days at the most. They would have been out in plenty of time for Christmas.

I should like to refer to the question of permitting absence from Canada for only six months. As has been stated already, this only goes as far as the social welfare legislation we have already passed. I do not believe the minister would have wanted to limit himself in that regard, and I do not know why he did limit it to that. I shall not take the time to give citations, but the minister knows that the members of his own party took the attitude that it was not treating the Canadian veteran fairly to cut off his allowance when he had to go outside Canada to preserve his health. When this government introduces a measure and does not go any farther than they have just gone in respect of old age pensions, old age assistance, then they are going back on the representations they made in veterans affairs committees and on the floor of this house that where health reasons took a person out of this country he should not have his allowance cut off.

Had the minister referred this measure to the veterans affairs committee it might have been possible for this government to do as previous governments did, reconsider these provisions and do a better job for the veteran. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that my good old friend and colleague, after all the work he has done for veterans, should have been the first one to bring in a bill which does not carry out some of these important matters. I hope that during such time as he may occupy the bench he occupies now he will not be put in that position again.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group will continue their non-partisan approach to veterans affairs matters, and will approach them in a spirit of co-operation. I must say I was very interested in the review of the legislation made by the minister. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). We support this bill on the principle that three-quarters of a loaf is better than none. We are very glad that the amendments contained in the bill will benefit the veteran.

I must say, however, before proceeding that I thought the preceding speaker indicated a quite unnecessary measure or superfluity of righteous indignation.

Mr. Tucker: Only the members of the C.C.F. are virtuous; we all recognize that.

Mr. Herridge: I can quite truthfully say that the two small groups at this end of the house are the only ones who have fully kept their promises to the veterans of this country. I listened with interest to the hon. member because I have been on veterans affairs committees over a period of twelve years—I would advise anyone who wants to get the history of this question to read some of the remarks of the hon. member and his colleagues in the house and in the veterans affairs committee—and I remember when other members of this house were trying to get amendments to the legislation in the direction in which these amendments go. It does make a great deal of difference what the circumstances are and on which side of the house you sit. One could easily understand, Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation as it exists today, that we in this group have a very virtuous feeling because we have never broken our word.

I am not going to deal with the sections that bring some benefit to the veterans and their dependents in this country, because I am going to be reasonably brief. I can deal with those when we are dealing with the bill in committee. But I do want to say a few words about several matters in which the Legion is interested. In the Legion brief which arrived in our mail boxes yesterday evening there is the suggestion of $140 per month for married persons, and that is a good objective for us all. In so far as the ceilings are concerned, which is a matter in which I have been interested for quite a number of years, I am sorry that the government has not seen fit to accept the representations of its former colleagues in the house and in the veterans affairs committee and raise the single veteran's ceiling to $1,200 and the married to $2,000. However, we are happy to see the ceiling raised to the extent it is.

I was particularly glad to note when the minister gave his explanation that he indicated that, as was the practice in the past, casual earnings would not be included in finding the total ceiling. The Legion has asked for that, and has requested an exemption of $9,000 for the veteran's equity in his house. The bill provides for $8,000. I do think the government could have gone that extra $1,000. I do not know why they stopped at $8,000 and did not provide for a $9,000 equity in a house. However there again I was very glad to hear the explanation from the minister that the $8,000 is not necessarily the real value of the house but that it represents either the veteran's equity in the house or the assessed value and I think it will be of great benefit to many veterans in this country.

There is one group in Canada to which I was sorry thought had not been given when these amendments were being considered and that is our merchant seamen. In that respect I want to read briefly from a most recent brief because I think it puts the case very well indeed for the merchant seamen. Consideration of this group has come up before the veterans affairs committee on a number of occasions in past years and there are many people in this country who fail to realize the service that many of these men rendered to Canada during the war. However, because they served in the merchant service, with the exception of certain rehabilitation and education credits and things of that sort, they did not receive the general benefits of the veterans charter. I am one who still believes that consideration should be given to their case and I think it is particularly appropriate that consideration be given in the first instance to an amendment to this act. On that account I will read from page 28 of the brief presented to the Prime Minister of Canada and the cabinet by the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League in November 1957 as follows:

> Earlier representations for veterans' benefits for merchant seamen have always been primarily concerned with rehabilitation benefits such as re-establishment credits, educational training, etc., rather than with war veterans allowance. We believe, bearing in mind the desperate situation of some of these men who had excellent war service both on the high seas and, in some instances, on the landing beaches, that at this time the arguments advanced against providing any benefits, namely, that they receive more pay than members of the armed forces, might be considered balanced out against the rehabilitation benefits that the other veterans receive. We believe that these veterans should be granted war veterans allowance so that the country for whom they ran great risks in time of war might not leave them and their families in dire poverty when they are no longer able to provide for themselves.

I heartily agree with the representations of the Canadian Legion in this respect. The brief goes on to say:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that the War Veterans' Allowance Act be amended to include these veterans of the merchant navy and the T. 124 service.

I do urge the minister and the government to give further consideration to these representations of the Legion on behalf of the merchant seamen because I know personally, although their numbers are not large, there are some of these men who would benefit materially from assistance under this act.

Now I would like to say a word or two on a matter which I raised previously. I think everyone will appreciate the amendment in the bill providing for six months absence from Canada annually for the veteran in receipt of war veterans allowance. This puts him on the same basis as a person in receipt of old age security. I do however, feel that consideration should particularly be given to those veterans who find it necessary to leave Canada on account of their health. I mentioned one such case the other day but I will mention it again. I am speaking of a man who was advised by the doctor who was in charge of his case to go to Mexico because of a serious lung condition so that he might alleviate the suffering which he would have to experience for the rest of his days. This veteran had to go to Mexico and did go to Mexico and later died in Mexico, but of course was unable to receive the war veterans allowance.

I do think that if the government does not see fit to make the allowance payable to veterans who wish to go out of Canada generally it should give further consideration to the payment of an allowance to the veteran who has to leave this country on account of his health when he has a medical certificate from the medical officer of the department to this effect. I am urging this further consideration because of the tragic circumstances in cases such as the one I have mentioned and from time to time there must be quite a few such cases across the country.

I would like to bring a further matter to the attention of the minister or his parliamentary assistant, who I most sincerely congratulate. You know it is very hard to get used to looking at a person full-face when you have been looking at his profile for so many years but I am very glad he has received the appointment and I know he will do a good job. Now I want to get my amendment in.

The case I wish to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant to the minister is the case of a veteran who is married but owing to very unusual circumstances which I do not wish to mention here has had to live away from his wife. He has maintained her throughout the years but under the act, as it now stands, because he is not living with his spouse he will be paid war veterans allowance as a single veteran. Now I am just going to quote his letter:

> Many thanks for sending along the war veterans allowance forms. I promptly filled them out, witnessed by a J.P. and sent them off to Vancouver. They acknowledged receipt of them and a few weeks later their representative called in to see me to get a little more information. More than anything he wanted me to clarify my marital state, as I had stated on the form that I was married, but my wife had not signed the form, nor was any statement of her financial status. I explained to him that on my side of the form I had stated that I was not and had not been living with my wife for years, though I had and still am supporting her. He told me then, that that statement definitely put me into the single class, because the act clearly states that a married man must be living with his wife.

And then he goes on to say he cannot understand this discrimination and asks that something should be done about it. I mention this case as only one of several of a similar nature with which I have met during my experience as a member of the house. Here is another rather unfortunate case. As far as this man is concerned he is maintaining his wife under very unusual circumstances. He is a very fine type of old soldier, a pioneer settler who came from the old country in the early days of this century, went over in the first world war and had an exceptional military record. Just because of the present wording of the act he is not allowed to receive war veterans allowance as a married man.

I do urge the minister to give consideration to an amendment to the act whereby a veteran who has separated from his wife because of unusual circumstances, but who is still maintaining her, be allowed to receive war veterans allowance as a married person.

Now I have very little more to say at this time. I do not wish to detain the house too long since I know there are other members who have a few words to say on this very important legislation. I must say, however, that I am heartily in agreement with the increase suggested in order to bring the salaries of these officials in line with other officials of similar status and I am very pleased to see that provision included in the bill.

I also wish to draw to the attention of the parliamentary assistant that I realize that it is going to create an immense amount of work for the staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs and that a good many of them will be working overtime in order to see that the veterans and dependents concerned receive the benefits of this legislation as soon as possible. I do suggest to the minister that these good people who put in these extra hours of labour to bring these benefits to their comrades should receive every consideration around Christmas time and have their holiday extended.

One more suggestion: we are so constantly amending veterans legislation that it is almost impossible to be fully informed on the facts unless one has a consolidated copy of the act. Would the minister be able to have a consolidated edition of the War Veterans' Allowance Act published by the Queen's Printer at the first opportunity? I ask this because this is one of the acts that a member always needs to be able to pull out of his brief case and consult, together with the Pension Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act and so on. One has to carry these things about because one is so frequently asked questions regarding them, and I do want to suggest to the minister that he should make it possible for us to have a consolidated copy of the act at the first opportunity.

While this legislation only goes part of the way—I think I should be safe in saying it goes about three-quarters of the way in the direction the Legion would like to go—we are very pleased to see it placed before us at this time. The measure has our most hearty support. It will improve the living conditions of a good many of our comrades and provide benefits for a good many others who are being overlooked today, and I am sure, in general, it brings a further measure of justice to the veterans and their dependents who have served this country in the days gone by.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, we in this group also, support the principle of the bill. We recognize it is a definite step forward and that it will prove of considerable assistance to veterans as a whole. While we recognize that it does not go quite as far as we would wish, we are also aware that we cannot expect Conservative legislation to be perfect no matter how good the intention might be.

We do recognize, though, that this is a step in the right direction. The minister and his parliamentary assistant have long been members of the committee on veterans affairs and have from time to time been outspoken on matters dealt with by this particular legislation. They have said a great deal in the past and many of their utterances have been quoted to them already; for that reason it is not my intention to dwell too much on that aspect of the debate.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I was somewhat disappointed in the opening remarks made by the minister, for I felt he might have taken the opportunity to give us a great deal more information than he did, information which might have proven very useful in our debate today. Certainly, if it had done nothing else, it might have shortened the amount of discussion on second reading, because so many hon. members who spoke yesterday were in complete darkness as to exactly what the bill contained, with the result that what they had to say yesterday, or part of it at least, will probably be repeated today. This absence of information with regard to the exact changes brought about in the bill is going to cause some hon. members to spend considerable time repeating some of the things which have been said before.

It is unfortunate that there is no standing committee on veterans affairs. I listened carefully to what the minister said last evening regarding his continued interest in the establishment of such a standing committee —I see his parliamentary assistant nodding assent, which means, of course, that he, too, is interested in it—I also recall the minister saying that we were dealing this session with unfinished business and that there was therefore no time to go ahead and set up this particular committee. Well, that may be true.

The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) speaking a few moments ago said that when his party was in power they invariably referred legislation of this kind to such a committee. Then, of course, he had to qualify that in the usual Liberal fashion by adding that there was no time to follow this practice before the last election. I can appreciate both points of view but if there were a standing committee on veterans affairs, as members of all parties have urged from time to time, we should not be facing this particular problem at the present time and the bill would be sent forward to receive more careful consideration than it will be given in present circumstances.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) make the remarks he did, and I was glad that his party will continue to be a non-partisan group with regard to such questions as this. My experience has been—and I am sure it has also been the experience of other hon. members—that this committee on veterans affairs has never been partisan in a political sense. We have tried to keep politics out of our discussions and secure for the veteran the type of legislation we thought was best for him. I am looking forward to an early spring session in which one of the first pieces of legislation to be brought forward will concern the setting up of a standing committee on veterans affairs for which all of us have clamoured for so many years.

In respect to the increases in the allowances, the fact that the government has seen fit to introduce legislation which would increase a single veterans allowance to $70 as requested in the Legion's brief is commendable. However, I note that the bill does not comply with the request that the married allowance should be increased to $140 despite the fact that the Legion, in presenting its case in writing—it could not, of course, be heard—showed us that the wages level had increased since 1955 from 141.7, and 149.4 in 1956, to 156.9 in 1957, a total rise of some 15.2 points in the wage index. This, in my view, indicates that if a wage earner in this country requires an increase relative to the wage received in 1955 amounting to such a figure, then certainly the war veterans might have expected that in all instances the increase awarded to them would be comparable.

As the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) pointed out yesterday when speaking on the resolution, the question of the permissive ceiling as between the disability pensioner and the war veteran who is able to work is causing us some concern. There is considerable discrimination in the provisions made in the two cases. However, considerable attention has been drawn to the fact that certain cabinet ministers have from time to time indicated their desire to bring the permissive ceiling on allowable earnings to $1,200 and $2,000, and there were many instances during the debate in which members referred to the record.

In this particular case may I refer the minister to page 5867 of Hansard for July 12 of last year, in which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), now Minister of Public Works had this to say:

> The Department of Finance in its wisdom has decided that $2,000 income should be exempt from taxation; in other words, that the family man requires that amount to exist and that he should not pay any tax on it. I suggest that the same ruling should be made with regard to the married recipient of war veterans allowance. It is a very good argument in support of raising this ceiling to the sum of $2,000 per year.

It is my recollection, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure it is the recollection of every member of that committee, that it was not just the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), or the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) or the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) who have from time to time urged this upon the government, but it was the case and it is the case today that the Canadian Legion in its briefs is continuing to urge this very same stand.

It is also true that a number of hon. members who are today backbenchers on the government side called for action in this regard. The hon. member for Rosthern referred to the utterances of the Prime Minister made on July 12, 1956.

Mr. McIvor: It is a good day.

Mr. Hahn: As recorded at page 5897 of Hansard of that date the Prime Minister called for this very same thing and, being the type of spokesman he is, he did it in no uncertain terms. We all recognize his straightforward method of speaking. He did not just say, "These are half-way measures and there is a possibility that these things should be done," but rather he called upon the government in unequivocal terms to take action in this regard. It was a demand made on the government of that day that the ceiling should be raised to $1,200 in the case of a single veteran and $2,000 in the case of a married veteran. I, too, am one of those who have spoken from time to time on this same subject as did members of the C.C.F. and other members in the Conservative group. I see no reason for the slight increase which is indicated in the schedule attached to the bill.

However, of even greater concern to me than the limit of $1,200 and $2,000 set on this matter is the discrimination we impose upon the veteran who is disabled and unable to find work because of his condition as compared with the receipts of the veteran who is able to work. Yesterday the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) drew to the attention of the house the fact that there was a difference in the amount. We did not know what the new changes would be until we heard what the minister had to say in introducing the bill but they do not do anything toward correcting this inequitable state of affairs.

I have prepared a comparative chart to indicate what the situation actually is and with your permission I would like to refer to it. A single veteran will receive a monthly rate of $840 under the new scale and will be permitted casual earnings of $600—that is if he can find a job that will pay him at the rate of $50 a month—and he has allowable earnings of up to $240 which would give him a total of $1,680. A single disability pensioner, on the other hand, if we were to assume his disability would be one based on the same rate as casual earnings of, let us say $50 a month, would be in receipt of $600. Under the terms of the bill before us he would be in receipt of a war veterans allowance of $480 which would give him a maximum total annual income of $1,080. In other words, we have a situation where a disabled veteran who probably requires additional money because he has to take taxis, hire assistance in doing his chores, pay for medicine and so on is allowed a maximum annual income of only $1,080 while the veteran who is capable of working is permitted to receive the full amount of the monthly rate for casual earnings as well as his allowance which would give him an income of $1,680, or a difference of $600, the amount of the casual earnings.

In the case of a married veteran the monthly rate is $120 which on the basis of 12 months would give him $1,440 a year. He is permitted casual earnings of $600 and with allowable earnings of $25 on the basis of 12 months he would have $300, or a total annual income of $2,340. In the case of the married disability pensioner in receipt of a pension equal to casual earnings he would receive $600 and with the war veterans allowance of $95 per month he would receive $1,140 or a total annual income of $1,740. He is in an equally unfortunate position as a single disability pensioner in that he will receive $600 less than an individual who is capable of working.

I am fully aware that the $600 represents the actual earnings of the individual who is able to work but I do not see why we should penalize the disabled veteran who through no fault of his own cannot take an occupation. He has probably put in the same length of service as his more fortunate fellow veteran but we have permitted the other chap who is capable of accepting employment an additional $600 a year. If the disability pensioner has an annuity it is charged against his war veterans allowance. The annuitant on a disability pension and the one eligible for war veterans allowance both are penalized in the same way.

The disability pensioner needs extras and requires the $600 the casual earner is permitted to earn. I would suggest that the act be changed and I would hope that the government will look forward to changing it in another year to make it possible for a disability pensioner in receipt of war veterans allowance to receive the equivalent of $50 per month as additional assistance to help him for he is very much in need.

The extension of the act to include veterans who had service in the United Kingdom only and who were not overseas is a welcome change. We in this group accept it as a forward step, one that has been called for over a period of years by the veterans and we are quite prepared to support it.

The question of the extension of the benefits of the act to widows whose husbands died before completing 20 years' residence is one that has interested many of us a great deal in years gone by and we have proposed that there should be a change to bring more of these women into the group that would be eligible for receipt of the allowance. We are particularly pleased to see this change.

Early this year I made an inquiry of the ministry which appeared as question 2 on the order paper in which I asked how many widows of imperial war veterans had been residents in Canada for more than ten years but whose husbands predeceased them before they became eligible for the war veterans allowance as provided for under the War Veterans' Allowance Act. I was advised that an estimated 8,600 widows were in this position. I take it that at least those 8,600 widows will be in receipt of this addition. Before the wives of imperial war veterans organization were represented by the Canadian Legion they presented briefs on this question from time to time pointing out the desirability of making a change in the act.

The deletion of clause 8 will prove advantageous and desirable in so far as assistance to orphans is concerned.

Then there is the matter of the increase in the equity in the home from $6,000 to $8,000 at today's assessed values. It is true the legion asked first for $9,000. Probably this is one of the points on which the government has not gone quite so far as we should like to see them go.

I listened to the hon. member for Kootenay West very closely when he spoke on widows allowances being extended. I certainly agree that there are instances such as he mentioned, which are unfortunate ones. I am pleased to see that a change has been made in the legislation in that respect.

There is the question that was dealt with by one of the Newfoundland members, namely the merchant navy, which gives me some concern. As I said earlier, I have been a member of special committees on veterans affairs for some years past but never during the time that I was a member did we ever have representations from the merchant navy in respect of this particular problem. If there is no other reason, that is reason enough to warrant the setting up of this committee and making it permanent so that we can call in witnesses, as the minister has told us would have to be done, in order to get their point of view to enable us to familiarize ourselves more particularly with the problems involved. I am told that the merchant navy did make direct representation some years ago but no action was taken at that time and since then we have heard nothing from them. However, the fact that the question is raised in the Legion brief indicates that it is causing the Legion members some concern. I would say it is a problem that requires some consideration. The only way in which we can give it proper consideration is to go ahead with the job, set up the committee and give it the attention that it should have at that time. We can determine then what should be done to assist those people, if anything.

I have nothing further to say, Mr. Speaker, other than to repeat, as I indicated earlier, that we are very happy to see these progressive and forward steps being taken and I trust we shall continue to see the progression that will finally give the Legion members the type of legislation that they have the right to expect from this government.

(Translation):

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to delay consideration of this bill unduly, but, having had the privilege of sitting on the standing committee on veterans affairs, I believe I should congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) and his parliamentary assistant (Mr. Dinsdale) on their accession to the exalted position they now hold.

No one who heard the minister at the time he sat on the committee and who takes into account his statement in the house can deny that he has been giving close attention to veterans' problems. He was familiar with all details of the legislation applying to them and made a great many suggestions to the government of the day to improve the lot of veterans. We can therefore rightfully expect that the minister, now that he happens to be sitting on the opposite side of the house, will very shortly put into practice all the suggestions he put forward in the committee as well as in the house.

All veterans, those in my constituency, or elsewhere in the province of Quebec, or anywhere in Canada, will certainly be glad of the financial assistance provided by this bill. I must say, speaking as a veteran myself, that I will gladly vote for this legislation. However, we should not lose sight of the fact that the proposal now under review is, after all, only an amendment to existing legislation and that even before we were called upon to consider this particular bill, our veterans' legislation was considered to be among the most complete and adequate provisions of this type since it was such as to satisfy a great many of the needs of our veterans. I am not prepared to claim that it was perfect. No legislation can be that. I will even go so far as to say that there is still a great deal to be done to improve the lot of our veterans. But on the other hand we have every right to expect that the minister and his parliamentary assistant will very shortly see to it that a good many of their past suggestions are now to be put into effect.

I was happy to hear the member from Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) put before the house the views expressed by the Legion, both orally and in writing.

They show that while veterans accept the proposed legislation and the promises made by this government, they saw fit to express their appreciation and gratitude to the former government. The majority of our people will not be lulled nor blinded by details, and we know that they will not forget all that was done in the past with regard to this legislation. However, there is always room for improvement.

We should not overlook the fact that, if the government is now in a position to increase the allowances, it is because of the former government's unremitting endeavours, over the years, to improve this act and provide a maximum of security for our veterans.

In my opinion, it must not be forgotten that this legislation rests on foundations of which we Liberals have reason to be proud.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the house to the fact that one of the most controversial questions in the past has been that of the setting up of a standing committee of veterans affairs and that the hon. minister himself was among the most ardent supporters of that proposition. Well, Mr. Speaker, you cannot have it both ways. What was good before June 10 remains so and I contend that the hon. minister, to be consistent, should at the very first opportunity set up that standing committee so that all who are interested in discussing veterans problems may do so. I am sure that if we had had the opportunity to hear the representatives of veterans organizations, this bill would certainly be much better. I therefore hope that in the near future the hon. minister will set up that standing committee on veterans affairs.

(Text):

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the War Veterans' Allowance Act will I am sure be well received by all veterans organizations, all veterans and the public generally. I do not wish to delay second reading of the bill by going into the provisions or by any lengthy discussion. The purpose of the bill was concisely and clearly stated by the minister when speaking on the motion for second reading. I felt rather sorry that all members were not seated in the house at the time because I know that all members are interested in this subject. I know the minister's words will be read in Hansard fully and completely by hon. members.

I should like to say something in passing about the Canadian Legion. I realize that there are other veterans organizations representing the interests of veterans, but since its beginning the Legion has represented to the government of the day the feelings of veterans generally as to what legislation was required in order to deal fairly with everybody. Injustices and difficulties do come up from time to time, and as long as the department and the government receive the Legion briefs I am sure the Legion will continue to present them.

A brief was presented in November, 1956, and I believe this bill brings into effect many of the recommendations then made. As one hon. member has just stated, a brief was also received in the mail today by members which brings up to date many of the problems. In its latest brief the Legion has even discussed the problems raised by the launching into outer space of the Russian satellites.

In commending the minister on bringing forward this legislation, which has the effect of complying with the promises made, I want to say that I know that the present amendments will fill the immediate and pressing need. However, I urge the minister to continue to give consideration to all inequalities and difficulties that now exist and that will be coming up from time to time in connection with the war veterans allowance.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I should like to warn the house that I am representing the minister and that if I speak now—

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, on this, the first occasion that I have risen in the house, I assure you that I shall be very brief for two good reasons. The first is that the speakers who have preceded me have in no way indicated that any of them will do anything other than support the bill. Second, I would not want it said of me that I had held up the progress of the bill through the house, because I am extremely anxious that its benefits reach the veterans concerned.

It is most appropriate at this time that we should be considering this type of legislation on the very eve of the 39th anniversary of the day on which these old veterans, then young men, brought to a successful conclusion the first world war. In so far as the bill is concerned, I am not going to comment on it except to note that in most respects it implements a great deal—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.
An act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCES, INCOME, COVERAGE, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Brooks for the second reading of Bill No. 28, to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, this bill serves two purposes, firstly it closes a great many of the gaps in the war veterans legislation, and secondly it extends in at least one way—in regard to the war veterans who served in England—the number of veterans who will receive some of these benefits. It is a recognized fact that the veterans of the first world war aged rather prematurely; one has only to refer to the "last post column" in the magazine known as The Legionary where by descriptions, numbers, etc. one can see designated the first world war veterans who have passed on. In many cases their ages are listed.

[Mr. Kennedy.]

It would seem that the maximum allotted life span for veterans of the first world war is three score years. We must recognize that even the youngest veteran of the first world war is approaching that age and therefore we must suppose that these veterans will be a fast diminishing group.

This legislation provides for additional aid to those who spent years in England. I cannot speak for the conditions in that country during the first war as I was not there, but in the second war it appeared to me—I am now speaking for the soldiers—that the strain was perhaps as great as it was in many areas of action. It was not uncommon in England to look around to find your circle of close friends greying very rapidly, even in a matter of a few months. I suggest even under the strain in our House of Commons there are some who have not become grey haired yet. These troops to arrive in England, which was really the goal set for those who joined the army—to get overseas as they called it—first of all had to undergo certain hazards. Those hazards were about the same in both wars; submarine infested waters to cross and so on. In most periods of the last war it was not much less hazardous than during the great war. When they joined and went overseas some of them were married and left families behind, but all of them left loved ones behind and perhaps most of them their business interests. There was naturally a certain amount of strain upon them as they put in the months or years during which they were detached from the life to which they were accustomed.

There is another aspect of this matter. When these men returned, having been torn loose from familiar things, they found themselves in their later years, having been subject to many perils, in many cases more or less broken in health, because in the first war medical science was not advanced to the state it has reached in the last 10 or 15 years. It was not until their later years that they could settle down to their own family life. Then we find the veteran, late in life with his family at the stage where they needed a higher education. This same veteran had long been taught that the next generation must be well educated and here he was in perhaps the poorest financial shape of his whole lifetime and having to deal with this problem. He was therefore in very bad shape to attend to providing for his old age.

I do not intend to say any more on this subject but I do want us all to remember that in this generation we have come into a great inheritance in this country. This inheritance came to us fairly easily but those who preceded us have not found things so easy. I think this thought was best expressed in the words of that great statesman when he said that certain things were attained through blood, sweat and tears. Now in my opinion we have gained our inheritance through the blood of our warriors, the sweat of our pioneers and the tears of those who have had to undergo unnecessary hardships.

In listening to the debate yesterday I caught the phrase, "so long as we have veterans we will have problems." I think this is a significant phrase and I would put it this way: Many of us have no problems compared to the problems of these older veterans. Furthermore, if we did not have these veterans we would have many problems without the power to resolve them. We must also remember that the men in the first war brought this country to a state of nationhood. Many members will recall that years ago the prime minister of the day in attendance at The Hague was asked "Whom do you represent?" He answered "I represent 60,000 dead men." That was the beginning of Canada's nationhood.

In conclusion we should remember that all these veterans gave years of their lives willingly and those who took part in these wars knew not where they were going. No matter in what small way they served, to them it was their greatest hour.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to a matter that has recently appeared in the press. I am pleased to say that a dear lady named Mrs. MacFarlane who comes from my home town of Truro has been named to lay a wreath as the representative of the Silver Cross mothers of Canada.

There is no person I know who is better qualified to do this. Mrs. MacFarlane lost her husband and three sons in two world wars, and I hope as people pause to remember our glorious dead they will also find a place in their hearts to keep in mind the living.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the minister is trying to live up to all the nice things that have been said about him. Since I came to this house I have not had the pleasure of making his acquaintance, but I have heard much of him in the past 10 years or so, and I realize that we have in this minister a man well versed in veterans affairs and, moreover, a man who is entirely sympathetic to the veterans cause.

I will repeat what I said the other day, that I would rather dream of the future than dwell on the history of the past. Thus it is that I am more interested in the minister's proposals and their implications than in whatever he is alleged to have said in the past. After all, Mr. Speaker, we are told that by their fruits ye shall know them, and as time passes we shall find out whether the present minister is going to live up to all the nice things that have been said about him, and we sincerely hope that he shall continue to have the confidence of this house in so far as the cause of the veterans is concerned.

We have Bill No. 28 before us now, and it is a step in the right direction. I say this because it represents an injection of purchasing power, however small, into the hands of consumers, and Canada will benefit as a result. But Canada would have benefited to a much greater extent had the steps taken under this bill been longer and more generous.

I am still unable to comprehend why old age security should not be available to veterans in addition to war veterans allowance. Old age security is given by Canada to all of her citizens who have reached the age of 70, and is a recognition of their service to Canada based merely on the fact that they have lived in Canada for at least 10 years. Ex-servicemen and women have rendered a service to their country which is beyond normal. Their need has been recognized under this act now before us. This is an income predicated on an extraordinary service and in consequence it should not be utilized as a means to debar its recipients from receiving a dividend payable for a normal contribution to the welfare of our country.

I would point out to the minister that many persons eligible under this amendment to the act are already in receipt of old age assistance or old age security benefits. This passes responsibility to those provinces which are paying supplementary bonuses. This is a point arising in connection with this bill which has not heretofore been commented on. I am surprised that this should be the case because when this amendment comes into force those provinces which are paying supplementary pensions in respect of old age assistance and security are going to find that the dominion government is passing the buck in respect to those for whom the dominion government should be solely responsible.

The provinces of B.C. and Alberta, in particular, pay fairly high supplements. A war veteran now eligible will receive $840 under this act at the present time. If he cannot earn any additional income, that is all a single veteran will get. That is it, period—$840. Under the Old Age Assistance Act he will be eligible for $660 plus the provincial bonus, which in the case of British Columbia would raise his income to $900, and in the case of Alberta to $840. But if the dominion government does not agree to transfer, those provinces are carrying a load which is rightly that of the dominion government.

I think the house will agree that the provinces at the present time are carrying all the load with respect to welfare that they can bear. British Columbia will be paying in old age assistance, $40 a month and Alberta $40 a month, because the provincial governments pay one-half of the old age assistance, which is $27.50, and they also pay a $20 bonus, which is, $47.50 out of the $55 which the old age assistance pensioner is getting. It would mean an income for a person who is eligible for an allowance under the war veterans allowance act of $900 as against $840 he would get under this act. The same applies in the case of Alberta except for the fact that it is $5 less.

Earlier this year, speaking in this chamber, I quoted the case of an elderly man—he is, indeed, elderly, being 92 years of age—who served in the first world war. He is in receipt of old age security benefit amounting to $55 plus an Alberta bonus of $15, making a total of $840. So the Alberta government is paying $180 a year in respect of a man of this character. The federal government says: "you will have to survive on $660 old age assistance for a year". Well, the Alberta and British Columbia governments say: "we know quite well you cannot do it, so we will supplement your income".

I am glad that the permissive income has been raised, although I see no valid reason why it should not have been set at the $1,200 and $2,000 limits suggested by the Canadian Legion. Canada has nothing to lose and everything to gain by giving the veterans the right to an income of that kind. I draw the attention of the house to the fact that after these old people who have given their services to the country have reached a certain age, if they have something they can do they would rather go ahead and do it than sit idly doing nothing; they are much happier when they are occupied, irrespective of whatever added income they may derive. I would suggest that here again the minister take this matter under careful consideration and when the next revision of this act takes place be sure that the permissive income is raised to at least $1,200 for the single veteran and $2,400 for the married veteran.

The raises granted represent an improvement for the recipient of war veterans allowance who still has earning capacity, but what about those whose earning capacity has deteriorated to the point where they are unable to accept employment? The war of 1914-18 has been over for 40 years. Thousands of men and women who participated in that battle and who have either partial pensions, which are deductible as income, or no pensions at all are in dire straits because of past neglect of their need and the failure of the government to introduce corrective amendments. While the present amendments represent a step in the right direction they cannot rectify that situation nor give the recipients a reasonable chance to enjoy the country for which they offered their lives. The unfortunate factor is that those who have a small pension, whether service or civil, will not benefit to the extent of those without pension.

One notable feature of these amendments is that regarding those who never left Great Britain during world war I. This was an injustice that should never have been perpetrated and the present government is to be congratulated for at least partially removing it. I could never understand why a veteran was required to have had one year's service in Great Britain. The basic fact must be remembered that these men and women offered their services and put no strings on their offer in terms of stating where they were going. There were no reservations attached to their offer of service.

Mr. MacRae: What about conscripts?

Mr. Irwin: I am not talking about conscripts but even in their case they had no alternative; they had to go where they were sent. If they were taken to England and then sent back then by reason of this they should be much more in line for receiving the war veterans allowance than the men who went as volunteers because the conscripts had no option at all. The service of the veterans was given without reservation and because Canada accepted it there should be no reservations in providing these men with an adequate standard of living in their home country.

I do not see any reference in the present amendments to widows whose husbands could have been eligible for war veterans allowance had they applied for it but preferred to go it alone. These women are now in serious plight and the Legion's suggestion as outlined in its latest brief should be accepted. I am referring now to those veterans who could have been eligible for the allowance had they applied for it but who chose not to do so, preferring to go their own way. The trouble has been that after their death their wives have not been able to make any claim under the act. The Legion has asked that the widows of allied ex-servicemen be granted the allowance in cases where the husband died before completing 20 years' residence in Canada. It also recommends that where all other requirements are met the war veterans allowance board be empowered to consider as eligible widows who would be qualified had the veteran made application during his lifetime. I do not think this house will regard that as being an unreasonable request.

The deletion of section 8 of the War Veteran's Allowance Act has been long overdue and is more than welcome as is the raising of the equity in a home from $6,000 to $8,000. I sincerely hope that in cases where a veteran actually owns his home and does not merely have an equity in it the assessed value will be taken and not the market value.

An hon. Member: That is what it is.

Mr. Irwin: I believe that former merchant seamen and T-124 agreement veterans should come under the provision of this act. They are in the same category as the men who never got out of Britain. They offered their services with no strings attached and I fail to see why they should suffer now.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind hon. members of this house of the immortal words of Laurence Binyon:

> They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:
> Age shall not weary them, nor the years condem.
> At the going down of the sun and in the morning
> We will remember them.

At this time, on the eve of Remembrance Day, let us remember them by adequately looking after those who fought and served in that noble company.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I received the applause hon. members have just accorded me before I started speaking rather than after I had concluded. I would like first of all to congratulate the minister on this most excellent legislation. I hope his head has not been turned by the compliments he has been receiving from all quarters of this house. The minister has moved with the utmost of speed to correct manifest injustice and, in fact, certain cases of rank discrimination for which he deserves the thanks of all veterans and all those who are concerned with the interests of veterans.

This legislation is to a great degree consistent with the brief of the Canadian Legion which hon. members received today, a brief which by its thoroughness and its temperate and considered language should recommend itself for study to all hon. members of this house.

I am pleased that we have been assured that at the next session a standing committee on veterans affairs will be established because I believe there must be time provided to consider this matter and to hear from interested bodies before the next amendment to this legislation is brought forward.

I was keenly interested in the remarks made by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Irwin). Perhaps this is to be expected because he comes from a coastal point and I am from a port city and we who are close to the sea have the interests of our merchant seamen very much at heart.

I would like for the benefit of this house to read an excerpt taken from the The Legionary of May, 1942, which was written by the Hon. P. J. Cardin who was then minister of transport:

> The courage and devotion to duty of the merchant seaman has been officially recognized and the merchant marine—or the merchant navy as it is now called by gracious consent of His Majesty the King—has now been accorded the distinction of becoming known as the fourth arm of the fighting forces. In an order-in-council passed last year, authorizing the formation of a wartime branch under a director of merchant seamen and coming under my jurisdiction as minister of transport, this fact is written in the official records as follows:
> "The merchant marine, on which our seaborne commerce depends, is under present conditions virtually an arm of our fighting services, and the provision of merchant seamen, their training, care and protection is essential to the proper conduct of the war, and vitally necessary to the keeping open of the sea lanes on which the successful outcome of the present conflict so largely depends."

As I said, this was written in 1942 and we are now in 1957. I managed to dig up the case record of one merchant seaman. His service included action at Gibraltar, Naples, Southern France, Bizerte, Toulon and Marseilles and while aboard H.M.R.T. Athlete from July 10, 1944 to January 20, 1945 his ship took part in the assault landings in the south of France, being employed in towing of assault ships and craft off the beaches.

Before I left to come to Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, I visited one of my constituents who had served in the North sea on a drifter. He was honourably discharged; he was unfit for further service because of rather severe privation he had suffered when his ship was sunk. He became a fisherman and began to lose the sight of one eye. His skipper would not let him go to sea again because he was a danger to himself and to his ship. When I saw him he had been unemployed for a year.

I was told of the case of another man who walked 40 miles in Newfoundland to enlist but he had tuberculosis of the spine. Therefore, he went to sea as a merchant seaman. His ship was sunk and he was the only small-boat sailor on board. For 22 hours he handled the tiller. When they were picked up by a United States ship he complained of pains in his back and he has suffered from disability caused by this experience.

The merchant seaman did not get any re-establishment grants or any gratuities. In many instances he served under naval officers. He took the same chances as the men in the regular services and I sincerely hope, sir, that when the standing committee is set up the consideration of the status of merchant seamen will be one of the first items that the committee will tackle.

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I want to take part very briefly in this debate to express my endorsation of this legislation at this time.

Firstly, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) on his elevation to that post. Since he is a New Brunswicker we naturally expect him to turn in an excellent job as minister of that department. I say this to the minister because it was not always thus between the member for Westmorland and the member for Royal. A short time ago I read the life of Sir Leonard Tilley and I found that the last duel fought in the province of New Brunswick was fought between the member for Westmorland and the member for Queens, which is now Royal. We have come a long way since that time.

Mr. Brooks: Who won?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Since Sir Leonard Tilley was involved I will not give the end of the duel.

I have always been interested in this legislation and especially in the war veterans allowance. When I practised law in Moncton after the war, I was interviewed by a field man of the Department of Veterans Affairs and asked to take on the administration of four or five cheques for war veterans receiving war veterans allowance who needed some assistance in handling their cheques so that they would receive the necessities of life.

Although I am not a recipient of war veterans allowance, of course, I know how these men feel and I know how it is to live on the pension paid. As I said, it was my duty to see that they received the necessities of life. At that time the department allowed $120 a year for clothing and I can tell you that it was difficult for me to see that they were well-clothed for that amount.

This is a step in the right direction. I know that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has always taken an interest in this matter. I served with him on the veterans affairs committee during the last parliament. On that committee, in our discussions here on these matters as well as outside the house, I was happy to observe that at all times these matters remained above politics and regardless of our party affiliations the life of the veteran came first. As I said at the beginning, I only wish to add my voice in behalf of this measure.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, my words will be very few. I just wish to state that I think this legislation will be welcomed at least as a partial remedy for some of the serious injustices which have marked the administration of veterans affairs in Canada for a number of years. Every branch of the Legion certainly in my constituency has several cases of real injustice, some cases of hardship and actual need. These cases have been growing because of the increased cost of living. The pension which the soldier received seemed adequate at the time he received it but it constantly buys less and less as inflation mounts. This is part of the series of legislation which is very badly needed, legislation which has been neglected, and I am sure that everybody will welcome, every branch of the Legion will welcome the minister's statement that it is his intention to set up a standing committee of this house in which all matters pertaining to veterans affairs can be dealt with, with representation from all parts of the house. I hope that as a result of the recommendations of that committee action will be obtained.

I am sure it is true that veterans, legionnaires and legion groups in the past have constantly passed resolutions; the provincial commands in convention and the dominion command in convention have passed resolutions and have often wondered why it was that so many of the actual needs of the veterans were neglected, passed over and glossed over. They would repeat and repeat year after year their requests that something be done with regard to this branch of war veterans allowances, this branch of the pension, this regulation against the granting of pensions to soldiers who are outside of the dominion, the matter of time which the person concerned was living in the country to qualify for a pension, and so on, and now we find that before this parliament is one month old many of the things which the Legion has asked for for years are going through; they are getting them.

If you make a study of the history of such legislation and the rapidity with which it is passed through this house you will find that this kind of thing has happened on only very few occasions in Canadian history and on every one of the occasions it was when the government was anxious to do something for the people; they were going to make a call on the people in a short time to ask for an endorsation.

I think there is a lesson to be learned here. I think this government should be given credit for what it has done. I think the veterans should be thankful for what they are receiving, as I am sure they will be. I also think they should remember that far too often, in the administration of government in Canada, these people are forgotten and neglected when the government sits in the house with a large majority. I well remember the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) back in the 1940's when we were fighting battles to get some justice for men under the soldiers settlement board, and the difficulty with which we were confronted in getting anything done. What a change we have today. What an improvement it is. There are many veterans in Canada today who served with the Canadian forces in the first war and who do not qualify for a pension but who are today feeling the effects of their service. The opportunity to take care of their needs will not last for too many years more. I trust that the voice of their representatives will be heard in this house and that action will be taken. We are going to support this legislation. We hope it gets through as quickly as possible.

Mr. W. G. Beech (York South): Mr. Speaker, the introduction of the bill covering improvements in the veterans legislation indicates to me at least that the opinions expressed by the members of the government whilst in opposition have not changed now that they form the government. It is true that the bills do not go as far as we should have liked to see them go. However, in the bills there is nothing which indicates that this is the last thinking on the part of the government. This is an emergency session called to get these extra increases as soon as possible into the hands of the recipients who need them so badly. I am convinced that the government has been as generous as possible, in the absence of a budget, and that all the legislation introduced this session will be reviewed at the next session. We have been assured by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) that at that time a standing committee will be set up with, we hope, full powers to delve into all phases of the Pension Act, the War Veterans' Allowance Act and all other matters pertaining to the veterans charter.

We have in Canada the finest veterans legislation in the world but I do not think it was the intention of parliament, whilst setting aside this legislation, to build a fence around that act so that the Canadian Legion must spend $200,000 a year, to say nothing of what is spent by other organizations, in helping veterans to get those things that parliament has set aside as a matter of right.

The success of the service bureau offices of the Canadian Legion in getting pensions for hundreds of veterans whose applications had been refused by the pension board indicates the need for a more liberal interpretation in the consideration of these applications. The benefit of the doubt clause was inserted in the Pension Act in order to permit some latitude to the pension commission, but it has been a source of constant complaint on behalf of veterans organizations that that clause is being in large measure ignored. This and many other matters will be discussed, I am sure, before the standing committee which will be set up at the next session.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have one other observation to make and it is this. We have upon the statute books of this country an act setting aside November 11 as Remembrance Day for the honouring and remembering of thousands of veterans who died for those things which we as Canadians hold dear and cherish. I am informed that it is the practice of this house to sit on Remembrance Day. I am wondering whether this practice of "business as usual" is giving the right encouragement to the proper observance by the citizens of Canada of this most sacred and important day in the history of Canada.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I must inform the house that if the minister were to speak now, as he was the mover of this motion, he would close the debate. I understand that the parliamentary assistant in the department is speaking in the minister's place with his authority. The rules do not appear to prescribe what consequence that has or whether it is permissible. However, I understand that the house previously has accepted the parliamentary assistant in similar circumstances and of course it is the privilege of the house to accept that position tonight.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the parliamentary assistant speaking now but I do not believe we should let it be a precedent for establishing a rule that a parliamentary assistant can close a debate when he speaks. If he wishes to speak and if he is the last speaker, then that is all right, but I do not believe that the rules would permit a parliamentary assistant to close the debate by virtue of the fact that he is speaking for the minister. I think you, Mr. Speaker, perhaps had your book open at the relevant page. In the Standing Orders of the House of Commons that we have here, at page 25 it is specifically stated as follows:

(2) A reply shall be allowed to a member who has moved a substantive motion, but not to the mover of an amendment, the previous question or an instruction to a committee.

(3) In all cases Mr. Speaker shall inform the house that the reply of the mover of the original motion closes the debate.

I have no objection to the parliamentary assistant speaking now and I have no objection that he be the last speaker. However, I would object to the rule being interpreted from now on that a parliamentary assistant, by virtue of the fact that he is taking the minister's place, automatically closes the debate.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would agree with the hon. member that the rule should not be changed and I do not think this should be taken as a precedent for establishing a rule. But I believe it is well known in the house that the house has power to conduct its own affairs; and if by unanimous consent the house allows such a thing, such a thing could happen at such time.

Mr. Hansell: That is different.

Mr. Speaker: I raised the issue which has subsequently been spoken to by the two hon. members because I did not want to create a precedent which would necessarily be binding in the future. The house has accepted this practice in the past. There is one instance of it in the debates, at page 2918 of Hansard of April 18, 1955, where the parliamentary assistant rose on behalf of the minister and the Speaker informed the house that he would close the debate. I think it is preferable, as suggested by the hon. member for Macleod and the hon. member for Yorkton, that the house understand that the rule does not cover the matter exactly and that we proceed by leave of the house at this time and not by way of precedent.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your generosity and the generosity of the house in making it possible for me to speak at the present time. I am fully aware, I assure you, that no precedent is being established here tonight. The reason I think that the minister has given me this opportunity is because of his desire to facilitate the passage of this important piece of legislation through the house with a minimum of delay. When I expressed a desire to say a few words he suggested that might be done most opportunely in winding up the debate here this evening.

After listening to the various speakers who have made their presentations on this second reading, it is hardly necessary for me to speak at any considerable length. I am rather of the opinion expressed by my worthy friend, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), who said yesterday, in a very short and terse statement typically Scottish, that it is good legislation; let us get on and get it passed. I agree with him wholeheartedly on that point. Others have since echoed the same sentiment as the hon. member for Selkirk.

Everyone has said that Canada has excellent veterans' legislation. The veterans' charter is second to none, I suppose, amongst all the countries of the world which make provision for those who have served in a special way in the various wars of this century. The reason for that, as has been stated, is that throughout the years, and particularly during the days of world war II, the veterans charter which we have and which we are amending by this legislation was designed by the veteran members of this house who had only one purpose in mind and that was to provide the best welfare program possible for their comrades.

We have had the advice, as has been mentioned, of the veterans organizations. We always acknowledge the contributions that they have made in formulating the charter. This is the first time I have spoken on these matters from this side of the house. I have spoken on these matters from the other side of the house during the past few years. I was glad that no one quoted the words I had uttered on former occasions.

Mr. Tucker: I could not quote them all.

Mr. Stick: They are not as important as all that.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not know to what reason I should attribute that, but I have certainly not had my words thrown back at me on this occasion. However, I want to say this. Even during the five years I was a member of the opposition I always had the highest respect for those who had the responsibility for the day-to-day administration of this legislation. I refer to the officials of the department. I think again the reason the administration has been maintained on a high level is because they without exception, are veterans in their own right.

As I listened carefully to the views expressed I noted general unanimity, and even the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) during the course of the resolution debate stated that this War Veterans' Allowance Act was a good act. It does the job, in most respects, that it was intended to do. I was, therefore, a little surprised this afternoon when the hon. member unlimbered a rather withering attack across the barrier with regard to the amendments that are being proposed. Others have answered the arguments for me, but I think that I should just repeat the points that have been made. I should say to the hon. member for Rosthern that it is quite impossible, as I think he will see, to rectify all the mistakes and the shortcomings of the previous administration in one short month. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we have not been sitting here one month, and we have realized that there were shortcomings in the act. There are minor points of irritation, and I have made reference to them before.

I believe the purpose of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) at this time is to deal in a most rapid and effective way with the shortcomings and with these oversights that have existed hitherto in the act. I should like to say that I agree 100 per cent with the sentiments that have been expressed concerning the capacity and ability of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. He has served in this house for 22 years. He has established a reputation as one who has a kindly disposition towards the problems of veterans in this country. It is not only a kindly disposition, but it is a disposition that is backed by an abundant knowledge of their personal needs. I assure the hon. member for Rosthern that in due course there will be the opportunity, for example, that he and others have expressed to have a more comprehensive review of the veterans charter as it exists at the present time.

Mr. Tucker: We are listening carefully to these promises, too.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. I imagine, knowing the Minister of Veterans Affairs and knowing his wide background of experience, one of the reasons why he hesitated in going too far into controversial matters at this time was that he would not quite know what tactics the members of the official opposition would take. I know from my experience in these committees that we have tried to deal with the topics that have been mentioned by the hon. member for Rosthern as having been neglected by the government, but he has taken a diametrically opposite viewpoint to that which he took here this afternoon. It is not necessary to labour this point. As I have said, I am glad to see that the majority of members have agreed that the minister in bringing forward these proposals is taking a long step forward in meeting the changing needs of the veterans who are served by the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

There are just one or two specific matters with which perhaps I should deal at this time. Several members referred to the discrepancy of the provision in the act concerning allowable property holdings. The bill is raising the allowable holdings from $6,000 to $8,000. Some reference has been made to the fact that this is less than the $9,000 recommended by the Canadian Legion. I believe that recommendation was put forward in their presentation of 1955. I understand that the $9,000 was based on a formula derived from the fair market value. I might point out to the members who raised this particular point that the present figure has been derived from a different formula, not the fair market value but rather the assessed value or the equity holding of the veteran in the property. Actually, under those terms, the $8,000 figure is even more generous than the one requested by the Legion in 1955.

Reference has been made to the restrictive nature of the ceiling. One of the fundamental purposes of the amendment is to try to meet the changing circumstances that have resulted from the rising cost of living and I think actually, under the existing situation and in the light of the representations of the veterans organizations, the increase in the ceilings will go a long way towards resolving the problem faced by veterans in this regard.

I would like to point out further that to raise the present ceiling still higher would not, generally speaking, benefit those who have no other income and cannot supplement their allowance from casual earnings. The recipients who are in receipt of a small pension or superannuation would benefit to a certain extent but in the main an additional raising of the ceiling would only result in an additional increment to those who are able to supplement their allowance and who do represent the great majority. To use this method to try to help those who cannot supplement their allowance would also be very costly and the great bulk of the moneys thus spent would really assist the less needy recipients.

I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Irwin) made the point that the maximum allowance for a single veteran would be $840—I think I am right in saying that. Now there is an assistance fund allowed under the act which makes provision for an allowance up to the maximum of the ceiling, that is to say $1,080, to indigent veterans who have no other source of income. Furthermore the same hon. gentleman referred to widows whose husbands had not established their claim prior to death being discriminated against. I think he will find that such widows whose husbands did not claim the veterans allowance prior to death and who would otherwise qualify, that is to say by reason of age or their husband's service, are eligible for the allowance. The act says that is so and I am sure he will find it does operate in that way.

An hon. Member: What constitutes eligibility?

Mr. Dinsdale: As long as the widow has reached the age of 55 and her husband was eligible. In other words eligibility flows from the service given.

That is the only comment I want to make with reference to the ceiling. These things are all subject to discussion from time to time, particularly under inflationary conditions and no doubt the discussion will be of a continuing nature.

The observation has been made that there should be some provision whereby the veteran who reaches the age of 70 could receive both his veterans allowance and his old age security. Now that would push the ceilings up to the level of $1,500 per annum for a single veteran and $2,760 for a married veteran.

There is one thing to remember, of which I think most hon. members are aware, and that is the relationship between the war veterans allowance and the disability pension. This relationship must always be kept in mind. It was of course never intended that the recipient of a war veterans allowance payment should be in a superior position to the recipient of a disability pension. At the present time the single ceiling of $1,080 represents 50 per cent of the total disability pension and the married ceiling of $1,740 represents 73 per cent of the total disability pension for a married veteran. It is today considered that this ratio is an appropriate maximum; otherwise a veteran with a 20 per cent disability pension would, upon reaching the age of 60, receive the equivalent of an 80 or 90 per cent pension.

Everyone will agree that disability pensions are paid in respect of the highest possible kind of service and that a significant margin should be maintained between this type of compensation and the payment of allowances which are more in the nature of social legislation.

Here again discussion and debate can be carried on but at the point at which this actual situation stands at the moment there must be some suitable relationship maintained between these two categories, as the disability pension and the war veterans allowance which is popularly known as the burnt-out pension.

Now I have not dealt in detail with all the matters raised by hon. members. I do not think some of these matters come within the purview of the bill before us, but if any member feels that this topic has not been adequately covered in my review I am quite sure the minister will be only too happy to discuss these matters further when we come to the committee stage. We all agree that this is a good beginning and one which has been handled expeditiously. With a large part of the cabinet made up of hon. members who are themselves veterans we can rest assured that under this new administration the welfare of our Canadian veterans will be kept uppermost in their minds. I think if we can now proceed to a further consideration of this legislation and the other legislation which is to follow, so as to clear the way for its expeditious consideration before Remembrance day on November 11 next, there could be no better tribute that we could pay to those whom we honour in this special way.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Widows of allied veterans.

Mr. Herridge: I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, to say how pleased I am to see that this clause is in the bill. I remember distinctly on two or three occasions in the past I was associated with the minister in what was later termed in the House of Commons as a group of nice old ladies whose representations should receive favourable consideration and I am very glad he has given that consideration.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask a question? Will new application forms be printed to cover this bill, that is, on account of the section included concerning service in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Brooks: I understand the hon. member wishes to know if an application form will be sent to those who wish to apply for the allowance in respect of service in the United Kingdom. Yes, application forms will be sent to any one on request.

I also wish to say how pleased I was to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West speak about the group of ladies who come to see us every year. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that they will be very happy tonight to know that by the next time they come their request will have been granted. I am sure they are going to be very grateful to members of this house for consenting to this section of the bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Repeal.

Mr. Tucker: On clause 3, Mr. Chairman, something was said today by some hon. member that the value placed on a home would be the assessed value. Under the regulations under the War Veterans' Allowance Act, as I recall them, it is not provided that the value set is necessarily the assessed value and I just wondered if the minister intended to change the regulations or if I am wrong in my recollection of the matter.

Mr. Brooks: My understanding is that it has been the practice, and the formula that is used under clause 3 is as follows:

> The exempt value is not the market value of the property but the interest which the recipient has in this property. This interest is determined on the basis of the following formula:
> "For the purpose of determining the interest of an applicant or recipient in real property owned or deemed to be owned by him, the value of such interest shall be either of
> (a) the assessed value placed on such property by the city, town or municipality in which it is located, or
> (b) the equity of the applicant or recipient in such real property, whichever is the greater."
> For this purpose, equity means the capital investment of the applicant or recipient in real property, that is to say, the original investment and subsequent payments on mortgages when applicable, plus the amount of any additional capital expenditures thereon.

That has been the practice of the department, I understand, since June 1956. That was after the hon. member was closely connected with the department as parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Tucker: What I was getting at was the fact that it is whichever value is the greater. Somebody in the house is under the impression that it has been changed and that the value now is the assessed value and I just wish to bring it out that it is whichever value is the greater, either the assessed value or the actual equity of the veteran in the house that is its value less the encumbrance against it. I wish to bring that out because it seems to me that when the Canadian Legion made the suggestion it should be raised to $9,000, and as the value of real property in the case of houses has more than doubled in the last eight years, I wonder if the minister would say why they did not raise the amount at least to the $9,000 asked for by the Legion. They asked for this two years ago and they repeated this request in this brief they have submitted recently to the government. Why was it fixed at $8,000 in this bill instead of $9,000?

Mr. Brooks: My understanding is that the fair market value was the formula before 1956. The Legion in its brief asked that it be increased to $9,000, based on the market value. We are placing it at $8,000 which is the assessed value or the equity. As I explained this afternoon, the value in property since 1952 when the $6,000 valuation was set has increased by 32 per cent. We have increased it 33⅓ per cent, that is to say from $6,000 to $8,000. It is really a better deal, I would say, for the veterans with $8,000 as the assessed value than it would have been at $9,000 as the market value.

Mr. Irwin: If a man owns a house on which the fair market value is $12,000 and the municipality is assessing it at 75 per cent, that would be $9,000; but if that man had an equity in that house of $10,000, so far as he is concerned he would have to take the $10,000 as the basis.

Mr. Brooks: The provision is, whichever is the greater.

Mr. Tucker: Greater.

Mr. Irwin: You said whichever is the greater, and in any event—

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Tucker: Before it carries I should like to be sure about the matter. I have the regulations here now. Sec. 11 (2) (a) is as follows:

> For the purpose of determining the amount that shall be deemed income from any interest in real property of an applicant or recipient or, in the case of a married veteran residing with his spouse, of the veteran and his spouse, whether owned or deemed to be owned by the applicant or recipient or his spouse at the date of making application, or acquired subsequent thereto, the district authority shall,
> (a) where it is used as a residence by the applicant or recipient and from which no revenue is derived, consider as income an amount equal to 5 per cent of the amount by which the fair and reasonable value of such property, as determined by the district authority, less the amount of encumbrances thereon, exceeds six thousand dollars—

So, when a person is living in his home the valuation is that which is regarded as a fair and reasonable value of the property. In regard to that, could the minister tell us what instructions are given to the district authority in arriving at that fair and reasonable value. Because if he can assure us that they are not taking the market value or being influenced by inflationary market values but are being governed, probably, by what the veteran put into his home in the way of ordinary investment and improvements, then it would make quite a difference.

Mr. Brooks: My information is that a directive was issued to the district authorities in May 1956 along the lines I suggested here a few moments ago. That is the latest instructions which have been issued to the district authorities.

Mr. Irwin: That still does not cover the point. When a man has a house whose fair market value is $12,000 and that house is assessed by the municipality at 75 per cent, that is $9,000. Suppose that man has an equity in that house of $10,000; according to the regulations the minister read out they have to take (a) the assessed value or (b) the equity in the house, or whichever is the higher. You have to take the $10,000 according to what the minister said, and I am sure that is not the intention. Is that the intention? Will the minister give us his assurance that the regulation will be altered so the man will be taxed for the assessed value and not the full equity?

Mr. Brooks: If the equity were $10,000, then $8,000 would be exempt and there would be $2,000 on which 5 per cent would be charged.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question. In arriving at the valuation are municipal assessments taken into consideration?

Mr. Brooks: Yes, the municipal assessments are taken into consideration; they are used as a basis. I might say that under the War Veterans' Allowance Act there are very few recipients with houses of $12,000 value and very few who have an equity of $10,000.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the minister does not live in White Rock.

Mr. Brooks: I hope to some day.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it the minister explained that the department uses municipal assessments to determine the value.

Mr. Brooks: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Hahn: Since there is such a wide degree of variation in the assessment of the various municipalities, I would suggest that the department take under advisement having its own assessors establish the value in comparison with other veterans homes on the basis of districts.

Mr. Brooks: I might say my information is that the department finds it much better for the veteran if the municipal assessment is taken. I know from my own experience that municipal assessments are always far below the actual value of the property. Under this system it has been the experience of the department that it is advantageous for the veteran.

Clause 4 agreed to.

[Mr. Brooks.]

On clause 5—Absence from Canada.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, while I am pleased to see this improvement in this clause that permits six months absence from Canada, I would like to ask the minister if he would give consideration to the matter I brought before the house during the resolution stage and on second reading this afternoon, that is to permitting the veteran to leave Canada and continue to draw his war veterans allowance providing he has a medical certificate from an officer of the department indicating that it was necessary for his health.

Mr. Brooks: I assure the hon. member we will take it into consideration.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, this matter has been under consideration for some time.

Mr. Brooks: A good many years.

Mr. Tucker: I for one certainly never thought for a moment that this matter in which my hon. friends opposite placed such store and about which they appeared to feel so strongly would have been neglected. I would have thought they would seize the first opportunity to provide for it because I well remember hon. members opposite when in opposition pointing out to the government of the day that the cost would not be very great because it would be a matter of health not affecting very many veterans. They went on to point out how fair it would be and that it was a proposal to help sick veterans to whom we have some obligation and therefore we should not allow a small amount of money to stand in the way of our doing justice. I cannot understand why the minister does not have in his files a thorough study as to what such a provision would cost. I am inclined to think he probably has had a study made of this question and I would like to ask if that is not the case.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member seems to be drawing on his imagination in this regard as he has done with regard to a number of other matters.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Oh no.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that I think the hon. gentleman is three years late in singing this tune. He has changed his tune.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand the attitude of the opposition party because here we have a statement—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Tucker: I should have said I cannot understand the attitude of the C.C.F. party and I apologize profoundly to hon. gentlemen opposite for confusing them with the C.C.F. In regard to their attitude in this matter, they, the C.C.F., are adopting the attitude that nothing of much import has ever happened up until this time. This is indicated by everything that has been said by them on this legislation.

Mr. Fraser: You are right.

Mr. Tucker: But they have gone all about the country pretending to have taken an active part in the veterans committee meetings and boasting that as a result the best veterans charter of any country in the world was established in Canada. Yet now they rise during this session and pretend that nothing has been done until the present government brought forward the bills we are considering. It is very hard to understand people who blow hot and cold like that and I am sure it must amaze the people in the rest of Canada although, of course, it does not amaze anyone from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Fraser: You should be amazed at yourself.

Mr. Small: Your amazement amazes me.

Mr. Tucker: You will find out.

Mr. Marler: It is only a small amazement.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions about this particular clause of the bill. The minister may recall I had some correspondence with him in the last few days about a case which concerned the length of absence of a veteran from the country. Certainly if he had been prepared to take the action suggested by my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West in bringing forward this particular clause the problem I was speaking about would no longer be something which would be of concern. However, my question actually has to be considered in connection with the provisions of clause 9 of the bill which sets forth the fact that the bill is deemed to have come into force on November 1 once it has received passage in the house. My question relates to that date of coming into force in respect to the provision of this clause which extends the allowable period of absence from three to six months.

What I would like to know is whether this means the six months period will apply only to people who have left Canada after the date of coming into force of this bill or whether the six months period will apply to veterans or their spouses who may be absent from Canada but who may come back within a date six months from the time they left? I think that is a rather important question as it affects people who may be absent from Canada at the present time and one on which we should have a firm understanding before this clause is allowed to pass.

Mr. Brooks: In the case the hon. member mentions, if the recipient of the war veterans allowance was away three months, we will say, before November 1 he could still stay away another three months after November 1 and receive the six months allowance. That would be my interpretation and understanding of the bill.

Mr. Barnett: The minister said if they were away for three months prior to November 1 they could stay away another three months, am I correct in that?

Mr. Brooks: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: Let us take an example then. Suppose they have already been away for four months and come back two months after November 1. What is the situation then?

Mr. Brooks: Two months after November 1; if he were away four months he would have two more months after November 1.

Mr. Barnett: They would still receive—

Mr. Brooks: Six months payment.

Mr. Barnett: Six months payment after they returned?

Mr. Brooks: Yes, that would be my interpretation.

Mr. Tucker: The minister did me the honour of suggesting that I had a good imagination, but I certainly would think there are some figures from which he could draw some inference as to what the cost would be of permitting people to be absent and still draw allowances if they needed to be absent in another country on account of ill health. I take it the figures he might have would be those indicating how many people went to the United States and had their war veterans allowances cancelled because they stayed there longer than the three months. Has he any figures on that?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, my information is that there was one.

Mr. Tucker: During what period of time?

Mr. Brooks: Since 1954.

Mr. Tucker: And none since then?

Mr. Brooks: No.

Mr. Tucker: I take it from that, Mr. Chairman, that there is only one whose health has been bad enough to cause him to go there and lose his war veterans allowance. Perhaps that would satisfy the department that the number who should live in a warmer climate for their health would not be large; it would be under the control of the department. I should like the minister to say whether he is still as favourable to this idea as he was when he was in the opposition of letting a person draw the allowance who gets a certificate or satisfies the officials that his health requires him to stay in some climate other than Canada, in a dry atmosphere, for instance. Perhaps it may be necessary because of his health; he may have tuberculosis or something of that sort. From the repeated statements of the minister's colleagues when he was in opposition I certainly was under the impression that they were very favourable to this idea. I should like to know whether they are still as favourable and if the only reason why they have not put it in this bill now is that they have not had time to do so?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I can speak for myself. The hon. member is certainly drawing on his imagination. I do not recall ever having said that I was strongly in favour of the war veterans allowance recipient going to any other country and staying there for a period for his health. I do not recall that.

Mr. Tucker: I said the minister's colleagues. I would like to read this to the minister to remind him of the sort of statements I had in mind. I take it that his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, when he spoke on this matter in the house was one of the spokesmen for the Progressive Conservatives on behalf of the veterans. His colleague, the present house leader, now Minister of Public Works, when speaking in this house on July 11, 1956 said this, as reported at page 5867 of Hansard:

> There is another problem concerning war veterans allowance recipients which should be met. Most of these men are getting up in years and their health breaks down. In some cases they have to go to the southern states or to Mexico, some warmer climate, in order to stay alive, and when they do that they lose the war veterans allowance. It is only paid as long as they reside in Canada. There is provision for a short absence from Canada but if they change their residence to some country other than Canada then they lose the allowance. We have always been told that it is too hard for the department to figure out any way in which special provision could be made to meet these cases where the man's health has broken down as distinct from cases where he decides to move away for reasons other than health. I submit that this problem should have been met during the present session. Furthermore, I see no reason why the allowance should not be paid to a veteran who goes to live in another part of the commonwealth, whether or not he goes for health reasons. The same ruling should not apply in those cases as is used where veterans go to foreign lands.

I certainly took it that the present house leader was one of the spokesmen for his party on veterans affairs, just the same as the present Minister of Veterans Affairs was, and what I want to know is this: is the minister now of the same view as his present colleague was in July, 1956, because if he is of the same view then I suppose the only reason that they could not bring this change about since they have been in office was lack of time? I think that must be the reason; they did not have time to do it if they are still of the view that this should be done. So I should like to know if their party is still of the same view as expounded by the present house leader when he was a spokesman on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party?

Mr. Herridge: Before the minister replies may I say this. I must support the hon. member for Rosthern on this occasion because I happen to know that the Minister of Public Works was making representations with knowledge of the same case that I brought to the house repeatedly. The hon. member was the member for Vancouver-Quadra at that time and he and I discussed this matter on a number of occasions, and he was making those representations in support of the same tragic case that I mentioned on two occasions while the resolution and the bill have been under discussion. I do hope that serious consideration is given to the wishes of the present Minister of Public Works and others who made those representations.

Mr. Brooks: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that considering the fact that there has been only one case since 1954 it would not seem to me that there is very great demand for legislation to amend that provision. However, I should be very glad indeed to look further into this matter. As I said before, we shall give it consideration. I might say that I am not assuming responsibility for everything that my colleagues said, any more than the hon. member for Rosthern would assume responsibilty for what his colleagues said. It would be a ridiculous situation for both of us.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Canadian veterans of world war I or world war II.

Mr. Fraser: If an application is made by the middle of this month when would payment start on that application?

Mr. Brooks: In answer to the hon. member, it would take some time to review the case, possibly five or six weeks, but the payment would be from the date of the application. There will be a great number of applicants and I would advise those who are applying to get their applications in early because the applications that are in first will receive attention first.

Mr. Fraser: The minister said it would be paid from the date of the application. Will it start from the first of the month or the end of the month? You could not start it in the middle of the month.

Mr. Brooks: The war veterans allowance is paid from the date of application. If it is received on the 10th of the month, then it is paid from the 10th; if it is received on the 12th or 15th of the month, then it is paid from the 12th or the 15th.

Mr. Lesage: I understand that up to now the veterans who served in world war I were not entitled to this allowance if they had served only in the United Kingdom, unless, of course, they were in receipt of a pension?

Mr. Brooks: They will now.

Mr. Lesage: Well and good. Now that the government has decided to extend the payment of the allowance to veterans of world war I, even if they served only in the United Kingdom, what is the reason that the minimum period of one year's service is required?

Mr. Brooks: Well, Mr. Chairman, this matter has been very carefully studied by the Canadian Legion and this is the recommendation of the Canadian Legion. The government has seen fit to take the advice of the Canadian Legion in that regard.

I might also say that there were a great many soldiers who arrived in Great Britain just in the last months of the war; I think there were from 30,000 to 40,000 or 50,000. The veterans themselves who had served in France or served in England for a long time I believe are of the opinion that they should not be included at the present time at least.

Mr. Lesage: That is not a substantive reason. The recommendation of the Legion should be accepted by the government, in my opinion, only if it is substantiated by very good reasons. There must be reasons why the period of one year has been chosen by the government after a recommendation, if you wish, by the Legion. This period of one year has not been picked out of the air. Why not six months? Why not nine months or why not fifteen months? Why one year?

Mr. Brooks: My answer to that, Mr. Chairman, would be that I have not the least doubt that six months was considered, that nine was considered and possibly three months was considered and that a year was decided by the veterans organizations as a logical period. That would be my answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the government's responsibility when it makes a recommendation to this house goes much farther than the minister would seem to think. It is all very well to say that it is the recommendation of an association. But the government in acting on the recommendation of the Legion must have had substantive reasons for doing so and I believe the minister should give to the committee the substantive reasons why he and the government accepted the minimum period of one year as a requirement.

Mr. Brooks: My reply to that, Mr. Chairman, would be that the government considered it to be a reasonable time.

Mr. Lesage: Why is it reasonable, Mr. Chairman? There must be a reason.

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member consider it unreasonable?

Mr. Lesage: It goes much further than that. Is there any special class that the minister wanted to keep out?

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member consider it to be unreasonable?

Mr. Lesage: I did not say that. Mr. Chairman, I am not here as a member of the government having to defend a policy; I am here to see that the government gives to the people of Canada the reasons why it proposes such and such legislation. I believe that that particular question is a reasonable one and one which should be answered.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member may consider it a reasonable one but his government did not consider any period reasonable. The Legion presented this brief to the government for a good many years and they paid absolutely no attention to it. I want to tell him that I think the veterans all across Canada will consider this is excellent legislation and that they are going to be extremely grateful to this government for having selected this period of one year. If it needs to be changed later on, we will take the matter under consideration.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, when I intervened at first I said that up to now it had not been decided to extend this allowance to the veterans of world war I who had served only in the United Kingdom; and I add this question: Now that the government has decided to extend it to those who served only in the United Kingdom, why is it that there is required a minimum period of service over there of one year? At the outset I accepted the fact that a previous government had not seen fit to do so. But now that this government which is in power has decided to do so, I ask, "Why one year?" I do not believe I have received an answer which is satisfactory to anyone in this house.

Mr. Brooks: I do not think you want a satisfactory answer. I can give some reasons. In 1914 and 1915 when the first contingent went to Great Britain they encamped at Salisbury Plain. They suffered, as all veterans know. They were in tents. The weather was extremely inclement and those men suffered. They formed the basis of a good many men who trained other soldiers who came over in the next three or four years. Instructors were taken from them. They were good administrative officers. They were kept in England and they stayed there for three and four years.

The men who came over in the latter part of the war were in England only a short time. They were not obliged to put up with the uncomfortable situation at Salisbury Plain or in camps. They were not compelled to do weeks and months of training of recruits that came over. They did not give to the country or to the men the service that was given by these men who had been there for a long period of time. That is one reason—and I think it is a very logical one—it was felt that consideration should be given to the men who had served longest and had earned, I might say, more consideration than had the men who had just landed in England a short time before the end of the war.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, from the answer given by the minister must I conclude that the purpose of the minimum period which is required under the amendment is to take out a certain class of veterans?

Mr. Brooks: No, it is to give the benefit to the men who served the longest and who the veterans themselves, as represented by the Canadian Legion, feel deserve the allowance the most.

Mr. Herridge: I have heard this matter discussed in Legion branches, in provincial conventions and in national conventions. Lengthy discussions took place there as to what sound principle could be put before the government with respect to giving the war veterans allowance to men who had certain service in England. The very reasons given by the minister this evening to the house were the very reasons that were given in support of the present representations to the government made by the Canadian Legion. Because of those certain conditions of service and length of service on the part of those who would have preferred to go to France but were obliged to remain in England and train troops and do other things, it was considered by the Legion—I have heard this matter discussed a good many times—that there would be a sound argument for asking for the war veterans allowance to be extended to those who had served not less than one year in England.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. As a good many members of this house know, members of the veterans affairs committee have urged this amendment ever since the second world war, and have done so vigorously on a number of occasions. I am sure there are a good many of the members in the house tonight who will be pleased indeed that we are passing this particular amendment to the War Veterans' Allowance Act which will be of such great benefit to the men who will need it and welcome it when they receive it.

Mr. Tucker: I would point this out to the minister and I hope he will bear it in mind. While he has directed his mind to the people who served the last few months of the war and apparently has in mind excluding them from the benefits of this amendment, some of the very people he spoke about as deserving of the allowance were men who in their patriotism and enthusiasm volunteered at the start of the war, went over to England and found the rigours of the first few months over there were so great that they were invalided back to Canada and have been suffering from that experience ever since.

Mr. Brooks: Those men would be under pension if they suffered in that way.

Mr. Tucker: They may not be on a pension. It is quite possible it was found that they were not able to carry on their military work and yet they may not have qualified for pension. My friend from Newfoundland calls to my attention the fact there must be quite a number of Newfoundlanders who, with their well known patriotism, got into the war right at the start. Sometimes they were older men who were not able to stand the rigours of military life. They went overseas, many served in England less than a year and were returned to Canada and are now suffering from the rigours of the first year in England. As the minister has explained these amendments, these men would be debarred from the benefit of this legislation.

While this legislation, as has been pointed out, may be a step towards recognizing these people, I do suggest that a further look should be had at the situation because the same reasoning applies to people who served in the first war as applies to those who served in the second. Personally, I never was absolutely convinced that what some of the servicemen went through in the first war in the United Kingdom was not just as detrimental to their healths as what servicemen went through in the second war. I never was convinced that the distinction between these groups was entirely justified by what they went through. Anybody who served even one day in the United Kindom in the second war is entitled to war veterans allowance, but if a person served in the first war he must under this bill have served a whole year before he is entitled to anything. Why draw a distinction between these people which cannot be upheld in the long run?

I do admit that the Legion has seen fit to go only this far. So perhaps the minister, therefore, has justification in only going that far. However, I think he will agree that there is something in what I have put forward, and I hope he will consider it. Before I sit down, I should like to ask him as to how many people would benefit by this amendment, and how many would benefit if he extended the same right to those who served in the United Kingdom in the first war?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Tucker: No, I want an answer.

Mr. Quelch: While the minister is getting the answer, I should like to say that the provision is a very reasonable one. We all know that the veterans who only saw service for a very short period of time did not have their lives dislocated to anything like the same extent as the men who had a number of years service. Any of us who were overseas in the first war know that the statement the minister made is quite true. During the earlier stages of the war, life in England was much harder than it was in the later years. Many of the veterans who were stationed in Salisbury Plain know the extent to which the soldiers suffered.

I cannot understand why so much exception is being taken to the period of one year. We have similar terms in other veterans legislation. Under the Veterans' Land Act you must have served for one year before you become eligible. If we are going to object to this, why not object to the one year in the Veterans' Land Act?

Mr. Brooks: In answer to the hon. member's question, the number who would come under the bill as it is now would be 2,280 veterans, that is an estimate, and 1,150 widows. If everyone were included, and I think that was the question, there would be an additional 5,190 veterans and 1,710 widows. The granting of an allowance to the first group I have mentioned, those coming under the act, would cost $3,210,000 a year. If everyone were included, the cost would be between $10 million and $11 million.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Tucker: There are just two things with which I wish to deal now. In speaking of the ceilings placed on married veterans, I erred in favour of the minister and I would not want to do that as seriously as I did. I made a mistake in my addition. I stated that a married veteran residing with his spouse, if he drew the full veterans' allowance of $1,440 and his old age security, would get $1,760 a year. I said that in setting the ceiling at $1,740 the minister had fallen short by $20. As a matter of fact, the $660 and the $1,440 make a total of $2,100, so the minister has fallen short by a matter of $360 in carrying out what I understood was the firm intention of the members of the government when they were in opposition.

Now as to the second matter; there was a suggestion made that raising the level of permissive income would help those who were able to work and help themselves more than those who could not work and needed the help. I think the person who made that suggestion misunderstood the situation. The person who can have casual earnings is now much better off in this respect than the person on a small pension, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for New Westminster. I would refer hon. members to page 24 of the Legion brief where it deals with the proposal to raise the level of permissive income to those on disability pensions, those on old age security and old age assistance. They will find the matter dealt with in the Legion brief very concisely. I also commend that to the minister in the study he is going to make of these matters between now and the great day, after Christmas, when all these problems are to be referred to the veterans affairs committee, which I now know the government is going to set up pursuant to their promise.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member is going to make an excellent teacher.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Coming into force.

Mr. Bryce: When does section 6 come into operation? Is it before or after the coming into force of the act?

Mr. Brooks: In the revision of this year the salaries of the civil servants came into operation on July 1, and that is the date on which the salaries under section 6 will come into operation, July 1 of this year.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On schedule A.

Mr. Herridge: I want to bring up a matter briefly under schedule A which I missed under one of the previous sections because widows are mentioned and I am always interested in widows. In schedule A, clause 1 (b), widow without child or not residing with child, I want to ask the minister if he would give consideration to introducing an amendment to section 30, subsection 11, paragraph (b) which would overcome the most unfortunate situation that I mentioned in my remarks of November 5. I am sure his officials are acquainted with this case and possibly some others like it. A very slight amendment would be required. I am looking at the Minister of Public Works and expect his support because this widow is the widow of an old comrade of ours who was in A company of the 54th.

Mr. Brooks: I might say that I will take this matter under consideration. I believe there have been only four such cases since 1955.

Schedule agreed to.

Schedule B agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Might I ask the house leader what is the business of the house for tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Pension Act, being No. 9 on today's order paper. That will be followed by the second reading of Bill No. 16 to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees in federal works, undertakings and businesses, which is No. 2 on today's order paper. Then we shall take the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Transport, which is No. 8 on today's order paper, having to do with a branch line of the Canadian National Railway Company, and then the throne speech debate.

Mr. Chevrier: May I bring to the leader's attention that both the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) and myself will be out of town tomorrow and either one of us would like to make some comments on the railway bill. I wonder if the leader would be good enough to give consideration to holding it over so that we might be able to take part in the debate.

Mr. Green: We might be able to take the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Justice but that probably would not take very long and we do not want to commence the debate on the throne speech tomorrow if it can be avoided. The plan is to go back to the throne speech debate on Monday and then continue with it all next week until it is finished.

Mr. Marler: Might I ask the house leader if it would be possible to deal with the resolution concerning the Canadian National Railways immediately after the resolution on pensions. That is to say, to deal with it as the second item of business instead of the last one.

Mr. Green: If the hon. member wishes to have the resolution concerning the Canadian National Railways taken after the resolution concerning pensions that would be perfectly satisfactory to the government.

Mr. Marler: If that would be agreeable to the house leader I would delay my departure accordingly.

Mr. Green: That is to say, to have it as the second item on tomorrow's list; that is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Marler: Thank you.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 76—Mr. Christian:

1. How many are registered as unemployed in the province of British Columbia at the present time?
2. What were the figures covering those registered as unemployed in the said province one year ago?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Information available from reports of local offices of the unemployment insurance commission pertains to the Pacific region which comprises the Yukon Territory and all but the northeastern portion of the province of British Columbia. As at September 19, 1957, the number of persons registered for employment at local offices in the Pacific region was 29,837.

2. The figure for the comparable date, September 20, 1956, was 15,619.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURE ON TRAINING

Question No. 100—Mr. MacEachen:

1. What is the estimated reduction in national defence department spending resulting from the decision to cut the training days of the militia from sixty days to forty days?
2. What will this reduction amount to in respect to the eastern command?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Since the major portion of the cost for the militia training year commencing September 1, 1957, will be included in the 1958-59 estimates which have not yet been finalized, it is not possible at this time to supply the figures requested.

2. Answered by No. 1.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS, ALBERTA

Question No. 108—Mr. Hansell:

How many individuals are drawing unemployment insurance benefits at the present date in each of the employment districts of the province of Alberta?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

The latest figures available representing the local office areas of the province of Alberta are those of September 30, 1957, which are as follows:

Blairmore	361
Calgary	2,024
Dawson	172
Drumheller	471
Edmonton	3,297
Edson	186
Lethbridge	368
Medicine Hat	297
Red Deer	255
	7,431

R.C.A.F.—TRAINING SCHOOLS AND STRENGTH

Question No. 115—Mr. Hansell:

1. How many air training schools are now operating in Canada, and where are they located?
2. Which of these air training schools are training air personnel for NATO?
3. What is the present strength of the Royal Canadian Air Force (a) in training; (b) on service?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) 9; (b) primary flying training school, R.C.A.F. station, Centralia, Ont.; 2 flying training school, R.C.A.F. station, Moose Jaw, Sask.; 3 flying training school, R.C.A.F. station, Claresholm, Alta.; 4 flying training school, R.C.A.F. station, Penhold, Alta.; 1 advanced flying school, R.C.A.F. station, Saskatoon, Sask.; 2 advanced flying school, R.C.A.F. station, Portage la Prairie, Man.; 3 advanced flying school, R.C.A.F. station, Gimli, Man.; 4 advanced flying school, R.C.A.F. station, Macdonald, Man.; air observer school, R.C.A.F. station, Winnipeg, Man.

2. Air crew from NATO countries are being trained at all the above schools.

3. As of 30 September, 1957: (a) 5,825; (b) 45,435.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 8, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DEFENCE CO-OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, having regard to recent developments and particularly in view of the references to the matter made by President Eisenhower in his address to the American people last night, he would make a full statement to this house at the earliest possible date on defence co-operation between the United States and Canada and, more particularly, on co-operation in the field of defence research and development.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the hon. gentleman, and as soon as possible a statement will be made.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION START

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received any communication from the province of Saskatchewan that would indicate any change in the responsibilities which that province has already accepted with regard to the building of the South Saskatchewan dam? Further, what action is this government taking to meet with the province of Saskatchewan to discuss an early start on the dam construction project, as promised by the Prime Minister during the course of the election campaign?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as the promise to proceed with the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam is concerned, that promise will be carried out just as soon as the province of Saskatchewan and the federal government have arrived at a decision as to the distribution of financial responsibility for the construction work. I hope that at an early date a meeting can be arranged.

As far as the practicability of the scheme is concerned, and its feasibility, we believe that has been determined. There is no need to convince the members of this government and of this party as to feasibility and practicability. All that remains is to reach an agreement as to the division of responsibility, and I hope that steps to achieve that agreement will be taken at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker; did the Prime Minister indicate that there has been any indication from the province of Saskatchewan that they would not accept the responsibility which they have already stated they would accept in connection with the dam?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I speak entirely from recollection. The only information I have had as to a changed viewpoint was contained in press references—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in connection with a statement reported to have been made by the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, that in his opinion the entire cost should be borne by the federal government. As far as any direct communication to that effect is concerned, there has been no suggestion that I have received any communication of that nature; but I take it that if the treasurer was correctly reported he would be speaking for the government of Saskatchewan.

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO ATTITUDE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, if I may. In view of the aptitude of socialists generally, and the Douglas government in Saskatchewan in particular, for loading their responsibilities on someone else, would not the Prime Minister, in making his unqualified commitment to start construction of the South Saskatchewan dam within six months of being elected, naturally anticipate that he would be called upon to fulfil his promise himself and without regard to the attitude of the provincial government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say to the hon. member that he must have composed that speech with very great care. It is one of those questions that does not seem to seek an answer.

AIRPORTS

GANDER—HOSPITAL AND HOTEL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. G. W. Ashbourne (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What progress has been made in providing a new hospital at Gander, and also what facilities for hotel accommodation will be made available when the construction of the new terminal at Gander will have been completed?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I received no notice of the question I will take up the matter with my department and report on Monday.

IMMIGRATION

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the genial Minister of Labour. In view of the number of unemployed immigrants from Great Britain and other countries who have not qualified for unemployment insurance and who in many cases are destitute, would the minister inform the house what assistance is being rendered these immigrants by the federal government?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to answer that question.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for the welfare of immigrants during the first 12 months after their admission to Canada is discharged by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. There are some existing agreements with the provinces, but generally speaking the responsibility is a direct responsibility of the dominion government which assumes and discharges that responsibility to look after the welfare of immigrants to the fullest extent.

Mr. Herridge: I want to ask the minister a supplementary question, in view of his answer to my question. Does the minister know that British immigrants who came to this country since the first of this year have been unemployed for a period of time? They served for 12 years in the armed forces of the commonwealth, and when they applied for assistance at the unemployment insurance office they were told there was none and that under the law they were liable to deportation. Does the minister not think we could also provide $3 a day assistance for those splendid immigrants?

Mr. Fulton: I am not aware of the cases to which my hon. friend has referred. If he brings any specific cases to my attention I shall be glad to look into them, because I would be inclined to agree, on the basis on which he has put it, that it is not a proper attitude with which to receive those people.

Mr. Herridge: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any assistance legally available to those immigrants from Great Britain or other countries who are unemployed and not eligible for unemployment insurance?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are responsibilities accepted by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman the details at the moment, but if he wishes it I will get the detailed answer and let him have it as soon as possible.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—ACCEPTANCE OF GROUP FROM YUGOSLAVIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in that regard. I wonder if the minister would tell us whether or not the government has made arrangements to accept another group of Hungarian refugees from Yugoslavia. If so, how many, and have arrangements been made to provide a thorough medical examination on their entry into this country?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman raised the question. I had intended to follow up my previous remarks immediately with a reference to that matter.

It has been decided to admit 700 Hungarian refugees from Yugoslavia. The United Nations high commissioner for refugees visited Ottawa early in October and made representations to us, as he told us he was doing to all other countries which he felt would be in a position to receive these refugees. There were at that time some 4,800 Hungarian refugees in Yugoslavia who had indicated they would wish to emigrate, and we have been informed that there is virtually no winter accommodation for them in that country, with the result that if countries in a position to receive them did not do so the fact would be that these men and women would face the most desperate hardship in Yugoslavia during the winter months.

Accordingly the Canadian government agreed to receive 700 of those who are in the refugee camps in Yugoslavia.

I have a table, Mr. Speaker, showing the number of these refugees in Yugoslavia which various countries have agreed to take, and with the 700 now agreed to be received by Canada the total we will have taken from Yugoslavia will be 1,779. In order to select and process these refugees we are sending an immigration team to Yugoslavia, which is expected to arrive about November 20.

Mr. Castleden: What about their medical examinations?

Mr. Fulton: The immigration team will take care of that aspect of the situation, but this is essentially a humanitarian refugee movement.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Does the minister intend to reverse the previous policy of admitting even those who could not satisfy the medical requirements, if they were otherwise satisfactory?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can give a categorical answer to the question in the form in which it was asked. I think we would have to look at every case and see just what were the implications. That is one of the purposes of sending the team; but as the house knows, because of the emergency and humanitarian nature of this movement, it is a fact that standards of admissibility were relaxed. The humanitarian aspects of the situation are accentuated here because if somebody does not take these refugees they will be in a really desperate position during this winter in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask another supplementary question, if I may, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider very carefully continuing the policy of receiving a fair proportion of those who cannot satisfy the medical requirements, instead of leaving them on the doorstep of another country? That was the policy we have followed up to now, and I think we should continue it.

Mr. Fulton: Since it was put in the form of a question I can assure the hon. member and the house that the fullest and most sympathetic consideration will be given to the principle that he has put forward, but I cannot give a categorical answer as to just what are the details of the standards that will be applied to each case.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a related question to ask the minister. I would like the minister, if he could, to tell the house whether we are continuing to take Hungarian refugees from Austria. I believe there are some 30,000 in that country.

Mr. Fulton: The figure I have is not as high as 30,000. There are some Hungarian refugees coming in at the present time if they comply with the terms of the directive which was issued, I think, on July 9 or July 10. Although in accordance with that directive the movement of Hungarian refugees to Canada was reduced for the winter months, there are still a few coming in.

UNITED NATIONS

FAO—REPORTED CANADIAN OPPOSITION TO INCREASED BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the report that Canada's Minister of Agriculture at the FAO conference in Rome has expressed opposition to the proposal that the FAO budget be increased by $2 million?

In view of the critical world food problem, both in deficit and surplus areas, does the Prime Minister not feel that such a modest increase for FAO purposes is justified?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to forward to me a copy of the press dispatch to which he has made reference. However, a reading of the press dispatch does not indicate that the Minister of Agriculture expressed opposition to the increase asked for by the director general. He questioned whether or not that expenditure would be efficiently absorbed in the coming two years. There was no finality in the words he used, no expressed opposition.

My own attitude, and I am sure that of the minister, is that FAO has done an outstanding job in correlating the activities of agriculture in all parts of the world represented in that organization. Anything that can efficiently be done by an increase within reasonable limits in the expenditures asked for by the organization will certainly receive favourable consideration on the part of this government.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I just say that we are not so much concerned with the use of the word "opposition" as we are with whether the press report and its headline are an accurate reflection of the position of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am reading from the press report and it says that "the Canadian minister . . . questioned whether increases of the size proposed by the director general can be widely and efficiently absorbed". I do not see the word "opposition" anywhere. That may be an interpretation of what took place—

Mr. Coldwell: I saw it in a headline.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but I do not join in that interpretation.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): May I ask a supplementary question. I had the same matter before me, and I have the press report from the Montreal Gazette. The heading is, "Canada Warns Against FAO Spending Increase." The first sentence in the article is in these words:

> Canada, which pays the fifth highest share toward the operation of the U.N. food and agriculture organization, warned today against increases in FAO spending.

Of course I understand that the question under discussion was whether they would increase the amount of spending over last year by one-third. The implication here is that Canada opposed an increase in expenditure.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the Prime Minister replies, I am not suggesting that the question is out of order but may I just say it has been decided that it is not the function of the question period to verify the truth or otherwise of newspaper reports. If questions concerning the government's intention or decision or action arising out of such reports are asked, that is appropriate, but it seems to me that we are dealing with the verification of what is said in newspapers, which is not a duty of the ministry.

Mr. Gardiner: With deference to the opinion you have expressed, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question asked was whether the government was opposed to increased expenditures by FAO, and the question was raised whether the article said that. The article does say that, but I should like to know what is the policy of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The right hon. gentleman said that my interpretation of what the article says is that the position is one of opposition. I was reading portions of the quotations of what the minister stated, not the interpretation placed upon the matter by the headline writer or in the first paragraph.

Mr. Gardiner: I should like to ask a supplementary question. As I understand it, the question which I attempted to repeat was, are the government in favour of increased expenditure by FAO or are they opposed to it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that the right hon. gentleman has asked a question rather than indulged himself in the luxury of interpretation by observation, I may say that the attitude of this government is that everything that should be done and could be done by FAO to expand the development of agriculture and to dispose of surpluses will receive the favourable consideration of this government.

[Later:]

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I address a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister in regard to the FAO matter. I would like to ask him if at any time he has indicated what instructions were given to our delegation to the FAO conference and, if he has not already done so, would he do so now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, from one member I get advice that I should not give instructions; then I am criticized for the suggestion that instructions have not yet been given.

As far as the FAO conference is concerned, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) is attending there as well as other representatives, and the stand they will take in general regarding the matters that are brought before that organization will, I am sure, merit not only the appreciation of the government but of the people as a whole.

SHIPPING

BLACK ROCK, LAHAVE RIVER—REQUEST FOR RADAR REFLECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister or any of his officials given any thought to the placing of a radar reflector on a rock in the LaHave river known as Black rock, on which the Baffin went aground?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I should like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The answer is yes; but the erection of a radar reflector on Black rock would be a difficult and costly project, particularly at this season of the year in that the rock is awash at certain stages of the tide and a heavy concrete foundation would have to be placed in order to raise the reflector beyond wave action.

As an alternative a radar reflector has been placed on the LaHave gas and whistle buoy and the buoy has been moved to a new position, latitude 40-10-29 north, longitude 64-16-03 west, so as to provide a better approach and clearance of Black rock. The installation and change were made on October 29, and were covered by a notice to shipping, broadcast by the Halifax agency.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT ON KEEPING SHIPPING LANES OPEN IN WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The minister made a statement yesterday regarding winter navigation in the lower St. Lawrence river, and said that plans are now under consideration for an extension of the service to provide improved coverage. Can the minister inform the house if by extension of the service he meant that plans are now being prepared for the construction of new icebreakers?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I was dealing with our plans for icebreaking operations for this year, and I outlined that one additional icebreaker would be used and we hoped that two would be used. I was not dealing with plans for the construction of additional icebreakers.

INDUSTRY

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION ON DECENTRALIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. What action has been taken by the government to establish crown corporations in the Atlantic provinces to support industrial decentralization, in accordance with the Atlantic resolutions?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, whenever action is taken it will be communicated to the house.

NATIONAL PARKS

SIGNAL HILL, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STATEMENT AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In answer to a question by the hon. member for St. John's East concerning Signal hill, I wish to say that the government proposes to have Signal hill declared a national historic park as soon as the necessary details of the survey conducted by the surveyor general of Canada are obtained this year. The work involved at Signal hill was reconstruction of the main entrance road. Next year it is proposed to construct an entrance gateway to the park and to undertake structural repairs to Cabot tower.

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and, in his absence, to whoever is looking after that department. Some time ago I asked a question of the minister regarding the revision of the National Parks Act and a particular question regarding Banff. The minister at that time indicated he did not have any information on the subject and if I would send him some he would be prepared to make a statement in the house. I supplied him with some information several days ago, but as yet I have not received an answer to my question. I wonder if the minister would now take this under consideration and be prepared to give an answer on Monday?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the minister to whom the question was directed was required to leave the chamber for a few minutes to attend to other duties. I will see that it is brought to his attention and answered at the first opportunity.

TRADE

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—COMPOSITION AND MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in a position to answer a question I put to him some days ago, as to whether or not he proposes to head the trade delegation soon to leave Canada for the United Kingdom. Perhaps he will recall also that I asked at the same time if he would take advantage of that visit, if he went, to discuss with his opposite number the Prime Minister's proposal for the diversion of trade purchases from the United States to Great Britain, and likewise the United Kingdom proposal for a free trade area as between the United Kingdom and Canada. On that occasion the hon. gentleman replied by saying he would have to discuss this matter with the Prime Minister. Has he now received the Prime Minister's permission so to do?

May I say that this is perhaps a good occasion upon which to ask this question, it being the minister's birthday anniversary, upon which I sincerely congratulate him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, after reading the complimentary article about the hon. gentleman in the Citizen last night I shall have to examine that last sentence very closely in Hansard tomorrow to see that there is no hidden meaning. However, taking it at face value I thank him for his remarks on the occasion of the anniversary of my birthday. I hope the next 59 years will be as interesting as the first 59 have been.

With regard to the question he has put to me, I have not had a chance to refer back to Hansard, but it appears to be framed along similar lines to a question I thought I had answered. I do not recall having said I would need to consult the Prime Minister regarding the question the hon. member asked. I can say to him that I will be heading the trade mission to the United Kingdom; and if the house will permit me so to do, when we assemble at 2.30 this afternoon I would ask permission to make a statement at that time. (See pages 910-11.)

The balance of the long question of the hon. member was answered on the other occasion, and I do not think his question should be repeated now.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he does not consider it desirable to revise a reply he made in answer to a question a few moments ago, in view of what he said in answer to the question I put to him on October 31, when among other things he said, at page 599:

> I will be heading up the trade mission to England if the Prime Minister decides that I should go.

I should also like to ask if, likewise, he will not revise the answer he made on the same page on the same day:

> I have not yet received any instructions as to whether I am to consult with any member of the British government with regard to any other questions.

That is on page 599, in the left hand column. They are memorable words.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on reading my answer given on October 31, 1957, I am quite pleased with the clarity of the reply.

CODFISH—STATEMENT ON REPORTED ACTION BY JAMAICA TO SHUT OUT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question yesterday by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick) in these terms:

> Will the minister state what action the government is taking in connection with the threatened action of the government of Jamaica in shutting out the imports of salt codfish from the Atlantic provinces?

Acting on instructions, the Canadian trade commissioner in Jamaica has had interviews with both the chief minister and the minister of trade and industry in Jamaica, at which time a full explanation of our desire to continue to trade on a friendly and unrestricted basis was placed before the Jamaican officials. The reasons why increased prices were needed for salt codfish were fully explained. The Jamaican officials were informed that Canadian fishermen would suffer if a satisfactory settlement was not reached, and that it was hoped that the threat to prohibit imports from Canada would be removed.

In reply the Jamaican chief minister denied that imports of Canadian salt codfish are to be prohibited. He further stated that the government of Jamaica planned to invite tenders from all sources of supply for its requirements of 4,800 metric tons. The closing date for tenders is today, November 8. Consequently, the Canadian salt fish trade have submitted tenders through our trade commissioner in Jamaica, and we are awaiting the result.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the reply he just gave to the hon. member for Trinity-Conception. Is it not a fact that the conditions attached to the tenders called by the Jamaican government require that a sample shipment be sent along with the tender, and that the closing date of today which he has just mentioned has the effect of preventing any such shipment or any tenders coming from Newfoundland?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have not all the facts which appear to be at the disposal of the hon. member. I think in the course of the representations made by our trade commissioner to the officials at Jamaica some of these points were dealt with, and my hope is that some of those conditions might not have to be fulfilled prior to determining the tender.

[Later:]

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not get all the answer the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave in reply to my question. I would like to ask him whether he would be good enough to inquire further into the details of those tenders required by the Jamaican government, and if he finds that the facts are as I stated them will he take further steps to make sure that Newfoundland fish will not be barred from the Jamaican market?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do everything possible to make sure that the Newfoundland market for fish in Jamaica is protected, and I will make the investigation the hon. member has requested.

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): May I ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement in the house on November 1, at page 654 of Hansard, to the effect that in December, 1955, China was listed as falling within the responsibility of Canada's trade commissioner in Hong Kong. Can the minister explain, in view of that statement, why the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce dated March 1, 1957, lists the territory covered by this trade commissioner as Formosa, Cambodia, Laos, Viet Nam and Macao, and makes no reference to China at all?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have simply relied on the information obtained on the action taken by the late administration.

CANCER

REFERENCE TO SURVEY ON RESULTS OF SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. I hope he will forgive me for not giving him notice of the question, but he can take this as notice. The former minister of national health and welfare had one of his departments do considerable research on the effect of the use of tobacco on the cause of cancer.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the hon. member is asking whether or not my department is making such a study. I shall certainly have the matter looked up and will then report to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

GRAIN

GLASLYN, SASK.—ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. He may wish to take it just as notice. In view of a wire that I have received this morning—a copy of which I will send to him immediately after the orders of the day are concluded—which states that the town of Glaslyn has had only eight box cars for the delivery of grain since the opening of the crop year on October 1, as against 50 for the same period last year, I wonder whether the minister would look into that situation and see what can be done.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into it.

STATEMENT ON 1956-57 WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY POOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house whether the Canadian wheat board will be making interim or final payments on the 1956 or 1957 crop in the very near future? I think it is unnecessary for me to point out to the minister the financial straits of many prairie farmers.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this question, I think, was originally asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) some time ago. I am prepared to give some information to the house on this important matter, after consultation with the wheat board in relation to the 1956-57 oats, barley and wheat pools.

The board states that with regard to the 1956-57 oats pool, there is still some selling to do before the pool can be closed out and that unless there is a sharp change in the market situation there may not be a surplus for distribution to producers. This results from relatively low prices during the selling period of the 1956-57 oats pool account and some increase in carrying charges for the account of this pool.

In regard to the 1956-57 barley pool, the situation is different. It is definitely in the black. Further selling is necessary, however, before the pool can be closed. It should be wound up before the end of the calendar year and the final payment made to producers.

The 1955-56 wheat pool account was closed as of May 3, 1957; therefore the 1956-57 wheat account has been under sale for a period of only about five and a half months. The volume of wheat in the 1956-57 pool is 519 million bushels. Having in mind the volume of wheat in the pool and the short time during which the pool has been under sale, hon. members will appreciate the fact that it is impossible at the present time to assess the pool in terms of an interim payment. I might add that in the case of the 1955-56 wheat pool an interim payment was made. This payment was not established until February, 1957. The wheat board expects that another three or four months of selling experience is required before the 1956-57 wheat account can be examined from the standpoint of an interim payment.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. In the light of the obvious decline in prices of grain generally, and the announcement that there will be no further payment on oats, will the minister say whether the government has considered the many requests of farm organizations that a deficiency payment be made at this time, which would in effect be an interim payment, on all these grains?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the question of deficiency payments has been raised on several occasions and brought to my attention. I notice it is receiving increasing emphasis at meetings of farm organizations. The government fully appreciates the condition in which agriculture has found itself over the last few years, and evidence of the government's concern was given last month when the proposal for making cash advances on farm-stored grain was put before the house, a proposal which was accepted as a suitable measure by hon. members opposite.

We are giving extremely close attention to agriculture in this country, and every suggestion that comes from farm organizations or from hon. members will receive very close attention. We consider that this is a matter which requires action at the present time if at all possible, and this government is quite prepared to do everything in its power on behalf of agriculture.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF COMPULSORY INSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister advise the house if his department has taken any decision with regard to amending the regulations under the Fish Inspection Act in order to introduce during the 1958 season compulsory inspection of fresh fish and, if so, would he suggest what stage of the production, processing or marketing will be covered by such inspection?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration. I have not had notice of the question, but I will be glad to take what the hon. member has said as notice, and give him a reply at the first opportunity.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Robichaud: When the minister answers will he also state whether facilities will be made available to the fisheries council of Canada, fish dealers, and producers to appear before a committee of the house to discuss the amendments that will be made?

Mr. MacLean: I will take that also as notice.

LAMPREY EELS—INQUIRY AS TO USE OF POISONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister any recent information on the effectiveness of poisons and are there plans to use them against the lamprey eel in inland waters, especially in lake Superior? I ask the question because of press reports of sensational success in the use of those poisons.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): A great deal of research is being done by the fisheries research board into this very vexing question of the infestation of the great lakes by lampreys. I am not familiar with the press reports to which the hon. member refers, but I will have the matter looked into and reply at a later time.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Minister of Transport may I say that two of the last three questions might much better have been put on the order paper. They do not have the urgency that requires their introduction at this stage. As the house will observe, we have now spent an hour on questions, and I hope members who still have questions in mind will consider whether they are properly asked here or might just as well be dealt with on the order paper.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

CANADA COUNCIL—SUGGESTED SCIENCE SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I call upon the hon. member for Macleod. May I say that effective Monday the microphone will be lowered somewhat to make it easier for hon. members to hear me when I am seated.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is based on the fact that apparently the other day he declined to say whether the federal government is planning any assistance by way of scholarships in the field of science. Since there is an evident need for an acceleration of scientific studies and training in certain fields of science, would the government consider that the awarding of scholarships in this field should be part of the responsibility of the Canada Council?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman is well based. However, I am not so sure that at the present time the granting of scholarships by the Canada Council will completely cover the situation in connection with scientific education. However, that matter and that suggestion will be looked into, and I thank the hon. member.

INCOME TAX

TRANSPORTATION AND LIVING ALLOWANCE DEDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, arising out of his answer to a previous question regarding requests by trade union groups that transportation and living expenses incurred by travelling construction workers be allowed for income tax purposes? In view of what the minister said to the effect that an injustice exists, due, as he explained, to the bungling of the previous government, what action does the present government propose to take to right this wrong?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out to the hon. member when he asked this question the other day that this does not appear to be a problem which can be solved by regulation, as he suggested at that time. The matter has been carefully looked into to see whether there is any power open to the government to exercise by way of regulation, but the problem is a difficult one, having regard to the difficulty of defining what is intended to be covered. The whole subject is under careful study, as I indicated in my answer of several days ago.

Mr. Ellis: The minister states that this is not a question that can be settled by regulation. Does he then suggest it can be done by legislation? If so, what legislation or amendments does the government propose to bring in to meet this problem?

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member has been in the house long enough to know that legislation of the kind he asks for is not announced in advance, but only at a particular point in the session.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, some years ago similar concessions were made to railwaymen who had to stay over at the end of their runs, and my understanding is that that was done by regulation. Is this problem not analogous to that one?

Mr. Fleming: I think the hon. member will recall that legislation was passed on this subject in the house about a year and a half ago, introduced by the former minister of finance, despite opposition from the then official opposition. The subject is not a simple one to deal with now in the light of all the circumstances, but the matter has been under very close study for some time, and representations have been received from various interests, not simply from labour but from the construction industry. These representations have been very carefully considered and weighed.

Mr. Coldwell: That does not deal with my point about the railwaymen.

Mr. Fleming: As far as the railwaymen are concerned I recall the matter, because I had something to do with raising the question myself then. As I remember the circumstances—I will not attempt to comment now merely from recollection—so far as persons incurring expenses in the course of being transported and being recompensed for these outlays is concerned, there is no problem in that respect, where the transportation is undertaken in pursuance of duties as employees.

The problem that is under consideration now, however, relates to the construction worker who is living away from home in the course of his employment and receives from his employer an allowance for board and lodging, the question then being whether he should be relieved of taxation on the income he receives for board and lodging. That is the problem, and there are very considerable difficulties involved in regard to the definition drawing the line.

I would ask my hon. friend to recognize that the problem is not nearly as simple as it may appear on the surface, and it is because of those complications that the matter has had to be given extended consideration. It is not a problem of our creation.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. It has been indicated that the government of the province of Ontario is withdrawing its support on cheese. If this is true, is it the intention of this government to increase the support price to offset the effect of Ontario's withdrawal on this very important commodity?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, this again is a matter of government policy. I am not suggesting that the statement the hon. member has made is not correct, but I will look into it, and the government, when it changes its policy, will announce it in the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the policy?

PENSIONS

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Will the government introduce legislation this session to increase the pensions paid by the government to former employees of the Intercolonial Railway, which he himself has termed totally inadequate; and does he not consider this to be emergency legislation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is another of those questions which use up the time of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Promises.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is another of those improper questions that are being asked as to what is going to be done by this government in the future.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Promises.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might say, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the desire on the part of the hon. member which was not apparent in the house under the last government for action in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who is using up the time of the house now?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): It was; read your Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would simply point out that when a decision is made it will be announced to the house.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Promises.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Read your Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the right hon. Prime Minister is raising a point of order, but I do suggest to the house that the general question of whether or not the government intends to introduce legislation seems to me to be improper in the question period, because it is asking the government to announce its policy at question time.

Mr. Pickersgill: That has been done from time immemorial.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question of how far matters of policy can be raised during question time is a rather difficult one. I do not propose to make any ruling, but I would like to take an opportunity soon to give my views on the subject and see if I can clarify the difference between asking the government its intention with respect to its administration and daily responsibilities, and asking it to declare broader matters of policy which obviously cannot be dealt with at question time. If the house will allow me to prepare something for its guidance on that subject and submit it to the house I welcome the opportunity.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I think the difference is the promises they make.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL—REPORTED CLAIM FOR DAMAGE TO CATHEDRAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond O'Hurley (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I wish to seek some clarification from the Minister of Transport concerning a rumour spread by a Montreal newspaper to the effect that damages have been claimed by the authorities of the Montreal cathedral against the Canadian National Railways authorities responsible for building the new Queen Elizabeth hotel. Is the minister aware if such damages have occurred and if a claim has been made? If this is the case, will payment be considered?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. When I heard of this story this morning I made inquiries, and the management of the Canadian National Railways advise me that there has been no damage to the cathedral; that there has been no claim and, of course, no payment made. The management further advise me that the closest co-operation has been maintained between the railway and the diocese throughout the construction of the hotel, and that that co-operation is very much appreciated by the management.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIR POLLUTION, TORONTO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL CO-OPERATION TO REDUCE HAZARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether, in view of the reports of Mr. Belyea, chief air pollution control officer of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto, that the tremendous amount of the air pollution coming from the railway roundhouses and locomotives in the city of Toronto is alarming; in view of the fact that an Ontario legislature select committee on air pollution and smoke control noted that "in Ontario, railways still operate under the provisions of an obsolete order of the board of transport commissioners of 1908" which reduces the efficacy of smoke-control laws in Toronto; and in view of the possible air pollution by ships that will be coming to the Toronto harbour when the St. Lawrence seaway project is completed, he will ask his officials to look into the matter and co-operate with the air pollution control officer to reduce this hazard to health and property.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do that.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF DISMISSED EMPLOYEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. This question follows the question of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) on November 6 regarding the dismissal of a government employee in Brantford. In his question the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked specifically about one employee. It does appear that there was more than one involved in the dismissal and rehiring. When the minister is replying will he include all who were concerned in this issue?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSAL FOR INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Is the minister aware that the purchasing power of family allowances is being destroyed by inflationary pressures, and what action does he propose to take to increase family allowances?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Why don't you read Beauchesne?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I read the Conservative promises.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSTRUCTION OF YARD AT MONCTON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) asked me if it was the intention of the Canadian National Railways to undertake a $17 million extension of freight yard facilities at Moncton. I am sure he has seen the announcement in this morning's press that the Canadian National Railways are undertaking such an extension.

POWER

LACHINE SECTION, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON APPLICATION BY QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): On November 1 the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked me this question:

> Can the minister tell the house whether the government of the province of Quebec has made an application to his department under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the development of power in the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence river?

I answered on November 5 to the effect that there had been no such application. The hon. member then asked me a supplementary question as to whether, falling short of a formal application, representations have been made in that direction to the Department of Public Works. The answer to that supplementary question is yes. In 1956 the Quebec Hydro Electric Commission asked what technical demands or requirements would be imposed on the commission by the Department of Public Works in connection with the Lachine water power project. The reply was made that the interests of the Department of Public Works would appear to be limited to the protection of navigation, but other departments would also be concerned. Nothing further transpired between the Department of Public Works and the Quebec Hydro Electric Commission.

Pension Act

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPENDANTS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, November 6, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Brooks—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Pension Act to place dependants of persons who served in world war II in a position comparable to that of dependants of persons who served in world war I in cases of disability or death due to improper conduct; to ensure that pensions may be paid to the dependants of deceased members of the forces resident and domiciled in Newfoundland; to provide for the continuation of disability pensions and widows' pensions to the end of the month in which death occurred except in cases where no additional pension for dependants is payable; to provide for the payment of pension to the daughter of a pensioned widower where the domestic establishment is maintained after his death; to provide for an increase in the clothing allowance on account of amputation or use of appliances; to provide for an increase in the allowances for funeral and burial expenses; to remove the limitation on the amount of pension payable to a dependent parent of a deceased pensioner after discontinuance of pension to other dependants; to authorize payment of widows' pensions at current rates upon reinstatement of discontinued pension; and to remove the limitation on payment of pensions to or in respect of children born after a specified date, or to wives whose marriage to a member of the forces or a pensioner took place after a specified date; such measure to include, in addition, certain consequential and clarifying amendments.

Mr. Tucker: Is the minister not going to make a statement?

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to make a statement. This resolution is somewhat extensive, because it lists the majority of the features in the amending bill. Many of these have been designed to clarify sections of the act in which some doubt regarding interpretation has existed. My intention is to outline the main features and, after listening to the remarks of hon. members, to give more detailed information and costs on second reading and when the bill is in committee.

The purpose of the bill is to provide, in general, for additional benefits for former members of the forces and their dependants, and to bring other benefits more in line with the increases in the basic scale of pensions for disability and death which became effective last July. I should like now to quote from the resolution.

. . . to provide for the continuation of disability pensions and widows' pensions to the end of the month in which death occurred except in cases where no additional pension for dependants is payable . . .

The act at the present time provides that an award of disability pension shall cease on the date of death, and it then becomes the responsibility of the commission to determine whether death was attributable to service.

1. The dependants are pensionable when death was attributable to service irrespective of the rate at which pension was in payment at the date of death.

2. The widow and children are pensionable when pension was in payment at 50 per cent or more at the date of death.

The amendment, as it stated in the resolution, provides for the continuation of pension to the end of the month in which death occurred provided additional pension was in payment for the dependants. In a number of cases, death has no service relationship, and the effect of this amendment will be to permit the continuation of the pension income to the home at a time when there is great distress and, in a number of instances, need.

I quote another clause of the resolution:

. . . to provide for an increase in the clothing allowance on account of amputation or use of appliances. . . .

The act at the present time makes the following provision for wear and tear of clothing:

1. For leg amputation cases, $72 per year.

2. For arm amputation cases, $30 per year.

3. For other pension cases wherein the wearing of an appliance causes excessive wear and tear of clothing, not exceeding $72.

These rates have been in effect for some years and the intention is to increase them.

A further clause in the resolution reads:

To provide for an increase in the allowances for funeral and burial expenses . . .

The act gives the commission discretion to pay an amount not exceeding $185 when a disability pensioner dies and his estate is not sufficient to pay the expenses of his last sickness and burial. This total is made up of the following maximum payments:

1. $110 in respect of funeral services.

2. $25 for cemetery charges.

3. $50 for the expenses of the pensioner's last sickness.

Those are the present rates, Mr. Chairman. The intention is to provide for an increase in these allowances in order that they may be more closely related to those paid by the department and to present day conditions.

I quote further from the resolution:

. . . to remove the limitation on payment of pensions to or in respect of children born after a specified date, or to wives whose marriage to a member of the forces or a pensioner took place after a specified date . . .

This, I may say, is to do away with the world war I date line or deadline, as it is sometimes called. The act provides in the case of a world war I disability pensioner that no additional pension shall be paid when marriage or remarriage takes place on or after the 1st day of May, 1954. This restrictive measure was first introduced on May 1, 1933. It was subsequently advanced to the 1st of May of the following years, 1944, 1948, 1951, and now stands at May 1, 1954. The restriction in the statute applies to world war I pensioners and not to world war II pensioners. There is no date line as far as world war II pensioners are concerned.

The intention is, as intimated in the resolution, to remove the time limitation. There is provision in the Pension Act against so-called death-bed marriages which gives the commission discretion where the death of the husband has occurred less than one year subsequent to the date of marriage.

Provision is made in the bill for the amendments to the Pension Act which became effective on July 1, 1957, by authority of Appropriation Act No. 4, 1957. This was under Bill No. 418, to which we referred previously, and item 670 of the supplementary estimates at that time. This is part of the tidying up process, incorporating into the Pension Act payments which are being made as from July 1.

The other amendments, as I stated earlier, are mainly clarifying and do not infringe on any existing benefits, nor do they incur any added liability. I will be very pleased to give further information on second reading and when the clauses of the bill are before the committee.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, at the present time I wish to deal more with what the resolution does not do than what it does do. What it proposes to do is the sort of thing to meet difficulties that have arisen in the administration of the act and remove apparent inequities in cases affecting small groups who are benefiting from the Pension Act, or should benefit. It is the sort of thing that has to be done from time to time with respect to a statute like the Pension Act. Some of the provisions have to do with such things as increasing the clothing allowance in the case of a person drawing a pension in respect of an amputation, and are related to the rising cost of living.

These provisions are important, but they do not affect the general body of pensioners. However, to the extent that they meet certain needs of the various groups with which they deal, in accordance with the past attitude of the party with which I am associated these measures will receive very strong approval.

As I see it, the difficulty about the resolution is that in dealing with basic rates of pension it only goes so far as to confirm what was done by the last government before the election, and it does not propose to increase the basic rates at all. In view of the strong attitude taken at that time by the members of the present government when in opposition in finding fault with the increases in basic rates brought into effect by the then government, I think people generally expected that the basic rates would be dealt with.

Hon. members will recall that at that time fault was found because it was said that the raising of the basic rates was an urgent matter and the government had not gone far enough, and the promise was held out that if the Progressive Conservative party was elected this matter would be dealt with at once. The cost of living has been rising steadily since then. If the matter was as urgent as was represented by the present members of the government, who were then in opposition, it is difficult to understand why the government has not dealt with this matter. The government has continually held out the idea that it is proceeding to carry out the promises on which it was elected.

There has been some suggestion that there is going to be a sudden election. However, even if things go as well, and along the lines indicated by the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, and there is a session after Christmas at which the matter is considered by the veterans affairs committee, the earliest date on which these pensioners can receive the benefit of any increase, which government supporters said this spring was so important, will be one year from that date. In other words it will be the following spring. I am sure this will come as a surprise to the veteran and a surprise to the whole country, especially in the light of what was said by the present Prime Minister during the last election campaign. For example, in a telecast on May 22, 1957, the present Prime Minister dealt with this matter. I shall quote from what he said:

> We believe the old age pension is inadequate. We intend, this September, to call together parliament, and there and then fix a fair and reasonable amount for the old age pensioner,—

Then he goes on to say:

> —indeed for the other pensioners, and also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, providing that it continues.

If ever a person could make a definite pledge, Mr. Chairman, it would be when he carefully considered what he was going to say in a telecast to the nation. The statement is in such definite terms—"indeed, for other pensioners". What was going to be done for other pensions?

Mr. Brooks: May I point out to the hon. member that he was speaking of old age security and other pensioners, blind pensioners, disabled persons. The pension has been raised from $46 to $55, and the bill is already through the house.

Mr. Tucker: I would point out to the minister that the Prime Minister, speaking on behalf of the Conservative party, mentioned the old age pensioners, and indeed other persons. Now then, other pensioners, outside of old age pensioners, would be blind pensioners. Would my hon. friend suggest that when the present leader of his party was speaking of other pensioners he was referring only to the small group of blind pensioners, and that his remarks had no reference to the great group of ex-service pensioners? Surely the ex-servicemen are an important body of pensioners.

Mr. Brooks: That is going to be given careful study.

Mr. Tucker: My friend says that is going to be given consideration.

Mr. Brooks: Careful study.

Mr. Tucker: Only careful study?

Mr. Brooks: Study and consideration.

Mr. Tucker: We were promised more than study. Let me read again to hon. members what was stated. Why are these promises being whittled down to cover only blind pensioners when the Prime Minister said "...indeed, for other pensioners"? Are not ex-servicemen other pensioners? Here is what the leader of the Conservative party said:

> We intend, this September—

A session was not called in September because of Her Majesty's visit. We now have a session called, and it was called as soon as possible to carry out the promises.

> —and there and then—

No doubt about that.

> —fix a fair and reasonable amount for the old age pensioners, indeed for the other pensioners.

Does the minister say that, here and now, they are fixing what they consider to be a fair and reasonable amount for the service pensioners? Then let me read to the minister what his leader said to the nation concerning another matter which was to be considered at the session this fall. There was going to be action, and here is what his leader said:

> . . . and also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, providing that it continues.

Everyone knows the cost of living is continuing to rise. Figures put on the record by various hon. members, and indeed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on November 4, showed that the consumer price index has continued to rise. On the basis of 1949 being equal to 100 the index had risen in 1955 to 116.4, and now stands at 122.6. If this matter was so urgent this spring it is even more urgent now. The minister's leader said that, there and then—he meant at a session in September—he was going to make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, provided it continued. There is a definite pledge to the people. I think the present Prime Minister, who was then leader of the opposition—

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. Did his government take into consideration the rising cost of living when they increased the pension as of July 1? If they did, it has not been very long from July 1 to date.

Mr. Tucker: The point with which I am dealing is that the increases which were brought into effect at that time were denounced by hon. members opposite. It was in the light of these increases that the Prime Minister made this telecast. In other words, these increases had already been brought forward, and it was in the light of these increases which were denounced by the present members of the government as inadequate that their leader made this speech.

Mr. Brooks: I think, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is implying that the increases were not sufficient. What representation did he make to his government before July 1 as to the insufficiency of the amounts? Did he make any? I doubt very much that he did.

Mr. Tucker: I am not debating the action that was taken at the spring session of parliament, because what was done then was placed before the people.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It sure was.

Mr. Tucker: Hon. members opposite are gloating over the results of that election. They held out certain promises to the people, and all I am saying is this, that people who gloat over being elected as a result of these promises should be the first to stand up and say "Now, let us fulfil the promises on which we did get elected".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: The attitude of their leader was very definite on this matter. For example, he is reported as having said this at Victoria on May 22, 1957, at about the time of this other telecast. He is reported as saying "We will provide fair and realistic pensions based on the cost of living and a fair comfort in living". Then he went on to say this:

I say our promise will be carried out. That is my idea of public life. Promises must bear a distinct mark of responsibility.

Here was their leader not only holding out these promises but saying:

I say our promise will be carried out. That is my idea of public life.

Mr. Brooks: We have made a good start on them.

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friend is saying they have made a good start.

Mr. Brooks: In a few months, we have done more than you did in 22 years in some of them.

Mr. Tucker: But his leader said, "I do not believe in making irresponsible promises; what I promise will be carried out".

An hon. Member: That is what we are on now.

Mr. Tucker: What was his promise? His promise was that at the session in September, there and then, pensions would be increased and they would be tied to the cost of living or a formula would be established "whereby due allowance will be made in future for the rising cost of living providing that it continues". I wonder whether my hon. friends opposite, in their minds, really believe that a promise to study this matter and perhaps do something about it a year later is carrying out a promise that within a matter of four months this matter would be dealt with in a certain definite way, namely by increases with provision for a formula in the acts tying the pension to the cost of living.

Mr. Brooks: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. The hon. member has taken a sentence out of context. As I remember it, the Prime Minister was speaking of old age security at that time, and he said that old age pensions and other pensions which he had been mentioning would be dealt with at this session. They have been dealt with.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, no; they have not been dealt with. The promises have not been carried out.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I am only dealing with this matter as I read it.

Mr. Brooks: You are taking one sentence out of a whole context.

Mr. Tucker: No. When the Prime Minister said, as I read to the house, that this September he would deal with old age pensions and indeed with other pensions, is my hon. friend suggesting that people listening to that speech would know that he did not mean veterans pensions?

Mr. Brooks: Having heard his previous remarks, yes. You have taken only one sentence out of the whole context.

Mr. Tucker: I have read the whole thing having to do with what the present Prime Minister said. He said this, and I take it that he said it deliberately. He spoke first of the old age pensioner, and he said, "indeed for the other pensioners". Is my hon. friend trying to tell us now that his leader intended to say that they were going to increase old age pensions and were going to tie them to the cost of living, but that he had no intention of doing anything like that for service pensioners, or in other words that he did not intend to do as much for service pensioners as he was doing for others?

Mr. Brooks: The Prime Minister realized that there could be a review of the Pension Act. Such a review of the Pension Act takes a considerable time. It is with regard to the veterans pensions. As I stated in this house, Mr. Chairman, it is the intention to review the Pension Act at the next session.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what you said before June 10.

Mr. Tucker: That is, of course, exactly what I have been trying to say, namely that his leader held out one promise to the people and that now it is not being carried out in this legislation. If the minister admits that they are not keeping this important promise, I am satisfied. Surely the keeping of a promise to increase the basic rates and to tie them to the cost of living this fall was much more important than clearing up the small points, important as they are, which are dealt with in this legislation. Surely the raising of the basic rates affecting all pensioners, which rates were held out by hon. members opposite when they were in opposition as being so inadequate, was an important matter. As to the promise they made that they were going to be dealt with this fall, surely if they were going to deal with them at all they should have dealt with the main point of attack they made on the government last spring and during the election campaign.

Mr. Brooks: Your government considered them adequate to July 1, or just a few months ago.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I believe in democracy as, I think, do most of us here. When our government set the amount which they indicated was as far as they were ready to go at that particular time, the hon. member's leader and his associates said, "We think something should be done this fall to go much further", and the people indicated their approval. Now I am just asking them to do what they promised to do, on the basis of which they are sitting where they are today. That is all I am doing.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The people also indicated disapproval of you.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether he would not agree that if everyone in this house had the opportunity to speak, and spoke as long as has the hon. member, we would not get even the emergency legislation through at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: More closure.

Mr. Tucker: I do not intend to deal with the point of order, Mr. Chairman, because I do not think it can be said the opposition have unduly held up the war veterans allowance bill. On the first day it was introduced it went through all stages, or rather it went through second reading, the committee stage and, by consent, third reading. I wonder whether it is fair to make a statement such as the one which has just been made, in view of the fact that there is that co-operation shown not only by the party with which I am associated but by all parties in this house to forward this legislation. Is my hon. friend suggesting that when his government speaks nobody else dare say anything, that they must just say "Aye"?

Mr. Brooks: No, no.

Mr. Lambert: He can speak on the whole problem, as suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. Tucker: After listening to his leader indicate his disapproval of that idea, suggesting that members should be heard from and that whatever the government said should not be accepted without comment, I think such a suggestion should come from any place else in the whole house but from the place whence it came, right behind his leader.

Mr. Small: What a transformation.

Mr. Tucker: I agree with that statement. It is indeed a transformation.

Mr. Small: On your part.

Mr. Tucker: It is indeed a transformation, having heard day after day about the fact that hon. members were not saying enough, that the government was having its way without the members being heard from enough. Then when a spokesman for the official opposition is pointing out that it would be a good thing for the government to carry out its promises, a man on the opposition side of the house rises and objects to 40 minutes being taken to deal with this most important matter. Verily it is a real transformation.

Mr. Small: You are not suffering from closure at the present time.

Mr. Tucker: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that hon. members opposite, faced with this situation wherein there is an open breach of a promise they made to the veterans of this country, should be raising all these spurious points of order and trying to divert me from presenting that viewpoint. I don't blame them, but it just shows how uneasy they are in their own consciences about the thing they are bringing forward.

Mr. Chairman, when the suggestion of increasing these pensions was brought in by the last government, it was dealt with as an emergency measure because it was thought that there should be an election, and rather than have the pensioners wait for an increase until after that was over, an increase was given. That was an emergency, because in order to have an election in June, as was asked for by all parties—the present government party was as anxious to have an election as anybody else—it was necessary to dissolve parliament in April, and accordingly the increase had to be granted before that date. But despite these circumstances there were demands that the matter should go before a committee. Surely there is more time now in which to deal with this question than there was last spring.

Then again there were demands and statements that the amount should be raised because it was not enough. I do not think it can be denied that the present leader of the house and Minister of Public Works was one of the outstanding and acknowledged spokesmen for his party on veterans affairs. His position was such that he was recognized as one of the real spokesmen of the Progressive Conservative party on this matter. What did he say with regard to the announced intention by the government of that time, as an emergency measure, to tide over the veterans until this matter could be dealt with in the ordinary way by a veterans affairs committee? I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Mr. Tucker: I know you would like me to sit down. But it is strange, this feeling on the part of the Progressive Conservatives that they do not like any one to speak in this house except themselves.

In any event, if I may go on, Mr. Chairman, when this emergency provision was suggested to the house, what did the present Minister of Public Works have to say about it. On April 12, 1957, as recorded in Hansard at page 3477, he said:

> Let us take, for example, amendments to the Pension Act. The Legion asked that the increases should be 33⅓ per cent. The supplementary estimates provide for increases of a much smaller amount.

He then went on to speak about other matters that should be dealt with in regard to pensions, and said:

> I can only regret that under the method now being followed the problems of these veterans are being shoved aside, and I can certainly promise that should we be responsible for forming a government after the election, veterans legislation generally will be thoroughly reviewed and there will be a standing committee of the house to deal with these questions.

The present Minister of Agriculture was another acknowledged spokesman on behalf of the Conservative party. What did he say about the proposed increases at that time? At page 2919 of Hansard of April 1, 1957, he is quoted as saying:

> I was glad to see that there were some increases in benefits for the veterans in this budget. However, once again they fall far short of what was requested by the Legion and other veterans organizations and what was necessary to compensate the veterans for the increases which have taken place in the cost of living.

He went on to say:

> I call upon the Minister of Finance and the government to restore veterans pensions to their original position in purchasing power and relative to civilian wages. Until this is done I think it is futile for government speakers, as they have done so frequently in the past, to go about this country boasting that our treatment of veterans and returned men is the best of any country in the world.

Then, with regard to pensions, I should like to read to hon. members a further passage, because some of them may not have heard this or might not have had it brought to their attention. It reflects the attitude taken by their leader, the present Prime Minister as reported in Hansard, page 3405, on April 11, 1957:

> There is no adequate opportunity for discussion here. These pension increases deserve an opportunity for full discussion. They should have been placed before committees of the house in order to enable representatives of the people to attend here, give evidence and express their views with regard to the inadequacy of the increases. I say that the attitude taken by the government is a cynical disregard of the parliamentary function of careful and meticulous examination.

If this was the opinion expressed in this house about those increases, namely that they were inadequate, then what about the attitude of the government now in saying that they are going to do nothing about it, although they are dealing with these matters, until some time next spring? Let us take, for example, once again, the attitude then taken by the present Minister of Public Works. He said—and I do not wish to take too long in citing these various statements—

An hon. Member: What did you say?

Mr. Tucker: I understand. You don't like the quotations. You don't like to hear quotations from your present leaders showing what they said while in opposition. If it was something said before the election that would gather votes, you were ready to cheer. Now, when it is a matter of delivering the goods, you don't want to hear them.

An hon. Member: You don't want us to deliver the goods.

Mr. Tucker: That is what I am asking you to do. The bill deals with relatively small, though important, matters, and the main thing you said you were going to deal with you say you are going to let stand till next year—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, before making a few remarks on the subject matter of the resolution now before us, I should like to say that the C.C.F. group was originally to have been led on this important question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but he is away today attending the NATO conference. I have been asked to substitute for him, and I do so with pleasure.

We are grateful that the government has indicated in resolution No. 9 that some of the problems which arise in connection with the Pension Act will be dealt with very shortly, but I think it must be a matter of keen disappointment to hon. members and to all veterans that no provision is being made in this resolution for an increase in the basic rate of disability pension. I do not propose to take seriously what has been said on the subject by the hon. member for Rosthern—

An hon. Member: Nobody does.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): It is very hard to take seriously his complaints on that subject when for so long his government failed to bring these disability rates up even to the level of those paid for common and unskilled labour. And that should be the test under this act.

This act gives veterans, as a right, not as a matter of charity or social assistance, an amount which is supposed to put them in as good a position as if they had not suffered their war disabilities. Unfortunately, the rate of pensions has gradually lagged behind the cost of living on one hand and the rate for even common labour at union rates on the other; it has lagged behind the increase in our gross national product, and again I say it is a matter for keen disappointment that this government has not seen fit to go further at this time than the Liberal government did on March 14 of last year.

In the short time that has elapsed since March 14, 1956, the cost of living in Canada has increased by approximately 4 per cent. This means, for instance, that the rate of $200 a month for a totally disabled married veteran since that time has already suffered a shrinkage of $8. In the light of what has been said previously by prominent members of the Conservative party, and in the light of their attacks on the inadequacy of the increase of March 14, 1956, which became effective in July, I do not think they are justified in failing to bring in further increases at this time.

The proposal of the Canadian Legion that the increases instituted in March, 1956, should have been 33⅓ per cent and not an average of 17 per cent, which was as far as the government of that day was prepared to go, represents a modest request. As a matter of fact it strikes me that the veterans of Canada have a most honourable and enviable record in the matter of the requests they have made to governments of Canada for adjustments in pension rates. They have not made the excessive demands which I think have been made in some other countries; instead, they have merely asked that the disabled veteran be placed in the position where he has not actually suffered loss as a result of his war service and, of course, monetary pensions must fall far short of that. In view of the rise in the cost of living since the Legion first requested a 33⅓ per cent increase their present request in my opinion is a very modest one.

We are opening up the Pension Act by means of this resolution for many rather detailed and complicated changes. It seems to me, therefore, this is clearly a case where a standing committee on veterans affairs should have been appointed, or at least a special committee should have been called together to consider the bill the minister will present to the house. We do not want to delay the passage of any legislation designed to improve the Pension Act, but we have been sitting in this session of parliament since October 14, which would have provided ample time for a special committee to be called together to consider this legislation. I am convinced that the representatives of the veterans organizations would be pleased to come to Ottawa quickly and present their views, and I believe the committee could be called together, perform its function and report back to the house within a period of two weeks. In view of the ambiguities which do undoubtedly still exist in the Pension Act it is a pity the government has not yet proposed that this procedure be followed.

I would now like to refer to what was said by the present house leader on July 11, 1956, as reported at page 5867 of Hansard of that date. The hon. member informed the house in extremely definite terms:

> When we form a government, we certainly will have a full-time Minister of Veterans Affairs and we certainly will have a standing committee on veterans affairs.

Unfortunately there are many wrinkles in the Pension Act that are not going to be ironed out by the measures indicated in this resolution, and when you try to deal with an act as complicated as this on a piecemeal basis without it being referred to a committee for thorough study, you are bound to leave many injustices in the wording of the act.

I would like to briefly refer to some of the good things in the resolution before us. Of course we are all pleased that the veteran of world war I who did not embark on the sea of matrimony until after May 1, 1954, is finally going to get some recognition for his wife. It is surely a praiseworthy matter that such a veteran did not reach a decision to marry too quickly, that some have given long and careful consideration to this important step. However, the resolution does not propose that any recognition will be accorded to the children of such veterans. Are we to assume that a veteran of world war I who did not marry until after May 1, 1954, cannot have children? I think we would be making a big mistake if we decided this, because this philosophy has been contradicted many times already in this country. I would ask that this part of the resolution be extended so the families of such veterans may be protected.

Another matter not dealt with in the resolution is the status of the common law wife of a veteran. Under the Pension Act the common law wife of a veteran is recognized if they lived together as man and wife at the time of enlistment and she had then been publicly known as his wife. Unfortunately there are many cases of veterans who, finding themselves unable to marry, live in a common law union after their service to their country has been rendered, and their wives are not recognized as having official status under the act. It is unfortunate that in legislation in the parliament of Canada we should have to consider giving recognition to the position of common law wives, but as long as we have medieval divorce laws in this country, as long as divorce cannot be obtained even on the grounds of incurable insanity, in the case of a wife deserted without means by her husband or even on the ground of cruelty resulting in a breakdown of health, we must realize that common law liaisons are bound to take place. Many children have been born to common law unions and have grown up to become good citizens. It seems to me this resolution should go further and accord recognition to the common law wife of a veteran who has lived with him and perhaps done a fine job in raising a family but, due to the archaic divorce laws prevailing in Canada, the couple have not been able to have the union regularized.

There is another case I think should be dealt with, and I hope the government will consider including a clause in the bill when it is introduced in this house to cover the situation. That is the case of a British subject who joined the British forces in world war I and who was not at that time a Canadian. He might have been living in England and joined the British forces but since world war I has been living in this country, has become a Canadian citizen and been domiciled here. Such a veteran may receive a modest pension from the British government but he is not recognized at all under our Pension Act; the supplementary sections of that act, Nos. 50 to 53, do not help that particular individual. Surely he is a deserving case. There are many veterans who joined the forces of the British commonwealth, probably in England, before or at the time of the outbreak of world war I and who at the present time are in receipt of pensions from the British government of not more than $4, $6 or $8 a month.

I am particularly pleased to see that the government in this resolution proposes an increase in the clothing allowance for amputation cases and I suppose that allowance would also be increased for paraplegics, but I am afraid it does not fully cover the needs of this particular class of veteran. A married paraplegic veteran is considered totally disabled.

He would receive $200 a month and in addition $120 a month helplessness allowance. But I respectfully suggest to the government, Mr. Chairman, that this is not adequate. In addition to the wheel chair, of course, these people need special housing; they need ramps in their houses; they need larger doors. They cannot move into houses that have too small rooms and they require transportation by automobile, perhaps with special equipment in it, not as a luxury, as is the case with other people, but as a matter of necessity.

Therefore I would hope the government, through the minister, when they introduce the bill will give further consideration to increasing the helplessness allowance of the paraplegic cases. I understand that at the present time—and I hope I am wrong—these cases do not receive the full helplessness allowance unless the veteran is completely and at all times bedridden. Perhaps when the minister makes his statement he will clarify that point because, if it is the case, I think it is a most unjust situation.

Another point I think should be dealt with when the government brings in the bill is the vexed question, which has been raised many times by members now sitting on the government side, of diseases or injuries of pre-enlistment origin. Many claims are rejected, of course, by the pension commission at the present time because they rule that the disease or injury was of pre-enlistment origin. Yet the man will have had his medical examination when he enlisted in the forces, and that disease or injury would not appear on the medical report. We say that in such a case there should be a presumption, if the injury or disease does not show up on the medical examination, that it was not of pre-enlistment origin.

The house leader, then the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra dealt with this question in 1956, at page 5868 of Hansard, in these words:

> I believe the time has come to write into that act a presumption that injury or disease occurred after enlistment.

I could go further into the quotation, but this indicates his thinking at that time. This is an additional reason why a committee, even a special committee, of this house is badly needed, so that in addition to the improvements in the legislation which the government is indicating in the resolution, other improvements can be made to make this a model piece of legislation for the disabled veteran.

I should like to close, Mr. Chairman, with one final point. I regret that the resolution does not deal with the retroactivity of the pension awards. When an applicant applies to the pension commission he may find that to establish his claim takes as much as two years. It may take longer before he has got together the witnesses and the evidence he needs to establish his claim; but once granted by the pension commission that pension should date back to the date of application of the veteran. Again I say that in the Pension Act we are not dealing with any kind of social assistance; we are dealing with something that belongs as of right to the veteran, and if the commission rules finally that the veteran was entitled to the pension on his application, then it should be made retroactive to the date of the application.

Certainly that is the rule if a company goes through the courts, perhaps up to the exchequer court, with a claim that it is entitled to, say, special depreciation on its equipment to write off against taxable income. If, after years of litigation, the court rules that the company was correct in its contention of course it dates back automatically without question to the date of the application. When we do that with financial matters and with company matters we should see that the veterans pension dates back to the date of application. There could very well be in the act a saving provision to the effect that this would not revive old claims existing, say, prior to the last war. I do not suggest that that should be done, but with such a saving provision surely pensions could be made retroactive.

I have finished with the proposals that I hope the government will take into consideration, Mr. Chairman, but in conclusion I want to say my main point is that I regret the government has not increased the basic rate in its disability pensions. Frankly, I do not think we are living up to the standards with our veterans that we do in the financial and material sense. When war equipment or material is damaged or destroyed we replace it at once without question. The companies which produced war materials in the last war received not only profits but often write-offs on their capital costs, so that in effect they got a gift of the capital equipment they were using during the war. The biggest case in point, of course, was the special write-off allowed to the Aluminum Company of Canada for its work at Arvida, which resulted in effect in that company being given a gift of that huge power installation.

We have to ask ourselves whether we are treating the veteran on the human level as well as we are treating the financial aspects of fighting a war. In view of that it does not seem to me that these pension rates at the present time do put the veteran in the position where it can be said that he has not suffered loss as a result of incurring injury or disease in the service of his country. To the extent that we can remedy that situation by financial measures we should generously and quickly do so.

[Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mr. Brooks: It is one o'clock. I wish to go on this afternoon, but I understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce has an important announcement to make at 2.30 o'clock. Might I ask that we rise and report progress?

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—COMPOSITION AND MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have the opportunity now, which I asked for this morning, to make an announcement to the house with regard to the trade mission which is going to proceed to the United Kingdom. I presume I may do so under leave to revert to motions.

The Canadian trade mission to the United Kingdom, comprising leading representatives of business and industry from all areas of Canada, will leave Montreal for London on Thursday, November 21. The mission will also include representatives of labour, agriculture and fisheries. The purpose of the mission is to stimulate purchases from United Kingdom sources of goods now imported by Canada from non-commonwealth countries. Its immediate objectives are to provide a favourable climate and to seek specific opportunities for the expansion of British exports to Canada, so that Canada may take full advantage of sources of supply in the United Kingdom, and British exporters may participate increasingly in Canada's growing import requirements.

To this end, membership of the mission consists largely of businessmen whose companies represent some 20 groups of industries across Canada which, it is believed, can use increasing quantities of British products. The mission represents an annual purchasing potential of many millions of dollars worth of imports.

The mission will depart from Dorval airport, Montreal, on the late afternoon of November 21 and will arrive in London the next morning. It will remain in the United Kingdom from November 22 until December 18, during which time it will follow a program arranged by the United Kingdom authorities in consultation with Canada House.

Following preliminary talks in London with ministers, senior government officials, the dollar export council and its affiliated industrial bodies, visits will be made to important centres of industry and commerce throughout Great Britain to permit of direct factory and plant visits and meetings with British exporters and businessmen. The mission will conclude its visit with final conferences to be held in London from December 16 to 18.

The list of names of those who have accepted an invitation to join the mission will be released today. The list is complete except for the addition of two representatives of agriculture from whom I am awaiting word and except for one or two changes which will result from withdrawals that are expected because of personal reasons on the part of those who have already accepted an invitation.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house will welcome the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and do and will extend their very best wishes to him and to those who will be accompanying him on this mission. There is no doubt that greater diversification of our import trade would be beneficial to our economy, and the government has come to the concluson that this is apt to be an effective way of furthering that objective. We hope that their prognostics or hopes in that regard will be realized and that there will be the furthering of what has been, I think, the desire and objective of all parties in the house, to see restored to the greatest possible extent the multilateral trade that used to exist and that did have beneficial effects for all those who could participate in that mutual trade.

There have been dislocations which brought about inevitable results. I hope those results are not to be permanently inevitable and that they can be overcome. I can assure the minister that we wish him well in his endeavours to restore as near an approach to multilateral trade as can be realized under present world conditions.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we join very heartily, of course, with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) in wishing this delegation every success in Great Britain. I noted that in the minister's statement—I understand why, of course—he laid particular stress on the desirability of British exports to Canada. I am sure that the delegation will not lose sight of the other side in which we are also very interested, namely the question of enlarging our exports to the United Kingdom. The more imports we take from the United Kingdom and commonwealth countries, the more we provide them with the necessary dollars which they can spend in Canada for the exports that we wish to send abroad.

Representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, a wheat-growing area, I am anxious to see an expansion of trade with the United Kingdom not only for industry generally but particularly to help our agricultural situation. Even if the list of gentlemen who are going to England has not been completed, if the minister has the list there I would ask him if he would like to table a partial list this afternoon and add to it later.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the other two speakers in wishing the minister every success. I hope the result can be a substantial expansion of trade with Great Britain and the sterling area generally. I should like to ask the minister this question. In view of the success of the United States surplus disposal program in making surplus food available to nations that are not able to obtain it through the normal channels of trade, while at the same time substantially increasing their sales for dollars, will the minister give consideration to the advisability of Canada accepting sterling under a firm agreement that such sterling will be spent within the sterling area so that it may be used to buy goods which we are at present buying from the United States, thereby helping to reduce our imbalance of trade with the United States and at the same time helping Britain to reduce her imbalance of trade with Canada?

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all agree with previous speakers that anything that can be done to advance trade relations and increase trade is very commendable, but I should like to ask the minister a question, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I understand the practice when statements of this kind are made, and I am sure the house will correct me if I am in error, it has been customary for a spokesman for each party to be given the opportunity to comment on the statement but it is not customary to ask questions or to open the door beyond that. I think we would do well to confine ourselves to the practice of having one comment from each group in the house, which we have now had. I would ask my hon. friend to defer his question until the next period when such questions are dealt with.

Pension Act

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPENDANTS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Brooks —Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Pension Act to place dependants of persons who served in world war II in a position comparable to that of dependants of persons who served in world war I in cases of disability or death due to improper conduct; to ensure that pensions may be paid to the dependants of deceased members of the forces resident and domiciled in Newfoundland; to provide for the continuation of disability pensions and widows' pensions to the end of the month in which death occurred except in cases where no additional pension for dependants is payable; to provide for the payment of pension to the daughter of a pensioned widower where the domestic establishment is maintained after his death; to provide for an increase in the clothing allowance on account of amputation or use of appliances; to provide for an increase in the allowances for funeral and burial expenses; to remove the limitation on the amount of pension payable to a dependent parent of a deceased pensioner after discontinuance of pension to other dependants; to authorize payment of widows' pensions at current rates upon reinstatement of discontinued pensions; and to remove the limitation on payment of pensions to or in respect of children born after a specified date, or to wives whose marriage to a member of the forces or a pensioner took place after a specified date; such measure to include, in addition, certain consequential and clarifying amendments.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, before the resumption of the debate on the resolution I should like to make an observation regarding a remark by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I did not wish to interrupt him at the time he was speaking. He expressed his pleasure regarding the removal of the dateline for the marriage or remarriage of world war I veterans and mentioned his disappointment because the resolution did not say anything about children. Naturally the resolution is abbreviated, and I am happy to assure the hon. member and other members of the committee that the bill which will be introduced provides for the removal of the dateline with respect to marriage and also to children.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am glad to have that assurance, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Irwin: I listened with some degree of disfavour to the hon. member for Rosthern as he made his contribution to this debate. It seemed to me his speech had nothing to do with the resolution and contributed nothing to either the welfare of the veterans or the subject matter under discussion. I doubt very much that the veterans will thank him for his remarks or that his constituents will approve of his attitude. On the other hand, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was extremely instructive and I hope, sir, I can do as well as he did.

[Mr. Speaker.]

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I want to pay tribute to those responsible for the administration of veterans' affairs in British Columbia. So far as that province, at least, is concerned, they have been extremely efficient and extremely careful to interpret the regulations and the act under their administration as well as they possibly could. I should like to pay particular tribute to General Roaf, while he was the administrator for British Columbia.

In so far as these proposals are concerned, an assessment of the extent of them indicates the obvious necessity for a permanent committee on veterans affairs. No legislation as important as this should be permitted to get into such a state of desuetude as the proposals in this resolution would indicate. I express regret on behalf of the veterans of Canada that no provision is made in this bill for a rise in the basic pension. I know, Mr. Chairman, that Rome was not built in a day. I know that this government cannot do everything all at once, but at the same time they could have gone a long way towards helping the veterans of this country by raising the basic pension to a point where it would be at least equal to the salaries and wages received by the lower classes of labour in this country.

I should like to quote from page 5 of the veterans brief which was presented the day before yesterday to the cabinet. On that page it will be noted that in 1920 a single pensioner received $900 and today under this measure he will be receiving $1,800; that is a rise of 100 per cent. The same situation applies to a married pensioner. His pension goes from $1,200 in 1920 to $2,400 in 1957. The widow is not so fortunate because she was receiving $720 in 1920 and is now to receive $1,380, a rise of $660. When we compare these pensions with the pay of the armed forces and with that of some members of the civil service, we find a great difference. We find that a single private—please remember that this is the initial payment, and do not forget that a private can rise through the various grades of private and receive a considerably increased emolument —in 1920 was receiving $930.75, and today is receiving $1,980. A married private in the army was receiving $1,130.75 in 1920, and today he is getting $2,700, that is a rise of $1,569. When we come to the civil service, we find something else. A customs guard in 1920 was getting $1,260 and today he is getting $3,360. A cleaner and helper in 1920 was getting $900, the same as a pensioner on that date, and today he is getting $2,910.

Now, may we examine this in the light of the brief that was presented last year, Mr. Chairman. I should like to point out to you that the condition of the pensioner, as compared with these categories, has deteriorated even in the one year. The brief last year was presented on November 9, and let us have a look at it. On a percentage basis the pension of a single pensioner had risen 66 per cent on that date and the pension has now risen 100 per cent. The pension for a married pensioner has risen approximately the same amount and the same is true of a widow's pension. However, when we come to examine the others, we find that the single private in the army has received pay increases amounting to nearly 108 per cent in 1956, and 112.7 per cent in 1957. The married private had received pay increases amounting to 134.4 per cent in 1956 and is now up over 154 per cent. The customs guard received pay increases amounting to 166 per cent between 1920 and 1957. I should like to point out to you that in 1956 his percentage rise in pay was then 154 per cent, and it went up again this year. The pension has not gone up that much.

In the light of these figures, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that the Pension Act should be revised in such a way that the pensioner today would be at least on a level with those who are engaged in business or who are in the armed services. These figures show a disparity between the pension of the veteran and the pay of the armed forces as well as certain classes of civil servants. I put it to you, sir, that this disparity should not exist. I should like, in fact I would almost insist, that the disparity should not exist as between a man disabled as a result of war and those fellows who are capable of maintaining themselves.

These pensioners sacrificed all they had or hoped to have in the service of their country, and they should have a standard of living at least equal to the men and women of the armed forces. They do not have this today. By what process of mental calisthenics the official mind has arrived at these figures is something that is quite obscure. Historically, these pensions have been tied in with what one could receive in the labour market. The examples I have pointed out show you that today such a comparison is not applicable. During the years since 1920 the disparity has steadily widened. I would submit to you, Mr. Chairman, this condition should not have been allowed to develop and pension rates have failed to keep pace with wages in the services or in industry.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I note that a widow is always expected to live on less than a single pensioner. Just why this should be so is not apparent to me. Why one single individual should be expected to live on less than another single individual is something that is not quite apparent to me. Evidently this results from one of those peculiarities that exist in the official mind. Apparently the government can not grasp the fact that the war disability pension is a matter of contractual right and not a matter of charity. It is a moral obligation based on equity and should be looked on in that particular way because when we come to discharge this obligation, we are in a much different position than we are in so far as any other obligation we might assume is concerned, that is in regard to old age pensions or anything of that kind.

Then there is the question of the effective dates of the pensions. A man may have made an application for a pension three years ago and his pension may be granted today. However, there is no guarantee it is going to be retroactive to the date of the application. Why not? If a man is eligible for the pension now, then he should be eligible for it when he made application. He should therefore be in the position to collect for the difference in the length of time and should not be subjected to the loss of that pension merely because the pension board could not make up its mind.

Again I should like to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that one of the features of the act that has always caused a great deal of discussion in veterans organizations has been this question of disability in a pensioner that was regarded as pre-enlistment, not aggravated. My own contention right along has been and still is that where a man has been accepted by the armed forces and has been passed by the examiners in those armed forces, that man is assumed to be in top medical condition—it is agreed that he is—and that if something else crops up during his service there must have been some degree of aggravation or it would not have cropped up. We therefore insist that, where a person was entitled to a clear medical sheet when he enlisted, anything that crops up subsequently during his service should be regarded as a disability created or aggravated by service.

Then again I notice that in these amendments no mention is made of any improvements with regard to orphans of veterans. They are not receiving a raise and they did not receive a raise last time.

There is another thing I wish to mention, namely the question of widows. While under these amendments the widow is being granted a raise the fact remains that if she happens to have a couple of children on her hands, those children are not subject to a raise. While the raise may and certainly must be of value to the widow who is entitled to it, the fact remains that it is not going to help her a great deal if no raise is given to the children who are left under her care.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer you to Mr. Lapointe's attitude towards this matter at the last session of this house. That gentleman for a good many years was minister of veterans affairs in the previous government. I would commend his remarks to the present minister and suggest to him that the implications of those remarks are now in his hands. I hope that he will govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the purpose of discussing this resolution is to enable the house to come to a decision as to whether the minister shall have leave to introduce a bill to amend the Canadian Pension Act. This would therefore appear to me to be a suitable opportunity to make a few observations so that the house may be informed as to how this act as at present administered applies to Newfoundland veterans. I particularly wish to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and his colleagues at this time in the hope that he may find it possible to include in his amendments some solution to the situations which I am about to describe.

Hon. members may have noticed that the province of Newfoundland is given the distinction of being the only province of Canada mentioned by name in the resolution now before the house. Since Newfoundland was supposed to have become a part of Canada in 1949, hon. members may like myself be wondering why it has been necessary to single out my province for this special mention. When Newfoundland joined Canada we all took it for granted that Newfoundland veterans would automatically become Canadian veterans and would be treated in every respect as though they had served in the Canadian forces. Very few veterans had access to copies of the terms of union at the time of confederation but most of us were supplied with a little booklet entitled, "Canada's Veterans Charter, How it Applies in the Province of Newfoundland". I should like to read a few short paragraphs of the introduction at page 4 of this booklet which was issued under the authority of the Hon. Milton F. Gregg, then minister of veterans affairs. The introduction on page 4 reads as follows:

> This is a booklet addressed to Canada's newest veterans in the province of Newfoundland, those who in world war I and world war II fought so gallantly in the battles for freedom. The booklet is designed to inform you of those rights and privileges which you now have in common with your fellow-veterans who served from Canada.

[Mr. Irwin.]

Then follows the paragraph I wish to underline, Mr. Chairman:

> Under the agreement for confederation the veteran who served from Newfoundland is in exactly the same position as those who served from the other nine provinces.

When we come to the terms of union we find that the rights and privileges of Newfoundland veterans are outlined in section 38. I do not intend to read the whole of this section but I think it would be helpful to hon. members if I put on the record the first two subsections. Section 38 of the terms of union is entitled "Veterans" and it reads in part as follows:

> 38. Canada will make available to Newfoundland veterans the following benefits, on the same basis as they are from time to time available to Canadian veterans, as if the Newfoundland veterans had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces, namely,
> (a) The War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1946, free hospitalization and treatment, and civil service preference will be extended to Newfoundland veterans who served in the first world war or the second world war or both;
> (b) Canada will assume as from the date of union the Newfoundland pension liability in respect of the first world war, and in respect of the second world war Canada will assume as from the date of union the cost of supplementing disability and dependants' pensions paid by the government of the United Kingdom or an allied country to Newfoundland veterans up to the level of the Canadian rates of pensions, and, in addition, Canada will pay pensions arising from disabilities that are pensionable under Canadian law but not pensionable either under the laws of the United Kingdom or under the laws of an allied country;

Then follow subsection (c) dealing with the Veterans' Land Act, subsection (d) dealing with re-establishment credit, subsection (e) dealing with vocational and educational training and subsection (f) covering the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

In 1947, another official document was published entitled "Proposed Arrangements for the Entry of Newfoundland into Confederation". On page 11 of this document, war service benefits are outlined as annex 1 and I should like to read the first paragraph on that page:

> Canada will extend to Newfoundland veterans who served with any of His Majesty's forces the following benefits on the same basis as if these Newfoundland veterans had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces . . .

Perhaps we were not justified in assuming that Newfoundland veterans would automatically become Canadian veterans upon confederation. In the face of the official statements I have just read, hon. members will have to decide this question for themselves. Whether we were justified or not, the fact remains that we did believe that on confederation we would be treated exactly as if we had served in the Canadian forces, and when I say "we" I mean not only Newfoundland veterans but the Newfoundland public as well.

During the eight years that I have been a member of parliament I have had occasion to address a considerable number of letters to the Canadian pension commission dealing with the problems of Newfoundland veterans, and I must confess that I have often been puzzled by references in the replies I have received to the establishment of domiciliary residence in Newfoundland.

So firmly was the idea embedded in my mind that Newfoundland veterans upon confederation would be treated as if they had served in the Canadian forces that I must confess I was completely blind to the possibility that any other interpretation might be possible, and it was not until last year that it suddenly dawned upon me that not only were Newfoundland war veterans not regarded as Canadian veterans but that they were not even regarded as Newfoundland veterans, but as imperial veterans. That came as somewhat of a shock, because prior to confederation Newfoundland veterans had never regarded themselves as imperial veterans, nor were they so regarded by the Newfoundland government. It is true they served with the United Kingdom forces under United Kingdom command, but their identity was preserved by supplementary pay and allowances provided by the Newfoundland government, and on discharge their pensions also were supplemented by that government in accordance with a scale designed to bring them as far as possible in line with Canadian pensions.

I am not blaming anyone for this situation. I do not think it was done deliberately. I am not saying that the terms of union in this respect are incompatible with the interpretation which has been placed upon them. On the contrary, I have the highest regard for the personnel of the Canadian pension commission, as I have for the personnel of the war veterans allowance board and for the heads of the various branches of the Department of Veterans Affairs. But I say that I feel the interpretation which the Canadian pension commission is placing upon the Pension Act in its application to Newfoundland is not in accord with the spirit of the terms of union as expressed in the preamble to section 38 of the terms of union and in the booklet entitled "Canada's Veterans Charter".

I know it has been argued that the present arrangement works to the advantage of the Newfoundland veteran in that it gives him a choice of dealing either with the British ministry of pensions or with the Canadian pension commission; in other words, the Newfoundland veteran has two strings to his bow and can choose the better of two possible worlds. I should like to reply to that argument now.

Canada's veterans charter has been described as the best and most generous in the whole world, and I believe every member of this house will subscribe to that view. But if that is true, as I believe it is, what advantage is there in being compelled to apply for the inferior British pension before being able to qualify for the more generous Canadian pension? If there is any advantage, I am unable to see it. I can, on the other hand, see a great many disadvantages. Hon. members will recall that section 38(b) of the confederation terms says that Canada will supplement the British pension up to Canadian rates.

Under this arrangement the Newfoundland veteran is, first of all, compelled to make his application to the British ministry of pensions. This means that the application must be forwarded to England to be adjudicated there, and the first disadvantage is the long delay while waiting for the application to travel back and forth and because of the time required by the British ministry of pensions to reach its decision. This process often takes weeks and it may even take several months. If the veteran concerned is incapacitated, or if his earning power is diminished by his incapacity, he and his family must exist all this while either on charity or on government relief, which constitutes a hardship which increases in severity as the period is prolonged.

In dealing with the application, the officials of the British ministry of pensions might arrive at one of three decisions. They might admit entitlement and grant a pension based on a percentage assessment of disability. In the second place they might grant entitlement and assess the disability as nil or, thirdly, they might reject the application altogether.

If the application is rejected outright the Newfoundland veteran then has the privilege of applying to the Canadian pension commission in which case he must begin all over again with still further delay and still more loss of time and prolonged hardship. If the British ministry of pensions grants entitlement but assesses the disability as nil, the veteran may find himself worse off than if his application had been rejected outright because he cannot then benefit from the supplementary provisions of the Canadian Pension Act even though, by Canadian standards, he might have an assessable degree of disability. The very fact the British ministry did not reject his claim debars him from taking advantage of section 13 (7) of the act even though his claim might easily be established under Canadian law and assessed under the Canadian table of disabilities.

I am not able to follow the mathematical reasoning of the Canadian pension commission in taking this stand. When I went to school I learned that zero plus one equalled one, and that zero plus ten equalled ten and that zero could be supplemented in any degree by adding whatever digit to it you wished to add. All I can say is that if the Russian scientists and mathematicians had adopted the new mathematical law formulated by the Canadian pension commission we would not have to worry today about sputniks travelling around over our heads. In any case the present situation where a veteran whose claim for a pension is rejected is better off than one whose claim is admitted is a bit ridiculous, to say the least, and I urge the minister to take whatever steps lie in his power to have it changed.

Should the British ministry of pensions grant a pension the Canadian pension commission will, as I just said, supplement the British pension under section 13 (7) of the act with an amount that will bring it up to Canadian standards but even then the present supplementary provisions of the Canadian Pension Act fail to provide complete coverage even for those who, in the main, qualify for supplementation, because should the Newfoundland pensioner who is in receipt of supplementation, or his dependants, subsequently take up residence outside of Canada they immediately lose the supplementation and revert back to British rates. This result gives rise to a most peculiar situation in that a veteran wounded in action whose claim is granted by the British and supplemented by the Canadian pension commission loses his supplementation if he leaves Canada. The same thing is true as far as his widow and dependants are concerned. Should the widow find it necessary to go and live with a daughter in the United States or anywhere outside of Canada she loses the benefit of the supplementation but on the other hand the veteran who never left Newfoundland during service or whose claim having been rejected by the British is established directly under section 13 (7) is paid at Canadian rates as a matter of right and he and his widow and dependants can go anywhere in the world without losing the supplementation. This is not only ridiculous, it is totally contrary to the spirit of the terms of union and it is not in accord with official statements which have been made concerning Newfoundland veterans.

One other serious complaint that Newfoundland veterans have is the long time between appeal board hearings. The last hearing of the appeal board in Newfoundland was held last September and the one before that was held in April 1956. The long interval between hearings of the appeal board is not only a poor service to the veterans of Newfoundland but a cause of great inconvenience since some appellants are compelled to wait as long as 15 months before their cases are heard.

According to the Canadian pension commission the Pension Act does not make provision for payment of widows pensions as of right to those widows whose husbands were in receipt of 50 per cent or more pension at the time of their death if death occurred prior to April 1, 1949. Although these widows have been provided for from a special fund they have not been automatically granted the last two pension increases and I should like the minister to pay special attention to this matter and see what can be done to ensure that these widows will receive their benefits as a matter of right the same as do widows of veterans who serve in the Canadian forces.

Mr. Brooks: Perhaps I might just interrupt for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to assure the hon. member that we will take into very careful consideration the points he has raised; but I do express my amazement at the fact that this is the first time the hon. member, who has been in this house since confederation, ever brought this to the attention of the House of Commons. It is very amazing to me.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I explained to the committee why it was we did not bring it up before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Carter: It did not dawn upon us before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Carter: We took for granted what the veterans charter said.

Mr. Brooks: You made a big mistake there.

Mr. Carter: And we took for granted what the terms of union said. I will read that section to the minister again if he wishes to have his memory refreshed.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member need not read the terms of union to me. He has been complaining that his government did not take this into consideration.

Mr. Carter: I am not complaining at all nor am I blaming anybody for this, but I am pointing out to the minister that this situation does exist now and it is one that should not be allowed to continue further.

Mr. Brooks: I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: The government has improved the situation.

Mr. Carter: These amendments will not represent any improvement as far as these problems are concerned. I hope that when the minister brings in his legislation it will be drafted in such a way as to provide a satisfactory solution to the problems I have outlined. In fact, my purpose in speaking now rather than on second reading is to acquaint the minister with these problems so he can see whether something can be done in terms of finding a solution.

The reason we were blinded and it took us so long to realize what the present situation actually is was the ambiguity of section 38 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada. This section reads:

> Canada will make available to Newfoundland veterans the following benefits, on the same basis as they are from time to time available to Canadian veterans, as if the Newfoundland veterans had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces—

I would point out that the Newfoundland veterans are not being treated as though they had served in His Majesty's Canadian forces but rather as though they had served in His Majesty's imperial forces.

Mr. Brooks: It certainly took you a long time to realize that.

Mr. Carter: That may be, but better late than never; and the minister and the commission will now have no further excuse for delaying action to correct the situation.

Mr. Byrne: We are just working harder than the other opposition.

Mr. MacInnis: What excuse do you make for your own government?

Mr. Carter: I wish to bring to the minister's attention the fact that the wording of the present Canadian pension life certificate, CPC-103, is misleading in regard to children over 16 and 17 who are attending school or who may be incapacitated mentally or physically. I have come in contact with several cases of pensioners who did not know they could claim additional pension for their children up to the age of 21 as long as such children continued to make satisfactory progress in school and I would be grateful if something could be done to clarify the wording of that particular clause.

Finally, I should like to point out to the minister I have been informed that there is a precedent in the department which, if it were adopted, would alleviate all of the problems to which I have just referred. I can understand that distinction would be made between a veteran who deliberately by-passed the Canadian forces and went and enlisted in the forces of another country. I can understand that such a veteran would not have the same claim as a veteran who did not by-pass those forces; but that does not apply to Newfoundland veterans. We did not by-pass the Canadian forces; we had no other choice at the time. I understand that during the war an occasion occurred when it was necessary for a number of the Canadian air force personnel to be transferred to the British air force. I am not familiar with the complete details, but I understand that in the case of those veterans special treatment was given. In other words, this particular group of veterans was not treated as though they had by-passed the Canadian forces to join the imperial forces. If that same reasoning could be applied to the Newfoundland veterans most of our problems could be worked out and I heartily commend this to the minister's attention.

(Translation):

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate, I have no intention of delaying the adoption of the resolution now before us. Rather do I wish to say how pleased the veterans of this country have been with these amendments to the various pieces of pension legislation which are of special concern to them.

Like so many other younger members, especially those who sit on this side of the house, I am a veteran. Thanks to Providence I came out of the war without any wounds or illness. However, thousands of my comrades have had a different fate, and it is up to us to see to it that they receive an adequate pension. I think that the adoption of the amendments which are being discussed this afternoon, and which in any case will be considered for several days, will help us achieve our aim, that of granting these men an equitable pension.

(Text):

I would like to say only a few words, Mr. Chairman, as one of those in this house who is a veteran and perhaps among the luckier veterans who came out of world war I or world war II without any wounds, any disabilities and I hope no lasting illnesses. I merely say that we as Canadians owe to these men who offered themselves as volunteers in the defence of this and other countries a great deal; that we should help them to maintain a decent standard of living by affording them some measure of pension.

Like many members on both sides of the house I, too, feel that we can go a long way yet to achieve the ideal pension scheme. Notwithstanding what may have been said by others, I look to the early setting up of a permanent committee on veterans affairs to investigate our whole pension scheme and all matters related to veterans affairs. However, I do not agree that at this moment we should have held off the early consideration of these emergent matters for the purpose of going into a long and careful study of the subject. I am sure hon. members will agree that it is not something that can be decided or investigated within the confines of a week or two. It will require representations and investigations on all sides if we are to achieve what we believe to be the ideal, and I feel that great injustice would have been done by adopting a long procedure.

We have before us what are considered to be very distressing conditions, as the Canadian Legion has pointed out for many years. I come from Edmonton where I do have the support of a great number of the members of the Canadian Legion. Edmonton is proud of the fact that its principal branch, the Montgomery branch, is the largest branch of the Canadian Legion in this country. In addition, we have two other branches, so it is not an isolated movement in Alberta and in Edmonton in particular.

Following the observations of some hon. members, I would say that I have some reservations on the point advanced by the Legion and by hon. members in this house that pensions should be tied in to the scale of pay of the services. It must be remembered that the scale of pay of the services is tied in closely with the competitive labour market. I do not think the same parallel exists between the pension and the competitive labour field. With that, Mr. Chairman, I would say that I am prepared, along with many other hon. members, to support the general principles of this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to see how bipartisan the veterans policy is. Like most hon. members, I too am a veteran and in the past I have been very proud of the part that the Department of Veterans Affairs has played in the welfare of our returned people. On most occasions it has been bipartisan, and we are pleased to see that it is so today. Of course, I think a committee could be set up to study veterans' affairs. I do not think the fact that we pass this legislation will take away the need for setting up such a committee to discuss further the problems of veterans that are not settled by this resolution.

I should like to congratulate Mr. Burgess, the dominion president of the Canadian Legion, on the presentation that they made and the able manner in which the work has been done which has gone into that presentation.

In my particular area the Canadian Legion has always played a prominent part in veterans affairs. From my reading of the brief and from the knowledge that I have of veterans problems—it may be small—I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs might have given more consideration to increasing the amounts which are being increased to bring them up to the 33⅓ per cent which has been asked for by the Canadian Legion. At all times I have found the Legion moderate in the extreme. They have always tended to be on the conservative side, with a small "c". At no time have their demands been anything other than reasonable.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that at the present time there are people working in the House of Commons who are veterans of the British armed forces. When they applied for jobs here they were instructed that they did not come under the veterans preference. That is a matter that could be taken into consideration and perhaps some thought given to it.

I have found on many occasions that persons reporting to the pension board for their annual check-up—I have been in that position myself—have been instructed by the doctors sitting on the board and dealing with the review of pension cases that they have looked in the files and found no entries, no medical evidence that the pensioner had needed attention since the last time they saw him. I think some consideration should be given to this problem in those instances where medical plans are in operation. A doctor may be working continuously in an area under a medical plan and in many cases he does not see fit to fill out the forms for the Department of Veterans Affairs. Therefore, even though the man may be treated once a week, once a month or at irregular intervals, there is no record of such treatment, and when he comes before the board for the annual review there is no record of any medical service having been given to that particular pensioner. The obvious conclusion drawn from the blank record for that year is that he has not needed any treatment.

I am not sure what amount doctors are paid for calls involving pensioners but it may be that the rate is not sufficiently high to warrant the doctor filling out the form. He may find it is much more profitable to use the medical plan in that particular area.

There are also a number of cases, including one in particular about which I can speak with some authority, where the veteran comes before a pension board in a small community and there are no specialists attached to the review board with the result that the pensioner is sent somewhere else to see a specialist. In some cases I think the pensioner is legitimately justified in saying that when he is sent to a private practitioner he should only be sent there for examination and should not be compelled to take treatment, treatment that would only serve to put a few dollars in the pocket of the particular specialist and would have no bearing whatsoever on the pension review being undertaken.

In the particular case I have in mind the person's pension was cut because he had refused the treatment, and he had simply been sent to the specialist for an examination and not for treatment. If these matters are brought to the minister's attention I am quite sure he will take cognizance of them and it will not be necessary to say any more about them.

On occasion we have had problems with a type of veteran who does not appear to be covered by the Department of Veterans Affairs Act. There are a number, some of whom I know personally, who served in the merchant navy, saw action and were wounded by shells or torpedoes and are unable to get any type of pension. It seems that originally there was a pension for merchant seamen and that when the war began that pension was discontinued. A period of time elapsed before the pension plan under which they were then brought was put into effect. One particular chap I know lost an arm and was badly shot up, but there is no coverage for him. I believe this matter has been raised in the house on a number of occasions. This person has never received any pension, and I think it can be legitimately argued that he was serving in a very active field of hostilities.

In talking to soldiers, airmen and navy personnel recently I was most surprised to find that they do not come under what we would have considered the protection of the Department of Veterans Affairs while we were service personnel. It is true that while they are on duty for their eight hours a day they would be covered in case of accidents when working at the job they are supposed to be doing. I am not going to repeat a number of cases that have been mentioned. There was one discussed at some length in 1956, an accident where a man was killed while still under the orders of his superior officer. But because what he was doing was considered to be outside the line of duty his wife received no pension.

However, it would appear to me that in such cases we could reasonably ask the government to provide and pay for an insurance plan that would at least supply some of the necessities for the widows and dependants of these service personnel who at the present time are serving their country not only in Canada but in foreign lands. It does not appear to me that there would be much satisfaction involved for some lady, whose husband had been killed on the streets of Paris, being told that he was not on duty at that particular time and that nothing could be done about it. There has always been a certain honour and pride in serving in the forces of Canada and I think we should protect that at least with insurance which would cover these people in the hours when they are considered not to be working. I think that rates could be arranged whereby insurance of $20,000 or $25,000 would not be prohibitive in cost and I believe such a move would be very favourably received by the armed services.

Finally, I should like to leave the thought with the minister that some consideration be given to setting aside November 11 as a national holiday. Every person in Canada has had some close friend or relative who gave their life in the service of Canada. Indeed, many of us have had hundreds. The least I think we can do for them is to set aside one day on which to honour their memory.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be confined to the difficulties that pensioners encounter in having their medical condition reviewed and given what they consider is proper attention. It is not unusual for a veteran to find after appealing a decision that the same members are sitting on the court of appeal as were on the original examination board. I think all members will agree that is not a fair practice. Generally, pensioners have found that once a negative decision is made by an appeal board or by an examining board, as the case may be, it is almost impossible to have the decision changed or modified despite any evidence from local or family doctors that may be presented.

I am going to deal with a couple of cases for which I can vouch personally, and the information I am going to give the house is on record. There is a veteran not too far from my home town who suffered gunshot wounds in 1918. Shortly after being treated in hospital he was demobilized in the last year of the war and had only been home a short time when he became crippled with sciatica. This was in 1919. Since that time, Mr. Chairman, we have a continuous record of sciatica and suffering on the part of this veteran. At various stages during those years he was completely disabled. We have references here to statements by local doctors. I am going to read a recommendation that was made by Dr. Meekison in 1935. This is his opinion:

This man is totally disabled with bilateral severe sciatic neuritis. In the absence of other causes, it is very reasonable to assume that his present condition is due to his gunshot wounds. Something should be done for this man.

We can go back a little bit earlier to 1919. This veteran was discharged and took up residence on Vancouver island. Suffering, and totally disabled as he was, he went to various doctors in his own neighbourhood and on the mainland. Finally, he was advised to seek another climate and he moved to Kamloops in the interior of British Columbia. From there, he moved a little farther westward and now is residing very close to my home town. From 1918 until the present time this man has been continuously suffering from sciatica. Various family doctors and local doctors have agreed on this man's condition. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that their opinions are just as worthy of consideration as any specialist who might sit on a board that the veterans affairs department might set up. I maintain that these opinions should be given some consideration in trying to reach a solution of this case. This example is forcibly in my mind at the present time because I have just taken it up with the pension commission in Ottawa. This morning I received a letter which does not make me feel too happy. I am not going to read the letter, Mr. Chairman, because it is rather lengthy. However, the last paragraph says this:

He is a veteran with a good record of service, and possibly would qualify for reinstatement on war veterans' allowance if he is no longer gainfully employed.

I say that if he is not employed and is entitled to war veterans' allowance then, in the face of the facts set out in this brief, he is entitled to a straight disability pension. In view of this, we feel the case should be reopened and he should receive more serious consideration.

I am going to mention one more case, Mr. Chairman. A young lad left school in 1944 to go into the armed forces of this country. He took his infantry training and was sent to Germany with the army of occupation. He had no active service, through no fault of his own. On discharge from the army he was examined by the medical officer and put in category F. Hon. members know this meant automatic attention by the pension board. The reason for placing him in this category was a severe heart condition. Within a short time he was called to Vancouver for examination before the board, and the board said there was absolutely nothing wrong with him. A few short weeks before that the army examining officer had placed him in category F and had made a remark—these are his exact words and therefore I would like to have them on the record—"How in hell did you ever go through the army training?"

In spite of this, within a few short weeks the appeal board said there was nothing wrong with him; he had a perfect heart and was in perfect physical condition. I know this lad. I know that even today, after all these years, he has to be careful of the kind of employment he accepts. He cannot engage in sports. He cannot engage in any physical activity beyond that necessary to move in a very quiet occupation. If he cuts his own lawn, within a few minutes you will find him stretched out on a couch resting; that is the kind of lad the medical board said was in perfect physical condition.

These are examples that I think should be given a little more serious attention. There is something wrong when people such as these two I have mentioned feel it is hopeless to request that their case be reviewed. This lad who was discharged in 1946 is convinced it is hopeless to try to do anything about the decision of the board. From the evidence I have here, and from speaking to so many veterans in similar circumstances, I am inclined to agree that it is almost hopeless to try to have a case re-opened and get a decision that has once been in the negative reversed.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take much of the time of the house this afternoon. In fact, I had not intended to say anything at all but I am taking part in the debate because of certain remarks that have been made. I might say that I am very sympathetic towards the cases cited by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, as well as the other grievances that have been raised this afternoon. I believe they will receive attention and correction. I believe these hon. members put forth a genuine effort in putting their cases before the committee. On the other hand, the submissions made by the hon. member for Rosthern as well as the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount are in a different position altogether.

While these hon. members were in favour of this measure, they could go along with it, they introduced the promises made by the leader of the government and stated he had not lived up to those promises. They felt the Prime Minister had not lived up to his promises because the pensions were not related to a formula tied to the gross national product of this country or the rising cost of living. The hon. member for Rosthern also made the point that our leader had not lived up to his promises in regard to this legislation because it had not been brought into effect immediately.

As I listened to both these hon. members I thought they sounded like a lawyer who comes into court with a very bad case. He has nothing to work with. So he is obliged to go into great fulminations, with great fury and furor, in an effort to try to distract the judge or the jury from the weakness of his case. This is the simple proposition with which the house is confronted.

They have now found that the leader of the government is living up to every one of the promises he has made and the people of this country have great faith in him. That is the reason they are an aggregation of Ishmalites. They found we have "Honest John" who is delivering the goods. They themselves are surprised, in view of the tortoise-like movement which the previous government had. Now they go into kangaroo-like activity and say that this thing must be done overnight.

Let me tell you the people of Canada certainly placed their confidence in the right man. He is giving them the legislation and is fulfilling his promises with an alacrity that has dumbfounded the official opposition. I am not a bit surprised that the hon. member for Rosthern, when speaking the other night, said that he was amazed at some of the legislation that came in. We were amazed at his amazement. However, while they have a very weak case and they are now trying strenuously to find a way out, it is certainly amusing.

After this goes on for a few more weeks, the people of Canada will discern just exactly what they are trying to do. They will discern that they are trying to develop a case to go to the people saying, "We are now going to do something for you", notwithstanding the fact that it took them nearly 39 years to bring in their health legislation that had been promised continuously since 1919. They brought down an omnibus piece of legislation last March that covered the veterans assistance. It was nebulous. It did not have anything tied in with it and it left the government of today in a position to find the money to finance it.

However, I would say this. There is a certain amount of amusement in the situation. It brings to mind the comment once made by Patrick Henry: "How the mighty have fallen". Then I should like to wind up with a quotation from holy writ. When Eli was disturbed at the progress of the battle with the Phillistines in which his two sons were engaged; they had not prepared for the fray and the armies were in no condition to fulfil what Israel expected of them, he died from the shock of Israel's defeat, and his two sons died in the battle. The wife of Eli's son Phineas was great with child and expected soon. When the child was born, because of the calamitous defeat of Israel and his fathers part in it, she in her sorrow named it Ichabod, which means thy glory has faded. That is the condition in which the Liberal party now finds itself.

Mr. McIvor: I have just a brief word to say, Mr. Chairman. I listened to the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke state the two cases with which he had difficulty. The reason why I rose is that I also had a case with which I had difficulty. I can advise the hon. member to take the same course as I took and he will not be sorry. This veteran to whom I refer had been thrown from the top of a lorry and lit on the hard road on his back. He was never able to walk very well after that time. After some years his walking ability became worse and worse and he was badly crippled. What I did was what I think any hon. member ought to do. I placed the case before the chairman of the pension board. I gave him particulars. In less than three months the man had a 100 per cent pension. I would advise any hon. member to do just what has been done today. I would advise him to get the particulars and give them to the chairman of the pension board. Then the doctors will be obliged to prove their cases.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the house more than a couple of minutes at this stage but when my genial friend the hon. member for Danforth spoke, he made a comment about which I could not refrain from making some observations. He spoke about what was done last spring as being very nebulous. I just wish to draw to his attention the fact that what we did last spring was to increase the amount paid to the single veteran by $25 a month and that to the married pensioner by $30 a month. This increase went to all pensioners. If, in his opinion, that is nebulous, Mr. Chairman, then how much more nebulous is this bill which does not increase the basic pensions at all.

I give credit to the minister for being quite straightforward with the house in saying that he is not proposing to increase the basic pensions at all in this legislation. That makes it extremely difficult to understand why, for example, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond seemed to think that this legislation was going to increase basic pensions. I was sorry he did not consult some of the leaders and some of the experienced members of his party who would have set him right on the matter. In fact, I am surprised that he should have said it at all when the minister was so clear in stating that the only way in which basic pensions would be affected by this legislation would be to incorporate in the bill what is already law—in other words these increases that were made last spring are now the law—and put it in the Pension Act. The minister was quite frank about that matter. I think anybody who is supporting this legislation with the idea that it is increasing the basic pensions should have listened more closely to what the minister said quite honestly in speaking to the resolution.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. This concerns how decisions are arrived at concerning entitlement. If an applicant was accepted into any branch of the armed services as being in category A and is later discharged as being in a lower category, can the pension board disclaim responsibility on the ground that the health condition which led to discharge existed previously to enlistment?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, the question which is asked by the hon. member will be dealt with when we are discussing the bill. We are at the resolution stage now.

Having listened to the observations made by hon. members, I may say that I am pleased to have the suggestions that many of them have made. The many points which have been referred to me will be given careful consideration and when we are discussing second reading of this bill, I shall be pleased indeed to deal with them.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, before I come to the matters I wish to develop I should like to ask the minister if he would give some thought to the question of the Canadian firefighters. It would, I think, be a good thing for him to examine the whole subject, to find out how many firefighters went overseas from Canada, when they went, how long they were overseas and what was the nature of the dangers they encountered; how many casualties they suffered and whether or not some consideration should be given them in order to reward them for the good work they did to assist Great Britain in the days of the war when fires were very widespread and very hard to put out.

I have listened with a good deal of thought and attention to the speeches made by the various hon. members who have taken part in the debate. I believe that if I were a reader of Hansard out in the country I should find it difficult to get an over-all picture of the situation which confronts Canada in respect of the veterans.

I thought that the submission which has recently been placed in the hands of the Prime Minister by the Canadian Legion was about as fine a thing as I have read on the whole subject. In my opinion it would be valuable to the people in the country who read Hansard, not now, but in the future and who might bring matters before succeeding governments if we listed the recommendations contained in this submission. I should like to commend the man who drew up this brief. Already there have been a number of comments with respect to the conservative, moderate tone one finds throughout the submission and the moderate nature of the demands it contains. I should like to commend the author myself. On page 1, I read this statement which, I believe, is an important one:

> In the light of this exceedingly serious situation and of world tensions today, we urge that there will be no unwarranted cutback in our defence budget and expenditures. Instead, this is a time for renewed and accelerated effort.

All hon. members will, I believe, support this idea, though as far as I have heard, no hon. member has supported it in the speech he made either before the committee or the house. On page 3 of the submission we read this:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends—that manpower and equipment for the defence of Canada be maintained and extended according to the exigencies and requirements of NATO and the United Nations and our obligations to them; that the government does not reduce defence expenditure except in cases where the national safety be not impaired by so doing; and that the government shall adopt a policy in which the primary consideration shall be the fullest development of the best brains of Canada for purposes of defence by subsidizing higher education and scientific research in centres of learning in Canada.

Mr. Brooks: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I dislike very much interrupting the hon. member, but we are discussing the Department of Veterans Affairs. The subject matter which he is dealing with now has nothing to do with the Department of Veterans Affairs but is entirely the responsibility of the Department of National Defence, which is probably the reason why none of the other hon. members discussed it this afternoon.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, I have just finished that part of my remarks. But I think we cannot stress this important matter too much, even though we are dealing only with veterans affairs—

Mr. Brooks: Yes, at the proper time.

Mr. Blackmore: May I point out, though there should be no need to point it out, that we are not encouraging young men to enter the army and risk their lives and health by treating so shabbily the men who served their country in three wars, and who, in the case of every one of these wars, have in many cases received far less than fair and equitable treatment at the hands of the country. So, probably, that particular part of what I have to say does apply to veterans affairs because the veterans affairs department really plays a part in the future defence of Canada.

The next quotation which I will read does, I think, apply directly to veterans affairs, and it is on page 7 of the submission:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that the rates payable under schedules "A" and "B" of the Canadian Pension Act as of 30 June 1957 be increased by 33⅓ per cent.

And, further down the page:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that dependent parents' pension be restored to its former position whereby the rate for one parent was equal to the rate for a widow, with a more adequate additional amount than at present provided where there are two dependent parents.

On page 8 we find the following recommendation:

> That section 38 of the Pension Act be amended so that a dependent parent of a deceased member of the forces would become eligible for the maximum rate on the remarriage of the pensioned widow, even though pension is still being paid on account of a child or children of the deceased service man.

On page 9 we read:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that dependent parents pension and increases in such pensions, when granted, be effective from date of application.

And on page 12:

> That a change be made in the Pension Act to make clear the status of these Newfoundland veterans in accordance with the spirit of the negotiations leading up to the terms of union and with the intent of the legislators as reflected in the other legislation quoted above.

Of course, the drafters of this submission have included a good deal of explanatory material which I am omitting. On page 14 we read:

> We would advocate that it be made mandatory that when a decision is given favourable to the veteran, pension will be paid as of date of application. At present this is a matter which is left to the discretion of the Canadian Pension Commission, but section 31(1) of the act limits the discretion to a maximum of 12 months. Section 31(2) permits an additional six months when hardship and distress would otherwise occur, and section 31(3) permits an additional 18 months' pension where there are administrative delays beyond the applicant's control.

Already we are piling up a pretty heavy list of scores against this "finest pension scheme in the world". I have heard that expression from the Liberals now for so many years that I wonder whether it really is as fine a scheme as it is represented to be in comparison with the pension schemes of other countries. If it is, then the rest of the world must behave pretty shabbily in several respects with regard to its veterans. From page 15 of the submission I quote:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that all disability pensions when granted become effective from the date of application, but in order to allay fears of excessive awards going back to world war 1 jeopardizing the chances of the applicant, we append the following saving clause:— "This provision shall not apply to claims granted prior to January 1, 1946, and no retroactive payments shall be made for a period prior to that date."

On page 17, we find this further recommendation:

> That in order to obviate all possibility of future diversion of war pensions, section 24(3) be amended so that it will specifically bind the crown.

On page 18:

> That those veterans with Canadian domicile and residence prior to service with the United Kingdom or other allied governments as referred to in sections 50, 51 and 52 of the Canadian Pension Act be brought within the provisions of section 13 of the act.

On page 19 we read:

> That a clause similar to section 30 (11) (b) of the War Veterans' Allowance Act be included in the Canadian Pension Act, and further, that this clause be so worded as to provide for the widow.

On page 20 we find the following:

> That the government amend this section of the act so as to eliminate this date line.

And also:

> That the burial grant be made at least equal to the amount provided in the veterans burial regulations, and that the amount allowed for last illness be increased to a figure more in keeping with present costs than the $50 now authorized.

I have listed only 13 of the 30 recommendations of the Canadian Legion. Under the circumstances it might not be in the best interests of everyone if I were to take sufficient time to read the entire 30 recommendations but I believe they should be before the people of the country in order that they might bring a certain amount of pressure to bear on the men they elect.

I think I know why it is that our veterans have not had as good treatment as we would have wished. It has been because the government of the day has felt it has not the money at its disposal. I am quite positive that is the chief difficulty in the way of the present minister. He is now beginning to worry about how these promises which were rather freely, and I think extravagantly made can be kept and made good. I realize that under the present system there is difficulty in getting money to do all the things we should but I do not believe there is any difficulty in finding the goods and services in this country with which to supply the veterans all they need.

Consequently when we look at the matter from the standpoint of Canada's ability to provide the goods and services necessary to establish a high standard of living for her soldiers we find there is everything in Canada but the common sense necessary to make what is physically possible financially possible. Therefore, I think the people of this country ought to be aroused to the point where they will say, "Look here, if we can produce all the milk and other products of that kind to provide for our population and all the goods and services necessary to provide a comfortable standard of living, it is downright scandalous if our veterans cannot be provided with all of those things they need and can use".

I thought it would be worth while, Mr. Chairman, just to say a few words along this line. I have not said very much concerning veterans affairs during the last few years because we have had very able spokesmen in this group and because as it has been organized it has not been my particular responsibility to speak on the subject of veterans affairs. Nor is it my special responsibility today except that as a representative of the constituency of Lethbridge in which there are great numbers of veterans from world war I and world war II and a number from the Korean war I feel that it now becomes my duty to the veterans and the people of Lethbridge generally to speak out in support of a better deal for the veteran all across the board.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Brooks thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 35, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES IN FEDERAL WORKS

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees in public works, undertakings and businesses.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I rise in moving second reading of Bill No. 16 which is an act to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees in federal works, undertakings and businesses I consider it a great privilege for me to be able to present this bill to the house at this time. I hope that in days to come I will have the privilege of presenting other bills which will be of benefit to the people of Canada.

The purpose of this bill is quite simple. It aims to provide two weeks annual vacation with pay to all employees who have completed two years' employment in industries under federal jurisdiction and one week's holiday with pay for those who have completed less than two years, but at least one year. In the first instance, pay is calculated at 4 per cent of the gross earnings, and in the second instance at 2 per cent. The bill provides an answer to many requests which have been put forward over the years by labour unions and other interested groups and, in effect, grants what has customarily been a subject of collective bargaining. It takes the two weeks vacation out of the collective bargaining arena and makes it mandatory for employees with more than two years' service.

This legislation will benefit employees in works and undertakings connected with shipping, navigation, railways, canals, telegraphs and other interprovincial and extra-provincial activities, including ferries, aircraft, radio broadcasting, banks and one or two industries such as uranium which have been declared by parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada. The act also applies to crown corporations.

A majority of employees in these industries are now getting two-week vacations as a result of collective bargaining agreements. However, there are still approximately 5,000 workers in these industries who do not receive vacations with pay as a matter of right. Furthermore, there are more than 150,000 workers in these fields who must be employed for three years before qualifying for two weeks holidays with pay as outlined in this proposed measure.

In arriving at the provisions of the present bill we felt it necessary to study the provincial legislation in this field. Five provinces provide for a vacation of one week after one year, they are New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta; two provinces provide for a vacation of two weeks after one year, namely Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Alberta also provides for two weeks' vacation after two years and Manitoba provides for two weeks after three years. Thus it can be seen that Bill No. 16 is equal to or better than the vacations provided in five of the seven provinces having this legislation. There is no provincial vacation legislation in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The New Brunswick legislation applies only to mining, construction and related industries brought within the scope of the act by Order in Council.

As to the various features of the bill, I feel that it compares favourably with any such legislation elsewhere. A year of employment is reckoned from the day on which continuous employment begins. There is also provision for a vacation plan based on a calendar year system, which is subject to certain conditions which will be set out in regulations. Thus, the bill will be quite flexible in its application.

The period within which the employer is required to schedule the vacation is set at 10 months following the anniversary day marking the completion of the year of employment. This is the period commonly fixed in legislation in the provinces.

Should a holiday occur during vacation—such as July 1 or Labour day—the vacation is extended by one day with pay provided that the employee would have been paid for working on that day had he not been on vacation. A transfer of business to a new owner does not break continuity of employment.

When the legislation comes into effect all those who have completed the required period of continuous employment will be entitled to the stipulated holidays with pay, as detailed in the bill.

On termination of employment an employee is entitled to vacation for any completed year in which he has not received a vacation and also for the completed portion of the year, based on two per cent, or four per cent, depending on the period of service. This does not apply if employment is less than 30 days duration.

The legislation overrides any other contract or arrangement except when such contract or arrangement is more favourable to the employee. A collective bargaining agreement, however, is an exception if it is binding upon the employer when this legislation comes into force. If the agreement provides for an annual vacation, the terms of the agreement shall continue to prevail until the agreement runs out. This will make for orderly adoption of the legislation and prevent confusion.

The legislation provides authority to make regulations dealing with administrative and enforcement matters. There is also authority to make special provisions in respect of seasonal or temporary employees.

I feel that these provisions, Mr. Speaker, should commend themselves to the house and that this legislation is a positive step toward giving labour as a statutory right what has long been a subject of bargaining.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to compliment the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) on his very worth-while contribution this afternoon and on the way in which he has explained the provisions of the bill which he proposes, which will provide for vacations with pay for all of those employees who come within the jurisdiction of the federal government. It has always been my contention that matters such as these should not necessarily be left to the collective bargaining table. During my years of support of the Liberal administration I have worked ardently in an endeavour to get the cabinet to see my way of thinking, not only with regard to this particular measure, but with regard to union security and other legislation which might be of benefit to labour itself and to the labour movement in general. Therefore, I do not think it is inconsistent on my part to congratulate the minister on his introduction of this bill and again on the very clear manner in which he explained its various details.

I do think, however, that the minister should have given consideration to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which does provide better legislation, in that an employee after working one year would be entitled to two weeks holidays with pay. After all, that employee during the year has contributed an equal amount to the industry itself, to the production of the industry and to the profit that that industry might show.

I find it difficult to understand why the government should wish to discriminate between one year of service and two years of service. If the minister intends to use length of service as a yardstick for vacations with pay then he should take the matter further, as some corporations do, and give extra holidays for continuing service. That is all I have to say on this point.

I am pleased to note that it does extend to crown corporations. While the minister has said that the majority of those employed in crown corporations already enjoy the benefits of vacations with pay, he has indicated that there are some 5,000 not now receiving vacations with pay. This legislation is certainly going to be helpful to them.

It is quite revealing to hear that 150,000 employees must work three years before receiving two weeks vacation. The federal government, which is the senior government, and which has in the past in many respects been very progressive, should be the one to take the lead in all of these matters. Therefore, I think the minister in drafting this legislation should follow the pattern of some of the provinces which do have legislation which is much better than this bill. I believe the minister did say—and I know it to be a fact—that the province of British Columbia provides for two weeks holidays with pay and, of course, that extends not only to employees of the government or corporations coming under its jurisdiction, but to everyone. We should use that as a yardstick. I would hope that when the minister introduces the bill and we come to that particular clause he will be prepared to move an amendment which will have the effect of removing any apparent discrimination.

I am pleased to note also that when a statutory holiday falls within a vacation period the employee will be allowed one extra day of vacation and will be paid for the extra day. This follows the practice of the more progressive industries, and I am pleased to note that the minister has adopted that policy. I am pleased to note also, although it is not too important, that there will not be too much confusion with respect to collective agreements that are already in effect. I have little more to say. I welcome the legislation and I am sure that everyone on this side of the house will give the minister all the support necessary.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who has just spoken I should like to offer my congratulations to the minister on the manner in which he introduced the bill and dealt with some of the more technical aspects of it. I certainly cannot go as far as the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) and give complete endorsation to the provisions contained in the bill. In fact, when I read a copy of the bill and studied it I debated in my own mind whether it would be advantageous to vote for it because there are certainly a number of deficiencies in the proposal now before us.

In my opinion, one major one is that the bill reveals a different attitude on the part of the people occupying the government benches now from that which they expressed in 1956 when a similar bill was before the house and was voted on. I note that on July 27, 1956, ten of the present cabinet ministers stood up in the house in their places and voted in favour of a bill which contained far better provisions than this one does. Perhaps at some later date we can have an explanation of why this change of mind has taken place.

There is another matter which I think is not too good. While it does not relate specifically to the bill, nevertheless I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will grant me the leeway to deal with it. We have understood for some time that the Conservative party—this was enunciated quite strongly in some quarters during the election campaign—was in favour of a unified national labour code or uniformity of legislation throughout Canada. I would have been far more pleased if the minister had been able to introduce a bill and make the necessary changes in other legislation under our jurisdiction that would have provided a uniform system of vacation allowances and payment therefor in all of the provinces of Canada and the Northwest Territories so as to cover all the people who at present come under the labour jurisdiction of this parliament. We would have been far better off. We could have approached the provinces along these lines and have moved towards establishing a uniform labour code by taking the first step on the question of vacations rather than adding just another system to the five or six, I think the minister said, in those provinces with vacation with pay legislation.

In my opinion, there are many other things wrong about the bill presented to us. I hope we will be able to take the opportunity at another stage of the proceedings on the bill to deal with them more particularly and to get clearer answers from the minister about them. I hope to convince him that the suggestions we will make with respect to certain clauses are valid and that they will be accepted.

Many hon. members who have been here for some years will know that the members of the present government, when they sat on the other side of the house, complained regularly, bitterly and justifiably so, I think, about too much legislation by order in council and not enough by parliament. We heard all about the supremacy of parliament in deciding these things. Yet when we look at the bill now before us we find that it makes provision for regulations which could very easily and conceivably end by being longer than the legislation itself. I for one am opposed to giving that amount of authority to make regulations under this legislation especially when there is provision for putting some extra loopholes in the regulations, exempting certain groups of people from the legislation and similar things of that nature. All that the bill does, if we accept the minister's figures as to the number of people who will be covered by the legislation, and I do accept them, is to go about halfway in effecting statutory recognition of certain rights which have been obtained through collective bargaining.

There is another point in which I am interested and I hope the minister will take the opportunity to answer regarding it. It relates again to what we understood to be the policy of the government as enunciated during the election campaign in the matter of drafting and enacting so-called labour legislation, of which this is a piece. We understood that the legislation would be drafted after consultation and discussion between labour and management groups so that all would be present at one time to present their ideas and views, I do not know whether or not it has been done. If it has, then to my knowledge it has not been very well publicized and not too many people know anything about it other than the presentation which was made to the government by the Canadian Labour Congress.

Not only in this parliament but in the legislatures of the various provinces where there are governments that are partial to what I might classify as the present capitalist system we invariably see that when legislation is drafted by a government following that type of thinking the legislation generally reflects the attitude of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and does not represent too well the desires and needs of the working classes. If legislation does err or is flexible in any way, it errs or is flexible so far as the employer is concerned and is not flexible with respect to the people who will receive benefits under such legislation.

If I have got the wrong impression from some of the words the minister used, I beg his forgiveness, but I understood him to say that the bill would take the question of vacations with pay out of the realm of collective bargaining. I do not see that in the bill. I do not think that is what the minister meant to imply. I hope I have got the wrong impression because I certainly would not want to see anything take place that would remove anything relating to collective bargaining from that process. Certainly the people who join unions want to see their unions get for them the best possible wages, hours and working conditions by collective bargaining and in contractual provisions with their employer. I hope I got the wrong impression from what the minister said.

Perhaps at this stage we could conclude by saying that while we do not wholeheartedly endorse all the provisions contained in the bill we are in agreement with the general principle of providing vacations with pay for employees. There is plenty of precedent for it in the various provinces that have passed legislation establishing vacations with pay for employees under their jurisdiction, and we have just followed that. When the bill reaches another stage I shall have more criticism and suggestions to make for changes to plug the loopholes that exist in this bill.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): It is not my purpose at this time to go into the details of the bill. When the question of introducing this bill came up the other day I did not think it was definitely established we would go on with it today. I should like to say to the minister that I think the introduction of this legislation is very timely. It is something which we in the Social Credit party have always advocated, that is that the working man should be entitled to at least two weeks' vacation with pay in any one year. This is the first time that the government has come forward with a bill to make it known definitely by legislation that all those employees in the federal field would be receiving this benefit.

In so far as the reference to taking the matter out of collective bargaining is concerned, it does seem to me that once this bill becomes law then all those people employed in government corporations, such as the C.B.C., the railways, those working on government ships and things of that kind, will have the right to have two weeks' vacation with pay. There is no argument about that. There is no collective bargaining about that. This does not mean to say, at least I take it does not, that collective bargaining is stopped. Certainly this measure should not bar employees from bargaining if they so choose for an even greater number of days of vacation with pay. However, it does state very definitely that the law shall be that employees shall have two weeks' vacation with pay. I do not think there can be any question about that.

There was a question raised about the regulations. As we all know, it is a fact that regulations must be made under any act, but no regulation at any time can contravene the act itself. All we are concerned about now is the act itself. We cannot debate any of the details of the bill. It is a rather long and involved bill and therefore we shall not at this time endeavour to discuss the details. It is not my intention to deal with any of the clauses, although there are some clauses that are probably important—

Mr. Starr: With the hon. member's permission, and since this question of collective bargaining has been brought up by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) as well as the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston), I may say that in my statement I said that this bill will override any other contract or arrangement except when such contract or arrangement is more favourable to the employee.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think those are the words I used, or words to that effect. The bill states definitely that there is two weeks' vacation with pay, so there can be no bargaining about that. I do not think the employees would want any bargaining on that point. They may agree to bargain, though, and it would be their right, for any increased number of days of vacation with pay. In my judgment at least, the bill does not bar them from that.

A moment ago I was speaking about the regulations, and I pointed out that the regulations will not be contained in the bill. There will no doubt be regulations attached to this act in the course of its implementation, but no matter what those regulations may be there is no regulation that may be made contravening the act itself. Hon. members who are here should see that this bill is for the purpose of protecting the labouring people. It has been our contention for quite some time that legislation of this type should be introduced. On many occasions we have expressed the thought that surely in this economic age, with all the tremendous developments and production we have in this country, people should be entitled to two week's vacation with pay after working for 50 weeks. We have always taken that stand and shall continue to take that stand.

When the bill reaches the committee stage we will be able to discuss it in more detail. For the moment, let me say we are in favour of the general principle of this bill but we will have remarks to make on the different sections, probably suggesting to the government that there should be changes made here and there. However, in principle, we do agree with it and will support it to that extent.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): It was on May 11, 1956 when a bill incorporating the principle of providing vacations with pay for employees under federal jurisdiction was first introduced into this house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on behalf of the C.C.F. group. I must say that I regret the hon. member is compelled to be away at a time when this bill is being introduced for the first time from the government side.

As has already been made clear by the minister and by others who have participated in the debate, there is a very important difference between the bill introduced in 1956 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the bill we now have before us. This difference is that this bill provides for two week's annual vacation with pay only after an employee has completed two years of service rather than after the completion of one year of service as in the former bill. Perhaps one could agree that the action which has come from the government side has arrived a little more quickly than in former years in so far as bills in the field of labour legislation introduced by the C.C.F. group are concerned. This is perhaps the result of an election which has given us a government who may feel disposed to act a little more quickly than would otherwise have been the case because of the complexion of the membership of the house.

I am quite sure that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is sincere in his desire to have this legislation become part of the law of Canada. I would suggest, however, he is perhaps adopting some of the practices of his predecessor in office in that he seems disposed to drag his feet considerably in the introduction of certain measures. I would have been much happier if in this bill he had been disposed to go at least as far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did in 1956. To the working people of Canada it would certainly have appeared that this bill was being brought in with more alacrity than that with which it will appear to have been brought in at the present time. I think that is particularly true because of the fact that it is such a short time since the delegation of the Canadian Labour Congress presented their request to the government for a bill which would provide by law two weeks' vacation with pay after employment for a period of one year.

I must say that I felt the minister's remarks had a familiar ring in respect of the reasons why he was not prepared to go any further than he has gone when he outlined to us the provisions that were existent in the various provincial acts in this same field. He apparently is quite content to stay with that line of argument we used to hear from his predecessor, namely that in the field of labour legislation under no circumstances is the federal government ever to get even half a step ahead of any of the provinces.

Coming as I do from a province where our labour legislation in this field now provides two weeks' vacation after one year of employment, I perhaps am more aware of the fact that the present government is dragging its feet than I would be if I came from one of the other provinces he mentioned where they have not yet any legislation in this field.

In discussing this type of bill previously, I have expressed the point of view that in this field the federal government could very well be the one that was leading the way. We hear a great deal of talk about the need for national unity and for the development of a sense of our Canadian nationhood. I suggest that nothing could help more to create among the working people of Canada that sense of belonging to a Canadian nation than to have a federal government which would be prepared to take a lead in these things as far as its jurisdiction extends. Yet apparently this government, as was the previous government, is prepared to drag its feet and go only as far as it is pushed by the sheer weight of public opinion as it has expressed itself through the various provincial legislatures.

The minister made reference to some figures with respect to those who now enjoy vacations with pay as far as employees under federal jurisdiction are concerned. If I caught his figures correctly, he said that about 150,000 employees under federal jurisdiction now enjoy two weeks' vacation with pay after three years or more of employment. Those employees, of course, under the bill which he is bringing in, will receive some benefit.

I am interested in the figures he used because of the fact that his predecessor, the former minister of labour, on May 11, 1956, put on Hansard a table indicating the situation in respect of employees under federal labour jurisdiction. According to the figures he gave us at that time, there were about 167,000 employees under federal jurisdiction who were entitled to two weeks' vacation with pay after three years of service. I mention that figure given to us by the former minister of labour and I contrast it with that given today because it indicates that the need which was put forward in 1956 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for statutory provision for two weeks' vacation with pay after one year of employment is approximately the same now as it was then.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, at this point may I say this to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. In my statement I said that there are more than 150,000 workers in these fields who must be employed for three years before qualifying for two weeks' holidays with pay. I did not say the figure was specifically 150,000; I said it was more than 150,000.

Mr. Barnett: I am glad to have the minister's clarification of the meaning of the 150,000 figure. I think perhaps it lends point to what I was saying. From that I would infer that there are approximately the same number now as there were in 1956 when the former minister of labour put that table on the record. I would therefore submit that the need for providing by law two weeks' vacation with pay after one year of employment is as great now as it was when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the form of a bill, first brought this idea into this house.

It seems to me that those of us who sit in this house should be prepared when we come to deal with matters of this kind to recognize much more fully than we do—at least from the treasury benches since I have occupied a seat in this house—the actual realities of life as the average industrial worker faces them today. The industrial worker, and those who perhaps might not be properly classified in that field particularly, see that those in other fields of activity by custom have come to enjoy a full two weeks' period of vacation with pay, with very little question of their right to enjoy that benefit. I have argued before, and I argue again that any proper concept of the kind of society in which people can have opportunities for realizing their rights as human beings requires in this industrial age that there should be at least two weeks as a matter of right during which they can get away from their normal duties without having to suffer from a loss of income.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman but as it is five o'clock I wonder whether he would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Barnett: I should be glad to move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

On motion of Mr. Barnett the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I ask leave to revert to motions in order to move, with the unanimous consent of the house, the following resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to revert to motions with the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

HOUR OF SITTING ON MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That notwithstanding the appointment of Monday next as a day for the consideration of the order for resuming debate on the motion for an address in reply to Her Majesty's speech, the house shall meet at 2.30 p.m. on that day and the provisions of standing order 2 (2) shall be suspended in relation thereto.

We are planning to proceed with the throne speech debate next week and if it were not for a motion of this type the house would be obliged to meet at eleven o'clock on Monday morning. We thought hon. members might wish to have the opportunity to attend ceremonies in connection with the Remembrance day on Monday morning and for that reason we are putting forward this amendment.

Mr. Lesage: Is it intended by the government to repay these two hours which will have been lost in connection with the speech from the throne, at another time?

Mr. Green: That was not the intention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Coldwell: We have part of a day coming to us now, on account of time lost on the throne speech.

Mr. Green: I believe the facts are just the opposite—we gave the house several extra hours a week or two ago.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina) moved the second reading of Bill No. 27, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Rea: Mr. Speaker, I should like to try to give hon. members of the house the highlights of this bill. There is a lot of background to it. First of all, may I say this is an act respecting the Bell Telephone Company whose main object is that they wish to increase their capital. May I repeat that, Mr. Speaker, they wish to increase their capital.

For the benefit of hon. members who may not have read the bill, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which is petitioning for this act, was incorporated by act of parliament on April 29, 1880, just four years after the telephone was invented. At that time there were few scattered telephone companies located in some of the larger cities of eastern Canada, such as Hamilton, London, Windsor, Montreal, Toronto and Quebec. These were purely local systems having a few subscribers, they were not connected with each other. One of the purposes of the incorporation of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada was to bring these small organizations together into one integrated system so as to permit subscribers in one locality to communicate with others in another locality. To this end the Bell Telephone Company of Canada was incorporated with power to extend its operations throughout Canada.

Since the Bell Telephone Company has had to come to the House of Commons to ask for increases in capital due, of course, to increased capital expenditure in line with the growth of Canada and of the telephone service. They came to parliament in 1884; they came again in 1892; they came again in 1902; they came again in 1906; again in 1920, 1929 and 1948; and now, in 1957, they are asking that their capital of $500 million be increased to $1,000 million.

The Bell Telephone Company has, however, never extended its system throughout the whole of Canada. At no time did the company ever operate in British Columbia and in the early years of this century the company had given up its interests in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and disposed of all its plant and property in those provinces. The result is that since 1909 the company operations have been confined exclusively to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec with, of course, facilities enabling a connection to be made with the systems serving the other eight provinces and the United States and, either directly or indirectly, connecting with all other systems throughout the world where the interchange of telephone communications is permitted by the laws of other countries and by the facilities provided by such other systems.

Connection may now be had with the systems of 133 other countries. The 2,766,153 telephones which the Bell Telephone Company served at the end of 1956 were all, as I said, located in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Here is just a little history about the percentage of people having telephones. It is estimated that there are about 4,500,000 telephones in Canada, which works out to about one telephone for every four persons. Great Britain has one telephone for every seven people and in the United States there is one telephone for every three people.

Many hon. members may not realize that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which the Bell Telephone Company serves there is a total of 677 separate telephone systems. That is just in these two provinces, and it is something a lot of people do not know. The total number of telephones in these provinces is 3,056,000 of which the Bell Telephone Company serves approximately 2,766,000. Of the remaining telephones all but some 300 are served by 674 connecting systems with which the company interchanges service. It is due in great measure to the company's long distance lines that these systems in Ontario and Quebec are interconnected so that a subscriber, as I mentioned before, in one particular district can communicate with a subscriber on another system.

The ratio between telephones and subscribers in the two provinces of Quebec and Ontario is one for every three people. In British Columbia the ratio is also 1 to 3. In Alberta it is 1 to 4; Saskatchewan, 1 to 5; Manitoba, 1 to 4; New Brunswick, 1 to 5; Nova Scotia, 1 to 5; Prince Edward Island, 1 to 7 and Newfoundland 1 to 12. As I said before, in the territory served by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada there is one telephone for every three people. In 1920 there was one telephone for every 10 people.

The Bell Telephone Company is not asking this parliament to vote it the amount of additional capital that it needs. What it asks is that parliament shall grant: first, the power to create, with the approval of its shareholders, new authorized capital as it needs it to the extent of $500 million; second, the right, having the required authorized capital, to go to the board of transport commissioners for Canada from time to time and try to satisfy it of the propriety of making an issue of a specified amount of such authorized capital and of the price, terms and conditions upon which it is to be issued; and, third, the opportunity, after complying with the applicable securities acts or "blue sky laws", of going to the Canadian investors who, the company believes, have confidence in our country's future and in the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and seeking from them the capital moneys the company needs for the purpose of serving the public of Ontario and Quebec with essential telephone service.

I have already mentioned the approximate number of telephones which are now in use. Here is something rather interesting: it is estimated that for 1957 there will be 2,980,400 telephones with 2,053,000 subscribers; of course, I suppose a lot of homes have more than one telephone. The number of applications waiting to be dealt with amounts to 18,668 for established services and for a higher grade of service, 38,200, which is over 56,000 unfilled orders. As at the end of 1956 there were 10,276,352 miles of local telephone wire and 1,090,330 miles of long distance telephone wire or a total length of 11,366,682 miles of wire in use. The estimated number of employees at the end of 1957 is 17,300 men and 25,200 women or a total of 42,500 employees.

May I again turn to the petitioner's need for additional capital and point out that at the end of July 31, 1957 it had left $34 million-odd of unissued or uncommitted capital stock. This remaining amount of authorized capital of $34 million-odd is being continually reduced by the monthly issue of shares which have been paid up under the Bell Telephone Company's employee stock plan. The operation of this stock plan will reduce the balance of authorized capital stock to something less than $26 million during the course of next year and $26 million would fall far short of the amount required to enable the company to make an issue of capital stock to provide it with the capital it requires when it next finances by that means. It is wholly insufficient to enable the Bell Telephone Company to carry on its substantial construction program which it now has underway and which it must carry on if the citizens of Ontario and Quebec are to have the telephone service they require and upon which they are dependent to enable them to communicate with citizens in other provinces of Canada, the United States of America and elsewhere in the world.

To provide the telephone facilities required to meet the heavy demand is not just simply a matter of producing telephone instruments and stringing connecting wires. Telephones and wires are useless without switchboards and the central office equipment necessary to make them function. Switchboards and central office equipment are most complicated pieces of apparatus. They cannot be obtained ready made and must be designed and manufactured for the precise place in which they are to be installed. Then too, the company cannot instal switchboards and central office equipment without having proper buildings in which to house them. These buildings and additions to buildings must be designed and erected. It will be appreciated that the planning, designing, manufacturing and erection of switchboards and central office equipment and buildings all involve projects which must be planned in advance, engineer designed and provided very far in advance of when required to provide time to carry them into effect. It will also be appreciated that in the planning and designing of equipment and buildings it is necessary for the company to be in a position where it can see its way clear to finance such projects. It is unthinkable that the company should let itself, or be permitted, to run out of the funds required for providing and extending service to the people of Canada.

Some hon. members may wonder what the company is going to do with this additional capital if it is allowed to increase and dispose of it. The company estimates that in the next five years, commencing in 1958, it will have the following construction expenditures: $191 million, $204 million, $197 million, $189 million and $181 million or a total of $962 million. Some hon. members might also ask where the company will get the extra $462 million. The company feels that with the increase in capital it will be able to use its assets for borrowing the balance and thus, with an increase in capital of $500 million, it plans to spend $962 million within the next five years commencing, as I said, in 1958.

I have given a breakdown of the company's estimated construction expenditures. The company figures it will have to pay $1 million for rights of way, $66 million for lands and buildings, $339 million for central office equipment, $236 million for station equipment, $281 million for outside plant and $39 million for general equipment.

Figures are sometimes rather pleasant to hear and I have some additional calculations which may interest hon. members. In 1947 the company handled 165,000 long distance calls every day and in 1956 it handled 317,000 long distance calls each day. In 1956 the company handled a combined total of local and long distance calls of 18 million a day. There must be a lot of talking done in this country and I am sure all of it is not done on the floor of this house.

I might advise hon. members that this bill will go to the appropriate committee so that if hon. members wish to ask technical questions they will have the opportunity of addressing them to officials of the Bell Telephone Company who will be present to answer them. I take pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of this bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the recital of the history and accomplishments and purposes of this company by the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill. I judge that the document was carefully prepared by the solicitors of the company because it read in quite a legal form.

This is a very important bill. We have here a private corporation coming to this house asking for permission to increase its capital by $500 million. As a matter of fact, this bill provides for a billion dollar development by a private company over which this house has very little control. Now, I would not deny the necessity for the extension of the services rendered by this company in that portion of Canada it serves but this is a tremendous expansion by a private monopoly largely owned and controlled in the United States, and while the telephones are located in Ontario the ownership and control is located south of the border.

A search of the records of the combines investigation branch, in this house and in other places, and a reading of the history of monopolies in Canada will provide illustrations of many unsavoury developments and incidents. The whole history of combines development in this country is marked with unethical practices. We had that brought to our attention just the other day by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in his announcement to the house with respect to the intended prosecution of a supposed combine in this country. One has only to read the records of the past of the comparatively small number of investigations and prosecutions in relation to the number of combines that exist in Canada to realize that this type of development, in the opinion of this group and in the opinion of an increasing number of people in this country is not in the interests of the Canadian people. It is no wonder that increasing numbers of the public are becoming suspicious of the large scale development of these monopolies. We all know that recent disclosures with respect to the control of pipe line companies, their financing and the profits made by a very few individuals, which the consumers of this country will have to pay, are increasing that concern and causing it to grow from day to day.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I am normally a very placid and mild mannered man but I am surprised at the letters I receive from people, who are even supporters of the government party in this house, expressing concern over this developing control of our economy by very few individuals. This is also indicated by editorials in the press across this country. One has only to read the Free Press of recent date, the Toronto Telegram, I think it was, and the Vancouver Sun, to realize that even these orthodox papers are becoming conscious of public opinion in this respect and are reflecting public opinion to the extent that they deal with this question. The combinations that are developing in the transportation of gas, oil and other public services and the development of our natural resources are causing the promotion of larger and larger combines of capital and are handing the actual control of this nation over to fewer and fewer people.

What about this company? I do not blame individuals. After all, we are creatures of the environment in which we live. I think we in this House of Commons are sent here to express our opinions and to express them fairly and clearly when we see situations developing, as a result of the rather better opportunities we have than the average Canadian citizen has to see how these things are developing. What about this company? Outside of obtaining a licence from the board of transport commissioners and the reference as to rates, there is actually no other control over this company. So far as services are concerned, this company can do exactly as the British Columbia Telephone Company does, carry on its extensions and developments according to its own desires and its own wishes and give service where it is profitable and deny it where it is not. I do not think that is a proper situation, Mr. Speaker.

No doubt when the present legislation was first introduced it was satisfactory because there were relatively few large corporations in this country and monopoly development had not gone to the stage that it has today. However, we are living in changing times and circumstances and I suggest we have to use new procedures to meet those changing times and circumstances if we are to make certain that these developments are to the advantage of the people as a whole. Therefore, I am going to make a suggestion, and I am not for one moment suggesting that it is an original thought with me. I think it is time that we had a committee of this house and of the Senate to inquire into the activities and effects of public service corporations which are monopolies in this country.

In this house we have an opportunity periodically to examine the operations of the nationally-owned railroads. That is done in a committee of the house. We have an opportunity to examine the banks, but once this company obtains its licence and its rates are established by the board of transport commissioners there is no control, no planning and no direction. These financial groups are carrying on in that way. As I said before, I do not blame any individual but I think it is about time that a committee of this house, in association with members of the Senate, had the opportunity to make a thorough investigation of the activities and the effects of these large public service corporations which are monopolies.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is about time that the people knew the facts and this is one way to obtain the facts which hon. members should take advantage of and exercise some increasing control over these large corporations and monopolies through this house which represents the people.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which affects Ontario and Quebec, I think, more than it does any other part of Canada. I have not had time to go over it too carefully. It is a rather complicated bill. Our experience in the past when dealing with subjects of this kind, has indicated that there should be a good deal of careful thought and study before this house gives its consent to such a measure as this. Last year we had the experience of a pipe line company which wanted to divide its shares five for one. On the surface there did not seem to be much objection to it. I took the stand on that occasion that we would not give our consent to the passing of the bill until it had a thorough going over in the committee and after that had been done we would be in a better position to give our decision as to whether or not we favoured the bill. I think the same thing could be true here.

This is a large company. Of course, I am not objecting on the ground that it is a large company, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) did, and certainly not for the same reasons he gave; but I think we should be careful with a bill such as this one before we pass judgment on it.

The sponsor has stated that it is going to the committee. Since he has said that it is not necessary for me to dwell too long on the bill because my experience has been that when a bill of this kind gets before the committee and the proper witnesses are called that is the time and place when all these different details can be brought out.

On the surface, it seems to me a rather large order for this company to come here and ask permission to double its capitalization, and especially when it wants the right to raise its capital another $500 million from time to time without coming to the house for consent. I have never known the house on any occasion, when there was a bill of this kind put before it and the reasons were legitimate and it was supposed to be in the interests of Canada, not to give consent. It does seem to me a pretty big order when they say that the company shall increase its capital assets from time to time without having to come back to the House of Commons. In view of the fact that it is a rather large order to ask for we should be a little cautious and at least the members of this house and of the committee should go into it very carefully.

As I say, the hon. member has indicated that the bill is to go to a committee. I am going to leave my reservations at that; I am not going to commit myself one way or the other on this bill, whether we will give our consent to it or not, until we have had it before the committee and there decided on its merits.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, in the request in this bill the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, with control from the other side, is coming to the government and asking permission to expand its capital assets by another $500 million. That is quite a heavy order. It is becoming a rather powerful company.

The member who is sponsoring the bill indicated this afternoon that the company is going to do some expansion in the way of providing telephone service to the people of Ontario and Quebec. There is a great demand for such service and I am sure that these people would like to see telephones installed in their homes as quickly as possible so that they may receive service. But surely it would not require this amount of money to provide these services for the people of these two provinces.

As a matter of fact I believe that behind the bill is a plan to get control of a much larger field of communications than simply telephone service and not only within two provinces. I believe their aim is nationwide control in some fields of communication which are very important to us. When the president of this company dealt with the matter in a speech about a year ago, as reported in the Financial Post, he indicated a much wider and broader field of expansion than presented this afternoon by the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill. The president of the company indicated pretty clearly what their plans were. He told about what the company was doing in the expansion of what they called the picture-phone. The company's laboratories are now working on a project whereby when you telephone someone and they answer a picture will appear and you will be able to see the person to whom you are speaking.

There is also expansion in the field of long distance dialing. Those who use the long distance services can verify that very quick service is given by means of long distance dialing. Operators in one city can dial almost directly through to other cities in different parts of Canada and give very rapid service.

There is also rapid development in the teletype field and in what the company calls integrated data processing whereby business machinery in an office in one part of the country is connected with mobile radio installations and central control agencies and can receive signals from other offices of the business throughout the whole of Canada. The example the president of the company used at that time to illustrate the company's intentions was the trans-Canada pipe line. When the line is finally in operation the central control office of the company is going to require immediate data respecting the flow in various parts of the 2,000 mile pipe line. This is an excellent project and shows remarkable progress.

The president of the company referred to another field which the hon. member did not mention at all this afternoon, the rapid expansion of control by this company of the whole microwave relay system across Canada which will extend from Sydney, Noya Scotia, to Vancouver. The telephone company has already built most of the system and by the end of next year they expect to have the microwave relay stations completed. It will be a billion dollar operation before final construction is completed.

What I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members and warn them about is the fact that once this company gets this amount of money, proceeds to expand and and is given the right to control the microwave relay field, practically every television station across Canada will have to rent the service of the Bell Telephone Company in order to secure transmission of television programs. The president also stated that the company would have facilities for colour television. I should like to know the extent to which the C.B.C. is renting the service of the Bell Telephone Company microwave relay system for their broadcasts at the present time. What is the tribute being paid by the C.B.C. to the Bell Telephone Company today? What is going to be the position of the Bell Telephone Company in another ten years with regard to complete control of the microwave relay system? When it is established they can quite readily and easily prevent any competition of any kind. They will remove competition from the field. If they remove competition from the field, then what is the toll the Canadian people will have to pay for the operation of the telephone company's television relay and communication systems throughout the country?

If private enterprise can carry out this project, let it do so, but everyone who supports the private enterprise idea states that one of the main objectives, one of the things which keeps private enterprise on the go, is competition. What happens when you eliminate competition? Is there any possibility of competition in this most important field? Communications are vital to modern industry and modern living. Does this bill mean that the company is going to have a monopoly in the television microwave relay field throughout the country? If it does, then I think we should oppose it.

My reason for saying that is that when competition is not possible we have a system of guarantee extortion from the Canadian people, and I do not believe our people will support the granting of monopoly in a public service to any company. To prevent that kind of thing, we believe it is a good idea for the government to go into the public service field. If there are any profits to be made from that field, then those profits will accrue to all the Canadian people rather than one powerful, wealthy firm being permitted to have control and name its price for its services.

In the province from which I come, and a number of the western provinces are the same, the telephone service has never been a private enterprise concern. Telephone communication is considered a public service. We have a government telephone service, in my opinion the best service in Canada. I might say that the profit motive is not the only thing involved there. I think the province of Saskatchewan is the only one where local telephone calls through pay telephones still only cost a nickle. Every place else it is 10 cents.

There is another field I should like to look into here. To what extent are the rights of a province respecting communications within its boundaries protected? Can we guarantee that each province that wishes to maintain control of its own communications will be protected and that it will not be affected adversely by agreement or otherwise or through lack of service because it did not wish to pay a toll to this giant corporation for communications throughout the province? Surely the province has certain rights, and I hope they will be protected. I hope that when the bill goes to the committee the members who will investigate the company and ask questions will make very sure that the rights of the provinces are not interfered with in any way.

The provincial governments are watching the situation very carefully. I know that my own province of Saskatchewan has made arrangements for the use of the microwave system. They are using the microwave facilities and are connected with the long distance services of other communication systems across the dominion by means of arrangements and agreements. I want to see that these things are maintained and that nothing harmful will be done in the future.

I do not wish to frown on private enterprise where it is providing a service but I do frown on private enterprise when it becomes a monopoly. I do not think the actions of this or any other government or anything that we do in this house should in any way lead to the establishment of a monopoly in a public service, something which is essential to civilization as we know it. With these safeguards, I would be glad to see this bill passed, go to the committee and when it comes back it will have our blessing. Without these assurances, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I and others in this group will oppose it.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I should like to ask the hon. member to answer a question when he speaks. We in Fort William were disappointed when telephone rates were increased. We sent in a petition, but I do not know that we got very far with it. I was just wondering, if this bill is passed, does that mean rates will be reduced or increased or will we have any say about it? I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the telephone is one thing that should be publicly owned and the profits should go to the common people. I hope to have an answer to these questions.

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) I may say that this bill has nothing to do with increases in rates at all. It only has to do with an increase in the capital stock of the Bell Telephone Company.

The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) talked about the lack of control. May I remind him that this company is under the jurisdiction and control of the board of transport commissioners. This board has very wide powers. They can, from time to time, as the occasion may arise, review, rescind, change, alter or vary their own decisions. They have power and jurisdiction over all requirements under the company's special act; any agreements the company enters into; to make inquiries into the company's operations; to inspect the company's work; to regulate the construction of the company's work when matters of public safety are involved, for example as at railway crossings. The board can order the company to make repairs; they regulate the company's tolls and tariffs.

The board of transport commissioners regulates the company's rates; regulates joint tariffs. They have jurisdiction over the publication of tariffs; over contracts to limit liability; over construction of lines upon or across highways; over construction of lines across other lines; over construction of the company's lines with the lines of other systems; over all contracts the company makes with other telephone systems and subscribers. They have the right to inquire into any contract whatsoever into which the company may enter. Also, as I mentioned before, the Bell Telephone Company shall not have the power to make any issue, sale or other disposition of its capital stock without first obtaining the approval of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada of the amount, terms and conditions of such issue, sale or other disposition of such capital stock.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

INVESTORS TRUST COMPANY

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South) moved the second reading of Bill No. 29, to incorporate Investors Trust Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which will inaugurate a free enterprise which I think will be more palatable to my friends across the way in that it is concerned with selling the idea of savings to the people of Canada. This, of course, as they will agree, is of an anti-inflationary nature which accrues to the benefit of us all in a country of this nature. As our time is short, for the benefit of this house I shall read the history of the company sponsoring this bill, namely Investors Syndicate of Canada Limited.

Private Bills

The Investors Syndicate originated in the United States before the turn of the century. There was a Minnesota company called Investors Syndicate. It was owned by Investors Diversified Holding Company. That company in Minnesota started doing business in western Canada, under the firm name and style of Investors Syndicate of the United States. They started business in the twenties and they sold here in Canada the same form of investment contracts that they sold in the States. They are contracts where the purchaser names the term at the end of which he desires to provide for himself a lump sum of money, in consideration for which he can arrange either for part, or a stipulated payment, and they invest these moneys, generally in mortgages, and have done so very successfully. They are cash values and form a sinking fund.

In 1940 they decided that it would be better if they had a Canadian company, so they obtained a special act in Manitoba in 1940 incorporating Investors Syndicate Limited of Canada, being chapter 88 of the statutes of Manitoba, 1940. As pointed out previously, the Canadian company was still owned by the Investors Diversified Services Incorporated. They have over $1 million in assets now. They continued to sell investment contracts providing a stipulated sum at the end of a specified term.

The so-called Investors Mutual of Canada Limited was incorporated in 1948. It has assets of $150 million. Since 1950 it has become the largest mutual investors fund in Canada, even greater than the Canadian Investors Fund. The assets of Investors Syndicate are largely formed of mortgages, about 75 per cent, and the rest in bonds. The assets of Investors Mutual are all in bonds and stocks, with hundreds of millions of assets.

The third company was incorporated this year and was called the Investors Growth Fund Limited. The purpose of this new company was to have a separate mutual investment in which the assets would be invested solely in common stock.

As already mentioned, the Investors Syndicate consists of principally mortgages, a few bonds and even fewer stocks; the Investors Mutual consists of bonds and stocks, no mortgages; and the Investors Growth Fund consists of nothing but stocks, preferred and common.

In 1956 they concluded, with the growth of their business in Canada, that it would be better still if it were controlled in Canada rather than still controlled by the holding company in the United States, namely Investors Diversified Services Incorporated. In 1956 they issued additional stock in Investors Syndicate of Canada and they increased it to the same number of shares as the holding company had outstanding and then they issued these shares to the individual shareholders in the United States and Canada.

The ownership of Investors Syndicate of Canada was transferred from the holding company in the United States to the individuals in the United States and Canada of which there were many. Many of the individuals in the United States in turn sold their shares to Canadians, with the result that many of the shares are now controlled and owned, to the extent of 75 per cent to 80 per cent, by Canadians.

Why do they want the trust company now? They do not intend to engage in most of the usual fields of trust companies. They do not intend to administer estates. They do not intend to look after cash deposits or trust funds. Their reasons for wanting a trust company are: One, to enable the trust company to manage a group pension plan for employers who desire to run their own plans rather than to place them with insurance companies; two, to take full advantage of the amendment to the Income Tax Act under section 79 (b), both for employers and self-employed.

Their form of investment is mostly mortgage. They want to be in a position to compete with other trust companies. It is correct to say that the trust company is not seeking any special powers but only powers comparable with the trust companies in the pension field. As they wish to look after personal investments, they must be a trust company under Dominion statute.

Under clause 5, the company shall not commence business until at least $1 million of its capital has been subscribed to and paid for. Under clause 6, the company acquires the same powers as any company under the Trust Company Model Act. Therefore by this act they can go into other trust company fields in estates or deposits, if they so desire, at a future date.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the sponsoring company, namely Investors Syndicate Canada Limited, is now 75 per cent to 80 per cent Canadian owned. The objects of Investors Syndicate and its existing subsidiaries, Investors Mutual Limited and the Investors Growth Fund Limited, are to encourage Canadians to save something which of itself is an anti-inflationary objective. Now they want to incorporate this company to be known as Investors Trust Company so that they can operate in another aspect of the field which has as its objective plans for saving money.

It is my privilege to know the president of Investors Syndicate and many of the other officers of this company and of its existing subsidiaries. They are all of the highest integrity and greatly respected by their friends and their competitors across the nation. For this reason I have no hesitation in asking this house to assent to the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 105, this bill now stands referred to the banking and commerce committee.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) for the second reading of Bill No. 2, to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this bill was debated at some length earlier in the session and we were having quite a bit of debate on topics related to it. I think that certainly the provision in the bill for two weeks' vacation with pay after one year of employment, as introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is one that this house could very well support. While I do not want to duplicate the debate which has already taken place on this subject, I nevertheless felt that I wanted specifically to express in a few words my support of the bill which was introduced or re-introduced again this year by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Green the debate was adjourned.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Did I hear someone say that it is six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house I will call it six o'clock, and the house stands adjourned until Monday. But first there is the business of the house to be announced.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe the business of the house was announced at five o'clock but it might be more convenient if it was announced again so that it would appear at the end of Hansard where members could see it readily. Before that is done, does the leader of the house not wish to give consideration to the plea made by the hon. member for Kent, Ontario, that, in view of the fact that we have already dealt with certain emergency legislation it is desirable in the public interest that we should proceed with the farm stabilization bill which concerns so many primary producers all over this country as well as in certain particular sections.

Mr. Green: I am afraid that the hon. member for Kent, Ontario, (Mr. Huffman) and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) are just trying to get a little bit of publicity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I ask my hon. friend to withdraw that remark. There are farmers in eastern Canada who require consideration at the hands of this government, and it does not do them any good to have made cheap observations like those just made by the acting leader of the government.

Mr. Green: In reply, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Essex East at long last is now interested in the farmers of eastern Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I make it clear to my hon. friend that before he ever came into this house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the odds are about even on that one and we might call it a draw. Does the minister have anything further to say?

Mr. Green: The business on Monday will be the throne speech debate.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

BEEF IMPORTS FROM AUSTRALIA

Question No. 125—Mr. Huffman:

1. Is Australian beef coming into Canada?
2. If so, what were the amounts for each month to date for 1957?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Yes.

2. Imports of beef from Australia January to July, 1957 (latest available):

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS, WOODS AND CONSTRUCTION EMPLOYEES

Question No. 127—Mr. Fisher:

1. Have any officials of the government made any studies and/or reports on the application and the possible effects of the extension of the expense deductions given to transport employees under subsection 7, section 11 of the Income Tax Act, to workers in either the woods or construction industry or both?

2. If so, in what years were they made and what are the names of the officials?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. It is not the policy of the government to disclose the names of officials making reports to it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 11, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

UNITED NATIONS

FAO—ATTITUDE OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TOWARD INCREASE IN BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I should like to welcome back from the FAO conference the Minister of Agriculture who is now in his seat—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gardiner: —and I would like to ask him this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Did the Canadian delegation to the FAO conference support an increase of one-third in the FAO budget for the coming year? If not, why not?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Melville for his kind welcome back to the house. In regard to his question, the subject did not come up whilst I was there. The discussion of the budget for FAO, as I think the right hon. gentleman knows, actually takes place in one of the commissions which were to begin their meetings today. Therefore there was no discussion on that particular subject while I was in attendance.

[Later]

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): May I ask a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Melville. Is the minister prepared to tell the house what is the attitude of the government toward the budget of FAO, or what instructions have been given by the government to our delegation to the meeting of that organization?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to do that at this time.

[Later]

Mr. Tucker: I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture another supplementary question. Did he not take some position with regard to the budget of FAO when he spoke at the conference of that organization which he attended?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, what I did in speaking at FAO was to indicate what I thought and think is the necessity of FAO funds being spent in the places and in the ways in which they are most urgently required and can do the most good. It seemed to me that some of the proposals in the budget submitted by the director general were not proposals which would accomplish that purpose.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REPORTED TRANSFER OF EIGHT VESSELS TO FOREIGN REGISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport this question. Is it a fact that the Canadian National Steamships have taken a decision to transfer eight of their vessels on the West Indies run to foreign registry, and will the government permit the transfer of these ships from Canadian to Trinidad registry?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I had intended to make a statement on this important subject, and my statement will cover the answer to his questions.

Mr. Speaker, subsidized steamship service between Canada and the West Indies dates from 1892. The service has been operated under different conditions at different times, but since 1928 it has been performed by the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, a company incorporated for the purpose of carrying out Canada's part of the 1926 West Indies trade agreement.

In 1952 the Canadian government gave notice that it intended to withdraw two of the passenger boats from the service. As the remaining three motor ships and the five steamers could not meet the requirements of the agreement, the various West Indies governments withdrew their subsidies, and since then the service has not been bound by trade agreement requirements.

The service has had a long record of operating deficits. Only the years 1941 to 1948 resulted in any profit. Subsidies granted by the government of Canada approximated $6 million between 1892 and 1927, and since 1927 the government has assumed operating deficits totalling an additional $7 million. As hon. members will recall, it was because of this situation that the operations of the company were carefully studied by an interdepartmental committee in 1955.

Having regard to the fact that Canada's trade with the colonies amounted to $34 million exports and $35.5 million imports; that the company's management was making a creditable effort to develop additional traffic; that a recapitalization, whereby the government took equity stock in exchange for bonds, would reduce fixed charges by $260,000 per year; and that the long-term prospects of service indicated the possible attainment of a break-even financial position, the then government decided on continuance of the service for a period of five years, after which time the results would be reviewed to see if further continuation was justified.

It is against this background that I wish to refer to recent wage demands made upon the company. On September 10, 1956, the seafarers' international union, which is the bargaining agent for the 220 unlicensed personnel employed on the eight vessels, submitted demands for basic wage increases averaging 50 per cent; an increase in overtime rates; a reduction in hours of work at sea from 48 to 40 hours per week; payment for two additional statutory holidays; the establishment of a health and welfare plan, and other items. These demands, if granted, would mean a total increase of 80 per cent in payroll costs, or $450,000 per year, almost all of which would have to be borne by the taxpayers.

The company made a counter-proposal offering an 8 per cent increase in basic wages; an increase of 25 cents per hour in overtime rates; payment for one additional statutory holiday; an additional payment of 10 cents per working day to each employee in lieu of a health and welfare plan; and certain other concessions, all conditional upon a two-year agreement. This offer was rejected by the union.

On September 27, 1956, the then minister of labour appointed a conciliation officer, but his efforts failed to effect a settlement.

On December 28 a conciliation board was established and hearings commenced on January 7, 1957. The union again proposed its original demands. After lengthy deliberation the majority report of the board recommended, inter alia, a 10 per cent increase in wages; an increase of 30 cents per hour in overtime rates; 10 cents per day in lieu of a health and welfare plan, and a two-year agreement. The company accepted the conciliation board's report but it was rejected by the union, and the men were called out on strike on July 4.

[Mr. Hees.]

Various attempts to settle the strike, including personal intervention by the present Minister of Labour, produced no results during the summer and early autumn. In an effort to terminate the strike the company proposed a further meeting with the union. This meeting was held on October 15 in line with the settlement recently reached on Canadian National coastal services in Newfoundland. The company offered the union a 15 per cent wage increase; a 15 per cent increase in overtime rates and a two-year agreement from date of signing, together with other items recommended by the board of conciliation. Notwithstanding that the company offered the union an increase in wages 50 per cent greater than that recommended in the conciliation board's majority report, the union found the offer unacceptable and the company was obliged to withdraw it.

As of last Thursday the strike had been going on for 127 days; and has already cost close to half a million dollars. With winter rapidly approaching and consequently serious implications for the ships immobilized in Montreal harbour, it became absolutely imperative that a final effort be made to settle the strike immediately. Therefore on Thursday the company sent a telegram to the union offering to effect a settlement on the basis of the October 15 proposal and advising that this offer would be left open until twelve o'clock noon on Saturday, November 9. In view of the element of urgency attending the situation the company advised the union that, failing notification that an agreement to this effect would be signed, the management would have no alternative but to transfer the registry of the vessels from Canada.

I sincerely regret that the union did not see fit to accept the company's offer, an offer which I would remind hon. members went considerably beyond the recommendations of the board of conciliation.

On Saturday the company took steps to initiate transfer of the ships from Canadian registry to registry in Trinidad. It is the opinion of the government that under present circumstances, and having regard to Canada's desire to aid and assist the proposed federation of the West Indies, the service can best be administered under this arrangement. I may say that very earnest and careful consideration has been given to all possible alternatives to actual transfer, but they raise such serious disadvantages of one kind or another as to render them unacceptable to the government. At the same time the government was reluctant, in the interests of Canada-West Indies trade and relations, to permit outright abandonment of the service.

With respect to any suggestion that increased costs could be assumed by the government, I might remind hon. members that over the years the government has borne a substantial share of the costs of this service, and was prepared to assume the additional cost which would have resulted if the union had agreed to settlement on the basis of the company's final offer. Even this offer, according to the company estimates, would have resulted in an increase in operating costs approaching $200,000 and a return to a deficit operation which would be in the neighbourhood of $200,000, to be borne by the taxpayers. Beyond this we were not prepared to go, in view of the record I have mentioned and our belief that we would not be justified in placing the burden of heavier operating losses on the Canadian taxpayers.

I fully realize that with the transfer of these eight vessels to registry in Trinidad there will remain on Canadian deep sea registry only ten cargo ships and eight tankers. These remaining vessels, I should point out, are mostly engaged for a large part of the year in our coasting trade or are operated by subsidiaries of industrial firms whose business provides them with captive cargoes. In either case they are less affected by foreign flag competition.

This transfer is only one of a long series of sales and transfers of Canadian-owned shipping to foreign registry. Since war's end companies with ships on Canadian registry have found it increasingly difficult to operate their vessels profitably in competition with low-cost foreign carriers. This is understandable when one realizes that the daily operating cost of a 10,000-ton cargo vessel on Canadian registry exceeds that of a similar vessel on foreign registry by at least 50 per cent; and if one takes into account the cost of building the vessel in Canada the difference exceeds 60 per cent. An estimate of the operating cost, excluding fuel, is that it costs $100,000 more per year to operate on Canadian registry than on United Kingdom registry. These adverse cost differentials do not take into account any tax or other benefits which foreign registry often provides.

In these circumstances the problem of maintaining and encouraging Canadian shipping and shipbuilding industries presents a number of serious difficulties. Both industries are severely handicapped in normal times by having to bear a level of costs which is probably the second highest in the world. By offering a measure of tax relief the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act has gone some way toward stimulating ship construction in Canadian yards. A bill to amend the act, now being considered by parliament, would add further to the benefits already provided.

It is evident, however, that on the ship operating side an unfavourable cost differential hinders the Canadian operator who must compete in the world market for the carriage of international trade. Measures of assistance which may be proposed must, of course, be considered in relation to the costs to the taxpayer and the effect on our trade relationships. The royal commission on the coasting trade is expected to present its report within the next few months, and at that time it will be appropriate to determine whether or not any change in policy might be desirable not only in respect to coastal shipping but also deep sea shipping.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. May I thank the minister for the very comprehensive report he has given, and I take it that the answer to the two questions is in the affirmative?

Mr. Hees: The hon. member is correct.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask this question. Does this mean that Trinidad citizens will from now on form the crew and personnel of these eight ships, which I take it would be some 400 or 500 people?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker. The unlicensed personnel, amounting to about 220, will be recruited from Trinidad and the office personnel will remain Canadian.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a very clear implication, from the decision which the government appears to have made, that it is a very discouraging decision for those who are arguing for the establishment of a merchant marine in Canada?

Mr. Hees: I think it is obvious to all hon. members that those who are arguing for a Canadian merchant marine are no more discouraged today than they have been for the last 10 or 12 years under the previous government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are they any less discouraged?

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Was the minister consulted in any way with reference to the transfer by Canadian National Steamships of the registry of its ships to Trinidad? Could he say whether he gave his approval to this course as a way of dealing with or getting away from a labour dispute?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour, as such, as an individual, was not consulted personally in that respect.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE OF POLICY IN BOOK CENSORSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure, because of his interest in literary excellence, he will appreciate the question. Would the minister inform the house if, since he has assumed the mantle of censor in chief of books entering Canada, he has changed the conservative and incomprehensible censorship procedures used by his predecessor?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the hon. member in having some time this morning, apparently, dropped notice of his question in the mail box, which I found when I came up to the house this afternoon. Unfortunately there is a conflict in the terms of this question which makes it incomprehensible to me and therefore impossible to answer. The question asks, referring to myself, "has he changed the conservative and incomprehensible censorship procedures...". Mr. Speaker, if they were Conservative they would not be incomprehensible. If they were incomprehensible, they would not be Conservative. Therefore until the hon. gentleman resolves that problem there is nothing I can say in answer to this question, except that I have donned no mantle whatever.

Mr. Pickersgill: The emperor's new clothes.

INQUIRY AS TO FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION CONCERNING MARITIME PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Will the Prime Minister give to the house the legislative program for this session that will more particularly be for the purpose of instituting a new deal for the maritime provinces?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in general there has been an outline in the speech from the throne, and my hon. friend will have to wait in anticipation of the introduction of those measures which will be brought before the house during the course of this session.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

HEALTH INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON NOVEMBER 7

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder if the minister would clear up the confusion that I think was created by the answer he gave last Thursday to the hon. member for St. Boniface regarding the hospital insurance act. Is it necessary that six provinces have their plans in actual operation before money can be paid to any one province, or is it not the case that it is only necessary for those provinces to have their legislation in force? If that is the situation, would it not still be possible to have federal money made available to some of the provinces which have their plans in operation by July 1 of next year?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think possibly the only answer to that is the interpretation of "in force".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister not make clear what he understands by the words "in force"?

Mr. Monteith: Yes. My understanding as of the moment is that "in force" is implied to mean in operation. Whether or not that is a correct legal opinion, that is what I am given to understand as the implication.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question. In view of the fact that that is not the interpretation that was given to the last house by the former minister of national health and welfare, would the minister have appropriate inquiries made as to what is the legal meaning of those words?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, in my studies at the moment concerning the act I have every intention of doing that.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—ALLEGED INCONSISTENCY IN STATEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he is yet in a position to indicate whether or not there is to be a conference between the provinces on the one hand and the federal government on the other with regard to hospital insurance. At the same time my hon. friend possibly might clear up the inconsistency in the correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial ministers. In one letter he says that hospital insurance will not be discussed and in a letter to the premier of Manitoba dated October 29 he says hospital insurance may be discussed at the dominion-provincial conference on November 25.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. gentleman's first question is no. I do not think there is any inconsistency, as he has suggested, in that I believe I have said, and I think it has been agreed, that some aspects of health insurance could well be discussed at that time, or could be mentioned.

AGRICULTURE

NORTHERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO HARVEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the widespread and almost tragic circumstances surrounding the grain grass and seed harvest in northern Alberta, will the minister launch an immediate and thorough investigation in order to determine the facts of the situation and what might be done in co-operation with the government of Alberta to alleviate what is likely to be intensive distress and suffering amongst the people this winter if effective help is not forthcoming?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the P.F.A.A. officers who operate in the northern part of Alberta to give me a report on the situation which exists there and what possibility, if any, exists with regard to harvesting any of the present crop either now or in the spring. Following receipt of that information I think we shall be in a better position to assess the situation.

CHEESE—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW FEDERAL SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the press report that the federal government may grant price support on cheese at 30 cents or 31 cents a pound government policy?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the press report, but in any event I think the hon. member knows that press reports do not constitute government policy.

[Later:]

Mr. Lavigne: I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister take immediate steps to raise the price support on cheese to 34 cents a pound as soon as the provincial government stops its support?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seem to me that a question with respect to price support on cheese has already been asked. I suggest if the hon. member has a further question of that type—

Mr. Lavigne: On a question of privilege, I submit that the answer I received from the minister was not very good.

Mr. Nowlan: Neither was the question.

Mr. Speaker: That may be, but the hon. member has to take his chance on what answer he will receive. This does not entitle him to ask the same question twice.

INDUSTRY

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REPORTED PROMISE TO SUBSIDIZE CONSTRUCTION OF SMELTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the declaration made by the Prime Minister before the chamber of commerce of Montreal on February 19, 1957, my question is this. Is it true that the government has decided to subsidize the construction of a smelter along the St. Lawrence river for the processing of domestic iron ore into steel, as a way to stimulate employment in Quebec?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the report to which my hon. friend is making reference, but I have never heard that action suggested at any time.

Mr. LaCroix: May I ask a supplementary question. Did the Prime Minister promise that action at a meeting of the chamber of commerce of Montreal on February 19, 1957?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not.

[Later:]

Mr. LaCroix: I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with a question I asked a moment ago. My question is, would he comment on the following declaration made at the chamber of commerce of Montreal on February 19, 1957, which is as follows:

Every encouragement must be given to the processing of domestic raw materials—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. LaCroix: Well, that is what I am asking. I am asking for his comments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not clear as to what the hon. member proposes reading.

Mr. LaCroix: The hon. member seems to be very excited.

Mr. Harkness: Sit down, the Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I did not hear the preliminary to the hon. member's question. Would he inform me what he proposes to read?

Mr. LaCroix: My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Prime Minister. I want his comment on this declaration made at the Montreal chamber of commerce, on February 19, 1957.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to inform the hon. member that it is not in order to read a statement and ask for comments on it. If the hon. member has a question to ask of the Prime Minister, would he please ask his question.

Mr. LaCroix: I am asking for the comment of the Prime Minister in connection with a promise made.

INQUIRY AS TO DECENTRALIZATION AND DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What action has been taken by the government to encourage decentralization of industry within Canada and to encourage industrial development?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps this is a question that could have been placed on the order paper. The matter is under consideration, but I have no action to announce at the present time.

SHIPPING

REPORTED ABANDONMENT OF CHARTING OF ARCTIC WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the attention of the Prime Minister been drawn to press reports that the government is abandoning its traditional role of exploring and charting the Arctic waters by withdrawing H.M.C.S. Labrador from this work, and that this is being done in the interests of economy? Will the Prime Minister tell this house if this is correct? If so, does he believe it is a realistic economy?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister of Transport might answer that question.

An hon. Member: Pass the buck.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I was caught napping. I was reading another answer that I expect to be giving in a moment or so. I would greatly appreciate it if the hon. member would repeat his question.

Mr. Winch: I shall be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker. May I readdress my question to the Minister of Transport. Has the attention of the Minister of Transport been drawn to press reports that the government is abandoning its traditional role of exploring and charting the Arctic waters by withdrawing H.M.C.S. Labrador from this work, it being transferred to the department of the Minister of Transport for use as an icebreaker, and that the same is being done in the interests of economy? Will the Minister of Transport say if this is correct? If so, does he believe that such withdrawal in connection with our work in the Arctic is a realistic economy?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the transfer of the Labrador to the Department of Transport is an economy measure, whereby it can be put to more useful work in the winter as an icebreaker. However, it is not our intention that the useful work to which the Labrador has been put in the summer shall be decreased. I am very glad to say it is our intention that that valuable work shall be continued.

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of his earlier reference to the report on the royal commission on coastal shipping. Can the minister explain to the house why the publication date of this report seems to have remained at a fixed but moving point several months ahead during the last year? Could the minister find a pair of seven league boots and attempt to catch up with this elusive report?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am just as anxious as the hon. member is to see the report, but I cannot see it until it is presented to me and to the government.

INQUIRY AS TO GROUNDING OF C.G.S. "BAFFIN" AT BLACK ROCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, of which I have given him notice. What were the circumstances leading up to the grounding of the Canadian government ship Baffin at Black rock, Nova Scotia, on July 4 last? Was an inquiry held into this grounding, and if so by whom and what were the findings?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Halifax for giving me notice of his question.

Answering part one of the questions: On July 4 last the C.G.S. Baffin was engaged in marine survey work off the Nova Scotia coast in the vicinity of cape LaHave, about 50 miles west of Halifax. At about 4.30 in the afternoon the ship grounded on Black rock, which is located one mile off cape LaHave.

On normal offshore sounding operations a survey ship runs lines of soundings at right angles to the coast. Thus, a survey ship in the course of its work stands into a danger area at the inshore end of each sounding line. Survey personnel and officers naturally become accustomed to such an operation. In comparison, commercial shipping in the coastal trade travels well offshore, picking up the fairway buoys marking the desired harbour entrances or passing through safe channels marked by buoys and ranges.

Prior to the grounding, new equipment aboard the Baffin was being used to determine the position of the ship, which was conducting sounding operations in foggy weather. Similar equipment had been fitted and used in 1955 and 1956 on one of the other ships, the Kapuskasing, with exceptionally accurate results, and it was the normal practice with the Kapuskasing to sound in foggy weather. Some of the same personnel who were trained on the Kapuskasing were using the Baffin equipment and were confident that equally accurate positions were being secured for that ship's position, whereas such was not the case. This of course was not discovered until too late.

Answering the second and third parts of the question asked by the hon. member, I may say that at the request of the then acting minister, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), the department requested the services of the Department of Transport for the holding of an inquiry. The inquiry was held and the report brought out the fact that the grounding was due to a combination of circumstances but not to any negligence on the part of the hydrographers or the officers navigating the ship. No punitive action, therefore, was taken with regard to any of the personnel who were in charge of the ship and operations. Captain Snelgrove, in charge of navigating the ship, has had more than 30 years' experience as a navigating officer in our hydrographic service. Mr. Goodwill, who was our chief hydrographer aboard, was also a man of experience, having been in charge of hydrographic operations at sea since 1939.

May I add that the Canadian hydrographic service was first organized in 1883 and has grown so that this service now maintains and operates four ships on the Atlantic coast and three ships on the Pacific coast. Two ships are chartered during the summer season for Arctic surveys. Considering the type of work in which these ships are engaged their record has been extremely good.

UNION STEAMSHIP LINES, B.C.— SUBVENTION PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I did not send him notice. On October 21, in reply to a question by me, he indicated that the coastal shipping subsidy to Union Steamship Lines in British Columbia was under consideration and review. I am now asking him whether the review has been completed and, if so, what action the government intends to take.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer is the review has not yet been completed.

TRADE

COMMUNIST CHINA-RUSSIA—LISTS OF PROHIBITED GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the departure of the trade mission for communist China, has the minister taken any action to remove the differential between the list of goods prohibited for sale to China and that for the Soviet union, as has already been done by the United Kingdom and other members of NATO?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that a large copper mine in British Columbia is being forced to close, would the minister consider copper as one of the articles of trade which the mission might discuss while in China?

Mr. Churchill: I will take that suggestion under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

PITWOOD—PRESENT EXPORT SITUATION IN MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister advise the house as to the present situation with regard to export shipments of pitwood from the maritime provinces to overseas markets? Will the minister consider including a representative of the maritime pitwood industry as a member of the trade delegation which will visit Great Britain shortly?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer in detail the first question with regard to pitwood or pit props. A very great effort has been made to get back into the United Kingdom market. I have taken up the matter myself, and it is being pursued vigorously. I will take the second question under advisement.

AUSTRALIA—REPORTED DECISION NOT TO IMPORT CANADIAN WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister care to comment on a statement by the Australian minister of primary industries that a plan to import Canadian wheat has been dropped because such a purchase would be a heavy drain on Australian dollar reserves? With our desperate need for increased wheat markets, can the minister say whether, in an endeavour to make this sale, Canada offered to accept sterling or to extend credit to Australia?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should comment upon statements made by ministers of other governments in other countries. I have no knowledge of any suggested transaction such as that to which the hon. member refers.

[Mr. Pearson.]

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY MR. EZRA BENSON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of Mr. Ezra Benson's statements in Rome defending the increased United States efforts to expand marketing of their excess stocks, what are the Canadian government's plans to compete with the United States and to increase export markets?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): This question I think should, perhaps, more properly be addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. So far as Mr. Benson's speech in Rome is concerned, I do not think the statements he made at that time were such that the hon. member or others should or could take undue alarm from them.

DISCUSSION OF IMPORTS AT LONDON CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the trade delegation the minister will be heading to the United Kingdom be discussing Canadian exports as well as imports?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I presume we will discuss a number of questions. The purpose of the mission is to place the emphasis on imports from the United Kingdom to Canada.

UNITED KINGDOM—SUGGESTED USE OF BARTER TO INCREASE TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): In view of the fact that barter is an effective means of increasing trade with the United Kingdom, is it the intention of the trade mission to investigate this possibility? If so, does it not appear desirable to include representation from the Canadian wheat board or the three western pools as well as the single representative from the interprovincial farm union council already selected?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not sure I heard all the hon. member's question. If he mentioned the word "barter", we have found no need to engage in that type of trade with the United Kingdom. With regard to the second half of his question in which he mentioned—was it the wheat board?

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The wheat board or the three western pools.

Mr. Churchill: It was in the month of September that, accompanied by representatives of the wheat board, I had the opportunity of visiting the United Kingdom and talking with representatives of the grain trade in London and Liverpool. Every effort was made on that occasion to stimulate the sale of Canadian wheat and other grains in the United Kingdom. The results of these talks and that visit are beginning to show now in the increased sales of our grain to the United Kingdom.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF CHANGES IN TEXTILE ITEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of a substantial recession in the textile industry, will the minister give consideration to changes in tariff items 523b, 553 and 523d?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont very kindly gave me notice of his question which I will refer to the Minister of Finance on his return.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC CITY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPENING DATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) asked me if I could tell him when the new Quebec air terminal would be opened. I am glad to inform him and the house that we plan to open it on Saturday, December 7.

GANDER—STATEMENT ON HOSPITAL AND HOTEL ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Ashbourne), as reported at page 892 of Hansard of that date, asked the following question:

> What progress has been made in providing a new hospital at Gander, and also what facilities for hotel accommodation will be made available when the construction of the new terminal at Gander will have been completed?

The Department of Transport does not assume responsibility for the construction of hospitals at or in association with airports and in the case of the town of Gander, this would appear to be a matter for primary initiative by the provincial authorities. I am not aware of any recent approach from provincial sources. Similarly, the department does not assume responsibility for construction of hotels at or in association with airports, although a wartime surplus barracks is presently being operated as a hotel at Gander by a commercial firm under contract with the department. Any construction of a new hotel, however, it is hoped would be a matter for private initiative in the newly constructed town of Gander where land is available for this purpose.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the minister a supplementary question. Would he consult the files of his department, because I think he would find that the provincial government had approached his department about the question of the hospital.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIR POLLUTION—STATEMENT ON STEPS BEING TAKEN BY TRANSPORT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Haidasz) asked a question concerning air pollution by locomotives and ships; and while I think the hon. member's specific question may have been answered when I indicated that I would be glad to discuss the matter with my officials, the house might wish to be advised briefly as to the consideration that is being given to this problem.

The regulations of the board of transport commissioners in regard to air pollution are contained in general order No. 18, dated November 25, 1908. This regulation was made applicable to the province of Ontario only. However, complaints lodged with the board by individual municipalities in all sections of Canada in regard to smoke nuisance created by railway operations are investigated by members of the board's inspection staff, and appropriate corrective action is taken in each case.

In recent years the board has received requests to revise the regulation with the object of bringing it more in line with present day practice, and on November 17, 1955, a specific application was filed with the board by the city of Toronto to substitute a more restrictive order for general order No. 18. The board's technical officers were therefore directed to review the provisions of this regulation and draft a proposed order to replace general order No. 18. The board also solicited the assistance of the atmospheric pollution service, Department of National Health and Welfare, and the wide experience of that branch in this field has been of great value to the board in its study of this matter.

Following consideration being given to the submissions of the city of Toronto, the report of the select committee of the Ontario legislation assembly, and other interested parties, a draft of the proposed general order was distributed to all concerned on July 17, 1957. The board is at present awaiting final submissions from certain of the interested parties, and on receipt of these submissions further consideration will be given to the matter, and it is expected that the revised regulations will be issued early in 1958.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—INQUIRY AS TO POLICY AT KITIMAT, B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister aware that the previous long-term policy of the Aluminum Company of Canada at Kitimat in granting second mortgages to its employees who buy houses under the authority of N.H.A. has been or might be discontinued; and, if so, are any steps being taken to ensure that workmen there would be able to continue to buy homes on the same low down payment basis that existed in the past?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I shall have to secure the information and let him have it at a later date.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CAMPAIGN FUNDS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister in Vancouver last May, is the government giving consideration to bringing in legislation making public the source of campaign funds?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is not.

[Mr. Hees.]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the great concern aroused in Manitoba by the decision of Trans-Canada Air Lines to limit its Winnipeg maintenance operations to one type of aircraft, namely the Viscount? Would the minister be prepared to use his influence in changing the attitude of Trans-Canada Air Lines in this regard?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. I would refer him to my answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on October 29 last, when I assured him that Trans-Canada Air Lines did not expect in any way to diminish repair and maintenance operations in Winnipeg. Therefore I do not think the employees of Trans-Canada Air Lines in Winnipeg need have any fears whatsoever.

Mr. Deniset: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I understood the minister correctly he said there is no intention of diminishing repair and maintenance operations in Winnipeg. Is there any possibility of having more employment in Winnipeg?

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have not my crystal ball here at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: We always hope there will be more employment, but I am not in a position to forecast.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us look into that crystal ball together.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question in regard to this matter, but I should like to direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce aware of the dissatisfaction in Winnipeg, particularly in his own constituency, with the tenuous assurances given by the Minister of Transport concerning repair and maintenance work at Winnipeg by Trans-Canada Air Lines, and will he discuss the matter with the Minister of Transport and try to obtain a more satisfactory settlement of the situation?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from my neighbour in Winnipeg.

I am glad to see that he is back in the house. The hon. member can be well assured that anything which concerns Winnipeg or Manitoba concerns me. He can also rest assured that I have already discussed this question, and I think Winnipeg may be reassured that the Minister of Transport will do everything in his power to see that the work done at the airport in St. James is maintained and increased to the extent—

Mr. Chevrier: In the light of circumstances.

Mr. Churchill: —of the requirements and as a result of the constant increase in air traffic.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister tell us what that means?

Mr. Churchill: I was following the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). That is the type of answer he used to give.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in my statement on October 29 I outlined to the hon. member that all servicing of DC-3's, North Stars and Viscounts would continue at Winnipeg; that the only additional servicing would be on the new Vanguards and the DC-8's, which will be received in three or four years' time by Trans-Canada Air Lines.

May I ask the hon. member whether he believes that these new aircraft—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: I am asking him a question.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member has something on the order paper which makes him responsible for that subject I am afraid it is out of order to ask him a question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if I understood him correctly to say that it would be three or four years before the Vanguards were available. If that is true it is going to be very disappointing to Newfoundland.

Mr. Hees: Yes, it will be three or four years, in 1960 or perhaps 1961. We hope to get them in 1960.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there no hope of getting a somewhat improved service in the meantime?

An hon. Member: What about your yacht?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a schooner.

Mr. Hees: In answer to the hon. member's question, every endeavour is always being made to improve the service, but with respect to providing an advanced type of aircraft I can only say that they will not be ready until we can obtain delivery from the company from which they have been ordered.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO ENLARGEMENT OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given notice. In view of the present unemployment situation in Canada and of the increase in strength of the armed forces by approximately 2,332 persons since September, 1957, is it the intention of the government to continue to enlarge the armed forces of Canada?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The brief answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no; and the reason for that is that the manpower requirements of our armed forces are governed by our defence commitments. The relation between discharges and enlistments at the present time is very satisfactory, and I expect the same level will be maintained.

I cannot accept the figure given by the hon. member for the increase during September, since the statistics maintained in my department show an increase of only 1,074.

NATIONAL PARKS

STATEMENT AS TO REVISION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): On Friday last when I was absent from the house the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) made the following remarks:

> Some time ago I asked a question of the minister regarding revision of the National Parks Act and a particular question regarding Banff. The minister at that time indicated he did not have any information on the subject and if I would send him some he would be prepared to make a statement in the house. I supplied him with some information several days ago, but as yet I have not received an answer to my question. I wonder if the minister would now take this under consideration and be prepared to give an answer on Monday?

The hon. member's interpretation of what I said on November 4 in reply to his question is not accurate. At no time did I say I "did not have any information on the subject". What I did say was:

> I wonder if the hon. member for Bow River could give me more details as to the regulations he has in mind, and tell me particularly what water and sewer rates are unfair so I will know what to inquire into.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I have now reviewed the information my hon. friend sent me on November 5 and my answer is as follows. The original question was twofold. The hon. member asked:

Does the minister intend to revise the park act in order to rescind some of the impractical regulations in that act?

Mr. Chevrier: This is debate.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I gather that the hon. member in his remarks in Hansard on April 27, 1956, on page 3379 and following was protesting mainly against the penalties and procedure section of the act. I challenge his use of the word "impractical" to describe a provision of an act—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but it seems that he is going beyond the answering of a question by challenging the member on a number of statements. If he would confine himself to the answer to the question to which he has referred I would allow him to proceed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will give the answer the other way. The answer to the first question is that, in view of the facts I have given above, I would like some time to study the advisability of changing the custom of leaving the penalty to the discretion of the judiciary before I make any commitment about revising the act.

The second part of the hon. member's question dealt with water and sewer rates, and my answer to that is in all the circumstances I have yet to be shown that there is any unfairness that requires to be remedied.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NARCOTICS—DISCUSSION OF PROBLEM AND CONSIDERATION OF SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the serious situation in Canada in narcotic addiction and trafficking, can the minister advise the house whether provision will be made for a discussion of the problem, and whether consideration will be given to the report of the special Senate committee on this matter?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question a short time ago. As to whether provision will be made for discussion of the problem, that would require, of course, the consideration of the leader of the house for a special time to be set aside; but I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that adequate opportunity will be presented when the estimates of the Department of Justice are before the committee of supply. I shall be very glad indeed to see a full discussion take place at that time.

With regard to the second part of his question, as to whether provision will be made for consideration to be given to the report of the Senate committee, that report is being considered in my department and, I believe, in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Where it really belongs.

Mr. Fulton: And, of course, it can also be discussed when the estimates are before the committee. I should, of course, remind the hon. gentleman that this matter is of concern to the Department of National Health and Welfare as well as to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Where it belongs.

Mr. Fulton: Also, as he knows, there are widely divergent views as to the opinion expressed by the Senate committee.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to be very careful, otherwise the Minister of Justice may steal a very important function of his department.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I answer that because the original question was directed to me, and assure the former minister that now that we have the present Minister of National Health and Welfare there is no danger of anyone stealing anything.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In view of his answer, is the minister now in a position to assure this house that estimates will come before us so the matter can be discussed?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think the only answer I can give is I am prepared to discuss anything at the proper time, and I believe the estimates are the proper time, the estimates of either my department or the Department of National Health and Welfare, when these matters can be discussed to the fullest extent the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Winch: We are well into November and we have not discussed any of the estimates yet.

PRINCE RUPERT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING ARMED BANDITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister advise the house what progress is being made toward the apprehension of the armed bandit or bandits who accosted two women in Prince Rupert near the end of October?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, although I received notice of the hon. gentleman's question shortly before coming into the house, for which I thank him, the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has not yet been able to let me have a full report, but when it is forthcoming I will communicate it to the hon. gentleman.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was speaking for the government at Aylmer, Quebec, as reported in the Ottawa Journal of Friday, September 20, when he said:

I am tired of Great Britain dictating our destiny and the United States controlling it.

Would he care to comment further on this?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think the date mentioned was September 20, and that would rule the question out, anyway; but I am sure the report does not represent what was said.

BANK OF CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED RETIREMENT OF GOVERNOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the report correct which we have heard today, that the governor of the Bank of Canada has been retired?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard that yet.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the disastrous drop in the price of livestock to the producer, will the minister give the house some assurance that it is the intention of the government to place floor prices under livestock immediately?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman knows that pigs are under price support at the present time and, of course their market price has not yet reached the price support level. As far as the placing of any other livestock under price support is concerned, when that is decided upon it will be announced in the normal way as government policy.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the answer of the Minister of Agriculture to the hon. member for Yorkton with regard to the serious drop in hog prices in western Canada. Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce now announce a new directive to western producers? I refer to the statement he made in Winnipeg suggesting to farmers that they go into livestock production, thereby using up a lot of surplus wheat.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did not suggest to anyone in Winnipeg or anywhere else that the farmers of western Canada should go into livestock production. If the hon. member would get his facts straight perhaps I could answer his question.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a supplementary question the Minister of Agriculture with reference to hog floor prices. Can the minister say whether the government has considered increasing the disastrously low floor price set by the former administration, so that further serious losses to hog producers may be averted?

Mr. Harkness: The level of support prices is under constant consideration by the Department of Agriculture, and when I think it necessary and desirable I draw the matter to the attention of the government as a whole.

Mr. Argue: It is also too late now.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the answer he gave to questions asked on November 7 on this subject. In view of the Prime Minister's statement at a press conference following the Ontario Progressive Conservative convention, in which he is reported as having committed himself to increased federal grants for scientific education and research, will the Prime Minister comment on that statement and give some indication of what action the government proposes to take this session in the form of special grants for Canadian universities or increased grants for scholarships in order to give effect to his promise?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that this question has been asked several times this session and has been dealt with.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I referred to a specific statement made by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ellis: The answer given to previous questions had no relationship to this specific commitment on the part of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: My recollection is that the questions were quite specific and related to grants for scientific education. It seems to me that the hon. member is repeating questions which have been dealt with.

PUBLIC WORKS

GATINEAU AND OTTAWA RIVERS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION WALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. A while ago I asked the minister if he intended to change his policy with regard to protection walls. His answer then was no, due to the fact that the bed of the river is the property of the provinces. Since then the provinces have refused—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caron: Well, the matter has to be clarified so the minister can understand what I mean. The provinces refused on the ground that navigable waters are the responsibility of the federal government. Would the minister tell me if he intends to place this matter before the forthcoming federal-provincial conference in order to clarify who is responsible for these protection walls?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member for Hull has misunderstood the answer I gave him formerly. I said that the dominion accepted responsibility for protecting shores where damage had been caused by navigation but not by erosion, and that had nothing to do with who owns the river bottoms.

IMMIGRATION

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO CITIZENSHIP STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration now in a position to inform the house of the decision of his department on granting citizenship rights to Mr. Banks, the newly elected head of the seamen's union, a person convicted in the United States, and under whose direction fewer and fewer of our Canadian seamen are now being employed?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I should say that the Mr. Banks referred to was given the status of a landed immigrant, I believe by order in council passed by the previous government. Since that time he has made application to be granted Canadian citizenship. His application came in the ordinary way before the citizenship court in Montreal, and during the hearing I believe there were some protesters who appeared. Then at that time or about that time there was civil litigation involving Mr. Banks and involving allegations of his having indulged in criminal libel. The judge of the citizenship court adjourned the hearing until he could learn the outcome of the civil litigation. I should add, perhaps, that the matter will not be before me for determination until after the citizenship court has made a decision on the application.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, this house has learned that the government is not interested at the present time in higher pay for members of parliament. Amongst the new members of all parties with whom I have had the opportunity to chat there was not any real concern about higher pay but there was concern about a more complete stenographic and secretarial service. The plaint is not with the quality of the present service but with its narrow scope. How does one keep in touch with constituents and their problems, handle attendance and participation in debates, learn more about procedure and government operations, with only a half-day secretary to help you with the correspondence? This must be an old problem but I think it has been made much more crucial now by the energies poured into this house by the many new and younger members. I should like to hope that we could have a genuine secretarial pool on which we could draw to the limits of our working capacities as members.

Further, I do not think anyone here would agree with the provision that the United States legislators have as to the library of Congress whereby their reference service even writes the speeches for the members. However, I certainly feel that we could have a specialized research and reference service here for private members, staffed by trained librarians and by the best of graduate students from fields such as political science and economics, working on some kind of scholarship rota. We would abet the educational process and such scholars could give some depth to the knowledge that we bring to our work. If, as political scientists such as Professor Corry of Queen's maintains, a basic weakness of this house is the opposition's shallow knowledge of governing operations, a scheme such as I have just proposed would improve matters greatly. With due respect to all hon. members, may I say that most of us are sketchy, misinformed or underinformed on too many phases of government affairs. To me that may be one explanation for the tendency of our debates to groove into this business of "You said this", "No, I didn't", "Yes, you did" that we seem to have.

Nineteen days ago when the six o'clock adjournment interrupted what I was saying, I had just made some remarks about government leaders taking narrow party advantages out of the present set-up. Indeed, it almost appeared that this government had made our Port Arthur provincial member—a Conservative, by the way—its minister for northwestern Ontario. He had just announced that the C.B.C. was locating four television satellite stations in northwestern Ontario. I did not take that well and was pleased to have the assurance of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) that he had not relayed this information to this particular gentleman. But it seems to me that one of the testing points of the grandiloquent purposes of the party across the way will be whether they take this narrow advantage. In Sault Ste. Marie's paper on Saturday I notice that the defeated Conservative candidate was making an announcement on airport extensions there. That is only a minor point. I suppose this game has been played for many years. All I can say is that one of the nicest things we have had in northwestern Ontario previous to this time was the fact that whatever we might say about the Liberal government we had, they did not go in for that particular kind of tactic.

In the region that I represent a television service, analogous to that offered by C.B.C. radio booster stations, appears to be the only hope for most of the towns in our bush hinterland. The Fowler commission recommended it; technically it is not too difficult; financially, this house must pass the moneys required; and they will be considerable. I should like to urge the hon. members to remember this point. Our bush communities lack many of the city's recreational devices, and even more of the city's educational and cultural facilities. Television brightens, informs, and moderates life in remote places, much more than it does in cities. The demand for it is sharp. When the matter comes up in the next session I hope that favourable consideration will be given in an impartial way to the provision of this service.

Political campaigning by television, of course, seems to arouse intense interest. It certainly seemed to culminate that way on the exciting night of June 10 and I feel this is true right across the whole nation, not just in Port Arthur. For such programming I feel that the rules evolved by the C.B.C. are rather frumpy. They do not allow much scope for imaginative programming. In centres such as Port Arthur our movement found television to be valuable in presenting candidates and policies. For one thing, it eases the handicap of press antipathy. Indeed, one of the main explanations for the slow progress of our party—slower than some of us would hope—lies in the fact that control of communication media has been in the hands of those to whom our program is anathema. In the face of this barrier, the marvel is that we have progressed at all despite the myriad prognoses of death we are having all the time from these newspapers. On this point, without rancour but with a great deal of amusement, one notes the alteration of treatment by our political pundits since June 10.

Two noted Liberal hod-carriers, one who writes for a national magazine, the other for a financial paper and occasionally for a Boston paper, have given the C.C.F. quite a play in past years—until June 10. With the Tory victory, the C.C.F. has almost disappeared from their maunderings. Similarly, after an initial burst of emotion on a possible Liberal-C.C.F. alliance, that garish charity of Canadian journalism, namely the Toronto Star, had dropped us completely. To compensate, Conservative sheets—I will not mention them here—have drawn us out of past obscurity. It is the old problem of whose ox is being gored and all very much in the Canadian newspaper tradition.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Port Arthur is the third largest in all Canada in terms of area. It stretches from its name city in the southwest corner, west and north to Hudson bay and over 250 miles east to Hornepayne and White River. It has the largest population and electorate of the ten biggest ridings in Canada. I state this, Mr. Speaker, because a justified demand has arisen for a redistribution in my constituency. The eastern and northern towns, since Manitouwadge's whirlwind growth, feel they merit their own member and they will await eagerly any news of an independent commission on redistribution. If Port Arthur constituency were split in half, each part would still have more population than 30 present-day constituencies, and each would have more area than over 190 of the present-day constituencies.

This house will soon be graced by a most persuasive exponent for new colleges, especially junior colleges. At the Lakehead college we have what amounts to a junior college; the nucleus, we trust, of a degree-granting university. This school was initiated in 1947 mostly through the vision of the Right Hon. George Drew. It was and will be well supported by the local councils and people. But this Lakehead college is presently an example of the conundrum of federal support for higher education. The federal aid through grants administered by the provinces, and the new aid through the Canada Council have been, or seem to be, predicated on the principle "Them as has, gets!".

The double per capita system—first, by province and, second, by institutional enrolment—is great for well-established institutions, especially in Ontario. It is hopeless for fledgling colleges. We trust that Dr. Smith will become an unofficial minister of education, counselling real government help for new enterprises such as the Lakehead college of arts and sciences.

It is well to remember that we, like certain other parts of Canada, have an expanding population and economy, an enthusiasm for our region and a certain richness in talent because of the many nationalities in our background. From the point of view of our need, the worst factor of all is that we are isolated, far from any metropolitan centre, so that we need higher education much more than some places of comparable size which are close to universities.

Some people accuse the C.C.F. party of a Cassandra-like fondness for unemployment. Now unemployment, I gather from statements made by people of great authority, is rather a dirty word at the present time. Anyhow we and the people, I think, of all parties in northwestern Ontario regret that we are faced with the bleakest winter since the thirties. This is largely due to something we can understand: there has been a slump in our pulp and paper works; there has been a rapidly-changing production scheme in our woods industry which has caused quite a bit of dislocation. Of course we have all heard in this house, ad infinitum, about the doldrums of the grain trade. In such a situation and without a pre-prepared plan we hope for crash efforts by federal and provincial authorities to soften the effects of lack of work. A most hopeful project would be the one which I understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) has under consideration and that is the clearing and rock-work for the pipe line east of the lakehead to be done this winter. Our unemployment rolls are filled with men who have the necessary skills but during this past season some pipeline contractors had difficulties—so they said—because they had an inferior labour force. That would certainly not obtain at this time of the year.

A further suggestion is that the rockwork for groynes and breakwaters could be carried on over ice in the Fort William and Port Arthur harbours. The problem here is that neither the Department of Transport nor the Department of Public Works have plans prepared. It certainly is not the fault of the ministers; we are grateful for the investigations they have carried out with respect to our harbour facilities and we naturally hope for action.

Now the harbour facilities at the lakehead constitute a much-abused topic. In essence there are two main themes: first, the present facilities are inadequate for unloading seagoing freighters and for truck-haul transfer; secondly, the energetic efforts of the Duluth authorities have the jump on us and this Minnesota city will become the larger entrepôt for Western Canada.

To solve the problems with respect to the merits of these two points of view is I think something really for the experts in economics and engineering, but, like many of my constituents, I feel there is a sense of urgency and a need for leadership on the part of the government. The three levels of government in this nation are involved, plus the extraneous factors of inter-city rivalry and pressure from the prairies.

Nothing this government could do would impress us more than knowledgeable action on our harbours tied in with some alleviation of our unemployment problem. It would certainly help to quiet the whispers—growing to a roar—which are now going the rounds to the effect that it is shaping up like the thirties—a Conservative government; no work; hard times. Such whispers in my mind are very unfair, but let us not have them grow to an uproar.

Many residents in our small communities of the bushland are confused over their inability to obtain mortgage money for house construction because, it appears, of the low credit ratings and prospects of municipalities. The National Housing Act seems peculiarly ineffective; there is the vicious circle. Housing standards are low because of the economic position of the municipalities and the economic position does not improve because the tax and assessment structure is precarious.

There is considerable opinion at the lakehead that we could be much better served by Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is felt that too often reservations are impossible to get; that the number of available flights are too few. Some people argue that Canadian Pacific Air Lines should get a franchise from Winnipeg to Toronto through the lakehead. However, before plumping for that I would like to get an analysis of the problem from the minister concerned.

The trans-Canada pipe line has been a live issue at the lakehead for three reasons: firstly, because of Mr. Howe's part in it; secondly, because of local controversy over distribution of gas within the cities; and, thirdly, because of a considerable animosity —and this is a bad point—engendered by the United States contractors in the way they have handled their employees. I believe, of course, that the line should be publicly-owned and the bulk of the citizens, I think, would go along with this point of view. In any case the main reaction to this government's royal commission follows the path of the little blank verse written some years ago entitled "Royal Commissions". It goes:

Three cheers for the royal commission!
By the end of 15 months we shall have all the facts.
A year later
And the government will have a plan.
By that time of course
The situation will have entirely changed
And it would be clearly unwise to interfere.

Now in a political way—the rest of my speech will be involved with purely political matters, at least I believe this to be so—I would like to say I was weaned on Mr. King's Industry and Humanity. Despite my appearance I found it pretty meagre fare. However, it did open up in my mind a curiosity about the principles and basic ideas of political parties. I was very pleased to notice in a speech of the member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) the other day that he was again talking about Liberal principles and at the recent Progressive Conservative rally everybody was talking about the Conservative principles.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, they were mostly talking about the Liberal party.

Mr. Fisher: Well we will not get into that. To continue, it may be presumptuous of me as a novice, especially since this happens to be an arena of empiricism, to raise this matter but I have found that many people are hungry for discussions on the principles of political parties. For this reason I think it is worth while going ahead. It may be unfair to state that much of this hunger is due to an inability to distinguish between the fare offered by the Liberal and Conservative parties. C.C.F. members are often accused of purveying this line, ad nauseam and maybe we do it too much, but one would hope that in the midst of this busy legislative program we would not have to be putting forward this line and that the major parties would be displaying their own principles so that the people could see them in all their clarity.

Perhaps as an initial step I could put on record some words written 22 years ago by a man who has the regard, sometimes favourable, of many members of this house. Twenty-two years ago was the era of "King or chaos"; I hope you will remember that slogan. There was a ferment of political ideas. One yeasty bit of ferment was an article entitled "The Decay of Liberalism" written, before he became an impartial civil servant, by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

One must be fair. Those who turn to this article will find certain criticism of democratic socialism which I shall not cover now. After all, the member is still in the house and he could quite probably drag them out again. But here is the core, where this questing academic laid bare his political soul and pointed up the Liberal dilemma. He wrote:

> Liberal doctrines are supposed to have universal validity and to be beneficial to all men without distinction, but it cannot be denied that in practice, Liberalism has been the creed of the middle classes . . . The fact that Liberalism appeals to a section of society, the middle classes, rather than to the whole population, is not, however, the whole explanation of its decline. There is another serious weakness of Liberal doctrines, and that is the inherently inactive character of most of them. Potent to destroy political, social or economic privilege, but having little positive content, they have become politically obsolete as their destructive work has been completed . . .
> This negative character has been most obvious in the case of economic Liberalism.

This is still, by the way, quoting the member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Professor Pickersgill.

Mr. Fisher: To continue:

> The doctrines of "laissez-faire" and of the beneficence of unrestrained self-interest were useful to destroy archaic, inadequate, and often ill-conceived economic regulations or privileges. But when that function had been performed, it began to be apparent that the effects of unrestrained self-interest, far from being universally beneficient, were often evil, and in some cases socially intolerable.

This is a damning attack. Here is a free enterpriser gone sour! Here is an absolute denial of the old economic basis of Liberalism. In fact, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate belongs to a party that has almost completely rejected the old Liberal economic ideas in practice but not in party propaganda, and not for anything consistent, either. Thus we had Mr. Howe, the heroic free enterpriser to the business community and also the spawner of crown corporations. Have the Canadian Conservatives ever had a distinctive economic and social philosophy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Fisher: We cannot leave them out of this. In some ways I feel they have grabbed the economic ideas of the old Liberalism but the author of a recent study of the Conservative party in Canada—and I would recommend to it to any hon. gentleman who has not looked at it—made the point that no Canadian Conservative has ever made a coherent statement of the Conservative party's general position. Indeed, some people—Conservatives, at that,—claim that such is unnecessary and impossible.

I was interested in the remarks of the fine premier of Ontario on March 28 last in the provincial assembly when he expressed his interest and intention in carrying out measures of practical socialism. I wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) would be willing to call some of his proposals "practical socialism"?

In England, the spiritual home of the Bennetts, the Meighens, and our present day fifteen-percenters, the Conservatives have developed a certain continuity of thought first articulated by Burke and continued by figures such as Randolph Churchill and Chamberlain. This school of thought sees society as organic. Change is not impossible but it evolves; there is no revolution. Society, of course, pre-dates the individual and is superior to him. It is here after he is gone and thus we get a great veneration for the past.

Such a vein does not exclude social reform measures but regards them suspiciously. "Tory Reform" is not an uncommon phrase in England. But it is distinct from socialist reform. The pace is slower; there is a deference for established institutions, a veneration for the past and its forms and symbols Gentleman of elevation and property should give the lead in bettering bad social conditions. Reform comes from above, not in response to mass demand but because the Conservative elite is endowed with a high sense of moral responsibility. It refrains from the demagogue's, the huckster's appeal. Well, one can have a certain respect for the basic position given here; mighty oaks spreading their benevolent protection over the humble grazing in their shade. Deference on the one side; responsibility on the other.

Has this ever been the Canadian Conservative's basic position? I do not think so, except in the pursuit of the symbols rather than the substance of Canadian life. "Let us keep the royal crest on our mail boxes!"—that sort of thing. Perhaps I am too cynical but I feel the present government's attitude toward reform and most of its measures are opportunist, ad hoc. They have been stumbled upon haphazardly in 22 years of exile. In terms of left or right, they are probably left, but they are designed for the inside, not the outside of office.

Let us review a bit. The Canadian Liberals introduced social measures because they could not bear the consequences of their original economic ideas. In the quest for office the Conservatives have followed the Liberal lead; yet from both of them we still hear all this talk of free enterprise. We had the Prime Minister "private enterprising" the other day. Planning, economic and social, such as is included in the amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, should be the logical outgrowth of 19th century Liberalism. Liberalism's very faith in the power of individual reason indicates this. But what do we find instead? We have a formless, piecemeal reaction to free enterprise with the refusal to give up the free enterprise, the private enterprise myth. If you scratch the verdigris off the Canadian you will not find a free enterpriser. Canadians are the greatest people in the world to turn and scratch on the government's door: "Do something for us".

I would like to deal with the images of the two older parties that history presents. Hon. members will perhaps forgive a history teacher for taking off on this tack. I think some of it may amuse you. Here are the Conservatives in the popular historical myth. As I see it they are the party of the empire; anti-yankee; the party of loyalty; the Queen and Tommy Church; the party that owns the flag—not the Red Ensign either, but the Union Jack; the party with the cartoon view of Mackenzie King as a nasty little man chipping away with a mallet at the noble statue of Britannia.

In contrast, let us consider the popular historical image of the Liberals. They are considered tepid toward the empire and the commonwealth; looking southward; traditionally sympathetic to the United States; calling for unrestricted reciprocity; the permanent joint commission; the interlocking of North American military and economic interests.

The Tories: high tariff, the party of big business and national development. The Grits: low tariff, the party of the farmer and the small businessman. The Conservatives, centralizers; the Liberals, provincial rightists. But what switches have come about! Who has centralized for more than 20 years? Who has been the creature of big business for more than 40 years, ever since the days of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern?

Since 1885 and Riel the Canadian Conservatives have raised an image of a party antagonistic to Quebec, with July 12 being considered in many parts of Canada as a Conservative day. The Liberals in this period have created the image of being pro-French; sympathetic to Quebec; pro-immigration; the party of all the people; all the ethnic groups. Do these differences, these popular images really exist? And if they do, are they worth it? I think they really do exist in the minds of some people. Will we get a view of the Conservative's antipathy to the United States when we know their policy concerning the C.B.C.? Will it continue as a rampart protecting a part of Canadian culture or will the Jack Kent Cookes and their Americanism win with the Conservative party?

An hon. Member: Tell us about the C.C.F. before your time expires.

Mr. Fisher: Let us wait and see. Today our Conservative Prime Minister, for example, is closely associated with the St. Jean Baptiste Society and that is not the sort of thing you think of in relation to the popular image as being a Conservative aim.

Mr. Churchill: You should go to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I think it is hardly fair that a new member of this house should be rudely jolted by these unsolicited interruptions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Stop jabbing, then.

Mr. Fisher: Another Conservative prime minister, Mr. Borden, took this country far off the colonial path. Fielding, a Liberal, swallowed high tariffs without a tremour. King was such a centralist that he could not abide the provincial Liberal premier, Mitch Hepburn. In the 70's the Liberals caterwauled about the C.P.R's gift of $25 million and 25 million free acres of the best land in Canada yet in 1956 the Liberals turned around and gave Trans-Canada Pipe Lines a public gift that makes the other appear fairly small.

Mr. Gardiner: What did the C.C.F. do with their Regina manifesto?

Mr. Fisher: Both parties came up with large campaign war chests filled by big business. Today neither is high tariff and neither is free trade; both claim to be free enterprisers, parties of sturdy individualism. Each pushes social welfare legislation which gainsays this.

There is a choice between them, all right, which will probably be evidenced in the next election campaign in terms of the personality of the leader: the jaunty bow tie versus the portentous, rhetorical pause. Each party is angling for the French Canadian bloc. Each seems to presume that the French Canadian either cannot accept an electoral defeat placing them on a minority footing in the nation or else they do not have to accept an electoral defeat. And what do we hear of the minority parties, strongest north and west of Sudbury? Out there where the air is light I suppose the popular image, according to the press, is that we are the crackpots, the zanies, the doctrinairs, the impractical fuzzy idealists. This image, of course, is fostered by the hostile press.

I would now like to turn to another subject. Hon. members will forgive me if I search my notes for a moment.

Mr. Gardiner: Do you want to find the Regina manifesto?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: No; we changed that. The point I wanted to make in conclusion is this: if we are those fuzzy idealists, and if we are crackpots, it gives me a certain amount of pride to stand here and later on to vote for the amendment introduced by those crackpots you see in front of me, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). If they represent the kind of zany thinking that the C.C.F. is always being accused of, I am very proud to be associated with them, and I feel that they and our group give a more honest opposition, even if you disagree with them, than the anomalies that overlap in these two major parties to my right.

Mr. E. J. Campbell (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in my place for the first time in this house my memory takes me back to a lesson I learned in public school and I can think of no better place to repeat that lesson than here today. It goes something like this:

> Speak no ill, but lenient be
> To others failings as your own;
> If you be the first the fault to see,
> Be not the first to make it known.
> For life is but a passing day,
> No lip may tell how brief its span;
> Then, O, the little time we stay
> Let us speak of all the best we can.

I am not going to attempt to speak at any great length in this throne speech debate, and I must admit also that I will be repeating some of the things that many other speakers have said. I will admit also that I am well pleased to repeat many of the other things that have been said because so many representatives agree with my own thinking.

I would like to add my congratulations to the Speaker on his elevation to his exalted position and also to the mover Mr. Smith (Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I think theirs was a job well done.

I feel honoured and privileged to have the opportunity to speak for a few minutes to the hon. members who are here today representing the interest of the people of their districts, and on behalf of the people whom I have the privilege to represent.

I am not sure that I agreed with my colleague who moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne when he said that the terror you have when you get up to speak just automatically turns to plain fear because, as I sit here day after day—and I think the hon. member across the way mentioned 19 days—the pressure seems to build up to the point in a new member that I think the next object that you hear about flying around and around the world will be parts of a new member. The pressure certainly has not got less.

I do appreciate the comments which have been made from all corners of the house. I may say that I have had some experience in public service, although this is my first experience in the House of Commons, and in connection with that public service I have had the occasion to take part in a number of debates. I find that when you are reasonably sure that you are right when you are debating it seems to lend a source of strength to you that you cannot get in any other way. In my public service I have come to find a source of strength, and it seems fitting that I mention it here, in the words of the apostle Paul. It is recorded that he said:

> Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

As I listened to the debates which have been given in this house, and having regard for the advice contained in the apostle's words, I like to think that the opposition which has been brought to bear against the proposals brought down in the speech from the throne have been intended, not so much to prove that the proposals are wrong but mainly for the purpose of making the representatives who are upholding them prove that they are right. If that is so, then I feel that they deserve to be commended for the opposition that they bring to those proposals.

I note that a number of members who, it would seem, have believed in and supported a different trend of thinking from that of perhaps a majority of the members who sit on this side of the house, have, after having had an opportunity to prove, as it were, the worth of their proposals and having apparently failed to prove that they were wrong, then reversed their position and voted with the majority on this side of the house. I feel that that is something that they are to be commended for and it is something which often requires tremendous courage to do.

I have suggested, Mr. Speaker, that there was a matter with which I was not quite sure that I agreed. However, at this point I would like to emphasize the fact that there are a number of things with which I do agree in the submissions which were made, and I will endeavour to deal with them in the order in which it appears to me that they affect the people of Canada and particularly the people of my district.

I feel that the need for greater stability and increased purchasing power on the part of agriculture and the beneficial influence that increased purchasing strength in the hands of the farm people would have on the many other lines of business is the one single thing that would do the greatest good for the greatest number of our people today. I feel that it would help to balance and strengthen the entire Canadian economy. I feel also—and I would like to emphasize this point—that aside from the indirect effect upon other lines of business the fact remains that on its own merits the dependence of the people upon agriculture for their most important needs, namely food, should give agriculture a rating well up to the top of our consideration rather than at or near the bottom, where it seems to have been in these late years.

I would emphasize especially the need for help for the winter wheat growers. Measures have been taken to protect the western growers of spring wheat, but I suggest to the house that the growers of soft winter wheat in this part of the country are in a worse position than the growers in the west as far as price is concerned. I do not say that to reflect upon what has been done for the west. I am glad that the house has seen fit to pass a measure which is going to help the growers in the west but I respectfully bring to the attention of the house the wheat growers in this part of the country who are also in need of help. I believe it is the intention of the Ontario wheat growers to attempt to set up a marketing program in the near future under the Ontario farm products marketing act. If they do this I believe it will be a step in the right direction. I do hope they are successful in that effort.

I should like to say a few words in connection with soybeans. I understand there is a tariff or duty of $1.20 per bushel against Canadian soybeans entering the United States while United States soybeans enter Canada duty free. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian regulations were balanced so as to provide the same protection for the Canadian producer as has been maintained for the United States producer it would change the position of the soybean producers of this country from that of a poorly paid business to one which would pay well. At the same time it would encourage the production of more soybeans which the figures show are needed in Canada. At the same time I feel quite sure this would draw land out of the production of other things which it would seem are being overproduced at the present time.

I should like to refer now to a letter I have in my hand. It is from the soya bean growers' marketing board and reads in part as follows:

> The newest farm organization in the United States, the national conference of commodity organizations, is working feverishly to come up with recommendations on an over-all farm program before the next session of congress. Members have already agreed on two basic principles which apply to almost all crops. One of these is to provide greater protection to farmers against imports from other countries. The conference wants tighter import controls. They say the government permits too many commodities to enter the United States. . . . The second is to get a new base for the parity formula.

I should like to point out that the United States, our greatest competitor, is setting up regulations to protect that country against imports from other countries. For that reason I draw the attention of the house to the fact that I feel we also need protection for our people.

I should also like to draw attention to the need for help for the sugar beet and corn growers. I feel I can speak with some authority in this regard because in the past I have, as a farmer myself, produced both of these crops in considerable quantity, and when I am home I still live on a farm where a certain amount of these things is still produced.

In the case of sugar beets, may I say that I was named a member of a deputation that came to Ottawa a number of years ago to see if something could be done to protect the sugar beet industry. We did not receive much encouragement at that time and on my return home I decided that I would cease growing sugar beets and I have not grown them since that day. In my opinion, many sugar beet growers are at a crossroads. Mechanized equipment has been devised to decrease the many hours of back-breaking labour that the harvesting used to take but farmers are in a quandary to know whether the future of the industry would justify the outlay of money that is required to equip themselves in this way. They are again asking for some measures that will stabilize and protect their industry to the point that they will have a reasonable assurance that their investments may prove to be profitable in the years to come.

I feel that this industry is well worth protecting not only from the point of view of the producers and workers who are employed in the fields and factories but also from the point of view of the machine companies and their workers. Perhaps more important than that, I believe it is necessary to have a home source of supply in case we should get into such a conflict as we have had twice in my time as the result of which trade barriers might be erected or trade might be cut off and we would not be able to get the supply that we need.

I also have in my hand a statement prepared by the sugar beet board in which is contained figures of contracted acreage from 1950 to 1957 inclusive. In 1950 there were 41,007 acres, which I believe was an all-time high, and in 1957 the contracted acreage was 20,313 acres, less than half the handling capacity. The Wallaceburg plant has been shut down for some time and would have remained closed throughout this year if it had not been for the fact that we had exceptionally good harvesting weather resulting in the beets piling up at the Chatham factory and it was decided to operate the Wallaceburg plant for a short time in order to alleviate the situation.

I have a newspaper account here concerning a request made to members of the house a few days ago by a deputation of sugar beet growers in which they dealt with their objective and I should like to quote from the article which appeared in the London Free Press of Tuesday, November 5, 1957. In part it has this to say:

> Western Ontario's sugar beet industry today enlisted the support of . . . members of parliament in its plea for the establishment of a federal floor price of $14 per ton under sugar beets, and a curb on the importation of foreign refined sugar. These twin actions, according to a producer-processor delegation, were necessary to save the Ontario sugar beet industry from destruction.

This brought back to my mind very vividly my own experience some time ago when we came to Ottawa asking for much the same kind of protection.

I should also like to say a few words in support of the proposal to try to work out a tax sharing agreement between the federal and provincial governments whereby the provincial authorities, who in turn exercise a measure of control over the municipal councils, would be in a position to share a more substantial part of the tax burden of home owners for schools and other services and in this way bring about a measure of benefit where I believe it is most needed and would do the most good. I should also like to emphasize that because the purchasing power of our dollar today is not nearly as great as it was when assistance to our senior citizens was first instituted I am in favour of supporting the proposals outlined in the speech from the throne to increase old age pensions and other kindred benefits, which increases have, as the result of recent action, become a reality.

Finally, I recall to mind a few words that I feel have a fitting application in helping to emphasize the requests I have made. They are:

> If you would build a way that lasts
> Two things stand like stone
> Kindness to your fellowmen—
> Courage in your own.

I hope that we may be able to work together, kindly and constructively and with the courage of our convictions towards the establishment of those things that are good for the people of our country. To that end, I solicit your support and I pledge mine to you.

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, my first words in this debate are words of congratulation to you, sir, and to the mover of the address the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) and the seconder, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault). I intend to make some suggestions during the course of this debate which I hope the government will find helpful in relieving the critical unemployment situation that is plaguing us in Canada, and more specifically in the province of New Brunswick. I am making these suggestions very sincerely because up until June 10 the Atlantic resolutions signed by the Conservative candidates in the Atlantic provinces and the new deal for the maritimes were the things that were most publicized. Since June 10, however, they have become deep secrets and I am not able to find out what is going to be done about them. I am told to wait and see. Apparently the government is in need of some suggestions as to what to do in the maritime provinces.

I should like, first, to urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to take a greater interest in the welfare of Canadian National Railways employees, and to realize that his responsibility does not end with making funds available to the Canadian National Railways. He must see that Canadian National Railways employees who are walking the streets of the city of Moncton, and other Canadian National Railway points, are put back to work and that these unnecessary lay-offs, if I may borrow an expression from the minister, will not take place in increasing numbers. It was reported in the press that the reason the men were not taken back was because of certain seniority rights in the Canadian National unions. I had the opportunity of talking to R. P. Lellan, vice-president of the Canadian National system, federation 11, and Atlantic president of this federation, and I understood that the press release said the government would make funds available to assist in the re-employment of the Canadian National shop men who were laid off.

In this particular lay-off to which I refer there were 110 men laid off in the shop in our area and also some 50 men laid off in what is known as running repairs. I understand that no action has been taken by the government to induce the management of Canadian National to help those men in running repairs who were laid off. These men worked in the roundhouse and yards and many of them belong to what is known as the car man's craft. I further understand that the work planned in the Moncton area covered an increase in car production in the car shops. In connection with this new program, the management wanted to employ the laid off craftsmen in other trades, but the crafts organizations, having their own seniority arrangements, wanted to see the car men who were laid off re-employed first. I feel the government should make sufficient funds available so that both the 110 men laid off in the shops and the 50 men laid off in the running repairs will be re-employed.

Suggestions have been sent to me by people in the international association of machinists. I have a letter from Moncton lodge, No. 594 outlining their plan. It is addressed to me as the member for Westmorland, and it says in part:

> We are aware of the understanding that serious consideration is being given by the Canadian National Railways of the letting of a contract to private industry rather than do this work at the Moncton shops. It was suggested that the Moncton frog shop work seven days per week so as to enable them to fill this order at straight time rates. This procedure is contrary to our wage agreement (Rule 2).
> It is also the understanding that the amount of this contract will be a minimum of two and one half million dollars.
> It is the considered opinion of local lodge No. 594, I.A.M. that the best possible solution to the problem is to acquire additional equipment so as to enable the frog shop to compete with private industry inasmuch as production is concerned. This, needless to say, would mean a great deal to the economy of Moncton and the surrounding area.

A few days ago I brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport another letter from the Canadian National war veterans association, dated October 28, 1957. The minister said he had received a copy of this letter. The association protested the dismantling and scrapping of thousands of dollars worth of very valuable machinery in the Canadian National Railways shops. These are suggestions which, in so far as the Department of Transport and the Canadian National Railways are concerned will assist us.

I could agree with the statements made in the speech by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) on May 14, 1957, which is reported in the Moncton daily Times. He is reported as saying that there is a definite barrier between the maritimes and other parts of Canada. The hon. member also told this group that something should be done to encourage our youth to stay in the maritime region. He said that each year we have lost many of our brains to other provinces; it is a concern for us which is alarming. I have noticed an increase in the number of people leaving Westmorland county since June 10 because many times I have been called upon to assist them in obtaining papers and documents to enable them to go to the United States and find employment. I feel that the time has come to carry out major public projects to combat the recession now taking place in our area.

As hon. members of this house know, one matter of great interest to us is the Chignecto canal. This proposed canal would be about 18 miles long and would connect Northumberland strait with the bay of Fundy. I should like to point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is reported to have said in Saint John, New Brunswick, on May 4 that he considered the canal to be part of the St. Lawrence seaway system. Upon completion of this canal, ships using the St. Lawrence seaway and wishing to proceed to South American points would save 400 or 500 miles, depending upon their destination. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks), who is also the minister for the province of New Brunswick, has always been a great supporter of this project and has brought it to the attention of this house year after year. I hope that now he is in a position to do something about it he will, and that he will be supported by the parliamentary assistant from the province of New Brunswick, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, who has also supported the project at public meetings in Saint John. Many other members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have signified their support of this project. One of the strongest assurances concerning this canal was given recently in the house by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne). I know that if the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska had been elevated to a cabinet post, as we in New Brunswick expected he would be after the remarks of the Prime Minister in Campbellton, we could put the faith that we would like to put in his assurances.

Another matter of great interest to the people of Westmorland county—and, of course, to the people of Prince Edward Island—is the construction of the causeway from Westmorland county to Prince Edward Island. Exploratory drilling has taken place in Westmorland county and I understand it is to ascertain the quality and quantity of stone that could be used in this project. We are all waiting for some announcement from this government concerning this project in particular. I am not at this time going to go into the merits of this causeway in full because there is on the order paper, standing in the name of the hon. member for Kings, (Mr. Macdonald) a resolution which will give us an opportunity to tell the house of the many advantages of this proposed causeway.

Another matter that was proposed some time ago, in fact, it was brought forward by the last government, was the power project for the maritime provinces. The idea behind this power plant is to make available power in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It has been said that it will be built in the province of Nova Scotia at Springhill and it has also been said that it will be built at Saint John, New Brunswick. One reason that it would be built at Saint John, New Brunswick, would be that if coal became scarce, oil could be shipped in by sea to supply this power project. The reason given that it should be built at Springhill, Nova Scotia is its nearness to the source of coal. I have a suggestion to make in this regard. I suggest that the plant be built farther up the bay of Fundy at some point on Shepody bay. My suggestion would be that the plant be constructed at Dorchester which could be open to navigation the year round if, as suggested, they needed oil and it is only some 40 miles from the coal mines in Springhill.

Just about a year ago the Moncton Times sent me a complimentary copy of their paper containing a front page editorial scoring the hard money policy. In it they quoted Premier Flemming who pointed out that there was no inflation in the maritime provinces and he said that this policy should not be applied in the Atlantic region. I quote from the report in the paper of Wednesday, September 26, 1956 as follows:

"But I do not believe that this policy should be applied indiscriminately to all provinces and to all regions of the Canadan economy. The condition of the New Brunswick economy and, indeed, the condition of the economy of the whole Atlantic region, differs greatly from that of other parts of Canada."

And he urged that allowance be made when monetary restrictions were applied.

There has been no change. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) the other day about the "castor oil policy". Perhaps he did not understand me. I will read what Premier Flemming has to say about that. This is quoting from the same paper:

Conceding that the hard money policy was necessary to prevent inflation in the booming central provinces, New Brunswick's premier said its application in this province was "about as sensible as a man with 10 children feeding them all castor oil regardless of their individual needs."

If this was true then, it must be true now; but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if it was true then, we are still getting the castor oil treatment enunciated by Premier Flemming.

I should now like to turn to a subject about which I spoke last session and for my effort on that occasion I received both praise and criticism. That subject has to do with C.B.C. television operations. After the election this year Time magazine printed an article. I am going to quote from Time magazine of July 8, 1957 in which there is a report of a statement of a C.B.C. official. The paragraph was entitled "long haired nut boys", referring back to some remarks last year and it reads in part as follows:

Because the C.B.C. is free from obligation to make a profit, it is unfazed by program ratings. It experiments boldly with highbrow plays . . . Explains one C.B.C. official "If only five per cent of the population might be expected to find a program interesting then we do not expect more than five per cent to watch it. You cannot judge the value of a program by its rating."

I do not know how else you would judge a program. But apparently these people set themselves up as sole judge and jury. This is the attitude that I complained about last year in the House of Commons, namely that whether you like it or not you are going to have to watch what they put on if you are going to watch television at all.

In the part of the country from which I come we can receive, with a good set, four television stations. At the same time they produce C.B.C. programs and send them over all stations. With the percentage of five per cent interested in seeing this type of program, I wonder whether this C.B.C. official thinks for a moment that there is a large percentage of people in Canada who want to listen to someone advocating the communist line. We had on our station a C.B.C. program on which Joe Salsberg appeared and advocated the communist line. I have seen him the second time talking on the communist line and he said that he was a communist. He qualified that statement by saying that he was some particular type. But I do not think we as Canadian citizens want to listen to this man on programs for which we are paying. I think the percentage of those who want to listen would be very small.

At the same time we have other programs that are positively the wrong type, in my opinion, for showing at particular hours. From five o'clock to six o'clock over our station there is shown a C.B.C. program called "Fighting words". I think that is the name of it. Lately I have had more than one complaint about showing this program at this time. For over six months now in the Moncton district covered by this station we have been treated to a discussion on prostitution, homosexualism and allied subjects. That was between five o'clock and six o'clock at night when the children, including my own, are watching television. In one particular case a gentleman told me that this program came on and that his family were watching it when one of his children, age about 12, became embarrassed and he said, "We don't want to listen to that" and he got up and turned it off. That is not the kind of program we want in our province when our children are awake and are watching television.

I do not want anybody to think for a moment that I am attacking any particular person producing this program or anybody who cannot answer; because if there is anybody who can answer anybody, it is the C.B.C. Last year when in this House of Commons I came up with some honest criticism with regard to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a week later a program—the same program, I might say—came out and discussed what I had said in the House of Commons here; and the concensus on that program was, "This man either wants to be or will be defeated at the next general election". They have national coverage. When I go on television I must pay for it for local coverage.

When the Prime Minister came to Moncton on May 4 he is reported by the Moncton Times as saying that if they were elected they would set up a body independent of the C.B.C. I would ask the Prime Minister what action has been taken in this matter. I would suggest to him that this is an urgent and national matter. We here in Canada hold very dear our way of life, our families and our Christian ideals. This programming of communism, prostitution and homosexualism can have a serious effect.

I understand that some of these programs are produced and sold below cost to sponsors by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Now I may be told that there is a check on these matters by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who look after the security problems involved but the R.C.M.P., although excellent law enforcing officers, should not I think be asked to take on the additional job of acting as judges. Somebody else may argue that there is a board of the C.B.C. which censors these things; well if there is it is a case of one person sitting on his own judgment which is against every rule of law.

Although I am not one of those who looks for a communist under every bed, I do not like the way things are going with respect to this programming. The pattern, if it is a pattern, coincides with that used by communist groups and carried out in communist countries. The first idea of the communists is to destroy the moral fibre of the nation, destroy the family unit and when this is accomplished the people are then ready to have imposed upon them a new way of thinking. We in Canada have always been very jealous of our way of living and today we have honoured the men who fought to save us from aggression of ideas from without. Let us be just as careful to safeguard our families, particularly our children, from within. I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister that a standing committee be set up so that the persons who are responsible to the public will have their decisions—whether right or wrong—judged by the people of the nation in the results of the general elections. In this way we will have a real democracy at work, safeguarding democracy.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, in this debate on the speech from the throne I think I should say I am sure we are all very happy to have witnessed the visit of Her Majesty to Canada particularly for the purpose of opening this session of parliament. I am sure we were all thrilled with the way in which the visit was conducted and recognize of course that the Queen herself in all her loveliness represented not only a tradition but the fact of loyalty to the crown which will linger with the British people, including the Canadian people for many many centuries to come. I wish to say in passing that no stone was left unturned to make the visit successful; the Queen endeared herself to the people of Canada and placed the crown in the hearts of our people in a way that has perhaps never been accomplished before.

I also wish in this connection to say a word with respect to the magnificent job done by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in televising the royal visit. I have always been somewhat of a critic of the C.B.C. I listened to the previous speaker with a good deal of interest, especially so far as what he had to say in connection with the C.B.C. programs. I think I will go along with him just 100 per cent of the way. I suppose I will continue to be critical of the C.B.C. just so long as I feel its policies are unbalanced or indeed tend towards the propagation of socialistic and almost communistic ideas.

However, I give credit where credit is due and apart from my criticisms I repeat that the job they did in televising Her Majesty's visit and the opening of parliament was a magnificent job one that compares more than favourably with any similar undertaking by any network in the world.

Now the original motion of course is for an address to thank Her Majesty for her most gracious speech. I suppose on the face of that we would all want to convey our thanks to Her Majesty but, being the democracy we are, at the same time as we thank her we may register any complaints we have in respect to the activities of her ministers. This parliament is where we as representatives of the people of Canada may lay bare the complaints we have at the foot of the throne and some of us will indeed wish to register our complaints in this way.

One of the complaints I have is that I can find no difference between the basic policy of Her Majesty's government today and the policy of the government which preceded it. I have never been able, I cannot now, and I do not expect I will ever be able to see any difference between the basic policies of the Conservative party and those of the Liberal party. I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). It was a speech well prepared and well delivered; The hon. member went into a little bit of history with respect to the Liberal party and also the Conservative party, but I am sure when we come to analyse the situation we will discover that as far as basic policy is concerned, there is no difference. While I congratulate him on his speech I was disappointed that before concluding he did not lay down specifically the policy of the socialist party, but perhaps he may have thought it was not too necessary to do so for I am sure we all recognize that their basic policy is one of nationalization, in other words socialization.

Now I would like to reinforce my remarks with respect to the question of whether or not there is any difference between the two major parties in Canada. Let me refer for just one moment to their activities in this house. I do not want to deal with little things but sometimes the little things are an indication of the pulse of the situation. I have been here a good many years and I suppose some of us have become quite used to the way questions are asked and answered in this house. We certainly became accustomed to the way in which Liberal cabinet ministers for years were in the habit of answering questions, but I really expected that when there was a change in government there would perhaps be a change in some of the parliamentary activities of the government side of the house. But we have seen no changes. As a first illustration let me point out that on October 15, the day after parliament opened, I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) which I thought was extremely important in respect to the economic affairs of this country as they affect the people of Canada. As reported at page 17 of Hansard of that date I asked my question in the following words:

> May I direct a question to the Prime Minister or the leader of the house. Would the government initiate a move to have a special parliamentary committee or even the banking and commerce committee meet to pursue a study of the reasons for the inflationary trend and the continued increase in the cost of living?

I knew that such a committee existed in the United States Congress which met not long ago and did admirable work on this subject. I asked this question because we were opening another parliament with a new government in power and because I thought the cost of living, the question of inflation and the economic conditions of the country were serious enough to warrant a thorough examination by this parliament. I thought surely another government of a different stripe would now perhaps take up the cudgels of battle, institute such a study and bring forward something of value from such an investigation. But what happened? The Prime Minister answered my question in these words:

> Mr. Speaker, this government, as always, will give consideration to anything for the benefit of the Canadian people.

Well now, what an answer! This was the same kind of answer some of us had been listening to for 22 years from the government that was in office before the present government came to power. That was the answer I received to what I regard—and I think all would regard—as a highly important question. Immediately following that, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) rose to his feet and is reported in Hansard as saying:

> I desire to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry I was not able to give him notice. I should like to ask him, what is the difference between the attitude of the majority of your members now as compared to the attitude shown by the previous government and to which your members strenuously objected?

Now, notice the Prime Minister's answer:

> It is not a question of attitude; it is a question of parliamentary rights.

There was, of course, an immediate chorus of "Oh, oh" by some hon. members and the hon. member for Vancouver East spoke again:

> As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister if he does not find there is a difference when the shoe is on the other foot?

The Prime Minister made no reply to this. The point is that I had raised a question which is a matter of concern to every citizen of Canada and the government has deliberately closed its eyes to the subject through the Prime Minister brushing it off and saying, "As ever, we are always interested in anything that is for the benefit of the people of Canada." Over and over again we have heard that type of answer given to questions that have been asked by hon. members. I do not know if I was actually amazed by it, but just the other day when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was asked a question he said in effect, "You must remember that we inherited this situation from the previous government". What sort of answer is that?

Let me ask one question. If the present government did inherit the existing situation, what of it anyway? Did it not ask to inherit it? Of course it did, and the members of the government got just what they asked for.

Perhaps they did not really expect to get it, but they did. Just like Little Jack Horner, the Prime Minister put in his thumb and he pulled out a plum. Well, the members of the government got what they asked for and now they complain because they are faced with the problems that confront this country.

Hon. members will recall the nursery rhyme that begins, "Little Jack Horner sat in a corner". I thought perhaps I could write a little poem that would be apropos of the situation in which the government finds itself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hansell: I started off by writing, "Little John Horner sat in a corner," and had to use the word "corner" because I could not find a word to rhyme with "Diefenbaker". I thought I might have to give up the effort but finally I did sketch this:

Little John "Dief",
Sat with a beef,
Discussing political pie.

He put in his thumb
And pulled a fast one
And said, "What a good boy am I!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You are wasting your time here; the new Ogden Nash.

Mr. Hansell: The members of the present government asked to inherit the existing situation. They pulled out the plum and now they complain. Even today when questions were asked on orders of the day one government member said he was not aware that the situation today was any worse than it was under the previous government. What an answer! Another government member referred to the fact that he had not brought his crystal ball with him. Hope, hope, hope. He used words to the effect that he was looking into his crystal ball and hoping. That is not what the people of Canada want and that is not what we in this chamber want.

In answer to a question addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) he said he was only following the method used by the former minister of national health and welfare in answering the question put to him. We do not want him to follow that method. We want the members of the present government to come up with something new, fresh and dynamic, something that will appeal to the people of Canada as a solution to the grave problems confronting the country today.

Any government which inherits a situation and in a five-month period allows that situation to grow worse must be held responsible for it. Let us now hear any reference to the present government inheriting bad policies or existing situations; that is a confession of failure. The government has inherited something with which it does not know how to deal.

An hon. Member: They can be disinherited if they want to be.

Mr. Hansell: We in this corner of the house have always contended that the difficulties which governments have to face from time to time are the result of a faulty financial policy and unless those faults are corrected we will never be able to solve those difficulties. That is the reason this group is here, the reason we are returned almost every election, and that is the reason each one of us was returned this election with four additional members.

Let me turn now to the subamendment proposed by the leader of the Social Credit party in Canada.

Mr. McCleave: Put it in poetry.

Mr. Hansell: Well, not this time. I do not think very fast. It requires a great deal of time for me to write even a small jingle like the one I read. I do not have the brains that some people have. I have to think for a long time before I can compose poetry.

This is the subamendment proposed to this house by my leader the other day:

> However, we regret that there is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that it is the government's intention to ask parliament to lay down a scientific, modern financial policy for Canada that will guide the Bank of Canada in its operations, bring about a speedy end to the present tight-money policy, and effectively check the ever-rising cost of living.

That amendment, Mr. Speaker, was devised by reason of the fact that unless there is a change in basic financial policy, the problems that confront Canada today will never, never be solved. But when this amendment was moved and the leader of the Social Credit party made his speech, which was the basis of the amendment, of course, he had to criticize the policy laid down by the Bank of Canada. In criticizing the policy laid down by the Bank of Canada he mentioned the name of the governor of the Bank of Canada. Well, well, what happened? We find that the Financial Post, one of Canada's leading orthodox financial papers, began to take my leader to task. It was not very ably done, either, but it was done in a way that should be far beneath the dignity of one of Canada's leading financial papers. This is what one of the editors said. I do not know what editor wrote this article; I wish I knew so that I could name him as I am reading this editorial. This is from the Financial Post of October 26:

> Mr. Low's contribution to the current Ottawa debate was a lecture on finance. It was an eye-opener to any who fondly believe that experience has cured the Crediters of their delusions.
> First, Mr. Low did the cowardly and inexcusable.—

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Hansell: I continue:

> —He launched a violent personal attack on the governor of the Bank of Canada, a civil servant unable to defend himself.

Let me stop there just for a moment. Who said that any official of the Bank of Canada was unable to defend himself? Who said that? That is news to me. If the governor of the Bank of Canada, or any official of the Bank of Canada, wants to explain anything he can do so; for it seems to me that he is in a position even far above government.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Is he not responsible to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Hansell: To answer my hon. friend's question, perhaps in some sort of legal sense he is, but in practice the Minister of Finance is responsible to him.

Mr. Pearson: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hansell: Now, then, any time the officials of the Bank of Canada want to come before the banking and commerce committee of parliament all they have to do is to make a request and the banking and commerce committee will hear them. What is this nonsense about a civil servant unable to defend himself? I continue with the editorial:

> Second, Mr. Low again revealed the Social Credit plan, if it achieved national power, to have that party run the extremely complex and delicate machinery of our monetary system.
> There is a strong element of farce in Mr. Low's impudence about the bank governor. Mr. Coyne happens to be an extremely able person, unusually versed in the difficult art and science of central banking.

Well, perhaps he is; but no one is above criticism by this parliament, for we, as members of parliament, represent the people of Canada.

I am not going to take the time to read the whole editorial but farther along we find this:

> The Social Crediters—quacks of the economic world—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hansell: Thanks for the applause; we appreciate that. I am going to say this: the world in its present state was not brought there by anyone in his right mind. I continue with the editorial:

> The Social Crediters—quacks of the economic world—claim to have discovered that the monetary system is nothing but a nefarious plot to fleece the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member but there is a rule against reading extracts from newspapers which relate to debates earlier in the session, and I should like to refer the hon. member to that rule which is citation 264 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition. I should like to read a bit of it:

> It is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they:—

Then there are a number of subheadings:

> (a) refer to other debates during the same session—
> (c) contain unparliamentary expressions, as no language can be heard in quotation if it would be disorderly if spoken;
> (d) refer to, comment on, or deny anything said by a member;
> (e) allude to debates in the other house of parliament.

The extract comments on what an hon. member said earlier in the session and it seems to me it does contravene the rule.

Mr. Hansell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the hon. member could have risen on a question of privilege but this, to my mind, is extremely important because it takes the leader of the Social Credit party to task for what he said.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want the hon. member to understand me to say he cannot refer to it, but to read these extracts from the paper is contrary to practice.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Speaker, I will bow to your ruling because I think I have covered that part of the editorial which refers to the Social Credit party. I had not thought of the rule before. If I had I would not have read the article. However, there is another part of the article which does not refer to my leader, or what he said, and it is quite striking in contrast. It says:

> This was seriously the belief of William Aberhart, the Alberta buffoon, who arrived in politics via evangelism of the kind that goes in for predicting the end of the world. If the banks could pull unlimited "money" out of a hat, argued Bible Bill, so could the government; and he offered to pay everybody $25 a month, for nothing, forever. What's more, he assured the citizens no taxation of any kind would be needed to finance the handout.
> Such were the preposterous economics of William Aberhart, a man of unfathomable ignorance on all economic questions.

The reason I read that, Mr. Speaker, is simply this. You see the illogic of the editorial writer here. He scores the leader of the Social Credit group because he criticized the governor of the Bank of Canada, and he did not criticize him at all. He simply criticized the Governor's policy; but then, the editorial writer criticizes the leader of the Social Credit group for criticizing a man who the editor says could not speak in his own defence. And yet, what does the editor do but criticize a man who is long since dead, who cannot possibly come back from the dead to defend himself? Yet, he calls him a buffoon who arrived in politics via evangelism, of the kind that goes in for predicting the end of the world.

Some of us are mighty glad that a man like the late William Aberhart existed and put forth to the people of this country an appraisal of the present economic system that bleeds people almost to economic death through burdensome debt and taxation when at the same time our vast abundance of production is going to waste. Some of us are mighty glad that such a man existed, a man who, believe me, Mr. Speaker, has started a movement in Canada that will never die. Let the editor of the Financial Post know that. Let him know that he cannot kill this movement by that sort of wetting of pens and knocking out editorials on a typewriter. No sir, it will take more than that. Some of us are going to battle this thing through if we have to do it with our last breath.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. Long before the leader of the Social Credit party criticized the policy of the Bank of Canada, Hugh John Flemming, the premier of New Brunswick, did so. Let me emphasize that I am talking about the premier of New Brunswick. We do not want to get these men confused. I am talking about Hugh John Flemming, not Donald Methuen Fleming. Remember that. What did the premier of New Brunswick say in a speech delivered before the Atlantic provinces economic council long before the Social Credit leader made his speech in the house? Let me read from the Fundy Fisherman of October 9. For the sake of brevity I will break into the middle of the article but I am not altering the context. First, the article had this to say:

The colossal failure of the program—

The reference is to the program of the Bank of Canada.

—was illustrated on every hand—

They meant in Mr. Flemming's speech.

—and while the program was introduced inflation as defined by the Bank of Canada was non-existent, it has since become apparent that it is being created. After gathering force slowly over a period of months, the slump brought about by the Bank of Canada's policy was gaining in impact and was striking with particular force at the Atlantic provinces.

That is from the news item in the Fundy Fisherman. Now, what did Hugh John Flemming say when he spoke to the Atlantic provinces economic council? Of course, I cannot read his whole speech. That would not be permitted and I recognize it is against the rules to read too much, but here are certain portions of his speech:

The purpose of this policy, as stated, has been to check the pressure of a strong over-all demand on a scarce supply of resources. But, I submit, where is the scarcity? According to the dominion bureau of statistics, retail trade in the Atlantic provinces in the first six months of this year failed to attain the level achieved in 1956.

In the country as a whole the tight money policy has not been successful in checking the rise in prices. In September, 1956, the consumer price index stood at 119. Today is stands at 122.6. The odd thing about the present situation is that prices go on rising and yet there are very few commodities in short supply. Indeed, over recent months, business inventories have been accumulating at quite a rapid rate. The only thing which appears to be in really short supply is money, particularly east of Montreal.

In the United States the rather odd monetary and economic situation we appear to be in has resulted in the United States senate finance committee holding hearings on the financial condition of the United States. These hearings began on June 18 and continued in high gear during July and August. The whole banking and financial structure of the United States is being subjected to a most careful and searching scrutiny.

I think that something similar should be under way in Canada. After all, our monetary system has not been given a really careful examination since the royal commission on banking and currency was appointed in 1933, almost a quarter of a century ago.

Hugh John Flemming said almost the same thing as the leader of the Social Credit party said in this house some days ago. But did the Financial Post criticize him? Oh no, they did not.

An hon. Member: He was a Conservative.

Mr. Hansell: Yes, he was a Conservative and perhaps will turn out to be a good one. Do not think I have any idea that there are no good Conservatives in the ranks. There are some good ones. I have known them for a long time. I have known the Prime Minister, he is a fine man. The Minister of Finance is a fine gentleman, and you who have recently come here are mighty fine boys; yes sir, mighty fine boys. But after you have been here as long as some of us you will find how impotent you are.

You talk about the supremacy of parliament. What a laugh! All you can do in parliament is holler your head off like I am doing now. Whether or not anybody takes any notice of it, I do not know. You talk about the supremacy of parliament. That is really a joke. You talk about the supremacy of the government. That is another joke because there is a government stronger than the government that governs the government. Yes, sir. I am telling you that unless they change their financial policies they will never solve the problems of this country.

Through the policy announced by the Bank of Canada not very long ago tight money has caused inflation. It has been accentuated. Instead of safeguarding the stability of the economy of the country they are running the country into the red, into the ground, and the people of the country are thereby suffering. The evidence is that of a disastrous failure. The cost of living continues to rise and that affects each and every individual man, woman and child within the borders of this fair land. Inventories of goods are continually growing, with less money to buy goods. If that is not the result of economic policy, what is it the result of? Let the government say what it is the result of.

Surplus production? Yes sir, wheat is spilling over and is being dumped in the open on the prairies while the world starves. If that is not the result of economic policy, what is it the result of? There is an abundance lying unused all over the ground. Warehouses are beginning to become overstocked while part of the world continues to exist on the lowest possible subsistence level, with some nations on the verge of starvation. Unemployment is growing. In Canada it has now reached approximately 200,000. I read a speech that the Prime Minister made somewhere the other day in which he mentioned the number of people who are employed in Canada. That does not give the picture at all. How many people are unemployed in Canada and why are they unemployed? If it is not because of a faulty economic system, tell me what it is, for every time there is an increase in unemployment there is a decrease in income and the people therefore are that much farther short of the necessary money to buy the vast production of goods from our farms and from our factories.

Municipalities are labouring under crushing financial burdens. That is the picture. Housing construction is gradually petering out. Agriculture which produces the foodstuffs of the nation and which could supply foodstuffs for other starving nations is struggling for its economic existence today. We read today of the terrific drop in the price of hogs and of the stock market falling continually.

What is responsible for that, if it is not economic policy? I challenge the Minister of Finance. I notice he is not in his seat at the moment; I do not know where he is, but it does not matter very much. Perhaps he is running around trying to find markets or perhaps he is running around trying to convince somebody that he is right. I wish he would convince himself that there is something wrong, tackle that which is wrong and rectify it in an attempt to make Canada what it ought to be.

I say that this economic situation we are witnessing today is the direct and disastrous result of a policy that has been laid down by the Bank of Canada. The Prime Minister is in his seat now. I do not know whether or not he intends to take the opportunity of participating in this debate, but I wish he would say whether or not he opposes this policy that has been laid down by the Bank of Canada or is this government working hand in glove with that policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Hansell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it is a good time for me to stop anyway. I did want to say something about what the Social Crediters propose to do, but thank you for reminding me, and I will do that some other time. We hope we will have plenty of opportunities.

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings of pride and humility that I rise today to address this honourable house. I rise with pride because I have been privileged to participate in two historical events; one of which was the opening of this parliament by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, and the other is that a Canadian of Chinese extraction now sits in this house for the first time. It is, however, with humility that I speak because I am aware of the tremendous responsibilities which rest upon me, not only as the first member of my race to sit in this house, but also to my constituents who have thought at all times of me only as a Canadian.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members will feel some pride from my presence in this house as being one example of the kind of democracy that does exist in this country. I, personally, derive deep satisfaction from being here because hon. members may not know that, less than 10 years ago, Canadians of Chinese extraction did not have the provincial franchise in British Columbia. I understand that British Columbia was the only province that had that restriction. Since that time British Columbia has made amends so admirably that to that province must now go the credit for sending a Canadian Chinese to the House of Commons. While those of us in the Conservative party will take particular pleasure in my election, which election will refute any argument that this party has been discriminatory to certain groups in the past, I am sure that hon. members on both sides will rejoice that we in this country have a system of government that does not extol its virtues by fanfare, but by expressing our belief in our principles by deeds and not words.

I wish to record also at this time, Mr. Speaker, my deep respect for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent). At the conclusion of the second day's sitting in this house, and because I was anxious to meet a man who is generally acknowledged to be a great Canadian, I went over and introduced myself to the right hon. gentleman, and he acknowledged my intrusion in the most gracious and courteous terms for which he has long been noted. I trust that when I leave this house, I shall leave with the same esteem and high regard in which all hon. members hold the right hon. gentleman.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak very briefly about a few things which have particular application to my constituency of Vancouver Centre. As you know, my constituency contains almost all of the downtown business and financial districts of the city of Vancouver. There is in it, among others, a very large group of clerical workers. Many of these workers, as indeed workers in all occupations, have at one time or another suffered severe financial loss through illness. It is with a view to alleviating that problem that I urge the government to give some consideration to extending the benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. A great number of people have contributed to this fund, and while the possibility of their being out of work is always present, I think the chances of their losing time through illness is much greater. Yet, while they are absent from work through illness, they cannot apply for benefits. I feel that the fund is now sufficiently established whereby benefits could be extended without making further demands on the government. These remarks, of course, are qualified in the light of the proposed national health legislation which this government plans to implement.

My next proposal has to do with the university students. I am sure that all hon. members will agree that, in this particular age, young people should be encouraged to attend universities. As one who, among others, attended university under rather straitened financial circumstances, I urge the government to give some consideration to exempting from income tax the summer earnings of university students. I think the loss in income to the government from this source would be quite small, while the benefit to be derived by this particular class of people would far outweigh the temporary loss of income to this government.

Next, Mr. Speaker, the position of retired civil servants, as indeed the position of all senior citizens, veterans and disabled persons, will always occupy and have my prime interest. I shall defer my remarks on this subject because of the legislation which has been introduced. But I should like to suggest that an inquiry be made into this entire field of social legislation, which would examine old age pensions, health and unemployment insurance. I know this proposal is not new, but I submit that the object of this inquiry should be to insure that the administration of these overlapping agencies should be performed as efficiently as possible, rather than to see how much more should be granted at the present time.

My final proposal has to do with the immigration of Chinese nationals. My constituency contains the largest group of Chinese in Canada. Out of some 44,000, British Columbia has 10,000; Vancouver alone has approximately 7,000. But lest some hon. members think that I was elected only through the efforts of the Chinese community, may I explain that, if every one of the registered Chinese voters had voted against me, I still would have been elected with a substantial majority. I mention this point merely to emphasize a fact that most hon. members will appreciate, and that is that no person can be elected through the efforts of any one minority group. His support must be much broader.

I speak on this matter of immigration, Mr. Speaker, not because I advocate an influx of Chinese, but because I believe that we owe a moral obligation to the early Chinese immigrants who are now naturalized Canadian citizens. Many of our early immigrants had to pay a head tax ranging from $100 to $500 in order to enter Canada, and they were not allowed to bring their wives or families with them. They were thus, for a long time, deprived of a normal home life. Regulations were relaxed in 1947 which permitted, within limits, the entry into Canada of dependants of Chinese who were naturalized Canadian citizens. There is still, however, a number of families whose members are separated.

Without going into technical details, it is my intention to urge the government to expedite the entry into Canada of these dependants, so that the members of the Chinese community who have contributed so much to the development of this country, and who have been denied a home life for so long, may be able to enjoy a measure of happiness during the last few years before they pass on. The number of persons so affected is not large. I am informed by a responsible source that even if the government were to relax the regulations today to cover this category the total number affected would be approximately 6,000. Hon. members will appreciate the fact that this number is insignificant compared to immigration from other parts of the world. There is no danger whatsoever of a great influx. Once these people have been taken care of, then of course the immigration regulations will be applied alike to all immigrants, no matter from which country they come.

The early Chinese immigrants referred to Canada as Gun Shan, or Golden Mountain, because of the opportunities which this country held out to them. Material success came only to a very few. Nevertheless, these people still held to their faith in Canada. Today, these same people feel that their faith has been completely vindicated because they have seen the election of a Canadian Chinese to the House of Commons. They feel that whatever opportunities they missed, their children will now have.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, while I am dealing with the question of Chinese immigration, I think that it is appropriate that I say something about the rise of the Asiatic countries and their influence on world politics. It is not my intention to speak about things connected with government policy because I know that there are other hon. members who are more competent than I to speak on those matters. But because of my background, Mr. Speaker, and because of my ability to speak the language, I feel that in this particular field I can perhaps interpret to hon. members the thinking and the psychology of some of the Asian peoples. My remarks are therefore directed more at the approach which we might take towards these peoples.

Mr. Speaker, we have today two opposing forces, namely the eastern bloc, composed of Russia and her satellites, and the western bloc consisting of the commonwealth and the United States. There is no doubt that in the commonwealth we have a strong political unit; but counteracting this commonwealth group is the new Afro-Asian group which has emerged, and it is with this group that I wish to deal.

I think that a suitable starting point for my remarks would be to relate to you, Mr. Speaker, a comment made by one of the Asian delegates to the legal committee of the United Nations. In discussing international law this learned gentleman said that international law should now begin to feel the influence and to receive the impact of the Asian point of view. To me, Mr. Speaker, that was a most significant statement because international law is a comparatively new field of law and is still in its evolutionary stage.

We have today two great systems of law, the British common law system and the system of law based on the Code Napoleon. The leaders of Asia, in a great number of cases, have received their legal training from either one of these two schools and they have tried to evolve a system which would have particular application to their countries. Some of these countries, in their newly found situations of freedom and independence, are now aggressively asserting their status. We all appreciate that in the assertion of their status many of them are still feeling their way and that, owing to certain periods in their history, they are sensitive to the manner of the approach which certain western countries make to them. Because of this sensitivity, I suggest that our approach to these countries might be different than to those countries which have had and enjoyed a longer period of political development.

To the oriental peoples particularly, Mr. Speaker, an approach based on reasoned argument, and presented with sympathy and courtesy rather than with an air of condescension or superiority is, I suggest, the kind of approach that will produce the desired effect of gaining their trust and co-operation. Because Canada is not, and will never be, I do not think, a major power, and because of our treatment of minority groups generally, this is the kind of approach that Canada can make without any sense of embarrassment or guilt. I suggest that Canada, by acting as the spokesman for the more highly developed countries, and because of our support for the United Nations and its agencies, can with facility and confidence explore new channels in order to help the west acquire the friendship and trust of this Afro-Asian bloc.

This Afro-Asian bloc, which today consists of 22 countries, is in great need of economic and social development. But many of these 22 countries, some of which are part of the commonwealth, are being assiduously wooed by Russia. Russia is extending to those countries aid in every conceivable form, from economic to military. I suggest that Canada, because of our unique position in world affairs established through a record and reputation of non-exploitation, is in a position to take the lead in contacting these nations, on behalf of the western countries, for the purpose of extending a more vigorous policy of economic and social aid.

I say "a more vigorous policy" because since world war II it has always been Russia which has created para-military situations which leave the western countries gasping and desperately striving to recover. Why should we, with our superior resources and professed political sophistication, always be in a position where we are caught short? At one time we thought that the west was at least superior in technical achievements. That belief has now been dramatically shattered.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the satellite countries in Europe are beyond our reach and influence. They are too closely under the control of Russia. And so we have the Afro-Asian bloc as the remaining alternative on which to expend our efforts. The economic and military potential of this group staggers the imagination, and we in Canada with our 16 million people might do worse than to be on friendly terms with this bloc of countries which comprise almost a billion of the world's population. I believe that most of these countries want peace and that they need a period for economic development. Because of our limited resources, Canada alone cannot begin an overly ambitious program of economic aid to these countries. Nevertheless, the suggestion put forward recently that Canada take the lead in research into the use of commercial atomic power for these underdeveloped countries is one which to me merits serious consideration, notwithstanding some of the financial aspects involved.

The role which I have suggested for Canada insofar as the Afro-Asian bloc is concerned may not always be an easy one, because some of these countries, imbued with a newly-forged sense of nationalism and being jealous of their status, have unfortunately gone to the other extreme in order to impress upon the world their new position.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that probably none of the things that I have said are new; in fact all of what I have said may present difficulties of which others more qualified than myself are aware. Nevertheless, it is because I feel so strongly and so very deeply about the impact of the Far East upon world politics, and because I am concerned that we do not lose any more of the traditional friendship which this country has enjoyed with these countries that I say these things today, knowing full well that hon. members are already giving full consideration to these problems. Nevertheless, I, like other young people, have reserved the right to my generation of repeating the obvious with all the courage we can muster. I know that I share with other hon. members the great faith that we have in the future of Canada, and I hope that in time we may see Canada emerge, not only as a great country but also as a great humanitarian nation.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at the very beginning of my remarks in this debate I wish to congratulate very sincerely the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat and who made such a very outstanding maiden speech which was received with sympathy and interest by all members of this house. I am also conscious as I rise to speak this afternoon that we, like all the other people of Canada, are celebrating a very important remembrance day and that if we do not interrupt the proceedings of the house in order to mark this occasion it is because we feel that the discharge of our parliamentary duties is more in line with the spirit of this day.

I wish also to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, upon your accession to your new post. Although I have been carrying these congratulations now for some weeks I feel they can be made with more substance today because the confident expectation expressed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) as to the outcome of your election has been well justified by the good humour and firmness with which you have guided us so far this session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: While I am on this sincere and complimentary theme I wish also to congratulate the mover, Mr. Smith (Calgary South) and seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the speech in reply for the very splendid manner in which they acquitted themselves in the first days of our sittings.

I cannot forego the proper courtesy of noting the presence in this house of nine new members from the province of Nova Scotia who are sitting here for the first time but, I regret to say, on the government side of the house. Hon. members who were present during the last parliamentary session will recall that there were 10 government supporters in the house and two members of the opposition. Well in this parliament there are also 10 supporters of the government and two members of the opposition and although I wish to congratulate these new members from Nova Scotia upon their election to this house I certainly cannot extend to them the same congratulations upon the location in which they find themselves this afternoon.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, just before the dinner recess I was referring to the rather obvious change that had occurred since the last parliament in the composition of the representation from the province of Nova Scotia. I believe that such a transformation could only represent a shift in public opinion in the maritime provinces and indeed in the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in particular. I among others believe that the chief reason for this particular shift in opinion had to do with the skill with which the leader of the Conservative party had seized upon one of the chief and obvious problems of the Atlantic area. That was the fact that over the years the Atlantic provinces had not showed the same rate of economic development as other parts of the country. It is a problem that had affected the thinking of this parliament during my stay here and one which had been discussed often on various resolutions.

The present Progressive Conservative leader and his candidates, as I say, capitalized upon this particular and legitimate grievance and presented a commitment to the people of the Atlantic area prior to the election of June 10. I believe this commitment can be best represented as a promise to initiate in the Atlantic area an economic program, indeed an economic revolution, which would have as its chief effects, first of all the closing of the gaps between the incomes received by citizens of Nova Scotia and the rest of Canada, the establishment of new industries, and finally the creation of new employment opportunities which would halt the movement of population from the maritimes to the rest of Canada. These are effects which are honestly desired by all the citizens of the maritime provinces, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his candidates prior to the election chose as the particular instrument that would carry forward these desirable objectives the now famous Atlantic resolutions. I am happy to know that there are at least two persons in Canada who are still interested in the Atlantic resolutions; namely, the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) and the premier of Nova Scotia because we have had references made to these resolutions by the hon. member for Westmorland and on Saturday the premier of Nova Scotia also made a reference to these resolutions to which I will refer later.

However, I think it should be stated that these resolutions were received with great interest and great appeal by the citizens of the maritimes. Indeed, the Atlantic Advocate in its issue of July 1957 states that the seven Atlantic resolutions are of prime significance. The editor states:

> The seven "Atlantic resolutions" are of prime significance. They constituted the seven-point election manifesto of the Progressive Conservative candidates in the four Atlantic provinces and were endorsed in their main principles by Mr. Diefenbaker.

Indeed, so seriously did the editor of the Atlantic Advocate take the Atlantic resolutions that he suggested a new portfolio should be created in the Canadian government. He thought the problems of shepherding the resolutions through the labyrinths of Ottawa would be so formidable that the example set by the British government in having a special minister for Scotland should be applied to the four Atlantic provinces and we should have a secretary of state for the Atlantic provinces. Well, I trust if such a portfolio is established the minister who holds it will have greater success than has his counterpart in Scotland in bringing the needs of Scotland to the attention of the British parliament.

Mr. MacEwan: You leave that up to us.

Mr. MacEachen: I must say that we have had no indication that the government intends to establish such a portfolio, but we do have a presentiment of the attitude of the government thus far on the importance of these Atlantic resolutions. One of the Atlantic resolutions was the establishment of a Canadian coastguard. On October 29, 1957, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) addressed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) asking him the intentions of the government with respect to a Canadian coastguard. I am sure that hon. members will recall the answer given by the minister which is to be found at page 549 of Hansard of that date. It will be clear to any person who has read the answer that up to the present the government has made no decision to change the arrangements made by the previous Liberal administration with reference to a Canadian coastal service of this type. That was the first intimation we had of the fate of the Atlantic resolutions.

Some days ago, on October 31, the hon. member for Westmorland addressed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) having to do with a further resolution calling for special fiscal considerations to encourage the location of industries in the Atlantic provinces. I believe the answer of the Minister of Finance deserves greater attention than the answer on the previous resolution. The answer of the Minister of Finance will be found on page 603 of Hansard of that date. Suffice it to say that the hon. member for Westmorland asked the minister:

> What special fiscal consideration is being given to private enterprises to encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic area?

In reply, the Minister of Finance stated:

> —if my hon. friend will be a little more specific I think I may be able to give him a more satisfactory answer.

Well, it was clear to me, as it must have been to every other hon. member in the house, that the Minister of Finance did not even recognize this particular question as having to do with an extremely important resolution put forward by his party in the Atlantic provinces. Later, in an effort to recover whatever ground had been lost in his first answer, the Minister of Finance recommended to the hon. member for Westmorland that he consider the measures in the speech from the throne on this particular subject. Here, of course, he committed an even greater error because there is no reference whatsoever in the speech from the throne to any fiscal considerations that might be given to the encouragement of industry in the Atlantic provinces.

The Atlantic resolutions also contained a special inducement that policies would be introduced to encourage the decentralization of industry in the Atlantic provinces, calling for more crown corporations for that area and a bigger share of defence expenditures. The hon. member for Westmorland, with I think exemplary interest in his constituents, again addressed a question to the Prime Minister who replied that when action had been taken on this particular subject it would be announced to the house.

There we have, Mr. Speaker, the early reception of the government to this major manifesto in the Atlantic provinces. I trust that the later reception of the government will be more in line with the statement made by the premier of Nova Scotia last Saturday at Halifax when addressing a very important gathering of his fellow Conservatives. As reported in today's issue of the Halifax Chronicle Herald the premier of Nova Scotia said that all the Atlantic resolutions would be put into force as soon as proper study had been given them and legislation was prepared.

The premier of Nova Scotia has given us in Halifax assurances on the subject of the Atlantic resolutions that we have not yet received from the government of Canada. I trust that the very optimistic tones sounded by the premier in Halifax will be simply a forecast of a categorical statement by the Prime Minister that all the resolutions that were adopted as part of his manifesto will be put into force, and I will even accept the qualification of the premier of Nova Scotia, after proper study and when they can be put into legislative form.

So much for the Atlantic resolutions; I want to refer for a moment to the references made in the speech from the throne to development in the Atlantic provinces. The speech from the throne states that:

> As an immediate start upon a program of more extensive development in the Atlantic provinces, you will be asked to authorize, in joint action with the provincial governments, the creation of facilities for the production and transmission of cheaper electric power in those provinces.

This particular policy has been heralded by members opposite as a new deal for the Atlantic provinces. Well, we welcome this particular deal. It is not a new deal; it is simply a repetition of the deal that was offered to the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the budget of Mr. Harris last spring. In so far as this particular proposition will contain the merit of the previous proposal, then it certainly should be endorsed by this house and by the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I think the elements of the previous proposal are worthy of repetition. The power proposal was first based, not upon suggestions made in this house by any hon. member but by a study that had been undertaken into the prospects of thermal power development in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by Professor Christie of Johns Hopkins University, who is regarded as one of the outstanding experts on thermal power in North America.

As a matter of fact, Professor Christie made three or four small reports on this subject and—

Mr. MacInnis: Quote what your leader said.

Mr. MacEachen: I am ready to deal with what my leader said on the subject and I hope the honourable member will be able to deal with what his leader said on these particular subjects.

Mr. MacEwan: You were in office 22 years; what did you do?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this particular proposal had the germ of a very important idea because it called for the unification of the power systems of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick under a central authority, and later that particular intention was expected to be carried out through handing over this particular work to the Northern Canada Company. The federal government, in its first proposal, also promised to pay the costs of transmission lines and to pay the cost of building those power plants in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

There was then another very particular problem that arose in connection with this power development in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and is the particular problem which the hon. member for Cape Breton South mentioned a moment ago. There were two interests involved in this power proposal. First of all was the guarantee of the use of the cheapest fuel because it was absolutely necessary that power be generated and distributed in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by the cheapest possible fuel. That was in line with the needs of the domestic and industrial consumers in those two provinces.

The second interest, of course, was the interest of the Nova Scotia coal industry. It was an absolute necessity that this power be generated from coal because of the need of expanding markets for the Nova Scotia coal industry. Now, there appears to be a conflict of interests between these two desirable objectives; but that apparent conflict, Mr. Speaker, was overcome by the previous government in its commitment to this house and to the country that coal would be used in those power plants. It was further stated that in any particular market situation that coal was more expensive than the cheapest competing fuel, coal would be assisted to the extent that it could be used in those power plants.

There was never any question that coal would not be used in those plants, and there was never any question that the preceding government had not given a commitment that if necessary coal would be assisted in order to compete with the cheapest possible fuel.

In the course of the campaign, as is customary, there were many charges and counter-charges made on this particular power proposal and I hope that what was said in the campaign will not permit this very important project to be lost in political bickering. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to place before the house the statements of the Prime Minister with respect to subventions on coal.

In the speech from the throne and later in his first speech made in the debate the Prime Minister said that his government was prepared to pay subventions on the movement of coal for power purposes in the maritime provinces. I suggest that the statements made by the Prime Minister in the course of the campaign have no other interpretation than that his government would be prepared to pay subventions, not only on the movement of coal for power purposes but on the movement of coal for all purposes in the Atlantic provinces, and that is why I feel it is so important to place on record the remarks of the Prime Minister on the subject of subventions on coal.

The Prime Minister spoke at a number of places and made commitments on this subject. He spoke at New Glasgow and Amherst in Nova Scotia and at Minto in New Brunswick. At New Glasgow on April 30, at a meeting at which Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia had previously asked for an extension of coal subventions, the leader of the Conservative party said, and I quote from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of May 1, 1957:

> If we form a government I tell you, Mr. Premier, there will be subventions for coal in these provinces, according to your request and to the demands of the people.

Hon. members will note there is no qualification about coal for power purposes.

Mr. MacInnis: Quote from Premier Stanfield the same evening.

Mr. MacEachen: Again at Amherst the Prime Minister reverted to the same subject to point out that the subventions on coal paid by the federal government were nothing more than a subsidy which Nova Scotians already had in order to compete with the central provinces, and he is reported by the newspaper I just mentioned as saying:

> What we want is coal subventions within the province.

In the light of this statement, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is perfectly clear that the people of Nova Scotia had the right to expect that the new government would provide these subventions for all purposes and without delay. Indeed, the people of the province of New Brunswick were led to the same expectation because the Prime Minister, speaking in Minto, said:

> There should and must be a subvention on coal transported within these provinces for power purposes.

Later, speaking in Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 3, the Prime Minister stated:

> There is something strangely peculiar about the fact that Nova Scotia coal delivered in New Brunswick is higher in price than it is when delivered in Montreal. There is a need, and—

These are the significant words.

> —we undertake to supply that need by providing a subvention on maritime coal.

Not just a subvention, Mr. Speaker, on coal to be used for generating power but on all coal moving in the maritime provinces. The government has had an opportunity in the representation of the estimates to the house to widen the basis of the subvention for coal but no action has yet been taken either on the movement of coal for power purposes or on the movement of coal for all purposes. Just recently, in reply to a question of mine, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) told us that no order in council and no new rate had been established for the movement of coal in the maritime provinces. This is a very important matter and could have been dealt with quickly by the new government without delaying and waiting for an opportunity for legislation because no legislation is required. If there is any hon. member opposite—

Mr. Harkness: The old government had 22 years to deal with it and did not do anything.

Mr. Pickersgill: We never made any such promise.

Mr. MacEachen: If there is any hon. member opposite who feels I have been unfair to the Prime Minister in asserting that his commitment was for all coal and not just for coal for power, then I refer that hon. gentleman to a statement made in Halifax on Saturday by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) who stated, among other things, that the development of the coal industry through subventions on coal moving in the maritimes would be put into effect. On page 6 of the same newspaper he is quoted as having made the same statement.

Mind you, as the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys knows, there is a good deal of difference in making a promise to put a subvention on the movement of coal for power purposes because in Nova Scotia each year about 400,000 tons of coal are moved for thermal power purposes in that province.

Mr. MacEwan: And there will be more very soon.

Mr. MacEachen: However, for all coal moved within the Atlantic provinces there is represented 55 per cent of the total coal produced in Nova Scotia which reaches about 3 million tons, and if we accept the suggested figure of $4 a ton for the per ton rate that is attributed to Premier Flemming of New Brunswick, it means the difference between about $1 million or $1.5 million and $12 million. Therefore the government should really make up its mind as to when, first of all, it will clarify this situation so far as the people of Nova Scotia are concerned, and once clarification is made it should use the power which it now has under legislation to put these promises made to the coal industry of Nova Scotia into effect without further delay.

Mr. MacInnis: Suppose you tell us what you know about the coal industry. Let us hear what you know about the coal industry.

Mr. MacEachen: I want to assure my hon. friends from Nova Scotia that their interruptions on this subject have no particular bearing either on the facts stated or the readiness with which their Prime Minister will carry out the pledges made to the people of Nova Scotia, some of which have likely resulted in their presence in the house tonight.

Mr. Harkness: You are merely complaining that we did not do in 17 weeks more than you did in 22 years.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): You promised in 17 hours more than we promised in 17 years.

Mr. Pearson: The record sounds pretty bad.

An hon. Member: Don't get your notes mixed up.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word now about the problem of trade because it is another problem concerning which the Conservative party has made quite a number of statements and about which there is much to be said by a member from the province of Nova Scotia. We know that the problem of trade has been under discussion in the house not only at this session but at preceding sessions. The most revolutionary statement made on trade, however, was made by the Prime Minister in which he suggested radical surgery and the shift of 15 per cent of Canadian purchases from the United States to the United Kingdom. The only reason I mention this statement is that later in the development of the subject the British chancellor of the exchequer suggested that consideration be given to establishing a free trade area between Canada and the United Kingdom.

The people of the province of Nova Scotia have always been interested in trade and our interest has never reached a concrete realization at any time since prior to confederation. As a matter of fact, the Minister of National Revenue, speaking in Halifax last Saturday, stated that it was the intention of his government to restore the conditions that existed prior to confederation. We know that the economic conditions which accounted for the prosperity of Nova Scotia prior to confederation and, indeed, up to 1878, were based upon free trade. Those of us who study history know as well that it was the members from the maritime provinces, particularly the Liberal members, who prevented the introduction of a national policy of tariff protection until 1878. We know that 1878 signalized the introduction of that tariff policy and the gradual and eventual debilitation of Nova Scotia trade based on world-wide commerce.

We know as well that there was a great effort made in 1911 by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to re-establish a system of free trade between Canada and the United States. That period is still fresh in the minds of Nova Scotians, because again we lost our search for free trade. Today we are still waiting for the present Prime Minister to seize upon the opportunity presented to him by the British chancellor of the exchequer to establish free trade with the United Kingdom for Nova Scotia and all of Canada. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister, speaking in Sydney just before the election, stated that the election of a Progressive Conservative government in Canada would mean a return to those policies which kept the maritimes in the forefront decades ago. Well, if the Prime Minister is really honest and sincere, as I think he is, he will realize that the only way that this condition can be restored is to take a courageous and statesmanlike attitude and really go forward with the British in establishing a system of free trade.

Before I came here, Mr. Speaker, I travelled through my constituency of Inverness-Richmond. In every part of that constituency I saw the lumber industry languishing because the British purchasers did not have the dollars with which to buy the products of Nova Scotia. If we had a system of free trade with Britain, the British manufacturers would be able to earn the dollars in Canada that would enable them to buy the goods of the primary producers in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and the provinces on the west coast of Canada. I do not believe this proposal, which means so much to my province, should have been received by the shocked silence of the Minister of Finance, but should have been accepted as a whole-hearted response of the British government to assist the Prime Minister in his efforts not only to raise the standards in Nova Scotia but also to divert 15 per cent of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, on behalf of the people of Vancouver-Kingsway, to take part in this debate. Vancouver-Kingsway is an area in southeast Vancouver, an urban area. The people come from many diverse national origins and cultures. They are thrifty and industrious, and I venture to say there is a higher percentage of home owners in Vancouver-Kingsway than in any other part of Canada. Vancouver, itself, is probably the most rapidly growing city in Canada. It might almost be called the Shangri-la of Canada, attracting people from all the other provinces to its climate, scenery and sunshine although I must admit that at this time of the year the liquid sunshine is more usual than the ordinary kind.

Vancouver may be said to be right at the centre of the crossroads of the world. Hon. members should not smile at that suggestion. It is half way between London and the orient; half way between Moscow and Latin America; half way between Ketchikan, Alaska and Tia Juana, Mexico; in fact, Vancouver is so central many important people say that they simply cannot afford to live anywhere else.

In taking part in a broad debate such as this, Mr. Speaker, in which so much can be said, I feel a little bit like the mosquito in a nudist camp; I don't know where to begin. However, begin I must, and I am speaking in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). What does that amendment do? The amendment welcomes the promises in the speech from the throne of increases in social security measures, as well as the promised tax relief. Certainly, we in this corner of the house are not going to be guilty of any obstruction. We want to see these measures on the statute books as quickly as possible. We are glad that the breakdown of parties in this house means that the long-forgotten people of Canada have to be given some consideration in so far as social security measures are concerned. We are pleased that neither of the old parties can, in this parliament at any rate, hide behind a large majority and disregard the needs of the people.

We do regret, however, that the increases proposed for old age pensioners, the blind, the disabled and the veterans, have not gone far enough to protect these people who are caught in the spiral of rising living costs. The other day the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea), speaking on behalf of the Conservative party, charged the Liberals with bribing the electorate in the last election by promises of pension increases that amounted to no more than the cost of two cups of coffee per day. After all that campaign oratory and all those promises the Conservative mountain has now laboured and brought forth an increase equal only to the cost of three cups of coffee per day. Yet we have to be grateful for small mercies.

We cannot forget the glaring oversights in the speech from the throne. Surely, this new government cannot continue to turn a blind eye on the twin problems of inflation and unemployment. How can anyone say that in this year of grace 1957 Canada can afford the human wastage involved in rapidly increasing unemployment.

When speaking last Friday night the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said unemployment was, to use his words, "not generally serious" in Canada. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that it is very serious in British Columbia. The latest official figures we have show that in September of this year unemployment in British Columbia, the Pacific area, stood at 29,800. The previous year the figure for unemployment was about half of that amount. In other words, it is twice as bad this year. Unemployment, even on that scale, is a social crime. Indeed, as Talleyrand, the famous French diplomat said, it is worse than a crime, it is a blunder. Today we are locked in a struggle with the totalitarian regime of the soviets for the hearts and minds of the uncommitted millions of Africa and Asia; a struggle for moral as well as material ascendancy. Unemployment has become something the western world simply cannot afford.

Neither can we afford inflation. In the last two years rising prices, like a thief in the night, have stolen from the pay envelope, from the shopping budget, from the bank account, as much as $5.50 of every $100. Even the vaunted pension increase which government members are heralding so much of $15, that is the Liberal and Conservative increase combined, when judged even in the light of prices as recent as 1949 is not an increase of $15 at all but only $4.70. In other words, in terms of the purchasing power of a dollar a short eight years ago the federal pension we are offered today is only $44.70; that is certainly not a large increase. This process of inflation, therefore, is not comparable to any petty theft at all, it is grand larceny. While prices continue to rise, to date the government has blandly ignored the whole problem, as though hoping it will go away if only no one notices it.

I think it is worse than that, Mr. Speaker. I think the government are relying on the classic solution for inflation of the orthodox economists, the solution of the big business and financial interests of Bay street, Toronto, and the other centres. What is their solution for inflation? Their solution is that to cure inflation you must have a little unemployment. They feel that if only there is not too much money jingling in the pockets of ordinary Canadians, then prices will level off. I believe that cure, of course, is worse than the disease. It reminds me of the doctors of olden times whose cure for any human ailment was to apply a leech and draw off a pint or two of blood from the body of the unfortunate patient. But who can say, in the kind of world in which we live today, that we can afford the national hemorrhage involved in thousands of unemployed, numbering among them our most skilled and productive workers.

Finally, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) calls attention to the need for social and economic planning. I do not think the government should any longer be afraid of those two little words "social planning". Surely the cure for inflation is not to have a little bit of unemployment but to plan investment capital both to protect consumer prices on the one hand and to maintain employment on the other. If the big interests which for the last 10 years have made of Canada a profiteer's paradise are not prepared to co-ordinate production and distribution in accordance with the abilities and needs of the Canadian people, then it is high time that this parliament with a united voice reminded them of their duties as well as their privileges.

In listening to the debate on cash advances to prairie farmers I could not help but connect that matter with the need for social planning. It is not that I hold myself out as an expert on farm questions. I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar still gets a laugh when he recalls how 12 years ago when I saw a pile of straw on the prairies, I asked him why the farmers grew that. I think he told me that they grew it to hold up the heads of wheat. But while I am not a farm expert—in fact, far from it—I cannot help observing the folly of unplanned scarcity, free enterprise economics. Here is Canada with our granaries bulging with good foodstuffs and our people in need of many of the necessities for making a good life and there, for instance, is Japan hungry and anxious to exchange with us many of the goods which she can produce very well. Why can such an exchange not take place? Would not both countries be the richer for it? Of course they would. But how can that take place when here in Canada we are hard put to it to keep our own people at work, let alone receive goods from other countries.

The real issue surely must remain an issue between unplanned scarcity and planned abundance. I would therefore ask the government not to be afraid of those two little words in the amendment namely, "social planning". We wish them well in carrying out their responsibility to transact public business at this time. But they should be reminded that that is not only their right but their constitutional duty. There has been too much bantering talk from the government benches in this parliament about a snap election. Even the Prime Minister, when he gets into some small corner or other, likes to threaten the house darkly with the possibilities of an election, while his excited but uninformed supporters pound their desks behind him. The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), speaking in Toronto not long ago, said that the Conservative party was already engaged in a federal election campaign.

However, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada expect this government, like any other one, to carry out their constitutional duty, to forget electioneering politics and to attend to the transaction of that public business which they were elected to transact. Their constitutional responsibilities in this situation have been well defined by many authorities. Perhaps the foremost one is Canada's own Dr. Eugene Forsey who wrote a book entitled "The Royal Power of Dissolution". The opinion of the experts boils down to this.

Under the usages and conventions of our constitution, it is incumbent upon a government, including a minority government, to carry on with the transaction of public business unless they are defeated in the house or unless they meet obstruction in the house. This government, from what has been said, is not in sight of defeat in this house; and it could hardly be said that there has been any obstruction in the house. Indeed, all parties in the house have helped to see that their legislation has been quickly passed.

I therefore think it is well to remember that there is, in circumstances such as these, a constitutional duty to put the transaction of public business before the political expediency of the government party, even if it thinks it might gain political advantage from an early election. Not that we in this corner of the house—I think perhaps the hon. member opposite was going to say this —are concerned about an early appeal to the people. We are not boys to be frightened by gibes from the government benches. But nevertheless, loose talk about an election, and the kind of loose talk we have heard, seems to me to indicate that those who engage in it forget that this government, like any other one, was elected to transact public business and that as long as it can do so in this parliament, its duty is to carry on while this condition prevails.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): You will not vote for the amendment, then.

Mr. Coldwell: Page Arthur Meighen.

An hon. Member: On loose talk?

[Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mr. Coldwell: No; on the rights of parliament over a government regarding an election.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): In this debate reference has been made to something of great concern to British Columbia, namely the fabulous profits that have been reaped by the natural gas pipe line promoters. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar placed on Hansard the other day an indictment of these interests that should not fall on deaf ears anywhere in this house. But what has the Conservative party done after all the election promises, after the campaign oratory in which they promised to protect the people of Canada from those whom they described as "piratical profiteers and buccaneers"? Their answer has been to set up a royal commission, the last resort of a government which wants delay, delay, delay. Here is what the Financial Post says—and it is a paper which should be close to Conservative thinking—about that royal commission. In its issue of October 19, 1957 there is a story headed "Tory move picks gas out of current politics" and it is therein stated:

> Politically the move is being looked at with great interest. The Conservatives made a lot of noise in the recent session against Trans-Canada Pipe Lines in particular, but most of them now think that the pipe line deal was pretty good.
> By setting up the royal commission, which may take months in its investigation, the Tories effectively take the pipe line out of current politics, and they have an answer to the C.C.F. which is expected to move for nationalization of the whole line.

There it is, the time-honoured or rather time-dishonoured method of getting a government off the hook. But even worse in this case, it is a method of getting the pipe line profiteers off the hook. For that commission, with its wide terms of reference, will take at least 18 months, I would say, to complete its hearings and make its report. Then how long after that will it be before the government contemplates action? Well after the next election, I dare say, as hon. members opposite are no doubt thinking. But by that time it will be too late and the millions of dollars in illicit profits that have been made by these pipe line profiteers will have been built into the gas rates charged to the Canadian consumer.

All across Canada the story of profiteering in this public service has been the same. It has been a story of profiteering on a scale that would make the robber barons of 100 years ago wet their lips with envy. A recent issue of Time magazine stated that the tax-free capital gains netted by the promoters of Trans-Canada up to July 1 of this year were estimated at $300 million.

That amount, going into a few pockets taxfree, is almost three times what this house voted a week ago as an addition to the old age security legislation and in almost every province of Canada the story has been the same—Quebec natural gas, Alberta Trunk, northern Ontario—all stories of private killings at public expense. All, I should say with the exception of the province of Saskatchewan which at the local level at least made sure that this public service has been put under public ownership for the benefit and under the control of the people it serves.

My province of British Columbia is particularly concerned with this problem. The company which services us with natural gas is the Westcoast Transmission Company; that is a company which is substantially controlled by a giant United States firm called Sun-Ray Midwestern Oil; also holding a substantial interest of course is Mr. Frank McMahon, the man the Conservatives favoured to receive the rights on the trans-Canada pipe line just a year ago. Westcoast gathers natural gas across the Alberta border and in the British Columbia-Peace river area and brings it down to the coast by pipe line, some 650 miles, to Vancouver and to a United States outlet at Huntington and by a branch line into the interior of British Columbia.

I would simply like to present to the house a few of the hard facts of this operation. First Mr. Frank McMahon was given an option to purchase 155,000 shares of the company at five cents a share. Before the line was open his profit on that transaction amounted taxfree to $5,600,000.

Second, the same Frank McMahon was given an option to purchase 200,000 shares of the company's stock at $6, exercisable at any time up to 1960. Before the line had opened he had made another profit of $6 million on that.

Third, a United States investment firm and some other United States firms were given the same options as above and netted a taxfree capital gain of $23 million.

Fourth, a firm owned by the big United States company, El Paso Company was given an option to purchase Westcoast shares at $5 per share. The option covered 1,128,000 shares and that netted them a capital gain of $35 million.

Fifth, the total of these capital gains made by the promoters of Westcoast Transmission adds up to the grand sum of $69 million. Now British Columbia is, in resources, a wealthy province, but that figure which will be paid for by the consumers of natural gas in that province, namely $69 million, is almost as much as the province collects for a whole year from its sales tax of 5 per cent.

Sixth, the board of transport commissioners has jurisdiction over Westcoast Transmission which crosses the Alberta border. It is interprovincial and while the Pipe Lines Act passed by this parliament makes as yet no provision for the control and regulation of natural gas rates no doubt that power will be given to the board of transport commissioners. However, how do they go about fixing a fair return to Westcoast Transmission? It will have to be a fair return on capital which includes that $69 million of watered stock. I do not know how you could have a fair return on watered stock, but that will be the way it will end up.

Seventh, with respect to Westcoast Transmission Company this is the last hard fact I have to offer. This United States controlled firm has entered into a contract with United States distributors to sell natural gas across the line at 22 cents per thousand cubic feet while at the same time it is selling the same natural gas to its British Columbia distributor at 32 cents per thousand cubic feet.

An hon. Member: Canadian gas?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Canadian gas. So I call upon the government as a constructive and forthright act of statesmanship to issue a declaration forthwith under section 92, 10 (c) of the British North America Act declaring natural gas pipe lines in Canada to be works for the general advantage of Canada or the advantage of two or more provinces. That was one of the solutions: i.e. public ownership, advocated in this house by the Conservative party not a year ago. If they wish to redeem their promises of that time they will quickly transfer these companies into public services, of the people, by the people and for the people.

I was pleased that the throne speech mentioned a national development program to be carried out in co-operation with the provinces. Again that is a matter of concern to my own province which is a treasure house of potential mineral, timber and water resources. The speech from the throne mentioned the Columbia river development particularly and yet there have been two stumbling blocks. There have been negotiations going on with the United States authorities with respect to compensation for down stream benefits and there have been protracted negotiations with the British Columbia government as to the financing involved and the form the enterprise would take.

It is a great pity that we have heard of no progress in these negotiations with the United States authorities since May 20 of this year when the last conference at the ministerial level broke up without result. Surely Canada, in a matter of such concern to one of her provinces as this, should not be without some bargaining power in dealing with the United States authorities. In connection with the second matter I am sure the majority of the people in British Columbia think this enterprise should take the form of public hydro. It should hardly be necessary any longer in this house to defend public hydro as against private hydro. The success of the Ontario hydro commission and of the Tennessee Valley authority with its vast complex of irrigation, power, conservation and industrial development, have conclusively proved that public power is cheaper power and that public hydro is closer to the needs of the region and of the people it serves.

In my own province of British Columbia that is borne out very dramatically by the electricity rates we pay. In Manitoba with public hydro and scarce water resources the average cost per kilowatt hour is three-quarters of a cent while in British Columbia under private hydro and with lots of water resources we pay an average rate per kilowatt hour of 2.1 cents.

Mr. Hahn: How much is it under the British Columbia power commission?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): The power commission unfortunately under a free enterprise minded government has been starved and not allowed to operate or move into the rich areas where they would really have an opportunity to bring down the price of electricity.

Mr. Stefura: How much is it in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Saskatchewan rates are far below those in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: How about Alberta?

Another hon. Member: That is a good question.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): So we ask that the government proceed with this national development program as promised and I suggest it is one of the things that should be put upon the statute books and under way before this government thinks of holding an election.

There is another matter of importance to British Columbia under the heading of national development. North of the Peace river area lies the Rocky mountain trench. The people of Texas say that they carry out things in a big way; they do nothing on the scale on which it is done in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Smalltime operators.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): The British Columbia government has given a reserve with first rights out of that reserve to the Wenner-Gren interests, amounting I think to 71,000 square miles.

No TV give-away program can match that, and yet the federal government is involved and has a responsibility because the Peace river, of course, flows over the Alberta border and up into the Northwest Territories. Therefore I repeat again, let this national development program in co-operation with the provinces include the development of Peace river power if that is feasible from an engineering and financial standpoint at the present time. Concerning the question of whether or not it is feasible, let the engineers of the department of national resources give their opinion as well as those of the Wenner-Gren interests.

What is this Wenner-Gren foundation? Some kindly souls have suggested that it is a charitable or philanthropic organization. Of course it is nothing of the kind. Wenner-Gren himself was blacklisted in the last war for trading with the Nazi enemy. Much of the wealth he made which poured into British Columbia came from munitions produced in the last war. Fortunately for him, but unfortunately for the province of British Columbia, one of the three directors of Wenner-Gren in that province is a man who is also the head of the P.G.E. railway of the government of British Columbia and the financial wizard behind the Social Credit party there.

There should be no difficulty, Mr. Speaker, about the public financing of a hydro-electric development program that has been proved to be sound in an engineering way and in a financial way, and if this national development program means what I hope it means then we should move to help safeguard in co-operation with the provinces some of the equity of the people themselves in their natural resources.

I said earlier that we in this parliament have a heavy responsibility to legislate not only for the welfare but indeed for the safety of Canada. It would be madness to underestimate the scientific and technological progress of the soviet union in throwing artificial moons into the firmament, or to ignore their military and political implications. It is not so much that we need fear war itself. We can dare to hope that General Partridge in Colorado Springs will never have to push that button that will mean annihilation for victor and vanquished alike. But those who hold precious the rights of free discussion and inquiry can lose in ways other than war if the uncounted millions of Africa, Asia and the Middle East turn not to the west or the United Nations but to the east and to the soviet dictatorship.

How can the west safeguard its position? Not by piling up new and more dreadful weapons of war. Arms alone will not save us. What we must do is recreate our society as a model embodying the human ideals of equality, freedom and fellowship upon which the peoples of the world can look with inspiration and affection. We have a long way to go toward these ideals, away from the crass materialism, dollar worship and false values of a profit driven society. There will be no excuse for us if we fail to read the signposts and plot our direction accordingly.

In this connection I cannot help but be concerned about the remarks made by irregular members of the Conservative party in various parts of Canada who seem determined to tear down and dismantle national television and broadcasting under the C.B.C. They would turn it over to the hucksters. Mr. Speaker, there is no quicker way to debauch the mind and soul of a nation than by turning over to commercial advertising interests the control of broadcasting and television. It is not that the C.B.C. cannot be improved and brought closer to the communities it serves, but I would express the hope that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) who states that he is going to introduce legislation affecting the C.B.C. will give due consideration to the facts and recommendations contained in the Fowler report.

With that I conclude as I began, by urging the government to adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. It is certainly later than we think, and none too soon to awaken in our people a driving social purpose that will enable us to meet the dangers as well as the opportunities of the world in which we live.

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion for an address in reply to Her Majesty's speech from the throne, I would first of all like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a former member of parliament who is now deceased, Gordon F. Higgins, Q.C., O.B.E., whose death on October 13 last after a long illness came as a great shock to us in Newfoundland. He was the first member of this house for the constituency that I now so humbly represent. Mr. Higgins during his tenure of office from 1949 to 1953 was widely known and respected by members on both sides of the house and his voice, speaking on behalf of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders was a familiar sound in this chamber.

Gordon Higgins, like his father before him, played a very important role in Newfoundland politics. In 1946 he was elected to represent St. John's East at the national convention which was convened in St. John's by the British government to decide the political future of Newfoundland. He was, like many of us in Newfoundland, vigorously opposed to confederation, not in principle but in the way it was being brought about, and like many of his colleagues he advocated that if terms were to be negotiated with Canada these terms should be negotiated by our own elected government, between two sovereign states and not two political parties.

When the votes of the second referenda were tabulated and confederation with Canada won out by some 6,000 votes Mr. Higgins offered himself as a candidate to represent St. John's East at Ottawa. He did this because he felt that in the House of Commons he would have a chance to continue the fight for his beloved island home. Although he polled a good majority of the votes cast in the election of 1953 he was defeated by a split vote. From then on his health began to fail. His death came as a sad blow and I am sure that hon. members on both sides of the house who knew the late Mr. Higgins will join with me in extending deepest sympathy to his bereaved family.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Following in the footsteps of my illustrious predecessor on this side of the house I, too, intend to raise my voice—perhaps in humility—on behalf of my constituency and the people of Newfoundland generally.

Before continuing with my remarks I wish to join with hon. members who have preceded me in this debate in extending to the Speaker and to you, sir, congratulations on your elevations to the very important posts of Speaker and Deputy Speaker. I would also offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) for doing such an admirable job in moving and seconding the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne.

It was on August 3, in the year 1583, that Sir Humphrey Gilbert landed in St. John's with a charter from the first Elizabeth. A few days later, on August 5, in the same year, Gilbert made preparations on the site of what is now the Queen's beach in St. John's and which constitutes part of my constituency of St. John's East. At an appointed time he proceeded to this spot where his officers, masters of the fishing fleet and many local merchants were assembled—and remember, hon. members, this was in the year 1583—he then read his commission from Her Majesty, Elizabeth I, and after so reading his commission a piece of soil was dug on the spot and together with a twig were presented to Sir Humphrey as a symbol of English sovereignty over the new found land. Thus, sir, was established Britain's oldest colony. And today, in speaking on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of Her Majesty Elizabeth II I wish to affirm on behalf of Britain's oldest colony and Canada's youngest province her undying loyalty to Queen Elizabeth.

The province that I represent in this house, Mr. Speaker, together with my hon. colleague in the government and those hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, has been a partner in the Canadian federation for eight years. The success of this union has yet to be proven, sir, and no one expected otherwise. If we are to measure success in terms of geographical or financial advantages only, then, yes, has it been a comparative success. Geographically speaking, Canada is now one from sea to sea. But these things alone, sir, or together, cannot complete the picture.

Newfoundland came into confederation with no thought of being a junior province and least of all of being second-rate citizens. And, sir, in fairness to the government that I have the privilege to support, I wish to imply that such was not their intention. However the best intentions sometimes are not enough, and I must state here that the union of my province with the other nine provinces of this nation was perhaps founded on the best intentions. But governments, sir, like people, have their human failures and if I pursue a slightly critical theme at this time, Mr. Speaker, I pray the hon. members of this house will accept it in the spirit that it is offered; that it not be interpreted, sir, as bitterness on my part or on the part of the riding which I so humbly and proudly represent in this House of Commons.

Newfoundland, sir, in its turbulent and tragic history has gone through a series of misfortunes that would break the spirit of a lesser people; yes, suppression of even the barest minimum of human rights, the denial of personal freedom to a degree unknown in the western hemisphere and brutality of massive proportions; injustice, that was motivated by the horrible greed of merchants interested solely in reaping the rich harvest from the seas that ring our 6,000 miles of coastline.

[Mr. McGrath.]

It was in such an atmosphere, Mr. Speaker, that Newfoundland struggled for survival and hon. members will do well to remember that those conditions existed not in the 16th century, not in the 17th century, but in the 18th and 19th centuries. When the rest of North America was making glorious strides in all aspects of human endeavour military governors ordered gallows erected as symbols of fear in Newfoundland. When courts of justice in other parts of North America were serving the people with impartiality and fairness a man's hand was seared in Newfoundland with a red hot iron for stealing a sheep so that his family might eat. When the bill of rights was a historical document, and when the fathers of confederation laid down the course of action for this federation, Newfoundlanders were still struggling under the suppression of greedy merchants. Indeed, sir, it was unlawful for them to cultivate the soil of their adopted land.

May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to quote the way in which one impartial historian has put it:

> Modest and unpretentious as is its story, no student of history can set it aside without feeling strangely moved at the wonder of human pertinacity in creating from "a great ship" an amazing colony which, in spite of inherited weaknesses and economic disabilities, stands today as a great testimony to the power of a people to nullify Britain's greatest experiment in retarded colonization.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the historical misfortune of Newfoundland. If I strive a little harder or perhaps speak a little stronger or even urge a little more vehemently than most hon. members have done in their maiden speeches I do so, sir, with the knowledge that Newfoundland has not yet caught up; that even in 1957, eight years after confederation that was to solve all her problems, we still do not have sufficient hospital beds to meet the barest minimum requirements of our people. Our institutions are dangerously overcrowded, resulting in our people not getting the full advantages of the modern advances in medical science. Our communications are still pitifully inadequate, with many of our people still living in almost total isolation. Our schools, too, fall far short of the barest minimum requirements; and this, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the teacher shortage, I am sad to say, is one of the more serious problems we are faced with in Newfoundland today.

If I may be permitted to use Nova Scotia for comparison, in the province of Nova Scotia there are some 1,500 miles of paved highways while in the province of Newfoundland, which is more than twice the size of Nova Scotia, there are no such highways, only secondary roads which in most cases do not even measure up to the standards of secondary roads. After eight years of confederation and the relative prosperity which accrued to Newfoundland as a result of the second world war, one still cannot drive across the island of Newfoundland. The Canadian National Railways system, which operates the antiquated, narrow-gauge line, is still the only means of transportation from east to west, in spite of what Mr. Smallwood may have tried to convey to the contrary. And, Mr. Speaker, the folly of it all is that our fisheries, sir, which we have always taken pride in, and which form the backbone of our economy and which are basically our chief resource, have been grossly neglected.

In order to rectify this situation, Mr. Speaker, the present provincial government, no doubt with the best intentions, started on an ill-fated industrial development program which for the greater part I must reluctantly state has met with dismal failure.

Let me hasten to dispel the idea, Mr. Speaker, that my words might convey. Eight years of confederation have been of tremendous importance to Newfoundland. Indeed, rapid strides have been made in trying to catch up with the maritime provinces but we still have a long way to go, and our own provincial government confesses that we are still some 35 years behind the province of New Brunswick. I am convinced, sir, that the government I support will approach our problems realistically and will help Newfoundland find her way in the Canadian family.

There are many people, Mr. Speaker, who looked upon confederation as the immediate solution to all our problems. But, sir, I submit that the joining of two peoples is never that simple, and the original terms of union, which unfortunately have proven most inadequate, could never convey, much less find, a solution for the complex problems that arise in the struggle to belong to a greater economy, to become truly Canadian in every sense of the word, to share in the prosperity of a great nation.

All hon. members in this house with the exception of my Newfoundland colleagues—I stress the word "Newfoundland" and not those who would find in our hospitable shores political refuge—have been born Canadians. You know the heritage of Canada in its fullest meaning. Yes, indeed, you feel the pride of being a Canadian beat within your hearts. You glory in all that is great in the past and you look forward to a future that holds great promise. That is what is making this nation profoundly respected in the world today. I, sir, feel the same way but not quite as you do because in terms of being Canadian we are less than nine years old. There are some 425,000 new Canadians of the finest British stock who are still learning, still striving to understand what being truly Canadian is, and surely there is more to it than family allowances.

The people of my province are proud, perhaps stubbornly so, and if they cling to the past with one hand and grope for the present and the future that is most uncertain, they are not to be condemned. The past, sir, is their history, a history of a people struggling for survival against sometimes insurmountable odds. After eight years they are just beginning to grasp the true feeling, the real significance of belonging to a nation that is truly great. It is only now, Mr. Speaker, that our children are learning from their textbooks the greatness of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with its glorious history and the promise of an exciting future. These young Newfoundlanders when they come of age will, I pray, be truly Canadian just as the concept of union of our two countries becomes truly of age.

I am in this house, Mr. Speaker, to contribute what I can to the governing of Canada. My days here will be humbly dedicated to the principles of good government. But in contributing to the over-all picture I must of necessity be specific in my thinking. We in Newfoundland know little of the problems facing the wheat farmers in western Canada and until we have achieved that equality of opportunity which is ours by right of union we must of necessity confine ourselves to our own specific and peculiar problems.

In terms of comparison Newfoundland today is Canada's third largest market. If I may illustrate that point, just prior to confederation we imported from Canada $50 million of foodstuffs. Six years later our imports from the Canadian mainland were up to $200 million. The food we eat, the clothes we wear, the things we use to make life a little more pleasant, we buy from the Canadian mainland. That is why I feel that we too are important to the over-all economy of this nation, and that is why, sir, I am in this House of Commons.

My riding of St. John's East has many problems but they are so interwoven with the over-all problems facing my province that I must speak for the most part in general terms. Right now Newfoundlanders are faced with rising unemployment. Our fresh frozen fish industry has been hard hit by a falling demand, which coupled with the Jamaican situation has resulted in many fish plants having to close their doors with unemployment as the net result. As a result of these fish plants closing hundreds of our people are actually on relief.

Indeed, sir, the anti-inflationary policy of the previous government has resulted in construction, which contributes a great deal to the economy of a growing province, being down 50 per cent compared with last year, with unemployment as the net result. The problems besetting the pulp and paper industry, which are well known in Canada, are proving disastrous for Newfoundland. A serious reduction in the output of our two paper mills has also contributed to the widespread unemployment.

In other parts of Canada the depression of one industry can usually be absorbed by another industry, but this is not so in my province. In Newfoundland there are no other industries in spite of the policy of the present provincial government. With regard to mining, Newfoundland is barely holding its own, but here too there are disquieting rumblings from the United States that it must protect its own base metal industries with higher tariffs.

It is not a pretty picture I present to the house, Mr. Speaker, but were I to do otherwise I could not face my people for I would be guilty of fraud and deception. In Newfoundland today there are more than twice the number unemployed as there were at this time last year. The government must take grave note of this situation. Social security benefits—here I must interject how pleased we were to know that the government had brought in legislation to increase old age security benefits—were not intended to be the sole source of revenue for any Canadian. On the contrary, they were merely intended to augment. But, alas, in Newfoundland there is nothing to augment in many cases. As a matter of fact, many hundreds will be unable to receive unemployment insurance benefits because the available work during the past year was not sufficient to entitle them to benefits, and here we are only just approaching the height of seasonal unemployment.

I am particularly pleased to note the establishment of a greater number of unemployment insurance offices in Newfoundland. I believe that through this greater coverage the problem of unemployment will be greatly eased. During the coming winter months, I believe that this government, with all possible haste—and I know it will—must institute a program of action that will alleviate the desperate unemployment situation which is rapidly growing now in Canada as well as in Newfoundland.

In the fisheries of Newfoundland there lies our greatest promises for the future. The federal Department of Fisheries must concern itself more actively in the peculiar and varied problems of the Newfoundland fisheries. It must find a market for fish products, not only abroad but amongst Canadian consumers. It must help to provide a scientific approach so necessary to the actual procurement of fish and so necessary for better production and better marketing. Indeed, it was the proud boast of Premier Smallwood's government that he was going to take Newfoundlanders out of fishing boats and place them in new industries. Undoubtedly, his intentions were sincere. I submit, however, that this has proven to be the greatest folly. We in Newfoundland must unite, in conjunction with the government of Canada, to reverse this trend which is so obviously doing so much damage, and pursue a more vigorous and determined policy of fishery development.

In closing I should like, Mr. Speaker, to speak briefly on the transportation problems that beset Newfoundland and that are contributing to making our cost of living higher than that of any part of Canada, I repeat, higher than that of any other part of Canada. The Canadian National Railways system which operates in Newfoundland is not a gift from Canada. Hon. members should please bear this in mind. The Newfoundland Railway, with its rolling stock, its coastal fleet and its various other facilities, was handed over to the Canadian government to be operated by the Canadian National Railways system. I say this, sir, to dispel from the minds of hon. members the fact that Canadian National Railways is one of the benefits that have accrued to Newfoundland from union. As a matter of fact, today our railway system is little better than it was ten years ago. The only thing that has been added is the ill-fated and infamous William Carson.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Newfoundland is an island and until the trans-Canada highway is completed and the William Carson functions as she was intended, our highway is still the sea. I would, therefore, point out that we in Newfoundland, and particularly in eastern Newfoundland, are prayerfully awaiting word of the decision of the government on the proposed development of St. John's harbour. This development would mean that a greater volume of freight could be handled in St. John's at considerably less per ton. In due course, this would result in a decrease in the cost of living.

The revision of the terms of union of Newfoundland and Canada, as called for in clause 29 of the terms of union, is now in the hands of a royal commission. The findings of that royal commission will probably be tabled in the house within the next year. I would, therefore, ask hon. members to recall the importance of this report when it is tabled in this house, and to bear in mind that the final chapter in confederation, as visualized by the fathers of confederation, will not be written until Newfoundland's case is finally settled and Newfoundland is given her just dues. With your leave, sir, I would read to the house clause 29, which has been called Newfoundland's court of last resort:

> In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the government of Canada will appoint a royal commission within eight years from the date of union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that may be required by the government of the province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Here, sir, lies the hope, the dreams, the desires of 425,000 new Canadians of the finest British and Irish stock who want to be part of this nation but who do not intend to be second class citizens.

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, it seems I am running out of time. I wish to congratulate you on your appointment and the manner in which you have presided over the deliberations of this house to date. I should like also to extend my congratulations and good wishes to the chairman and vice-chairman of committees, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the members of his cabinet. My congratulations also should go to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) upon the manner in which he acquitted himself of his task.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault), for the manner in which he carried out his task.

I should also like to seize this opportunity of thanking the people of Stormont county for again showing their faith in me by sending me to this house. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to represent them as worthily as I can and with all means at my disposal.

The difficulties facing the people of my riding have increased in the last few months, particularly in the matter of unemployment. A great number of them are now jobless and afraid of the coming winter. We may therefore have some reason to feel concern for the business people and municipalities whose responsibility it will be to provide for the needs of those unemployed during the winter season.

The outlook is alarming, not only for the textile industry, the pulp and paper mills, but also for our farmers who make up thirty per cent of the people in my riding. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I propose to discuss these matters in my speech.

(Text):

I should like to bring to the attention of the government the disastrous hail and wind storm which caused such heavy losses to the farmers of Roxborough, Finch and Cambridge townships on July 3. In some cases they have had a total loss of their grain, hay and garden crops. The area of damage covered a considerable amount of land, about 3,542 acres. If one bears in mind the small size of eastern farms, one can imagine the number of people who were affected.

We are concerned with unemployment, and rightly so, but these farmers have put in hours of work, made an expenditure for seed and still find themselves without revenue. I believe some sort of legislation should be introduced to obviate the necessity of our primary producers being faced with such a problem again.

The county of Stormont is well known for its production of cheese, both for the quality and the quantity. Year after year our producers are bringing honour and recognition to the county of Stormont. A few weeks ago I attended a cheese producers' meeting and they were greatly concerned by reports that the provincial government was giving consideration to abandoning their cheese price support. The price support on cheese at present is carried by the federal government to the amount of 24 cents and by the province to the amount of 10 cents. This support permits the cheese board to borrow money to buy surplus stocks during the high production season and give better stabilization to year-round prices.

I must point out here that the government price support has not cost the provincial or federal governments much money to date. I hope that if the provincial government of Ontario decides to discontinue its support the federal government will accept the full responsibility of the price support which has been a source of reassurance and a guarantee of revenue for our cheese producers.

In the city of Cornwall we are concerned with the growing unemployment when we compare figures with those at the same time last year. We find that unemployment has risen considerably in the last two months, compared with figures for corresponding months last year, in spite of the fact that pipe line construction has given employment to a good number of our citizens.

I should like to draw the attention of the government to the conditions which exist in our textile industry, and I refer more particularly to the manufacturers of cotton and rayon goods. I believe that the government has a duty to take its stand on tariffs—

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform hon. members that it is now 9.45 p.m.

Mr. Lavigne: Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the house that I am extremely glad to announce that the textile strike in Cornwall has been settled.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but, it being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 38, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any sub-amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Low) which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Shall we proceed with this debate tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we intend to continue with this debate tomorrow.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

TRACADIE R.R. NO. 1, N.B.—TENDERS

Question No. 121—Mr. Robichaud:

1. When the rural route Tracadie R.R. No. 1 was introduced, were public tenders called?
2. If so, was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

ALLARDVILLE R.R. NO. 2, N.B.—TENDERS

Question No. 122—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Were public tenders called for the rural mail Allardville R.R. No. 2 from Allardville to Butte d'Or?
2. If so, was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 12, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

ATOMIC ENERGY

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF SCIENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister encourage and the government assist in arranging a broad international conference of scientists to discuss the dangers of thermonuclear war, as proposed in a letter signed by six of the Soviet union's outstanding scientists and quoted in the leading editorial of the New York Herald Tribune of November 8?

Is he aware that the proposal has been endorsed by the editor of the bulletin of the atomic scientists and approved by Mr. Cyrus Eaton, who arranged the Pugwash scientific conference last summer?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to do me the courtesy of sending me notice of his question, together with the editorial in the New York Herald Tribune, and also the observation thereon by Mr. Cyrus Eaton.

From a perusal of the editorial I conclude that the proposal made by the scientists of the U.S.S.R. was one outside of governmental consideration. Apparently a number of U.S.S.R. scientists suggested that it would be helpful if the atomic scientists of all countries and representatives of other disciplines, biologists, medical scientists, philosophers, economists, historians, sociologists and educators, could meet to express their weighty opinions in a broad international meeting of the most important representatives of science. Later on in the course of the letter these words appear:

> The danger which hangs over mankind because of the possibility of using atomic energy for war purposes is common to all countries independent of their political and economic systems.

There is nothing in any way to prevent such a meeting under the auspices of any of the nations in respect of which representation by scientists would take place. The basis of the meeting would be similar to the meeting convened in Pugwash, Nova Scotia, by Mr. Cyrus Eaton, at which representatives of various nations met and discussed international and scientific problems. This is not a conference for governments. It is one for scientists, and I would simply say that everything that can be done should be done to bring about peace in the world. If the scientists choose to meet I am sure there would certainly be every approval by the free nations. Further than that I cannot go at this time, for it is not a matter of national government consideration.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question. The point of my question was, will the government encourage and assist as far as its ability goes? I notice that Mr. Cyrus Eaton, in the article to which I referred and which I sent the Prime Minister, suggests that encouragement might be given by Canada and the conference might be held in Canada. The point of my question is, will the government encourage and to the extent that is possible assist in the organization of such a conference? I think we have scientists in Canada connected with the Chalk River project and the national research council who might be encouraged to join in organizing such a conference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, up to the present time there has been nothing official in this connection except for a reference in the press to a suggestion made by certain scientists of the U.S.S.R. I would not want to go further at this time until an invitation was actually received by Canadian scientists. I notice that Mr. Cyrus Eaton says that such a conference would probably be held in Canada, the West Indies or India. Then he goes on to say that perhaps Canada might be the place of meeting. Certainly there was no interference in any way by the government of Canada with Soviet scientists coming to Canada to the conference convened by Mr. Eaton, and subject to any eventualities in the meantime I am sure the same attitude should be exhibited by the government in reference to any bona fide effort being made by scientists to discuss the problems of today and arrive at some solution which would ensure coexistence and peace in the world.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF OUTER SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Transport, inasmuch as it may be that the international civil aviation organization would be involved. Is the Canadian government giving consideration to the desirability of seeking international conventions or agreements regarding the launching of satellites and space travel, in the hope that mankind's activities in outer space might be on a co-ordinated basis?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): We will certainly give the hon. member's question consideration and study.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Has anything been done with regard to this matter under the aegis of the international civil aviation organization as yet?

Mr. Hees: Not so far as I know.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—REPORTED POSTPONEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF POSTAL HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I read in a newspaper last Friday that the plans for the new post office headquarters building, which was to be built on Riverside drive, have been shelved indefinitely. The heading of the article is, "Tories Cancel Plans for New Post Office H.Q." I should like to know if that is right.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I am very sorry, but I did not hear the hon. member's question. I will take it as notice.

Mr. Gour: I will send the minister the article so that he may understand the question.

[Later:]

Mr. Gour: I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. Since he did not understand my question, will he read it and give me an answer now?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member wait until the question just asked has been disposed off?

Mr. Gour: I asked a question of the Minister of Public Works and he said he did not understand me. I sent my question to the minister, and he should be able to read it.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has taken the hon. member's question as notice, and it will be dealt with.

OTTAWA—REPORTED POSTPONEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF NATIONAL DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence; it is the same question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gour: I have read—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has put me on notice that he is asking the same question, and I must rule him out of order. If he is asking a different one he should have said so.

Mr. Gour: It is on the same subject but it is a different question. The Ottawa Journal reports that the Minister of National Defence has ruled out the possibility that construction of the pentagon is to begin this year. I should like to know whether or not that is true.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I should give the same answer as that given by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Gour: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that they like to put more people out of work. One hundred per cent more people are out of work just now, and this is what they want to do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he should not comment on the answer he has received, or the lack of an answer. Both these questions have been taken as notice, something which is the right of the minister.

OLIVER, B.C.—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, notice of which has been given.

As the present post office building in Oliver, British Columbia, is not large enough for the efficient handling of the mails, and as the fruit inspection offices and the Veterans' Land Act personnel are housed in very poor quarters, what plans have the government for an improvement of the existing situation? Is a new federal building for Oliver contemplated and, if so, when?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of this question. Consideration is being given to the erection of a public building in Oliver, but I am not in a position to say just when that can be done.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDER RESPECTING PRAYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and I do so with all due respect to your duties, Mr. Speaker, at the start of each sitting day. Would the government give consideration to the amending of the standing orders so that arrangements may be made to have clergymen of the various religious denominations read the prayers at the opening of each sitting day of the house, in order that all hon. members may have the opportunity of having at some time prayers read by a member of their own faith and in order that each religious denomination may be able to give the house its blessing?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the amending of the standing orders is a matter, of course, for the house. However, I think I speak for all hon. members when I say that while all of us recognize the abiding need for spiritual guidance, the system that has been in effect in our country since confederation does meet the need of hon. members without regard to their religious persuasion. The nature of the prayer that is made each day is comprehensive enough, and I think does meet in general the feelings, aspirations and desires of members as a whole.

While I appreciate the thought behind the question, I do not feel that any change should be made, although I might add this. I do believe that at a time of international trial and fear, the desires of the hon. member could be met, if parliament so desired, by the establishment of a room similar to that which was brought into being some years ago by the United States congress, a prayer room adjacent to parliament where law-givers, without regard to religious persuasion, might ask for that guidance which parliamentarians need today.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I should like to ask a supplementary question. I have often felt that there is one word in the prayer that might be changed for the better. We now pray that Her Gracious Majesty might overcome all her enemies. Would it not be more in keeping with the Prince of Peace if we prayed that she might win her enemies?

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—EQUIPMENT TO KEEP CHANNELS OPEN IN WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the experiments carried out by the Atlas Copco Company of Sweden to free water channels from freezing in winter, is such equipment being installed or considered to free the St. Lawrence seaway of ice and thereby keep ships passing in the winter?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to send me over this newspaper article. I see by it that the experiments have not yet been carried out but that they will be carried out in Sweden this winter. Quite naturally we shall be greatly interested to hear what are the results of those experiments, because anything that would keep the St. Lawrence seaway open during the wintertime at reasonable cost would naturally be highly interesting to this country.

CANCER

STATEMENT ON SURVEY ON RESULTS OF SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) asked whether my department was carrying out a study of the effects of tobacco as a possible cause of cancer. I would inform him that the epidemiology division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with the Department of Veterans Affairs, undertook an investigation two years ago to study further the relationship of residence, occupation and smoking habits to death from lung cancer and other selected causes.

Information has now been collected from a large group of persons and this is being carefully analysed. As this study is prospective in nature it is a long-term undertaking and it is not expected that conclusions will be available for some time.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIR AND WATER POLLUTION—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ACTION WITH RESPECT TO SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question concerning his statement yesterday in respect of air pollution by locomotives. Can the minister say what action is being taken in regard to air pollution by ships?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. The international joint commission has been making a study of this nuisance in the Detroit river and other boundary waters for some years. This study is now nearing completion, and standards covering smoke emission will then be issued to the various authorities having jurisdiction along the St. Lawrence system. This includes Toronto harbour which is, of course, for this purpose under the jurisdiction of the local authorities concerned.

It is hoped that the standards, when issued, will be enforced by the various authorities having jurisdiction and, if this is done, a forward step in dealing with this nuisance for the whole of the great lakes system will have been taken.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. If I understood the hon. member's question properly he was dealing with air pollution. Does the same statement apply to pollution of water, and is the study of the pollution of water extended to the international joint commission in the great lakes area as well?

Mr. Hees: It is my understanding that it is, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further supplementary question. Do I understand the minister to suggest that the Toronto harbour commission does not have power to regulate this problem within its own control?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker. If the former minister will read my answer I think he will see that I said the Toronto harbour commission has jurisdiction to carry out these measures itself.

Mr. Marler: So I should infer from the minister's answer that they already have power to regulate this problem?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Mr. Morton.]

Yesterday I addressed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as follows:

"—arising out of the answer of the Minister of Agriculture to the hon. member for Yorkton with regard to the serious drop in hog prices in western Canada. Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce now announce a new directive to western producers? I refer to the statement he made in Winnipeg suggesting to farmers that they go into livestock production, thereby using up a lot of surplus wheat.

My point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that the answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I did not suggest to anyone in Winnipeg or anywhere else that the farmers of western Canada should go into livestock production. If the hon. member would get his facts straight perhaps I could answer his question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not had the privilege of seeing the text of the speech which the Minister of Trade and Commerce made at the dairy council in Winnipeg, but I have here with me several editorials appearing in various newspapers in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member first said he was rising on a point of order and then revised it to a question of privilege. If it is a point of order referring to what transpired at question time yesterday it should have been raised then. If it is a question of privilege I fail to see as yet where there is any matter of the privilege of this house involved in what the hon. member is complaining about. If the hon. member has a question of privilege I wish he would state it.

Mr. McCullough: My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is this. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said if the hon. member would get his facts straight perhaps he could answer his question. I want to say that I am quite prepared to be corrected in my assumption of what the minister did say and, due to the importance of what he is taken to have said at the dairy council in Winnipeg, according to the various editorials, I would ask him to correct my assumption or misassumption and put the facts straight.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I just say this. I suggested to the hon. member that he should get his facts straight. He has now admitted that he has not read the text of my first class speech given to the dairy council in Winnipeg. He has just said that possibly there are corrections which should be made to editorials. I cannot keep up with the editorials across the country in order to do that.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to these first class speeches, how are we going to get the full text of them?

Mr. Churchill: Upon request. I will be glad to give one to my hon. friend, who similarly was confused by reports in the papers.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, I would suggest that the minister should distribute his first class speeches to all members of the house.

Mr. Churchill: It would improve your own speeches.

Some hon. Members: Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF RIVER PILOTS, KINGSTON MARINE DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. I have not given him notice of this question, but there is considerable publicity on the matter in this morning's paper so perhaps he could deal with it. I wonder if he is aware of the situation with reference to the Montreal-Kingston-Ottawa pilots, and also whether he has taken cognizance of the fact that the pilots have been advised that they will be fined and their districts probably abolished unless they return to work by Wednesday. I am asking now whether the minister has approved of this in his capacity as pilotage authority for Canada.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am meeting at four o'clock this afternoon with the pilots' committee for further discussions.

BRIDGES

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF HARBOUR PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the government consider the construction of a harbour bridge at the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, similar to the Angus L. Macdonald bridge in Halifax?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I will be glad to look into this question.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, November 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin what I have to say today by extending very sincere congratulations to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) upon the excellent form of the speech he delivered in the house last evening. I think there is no doubt that the hon. member caught the ear of the house, which I assume is one of the first objects of a good new member, and I hope that as time goes on the hon. member will continue to bring forward in this house the problems of the province of Newfoundland, about his concern for which I express no doubt; and I am sure he expresses no doubt about mine.

I am afraid, however, that I cannot congratulate the hon. member upon having caught the ear of the Prime Minister, because when the hon. member used that nasty word "unemployment", which no Tory backbencher is supposed to use, there was a frown on the face of the Prime Minister, and I could only conclude that the party whip had not got all the way around with the warning that this nasty word "unemployment", which the Liberals use to spread doom and gloom in the country, was not to be used by Tory backbenchers. But no doubt the hon. member will learn in time.

Now, sir, I think the hon. member for St. John's East in his zeal did rather exaggerate the situation in the province of Newfoundland. It is true that there is a good deal of unemployment there—more than twice as much as there was a year ago—and it is true that unless some steps are taken to improve that situation there will be a good deal more before the winter is out. That is a matter of proper concern to every member of this house, whatever province he happens to represent.

I suggest it would be better if the government, instead of suggesting that we should ignore the existence of unemployment, were to get busy and try to do some things which could be done, and done right away, to alleviate the unemployment situation. I do not think the hon. member for St. John's East will question my statement when I say that were it not for the building of two public buildings by the public works department and the building of a terminal at Torbay by the Department of Transport, projects undertaken by the previous government, there would be a good deal more unemployment at St. John's than there is at the present time.

I must say that I feel a little concerned on reading stories in the press recently that other public works are going to be cut out for reasons of economy. We all know that the former minister of finance, Mr. Harris, in preparing his estimates—in fact he told the house this—did cut down the public works projects that were put into the estimates for this year, because at that time the prospect for private construction in this country was very good.

Now, for some reason or other—and I am not going to suggest what the reason is—those prospects are not nearly as good today, and I do think it is very unwise on the part of the government to be cutting out any of those essential projects at this particular time when all of us have a proper concern about a tendency toward increased unemployment, which I do not intend to exaggerate.

I should also extend the customary congratulations to the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault). I think they both did very well, but I do not think anything I can say would add to the congratulations that others have extended to them. I will, however, Mr. Speaker, extend a special word of congratulations to you. Like my hon. friend from Inverness-Richmond, I can say this with the more assurance because it is rather long delayed. I confess, sir, that when the names of the ministers were announced on June 21 many of us were astonished that your name was not among them. It did seem to us that you had made a great mark in this house and in other places, and it did seem astounding that you should not have been in the ministry; but the loss to the government, I think, sir, has been a gain to parliament. I believe you have already demonstrated that your main concern is to be utterly impartial and, speaking for myself, I would never ask anything more of the Speaker.

I want to express my admiration of the Prime Minister's election campaign. I think it is well known to the house that I have had a reasonably close association with other prime ministers of this country for what is now 20 years, and I must say that when I looked at the schedule of the Prime Minister's election engagements I was horrified. I thought the hon. gentleman or his advisers had mistaken him for superman. I must say that I never expected him to get to the end of the course. For sheer endurance I think it was a terrific record, for which I cannot fail to express my admiration.

I would also like, sir, to express to the Prime Minister my own appreciation of the way in which he has preserved the amenities of his office outside the house. I think he has done that admirably and we have all appreciated it. In doing so I think he was following the example set by my right hon. leader and I would suggest, sir, that if the Prime Minister would follow that example in the house as well as outside, the whole tone and temper of the house might be even better.

I should also like to say that I personally feel the Prime Minister should be congratulated upon the excellent arrangements that were made for, and carried out during, the royal visit. I do not think they could have been improved upon. I certainly personally have no criticism, and I do not think anyone in this party has any criticism, of the Prime Minister for having delayed the opening of the house in order to have it opened by Her Majesty. As a matter of fact, sir, I think it would be very ill-becoming any member of the Liberal party to express any such criticism, because in delaying the opening the Prime Minister was simply carrying out, and carrying out admirably, the plans which were already made by the previous prime minister.

I would also like to say, sir, that it was a source of particular gratification to me personally that the Prime Minister went to Washington as the minister in attendance upon the Queen. It did seem to me that was the right and proper thing to do; but my mind, sir, went back 18 years, to the first time a Canadian prime minister attended in Washington and in the United States as the principal adviser to the Canadian sovereign—a prime minister also from Prince Albert—and I could not fail to remember, sir, that at that time there were many members of the Conservative party who were very critical of what Mr. Mackenzie King did. But it is interesting to see that after a generation's lag the Tories usually decide that what Liberals have done is right.

I think, sir, the right hon. gentleman who is the leader of our party did the right thing in taking the view he did, that the government should be given every opportunity to prepare itself for what is after all the most difficult task in this country; and there was, from the day the ministers took office until the opening of this house, almost not a breath of criticism of the ministers or of the government from members of the Liberal party. We felt the ministers were entitled to have time to find their feet, to learn their job; but we did expect that once they came here in parliament they would not expect any quarter, and they would not make any complaints if we treated them, after four months in which to get experience, in exactly the same way that other governments in the past have expected to be treated in a deliberative assembly.

I do want to say, sir—and I am afraid this will be in a rather more critical vein—something very briefly about the Prime Minister's cabinet making. I cannot express the same admiration for it as I can for some of the other activities of the Prime Minister. It has always been well understood in this country, except for one occasion, that the cabinet should reflect the federal principle, which is the basis of our constitution. Unless the cabinet accurately represents all the regions of this country, the distribution of the population and the distribution of interests within the country, it is going to be much more difficult to maintain that essential and basic unity without which this country cannot hope to survive and prosper as we want it to prosper. It seems to me, sir, that the present cabinet is almost as lopsided as the cabinet of 1917; not quite, but almost. A life-long student of Canadian political history said to me a few weeks ago:

> Canada extends from sea to sea but this new Tory government looks as though it extended from the Humber to the Don and from the lake shore to Eglinton.

Well, you know, sir, that is not really good enough. This government was going to bring in a new era in the Atlantic provinces. Look at them. In the province of Nova Scotia the Prime Minister won the greatest victory that any Tory leader has won since confederation and he won it, as the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) showed so well yesterday, because he painted a picture of the transformation that was going to take place in the Atlantic provinces, of which, after five months, there are no signs or even indications.

Mr. Nowlan: There are none so blind as those who will not see.

An hon. Member: What about the 22 years?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will come to the 22 years, and I would advise hon. gentlemen not to emphasize it so much; but after five months there is not the faintest sign of the transformation. What happened in Nova Scotia? In Nova Scotia we expected that the senior and experienced gentleman, who was obviously going to be in the cabinet, would at least have one of the main policy-making, or the main spending, portfolios, so he could help carry out those new policies. What did we get? We got, sir, the tax gatherer. The tax gatherer is good enough for Nova Scotia, and all the great spending departments are in the two rich provinces of Ontario and British Columbia.

But, sir, what concerns me even more is the treatment accorded to the province of Newfoundland. One would have thought, sir, that this province, still new in confederation as the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) pointed out last evening, would have been given rather special treatment and not the rather shabby treatment that in fact it was given. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne), who is a minister without portfolio in the present government, as hon. members know was a member of the sovereign parliament of a British dominion as early as 1924. He served in the cabinet of a British dominion. He served on the bench. He was, it seemed to us, the obvious person to be minister of justice. He was even a Rhodes scholar and he had every qualification that the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has, plus a great deal more experience. But what is he? A second-class minister. What do we conclude from that? Either that his leader thought there was something wrong with the hon. member for St. John's West or that he thought Newfoundland did not deserve first-class treatment.

An hon. Member: They never had it before.

Mr. Pickersgill: I expected that interruption, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister would not agree with it, because he flattered me all through the election campaign by exaggerating my importance in the previous government. I do not think anyone, even the hon. member for St. John's East, would question that I had some little influence in the affairs of this country in the last four years—

Mr. Churchill: How is your influence now?

Mr. Pickersgill: —and that some of that influence has done no harm to the province of Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: How did you get down to Newfoundland?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite willing to leave it to the people who have to vote for me, and if the hon. gentleman can get the kind of majority I had he will not have any reason to complain.

Mr. Churchill: How do you make them vote for you?

Mr. Fraser: How do you make them have to vote for you?

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to say something very briefly about the trade policy of the government. I am not going to attempt to traverse the ground already traversed by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). I want to speak on this subject primarily from the point of view of the Atlantic provinces. I do not think any of us was much concerned one way or the other when the Prime Minister went to London. I do not think we were much concerned when he said he had some scheme for increasing commonwealth trade, because everybody in his senses would like to increase commonwealth trade.

But our real worry began, sir, when the Prime Minister returned from London with this 15 per cent diversion which he apparently never discussed with the cabinet, which he rushed off to the press gallery and broadcast to the world, and about which we have never been able to find out anything more from that day to this. But what really worried us, and if the Prime Minister has any doubt about this I suggest he read the editorials in the Halifax Chronicle Herald, which is an independent newspaper—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, does the hon. gentleman suggest it is not an independent newspaper? If so, I will stand corrected.

An hon. Member: Notice how we ignore that one.

Mr. Pickersgill: No sober person in the Atlantic provinces could understand a proposal which deliberately suggested that we should take something away from the best customer we had, and that is what this proposal meant and nothing else. That we should expand commonwealth trade, yes; but that the Prime Minister of the country should set out deliberately to injure the exports of our best customer struck us as a very dangerous proposition indeed. We felt, and we have had evidence since, as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) pointed out the other day, that this 15 per cent proposal of the Prime Minister, this careless proposal as the hon. member for Algoma East described it, has strengthened all those protectionist interests in the United States which the previous government was able to counter, and on the whole counter very successfully. That apprehension is very widely felt, and I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was really right when he said in Washington that the Prime Minister did not mean 15 per cent, that it was only a figure of speech.

Mr. Fleming: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, sir, we have also been rather concerned about the cavalier attitude of the government—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no; the hon. gentleman is, as usual, misquoted by the press.

Mr. Fleming: Misquoted by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman might keep his temper and not blow his top.

Mr. Fleming: My temper is kept, but I would be obliged if my hon. friend would stick to fact and not fiction.

Mr. Harkness: There were no members of the press present at that meeting.

Mr. Pearson: There was a lot of talking afterward.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is sad that in all of us there seems to be some lack, and that the Creator left out a sense of humour when He created the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Churchill: What did He leave out in you?

Mr. Fleming: Did He leave a sense of veracity out of you?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest, sir, that the way the minister treated Mr. Thorneycroft's proposal was not the right way to treat it. I suggest that the veil of secrecy that has descended over the trade proposals made by this government and made to this government should be lifted, and that we should have the external affairs committee called at the earliest possible moment and have both hon. gentlemen's proposals investigated by that committee.

The minister said in the house the other day that his proposals at Mont Tremblant were secret because they were intergovernmental. They were nothing of the kind. They were proposals by the Canadian government, and there is no reason whatever why they should be secret unless the government itself wants to conceal them, which I suspect it does. We have never been told, either, what Mr. Thorneycroft's proposals are. We have read a lot of things in the Financial Post, which the hon. gentleman says never reports anything correctly.

Mr. Fleming: I did not say that either.

Mr. Pickersgill: Probably they are an approximation, but we should be told officially in the house what is in these proposals. As a parliament of freely elected representatives of the people we ought to be allowed to debate these proposals, and the best place to do that is in the external affairs committee.

Mr. Fleming: What is wrong with parliament?

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to go on to say something about another subject which is just as important to us in the Atlantic provinces and is also referred to in the speech from the throne. The speech from the throne refers to a meeting with leaders of provincial governments "to discuss fiscal relations and to seek better understanding and arrangement of many aspects of our public finances." This is a very vague expression, sir, but I assume it is intended to be a carrying out of the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election. I have looked at one or two of the things the Prime Minister is reported to have said on this subject during the election campaign, and I am going to take a few moments of the time of the house to quote one or two of them very briefly. On June 3 the Prime Minister is reported to have said at Cambridge, Nova Scotia:

> We will also provide the necessary machinery to enable applications for federal assistance to receive their proper consideration.

That surely does not mean that the premiers have to write and write again and spend two months trying to get answers to their letters.

> These things we will do and, in addition to that, we want to bring into effect a reasonable equality in confederation whereby there will be available to each of the provinces special adjustment grants in order to assure a reasonable degree of equality among the provinces of this country. To that end, we're going to call a dominion-provincial conference immediately after the election. . . .

I am not going to read the rest of that one. I want to read also briefly from what the Prime Minister is reported to have said at Three Rivers, as reported in the Gazette of June 5:

> The Conservative party will restore the true meaning of the British North America Act which guarantees the provinces freedom to carry out various spheres of activity allotted them under the constitution. We will not only make sure that the constitution is respected, but we will also make sure that the provinces and municipalities have sufficient money to do the job they are supposed to do. Having the power to do a certain job does not mean very much if you have not got the financial means to implement these powers.

It is no wonder the premier of Nova Scotia expressed the great expectations he did, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of October 27, before he received that very discouraging letter which the Prime Minister wrote on October 31 in which it was stated that nothing was going to be done at the conference in November; no proposals put before it; nothing definite, just talk.

That is precisely what I thought was going to happen; that is precisely what I said would happen when I was in Winnipeg on October 19, after having asked one or two questions in this house. I said the government intended, for as long as possible, to do absolutely nothing for the provinces and that when they were finally forced by pressure to do something they intended to short change the poorer provinces. I still believe that is their intention. If it is not I cannot understand why we in this parliament are not told what their proposals are.

We were told there would be a conference immediately after the election, not five months afterward. Surely there has been plenty of time for the government to consider this problem and formulate some views about it. One thing that has disturbed a good many of us who represent the poorer provinces of this country is that nowhere in the Prime Minister's campaign did he say that the additional payments he promised would maintain the equalization principle. I want to be fair. It is true the Prime Minister said that no province would lose anything it was receiving. He did say that the equalization which exists now would be maintained, but he did not say anywhere that the principle of equalization would be maintained in the subsequent grants. This is of the utmost importance. This is why one cannot escape the feeling that there is an intention on the part of the government to short change the other provinces in order to satisfy the demands of the premier of Ontario.

The premier of Ontario asked on the platforms, where he was accompanied by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, for another $100 million. I am going to be fair again, I hope, to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister never said he was going to give that. Indeed, I think he said in Saskatoon he had given no promise of any kind to the premier of Ontario. However, the premier of Ontario did ask for $100 million. I believe that in Toronto the other day he said he expected to get it. I made a calculation, as nearly as I could with the facts at my disposal, of what $100 for Ontario would mean under Mr. Harris' formula.

An hon. Member: You mean $100 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; $100; it is the same thing, if you just add a few more zeros. I thought it was simpler if I took $100 to Ontario and made a calculation as to what the other provinces would receive. Of course the figures are not final, but according to the figures that were published I made a calculation as to what the other provinces would get in additional revenues, without duplicate taxation. This calculation shows that for every $100 Ontario derives Quebec gets about $83.50; British Columbia almost $28; Alberta a little over $20; Saskatchewan a little over $16.50; Manitoba about $15.50; Nova Scotia about $12.75; New Brunswick a little over $10; Newfoundland about $7.75 and Prince Edward Island less than $2.

What this means is that for every $100 for Ontario all the other provinces now get approximately $195. In other words, Mr. Frost's $100 million, if the equalization principle were followed, would cost the treasury $295 million each year, according to the calculations that were made the last time any calculations were published. It may be that the figure is even higher, but it is certainly that high.

I do not think anyone would question, and I am sure the Prime Minister would not question, that during the campaign he led the people of the Atlantic provinces to expect that they were going to get something better than Mr. Harris' formula. Certainly that is the impression that was created in those speeches made by the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) suggested, indeed predicted, that the poorer provinces would get something worse, and I am afraid that apprehension is becoming more widespread amongst the poorer provinces as time goes on, and as this subject gets rolled over and rolled over.

Apparently we are going to have another Mont Tremblant conference here in Ottawa in November 25 and 26. Then the real conference will be put off until next year; it will be just like the problem of trade. Perhaps something will happen in the meantime so it can be put off again. I do not think the people in the Atlantic provinces are going to consider that is good enough, after having voted for this great new era the Tory government was going to introduce.

I am afraid that in the end the cheque that will have to be cashed, the draft that will have to be honoured, will be Mr. Frost's draft. Then there will not be enough money left for anyone else. I know the provincial treasurer of Ontario has suggested that all this money comes out of the taxpayers of Ontario anyway, and that any little scraps that fall from the rich man's table should be good enough for the rest of the country. To that, sir, I make the reply, and I make no apology for it, which Mr. Harris made in his budget speech. It is the position of the Liberal party, and I hope it will also be the position of hon. gentlemen opposite, but I fear it will not. Mr. Harris said these words:

> In his budget speech three weeks ago the provincial treasurer of Ontario referred briefly to the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements. I do not intend to re-argue this matter, but I do want to comment on two statements. The Ontario treasurer referred to the prospective federal surplus adding that "nearly half this large surplus comes from Ontario taxpayers", and later he said that the $155 million of tax equalization payments to the other provinces "will come to a large extent from Ontario taxpayers".
> My comment, Mr. Speaker, is that every dollar of federal revenue comes from Canadian taxpayers, and every dollar paid in stabilization or equalization payments is contributed by Canadian taxpayers.
> Canadians living in Ontario pay exactly the same rates of tax as are applicable to all other Canadians, and Canadians living in Ontario derive their incomes in considerable part, directly or indirectly, from consumers and producers in other parts of Canada, just as Canadians elsewhere may derive part of their incomes from business activity that takes place in Ontario.

No better illustration of the validity of what Mr. Harris said could have been given than was given by the hon. member for St. John's East. In his speech last night he pointed out that before confederation, only nine years ago, the imports of foodstuffs alone into Newfoundland from Canada amounted to about $50 million. For the last year for which we have any accurate figures —I cannot remember now what year the hon. gentleman mentioned, but it was a year or two ago—they had quadrupled. This is simply one of those evidences of what anyone who was brought up in Manitoba or anyone who represents Newfoundland has borne in upon him, namely that the incomes which are taxed in Ontario and in other areas like the city of Montreal, where business is concentrated, where we have the real centralization in this country, are earned all over Canada; and that if we are to have a united country in which all our citizens are to have anything approaching equal opportunities there is no other way in which to provide those opportunities as long as we retain our federal system—and I hope that will be forever—except by draining a part of those revenues into the federal treasury and distributing them relatively evenly across the whole country.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that I am wrong in my estimate of what the government's intentions are in this matter. I sincerely hope I have misjudged them. However, I am judging them in the only way in which it is possible for a member of the opposition to judge them, namely by the facts that appear on the record. As hon. gentlemen now sitting on the treasury benches used to point out, it is always difficult to divine what is in the minds of ministers. But may I say, Mr. Speaker, that never in the history of Canada has it been so difficult to divine what was in the minds of ministers or what their real intentions are as it has been since October 14, 1957. Already in this session we have been refused more information to which members of parliament are justly entitled than was refused in the whole 22 years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and with not the faintest vestige of any kind of excuse.

An hon. Member: How wrong can you be?

Mr. Harkness: That statement is as accurate as are most of the hon. gentleman's statements.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the 20 years I have been in Ottawa I cannot remember a single occasion on which the previous government had formulated a policy and refused to indicate their intentions. I can remember occasions, while they were still formulating policies, while they had been giving them the sage consideration which I commend to the Prime Minister before propositions are made, when they quite properly would not make any commitments about their intentions. But once a decision on those intentions has been reached, the idea that a minister can get up in the house and say, "That is a matter of government policy and you fellows on the other side are not entitled to know about it", is something new in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is something that has happened since the last election.

Mr. Hodgson: Do you think Mr. Howe is dead?

Mr. Pickersgill: We have had another complaint from the government side of the house, particularly from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), who apparently is trying to emulate me as an interjector.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: And I must say that he is fairly good at it.

Mr. Harkness: I assure the hon. member that I will take a better model.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was hoping my observation would bring about a reformation, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture, whose good nature is refreshing on the treasury benches, has said on several occasions—in fact as recently as last night and perhaps this morning—something about the 22 weeks. The Prime Minister also, in his opening speech in this debate, made a good deal of comment on the 22 weeks. He said my leader expected him to do as much in 22 weeks as the Liberals had done in 22 years. I can assure the Prime Minister and you, Mr. Speaker, that we have no such expectation at all. But when thinking about those 22 weeks a little bit one thought occurred to me. I remembered that on October 14—I do not know whether or not the Prime Minister picked this date purposely—1935, Mr. Mackenzie King won an election. Within four weeks of the date of the election—not within four weeks of the date the government took office but within four weeks of the date of the election—Mr. Mackenzie King's government had concluded with the United States a trade agreement which began to take us out of the depression. What has this government done not in four weeks but, as the Prime Minister said, in nearly 22 weeks?

Mr. Nowlan: The trade agreement was negotiated by R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who would not sign it. He was afraid to sign it.

Mr. Nowlan: He was like you; he expected to come back.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. J. A. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to extend my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Then again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my congratulations to you upon your elevation to the high office which you now hold. I feel confident that you will fulfil the duties of your office with impartiality and dignity. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that you will continue to keep that right eye of yours directed to the further end of this chamber, as you have done so well up to now.

Since the large percentage of those residing in the Battle River-Camrose federal riding which it is my privilege to represent are either directly or indirectly dependent upon agriculture for their livelihood, it is my intention this morning to spend some time discussing a few of the problems that face those who are engaged in the major industry to be found in Canada. There is no need of my pointing out to the house that those engaged in this industry now find themselves in a position where, while they represent 17 per cent of our national population, their share of the national income was slightly above 6.9 per cent. This points out that those engaged in agriculture from coast to coast, and not in any one regional area alone, have been unfairly treated throughout the last number of years.

The agricultural policy of the Social Credit group has been well known not only to the members of this house but to the people of Canada for many years. It has not been a policy that has been adjusted in order to satisfy the changing winds of public opinion. It is not a policy that was drafted to satisfy regional groups in Canada. It is a truly national policy, an agricultural policy for all those engaged in that industry. We as a group are extremely proud of the agricultural policy we have advocated down through the years in this house. It is for this reason that it is my intention this morning to again put this policy on record.

In order that the farmers of Canada may be afforded the opportunity to obtain a fair share of Canada's national income, we of the Social Credit group advocate the following agricultural program. First, low cost and long-term credits to farmers and cash advances against the grain stored on the farms. Second, we advocate a two price system for the sale of our farm products. Products would be sold at parity prices on the domestic market and those exported abroad would be sold at the best price obtainable, preferably under international agreement, but supported at levels which would assure that the aggregate sales in the domestic and export market would return to the farmer his fair share of the national income. Third, we advocate the continuation of the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency for wheat, oats and barley, with the inclusion of flax and rye to be handled under the jurisdiction of that board.

Fourth, we advocate an expansion of permanent storage for grain so the desired reserves of grain might be carried without interfering with the normal handling of the current crop. Fifth, an all-risk national crop insurance act along lines similar to the act now in operation in the United States of America. Sixth, the expansion of markets for farm products, (a) in the domestic market by equating the effective purchasing power with the aggregate of all prices of goods available for sale, and (b) externally by making surplus products available to all nations which are unable to obtain them through the normal channels of trade, by the acceptance of foreign currency, by barter deals and in the case of extreme distress by outright gifts.

We believe such a program is not merely in the interests of the Canadian farmer but that it is of vital concern to the people of Canada, in order to ensure that there will continue to be adequate supplies of food at fair prices, prices that bear a fair relationship to the prices of other commodities. Moreover, we feel it is of vital concern in helping to promote world peace.

[Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose).]

I wish to point out that we of this group are not prepared to admit that there is a surplus of food in the world today, and in this opinion we have the backing of outstanding leaders in Canada at this time. I have in my hand a short article taken from the Wheat Pool Budget of August 16, 1957. This article deals with surplus disposal as follows:

> To those who think that in agriculture we have arrived at a point where we need no longer expand I say to you this: I learned one lesson at the commonwealth conference in London—we must expand our agricultural development. With one quarter of the world's population going to bed hungry at night methods must be found to enable—
> I want to stress this.
> —to enable the distribution of our surpluses to the end that happiness will come to the peoples of the world.

These are not the comments of a wheat pool delegate from western Canada, nor of an official of the farmers' union in Alberta or the interprovincial farm union council. These are the words of the Prime Minister of Canada spoken to 11,000 people at the opening of the Saskatoon exhibition on July 22. We feel very definitely that the only reason we have a grain surplus in Canada today is because of faulty marketing and financial policies followed by the previous administration. No nation in the world should ever be plagued with surpluses of food when there are millions of hungry people in other areas.

We will admit that it is perhaps a wise policy to maintain in Canada a surplus of wheat and other foodstuffs at all times as a safeguard against possible crop failures and so forth, but we do not feel it is fair to expect the farmers of Canada to finance any great portion of such a surplus. It is a problem of national concern and should be financed by the nation as a whole.

The previous administration frowned upon such suggestions as the establishment of permanent storage facilities for our wheat and other grain. That same administration frowned upon the acceptance of sterling or the currency of other lands in return for agricultural products. It frowned upon barter deals and it frowned upon outright gifts of surpluses of food products to hungry nations. I sincerely hope that Her Majesty's present government will take a new look at this whole situation and attempt to place the food we have in surplus in Canada today into the mouths of those people who are hungry in other parts of the world.

During the last two sessions of parliament we in this house have spent considerable time discussing amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. During those discussions we of this group urged that several changes be made in this act. We suggested that the maximum loan granted be increased from $15,000 to $20,000; that the time of repayment of a loan be extended from 30 to 40 years; that the amount of the loan which is granted upon the appraised valuation be extended from 65 to 80 per cent. We urged that there be a reduction in the interest rates charged on such loans, and finally we asked that a more realistic approach be taken to the whole matter of appraising farm property in order to bring such appraisals in line with the present day values of such properties.

We still feel that the act as it now stands is of little or no use to a young man who wishes to enter the agricultural industry. During last summer I had several farmers come to me with their complaints of being unable to secure assistance from the Canadian farm loan board. The interprovincial farm union council in their brief submitted to the Prime Minister and his cabinet on August 15 had this to say concerning the activities of the Canadian farm loan board:

> There has been available for some considerable time the facilities of the Canadian farm loan board, but these have proven to be totally inadequate in performing the function, with respect to the farm finance, that we would anticipate from this board. From experience, farmers (particularly young people wishing to establish themselves on farms) have found the operations of the Canadian farm loan board extremely restrictive.

In actual practice it would appear that the only people who have ready access to the facilities of this board are those who already have more land and greater assets than are normally required. In the words of the interprovincial farm union council, which represents farmers in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario:

> Our main concern in this respect is to enable young farmers to obtain the finances necessary, backed by the assets of the farm unit, to enable them to take over, in many cases, their fathers' farms and to allow them to carry on in the vocation for which they are best qualified.

Then again, on July 31 of last year the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet received a presentation from the Canadian federation of agriculture, and that presentation also dealt at some length with the Canadian farm loan board. It had this to say:

> The regular Canadian farm loan board program also requires revision. Primarily—

And these are interesting words, Mr. Speaker.

> —it needs to liberalize its present over-cautious and conservative appraisal and lending policies.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet will take these words to heart, and I will repeat them:

> It needs to liberalize its present over-cautious and conservative appraisal and lending policies.

The presentation goes on to say:

> The maximum loan should also be increased to $20,000 from the present $15,000 maximum. While the present maximum loan rate of 65 per cent of appraised value is satisfactory for larger loans, this percentage should be gradually increased for loans of smaller amounts with a maximum of 80 per cent on loans of up to $8,000. The maximum term of repayment should be 40 years. Interest rates should be at the cost of money to the farm loan board, with operating costs carried by the government.
> With its present administrative set up, the farm loan board is hardly able to base its lending decisions on the intimate knowledge of farming conditions, and appraisal of the personal capacities of the borrower, which are necessary to a flexible and helpful lending policy. We therefore recommend the setting up of regional advisory committees which could work with loan board officials.

There, Mr. Speaker, are the opinions expressed to the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet by the two largest agricultural organizations to be found in Canada.

Last spring I received from a young farmer the following cutting which was taken from the Family Herald published, I believe, in Montreal. This, too, deals with the Canadian farm loan board, and I should like to read a certain portion of it to the house:

> Of course, there is the Canadian farm loan board. These folks will gladly lend a farmer money—all he has to do is show that his financial picture is so sound that he doesn't really need any help, and they will quickly approve a loan. If, however, he is in debt, working like a coolie day and night to make ends meet, and needs a loan to better himself, he is wasting his time applying. Love of farming, willingness to work from dawn till exhaustion, a reputation for honesty—these may be assets in some eyes, but not to the hard-headed businessmen who dispense loans.

I wish to make it abundantly clear that I have no quarrel at all with any of the civil servants who are working for the Canadian farm loan board. They have always treated me with courtesy and respect, and I believe they are doing their very best to help the farmers within the narrow scope or limits of the act which we as a parliament have laid down for them to administer.

There is one other matter to which I should like to direct the attention of, perhaps, the Minister of Finance, and certainly of the officials of the farm loan board. Many applications for loans are turned down by the board—in some cases with some justification—but the letter notifying the individual farmer that his application has been rejected, which I believe is a form letter, is a pretty cruel type of letter to direct to a farmer, in my opinion, and I wish to read it to the house:

> Your application has been submitted to our head office for their consideration. We regret to advise, however, that they are not prepared to approve a loan at the present time. Under the circumstances therefore, your application has been declined.

Why was it declined? The farmer does not know. He asks himself, what must I do in order to secure a loan from the board? Are my assets too small? Are my liabilities too great? Why did they turn my application down? Surely another paragraph should be added to that letter in order to remove this doubt which arises in the minds of farmers whose applications have been rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to spend a few moments discussing the tremendous increase in farm operating costs which has occurred over the past number of years. I began taking this matter up and collecting information with regard to it when I first came to Ottawa more than three years ago. On April 8, 1957, I received a report from the dominion bureau of statistics in which they dealt with the increase in the price of farm machinery. As the base years for its computations the bureau uses the period 1935-1939 as equal to 100. It is pointed out that in 1951, using this scale, farm machinery was equated at 186.8. Figures in subsequent years were as follows:

Farm Machinery

1953	196.7
1954	197.9
1955	198.8
1956	209.4
1957 (January)	209.7

That table, Mr. Speaker, demonstrates plainly the continuing rise in the cost of farm machinery to the farmers of Canada. We find that in the same period and using the same basis of calculation the cost of equipment and materials had, by 1957, reached a figure of 210.7. The index figures of other necessary expenditures by farmers were:

Taxes and interest rates	177.2
Farm wage rates	512.5
Building materials	321.2
Gasoline, oil, grease	152.8
Feed	208.7
Fertilizer	180.5
Hardware	217.9

That is the picture showing the rise in the prices of goods and services for which the farmer must pay. What has happened to the prices of the goods he sells and has sold since 1951? Let us consider the price of wheat, for example:

1951	206.5
1952	195.3
1953	201.2
1954	186.6
1955	186.0
1956	183.2
1957 (January)	179.8

Now I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the over-all picture, the index figures for composite Canadian farm products, showing what the farmers received for the goods they sold in the same period:

1951	268.6
1952	250.2
1953	221.6
1954	213.6
1955	211.4
1956	210.1

That shows the story; farm operating costs continually climbing but the amount the farmer receives for the goods he has to sell, if he can sell them, steadily decreasing down through the years.

There is another matter which I feel is of pressing concern to the farmers of all of Canada, and that is the fact that they are finding it increasingly difficult to secure qualified farm help. The day of the farm labourer is in the past. When a farmer engages a man now he usually wants one who is qualified to handle mechanized equipment, tractors, tillers, combines, trucks and so on.

Men trained along those lines are not easy to come by, particularly in Western Canada, because if they can handle power machinery they can secure positions with the road contractors or in the oil fields, and so on. When these men in the oil fields or on road construction are laid off during the slack season they are able to collect unemployment insurance. Farm labourers are not permitted to come under the scope of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I feel that perhaps it would be wise for the government to give serious consideration to the establishment of some form of unemployment insurance for men engaged in farming. Probably this matter could well be referred to the banking and commerce committee or to the agriculture and colonization committee for exploratory study and discussion.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to present to the government for its very serious consideration the following. I would suggest that the government make an all-out attempt to increase our overseas markets by accepting sterling or the currency of other lands; by engaging in barter deals and, in instances where the people of a nation are actually hungry and have no funds with which to purchase our foodstuffs, by outright gifts.

I would ask the government to give very serious consideration immediately to the establishment of government-owned permanent storage facilities in western Canada, and immediately extend the former policy of off-site storage so the grain can be moved from the farms into proper storage facilities.

I will again ask the Minister of Transport and other members of the government to immediately appoint a transport controller, not only with the responsibility but with the authority to see that there is an equitable distribution of box cars in the west at all times to enable the farmers of western Canada to deliver their grain to the elevator of their choice, not to the elevator that has room for a few thousand bushels. Whether or not the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Trade and Commerce realizes it, I am certain that the grain movement picture in western Canada is today far worse than it was a year ago.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture to give very serious consideration to the equalization of floor prices on hogs right across Canada to remove the discrimination that now exists as far as western hog producers are concerned. The established floor price as it now stands is $23 a hundredweight on the Toronto and Montreal markets. This floor price drops as one travels westward, until it reaches the low point of $18.25 on the markets of Alberta.

I ask the Minister of Finance seriously to consider bringing in amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act which will make the Canadian farm loan board of greater use to the farmers of Canada. I have in mind particularly the young men who wish to enter the agricultural industry. I ask that an amendment be made to the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act so it will include other areas in western Canada, particularly those in British Columbia and those north of the Palliser triangle in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I ask for a broadening of the scope of the Agricultural Prices Support Act in order to make this act of some worth-while value to the farmers from coast to coast in Canada, of use not only to the farmers of western Canada but to the potato growers of the maritimes and the dairymen of Ontario and Quebec, the fruit growers and turkey raisers, and so on, of British Columbia.

I ask that the government institute a thorough investigation into the whole freight rate structure with a view to eliminating the discriminatory rates which are now in effect in western Canada. I ask for the establishment of a committee to explore the possibility of establishing some type of unemployment insurance for the farm labourers of Canada; and finally I ask the government to give very serious consideration to the establishment of an all-risk crop insurance plan, in conjunction with the provinces, for all agricultural products grown in Canada.

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time in this House of Commons. I consider it my pleasant duty to congratulate the hon. member for St. Paul's on his elevation to the high position he now occupies as the first commoner in this country and Speaker of this parliament. It is indeed a position of great honour and responsibility, and during the past few weeks in which he has presided over this house he has demonstrated his ability by having filled that position, if I may say so, sir, with fairness, with honour and dignity. I also congratulate the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees of the whole on their election to their respective positions.

At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss the opportunity to sincerely congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for the manner in which they acquitted themselves of their tasks.

It is now my duty, Mr. Speaker, and a most pleasant one at that, to pay my respects to the Prime Minister and to offer him my respectful congratulations and those of my constituents in the riding of High Park in the city of Toronto upon his election to that high and most honourable post of Prime Minister of Canada. I sincerely hope, along with other hon. members, that with the help of God he will long retain the strength, the health and the vitality with which he has been so abundantly endowed. His recognized talents, his forceful personality, his vast experience, his deep sincerity and love of work, which have been already manifested in his brilliant career in public affairs, have led him to this position of great responsibility, which he has assumed with all the dignity and efficiency for which he has long been recognized. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Canada is more than blessed that at this crucial time in her history a man of such outstanding capabilities as the Prime Minister should be available to assume the reins of government and guide our state through such changing and difficult times so as to win the acclaim of the free world, as the Prime Minister has, in such a short time.

Mr. Byrne: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Kucherepa: Mr. Speaker, I should also like to take this opportunity of expressing my sincere regret that for reasons of health the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. St. Laurent) has had to resign as leader of his party. As a physician I can fully appreciate his great personal sacrifice in staying on as the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition for the time being.

As a newly elected member, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I regard it as a distinct privilege to sit in the same parliament as the Leader of the Opposition. As one who has served his apprenticeship in municipal government where members of such governments, notwithstanding political backgrounds, develop as a rule a fine appreciation of their fellows for their abilities and contributions to good government, I cannot help but say that the hon. member for Quebec East has had a long and noble career in the public life of this country. I am sure I express the feelings of all hon. members when I say that the people of Canada are fully aware of his devoted service to his country, and I am sure it is the sincere wish of all hon. members that Providence will grant the Leader of the Opposition the return of his vigour and health and many years of enjoyable life in peaceful surroundings amid his family and many friends.

May I be permitted at this point to say a few words about the city and the riding I have the honour to represent. I consider myself most fortunate indeed to represent the historic riding of High Park, which is located in the western part of the great city of Toronto and which, back in the year 1908, was itself known as the city of West Toronto. To most Torontonians the mention of High Park conjures in their minds that beautiful, large park which lies south of Bloor street just off the shore of lake Ontario and which, in its class, probably has no equal anywhere in the Dominion of Canada.

High Park riding contains as well some very fine residential districts, many churches, fine commercial and substantial industrial areas and, most important of all, friendly, God-fearing people of many backgrounds who have captured the community spirit and are making one vast contribution to the welfare of not only the city of Toronto but the whole Dominion of Canada. As a native Torontonian and as a member of its municipal government I have, of course, great pride in my city.

Toronto is recognized today as the fastest growing city in North America. With this fantastic growth naturally one would expect problems, and we have some; and, Mr. Speaker, we are going to look forward to this parliament to assist us in resolving some of our difficulties. It is important to the whole Dominion of Canada that these problems be resolved. I believe that most hon. members are aware of the fact that within a radius of 100 miles of Toronto is concentrated one-third of Canada's buying power, and that over 27 per cent of all taxes collected by the federal government come from the area known as metropolitan Toronto.

Toronto has achieved world fame in many ways. For example, standard time was invented in Toronto by Sir Sandford Fleming. I could not help but mention that insulin, used in the treatment and control of diabetes, was discovered in Toronto by Doctors Banting and Best, and there sits among us in this house a worthy son of one of these famous Canadians. Of course I refer to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Best). I should like to say much more about the history and the amenities of the city of Toronto, but time being of the essence I shall try to deal with the most pressing problems facing our people not only in High Park riding and the city of Toronto but also in many other parts of our country.

Municipalities in Canada today are hard pressed to raise the necessary moneys to provide an adequate level of services within the field of municipal responsibility. The reason for this is obvious. It is the steady shrinkage of the municipal share of the tax dollar, which has reached an all-time low during the past few years. The previous government offered a token of relief when they removed the limitation factor governing grants in lieu of taxes on crown-owned properties, something for which municipal governments had been making representations for over two decades. This is merely begging the question, for this has been an unfair charge against municipal taxpayers for direct services rendered to crown-owned properties, and something more substantial will have to be done, such as reallocating the tax dollar, if municipal governments are to be given the means to carry out their many and heavy responsibilities.

Although a great deal has been said from time to time respecting the responsibilities of the higher levels of government and relieving municipalities of certain services usually described as social welfare services, little has been accomplished in this connection, especially in so far as the federal field is concerned. I realize that the municipalities are sometimes described as creatures of the provinces. On the other hand, it is quite evident that the federal authorities cannot be oblivious to the needs of the municipalities. Indeed I feel very strongly on this subject, when I realize that some municipalities have larger budgets than some of the provincial governments, although I concede that in a confederation of ten provinces such as Canada, the responsibility for presenting the municipal position falls squarely on the shoulders of the provincial governments.

In fairness to the provinces, however, especially in the case of the province of Ontario with whose grant system I am acquainted, I must say that the assistance they have given, for example, to the municipality of metropolitan Toronto has been for the most part fair, if not quite adequate. They have provided 50 per cent of capital and current costs of roads, 50 per cent of capital and current costs of aged persons' homes, a $5.50 per capita unconditional grant for social and welfare services and administration of justice costs, 40 per cent of children's aid society costs and 25 per cent of current and 18 per cent of capital education costs.

The people of metropolitan Toronto have been subjected for the first time this year to a special 2 mill capital levy. This extra taxation is attributable to the tight money policy adopted by the previous government on recommendations of the Bank of Canada and the federal reserve bank, which became alarmed by the inflationary tendencies that became evident during the year 1956. In 1953, Mr. Speaker, the municipality of metropolitan Toronto was able to prepare a 10-year program of $750 million of capital works because, enjoying a triple A credit rating as it did, it was able to borrow money at 3½ per cent. However, the increase in interest rates from 3½ per cent in 1954 to 5.3 per cent in 1957 demanded a reconsideration of this program of capital works, for a 2 per cent increase in interest rates over 20 years, which is the usual period of municipal debenturing, means a 40 per cent increase in the cost of projects which, added to increased costs resulting from shortage of materials, the increased cost of living and increased wages, made some capital works extremely expensive, if not prohibitive.

The special 2 mill capital levy was essential to permit the municipality of metropolitan Toronto to continue its essential capital works program. Otherwise a cut-back of $11 million in the capital works program would have had to be made. Notwithstanding any other factors, and there were others such as the increased cost of living, the direct cost of the tight money policy to the municipalities of Canada in 1957 amounted to many millions of dollars. As the previous federal administration was responsible for this policy, I submit that the present government should do everything possible to assist our hard-pressed municipalities, even though this may have to be achieved through constitutional channels involving the federal and provincial governments.

Another matter, Mr. Speaker, which I believe deserves the early consideration of this house, is the bringing up to date of the present unrealistic grade crossing fund. The maximum contribution allowable from the fund for any one project is $300,000, and the total amount available for all projects in Canada is only $5 million per year. The registration of motor cars in the Toronto area alone has increased from 113,313 in 1945 to 429,322 in 1957. It has almost quadrupled in 12 years. Over 300,000 cars were sold in the Toronto area alone during this period.

The government of Canada derives a constantly increasing revenue from the excise and sales taxes on automobiles and other products in the motor field. This revenue amounts to some $300 million to $350 million annually, while federal expenditures on the trans-Canada highway and other roads under federal jurisdiction account for only a small portion of these revenues. The balance of these great revenues should be utilized to provide facilities for the movement of vehicles, rather than have this burden fall on the backs of the already overburdened ratepayers in municipalities. In many cases, because of the excessive cost and the disproportionate share required to be borne by municipalities, grade separations are not being proceeded with, and this is not in the public interest.

Motor car accidents, Mr. Speaker, constitute a major national problem. In 1955, for example, 2,799 people were killed in the Dominion of Canada and 65,655 were injured, in a total of 224,348 accidents. The economic loss resulting from these tragedies is estimated at over $200 million annually. Surely this is a problem which demands solution. This problem should be tackled by all available agencies at all levels of government. For our part, Mr. Speaker, we should not hesitate to increase the grade crossing fund to a realistic point, thereby eliminating as quickly as possible some of these hazards to life and limb. This procedure would also provide a substantial amount of employment in many areas of the country where there is need for some action on the part of this government to alleviate a condition which has been developing for some time, and which this government inherited from its predecessor.

In the United States the federal government devotes billions of dollars to interstate highways, major freeways and the like. This type of aid is lacking in Canada. I submit it would be a step in the right direction if the government of Canada were to develop a formula in this connection somewhat similar to that which is invoked in the province of Ontario, whereby the province shares, directly or through its agencies, 50 per cent of the costs of grade separations and allied projects. I was therefore very happy, Mr. Speaker, to note that in the speech from the throne reference was made to a federal-provincial conference for the purpose of discussing fiscal relations and of seeking a better understanding and arrangement of many aspects of our public finances. In this regard, I hope the provincial government will see fit to invite representatives from municipal governments to attend this conference, in so far as that may be possible.

May I reiterate that the backlog of capital works necessary for the proper development of our municipalities is constantly rising. In part this is due to the high interest rates which municipal governments are forced to pay on borrowed money, but is also attributable to the failure of other levels of government to assume their full share of those responsibilities which are constitutionally theirs. I shall be looking forward with great interest indeed to the solution of these vexatious problems through the forthcoming federal-provincial conference.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Kucherepa: Mr. Speaker, in the industrial part of my riding are located, among others, the various elements which constitute the packing industry. Because of this proximity, and further because as a member of the Toronto board of health I have been keenly interested in this matter, I should like to bring to the attention of this house the problems arising out of the present, primitive and inhumane method used in the slaughter of our food animals.

It seems that in this field Canada has been lagging badly in taking the necessary legislative steps which other countries, no more progressive than we, long ago adopted. The broad principle of humane slaughter for our food animals may be enunciated as follows; that no animal being slaughtered for food purposes should be shackled, hoisted, hung, cut, bled or scalded without first having been rendered unconscious and insensible to pain in a humane manner.

[Mr. Kucherepa.]

In the case of ritual slaughter, Mr. Speaker, the present preparatory methods of shackling, hoisting and, so on, are deplorable. In England and in other countries the casting pen and other means have been used which eliminate the most inhumane aspects of ritual slaughter. Humane slaughter or slaughter practices by which animals are rendered unconscious and insensible to pain prior to being slaughtered is compulsory by legislation in many countries.

Under the Criminal Code of Canada it is an offence to cause unnecessary pain or suffering to an animal or bird. What in effect is being asked is that this broad statement be defined in such a way that the current primitive and inhumane methods will be discontinued. For the workers in packing house plants the present methods are laborious, unpleasant and unsafe, the accident rate in this connection being one of the worst of any industry on the continent.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that to the credit of some of the packing house operators in my riding they are adopting more up to date practices. However, until this government passes the necessary legislation, allowing the packers adequate time in which to carry out studies and plant changes, with an effective date, we shall not be able to march abreast of those other civilized countries which met this challenge many years ago.

At this time I should like to pay tribute to those kind people who have taken such great interest in this subject. Among those who have given outstanding service in this crusade I cannot help but mention Mr. George Bryant, who is a newspaper writer in Toronto. His countless articles on this subject have contributed much to public opinion.

I was happy indeed to hear that the meat packers' council of Canada has notified the government that "it welcomes the introduction of federal humane slaughter legislation". Along with the O.S.P.C.A., which has been spearheading this crusade for some time, and in conjunction with the packers, I believe that, if this government could now present to this parliament the necessary resolution which would embody the principles to which I have referred, then the bill could be presented later this session as soon as proper regulations could de drawn up. The important thing, however, Mr. Speaker, is that we in this house by our support of such a resolution could contribute immensely toward the almost immediate cessation of these primitive and inhumane methods used in the slaughter of our food animals.

I should now like to say a few words with regard to a problem which affects the metropolitan Toronto area and the surrounding municipalities, all in all an area of about 1,000 square miles, which is represented in this house by 21 hon. members. As an executive member of the metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority I am especially interested in the solution of this problem which affects about one-tenth of the people of Canada who live in this area.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, three years ago hurricane "Hazel" caused 80 deaths on one of the several rivers which drain this area. At that time the government of Canada contributed a considerable sum of money for flood relief in this region as well as men and equipment from military and civil services, for which indeed, the people of this area were most grateful. However, a scheme is now being prepared which would permanently solve this problem, provided federal aid were made available in conjunction with provincial assistance.

The cost of this permanent flood protection would be in the order of about $30 million, a sum far too great to be assumed by the real estate taxpayers in the area. I realize that there are similar problems in other parts of the country; and I would therefore urge the government to work out a detailed formula which could be applied to any such project so that local authorities might be able to prepare plans, having a definite goal in sight. The government should determine a cost-benefit ratio policy on such projects, based not only on primary and direct benefits but also on secondary benefits which would include both tangibles, such as resulting public parks, and intangibles such as the avoidance of epidemics, the facilitation of national defence and so forth.

As a firm believer in conservation I was very happy indeed to hear in the speech from the throne that at long last Canada will see the beginning of a national development policy which, carried out with the co-operation of the provinces and the territories, will enable all regions of Canada to share in the benefits to be realized in developing the resources of this great nation. There is no doubt in my mind that we stand on the threshold of a great and glorious era in the history of Canada, provided we are realistic with regard to this most important aspect of our economic development.

It was most gratifying to hear the Minister of National Defence announce the change in emphasis from militia training to civil defence organization. This is just another accomplishment of a government which has been in office for only a short time but having new and vigorous ideas. This government I am sure will not only produce efficiency in defence spending but also, and this is most important, prepare our country properly for a challenge we hope our people will never have to face. Preparedness, Mr. Speaker, is an old motto but not an outmoded one. No matter how devastating an attack may be, indeed the more devastating it is,—the greater will be the need for a strong civil defence organization.

Civil defence is necessary to care for survivors, to organize essential services, provide for shelter, transportation and all those things necessary to keep body and soul together in trying times. Without civil defence there can be little hope of survival in the atomic era. In this age of expansion it is necessary that our soldiers be trained not only as effective combatants but also as efficient civil service personnel. Only through successful civil defence operations can we hope to reach the point where we will be able to carry out the final military operations necessary for a successful conclusion of any hostilities which might arise.

The best defence against possible disaster in the years which lie ahead, is a strong dependence on self-reliance, based on superior scientific knowledge but without the sacrifice of the humanities. This can only be attained by the further establishment and dramatic expansion of our educational and scientific institutions. We hope this nation can fully avail herself of her tremendous God given resources of brainpower which are being allowed to waste away because of the inability, for various reasons, of those responsible in this field of human endeavour to harness this latent potential of our people in the interests of peace and humanity. It was indeed gratifying to hear the assurances of the Prime Minister in this regard made in this house last week.

The world situation in many respects is alarming, but let us not lose faith. We in Canada, constituted as we are of many peoples from many lands, have a vital role to play which can do much to bring peace and stability to a troubled world. Discouraging as the situation may appear to some people, let me say that we in the free world, especially we in Canada, have an advantage which all the weapons, bombs, sputniks and muttniks cannot overcome. It is not only a moral advantage but a physical one, through the bonds of consanguinity which we have with the tens of millions of people who today are enslaved by that international tyrant called communism.

Their enslavement, which we hope will soon end through the efforts of free people everywhere, is a prevailing state of affairs which will in effect hold back any insidious intentions the Russian leaders may have toward world expansion, until one day the core of communism, being what it is, will crack up and go the way of all dictatorships. When it does we, through our various efforts in the British commonwealth of nations, in NATO, through assistance to underdeveloped countries and especially by our efforts in the United Nations, will have made a real contribution, worthy of our heritage, in helping to bring freedom to nations now enslaved in one form or another by modern Russian imperialism, which at present disguises itself under the cloak of international communism.

To hear these communists rant and rave and disseminate falsehoods about Great Britain, which country has brought through education and evolution freedom, democracy and self government to many former colonies and formerly backward peoples, is a colossal violation of the truth which history will one day expose, even as it will reveal the insidious and brutal methods that communists have used to enslave one nation after another until today most of eastern and central Europe is under their domination.

Many of the people who are today subjected to communism are nations that only two score years ago won their freedom and independence after centuries of enslavement. I predict that they will be free again, for I believe that truth and justice must one day triumph; and I know our efforts toward this end will win for us the eternal friendship of all these nations, most of whom are related and joined by racial ties to many of our Canadian people.

Much has been said about national unity by some of the hon. members in this house in weeks gone by. I could not understand the reasoning behind some of the remarks of these members, unless they were a manifestation of a kind of parochial thinking which most Canadian people had believed no longer existed in our country. I think most hon. members have heard on countless occasions exalted speakers of the Liberal party announce and reiterate the achievements of national unity amongst the people of Canada, which they claimed were built on rugged foundations which would forever hold. Now that the Liberal party has suffered a defeat at the polls it seems that in the opinion of some of the hon. members of that party this means the end of national unity in our country. If anything, I would say those revealing and startling remarks made by some of the hon. members opposite merely serve to underline the fact that the Conservative party which now forms the government has, as those speaking the truth always will, emerged as a great Canadian party which represents all the provinces and all the groups which constitute this great Canada of ours.

I want to say that our party by virtue of its composition, built as it is on this broad national foundation and having as it does representatives from not only the two great ethnic groups of which some hon. members have spoken but also from other important groups, ethnic and otherwise, will jealously guard the rights of all minorities, big or small, notwithstanding the fact that a particular group may, on occasion, and for quite plausible reasons, support more strongly some other party.

I do not think there is anything remarkable in this regard about the results of the June 10 election. Nine of our ten provinces contributed most of the increase in the number of seats held by the Conservative party in the House of Commons. The people of Canada wanted to change their government, and they voted for a Conservative administration. In so far as the people of Quebec are concerned they did what I consider to be rather a common thing in free elections; they supported what is known in political parlance as "their favourite son"; a man who is a great Canadian and who has always commanded a great deal of personal support in his home province, even as some other outstanding hon. members of this house, past and present, have commanded support in other years and in other parts of the country. That man of course is the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent).

I believe this is a common condition existing not only in Canada but in other democracies. What I do think is unfortunate for the members opposite is that right now, at least, there is not one among them who could possibly emulate that distinguished Canadian of whom I have just spoken. Therefore I have every confidence that when the opportunity presents itself the good people of the province of Quebec will join the people of the other nine provinces in supporting, in equal measure, the Conservative party which is today the living symbol of national unity in every sense of the word.

We have on this side of the house men and women who can trace their origin to almost every major ethnic group in Canada, including some very fine representatives, if I may say so, from the great province of Quebec, of whom we are justly proud and of whom we expect many more in the next parliament.

In conclusion I appeal to all hon. members of this house not only to preach national unity but to practice it inside and outside these walls; for I firmly believe, as do most Canadians, that although there is not uniformity in all things amongst us, there is full agreement among Canadians in all those things which unite us.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): In the interests of saving the time of the house, Mr. Speaker, I will not extend congratulations to all those who have so richly deserved them since this debate began, but will content myself by associating myself in this regard with my leader, who so ably handed out the plaudits when he made his most excellent address.

Likewise I do not intend to spend any considerable time on the contents of the speech from the throne, chiefly because we have already dealt with a good part of it in the form of legislation, and the amendment now before the house very clearly states our position in that regard. We have indicated in our amendment approval of all those progressive measures which have been put before the house or which are still to come and to which we will give support because as a matter of fact they are part and parcel of what we have been advocating for some years.

At the same time our amendment sets before the house something rather more solid about which to think, and that is the question of dealing with the basic economic issues. Unless these are faced and solved, it will not be possible to hand out what might be called Christmas gifts in the next speech from the throne. We have to build a firm and solid economic base which will make it possible to produce the wealth, and so distribute that wealth as to bring about the best possible social security in this country.

There are two omissions in the speech from the throne to which I wish to refer, and I will do so briefly. One is the lack of any action with regard to federal aid to education. This is a question which has been raised in this house on numerous occasions. If I remember correctly, I was the one who first introduced the matter in the form of a resolution back in 1946, and the subject has been introduced and debated on nine or ten occasions since that time. The present Prime Minister, as I recall, together with a number of his colleagues, gave approval while in opposition to the proposition I put forward, but unfortunately I failed to find any reference to the matter in the speech from the throne, or any indication that the government is planning to do anything with regard to it at the present session of parliament. I hope they will come up with something before next session.

The other omission I wish to mention has already been referred to; that is the lack of any increase to war veterans under the Canadian Pension Act. It seems to me somewhat unfortunate that at a time when we have provided for a general increase all down the line under our social security measures, modest as it may be, we should not have seen fit to increase at the same time and a least in the same proportion the pensions which the Canadian veterans have so well earned.

The subject with which I wish to deal almost exclusively this afternoon is one which I consider to be a very important issue in this country at the present time, and which I predict may become one of the most important issues of all in the near future. I refer to the recent proposal made by the government of Great Britain to Canada to establish a free trade area between the two countries. In my opinion that offer was a historic event which unfortunately has been kept in the background so far as the present government is concerned. It is a very important issue for many reasons, but even if you look at the matter purely from the point of view of dollars and cents it is evident that it is time parliament faced this problem and dealt with it effectively at this present session, because it is obvious that the question of trade, tariffs and trade restrictions affects every Canadian at all times.

The house may be interested to know that in the last 10 years alone the Canadian people have paid out in the form of tariff duties for the goods they have imported from various countries overseas and to the south almost $4 billion. I have all the figures here before me. Obviously I cannot quote them all, but if we look up the records back to the time of confederation we will find we have paid out in customs duties and tariffs in this country more than Canada's total national debt.

This sum represents what has actually been collected in the form of revenue from the various duties. In addition the Canadian consumers have, in my opinion, paid a sum equal to if not greater than that amount in the form of prices which have been artificially inflated by those industries which have been able to increase their prices unduly because of the umbrella protection which our tariff structure provides for them. So if one takes into account what has been paid in actual cash into the public treasury in the form of tariffs, and adds the artificially high prices charged by industries which have produced goods protected by tariff barriers, we reach a fantastically high figure; and for that reason alone every Canadian should be interested in this particular question.

I wish to place my stand on this question fairly and squarely before the house, if for no other reason than to provoke a real debate on the whole subject of a free trade area. So far as I recall it, only oblique references have been made to the matter in various parts of the house but no one has really dealt with it thoroughly. I wish to make a case to the best of my ability for the establishment of a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada. In my opinion Canada should accept the proposal made by the United Kingdom, and do so with great alacrity. There are strong and compelling reasons why we should do so, and I should like to place before the house five advantages which are to the obvious benefit of Canada, though this number does not by any means exhaust the list.

First, it would reduce the cost of living in Canada, a problem which is our No. 1 headache at the present time. Second, it would improve our export position with regard to primary products so far as the United Kingdom is concerned. Third, it would improve the quality of our consumer goods in Canada. Fourth, it would help to level out our trade balance; and fifth, it would be a step toward the solidarity of our commonwealth.

Now I wish to say a few words about each of these advantages. First a reference to the cost of living. This is a very important issue in Canada and it is one which is often, and in my opinion quite erroneously, referred to as inflation. I do not consider that the present unusually high cost of living in this country is a matter of inflation. Inflation, in the true sense of the word, is a condition in which there is a shortage of goods and services in relation to the availability of purchasing power. I am sure we will all agree that this is not the situation which exists in Canada at the present time; in fact, in regard to primary products the very opposite is the case. We are in a surplus position so far as agricultural products are concerned; we are in something of a surplus position so far as wood products are concerned; we are in a surplus position so far as base metals are concerned, and we seem to be quickly reaching a surplus position in the case of almost every primary product in this country.

So there is not a shortage of actual goods; that is not what is causing the condition which we call inflation, or the high cost of living. What is, in my opinion, causing the high cost of living is the systematic and arbitrary increase in prices on the part of those industries which enjoy either monopoly positions or near monopoly positions, and which so operate that they take full advantage of the umbrella of protection which they have enjoyed for a long period of years.

In such a situation as this the establishment of an area of free trade between the United Kingdom and Canada would immediately open an alternative source of supply to the Canadian consumer. This does not mean that British-made goods would replace Canadian-made goods, but it would mean that the Canadian consumer would have an alternative choice, and the existence of an alternative choice of a source of supply would automatically tend to bring the prices of Canadian made goods somewhere near their true value rather than the inflated value now shown on the price tags.

Second, with regard to the export of primary products, it has been said by a number of hon. members in this house and elsewhere that the United Kingdom has been scrambling around for several years in an effort to raise dollars with which to buy Canadian products. The export-import figures indicate what the situation is at the present time. Taking the first six months of 1957, from January to June, which are the latest figures I can find, we see that we have exported to the United States in that period goods to the value of $1,391 million; but we imported from the United States goods to the value of $2,139 million, giving them a favourable balance of trade of about $800 million in a period of six months. In the same period we exported to the United Kingdom goods to the value of $341 million and imported from the United Kingdom goods to the value of $260 million, leaving us a favourable trade balance of $81 million.

That indicates a trend that has been developing over the years, and it is a trend which is dangerous both to Canada and to the United Kingdom. We have been buying more and more from the United States and attempting to sell more to the United Kingdom than we have been buying from her. Inevitably the time is going to come when the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries are going to say to themselves, "If we cannot sell our goods in Canada and so earn dollars with which to buy her exports to us we are going to have to look elsewhere for that opportunity". Therefore it is not surprising that Great Britain is becoming increasingly interested in a free-trade area on the continent of Europe. I warn hon. members, and the government particularly, that unless we show some interest in the proposal which was made to Canada by Great Britain for a free-trade area, then Great Britain may decide that we are simply not interested in carrying on any large volume of trade with her and will almost inevitably give her attention to the building up of a free-trade area on the continent of Europe, and that could be disastrous to the export of our agricultural products in the future.

I come now to the question of the quality of consumer goods in Canada. In my opinion there has been a steady and a sad deterioration in the quality of manufactured goods in Canada since the war. In my opinion at the present time the Canadian consumer is the victim of jerry-built junk, which is sold through high pressure advertising and through appearance, new styles and new models, rather than through quality. Unfortunately the emphasis seems to be on appearance and on selling rather than on building goods which will serve. Goods are made to sell and not to serve. It is perhaps most evident with regard to the consumer goods in lines such as textiles, automobiles, electrical appliances, furniture and things of that kind. With the exception of certain types of heavy machinery and some of the building materials, it is my opinion that the consumer goods offered to the Canadian public by Canadian and United States manufacturers are now at an all-time low.

It might be interesting to interject at this point that it is rather strange that so far as the agricultural producers are concerned, we have built up a rather elaborate system of government grading of goods which are produced by the farmers, particularly at the producer level, so the consumer may be protected when he is buying food products that have been government-inspected, government-stamped and approved to show that they are of the proper quality and wholesomeness. But how many of our manufactured articles are government-inspected or government-approved? When a man buys an automobile, a radio, a television set, a pair of shoes or anything of that kind, and pays very high prices these days, what guarantee has he that he is getting the quality for which he is paying?

The benefit of a free-trade area with Great Britain would, in my opinion, help to improve this situation. British-made goods, over a period of years, have built up a world-wide reputation for quality. I think the manufacturers of Great Britain have followed a very sensible long-range policy in realizing that in the long run it is the quality of the goods and satisfied customers that bring the business; it is not a question of being able to put on a high-pressure selling job and move a whole volume of goods in a short time; to make a big profit, get in, get rich and get out. They are in business to stay, and they try to give the customer satisfaction. I think it could act as a very good example for Canadian and United States manufacturers if they could put some of their goods within reach of the Canadian people so we could test their quality against the shoddy junk that is being offered on the Canadian market today.

I come now to the balance of payments. I have already mentioned the export and import figures as between Canada and the United States and Canada and Great Britain, but there is also a large amount of money involved in the question of interest and dividend payments. Here again we find that in the year 1956, the latest figures for a whole year, on the interest and dividend account we received from the United States $75 million, in round figures, but we paid to the United States in the same year $533 million, giving us a deficit of $458 million. We received from the United Kingdom $20 million; we paid out to the United Kingdom $72 million, leaving a deficit balance of $52 million. If we take all other countries together we find that we received from them $140 million and paid out to them $530 million, leaving a deficit for Canada of $390 million. If we add all these deficits together, on interest and dividend account we find that in 1956 we were in a deficit position to the extent of $900 million, almost a billion dollars.

There are two ways in which we could help to level out this enormous deficit on interest and dividend account. One of the ways would be for Canadians to invest more money in Canada rather than depend to such a great extent, as we have in the past, upon investment from the United States. I think this is a field which has yet to be properly explored. I would recommend to the government that they give rather more attention to this question than has been given in the past. Time will not permit me to go into all the various ways in which this could be done. I would recommend that the government ask some of the experts to study the field and try to find ways and means by which they could open up to the Canadian public avenues of investment in Canadian industries and in the development of Canadian resources, and to that extent stop leaning upon United States capital to such a fantastic extent as we have been doing in recent years.

Then there is another way in which we could help to level out that situation, and that would be by accepting sterling in exchange for some of our exports. So long as sterling remains unconvertible the best way in which we could dispose, or make use, of that blocked sterling we would receive would be to invest it in the commonwealth countries. In my opinion there is a large field for that purpose. I think Canada is suffering to some extent from a sort of national inferiority complex so far as finances are concerned. We have become too used to the idea that we have not any capital. I think it is a myth which has lived much longer than it has any right to live. We have been in a debtor position for so many years that we seem to think that is where we have to stay.

Now that the shoe is getting on the other foot I think we have the responsibility within the commonwealth and in the world generally to begin now to use the resources and the capital that we have in this country, not only to develop our own industries but in assisting to develop the industries and resources in some of the commonwealth countries which have not been so fortunate as we have been in recent years. By doing these two things, first investing some of our own money in our own industries rather than using foreign capital and, second, by accepting sterling as part payment for our export goods, we can materially reduce our deficits on interest and dividend account, and eventually I feel we can arrive at a surplus position.

I come to the fifth advantage I mentioned with regard to a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada, and that is the question of solidifying the commonwealth. I know when I say that it might sound more like a sentimental argument than an economic one, and it is perhaps a phrase that sounds rather platitudinous because it has been mentioned so often before. This idea of solidifying the commonwealth, Mr. Speaker, is something I suggest in all seriousness. History shows us that if we want to maintain a solid and lasting political entity such as the commonwealth which, in my opinion, is the most wonderful association of free peoples which has ever existed, then we must lay an economic basis in order to make that political entity possible.

We cannot keep the commonwealth together on pure sentiment. We must be prepared to show that as a nation we are ready to play the game within the family of nations which we call the commonwealth. We must be prepared to set an example to our members of the commonwealth by establishing the most solid economic relations possible with the United Kingdom. We must remember that the commonwealth now is a much larger entity, both in area and population, than it was only a few years ago. We have now the Asiatic and African peoples who belong to the commonwealth. They are countries relatively new in relation to history, and I am sure they are looking to us as one of the senior or older members of the commonwealth to show an example of economic co-operation.

We talk about the political and economic freedom in the world. Here we have right within the commonwealth a grand opportunity to accept and put into effect both political and economic co-operation, and if we fail to accept the proposition of the United Kingdom for the step by step, gradual building up of a free trade area I am afraid we will not be fulfilling our responsibility as a senior member of the commonwealth to accept something which is economically sound and politically necessary. A challenge has been given to us, and I hope there will be the statesmanship on the government benches that can accept the challenge and utilize it in the best interests of this nation and of Great Britain.

I would also add to the five advantages I have mentioned three specific steps that I believe would have to be taken within Canada in relation to the whole question of a free trade area with the United Kingdom. First, if we are going to make an effective job of it I believe we should set up an export-import board. So far as the disposal of our surpluses is concerned, I believe we are going to have to give greater attention to bulk sales and may even have to give some consideration to barter deals. Therefore an export-import board established for the purpose of most efficiently and intelligently organizing our trade within the free trade area is a must. It is a necessity. It is not a question of choice. I believe we should lose no time in setting up a board of that nature, made up of qualified personnel who would be given the duty and responsibility of exploring the whole field of a free trade area and finding the best means by which we could move the largest volume of goods both ways in order to make such a plan fully effective.

Second, I believe that as a nation we should make the greatest possible use within such free trade area of our co-operative movement both in Canada and the United Kingdom. It so happens that in our own country the co-operative movement has developed more or less along producer lines, and so far as the prairie provinces at least are concerned we now have a highly developed and very efficient system of producer co-operatives which have the know-how, the machinery and experience in that phase of the co-operative movement.

We have not advanced quite as rapidly in the consumer co-operative field. On the other hand in Great Britain, particularly in Scotland, the consumer co-operative movement has developed rapidly and very soundly and efficiently. I thing we can make use of both phases of the co-operative movement. I think they complement each other, and I believe that within a free trade area, with proper government encouragement and co-operation, the co-operative movements of Canada and the United Kingdom can be important instruments in efficiently organizing two-way trade. I will not have the time to go into detail on this matter, but I feel very strongly that we as a parliament and the government have too long ignored and neglected the economic values in the co-operative movement, and should be prepared to make greater use of that movement.

Third, I would recommend that we make every effort as a parliament to make greater use of port Churchill in Manitoba. Port Churchill is the nearest seaport to the greater part of the three prairie provinces. It could be built into a large metropolis if it were given some encouragement. One way in which it could be given encouragement would be to make the greatest possible use of that port as a trading centre or port of entry and export with the United Kingdom. As a matter of fact I would go so far as to advocate that port Churchill be made a free port of entry for British-made goods. That in itself would provide great encouragement for the building up of facilities and the greater use of that port, and eventually would pay large dividends in western Canada.

That is the case I make at the present time for the acceptance by Canada of the offer made by the United Kingdom to this country. But I wish to say that since the proposal was made it seems to me we have had a thoroughly disappointing response on the part of the government. I do not wish to repeat this too often, but we know that the present Prime Minister, in campaigning throughout the country, repeatedly stated that he would like to see an increase in the trade between the United Kingdom and Canada. He made a specific proposal that he would attempt to divert about 15 per cent of our trade with the United States to Great Britain. That gave the people of Canada reason to believe that if a new administration took office the new government would take some specific steps immediately to make some sort of proposal to the United Kingdom.

You can imagine the shock that many of us who are keenly interested in this matter felt when not only did the government not make any proposals to the United Kingdom, but when the United Kingdom made its proposal the Canadian government seemed to react in a sort of horrified manner as if to say well now, look, fellows; surely you did not need to take us quite that seriously. We did not really mean what we said. We were just talking in terms of elections, and now all of a sudden you come and offer us free trade.

I believe the government of Canada should have given approval to the principle of that proposal immediately, and should have begun immediately to lay some plans for putting it into effect. What they have done so far has been thoroughly disappointing. I am not of an unduly suspicious nature, Mr. Speaker, but if I were I could quote extracts from such newspapers as the Leader-Post of Regina, the Star-Phoenix of Saskatoon and the Free Press of Winnipeg, and also the words of Premier Matheson of Prince Edward Island, all of which, since that offer was made, have expressed the belief that the government is not interested in expanding the area of trade with Great Britain, is not interested in a free trade area, and feels that somehow in some way it is going to get itself off the hook on this matter without having to answer to the electors.

I hope for its own good the government will not attempt to do that as far as western Canada and the maritimes are concerned. In fact I doubt if they will get away with it even in central Canada, but certainly they will not get away with it so far as the prairie provinces are concerned. They have made certain pledges. Their leader has stated that he would divert a certain amount of trade from the United States to Great Britain. Now that the offer has been thrown in his lap we are sitting back and watching to see what he is going to do with it. No amount of excuses, no amount of dodging about is going to get him out of this situation. He is firmly committed to enlarging the area of trade with Great Britain. We feel that Great Britain has made a statesmanlike offer, a sensational offer, which should have been immediately accepted by Canada. We are waiting to see this indecision and bumbling, in which the Minister of Finance is becoming an expert, come to an end and have the Prime Minister rise in his place and announce that Canada is accepting in principle the British proposal and is taking concrete steps to put it into effect.

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is some little time since I made a speech in this house, in fact it is some little time since I made a speech. I am making this one as the result of a promise I gave during the last election campaign to the effect that I would make a speech, not during the campaign but afterwards. I am therefore in some danger, if I can last out the next 30 minutes, of fulfilling the only promise I made to my electorate during the last campaign. In that respect I am in a little more satisfactory position than some of those to your right, Mr. Speaker, who still have their troubles ahead of them.

When I went home at the end of the last session I found that the people were quite familiar with the issues of the campaign; in fact they were sick and tired of issues and speeches. As a matter of fact the only issue in my particular riding so far as I was concerned was whether or not my constituents endorsed the kind of representation I had given them in the past, and particularly whether or not they endorsed the fact that I spend about $5,000 per year of my salary in covering the tremendous area that is mine to represent. This expenditure results from the fact that about 90 per cent of the constituency has to be covered by airplane. I made no promises in this regard during this campaign, because I had made the promise some 13 years ago and have kept it since. My only difficulty would arise if some of those who opposed me at the time gave some concrete guarantees that they would do the same as I had done. Since this situation did not arise there was not too much point in discussing issues, so far as I was concerned.

There has always been a bit of the minstrel in me and this came to the surface during the campaign, because I conducted most of my campaign with an orchestra and did not discuss any of the issues whatever. I was panned pretty hard by some of the newspapers in some editorials for this, but of course they did not know the background and the fact that the issues were fairly well under control as far as that area was concerned. What I was interested in was getting around to see as many people as possible. The idea of taking part in an acrimonious debate appealed neither to myself nor my electors at that moment.

Having made these preliminary remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall now get on with the proposition of fulfilling my promise to my electors, namely that I would make a speech after the election. During the early part of this debate I was intrigued by a line or two in a speech made by my good friend the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton). He was talking about the improvements that had come about under the new government in a very short time, and he said:

> Take a look at the headlines. What a change there is from the last ten years.

I took the hon. member at his word and looked at a few headlines. I did not find his contention was borne out by the headlines at which I looked but perhaps we looked at different headlines. These are examples of the headlines that I found that were not common during the previous ten years when we had a Liberal government and when our economy was at such a high level that it was next to that of the United States who lead the world. I have picked these examples at random, and I shall read the headlines only: "Cost of Living Reaches 123.4, All-Time High"; "Grain Glut on Great Lakes Very Serious"; "Faltering Prices May be Portent of '58 Business"; "Predict Record Expansion Era to end Next Year"; "Business Failures Rise 16 Per Cent in Eight Months"; "Alberta Oil Demand Lowest since 1955"; "Canadian Stock Markets drop in Frantic Selling"; "Canadian Stock Markets Suffer Severest Losses"; "Stocks Fall Again, Uranium Off Most"; "Place 31 Per Cent Fewer, Job Vacancies Off"; "Jobless List Rises Sixth Straight Week"; "Unemployment Rises for Seventh Week in Row"; "Jobless Rolls Rise Sooner than Usual"; "450,000 Jobless This Winter, Labour Warns Diefenbaker"; "Hudson Bay Net off 60 Per Cent as Metal Prices Dip"; "Shutdown of Mines in B.C. is Becoming Increasingly Serious"; "Oil and Gas Export Policies Non-Existent while Industry Position Gets Worse Daily". Those are some of the headlines I noted, and certainly those are not the kind of headlines we read during the last ten years.

I will admit that this government has been in office for a short time, so one cannot expect too much to show for their efforts, but at least they could have maintained the economy in the same position in which they found it when they took over. From the standpoint of the west, and I am a western member, we have to look back through the years to see what Tory governments have done for the west in the past. Starting at the beginning, one would naturally start with Sir John A. Macdonald who, in this part of the country, is always looked upon as a great statesman. Perhaps he was in this part of the country, but some of his actions out west throw some doubt upon that point. I want to speak initially about his actions with regard to land tenure in the west.

At that time the northern part of the west was settled by the Metis, whose only mode of transportation was the river and lake systems. Naturally, therefore, these people settled on narrow strips of land which ran back some distance from the edge of the water. Then Mr. Macdonald introduced the idea that there would be a reorganization of the land system and all the plots of land would be square. This system in effect dispossessed those people of their homes and although representations were made for ten years in a row, in the same hard-headed fashion that one still observes in the Conservative party the system was rammed down the throats of the people in the west. Naturally there was some resistance which was treated in the traditional Tory fashion, when the government brought out troops to deal with these people. They wound up by hanging Louis Riel who, so far as most of the west is concerned, is still looked upon as a patriot because all he did was lead the people who wanted to fight for their homes.

Well, that was our first brush with a Conservative government. Then the next man who came along was supposed to do much better for the west because he came from the west. He was the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. Naturally he would have the welfare of the west at heart because he came from the west. But under R. B. Bennett we in the west suffered under the same policies originated by Mr. Macdonald. We suffered from a tariff policy that provided an umbrella to eastern manufacturers to which westerners had to pay a tribute of 25 per cent or 30 per cent in the way of duty.

Mr. Bennett continued in the same way. He came into power saying that he was going to blast his way into the markets of the world by putting in higher tariffs, something which he did. When he first came in he also said he would bring on a British trade conference. He held out great prospects of that conference relieving us of our ills in this country. I refer to these matters in order to show the parallel between what was done at that time and what is being held out to the people now and to indicate that it is about the same thing. When he got through blasting his way into the markets of the world we were in extremely bad shape in this country. In fact, this country was in the worst condition it has ever been in. That was the promise and that was the performance.

Now we come to the present government of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I was rather intrigued to note that during this last election campaign no mention was made of the Conservative party in the west. Maybe their past record is a good enough reason for that. All their election signs said out there was "Diefenbaker". If you had a 20-power microscope you might see "Progressive Conservative" at the bottom of the sign. If I had the record that these people have I think I might have used some name like Diefenbaker or somebody else. I certainly would not put the name of my party on it.

In the last campaign—although I did not take part in the discussions at that time for reasons I mentioned at the outset—the question arose as to whether the new John Diefenbaker was going to be any different from any other Tory leader we have ever had. Immediately the suggestion was put forward by those supporters that he has out there, "Well, John is from the west and he will not let the west down". I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he is not the first Lochinvar who has come out of the west as far as the Conservative party is concerned. We all remember Mr. Bennett. He was from farther west than the Prime Minister, and he did not do so well for the west.

We start out with this new government and they are going to have a commonwealth conference instead of a British trade conference which is something of the same order, and they tell us that it is going to cure all our ills. To go on from there, they are going to shake a stick at the United States and they have been doing so for the last nine years that I have been here, from the opposition side of the house, and they were going to go down and tell those people what they were going to do. They were going to blast their way into some markets of the world by telling the United States off. We have had some indication that that has not taken place.

What other indications are there that the Prime Minister is not much different than his predecessors? Once he gets in the straitjacket of Tory policy he cannot do too much for the west. He is in the same position as R. B. Bennett. Maybe his heart is in the right place and I do not doubt that it is. But when you get that kind of policy saddled on you you are not going to do the things that the west particularly wish.

That brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the attempt to get greater trade with Great Britain. The Prime Minister went over to the prime ministers' conference with the avowed intention of increasing trade with Great Britain. This is something that is dear to the west. They like that idea. I think he went there also with the idea that maybe he could do something along that line; but when he made his suggestion that they might change 15 per cent of their trade from the United States to that country, even the British papers cast a great deal of doubt on the possibility of doing that. When you look at Britain's position you find that she has just so many Canadian dollars with which to do business. I think the Prime Minister went there with his tongue in his cheek or in other words he knew that with impunity he could make a good fellow of himself in the west by saying that we should have more trade with Great Britain, knowing that Great Britain could not accept that proposal.

But they fooled him. He went there and they said, "We should have free trade". Here is something that is right down the alley as far as western Canada is concerned. For years we have been paying tribute to eastern manufacturers. From the point of view of building up the country, there may be something to that idea. But it is rather hard to tell the people in the west that that is the situation. They have been paying tribute to the eastern manufacturers and they think it is about time that some of those industries stood on their own feet. When somebody tells you that you cannot have free trade, that is not correct. It must be approached with some caution, it is true. We have had some free trade in some items.

The last Liberal government arranged with the United States a proposition whereby we could have free trade in farm implements. At that time the Canadian manufacturers said that would be their ruination. Large companies such as the Massey-Harris company were loud in condemnation of that proposition at that time. Yet it was the best thing that ever happened because it opened to them a large market in the United States.

Free trade with Britain naturally does not come into the same classification as free trade with the United States because you are not dealing with like levels of population. But it has some merit as far as you can let it go without doing too much damage to our industries in this country. So when this present government turned down the proposition of Great Britain that over a period of years we would approach towards the goal of free trade, as far as the people out west were concerned, the Prime Minister, who comes from the west, had sold them down the river.

I do not think there is anyone who can tell them anything different. If he had said that he would look into the proposition and over a period of years would try to slacken tariff barriers between Great Britain and ourselves, I think they would have gone along with that proposition. But no mention is made of that at all. The whole Conservative party is appalled at the idea of going into any free trade with anybody. It is definitely against Conservative policy. So our friend from Prince Albert, who of his own volition would like to go along with this idea and who for 15 years has talked as the champion of the farmers from the west, at the first opportunity that any Canadian has ever had to bring in free trade and the opportunity for farmers in the west to buy in the same market as that in which they are obliged to sell—and he is the first Canadian who has had that opportunity—has turned it down.

At the time this proposal was made by Great Britain I noticed some articles in the paper by heads of manufacturing concerns who would likely be hit if free trade was gone into, one of them being the head of a wire company—I think it was the Greening wire company—who said his costs of operation were of the order of 240 against Great Britain's 90. I used to be in the mercantile business in the west some years ago and when I came to this house in 1949 or just prior to that time I was selling barbed wire which is sold to most farmers who raise cattle. I was selling that item at a little bit over $5 a roll. I was surprised to find out this summer that it is now $15 a roll. Why is it $15 a roll? Because Mr. Greening, who gave his figures himself, has been allowed, under a system of protection, to raise his price to $15. That is at the retail level. He will not get that because there will be the cost of distribution and so on to be taken into consideration.

Mr. Rowe: It has risen from $5 to $15?

Mr. Harrison: It has risen in that way.

Mr. Rowe: Is barbed wire the only thing that has risen in price?

Mr. Harrison: It is not the only thing that has risen in price but it is one thing that has risen where this one man connected with the industry affected was afraid it was going to be injured and naturally started to howl right away. In other words because of the protection this company had they have allowed their costs to run wild. Naturally our living standards are higher here than in Great Britain and you can expect that they would be somewhat higher over here. But lately we have been concerned in this house about farming and we have been passing legislation for loans to farmers, or cash advances, as they are called. Free trade is something that would have done far more for them. Wire is not a big item as far as western farmers generally are concerned as it concerns only cattle raisers, but it illustrates the point I want to make. If they could buy such an item as wire at a cost of 90 as against a cost of 240 it would mean that wire would cost us something of the order of $5.60, provided there were no technicalities in it as to better production in this country or better technology and so on that might enter into it.

As far as freight is concerned, that would not enter into it too much because it would come into Fort Churchill for less money than if it came from down here. This kind of thing is an illustration of what an acceptance of some form of free trade with Great Britain would do for the farmer in the west. In other words, instead of giving him loans acceptance of this proposition would in many cases have doubled the purchasing power of their dollar and would be something basic that would help the farmer in the west.

Now it comes to the trade talks in the United States. For years the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when he was on this side of the house said what his party would do to the United States if it could ever get hold of them and so it is interesting to read about the conference that was held by the four ministers from this government who went down to talk with their opposite numbers in the United States, particularly with reference to the wheat sales and the fire sales which that country conducted. Well now you cannot do very much business, at least satisfactory business, when you want a person to give you something if you go with the attitude—indeed nine years background of the same attitude—of hitting him over the head with a stick. It is reasonable that they got the kind of reception which they did get. As I read it in this newspaper, Sinclair Weeks, United States secretary of commerce, said at the conclusion of the United States-Canadian trade conference "We fixed 'em". Well I think that is the only concrete bit of news that came out of that conference. Since then we have had a long and rosy resume from the Minister of Finance as to what took place at the conference but at no time did he ever tell us what concessions, if any, he got. You can only conlude that Mr. Weeks was right in saying he fixed them.

Now if you go further down in this article there is another comment on the two-day conference when Mr. Weeks laughed and said that he had "certainly enjoyed his two days in the state department", and that there were in fact no United States cabinet members in attendance during the last half hour of the conference. Now this is indicative of the importance which the United States attached to this conference. They left our ministers talking to themselves for the last half hour they were there. Well I do not know how you would expect anything different if you go to beat somebody over the head in that way in order to get him to do something. It is obvious since then that this mission has done absolutely nothing because now the minister of agriculture for the United States, or what goes for such in that country, Mr. Benson, is now in Japan boring further into our wheat markets.

This is the record, so far, of the present government and from the standpoint of western Canada it is pretty hard to swallow. Although we may be told to have no fear because we are led by a westerner I would say that the facts so far indicate he is in the strait-jacket of Tory policy, just the same as all those before him.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) from time to time strikes stamps to commemorate certain historical events and I think perhaps something should be done with respect to striking a stamp to commemorate some of the events in the progress —and I use that word very loosely—of the Conservative party particularly. Possibly, to commemorate Sir John A. Macdonald's operations in the west we could have a stamp with a metis with a bayonet at his throat and Louis Riel hanging up on a gibbet somewhere in the background. To commemorate the regime of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett nothing could be better than the Bennett wagon running downhill.

To come back to the present administration I often think of the Minister of Finance when he sat on this side of the house and the times he used to ask the minister of agriculture of that time what the minister was going to do with the termites in the riding of Eglinton. I was concerned about that at the time because it seemed to me if you had termites boring away at the foundations of the heart of Conservative Canada in Eglinton they might spread to other parts but, having in mind the operations of this government thus far and what they might do if they had a larger majority as far as the west is concerned, I think we might well have a stamp commemorating this government which would show a termite rampant on a field of broken promises.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time in this house I would like to express my sincere congratulations to you, sir, upon your election to the high position you now hold and also the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Courtemanche) on his position as Deputy Speaker and I also extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) for the excellent manner in which they moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Having started work in the coal mines of Nova Scotia at the age of 15 possibly I should feel somewhat outranked when I look around this house and find myself surrounded by lawyers, clergymen, professors, doctors and other professional men. However, I rise at this time to bring to the attention of this house the needs of my constituency and the governmental neglect which has existed in this part of Nova Scotia for many years. I would like to confine my remarks almost entirely to my own riding because of the urgency of some of the problems existing there which I think are very important and should be brought before the house. I would like to describe very briefly the constituency of Cape Breton North and Victoria which I represent and tell you something about that constituency and the problems of those who live there.

The constituency is one of three in the island of Cape Breton and it includes all of the county of Victoria and the northern section of the county of Cape Breton. In Victoria county is the community of Baddeck, a place made famous by Alexander Graham Bell, J. A. D. MacCurdy, and others. At this point since I am talking about Cape Breton I am very happy and proud that our present Minister of External Affairs, the Hon. Sidney Smith, is a Cape Bretoner, having been born in Port Hood in the constituency which is now represented by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen). Although this constituency is represented by a Liberal member at the moment I am quite sure that will be remedied after the next election, regardless of the political speech that was made yesterday by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond.

Since we have just commemorated Remembrance Day I think it is also appropriate to mention at this time that I am very proud of the fact that on a per capita basis Cape Breton led all of Canada in the number of enlistments in the last war.

Getting back to Baddeck, it was here that the first aeroplane flight in the British empire was made. It was here that Alexander Graham Bell and F. W. "Casey" Baldwin began experimenting with the possibilities of hydrofoil craft in 1919. The original HD-4 hydrofoil is lying on the beach at Baddeck today, and I would suggest that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources look into the possibility of having this historically valuable asset taken over and preserved for future generations. It is worthy of note that our own navy is at the present time experimenting with the 1957 version of the hydrofoil craft named the Bras d'Or after the lakes on which Bell and Baldwin first began their experiments.

In the northern part of Victoria county is the Cape Breton highlands national park. There are no industries of any kind in this county except one or two small fish plants. There is some farming, fishing and lumbering, but not on a large scale.

The tourist industry is important to this county and it must be encouraged and developed. We have some of the finest scenery to be found in Canada but it is rather difficult for a hungry man to eat scenery, so more than the tourist industry is required if the people of Victoria county are to have even a fair measure of prosperity.

A few years ago there was a gypsum plant in operation at Dingwall and it employed in the vicinity of 100 men. This may not sound like a large operation, but nevertheless it is very important in a small community. This gypsum was, of course, shipped by water and the company concerned was obliged to pay a large amount of money to maintain the dredging that was carried out annually in the harbour from where it was shipped.

As a result, because of the exorbitant cost, the company was forced to abandon its workings there and move to another part of Nova Scotia.

Nothing has been done to maintain any breakwaters at Dingwall since 1942, except for some small concrete blocks placed on loose sand in 1954. Some weeks ago the depth of water at the entrance to Dingwall harbour was in the vicinity of six or seven feet, so that even the smallest fishing boats could not enter. I am pleased to say that, through the action of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and his staff, emergency dredging is now going on. It is questionable if this dredging is working out as successfully as we would like, but we must continue with this work so as to enable the fall and winter fishing to be carried on.

We cannot stop there. I would ask the minister and his staff to take a very serious and long look at the Dingwall situation with the thought in mind of reconstructing the north breakwater which has been allowed to deteriorate for the past 15 years without any maintenance whatsoever. I understand that installations such as are required here are carried out only when deemed feasible by the economics branch within the Department of Public Works. I feel this is a very unreasonable yardstick to use when the very existence of the many families in the area is concerned. Fishing is the only means these people have of earning a living. The question is: are we to assist them, or let them starve?

Getting back to the beginning of my remarks on the Dingwall situation; not one thing was done for these men who were thrown out of work. Those who were able to, moved out, and the balance turned to fishing, but now they will not even be able to fish if we do not provide the facilities required.

These men engaged in fishing in the Dingwall, Bay St. Lawrence, New Haven, Neils Harbour, Ingonish areas and all along the north shore of Victoria county have not been asking for charity. They have been seeking from the federal government only the normal assistance usually given by governments. By this I mean they have requested breakwaters, wharves, dredging and the like. These are not luxuries, they are the necessities of the fishing industry, but requests for installations were not granted. Either their requests were not brought before the previous government or they were ignored. I feel it is ridiculous that men in this day and age should have to go out at two or three o'clock in the morning, or at any time when a storm arises, and have to work like Roman slaves of old by pulling their boats up on the shore for protection because of lack of proper harbour facilities. In the New Haven area, a breakwater is required immediately to prevent such things as I have just mentioned. I would request the Minister of Public Works to look into this matter without delay. By the expenditure of small amounts of money, a great deal can be done for the people of these areas and I trust that it will be done in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I have previously mentioned the national park. This is a decided asset to the constituency and it is a great attraction as far as tourists are concerned. It is also a great benefit to the people in the area as it provides employment for them. There is one very important question which I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), namely that wages paid to those who are working there are less than those paid for the same work done in other parts of Canada. As I understand it the rate of wages paid is governed by what is known as the prevailing rate. In the areas to which I refer there are no known standards of what is the prevailing rate because there is no industry there. In any event, I believe it is wholly wrong to pay less in Nova Scotia than elsewhere.

I cannot find any justification whatsoever for the federal government paying higher wages for the same job of work in one part of Canada than it does in another. Furthermore, if equal rates of pay were provided for similar work no matter where such work was done it would tend to increase the general wage level and so bring it into line with that paid in other parts of the country where better wages are paid. Those in the civil service receive the same salaries no matter where they work; a civil servant working in Cape Breton, for example, does not receive less because the general wage rate in the district is less than it is elsewhere, and the same should apply to those who are working in the national park.

There are several other matters I should like to mention with regard to the park. For instance, there is a great lack of suitable camping grounds, and this shortage has become a decided problem in the past few years. Camping has increased around 200 per cent I would say in recent years, and the net result has been a very serious shortage of camping areas, toilet and laundry facilities. Another problem is the need for recreational centres where movies, lectures and other forms of entertainment may be enjoyed after the daylight hours or in rainy weather.

Then, again, the highway in the park between Ingonish and Neils Harbour is very narrow and very dangerous. I feel this highway should be widened considerably and the dangerous curves removed. I should like also to recommend a program of street lighting within the park in the immediate park area. Consideration should be given, also, to the construction of a new golf club house. The present building is a converted barn and it still looks like a barn.

These suggested improvements may not, perhaps, help the residents of the area very greatly but I feel they would provide the residents of Victoria county with a certain amount of employment which is urgently required.

The Cape Breton north section of the constituency is partly rural and partly industrialized. There are two large coal mines owned by the old Sydney Collieries Limited of Dosco and some smaller mines operated by independent operators. As hon. members are fully aware conditions have not been good in the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia for quite a number of years. Competition from other sources of fuel, loss of markets to oil, loss of traditional sales to the Canadian National Railways as a result of the changeover to diesel engines in the Atlantic region have all had their effects and it has been very difficult for the industry to overcome them. A determined effort has been made by employers and employees, men and management, to bring down the cost of production. Mines have been mechanized and modernized so that the unit cost of production could be lowered. Some mines have been closed. It is sad to say that some of those mines were in communities where mining was the only source of employment. The whole economy of such communities has been wrecked and their welfare gravely threatened.

The cost of producing coal can be lowered only so far; there is a definite limit beyond which it is not possible to go. This is true especially in Cape Breton coal fields where most of the coal is mined under the sea. In fact, there are some instances where they go five miles under the water. Experts tell us that coal will again be in great demand in about 10 years, if the industry can survive that long. It needs markets, immediate markets, and many of us believe that such markets can be found, or at least partly found, in the maritime provinces by the use of coal to produce power. Cheap power is needed in the maritime provinces. In order to produce cheap power from coal there must be cheap coal and that is not possible without assistance.

The assistance we ask for is to have the coal subvention policy extended so that subventions would be paid on the movement of coal within the maritime provinces when such coal is used to produce power. This would give immediate assistance to the industry and it would also assist in the development of cheap power in the maritime provinces.

Having, shall I say, Mr. Speaker, a rough idea of what the coal miners' problems are, and the dangers they have to face daily, I do not hesitate to recommend to the government that they are deserving of every consideration that can be given by this government. Without such assistance there is grave danger that the mining industry of Nova Scotia will be no more.

While I am on the subject of coal I should like to bring to the attention of the government a matter of prime importance, not only to the coal miners of my constituency but to all the coal miners in the province of Nova Scotia. As the dominion coal board is comprised at the present time labour does not have any representation on this important body. I would suggest to the government that they give immediate consideration to this oversight and appoint a member to this board from within the ranks of the United Mine Workers of America in which all the miners of Nova Scotia are organized. Then labour would be truly represented on the coal board.

Another matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the government is the town of Sydney Mines. Here we have an unemployment insurance office that has always been a suboffice of the main one at Sydney. This causes considerable delay in processing claims and it has many other objectionable features. I feel that the Sydney Mines office should be separate from, and independent of Sydney altogether. Then, of course, the people of Victoria county could also use this office. As it is now they have to travel many miles farther to Sydney. The office is located upstairs in a building that is over 50 years old and looks it. This creates a hardship on our older citizens who have to climb several flights of stairs to file their claims. I think the time is long past when we should have a new federal building at Sydney Mines that would house the aforementioned office, the post office and other governmental departments.

Also in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, is the town of North Sydney. This is a very important seaport. It is also the Canadian National terminus for Newfoundland. Canadian National ships ply between here and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, and the well and famously-known William Carson sails between North Sydney and Argentia. After Newfoundland entered confederation there was a greatly increased business between North Sydney and Newfoundland. To take care of it a new wharf was built and modern facilities were provided. It was felt at that time that the new pier would be able to handle the business for many years to come and that the pier formerly used by the Canadian National Railways could be used as a public wharf. However, the business has already outgrown the new pier and the C.N.R. must use both the old and new wharves. This is a very happy situation, but it means that the facilities of the C.N.R. must be expanded and a new public wharf is required for North Sydney.

With a new wharf it is expected there will be a great increase in business, as already ships have had to be diverted from this port for lack of space. Others have had to wait until a berth was available. For example, last year saw 1,290 ships, representing 16 nations and aggregating 2.25 million tons, being piloted into North Sydney harbour waters and had proper facilities been available that figure would have been higher. I think we should give every encouragement to shipping as it means a great deal to the town in general as well as to the commerce of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the Minister of Public Works and his department have within the past two months taken some concrete steps toward the erection of the long-talked-about federal building at North Sydney. I would suggest to the minister that plans for this long-awaited building be proceeded with just as soon as possible.

A matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the government is the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, as passed by this house on June 27, 1955. This legislation, as I understand it, was designed to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise. As it now reads, it is definitely not benefiting the fishermen in my constituency to any appreciable degree, or in fact in any other area of Canada. An example of its ineffectiveness is that since this act was made law only 40 loans totalling approximately $41,000 have been granted to the fishermen of Nova Scotia and the figures for Newfoundland are even less impressive. I feel the reason for this is that the regulations are so stringent that the act is rendered ineffective and impractical. In plain every-day language, there is too much red tape connected with it. I would urge the government to make an immediate re-appraisal of this legislation and amend it so that it will do the job that was originally intended for it.

In my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we also have the Point Edward naval base, which contributes greatly to the economic life of the surrounding areas. A matter that I should like the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) to take particular note of is the fact that this base is not being utilized to the degree of which it is capable. At the present time they are busily engaged at the base in refitting and preparing some Bangor minesweepers which are shortly to be turned over to the Turkish government under the mutual-aid program. After that is a large question mark. There are no other prospects in sight. This is unfortunate because at the Point Edward naval base we have the workmen, the technicians and the equipment to refit ships up to and as large as the tribal class destroyer. All that is required is that some of these ships find their way to Point Edward.

May I also suggest to the minister that he give serious consideration to the basing of a minesweeper flotilla at Point Edward. This naval base has proven its worth in regard to north Atlantic defence in the past and is still of vital importance in the north Atlantic defence scheme.

I should like to serve notice on this government that the people of the constituency of Cape Breton North and Victoria have been left out in the cold for such a long, long time that they are going to require a great deal of attention to warm them up. In Nova Scotia we feel and we know that we have not shared in the growth and prosperity of the rest of Canada. Our people are not as well off; they do not have the opportunity for employment that appears to be available elsewhere.

This is one of the reasons why the increases in old age security and other benefits recently announced are of great importance to Nova Scotia. It is very welcome. It will give much needed assistance to those who require it most. The government is indeed to be commended for their attitude in this matter. This government, Mr. Speaker, has been in office only a few months but it has already demonstrated its worth. It is attacking the problems of our country with courage and ability. It has the support of the people of Nova Scotia and will have, I am sure, for a long time to come.

Finally, I should like to comment briefly on certain remarks that have been made in the house. I listened very attentively to the speech today of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). I will not comment further than to say that possibly he should endeavour to get the opportunity to try out for the cast of "My Fur Lady", which has been seen in the city recently.

As a newcomer I certainly expected that there would be a certain amount of politicking, if I am allowed to use that word, and I expected that it would be done by all parties. Of course, one thing I am very happy to see is that some of the Liberal members from the maritimes after many years of silence have realized their responsibilities and have finally decided to open their mouths on behalf of the maritimes. This is a very good thing and I hope that in the future they will join with us in securing for the maritimes the rights these provinces so richly deserve.

One observation I did make was that during the debate on the wheat bill the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart)—I am sorry he is not here—for reasons known only to himself tried to pit one province against another, one section of the country against another. That was his own idea and I do not know why he did it. Of course, it has been impressed upon my mind since I have been here that it appears to be one of the policies of the Liberal party to divide and conquer, whether it be a case of province against province, religion against religion or race against race. No matter what it is, that would appear to be their aim, as was so aptly portrayed by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). In his emotional outburst he did his best to try to promote disunity in this great country of ours.

Mr. Chevrier: You started it at your convention.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): What he succeeded in doing was to demote both himself and his party in the eyes of all Canadians who want a united and not a divided Canada. I have wondered many times since whether it was shame that made the hon. member leave the chamber shortly after he finished his speech.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: You are talking through your hat.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It is a sad day for this country, Mr. Speaker, when a member of parliament stoops so low as to use such means to try to overcome a bitter disappointment and seeks to gain party advantage at the expense of a united Canada. I say, Mr. Speaker, that no party advantage can be so important as to justify such an attack upon the unity of this country.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to be associated with those who have extended congratulations to the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of committes on their elevation to their high offices. I should like to congratulate also both the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am satisfied that they did an excellent job.

I am sure you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that if I say I feel somewhat uncomfortable on this side of the house it is only by reason of the fact that I like to face those to whom I am in the habit of speaking. I has been suggested by some other opposition members that possibly I might feel more comfortable if I were to choose the side opposite in order that I might be in the position I prefer, and if I should suddenly find myself over there I would ask you to excuse me.

It has also been suggested by others in the Social Credit group that because of our seating position in the house we find it very difficult sometimes to see the cabinet ministers when we wish to speak to them. Possibly some day, sir, we could be provided with a periscope to help us to discover whether or not certain ministers are in the house so that we could address questions to them properly.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Can you see them now?

Mr. Hahn: I can when I get up but it is a little difficult when one is seated in his place. Other hon. members may have noticed from time to time that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has made it his custom to step forward into the aisle so as to be sure that he can see to whom he is talking. Yes, I can see the ministers now, those who are here.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): What have you got, photographs?

Mr. Hahn: It is my intention to devote the major portion of my address to what I consider the most striking problem confronting Canada today, the labour situation. Before doing so, however, I feel I am somewhat duty bound and I also desire to let hon. members know something about my constituency and what is expected to take place in that area next year. As hon. members are probably aware, British Columbia will be celebrating its centennial in 1958. In my constituency of New Westminster we are very fortunate indeed to have the first and second capitals of British Columbia. The first is a district known as Fort Langley.

The former federal government and the provincial government, in co-operation with the municipal authorities and the native sons of the district, have seen fit to restore the fort and I understand that Princess Margaret has been invited to officiate at the official opening of the fort some time next year. I suggest that all members of the house, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the other members of the cabinet, would benefit by being present and taking part in the historic events upon that occasion.

I heard one member today tell us about the difficult tasks that the Prime Minister has to perform in the course of his duties and the rigid schedule which he is trying to follow. I agree with that hon. member, but in looking at today's Ottawa Journal I see a picture of the Prime Minister greeting Miss Canada and I suggest that possibly there are a good number of the junior representatives of his party in the house who would be only too happy to take over that particular task from him. It is the kind of job that possibly might be allocated to some of the other members.

Fort Langley, as I said, was the first capital of British Columbia. It is the centre of fishing and agricultural industries and today is undergoing a considerable industrial awakening. The second capital of British Columbia was the city of New Westminster, and it too is preparing to take part in the 1958 pageant marking the centennial year of our province. New Westminster is the home of British Columbia's first regiment. I consider it very unfortunate indeed that this government has not seen fit to give it the recognition it deserves.

This is possibly one of the most concentrated industrial and commercial areas within Canada. At the moment we are suffering somewhat from conditions which are making themselves more and more apparent in the way of unemployment and a lag in industrial development by reason of the policies followed by this government. However, I am satisfied that if you, sir, or any other member of this parliament should see fit to make his way to New Westminster you will be delighted with the reception you receive. We are proud of the two newer cities in our area, the cities of Langley and White Rock having been incorporated within the last two years.

One of our difficult problems is connected with the Fraser river. The river itself is a navigable stream and was declared such by a previous administration. It is being used a great deal but not to the extent it should be. The fact is that navigation is not as freely and easily conducted as it might be, but we are hoping that this government will see the light and some change in policy in respect of river development will take place.

We have another problem connected with the river. It has to do with fishing. This problem has been drawn to the attention of the Department of Fisheries. It has particularly to do with the opening of the Fraser river above the Pattullo bridge and as far as the Mission bridge to the fishing industry. The former government saw fit to close this area to fishing, but we are hopeful this administration will see the merit of reopening it, not only from the viewpoint of saving dollars for the fishermen but also to help the community as a whole.

River crossings, of course, play a major part in our development, and we have major problems arising from the fact. The former government was very adamant in its attitude toward giving assistance to these river crossings. We are hopeful that this government may see that a change is desirable. One of the leftovers we have from the former administration is the Langley airport. This airport, although started many years ago, has had to exist and to grow by being built up with the leftovers from other airports which did not require expenditures upon them. The result is that today the airport, although playing a major role in the development of agriculture and industry, is certainly in need of assistance. The present government has not indicated it intends to change the policy with respect to this airport, but I would suggest that they make a careful review of the situation to see what can be done.

In so far as harbour maintenance is concerned, I have heard a great deal about what the Conservatives inherited as a legacy from the former administration in the way of waste, extravagance and inefficiency. However, it is remarkable to me to note that this government seems to be carrying on the identical program of the former administration, which would indicate that this government is still not aware of the changes that have to take place. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) advise the house, in response to my question, that the government diking program has been changed. This will ease the problem of many municipalities in this respect.

In so far as the shipping industry is concerned naturally, having one of the main ports in Canada in the city of New Westminster, I am interested in discovering exactly what advance the present government is making in the way of establishing a shipping fleet for Canada. I took particular note of the action announced yesterday with respect to the transfer of our east coast fleet to Trinidad.

The main industry in the area is lumbering. Sales are down and the industry is suffering from problems that are common to the industry as a whole in Canada. I will not go into detail at this time in so far as those problems are concerned.

In so far as transportation is concerned, we have the Canadian National shops which, of course, do present certain problems which are not unlike those the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised so often in this house. This area does have an agricultural section, and we are still in need of the extension of the P.F.R.A. to British Columbia, or at least some assistance similar to it. We do have other problems, too, related to freight assistance on feed grains. At this point I wish to compliment the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) and congratulate him upon the prompt action he and his government saw fit to take in assisting the turkey raisers, after hearing recommendations from me and interviewing the turkey raisers themselves. I recognize that this assistance is only temporary, but it is a step in the right direction of meeting a problem when it arises.

This brings me to the main problem which faces my area at this particular moment. I speak of the question of unemployment. Recently the Prime Minister made a statement which caused me a good deal of concern. What he said has been carried by many newspapers throughout the country.

The Montreal Gazette of November 9 carried a very lucid account of this particular statement. The article reads, in part:

"It seems clear," he added, "that the strategy of the high command of the Liberal party is to spread fear and gloom and preach doom and to pretend that where unemployment exists this (Progressive Conservative) government is to blame."

. . . "there has been a levelling off during the last year and a half."

I am very pleased to hear there is a levelling off of the unemployment situation. I hope that the figures we have today will indicate that the levelling off period has been completed. However, I do not believe the government is facing the facts. The fact of the matter is that we do have unemployment in Canada today. It is true, as the Prime Minister has suggested in this article, and in some of his statements, that we have more people employed in Canada today than probably at any other time. But it is also a recognized fact that if we have more than 1 per cent or 2 per cent of our labouring force unemployed then we have above the point usually allowed for transitional employees, that is, those who go from one job to the next.

I am rather disturbed when the Prime Minister of this country tries to shrug off a situation in which unemployment in this country has increased to such an extent that it causes a great number of industrialists and a great number of labourers a great deal of concern. Yet, the Prime Minister tells us we should not worry. In this article the Prime Minister goes on to say:

"Criticism is of the essence in our system," he said. "But the sowing of fear of mass unemployment is a dangerous course to follow, for it can lead to a depression complex whether so intended or not."

I must agree with what the Prime Minister has to say in respect of a fear complex. However, facing reality does not mean necessarily that one is trying to inject fear into the people. This is a matter of facing the facts. As I read this article I wondered whether this was a deliberate attempt on the part of the Prime Minister—I do not believe it was but it might be interpreted as such—to coerce and to prevent the members of parliament from bringing this particular matter to the attention of the people as a whole.

We are faced with a problem that industrialists, members of parliament and governments at all levels must take hold of at this time and examine into. I ask this question. How long are we to wait before be decide that conditions are of such a grave nature that we are expected to say something to the people about them? When is the government going to become aware of it? Or must I wait until my constituents write to me about it before I have anything to say in respect of the matter?

I do not care a hoot whether the Prime Minister inherited this problem from the Conservatives or whether he inherited it from the Liberals. The fact of the matter is that many thousands of people are unemployed in New Westminster riding and in Canada and I am concerned about those particular people. My main interest is in knowing what is going to be done about it. As I say, men and women are out of work by the thousands. What is this parliament prepared to do? What is labour prepared to do? What is industry prepared to do? This is not a time for us to wear a blindfold. It is the time for us to be alert to the problem that faces this country and to try to do something about it.

Political parties throughout this country—that means in particular C.C.F.'ers, Liberals, Conservatives or Social Crediters—have all indicated that we are quite prepared to sit down with this government to see whether or not we can resolve the problems that face the nation today. It is with that fact in mind that I speak, namely that this government has a greater degree of co-operation than any government hitherto has ever had in that respect. There is no one rising in this house for the purpose of opposition just for the sake of opposition alone. They are here for only one purpose and that is to bring to the attention of the government a solution to the problem or at least a solution that we think might be desirable and one that we could use.

Mr. Baskin: Have you any suggestions?

Mr. Hahn: I am coming to the suggestions if you will just give me time. A few days ago when it was announced that the Britannia mine might be forced to close it was suggested in the house—again not with deliberate intent—that possibly that was a responsibility of the province. I am not denying that possibly the province might have some responsibility. Certainly the industry has as a whole and the industry has recognized that fact. So have the members of parliament. Some few weeks ago when members from all parties were called in by the mine union officials to discuss this question because it appeared then that the mine might be closed we submitted a telegram to this government in respect of what we hoped might be done and we are still waiting for a reply to the telegram. Things have not changed from the good old days of the Liberals. You present a suggestion, you wire them, you explain it to them and yet you still wait for their reply.

Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that that is the way in which this particular problem should be met. It is not a case where a government should try to pass the buck to another government and indicate that the solution to the problem lies in their hands. The solution to the problem lies in the hands of all the members in this house as well as the other government that might be involved, as well as industry and labour itself. We must keep these industries in operation. It is most important to the economy of Canada and more particularly to the economy of the district in which they might be located.

What are the facts in respect of unemployment. At page 805 of Hansard of November 6, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in reply to a question posed by the former minister of fisheries, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair), indicated a comparison of figures in respect of unemployment in my province. I refer you to those particular figures from which you will discover, Mr. Speaker, that the unemployment condition has practically doubled in the province of British Columbia. By way of example, at September 20, 1956, there were 15,619 unemployed—that is a year ago—this year, on September 19, there were 29,837 unemployed, or practically double the number. In Canada as a whole the situation while not so severe is as follows. The number of unemployed in 1956 on September 20 was 158,804 as compared with 255,896 on September 15, 1957. As to my own particular district of New Westminster, I have a clipping from the British Columbian. I must say that it is an excellent newspaper. I am referring to the issue dated November 7, 1957. This particular news item is headed, "New Arrivals Swell Unemployed; 4500 New Jobs Created but Jobless Lists High". This particular story tells an unfortunate tale indeed. It begins in this way:

> Numerous small and temporary lay-offs in lumber manufacturing, construction and secondary manufacturing has created an early upswing in the number of persons registered for employment with the national employment service.

It goes on to say this:

> At the end of October, 4,500 men and 1,300 women were seeking work through the national employment service.

Mr. Speaker, those figures are most significant when compared with those of one year ago. The figure at that time was 2,200 and two years ago it was 2,900. I say to you that here we have an instance of well over twice as many individuals unemployed in an area and yet it is suggested that if we say that the unemployment condition in this country is severe, then we are being unfair. No, the Prime Minister did not say that but the Prime Minister said that we are spreading gloom and fear for only one purpose, pretending that where unemployment exists this government is to blame.

I am not blaming the government particularly, or not just this government. It is a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, that possibly the Bank of Canada is as much to blame as anyone. But we cannot assess the blame on anyone but ourselves because we are responsible to the people of this country and it is our responsibility to see to it that they have jobs if there are no jobs. Certainly it is not the job of anyone else or a situation for which we might assess someone else as being to blame. This article continues:

> Of those at present seeking work 27 per cent are from outside the New Westminster and Fraser valley areas, the highest percentage yet recorded,—

That, sir, was what gave me cause to rise in my place on October 31 and ask a question of the Minister of Labour. At that time I asked him this question as reported at page 598 of Hansard:

> What consideration, if any, is the government giving to the suggestion to the unemployed that they would be well advised to remain in the community in which they now live unless directed to some other labour field in the Canadian market by the officers of the unemployment insurance commission?

The minister very kindly replied as follows:

> In the first place the government, or the unemployment insurance commission in this case, is hardly in a position to suggest to an individual who is interested in finding work that he should remain in a locality where he cannot get employment. People will insist on remaining free to look for work wherever it may be found.

That is true and I would agree with him that they insist on that. But certainly this government could direct them and could say that it is bad business to go into an area today where we have too many people at the present time who are looking for work.

Potentially we believe that we might expect a great number more of unemployed. Not too long ago I believe the Canadian Labour Congress rather indicated that they expected some 750,000 people to be unemployed this winter. In the Ottawa Citizen of November 8 I find it says that a qualified government official predicted that unemployment this winter will likely hit 750,000, the highest figure since the end of the second world war. Yet we are supposed to show no concern over the fact that we have in the Canadian Congress of Labour men and women who are interested in the labour field indicating that they expect an all-time high in unemployment. At the same time qualified government officials indicate they expect an all-time high in unemployment and we are advised that we should not show the natural interest in this matter which I think we have a right to show and are indeed expected to show.

Now the reasoning is wrong. This question must be resolved. The only place it can be resolved is in the parliament of Canada. That is why we are here and that is what we are supposed to do. We should assist the government in taking care of these matters and I think we are all quite prepared to do so; I know we as a party are and I am convinced that others are too. I have many other clippings I could read but my time is running out very rapidly. However, I have a couple of editorials with me from newspapers across the country in respect of utterances of the Prime Minister.

The Ottawa Citizen of November 7 indicates in the early part of an editorial that the Prime Minister had denounced the Liberals at Toronto. Well I do not blame him for denouncing the Liberals; that has been his business for a good many years and I suppose he will be denouncing the Liberals long after they are dead and gone, if such is the case.

Mr. Stanton: Very successfully.

Mr. Hahn: My hon. friend says very successfully.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One dead horse kicking another.

Mr. Hahn: Well at any rate the article goes on to use unnecessarily harsh words about the Prime Minister which I do not feel add anything to the discussion and so I will not put them on the record. However, further down it says:

> And the prospect of large-scale unemployment this winter has been tacitly admitted by the government, which has taken steps to try to reduce it. For one thing, it has cut down immigration (a mistaken policy, in this newspaper's opinion, but that is another matter). For another, it has made $150 million available at low interest rates for low-cost housing.

Well these may be cures, but the article goes on to say:

> And jobs don't depend on public debate; they depend on export markets, inflation, population growth, and similar factors.

This is possibly a condition which this government did inherit from the Liberals, the fact we did not have export markets, and it is something which some of the hon. members of this house tried to do something about a year ago, namely early in the spring when the other administration was in office. We asked them to see to it that they traded and accepted sterling either bloc or convertible—or inconvertible for that matter—and see to it that they opened up channels of trade one way or another. However as usual such was not the case.

This article goes on to say:

> It is up to the government to give a lead on this issue,

It is up to the parliament to do something about it. Hon. members may consider that because I was quoting from the Ottawa Citizen I was using a somewhat biased newspaper but I have a clipping from a Vancouver paper which British Columbia members would recognize as the official organ of the Conservative party; it has this to say:

> What we call our "way of life" in western societies is now under test as never before.

This article appeared on November 5, 1957 and the way of life referred to of course is our way of life as compared with the communist way of life. It goes on:

> The internal threat is less clearly identified because it is composed of a number of things. The test of western society's fitness to survive will rest on the realism and courage with which it faces up to, and finds solutions for, its own weaknesses.

We must find a solution to our own weaknesses and unemployment is a weakness which has been with us since the early thirties and a long time before that and if democratic society is to exist and continue to exist it is our responsibilty to see to it that we do not have unemployment. I read on:

> If during an era when the communist system is forging ahead, with its working force straining to keep up with productive demands, our society fails to keep its own people usefully employed, this will be a most dangerous failure.
> Though the communist system may prove to be one of the greatest let-down's in history, the fact will not help us if our system becomes embroiled in internal difficulties for which many will not be able to see any rational reason.

You cannot rationalize with a person who is unemployed, who has no job and has not a full bread box. You can understand only too well, as should this government, how difficult it is to try to convince these people that this thing must be, that we should have unemployment regularly. I beseech you, sir, to advise the government—well it is not your position to do so, I recognize that—but through you I would request the government to give further attention to this particular question.

The reason the communist government is as strong as it is today is because of happy men and contented men who not only have their stomach full but have jobs as well. They do have jobs, whether they are forced to do them by slave labour or not—I am not here to argue at this time. That is one of the reasons they are a happy and contented lot, in so far as one can be happy and contented under slavery. Therein lies the strength of communism and if we are going to fight it we will have to fight it by looking after our own backyard and seeing to it that the people of this country are fully employed.

The Vancouver and district labour council wrote to I think all the members from British Columbia submitting the problem in so far as they were concerned. I have with me the letter addressed to myself dated November 8, 1957 requesting that I attend a meeting. It says:

> The purpose of the meeting is to discuss ways and means of alleviating unemployment which is prevalent in this area at the present time, and is increasing daily at an alarming rate. Predictions are that it will reach an all-time high very soon unless people in authority, together with industry, take steps immediately to provide work for those unemployed.

Now we are told by this government that conditions are not too bad and that we are spreading a fear complex if we continue in this vein. Certainly labour itself recognizes the problem and I say that we should see to it that we recognize it also. The city of Vancouver, I read from a news item of Tuesday, November 5, says this:

> Vancouver's appeals to the senior governments for public projects to fight unemployment will be meaningless if voters turn down the city's five-year plan in December.

Now the city of Vancouver is trying to keep its men and women in work and therein lies another problem. The premier of my own province had this to say, and I now read from a news clipping also of November 5:

> Premier Bennett proposed Monday that if the Bank of Canada did not heed Finance Minister Donald Fleming's opposition to tight money, "it be reorganized immediately".

I am sure our good friend from Westmorland (Mr. Murphy), who seems to be out of his element in his own party because they brought on this tight money policy if I understand correctly, will appreciate this.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Speak for yourself over there.

Mr. Hahn: I am speaking for myself. We have found so many individuals suddenly realizing there is something wrong with the economics in this country that I think it is high time that they take a look around and if they are sitting with the wrong party they should come over and sit with the proper one. I go on to quote from the same article:

> Mr. Bennett said the provincial government, besides highway spending, is spending $100 million this year through the toll highways authority, the B.C. power commission, and the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

They are spending $100 million to build roads in the province, continue with power projects and the expansion of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

We would make it a point today to change our trade policies. What are we afraid of in respect to an examination into the operations of the Bank of Canada and the control it has in this country? Certainly I say it is high time that we in this parliament brought the directors before us and made them answerable for the policies that have been forced on this nation, and for the unemployment in which we have been embroiled as a result.

It is not enough for a province to do that. Our province has gone a step further, it has sent a trade delegation to Europe to carry on negotiations which the federal government should have carried on earlier. I know, as everyone in this house knows, that the present government has had only a period of five months in which to do these things and I recognize that the government is a new government and has to be established as such; it has not had experience for 22 years. Nevertheless, the problems raised in this house having been drawn to its attention so frequently I think it is high time something was done about them.

I have only one request to make in conclusion, and that is that we put Canada first. All political parties have declared that they will co-operate, and they have indicated in this house that they would do so. Let us, therefore, put Canada first and get the people back to work.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is with legitimate pride and great humility that I rise to make my maiden speech in this distinguished house and to represent my fellow Canadians in Trinity riding by speaking in this debate in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by Her Gracious Majesty the Queen at the memorable opening of this twenty-third parliament of Canada.

As I apply myself to the discharge of my responsibilities I should like first to express my gratitude to the electors of Trinity for having chosen me as their representative the only Liberal from Toronto in this House of Commons—and I pray that I may always serve this chamber, my constituents and fellow Canadians with loyalty and devotion. I am honoured to be associated in this house with five of my colleagues in the medical profession, and with the first Italian and the first Chinese Canadians to sit in this house, and I believe I experience some of their emotions because I happen to be the first Canadian of Polish descent to be elected to the House of Commons.

May I congratulate the Speaker of the House of Commons upon his election to this high office and responsibility. I offer him my sincere support and co-operation. To you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I extend my sincere felicitations and offer true co-operation. May I also congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for their fine performances.

I confess I deeply regret that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) has announced his intention to resign his post for reasons of health. Along with the rest of the Canadian public I have admired his firmness, dignity and devotion to duty which enabled the Liberal government to give Canada the greatest measure of national unity, full nationhood, international standing and unprecedented economic prosperity. That is why I am proud to be associated with this great Canadian party of reform under the guidance of the present Leader of the Opposition who now takes his place in Canadian history alongside Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John A. Macdonald.

I am proud to belong to Canada's one and only truly national party. Let me remind hon. members opposite that it was the Liberal party which obtained the largest majority of votes in the last election. I must also confess that I was scandalized to hear from my colleagues on this side of the house that the Tory party had one set of election promises for the people of the province of Quebec and a totally different one for the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Monteith: You are wrong.

Mr. Lesage: You did not hear them; I did.

Mr. Haidasz: I am also sorry that the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) should have been placed in the position of a two-faced politician by his colleagues, for in Toronto he had to say one thing last week, and four months ago he had to say a totally different thing to the people in Three Rivers.

And now, Mr. Speaker, as is the custom, I should like to acquaint especially the newcomers to this house with the particular features of Trinity and the needs of its constituents which were so ably served by distinguished members who have preceded me such as Hugh Plaxton, Senator Arthur Roebuck, the late Lionel Conacher and Donald Carrick.

Trinity is located in the southwestern sector of the great metropolis of Toronto. The southern limit of my riding borders on lake Ontario and the Toronto harbour. The armouries, Fort York, and the world-renowned park of the Canadian national exhibition occupy the southern portion along with the great industries of Massey-Harris and John Inglis.

The dependable industrious, and public-spirited residents of Trinity represent the most complete cross-section of any Canadian metropolis. The stalwart Anglo-Saxons and Irish comprise the majority of its population, followed by the Italians, the Poles, the Jewish, Ukranians, Slovaks, Lithuanians, Czechs and many others. Among these there is also an active group of people from the West Indies federation which I hope will soon join us in the family of sovereign nations, the British commonwealth. The rich traditions and the cultures one thousand years old or more and the firsthand experiences in the struggle against communist tyranny of many of these newcomers to freedom-loving Canada have already contributed and will continue to contribute immeasurably to the stature of this great country. This enviable mosaic, composed of different sizes, shapes and colours is, may I assure you, strongly cemented not only by a common allegiance to the crown and a common Canadian citizenship but also by convictions of loyalty, pride and faith in the past, present and future of Canada.

At this point in my address may I pay tribute to the first Polish immigrant to become a citizen of Toronto 100 years ago, an engineer who built so many railroads, highways and bridges in Ontario that he was elevated to knighthood by Queen Victoria. The name of this man, who worked and resided in Trinity riding and who contributed so much to the development of Toronto and Ontario was Sir Casimir Gzowski. The city council of Toronto paid tribute to his memory last year by naming a park in his honour.

Another new Canadian who contributed to the development of this country is Stephen Roman, a Slovak immigrant, who came to this great land of opportunity less than 20 years ago with only a few dollars in his pocket, but who by hard work and brain power formed, among other companies, the world's largest uranium mine, the Consolidated Denison Mines of which he is president. That is why at this point I pay tribute to the wise and courageous policy of immigration of Mackenzie King, a policy vigorously and successfully carried out by the former minister of immigration, Mr. Harris, and by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

Since it is the duty of a loyal opposition to oppose, I cannot see how one can offer effective opposition without constructive criticism. Yet, I very well know that in many minds political criticism is today frequently regarded as an ugly word, conjuring up pictures of insidious radicals and non-conformists. And before we realize it political criticism can become regarded as an un-Canadian activity instead of democracy's greatest safeguard.

Nowhere in the world more ardently than in the Kremlin is the critic considered a conspirator and as one deserving of exile and frequently death. That is why communist Kremlin, believing itself to be infallible, and determined to revolutionize this world into a godless communist society, continues in the minds of free men to be intolerant and intolerable. In the western civilization, the traditional attitude is that criticism is an attempt to test whether what is, might not be better.

Edmund Burke once said that "a nation without means of reform is without means of survival", and I personally believe that no reform can be achieved in a truly free democratic state without honest and vigorous criticism. Therefore, it is my ardent hope that this government will never resent criticism.

The city council and the citizens of Toronto expect great things from this government, and this hope is based upon the election promises of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and upon the very close friendship and co-operation which now exist between the Prime Minister of Canada, the premier of Ontario and the super-mayor of metropolitan Toronto, who sat together in the front row in Massey hall on that memorable day of April 25, 1957, at the opening of the Conservative election campaign.

At last the taxpayers of Toronto, burdened with municipal taxes steadily rising to intolerable levels, will get relief if only these election promises are all kept. Toronto has been expanding so rapidly that the taxes levied on its home-owners have become an unjust burden because they have to pay for municipal services that were basically the responsibility of the provincial and federal governments.

Education, the building of schools, the relief of the indigent and the vast number of unemployed, the building of hospitals, slum clearance, subsidization of low-cost housing, the administration of justice, the building of roadways and freeways and safer railway crossings should be met also by the provincial and federal governments. Furthermore, many responsible Torontonians are alarmed at the nonchalant attitude and delays of certain levels of government in refusing to start financing the projects of the Metropolitan Toronto Conservation Authority in order to remove the dangers of the Humber and Don river valleys which, during hurricane "Hazel" took the lives of 81 of our citizens.

In this address I consider it a pleasant duty to defend also the interests of the small businessman of whom there are over 2,000 in Trinity and who are hard pressed and heading for bankruptcy owing to the greedy expansion of giant chain stores. The present Prime Minister, in his opening campaign speech in Toronto last April, stated that the Tories will undertake to set up a committee composed of members of the cabinet and representatives of small business associations from all of Canada to take necessary effective action to assist small business, the backbone of our national business. May I remind the Prime Minister that he has done nothing and forecast nothing about this election promise.

I also urge the present government to change the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase benefits from 31 to 52 weeks for the unemployed and also to eliminate waiting periods for payments, as was promised in Toronto and other parts of Canada during his election campaign.

When I voted for the $9 increase for the senior citizens I did not forget to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) of the promise of his government to include an escalator clause to protect this $9 rise against the rising cost of living and to gear it to the national productivity. I reminded him during that debate that the senior citizens, depending solely on the old age pension of $55, have barely enough for three nutritious meals for 30 days. Where are those poor people who depend solely on the old age pension to get the money for shelter, clothing and other essential hygienic products to lead a decent life? That is why I urge this government to use their influence on Premier Frost to be more just and to be even generous in his province's share to care for those destitute senior citizens.

In my riding of Trinity I have over 1,000 old age pensioners in homes for the aged such as Lambert Lodge and Hilltop Acres. I was horrified last summer when metropolitan Toronto took from those old age pensioners $5 out of their $6 increase, which is a very unjust act for I believe that all of us in this House of Commons, when we vote for an increase for these old age pensioners we believe that that increase belongs to them and is not intended to reimburse municipalities for their obligation to our destitute senior citizens.

During my varied experience as a practitioner of medicine among the working class, the poor and the aged in Toronto, and mostly in my riding of Trinity, I have become intimately aware of and particularly concerned with the medical needs and the social welfare of my constituents and that is why I regret that in the speech from the throne there was no mention whatsoever of hospital insurance and diagnostic services. The advances of medicine in alleviating suffering and preventing disease were steadily made available to all Canadians by the progressive and beneficial assistance of the national health plans of the previous government. Federal grants to hospitals, co-operation in the production of Salk vaccine, numerous other services and a variety of pensions brought substantial relief to a wide sector of our citizens. The immediate availability of the benefits of the National Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act can provide considerable relief in the cost of sickness. Credit is due to the members of the 22nd parliament for passing unanimously this most significant piece of social welfare legislation and, above all, to the distinguished former minister of national health and welfare whose tireless energy and persistent determination made this dream come true.

I join with those who regret that the Ontario hospital commission will not provide these benefits prior to January 1, 1959 and that, as recently announced, this commission has disallowed outpatient diagnostic and laboratory services which federal legislation, enacted on April 12, 1957, so generously provided.

I therefore respectfully appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to use his influence on the Ontario government to bring these benefits to our ailing citizens earlier and in a fuller measure. There are many other health problems whose solutions are urgently needed—and I draw them to the attention of the minister—such as mental health research and the modern care of the mentally ill, cancer research, research into chronic diseases such as heart disease, arthritis, blindness problems and especially helping to set up glaucoma clinics and banks for corneal transplant tissues, infant and maternal mortality, dental decay, alcoholism, increasing highway traffic deaths which are occurring every summer on our highways and many other medical problems.

I also support every effort of the provincial and federal health departments to ban the indiscriminate sale of tranquilizing drugs and to order their use only upon the recommendation of the patient's physician.

To solve these problems we need more hospitals, more research workers, more doctors, nurses and technicians. The existing shortage of personnel demands a more vigorous program of education and specialized training.

Never before has our way of life demanded so much scientific education as now and yet, unfortunately, Canada today is in a situation unique in her history. Never before have there been so few in the age group 15 to 25 years in proportion to those in other decennial age groups. This has been brought about by the low birth rate in the 1930's. Moreover, emigration to the United States of our university graduates and skilled workers has long been heavy.

Another contributing factor to this shortage, and especially to the shortage of teachers and professors, is the recent clamping down on migration of teachers, professors and other skilled workers from the countries of central Europe to Canada. It might be interesting to note that of every 100 children in Canada who start school only seven enter a university and only five obtain a degree, and very few of these ever become scientists.

Among other causes of this dearth of scientists, engineers and teachers are the poor salaries for professors, lack of funds, insufficient incentive, decline of prestige of educated people and increasing numbers of self-satisfied citizens who seem quite certain that everything desirable in life is to be found in a ranch style bungalow, a television set, travel and convivial gatherings. These people are avid for the products of science, particularly in medicine and entertainment, but they feel no attraction for a life dedicated to intellectual discipline nor for scientists as personalities.

Now that the very material things in which most people put their trust are in jeopardy Canada and the western world are faced with a need for scientists. An editorial in a Canadian weekly magazine of contemporary affairs remarked last month that "Sputnick is a symbol not so much of Russian superiority as of the failure of American and Canadian education". A NATO committee reported last month that the Soviet union is graduating nearly twice as many scientists on a per capita basis as the NATO countries put together and is also accelerating her output rate.

The need for scientists in Canada was forecast at a conference on scientific and technical manpower at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, in September, 1956. It was stated there that by 1980 Canada must quadruple her currently employed 40,000 engineers, probably more than quadruple today's scientist force of 20,000 and produce ten times as many technicians and have 55,000 university teachers. These fabulous figures are most alarming. In Canada there have been cries of alarm and some talk from the leaders of the present government, but the fears and suggestions of Canada's research directors and scientists warn us that the government is hindering the progress of scientific research by ordering cuts in expenditures.

In spite of the appeals for aid for scientific research and in spite of the election promises by Conservative party candidates of federal grants for education, these same people ignored in the throne speech the urgent need for such aid and ignored mentioning any federal grants to our universities which constitute our very first line of defence. I am sure many members and many Canadians were humiliated and scandalized as I was that Dr. Norman MacKenzie, president of the University of British Columbia has just returned from a tour of the United States to beg United States industrialists to give donations to Canadian universities and colleges.

I urge the government that this session of parliament should not close without granting financial aid to our universities and without giving grants to aid needy but talented students. Recently Walter Gordon, of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, stated that learning should receive economic help even if this meant we could not spend quite as much on other things. I would also recommend the formation of a national education and research committee to advise governments and universities and to solicit financial aid from governments, industries and private benefactors. I highly commend my colleague on this side of the house, the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl) for proposing the following resolution which appeared on the opening day of parliament:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act so as to provide for the exemption from income taxes of tuition fees paid to universities—

He also included other schools of higher learning.

—as well as the costs to students o fall textbooks and scientific equipment—

We can assist our universities tremendously by introducing more liberal changes in our tax laws to encourage corporations to donate more money toward educational purposes such as to expand university facilities, provide more teachers and scientists, increase professors' salaries and promote scientific research, both pure and applied. More money should be available for scholarships, bursaries and loan funds even at high school level as well as at college and post-graduate levels in order to identify, encourage and support our young Canadians who have the incentive and aptitude to profit by advanced training. Industry and government could also help students help themselves by providing more summer employment and by exempting these students from unemployment insurance pay deductions. The provision of facilities to expand our universities and to provide bursaries for teachers to take summer courses would also help our drive to promote scientific advancement and produce more teachers.

Education and scientific research are the foundation of our national strength which will serve to increase our international stature and serve as a strong factor in the preservation of security and freedom. In order to preserve peace and freedom and, above all, to check the threat of communism which subordinates its peoples and policies in order to achieve its goal of world domination, we must reappraise our standards. The danger and tragedy of the progressive march of communism and the ruthless extirpation by communist dictators of freedom and basic human rights in peace-loving countries such as Hungary, Poland, the Ukraine, East Germany, the Baltic states and the Balkan countries is most appalling. A few weeks ago we marked the first anniversary of the uprisings in Hungary and Poland against their oppressors. By resisting communist tyranny with heavy personal sacrifice these people undermined the progress of communism and helped our western world in the fight against this godless and ruthless force.

The Liberal government may well be proud of its contribution of economic aid and swift emergency immigration measures to assist refugees from those areas, an act which proved that Canada backs her words with concrete action and which raised our country's stature in the eyes of the free world.

It was indeed fortifying to hear Her Majesty state that the ministers of the present government will do their utmost to participate in NATO and the United Nations in order to preserve peace. We are hopeful that the meeting of the fifteen NATO heads will determine definite and workable plans to enable co-operation in the pooling of scientific knowledge, co-ordination of defence and the extension of economic and cultural assistance to the countries that are in need.

By working through the United Nations, just one year ago the former secretary of state for external affairs was able to divert the dangerous course of the Suez crisis. This achievement in diplomacy in the United Nations' forum won him the Nobel Peace Prize, bringing distinction and honour to himself, his party, to this house and to Canada. This Canadian idea of the United Nations emergency force was a godsend. After a whole year of operation it has proved to be a great success and has provided security in Israel, so frequently heretofore endangered. The longer the United Nations police force stays in Aqaba and Gaza, the more established the role of this force becomes as an instrument to prevent hostilities. It might be a wise thing, therefore, to use an ounce of prevention by sending such an international peace force to other threatened borders.

It is, however, a sad fact to hear that the United Nations has difficulty in financing this expeditionary force, especially as a result of the Soviet bloc refusal to contribute to its upkeep. This is further proof of the Soviet union's lack of co-operation and lack of interest in preserving peace in troubled areas. In addition to using the United Nations police force on troubled borders, the United Nations' task of preserving peace in the Middle East will be well served if the Canadian delegation plays its part by encouraging the Arab states to recognize the fact that Israel is a real and permanent state in the Middle East and that a basis for co-existence should be found. By demanding the solving of the Arab refugee problem and by advocating a United Nations sponsored economic aid and technical development program our delegation will contribute a lot towards bringing stable conditions into the Middle East and the other countries in central Europe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue my address in another official language which I admire and learned to speak while a student at Ottawa university.

(Translation):

And so, while the free world battles to check the rising tide of communism, it should not forget the victims of communism who sacrificed family possessions and even a career so as to be at the forefront of those who are fighting communist tyranny.

Have we so soon forgotten that we have celebrated the anniversaries of the revolt of the Polish workers at Poznan and of the Hungarian revolt in Budapest? We have been recently reminded of those anti-communist rebellions by the United Nations moral condemnation of Kremlin tyranny. We can all take pride in the fact that Canada, from the very beginning, played an outstanding part in welcoming the refugees from communist oppression. According to Red Cross authorities, 30,000 refugees still remain in camps in Austria and Yugoslavia. To these must be added approximately 200,000 Poles, Slovaks, Lithuanians, Czechs and others who have fled various satellite countries. Those too have resisted communism and sacrificed all to recover their liberty. And yet on July 1st the Tory government all but slammed the door in their faces. Instead of applying a firm immigration policy it has acted in a fumbling and shameless way, making short work of one of its election promises. In his opening campaign speech in Toronto on April 25 last, the Prime Minister stated that the Conservatives would undertake an aggressive immigration policy, in co-operation with the provinces, in order to bring into Canada immigrants possessing the necessary skills and training. The Conservative government, he said, would increase and promote immigration, instead of hampering it. I feel that I should remind the present ministers that their duty now consists in taking immediate and fearless action in this regard.

Yesterday, during the ceremonies of Remembrance day, when paying tribute to our gallant soldiers, airmen and seamen, did we think of the supreme sacrifice they made during the first and second World Wars? Did we also recall the sacrifices of the French underground forces, of the heroes of the British 8th army in Italy, of the brave soldiers of the 3rd United States army in France, of the heroes of the R.A.F. and of the Polish squadrons during the battle of Britain? Did we forget about the sacrifice of the Polish artillery divisions at Mount-Cassino? Finally, last but not least, have we already forgotten the millions of human beings, Jews and Gentiles alike, who suffered and even died under dreadful tortures in Nazi concentration camps or in Russian forced labour camps? Let us not forget that what they died for is worth preserving now.

May I make further remarks in French, a language I so gladly learned to speak in the happy years when I was studying philosophy at the University of Ottawa. As a humble Torontonian, I was treated with courtesy and great kindness by the reverend Oblate Fathers and my French-Canadian fellow students. As a new member of the house, and on the occasion of my first speech here, let me publicly express to them my appreciation and esteem. The various elements of French culture I have gathered there have been a welcome addition to my education.

In this 23rd parliament which looms so large in the history of Canadian politics, I am happy to find myself in the company of five colleagues from the medical profession. I am also particularly happy to find myself in the company of the first Canadians of Italian and Chinese descent to be members of the House of Commons. I daresay that I share their feelings unreservedly, being myself the first Canadian of Polish descent to sit in this honourable house.

I am also proud to represent the cosmopolitan constituency of Trinity which in the past elected such well-known members as Hugh Plaxton, Lionel Conacher, Donald Carrick and Senator Roebuck. Like them, I wish to dedicate my life to the service of this, my native constituency. May I in this way show my gratitude towards Canada—"mon pays, mes amours", to use a phrase from the French Canadian song which I often sang on St. John the Baptist day.

Should I admit that I bend under the burden of so much dignity and responsibility imposed upon me by my duties as a representative of my fellow citizens? However, let me add at once that I take heart at the thought that, as the sole liberal member from the city of Toronto, I follow in the footsteps of a great parliamentarian and legal authority, the very distinguished former prime minister (Mr. St. Laurent), until recently leader of a Liberal government which gave our great country its most glowing years of harmony and economic development ever witnessed in our history. Bold and clear-minded architect of the full emancipation of our country, a statesman whom posterity will consider as a leading figure of the Liberal party, he saved world peace, on October 19, 1956, in directing the conduct of our representatives at the United Nations Organization. "Man's time being short," as mentioned in Holy Writ, this highly regarded leader wishes to leave the parliamentary scene. He will be remembered as one of the most important personalities in the political history of Canada. This man was a great leader and more particularly a great Canadian.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, may I first, as is the custom of the house, join with speakers who have preceded me in this debate in the congratulations they have extended to you and to the Deputy Speaker. These are no formal congratulations, sir, but a sincere tribute to one who by his fairness, tact, dignity and constant good humour, sometimes under the most trying circumstances, has earned the respect of all hon. members of this house. I must also congratulate the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), the mover of the address in reply to Her Majesty's speech, and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault), who seconded that address.

As the house is well aware, the debate on this address was interrupted on October 23 by unanimous consent of the house in order to allow the government to introduce certain urgent, top priority legislation and the house has been occupied with this business until November 11 when the throne speech debate was resumed. What did the house accomplish in that period between October 23 and November 11? Mr. Speaker, I venture to suggest that never before in the history of Canada was so much accomplished for the people of Canada in such a short time.

On October 24 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) introduced a bill providing for cash advances to prairie farmers on farm-stored grain, a measure supported by every party in this house but one which had to wait for a Conservative government before being put on the statute books. This bill will advance to western farmers between $100 and $150 million on wheat stored on their farms and awaiting delivery to the wheat board. The cash advance is repaid as wheat is delivered so there is no cost to the Canadian taxpayer except administration costs. It is designed particularly to help the small farmer and its effect will be to stabilize purchasing power in the prairie provinces and thus give a lift to our whole western economy. This bill was finally passed on October 31 and, as a new member, I must confess I was amazed at the length of time hon. members on the other side of the house took to say "yes" to a bill which they all agreed from the start they would support.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we dealt with the various measures introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith). First there were amendments to the Old Age Security Act increasing the pension to $55 per month, reducing the basic residence requirement from 20 years to 10 years and increasing the length of permissible temporary absence of pensioners from Canada from three months to six months. I believe the minister's remarks when introducing this bill are worth repeating and I quote from Hansard, page 385:

> May I add a further word, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the level of benefit that is now proposed, namely, $55 per month. We make no extravagant claims with respect to this benefit. We do not say that it is the final or perfect solution, or that there is any magic rightness about this particular amount. We make no extravagant claims as to the generosity of the amount we are now proposing. It is my view, rather, that we should try to measure what we are doing here not in terms of generosity but in terms of justice.

This increase in pensions amounts to 37.5 per cent over the $40 level which prevailed at the first of this year while in comparison the costs of living have increased 23 per cent since 1949 when the same basic figure of $40 was in effect. When old age security payments were instituted in 1952 the gross national product was $23½ billion while in 1957 it is estimated at $30.8 billion, an increase of 32.4 per cent compared to a pension increase of 37.5 per cent.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, our senior citizens are being treated in terms of justice at long last. They will never again be left to linger behind the prosperity of the country as a whole, because we are told these pensions will be reviewed and adjusted from time to time to keep in step with increases in the cost of living.

Then the Old Age Assistance Act, which is applicable to citizens between 65 years and 70 years of age, was amended to give the same $55 per month pension, the same reduction in residence qualification and the same extension of time the pensioner could be out of the country. In addition the permissible income allowed without affecting benefits was raised to $960 a year for a single person and $1,620 for a married couple.

The Blind Persons Act was similarly amended to increase pensions to $55 and to increase permissible income to $1,200 per year for a single person and $2,100 to a married couple where both are blind, or $1,980 if only one is blind.

The Disabled Persons Act was similarly amended to increase pensions to $55 per month, increase permissible income to $960 for a single person and $1,620 a year for a married couple. The benefits have also been extended now to cover pensioners who are in homes for the aged, infirmaries or institutions for the care of incurables.

The federal government pays the entire cost of the Old Age Security Act. The other three acts are administered by the provinces and the federal government contributions are paid to the provinces on the basis of 50 per cent of the pension for old age assistance and disabled persons and on the basis of 75 per cent of the pension, so far as blind persons are concerned. It is up to the provinces as to whether they take full advantage of the federal offer or not.

The speech from the throne foreshadowed changes in veterans legislation, as could be expected from a government which includes more veterans than any previous government in Canadian history. This house has in the past four days passed an act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act of 1952. Briefly the amendments reduced from 20 years to 10 years the period imperial and allied veterans or their widows had to be resident in Canada in order to qualify for benefits and increased the benefits payable under the act. Permissible absence from the country has been increased from three months to six months. Allowances are now payable to veterans who served at least one year in the United Kingdom and who formerly were not eligible under the act. Many of these men were instructors, anxious for duty in France and held against their will in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Speaker, as we debated this bill, clause by clause, in committee, I was amused to hear hon. members of the opposition competing with each other in their praise of the government for this legislation. My amusement changed to amazement when we came to clause 8 which this government proposed to repeal because it had the effect of refusing to children of men who died in action or as the result of service disabilities the same level of income as that provided to orphans under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Every Liberal member who spoke agreed that this clause represented rank discrimination and should never have been in the act. Then what were the hon. members of the opposition doing from 1952 when this act came into being until June 10 of this year? They were the government and they had the power; why then did they not do something about it?

Finally the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) introduced the bill providing for annual vacations with pay for employees in public works and undertakings under federal control and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) introduced a measure to amend the veterans Pension Act. The Pension Act amendments are mainly to correct certain injustices, to provide additional benefits for former members of the forces and their dependents and to bring these benefits more in line with the increase in the basic scale of pensions for disability and death, which became effective last July.

At the next session I understand a special committee on veterans affairs will be set up and there will be time available for a complete review of the Pension Act. When this act is reviewed, apart from increases to basic pensions, I believe considerable study will have to be given to actual case histories to determine whether veterans are getting the benefit of the doubt which they are supposed to get. It is my belief that the pensions board is not giving applicants the benefit of the doubt and are in fact refusing pensions where evidence is overwhelmingly on the side of the applicant.

This same standing committee on veterans affairs should also take up the question of merchant seamen who served so greatly during the war and who at the present time are not eligible for the benefits of the veterans allowance act. The merchant marine was the fourth arm of the fighting services and in my opinion has not received the consideration it deserves.

These last two bills I have mentioned have not as yet been passed as debate on them was broken off so that we could return to the debate on the speech from the throne.

I have dealt in considerable detail with the work of parliament to date to show that this government has in fact already carried out the major part of its program as outlined in the throne speech, and that the promises made to the people of Canada are being kept. Legislation passed to date will return to the Canadian people hundreds of millions of dollars, the greatest part of which will be immediately spent on food, shelter, clothing and other necessities of life. This money will benefit every section of our economy and will be directly reflected in increased business in every Canadian community.

The riding of Vancouver South which I have the honour to represent is vitally concerned in all of these measures. Thousands of senior citizens in my riding will be helped by them and thousands of veterans will approve of this government's recognition of the debt we owe them and the fact that in our veterans legislation we have so closely followed the recommendations of their own organization the Canadian Legion.

The prosperity of my riding is dependant upon the prosperity of British Columbia and this in turn is to a great extent dependant on our forest industries. The $150 million made available through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is good but more is needed. House building throughout Canada must be further stimulated and I would like to see the National Housing Act broadened to reduce the down payment necessary and to include in the purchase price the major accessories such as refrigerators, ranges and washing machines. If this were done the upsurge in home building would be of tremendous value, not only to the forest industries of British Columbia but also to the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec.

There is no more worth-while investment a young couple just starting out in their married life can make than the purchase of a home. Family life is the corner-stone of our way of living and we must make it possible for the ordinary person to acquire his own home where his family can be brought up under good living conditions. For many reasons it is not always practical for young people to build new houses and very few of them can save the necessary cash required to purchase an existing house. They therefore are forced in many cases to undertake second mortgages at fantastic rates of interest when you consider the premium they usually pay for this money. It is not unusual for a second mortgage to be written for $4,000 at 7 per cent interest, but the borrower may only receive $3,000 or less. The National Housing Act should be expanded to cover the purchase of such homes on reasonable down payments and at reasonable interest rates.

The development of power on the Columbia is placed high on the list in our natural development program and we would like to see it proceeded with as quickly as possible, but because our public funds are involved this development should be under the control of the British Columbia power commission. This does not preclude the British Columbia power commission from selling blocks of power to private power corporations. We believe in this development rather than the development of power from the Fraser river because we must protect our salmon, a source of food given to us by God which will be with us forever unless we wilfully destroy it for the sake of a very short respite from a power shortage. There must be no hydro developments on important salmon streams. The Columbia and other power sites which will not affect our fisheries will tide us over the period required until nuclear power plants are economically feasible.

This time is not as far away as some may think. The British Columbia Electric Company has let the first contracts for a 1,200,000 horsepower thermal plant but this plant is designed so that in the future it can be converted to a nuclear fuel plant. It is interesting to note that a British firm, in competition with the United States, Swiss and German firms won the contract for six turbo-generators for this new British Columbia Electric plant, a contract worth $25 million. We in the west have always been conscious of the necessity to build up British imports so that country can buy our lumber, our fish, our metals and our grain.

We believe our fishing industry, through the fisheries association of British Columbia, was the first industry to devise a practical method of increasing this Canadian-United Kingdom trade. A few years ago we lost the United Kingdom market for our salmon because of lack of dollars in Britain. Our fishing industry set up a United Kingdom industrial committee for the purpose of surveying the requirements of the fishing industry and to recommend items of British origin which could meet their requirements. It toured the United Kingdom, met manufacturers and educated them as to the particular requirements of the fishing industry. The net result was a tremendous increase in the volume of British goods purchased by the fishing industry.

The committee was set up in the fall of 1953 and in 1954 the British Columbia fishing industry bought $6 million worth of British goods at no sacrifice in quality and usually at cost reductions as well. There were no strings attached, no implied commitments that the United Kingdom would have to purchase fish to the value of the fishing industry's purchases in the United Kingdom. It was simply an effort on an industrywide basis to help an old friend and a good customer. Nor was it a one effort job. The committee is a continuing one, keeping member companies up to date on British products which are acceptable to the industry, giving information as to local agents, servicing facilities and so on. Any British manufacturer wishing to sell to this industry can contact the committee and know his product will be given a fair trial and, if acceptable, will be placed on the approved list. Member companies report monthly on the volume of British goods purchased and on their experience in using this goods.

I commend this story to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill). If other industries could be induced to do the same thing as our fishing industry has done we would very soon have a mutually increased trade with our old customer who wants to buy from us if we will only buy from him.

Hon. members of the opposition have indicated that they are opposed to switching of imports from the United States to the United Kingdom. They state that any such action is likely to antagonize the United States. I would like to point out that we are presently purchasing almost $1 billion more of goods from the United States than we are selling to them. I willingly concede that we on this side of the house are most anxious to increase our exports to the United States and that we are not trying to reduce our general trade picture but rather to increase it.

We presently have all our eggs in one basket, and if hon. members of the opposition consider that to be the mark of prudent government then they have not yet learned the lesson of June 10. It has become the policy of this government to carry the story of Canada's economic problems direct to the United States people. This has been done in speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and by members of the cabinet before audiences in the United States.

The Washington Post has this to say in regard to these speeches:

> The traditional friendship of these two countries can only be preserved and fostered by such straightforward exchanges of views.

The New York Times says this:

> These are not unreasonable suggestions, and Mr. Diefenbaker's spirit of candour and willingness to seek mutually satisfactory solutions provides a setting for ironing out our present irritants.

The St. Louis Post Dispatch puts it this way:

> Canada does not want to become an economic colony. As a matter of sound policy Washington also must be averse to such a possibility. With a genuine community of interests it should not be difficult to initiate co-operative steps toward allaying Canadian fears.

Another publication, the American Metal Market, says the United States method of disposing of its wheat surpluses has "pulled the rug" from under Canadian exports.

Mr. Speaker, British Columbia joined confederation on the promise that we would be linked with the rest of Canada by rail transportation. Today there is another and faster means of transportation which all too long has had a monopoly in this field. Trans-Canada Air Lines has not only had a monopoly but it has charged the highest rates on the North American continent. In a last minute death-bed repentance it announced on November 8 a new domestic fare structure with up to 20 per cent reduction effective January 1, 1958, to bring its fares into conformity with the rates of other North American air lines. Canada years ago outgrew the necessity for pampering and protecting its monopoly air line, a monopoly which has brought about inefficient operation, and disregard of passenger convenience, and now by its own statement it admits it has been overcharging us as well.

The Vancouver Sun in a recent editorial called for competition to T.C.A. and in part had this to say about T.C.A. operation:

> Late departures. Missed connections with dreary, uncomfortable waiting-room layovers.

Sudden downgrading due to equipment failures from the much-advertised super-Constellation to cramped, ancient tourist North Stars. Frequent turnbacks by these same North Stars.

Along with endless upsets in plans, a superb blend of indifference, insolence and sometimes outright belligerence from too many members of the T.C.A. ground staff.

The protesting traveller is always wrong. That is made plain to him right from the start.

Some T.C.A. staffers come out with it bluntly—There's no alternative—when asked whether something cannot be done to remedy a four-hour layover, or an hours late arrival in the middle of the night with a busy day ahead.

Others merely shrug off all protests as plain unreasonableness, as ugly refusal by rude travellers to concede what fine service T.C.A. operates.

Ground staffers cannot be entirely blamed for getting case-hardened. They meet so many outraged T.C.A. travellers so often. But the general fumbling of T.C.A. passenger handling cries for remedy.

The remedy is simple

Provide competition. Face T.C.A. with a vigorous rival private air line, eager to gain business by giving service to the public.

I would go even further than this Mr. Speaker. Provide competition for T.C.A. certainly, but why not do the job right and sell T.C.A. to private operators. As a condition of the sale make it impossible for shares to be owned by anyone except Canadians and make it illegal for any competing air line to own shares in T.C.A. Then, and only then, will this fat cat of the former government be operated on the basis it was set up to operate on and that is to provide good, efficient and reasonable service to the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker, there will shortly be held a dominion-provincial conference and undoubtedly the major topic at that meeting will be the question of federal subsidies to the provinces. The provinces are coming to rely more and more on subsidies from the federal government and in the same manner municipalities have become absolutely dependant on subsidies from their provincial governments to cover their cost of operation.

My riding is a riding of home owners, and it is impossible for taxes on real property to take care of the constantly increasing costs of schools, hospitals, welfare, roads, fire, police and so on.

In particular, it must be recognized that education is not a local matter any more. It is detrimental to Canada as a whole if the level of education in any part of the country is substantially lower than elsewhere. To achieve a desirable standard of education across Canada more money must be provided to build modern schools and to pay the salaries of properly qualified teachers. The greatest indictment of our present system is the inequality of educational opportunity which is offered our children in city, town and rural areas.

It has been stated that the aim of education is to give every Canadian that form and extent of free education for which his capacity, interests and appreciation are suited, and to have the services of carefully selected and adequately trained teachers. This minimum standard should be based not upon the wealth of the parent, of the local school district, or even of the province but on the wealth and resources of the country as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess at six o'clock I believe I had finished saying that I thought education should not be dependent on the wealth of the district, the city or the province but that it was actually a charge on the wealth and resources of the country as a whole. Good education requires properly qualified teachers. At the present time 21 per cent of all teachers in Canada hold only permits, temporary and third-class certificates; this number varying from about one per cent in British Columbia to 58 per cent in Newfoundland. Teaching is a difficult, technical job, requiring a high degree of education by those who practise it. We call teaching a profession, a status it has for the majority of qualified teachers, but standards of entrance to it are not such as to ensure a professional status.

By 1965, in Canada we will require 38,000 extra classrooms at a capital cost of about $900 million and an annual increase in teachers' salaries of around $125 million. Real property can no longer bear its present heavy load of school costs. Methods of financing education must be modernized so that we can continue to build modern schools and pay salaries to teachers in keeping with their responsibilities. Our standards of education, from a national point of view, are not high enough. All hon. members heard the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) tell about educational standards in his province. Our children are the greatest asset this country has and we must recognize their right to an adequate education and make it financially possible for this objective to be attained.

Education is and must remain a provincial responsibility, but there is a lesson for us to learn from the man-made satellites passing overhead and that lesson is that we must develop our human resources by education as well as exploiting our material resources. Federal subsidies to the provinces are now used in part by the provinces to aid in educational costs. A province can, however, use this money and rightly so in any way it sees fit. Some over-all pattern must be evolved which will deal fairly with educational problems and educational standards on a national scale and at the same time relieve real property of the greater part of educational costs.

A few days ago the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron) told the house that Canadian welders had not been given equal opportunities of employment with United States welders on some pipe line construction spreads. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) said that similar cases had been drawn to his attention and, on being investigated, had been found to be true. The situation was drawn to the attention of the former minister of labour who replied that only a limited number had been admitted as supervisory personnel. I wish to inform the house that if anything the hon. members understated the facts. Citizens of the United States by the hundreds came in as landed immigrants with absolutely no intention of taking up permanent residence. Others came in supposedly as visitors but in reality to take pre-arranged jobs. This applies not only to welders but also to engineers, foremen and other supervisory personnel. On many jobs they might just as well have hung out a sign reading "Only Americans need apply."

For all practical purposes in certain fields of construction in British Columbia and Alberta we have become another state of the American union. I am not speaking of matters I know nothing about. For the past 12 years I have had a close association with the engineering field in western Canada. I believe citizens of the United States coming over should be subject to the same rules and regulations as govern Canadians going to the United States. United States personnel working for Canadian subsidiaries should be required to develop Canadian understudies for their jobs or else become Canadian citizens if they intend to stay here permanently. It is high time that the national interest of Canada should be considered in the operation of wholly-owned Canadian subsidiaries of foreign firms. We threw off the yoke of colonialism a long time ago but the yoke of economic vassalism is becoming ever more firmly fixed to our necks. I tell this house that there are highly trained engineers, skilled craftsmen and supervisors unemployed in Vancouver and Edmonton while the jobs which should be theirs are held by United States citizens who have no intention of ever becoming citizens of this country.

The granting of work permits has become a routine matter with our officials and the whole system needs tightening up. No permit should be given unless it is proven by the applying company that they cannot secure qualified Canadians, and I can assure this house that if this procedure is followed we shall need little if any technical help from outside the country.

We welcome all foreign capital. Such capital is needed to develop and exploit the resources of this country. This is a safe home for such capital; this is a free enterprise economy and, my friends on the opposite side to the contrary, the chances of state socialism are practically non-existent. This is one of the few safe homes for foreign capital offering good profit possibilities and also almost certain appreciation of capital through the natural growth of this country. But these Canadian subsidiaries must be Canadian in spirit as well as in name, with Canadian interests their first concern and not simply branch-office extensions of the parent company and operated in the national interests of another country. It is in the best self-interest of foreign companies owning Canadian subsidiaries to operate them in this manner.

For 22 years, Mr. Speaker, we were ruled by a government which eventually became the servant and not the master of its own bureaucracy. The former cabinet ministers became simply administrators of huge complex departments out of touch with their own members and out of touch with the Canadian people. It was time for the change.

Bureaucracy, by its very nature, fears and resists change and therefore any advances had to be made at a pace slow enough to allow the bureaucratic machine to assimilate these changes without too much trouble. The gap between the brass and the grass, as it has so aptly been described widened to the point where communication utterly broke down.

In the Conservative party today we have the true reform party, the true party of the people. Our leader, the Prime Minister, has done more for the people of Canada in seven weeks than the previous government did in the same number of years.

Mr. Byrne: Explain.

Mr. Broome: His leadership has been felt not only in Canada but throughout the whole British commonwealth of nations. Canada today is more a nation than ever before, a better partner in the commonwealth and at the same time we are treated with greater respect and understanding for our own peculiar problems by the United States.

Canada today speaks in the cause of peace at the United Nations with a more assured and more independent voice. And mark the word "independent". Canada today works to maintain peace by helping the eastern nations of the commonwealth to a better standard of living through the Colombo plan, a plan which I hope will be extended in scope, as this plan is not only a sure buffer against the further spread of communism in the Far East but holds the key to a lasting peace.

We are pledged, Mr. Speaker, to see to it that our resources are developed for the benefit of all Canadians so that this land is a good place for us to live in and that this land, if possible, will be a better one for our children.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, all of us have wondered just how much legislation the government intends to bring down this session to meet the commitments they made to the Canadian people prior to June 10. After listening to the type of speech we have just heard one could be excused for being a little alarmed. From the many statements made by supporters of the government to the effect that the government has done so much one can only begin to wonder whether we have had it as far as their legislative program is concerned.

An hon. Member: Wait and see.

Mr. Ellis: Of all the promises which were made by that party prior to June 10 so few have been implemented and yet on the basis of the little that has been done members across the way are taking unto themselves credit for virtually everything that has been done in this country. I suggest that the hon. member who has just taken his seat made many statements with which we could take serious objection and which I feel require a great deal of documentation. However, since it was a maiden speech I am sure members of the house will refrain from making the comments which would normally have been made.

An hon. Member: Do not worry. Go ahead and make them.

Mr. Ellis: However, I should like to take this opportunity to present to the government a number of problems important to the people of my constituency. The citizens of Regina, I may say, have looked forward to this session of parliament with greater hope and anticipation than in the case of any other previous session. The reason for this optimism is obvious. The present government is in a minority position. Consequently the people of Canada know that any action which might be forthcoming will have to be put into effect at this session. We know, however, that in the position in which the government finds itself it cannot, as was the custom of previous Conservative and Liberal governments, defer or put off indefinitely, or at least for four years until the eve of an election, the pledges which they made to the people prior to polling day.

I have noted with some amusement the crocodile tears being shed by many newspapers in Canada over what they call the present political instability. They even go so far as to point to France and suggest that because we in Canada have finally emerged from that very stable position in which we found ourselves for some 22 years we are obviously going to go to the other extreme. I think such a suggestion is utter nonsense. This is a democratic country and the Canadian people have the right to vote for any shade of political opinion they desire. There is certainly nothing sacred about the traditional Liberal-Tory so-called two-party system that has obtained in this country for a great many years. I am certain that the people in my part of the country would not relish a return to the days when there was no real choice in Canada, when they were confronted with the alternative of voting for either the one or the other wing of the same party even though each wing was known by a different name, Liberal or Progressive Conservative, and even though the parties were staffed by two different sets of political personalities.

We realize there is nothing to be gained by turning back the clock. We realize there are no essential differences either in philosophy or policy between the official opposition in the house and the government of the day. Under these circumstances there can be no genuine two-party structure in Canada. The British parliamentary system functions best under a two-party system provided there is a real difference between the two parties, not this sham battle that has been carried on between the Liberals and the Conservatives over the years when it has simply been a question of the ins and the outs, the one party in power and the other party out of power, the party out being the progressives and trying to drive out the conservatives and when they get into power the situation is completely reversed.

One thing that has been aptly demonstrated in this session is that there is no indication whatsoever of any fundamental difference in policy between the government of the day and its predecessor Liberal government. There is not one indication in the legislative program of the present government to suggest that there was any real change of government on June 10. It is true that amendments to existing legislation have been brought forward but they have merely been amendments with regard to amounts rather than amendments involving differences in principle.

During the summer months I had the good fortune to be able to visit a great number of my constituents and to talk over with them the prospects of the new parliament. I found there was a great deal of uniformity of opinion on certain basic questions. I found that the people of Regina generally, irrespective of the way they voted in the last election, expected that as the result of the minority position in which the present government finds itself we were going to get more results this fall than would have been obtained if any party had received an over-all majority. Moreover, they were equally anxious that the present government come forward with its legislative program in order that it might be judged on the basis of what it does and not on the basis of speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the members of his cabinet.

An hon. Member: What would you have done?

Mr. Ellis: They realize, of course, that the defeat of the government on the floor of the house on a want of confidence motion would bring on an early election, but apart from that possibility or eventuality there was general agreement that the new government was honour bound to fulfil its commitments, to continue to present its program and take its chances on the floor of the House of Commons.

Following the last election the present Prime Minister as leader of the victorious party had a decision to make, whether to form a government or whether to decline the invitation. There was no compulsion involved at all. He decided to form a government and we must presume that he did so out of a desire to present the Conservative program to parliament. I would suggest that there is a moral obligation on the part of the government to continue to bring down the type of legislation which they promised the Canadian people prior to June 10 and to continue to bring down that legislation as long as they enjoy the confidence of the majority of the members of the House of Commons. It seems to me that should be obvious to all members.

Of course, I suppose the Prime Minister may feel he has an obligation to serve the political needs of the Progressive Conservative party. That is a question that he himself has to decide, whether to give top priority to their solemn obligations to the people of Canada and proceed as far as they can with their legislative program or whether to place the particular political needs of a political party uppermost in the minds of the government.

Mr. Fraser: The people come first.

Mr. Ellis: I suggest that there have been indications of late that the supporters of the government are more preoccupied with playing politics than they are with pursuing the program of action promised the people of Canada prior to the last election. We have seen indications of that in speeches made in the house. We have seen other indications in speeches made outside the house. I noticed in the Windsor Star the other day a report of the Tory nominating convention in one of the Essex seats. I quote right from that newspaper the words of a Conservative member of this house:

> The Prime Minister is champing at the bit, waiting for an opportunity to dissolve parliament.

I would think that the hon. member who made that statement is being a little unfair about the Prime Minister because what he is suggesting, in effect, is that the Prime Minister is more concerned with finding an excuse to call an election than he is in completing the job which he was put into office to do. I would suggest that the people of Canada would prefer to judge this government on the basis of the fulfilment of all its pledges. They would take a very contrary view if they were to believe that the only reason an election was precipitated was because the leader of the government felt it was to the political advantage of the Conservative party so to do. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the people of my constituency are much less concerned about the political fortunes of the Conservative party than they are with the legislative program which they have reason to believe should be brought down at this time.

We ask questions on orders of the day to try to get some indication from the government whether or not they are going to introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act or the National Housing Act, and what do they say? They say, due to the shortness of the session we are not going to be able to do that. What is all this talk about the shortness of the session? We are sent down here to do a job, and so far as I am concerned we should stay in Ottawa until that job is completed. As long as the government continues to enjoy the voting support of the members of this house, then the government has a moral and legal obligation to continue to give service.

What are some of these questions that have gone unanswered as yet by the government of the day? A moment ago I mentioned unemployment insurance. In view of the growing severity of the unemployment situation, amendments to this act are long overdue. We know that on April 25, speaking in Toronto, the Prime Minister promised to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase benefits, to eliminate the waiting time and to extend the benefits to a full 52 weeks. When, Mr. Speaker, may we expect some action to fufil that pledge? Surely, no hon. member in this house can suggest that the situation is not urgent or that this is something that should be put off until another session of this parliament. This is something that is crying out for attention.

I realize that the Prime Minister has admonished those who use the word "unemployment", suggesting that such thinking has caused a depression. I recall many years ago, as a youngster, reading an account of an economist who was trying to explain the reason for the last depression. The only intelligible answer which he could give was that everyone lost confidence, so we had a depression. Now the suggestion is going abroad that anyone who draws the attention of the government to the serious unemployment problem in Canada is destroying confidence and, in some obscure way, is aggravating the problem that is growing day by day.

We in the C.C.F. believe that full employment ought to be of prime concern to the present government. There is no excuse for unemployment in this country. I agree that there is a fractional unemployment of a seasonal nature which occurs in certain districts as a result of a switch-over in jobs. We are never going to have a time when everybody in the labour market is placed. But I suggest that any time the number of these applicants for employment exceeds 2 per cent of our labour force we are faced with unemployment.

What is the government doing about unemployment? The answer given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is exactly the same as the answer which could have been given by the minister of labour last year, the year before or ten years ago. I cannot see any difference in policy between the present government and the Liberal government with respect to unemployment. Certainly directives are issued to employment offices; they set up their advertising to try to get a little work done, but that is not the answer to the problem.

Mr. Starr: What is the answer?

Mr. Ellis: We will be happy to discuss it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Starr: You tell me what the answer is.

Mr. Ellis: The minister will have a full indication at the appropriate time when his estimates are before the house.

Mr. Starr: You tell us.

Mr. Argue: Sell some wheat.

Mr. Ellis: The Prime Minister has said over the radio and television that the unemployment situation is not serious. I suggest that for a single Canadian worker to be out of work is a personal tragedy. When you multiply that by hundreds of thousands of workers in this country, then you realize the full extent of the tragedy. In the meantime, we have yet to see any indication that the present government has any effective plan to deal with the unemployment situation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the hon. gentleman's plan?

Mr. Starr: Give us a suggestion, and we will carry it out.

Mr. Ellis: If hon. members will vote for our amendment they will find it covers the point very well. We in the C.C.F. believe the only way you can maintain full employment is by adopting those measures of social and economic planning which are necessary to maintain it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ellis: I am suggesting that there is no difference between the Conservative party and the Liberal party in this respect. There was no difference between the policy of Mr. Bennett of putting the unemployed in relief camps and the policy of Mr. King of giving them 50 cents a day. So far neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have come up with any solution to the unemployment problem.

An hon. Member: Neither can you.

Mr. Ellis: The Conservatives suggest they have the answer. I suggest the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister take the house into their confidence and tell us what the government proposes to do in so far as unemployment is concerned, instead of drifting and just keeping their fingers crossed, hoping for the best. The government appears to be following that policy.

There are several matters, Mr. Speaker, that are of considerable importance to the people of my constituency. As you know, in Saskatchewan for many years we have enjoyed a hospital plan. Certainly, by all odds it has been the most successful of its kind. We have been waiting a long, long time for some action on the part of the federal government to provide for federal-provincial participation in the payment of hospital bills. After waiting for so many years for the Liberals to do something, perhaps we raised our hopes too high when the government changed this year. Certainly, we had reason to hope that the new government would depart from the Liberal policy of procrastination and make it possible for a province like Saskatchewan, which has been waiting for so many years for federal participation in our hospital plan, to participate in a federal plan. What do we find? We find evasive answers and no indication by the federal government that Saskatchewan will be able to enter into an agreement with Ottawa at an early date, nor that the people of Saskatchewan, who have borne this burden of hospital care during the past ten years, will be able to enjoy a measure of federal participation in that scheme.

I suggest that at this session the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) and other members of the government make it crystal clear whether or not they are going to permit these provinces which have plans in operation now to enter into an agreement in order that the people of those provinces might enjoy the benefits of this legislation at the carliest possible date.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of local matters to which I should like to refer briefly. There is one matter which I should like to draw more particularly to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees). Several months ago the minister was reported in the press as having indicated that the new government was going to provide for more adequate airport facilities in Canada. The Regina airport is located within the city limits and in close proximity to heavily populated residential areas.

Our city is continuing to expand at a very fast rate and the time will come when the airport will be surrounded on three sides by residential areas. It is the belief of many citizens in the city of Regina—and I share their belief—that the present location of the Regina airport constitutes a danger to the lives and property of our citizens. Moreover, the airport in its present location constitutes a barrier to continued expansion in that part of the city and some of the best building sites, badly needed for housing, are owing to their proximity to the airport, beyond the scope of any assistance under the National Housing Act.

[Mr. Ellis.]

The present airport in Regina was built when Regina had a fraction of its present population. At the time of its original construction it would seem to present no real problem in view of its distance from the settled areas of the city and of course the lesser role played by air transport of that day. It is obvious today that the airport, irrespective of its present ownership and its history of municipal ownership, is more national than local in character and will continue to grow in terms of the national and international aviation pictures. In these circumstances it would seem to be the better part of wisdom to think in terms of relocating the Regina airport at least several miles from the present city limits. This, of course, would provide for necessary expansion of the airport in the future and it would make available in the city of Regina larger areas of very good home-building land and above all else will remove the inconvenience and the ever present threat to the safety of the people presently living in the vicinity of the airport.

While there may be differences of opinion as to the procedure to be followed, I think most people in Regina are convinced that relocation will have to take place sooner or later, and they are most anxious that the decision should be made now rather than as a result of a possible air disaster in that area in the future. These fears are widely held by my constituents and can be resolved only by the decision to move the airport within a reasonable distance fom the city limits. I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to give this matter his early and earnest consideration and that he consider such relocation as part of a forward looking, federal aviation policy.

I now desire to make some reference to an important question in my own province. The other day my colleague the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Johnson) asked the Prime Minister what he intended to do in the light of the solemn pledge made by the Prime Minister to the people of Saskatchewan prior to the last election, namely that within six months of the election of a Conservative government a start would be made on the South Saskatchewan dam. In the answer made to that extremely important question the Prime Minister sought to create the impression that the provincial government is holding up the procedure, that the provincial government has changed its policy. I was rather intrigued that particular afternoon because a few moments previously, in answer to a question asked by an hon. member with regard to a press report which I believe reported the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) as opposing an increase in the expenditure under FAO, the Prime Minister took the attitude, "Well, of course you cannot depend on anything you see in the press; you cannot go by press reports". But a few moments later he rose in his place in the house and suggested that because he had heard there was a press report to the effect that a certain top figure in the province of Saskatchewan had made a certain speech, he took that as government policy. You see, the Prime Minister can take one attitude towards press clippings one moment and an entirely different attitude a few moments later.

An hon. Member: Honest John.

Mr. Ellis: I would suggest that the Prime Minister made a most revealing statement. He said he thought this was settled two years ago. This is a very interesting statement because he is admitting in effect that in spite of all the nasty things he said about the former minister of agriculture and the Liberal party with regard to the dam over past years, he now accepts their policy as government policy today. He suggests that because the minister of agriculture was able, through his machinations, to drive a bargain with or impose a certain set of conditions on the province of Saskatchewan—

An hon. Member: You mean the former minister of agriculture?

Mr. Ellis: Yes, the former minister of agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): They are both Saskatchewan boys.

Mr. Ellis: It was a most revealing statement. Then the Prime Minister made the statement, "I do not think the provincial government should alter the rules between innings". That is another very interesting statement. He is suggesting in effect that after all there is not any difference between the policy of the Liberal government or the former Liberal government and that of the present Conservative government, that he has simply adopted the baby of the former minister of agriculture and called it his own and has suggested that what Jimmy Gardiner or the former minister of agriculture, I should say, was able to ram down the throats of the people of Saskatchewan is all right by him.

When the Prime Minister talks about changing the rules between innings, may I ask whose rules? The rules set up by the former minister of agriculture which he changed around at his will? We never did know what the rules were. But now the Prime Minister is apparently so enamoured of the former minister of agriculture that he accepts unto his bosom all the conditions and all the twistings and turnings of the former minister of agriculture with respect to the dam.

Let us look back into the record. The present Prime Minister had a great deal to say about the South Saskatchewan dam when he was in opposition.

An hon. Member: We are going to build it.

Mr. Ellis: I do not want to go into the sordid history of the Liberal treatment of this important national project but I want to remind hon. members of this house that from 1940 on, or perhaps before 1940, the Liberals had gone up and down the province of Saskatchewan promising to build the dam. They never said that the province was going into it. No, it was going to be a purely federal undertaking; and that is what the present Prime Minister understood at that time. I have in my hand some exerts from some speeches. I went through all the speeches made by the present Prime Minister on the South Saskatchewan dam and they make extremely interesting reading. For example, I note that on March 29, 1949, in reply to the former minister of agriculture, the present Prime Minister said this as reported at page 2120 of Hansard of that year:

> I am glad to have the sympathy of the hon. gentleman, but what the people of Saskatchewan want is not sympathy at election time but action in parliament.

That is precisely what we want. We want action in parliament right now. Then he went on to say this:

> It will be proceeded with—

That is the South Saskatchewan dam.

> —immediately by the Progressive Conservative party when in power. Full consideration has been given to this matter. The leader of this party, having been apprised of the necessities incident to the situation not only in Saskatchewan but also in parts of Alberta and Manitoba, has given his undivided support to the plea that this work be proceeded with at the earliest date that engineering skill and capacity will permit.

Then he went on to describe this as a national work. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to mark that phrase "a national work"—that will permit the expansion of industrial development, the extension of productivity in the areas affected, and will pay to the nation as a whole profits that can now only be dreamed of. Then he went on as reported at page 2123 of Hansard of the same day to say this:

> There is deep resentment over the fact that in the speech from the throne this year this matter has been neglected.

He railled against the government of the day. Then I find a very interesting excerpt from Hansard of February 3, 1953. This is what the present Prime Minister had to say at that time. I would ask you to remember that he said something about changing the rules between innings. The Prime Minister on that date said this:

> Then on May 31, 1951, for the first time to my knowledge, a suggestion was made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that it would be necessary for the province of Saskatchewan to accept the responsibility of providing irrigation facilities. Until that time I had never heard, nor am I able to find any records anywhere, that there was any responsibility to fall upon the province of Saskatchewan.

So here are the Prime Minister's words after he himself had been promising that the Conservative government would immediately build the dam, criticizing the Liberal government because they had a joker up their sleeves; they were going to come out and require the provincial government to pay part of the cost. Is there any indication in the words of the Prime Minister that he had ever expected that the Conservative government would require part of the cost to be paid by the province of Saskatchewan and that his party might require the same sort of deal that the former minister of agriculture forced upon us through pressure over the years?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the situation as it appears at the moment is simply this: it has been the provincial government of Saskatchewan which has taken the initiative ever since this government came to office. To get support, the premier of Saskatchewan, to the best of my knowledge, sought in a telephone conversation a meeting between the Prime Minister and the members of the Saskatchewan cabinet within weeks after the new Prime Minister took office in order to discuss this dam. The premier of Saskatchewan has written to the federal government that the province of Saskatchewan is most anxious to proceed. The Prime Minister says the rules have been changed between innings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By him.

Mr. Ellis: Let me point out this fact. We never questioned it when the Liberal party sat on the other side of the house and required the province of Saskatchewan to pay out so much money in connection with this project; we accepted the proposition that the province should provide for the irrigation works in connection with the dam. The understanding of course was that the full cost of the dam would be borne by the federal government but then of course the Liberals came out and said "Oh no,"—I should not say the Liberals because I do not believe the Liberals ever intended to build the dam, I think the former minister of agriculture used that as a political bait as long as he was able to do so—but I say this: as a means of prolonging negotiations and trying perhaps to force the provincial authorities into throwing up their hands in disgust, he then came out and said "well you will have to pay for other costs because there cannot be the slightest suggestion that any federal money will go to subsidize power development in any one province of Canada.

On that basis the premier of the province of Saskatchewan agreed to pay the full and complete cost of all the power generating capacity in connection with that dam, and we still do. In spite of that fact the government has now indicated that it is now prepared to pay for the power development of the maritimes and in the province of British Columbia; at least they have promised to do so, but we will have to wait and see what comes of that. However, under the changed circumstances we in Saskatchewan would be perfectly within our rights if we suggested that in the light of the new policy the federal government should be prepared to undertake its share of the cost of hydroelectric development in connection with the South Saskatchewan river dam.

An hon. Member: The same treatment as in the other cases.

Mr. Ellis: That is all we are asking, the same treatment as in the maritimes and in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: You will get your answer to that in time.

Mr. Ellis: The Prime Minister said the other day the rules had been changed and he suggested the province of Saskatchewan is asking the federal government to pay for everything. That is not true. The provincial secretary of the province of Saskatchewan made it crystal clear that while the province of Saskatchewan is quite prepared to pay for the cost of the irrigation works in connection with the dam and is prepared to pay for the cost of hydroelectric stations in connection with the dam, the Saskatchewan government expects that the least the federal government would do would be to build the storage dam on its own. Under the present circumstances therefore the province of Saskatchewan will be committed to the extent of at least $65 million and all we are asking is that the federal government build the dam itself, since in the words of the Prime Minister himself, "This is a matter of great national importance".

I suggest therefore that there is no reason why the government could not at this time proceed before the deadline which I believe is six months from June last—December 10 next—to do something,—

An hon. Member: We wanted to hear your speech first.

Mr. Ellis: —to redeem the pledge made, which was I believe expected by the people generally. We have been accustomed to political betrayals on the part of the predecessors of the present government but we did hope there would be some slight difference between the actions of the members sitting on your right, Mr. Speaker, and the members who now sit on your left. I would say, however, that the conduct of the government in so far as the South Saskatchewan dam is concerned indicates there is no essential difference between the Liberal and Conservative parties or, while there may be very slight shades of difference, when it comes down to doing something and getting into action there is little choice between them.

I suggest therefore that while the hon. members on your right, Mr. Speaker, may talk in their speeches for home consumption and boast of all the things they have done in seven weeks, they have not yet scratched the surface; they have not yet come to grips with the most important problems facing this country at the present time—unemployment, wheat marketing, parity price legislation and all the things which the Conservative party promised to the people of this country. These are the things which the people of Canada were led to expect and I suggest that instead of becoming preoccupied with seeking ways and means of provoking a vote at a time which they consider advantageous to themselves, they should come forward and present their full program, go as far as they can, and then let the people of Canada be the judges.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, like any new member, it is with deep emotion that I rise to speak in this house. At the outset of my remarks, I should like to pay tribute to my constituents of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and to thank them for the mark of confidence they gave me by electing me their member on June 10 last. I should like to assure them that I will always do my best to deserve this confidence and that it will always be a pleasure and a duty for me to speak and act on their behalf.

I should like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for honouring the people of my constituency by appointing me acting delegate to the 12th session of the United Nations, now taking place in New York city. May I repeat what is being said by some of my constituents: "Never was so great an honour shown the St. Hyacinthe-Bagot constituency under a Liberal government."

I would also like to offer my sincere congratulations to Mr. Speaker and Mr. Deputy Speaker on their elevation to their present important posts. I also wish to pay tribute to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent). I wish him good health so that he can long enjoy a retirement which he has so richly deserved.

May I also say how ably the mover and the seconder of the address in reply (Mr. Smith and Mr. Arsenault) acquitted themselves of their respective tasks.

Mr. Speaker, rising as I do for the first time in the house, I cannot help saying how proud I am, and for several reasons. Let me name the major ones:

In the first place, I represent a constituency which is mostly made up of the two main classes in this country of ours, workers and farmers.

In the last elections, those two most representative classes of society joined in entrusting their affairs to the Conservative party. Another reason why I am proud to have been returned here is that this constituency had always been reputed to be a Liberal stronghold. You will no doubt be interested to learn, Mr. Speaker, that I am the second Conservative member to be returned since Confederation in the fine constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. The first Conservative member was elected 78 years ago with a majority of only six votes. My Liberal opponent having obtained a majority of close to 13,000 votes at the previous election, and having been elected by acclamation twice before that, it will be admitted that the 2,094 majority which I obtained from the electors of my constituency is such as to fill me with legitimate satisfaction and pride.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, the largest groups of electors in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot riding are made up of workmen and farmers. At the mere mention of those two classes of people, you realize that in my riding, perhaps more and certainly as much as any other constituency there is need for sound social legislation.

The textile industry is the chief source of employment in my riding. You know, however, that for a decade that industry has experienced slackenings which have been most unfavourable to workers. One plant which could employ 800 workers has only about a hundred people on its payroll at the present time. The lucky ones who can rely on our other textile plants to earn a living for their family are never sure to work a full week. Often, they have to remain idle a few days each week, with consequent serious reduction in their income. Very many families therefore lack the basic necessities for the proper care of children who will make up our nation of tomorrow.

I therefore urge the Conservative government to enact sound and rational legislation to stabilize that industry and raise the employment potential, so that the greatest possible number of Canadian citizens will benefit from our country's prosperity.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to draw your attention to the situation of many farmers in my riding. Under the former government, the agricultural market on the federal level was unstable. The price of raw materials and the cost of production have increased each year at a frightful rate while, on the other hand, consumer prices were held at such a level that the farmers have often suffered losses and deficits which threatened their livelihood. Fortunately provincial laws have made it possible for many of them to carry on in their wonderful field of endeavour.

If farmers have put their confidence in me, it is because the Conservative party willingly gave serious consideration to this vital aspect of their economic life. I am confident that this government will find it possible to give these men who constitute the foundation of the economy, all the safeguards they have a right to demand.

I should like at this point to direct the attention of the government to the importance of the services rendered to the farmers by experimental farms. The constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot is situated in the heart of one of the richest farming areas of our province. General farming is practised and breeders of pure-bred stock are among the prizewinners at local, provincial and national fairs. I urge the government to consider seriously the possibilities of improving this technical agricultural service in my constituency. I also urge it to assure sugar-beet producers all the protection they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, the speech delivered by our most gracious and beloved sovereign raised high hopes at every level of our society. Among the measures that will provide welcome relief to my people, I would mention the increase of old age pension, veterans' pensions, holidays with pay for employees of industries under federal jurisdiction, etc. I would like here to draw the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) to the necessity of increasing family allowances as soon as this government finds it feasible.

Mr. Speaker, in the matter of agriculture, I must say that the farmers were very pleased to learn that the government had decided to ask the members of the house to approve price stabilizing legislation for their products.

The announcement that amendments to certain tax laws would be submitted to the house for approval was welcomed with great enthusiasm by the workers, and particularly by textile workers who were glad to learn that the government had decided to enquire into this field of industry, in order to protect them.

The many letters of appreciation I have received from my constituents prove beyond any doubt that the citizens of my constituency, like those in the rest of Canada, highly appreciate the legislation which our government will seek to introduce.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on behalf of the National and Catholic Syndicate of Building Trades of St. Hyacinthe, which has asked me to urge upon the federal government to undertake or have projects carried out in my district, so that unemployment may be reduced as much as possible during the coming winter months. I realize that even if this government cannot be held responsible for the present situation, it will do all it can to improve the difficult conditions which it had to face in this field, and which are clearly detrimental to the labouring class particularly.

As a practical suggestion, the construction of a retaining wall along the Yamaska river, at St. Joseph, between Barsalou and Bouchard bridges, would provide jobs for many breadwinners. Another project which would provide jobs for workers would be the construction of tunnels under the C.N.R. railway tracks, in the eastern and western parts of St. Hyacinthe. For the last ten years, this part of the city which is called Bourg-Joli, has developed so fast that the building of two tunnels to relieve congestion in the underground passage of St. Anne street—the only one leading to the northern part of the town—has become a necessity. Workers of the St. Hyacinthe-Annexe, in particular, are often delayed by trains passing at the level crossing in Cascades East street, when travelling to and from work. The costs of those underground passages could be assumed by the city of St. Hyacinthe, the federal government and the Canadian National Railways.

During the last two weeks, hon. members in the opposition have mentioned the national flag and the representative our country should have at the Vatican. I trust that the hon. Prime Minister will, in due course, give the representatives of the people the opportunity to submit the views of their ridings on those two matters that have been left pending by the Mackenzie King and St. Laurent governments.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to congratulate very sincerely the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) on the splendid speech he made in this house the other day. I am sure all hon. members will agree that it is one of the best we have heard since the beginning of the present session. The French part of this speech was a very fine gesture to the French-speaking members of this house as well as to those in the whole of the country. He reviewed the situation which faces us in such a manner and with such vision that we are permitted to believe that he has a very enviable future in our party and, thus, in government. I do not hesitate to state that a frame of mind such as the hon. member for Parkdale entertained does more for national unity than another sort of speech which was made in this house at the beginning of the present session.

English-speaking people and French-speaking people have a much better chance to understand each other and to live harmoniously side by side if they adopt the kind of thinking of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney), the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Stinson), the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Haidasz), and all those who think, act and talk as they do. This great nation of ours needs a complete understanding amongst those composing it. Members of this house can set a very effective example to their fellow citizens by taking advantage of any opportunity to show that they understand the views of other ethnical groups.

It might be interesting for many hon. members to learn that my riding elected me as a Conservative in spite of tremendous efforts on the part of the Liberal candidate, his aides and the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who waged a campaign of racial, sectional and religious prejudices. In what was intended to be the great rally for the Liberals, the former member for Stormont developed the following theme, according to the report in the Liberal weekly:

> The chief of the Conservative party has made a deal with the premier of Ontario against the best interests of the province of Quebec.

When the former member of an Ontario constituency was saying:

> The Liberal party is the only one that has a unified thinking all through Canada.

I wonder whether he knew that in the same issue of the paper the Liberal organization would make a strong appeal to racial prejudices by publishing, next to the photograph of the then prime minister:

> We do not want Diefenbaker and his anti-French Canadian policy.

The members of the Liberal party who like to speak so much of Canadian unity would be keenly interested to learn that on the eve of the election the Liberal organization caused to be distributed after Sunday masses a circular appealing this time to the religious feelings of our population in such a way that the president of the Liberal organization for my riding has been arrested for having published and distributed a libelous circular without any signature or any name of a printer.

I am glad to proclaim that the people of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, who are 99.9 per cent Canadians of French origin and who profess the Catholic religion, have ignored the sectionalism, the religious and the racial prejudice pact campaign of a former liberal member of this house. Let it be known to this house and to the country that my people do not ask for any favours; all they want is justice. Since we did not obtain it from the Liberal party we turned to our great Conservative party and I am confident that we shall obtain justice from our able leader.

In coming to this house, sir, I have accepted the obligation of acting as a representative of all the people of my constituency. Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure for me to devote my energy and full capacity in the best interests of our country, under the banner of the Conservative party and under the able leadership of our Prime Minister.

(Translation):

Mr. Rosaire Gauthier (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to tender my sincere congratulations to the hon. members of this house for the trust the people of Canada placed in them at the federal elections, as well as my best wishes so that all decisions and all legislation in this house be taken and passed in the best interest of the Canadian nation.

My feelings and wishes are, without doubt, those of the people in my riding of Chicoutimi, which I have the honour to represent in this nation's parliament.

My speech will contain no bitter criticism, but rather the expression of a few wishes dear to the heart of the people of my riding and also dear to every Canadian of good will.

From the very beginnings of the Canadian confederation, the fundamental force which has impelled our Canadian people and the gallant political leaders who have governed the country—more particularly the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, to whom I am happy to express our esteem, gratitude and admiration for what he so magnificently accomplished in our great country—has indeed been this deep-rooted trend towards a genuine and rational national unity, that is to say unity in diversity, for it does seem that the two great racial groups of our country will never unite to the point of making up a single people with a single mentality. So it was the fundamental tendency of our governments to cause our two main racial groups to constitute a national community united by bonds of human fellowship, the harmony of well-understood liberties and the respect of the democratic scale of values.

Today, after more than a century of common wishes and endeavours, after more than a century of common undertakings in the direction of true national unity, do we not sense, all of us, the undefinable feeling that this national unity must be a truly living reality in the heart of every Canadian.

On the other hand, if we do have that first feeling, we cannot escape another. We know that this unity is still threatened by certain prejudices which have the unfortunate effect of lessening it, of weakening it, and often of threatening it in its fundamental principles. Still I hope that it will never be thought that in this country, there is the west and the east. We should rather think that, notwithstanding the faults committed in the past, we form one country. These faults have been committed, and we can do little but accept them as they were. In any event the west is necessary to the east, as the east itself is just as necessary to the west. Moreover what affects one province also affects this country as a whole. Let there be no drawing back on our part. We must convince ourselves that it is absolutely indispensable for the Canadian people to understand how necessary it is to present a common front and to unite in every field of human endeavour, individually, collectively and nationally.

That is why I express the hope that the legislation which is to be adopted here will always take into account the meaning of true and authentic national unity.

(Text):

Besides, this unity which I have just mentioned, will not be complete unless and until full general bilingualism is achieved in this country. I do not mean a complacent, diplomatically self-seeking, limited or superficial bilingualism. Our national unity will be a living fact when we shall have live bilingualism, in complete mutual respect and admiration, a bilingualism which is alive and realistic.

I therefore express the wish that future legislation affecting in any way the issue of national interest may fully honour the principles I just stated; and only at such time as our laws, in their spirit and administration, imply general bilingualism will our national unity really progress toward the completeness we all hope for.

In spite of all this, our national unity will not be perfect without the contribution to our national heritage of a distinctive flag, a symbol of maturity, independence and sovereignty; for, even if our country is recognized as having the characteristics of an independent and free nation, these attributes are scarcely believable when it is considered that this nation is deprived of its first symbolic expression, namely a distinctive and characteristic flag which would achieve our common ideal.

This doubt, which many Canadians feel, is not, I believe, the expression of prejudices. It is not a sign of disrespect towards certain great nations to which we are deeply attached by blood, traditions, culture and memories. Nor does it reflect a lack of admiration for those great nations. On the contrary, the collective desire to obtain in the near future a distinctive and typically Canadian flag is a sign of national maturity.

When a nation reaches that stage of national maturity, as Canada has now done it requires all the means of expression which characterize and identify an adult nation. When a nation is in possession of those means of expression it will command more respect and it will have more respect for others in the full plenitude of its maturity and with all those means of expression which it requires.

I also voice this nation's growing desire to have a distinctive flag and I hope that very soon this general desire will be fulfilled through the enactment of practical legislation which will give our country a distinctive flag, one that will serve and enshrine the cause of Canadian unity.

(Translation):

Furthermore, means of communications have largely contributed to bind together the various parts of the world. More and more, countries are communicating between themselves, and more and more they exchange reciprocal ideas and opinions.

Now, there is in Italy a sovereign state, a defender of the same spiritual and material values that we ourselves defend. I mean the Vatican.

I would not like to hark back to an old question, nor would I wish to raise in the house a religious issue, which would be pointless, but regardless of that, the fact remains that the supreme head of that small state is drawing the attention of the civilized world and the admiration of all nations professing to defend democracy.

That is why these countries send to the Vatican an ambassador in order to partake of the immense advantages of such a friendship.

Why should our country, I am asking you, be further deprived of the benefits resulting from such essential friendship?

I therefore wish that an early decision be taken to send to the Holy See an ambassador who would represent our country and bring us every advantage that friendly relations between countries or states can award.

Without in any way wishing to discuss at this time the delicate constitutional matter of education, I nevertheless think that the government is not unfamiliar—and this is the least one can say—with the issue of education for the citizens under its rule.

Whatever the circumstances, we advocate—and rightfully so—the development of our national wealth. Now, is it not true that there is no greater wealth for a country than its young people, whose value is incomparably higher than all our material possessions?

More than ever therefore it is high time that the lawgiver should recognize in a concrete fashion such a priority of human values over other values, by furthering education in all its forms, and that he should enable the inquisitive and believing mind to dominate matter and put it to good use, and thus to insure the survival of the other values for which we all live and toil, the triumph of our democratic ideas.

I therefore hope that our legislation will increasingly tend to favour the discovery of the talents possessed by a host of young Canadians. I wish that legislation may facilitate the mental growth of our youth through the numerous legislative means at the disposal of this government, either by tax exemptions for large families, or by the granting of scholarships in every field, an education assistance scheme, a higher training assistance plan for young people, more adequate tax exemptions in the case of teachers, etc.

Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the wishes and particular needs of my constituency, let me dwell on a matter which we all have at heart, world peace.

We are all moved by this deep desire; I need not therefore say anymore about it.

Our understanding of peace is common and collective but often we underestimate the price we have to pay to get peace and maintain it.

Peace at the present time cannot be taken for granted. We all recognize our deep desire for peace but we must also realize the vital necessity of earning peace and paying for it.

It is with the greatest possible understanding that all Canadians must make certain concessions to ensure their security and their well-being in order to avoid having to make greater sacrifices.

I therefore wish that all the acts which will soon be enacted will definitely take this wish into account in order that we may contribute to world peace and take the means to ensure and maintain it.

However, if I make it a point to ask the government to protect the moral and spiritual values of the Canadian nation, I must also bring to the attention of the house the economic and social needs of my constituency, which occupies a very important place in the present economy of this country and whose enormous natural resources have attracted to an ever increasing degree, the attention of financiers and of governments.

If we must continue to claim that we must retain in this country the advantages accruing from the exploitation of our natural resources, this development must be favoured before anything and we must then see to it that they be processed locally.

The development of these mineral resources has already begun but serious observers have noticed that the progress of these industries has been paralysed through the absence of adequate means of transportation which could be used to direct the ore to large Canadian refining plants which it would be high time to establish in strategic locations, along the St. Lawrence and the Saguenay. As a matter of fact there is already under construction at Chicoutimi a nickel refinery to which will soon be added, I hope, a copper refinery and possibly even a zinc refinery.

The Saguenay river is most certainly one of the finest inland deep draught waterways flowing into the St. Lawrence and situated hardly two hundred miles from the main northern Quebec mining centres.

The government must therefore take such steps as are necessary to establish along the Saguenay the necessary harbour facilities so that maritime transportation may henceforth contribute to the development of our immense natural resources.

The government must also intensify its research and experimental studies so as to find an economic and practical means of preventing the freezing up of navigable waters and to allow the year round use of our ports and waterways.

When it becomes possible to use our seaports all year round, the whole economy of our country will benefit from such invaluable progress. Experiments carried out in this field have shown that it is possible to prevent ice formation over rivers where the temperature is exceedingly cold. All that remains for us to do is to apply this process or any other which modern science will no doubt find.

Furthermore, if ever it becomes possible, as I firmly believe, to navigate at least as far up as Quebec city during the winter months, I am no less convinced that it will be necessary to favour year round navigation on the Saguenay river as far as Chicoutimi. In fact, I should like to point out to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), the importance of ports of the Saguenay river, especially Port Alfred, the port of the Saguenay Terminals Company, which is the third largest in Canada from the point of view of traffic. I might also add that ports on the Saguenay river are deep water ports and sheltered from heavy winds, offering thereby, it seems, a distinct advantage for their maintenance during the winter months.

[Mr. Gauthier (Chicoutimi).]

It should be remembered that over most of our country the closing of seaports in winter deprives a great part of the population of its main source of income.

It would therefore be a happy solution to the serious problem of seasonal unemployment if that part of the population had the opportunity of working all year round.

Since the development of natural resources and the economy of northern Quebec are dependent on transportation, it is my duty to point out the deplorable situation of the railway services in my constituency.

The Chicoutimi constituency whose economic importance is undisputed, is connected with other centres of our country by a single railway which is in a crude condition and in this regard I call upon the testimony of those who use it. It is obvious that steps should be taken without delay to bring about the necessary improvements. We moreover urge the government to build a new railway line affording more direct connections between the city of Quebec and towns along the Saguenay, in the lake St. John area and in northern Quebec, so as to allow trains to join the national system without using the line already existing which is too long and does not meet adequately our present needs.

Since air transport has now become almost as important as transportation by water or by rail, I must mention the fact that the industrial and commercial centre of my riding has no civil airport.

A few private air companies now use the military airport of Bagotville but obviously that situation cannot last indefinitely. Distances between Chicoutimi county and other centres give a decisive value to air transport; there is no doubt that this means of transportation will be increasingly popular in the future.

We need a modern civil airport so located as to meet the needs of the whole population of the county as well as the needs of the many people who use that means of transportation to get there from the four corners of Canada and from foreign countries.

I hope that the government will give this need all the consideration it deserves.

Enlightened minds would never question the necessity of those means of transport of which I have just spoken in connection with the economy of Chicoutimi county and of the whole of Canada.

A look at the geographical situation of our county gives an idea of the importance of this problem.

This area, almost isolated in the centre of the province of Quebec, needs only adequate port, rail and air facilities to become an integral part of the industrial system of the whole country.

Some private companies were soon aware of its economic value and took the necessary steps to solve that same transportation problem to their advantage and for the benefit of our population. However, the government must do the same thing to allow other industries to establish themselves along the shores of the Saguenay river and, I repeat, the Canadian nation will benefit just as much from such improvements as will the population of the county of Chicoutimi.

I would not like to give my colleagues the impression that I ignore the identical needs of other parts of the country. It is obvious that certain parts of Canada have more urgent needs than others but it is also obvious that there are needs everywhere since we are, I would say, on the threshold of our economic development.

We are therefore pleased to see that everyone expects the federal government to give a free hand to industrial growth.

Even if the economic requirements of the whole country absorb a large slice of federal resources, the government should nevertheless seriously consider, as promised, cutting down taxes and increasing social benefits, not only old age pensions which, in spite of a slight increase, are still inadequate and should have been raised to at least $60.00 per month, from age 60 for people in need, and from age 65 for all others. I am surprised that there was no mention whatever of family allowances, which should be materially increased. Is it because they would mostly benefit Quebec people? It is up to the government to answer that question and to bring an adequate remedy.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has lately launched a campaign for winter employment, but what does the government intend to do to help the unemployed that we are going to have in great numbers in my riding as a result of the interruption of logging operations, since the economy of our region depends on two great and important industries, aluminum and lumber, the latter remaining the most important and most sizeable. It is certainly surprising that the government seems to ignore the necessity of public works to take care of unemployment. It is the government's duty to promote full employment, to increase benefits as much as is feasible, and to give such assistance to the unemployed as long as they cannot get work.

The influx of new industries to Canada has undoubtedly the effect of creating new jobs which partially solve the unemployment problem and social insecurity. But this is not enough for social security, and I respectfully urge the government to pay particular attention to the jobless, and especially to the lumberjacks who make up a great part of the population of my riding and who, like thousands of lumberjacks all over the country, are now suffering hardship not only through a slackening of this industry, but because of complete shutdowns in logging operations.

The unemployment insurance act does not sufficiently protect this class of workers who, unlike city workers, cannot hunt for a new job in other industries without being almost forced to expatriate themselves.

The unemployment periods in lumber industry are much longer than in most other industries.

At this time, the problem is serious, and our thousands of lumberjacks are anguished because they have no hope of finding the job they absolutely need to meet the needs of their families during the winter months. Our unemployed are not asking for charity. They want jobs. Let them be given the opportunity and, should that not come to pass, I urge the government to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to insure greater social protection to this class of workers by reducing the waiting period.

In newly opened areas such as ours, bush workers and farmers are the pioneers of the twentieth century, and their presence in these areas which will eventually be economically developed is essential to future development.

We must therefore take all necessary steps to allow these pioneers to remain on their farms. If, to that end and to insure the lumber industry the manpower it requires, we must amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, we should not hesitate in adopting such legislation.

I am proud to pay here a special tribute to the settlers of my constituency and of the country as a whole since these men and women are part of the very elite of our great country.

My time being limited, I will only make a passing reference to the fact, but I would like to remind you that the farmer is a stabilizing element from the material point of view as well as being the very cornerstone not only of the material prosperity of our great country but also of its moral health in the social field. It seems necessary that there be maintained for his benefit an agricultural support price policy for his main products, especially butter, cheese, pork, eggs and poultry. It would also be advisable that account be taken of the possibility of reducing the interest rates on those loans which farmers must obtain to improve their farms. The matter of setting up a central bureau for agricultural markets should also be considered. I therefore hope that the government will be as ready to adopt these measures as it was with regard to western wheat.

As mayor of the city of Chicoutimi, I feel it is necessary that the government consider the possibility of eliminating the 15 level crossings furrowing our city from west to east and constantly endangering highway traffic. There is all the more reason to do so when we consider that those crossings are situated at the bottom of hills. The implementation of the Fairweather plan would remedy this intolerable situation and I should be very glad to give the authorities the necessary information on that matter.

Even if the Minister of Transport did not mention the port of Chicoutimi in the house these last few days, I am sure he is aware that it is a link in the chain of national harbours and I invite him to Chicoutimi to see for himself the state of neglect of some areas of this port, with a view to authorizing the necessary improvements. I would also add that sounding of the bottom of the Saguenay river should be carried out for four miles below Chicoutimi. In this way the necessary straightening out of the channel could be carried out, as well as the dredging required to allow ships of all tonnage to reach Chicoutimi at all times. Serious consideration should also be given to the possibility of allowing the C.B.C. to set up a television station at Chicoutimi to be incorporated into the national system. There are channels available for that purpose and I think that there would be no objection to the government issuing the necessary licence.

Retaining walls should also be constructed, not only along the Saguenay at Chicoutimi and at Chicoutimi-Nord, but also at Port-Alfred, along Grande-Baie boulevard and, farther on, at Anse Saint-Jean and Petit-Saguenay, as well as at Valin and Saint-Fulgence. A viaduct has been a necessity at Port-Alfred for a long time. I urge that consideration be given to that matter as soon as possible.

As a former president of the union of the municipalities of the province of Quebec, may I bring up a matter which is of vital interest to our municipalities. Everybody knows that tight money and credit restrictions are currently the most agonizing issues for our municipalities. It is now difficult and costly to sell bonds, and in some cases impossible to find buyers, even if the projects to be financed are absolutely essential to the municipalities and even if all necessary guarantees are given; furthermore in cases where financing has been possible, the price of borrowed money has increased substantially.

To the higher cost of municipal loans must be added the increased costs of labour and materials.

The taxpayer's obligations are continually increasing, thus increasing in turn the cost of services; hence the need for municipalities to find new revenues in order to be able to meet the situation. Consequently, it would be in order perhaps to turn to our senior governments in order to obtain part of the taxes paid by the taxpayers. I presume it is with this idea in mind that the government has called a federal-provincial conference for the end of this month, but in my humble opinion, the municipalities should also have been invited, since they are also closely interested in this fiscal problem.

In any case, I hope this conference will bring the municipalities an adequate solution to their fiscal problems.

Mr. Speaker, does everything I just said—and I do not want to blame anybody in particular—not stress the fact that the district of Saguenay-Lake St. John has been somewhat ignored, and that Canada has therefore not had all the benefit from its especially desirable position as a means of penetrating the very economic heart of the continental spread of Quebec, whose mineral wealth has at least been known for more than half a century.

The reason for this fact is probably easy to understand. After confederation, the wish to achieve a great Canada took priority over the care of building up the country more rationally perhaps, more economically, but in a way that would not be in keeping with the great political aim that had been set up. Disregarding the hinterland and supposing that another nation, different from eastern Canada, would have been established in western Canada, it would seem obvious that the pattern of economic development in the east would have been entirely different. People would obviously have sought to develop the northern sections rather than reach indefinitely towards the west. However, no sooner had the political choice been made in favour of the west than the energies which were expended for the development of these areas, in order to sustain as much as possible the railway policy which was to unite the country, ceased to be available for the development of the resources of the eastern part of this country.

This development, in actual fact, was considered in the light of western railway development, not much thought being given to anything else. What happened to be near these lines was in fact developed because the development of these resources appeared more profitable. However there was no inclination to embark upon a local policy with regard to access routes which would have allowed for more balanced regional development.

Had this been done, the Saguenay-Lake St. John area would certainly have occupied a place of honour in the minds of the authorities of the day and would certainly have received a great deal more attention than has been given to it.

Indeed, our district is so located and settled as to be the heart of a large economic empire and allow developments which can contribute considerably to enhance the prestige of Canada on world markets.

Those are briefly, Mr. Speaker, the few thoughts that I wished to submit to your kind attention.

(Text):

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, 30 years ago today the United States, and with her the Anglo-Saxon world and its associates, had practically every trump card in her hand. Russia and the then communist world had in its hand hardly a single valuable card. Russia's one hope lay in the fact that the communist leaders were mentally alert, knew facts and consistently faced facts, while the Anglo-Saxon world's leaders, like the majority of their people, were mentally indolent, believed in falsehoods and were easily deluded.

The two Russian satellites at this dangerously late moment have shaken most Anglo-Saxons into a dull, confused realization that things are actually going wrong with us. Whether or not we shall be able to pinch ourselves awake and ourselves face facts in time, only the future will tell.

Yesterday the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) called the attention of the house to a leading article on the front page of the Financial Post of October 26, 1957, entitled "Still Deluded and Disastrous". On that particular date nothing could have played into Russia's hands more effectively than did that editorial. The Ottawa Russian embassy could well have afforded to pay $1 billion to have that article written and another $1 billion to the Financial Post to have the article published. But the communists had no need to go to that expense. They have so fully deluded Canadians for the past 30 years that Canadians will now go on deluding each other. Canadians can now be found sufficiently dishonest and sufficiently disloyal to Canada's best interests to write such articles as this one. Every really informed person will readily detect that the editorial I am referring to is as full of falsehoods as it is of phrases. One of the greatest and most mischievous of these falsehoods is contained in the words "as funny as the money they advocate".

What constitutes funny money? What about the French Canadian playing card money first issued in 1685 by the French colonial authorities and spent into circulation for necessary supplies from the colonial merchants? Was that funny money? If so, why so? If not, why not? May I suggest that any person who cannot answer that question does not know the first thing about money. It worked admirably, that playing card money, and it remained in use until the fall of Quebec in 1759. What about the Hudson's Bay Company token money, the made-beaver, created for the Hudson's Bay Company and by that company spent into circulation for beaver skins? Was a made-beaver sound money? Made-beavers circulated for decades in the fur trade all through the west.

What about the Guernsey island notes of which in 1814 3,000 were printed by the Guernsey island government and spent into circulation to pay for building the famous Guernsey island market-house?—Were those notes funny or sound? Between 1815 and 1829, tens of thousands of pounds of such Guernsey notes were printed and cautiously and scientifically spent into circulation to pay for improvements in that 5½ mile by 9½ mile garden island; £4,000 in June, 1820, to pay off some of the island's floating debt, £580 in June, 1821 to pay off some interest-bearing debt, and so on, as recorded in "The Story of Money" by Sir Norman Angell published in 1830, at pages 252 to 257. Were those notes funny? The use of them accomplished almost incredible achievements in the island.

What about the dominion notes printed by Canada's finance minister under the Dominion Notes Act of 1868, from 1868 to 1914? Were those notes funny or sound? If so, why in either case? What about the dominion notes printed by Canada's finance minister under the Finance Act of 1914 and of 1923, hundreds of millions of dollars of which were lent into circulation through the chartered banks of Canada, and tens of millions of dollars of which were spent into circulation during world war I? Were those notes funny or sound? If so, why in either case? Sir Thomas White, great finance minister of the Conservative administration during world war I and of the union government administration during the reconstruction period after world war I, believed those notes were sound. Do you? Sir Thomas, in his "Memorandum of Dissent" from the report of the royal commission on banking and currency in Canada published in 1933, wrote the following words as reported at page 85 of that report:

It is my belief that no central bank in the world—

Notice the word "world".

—during the war period functioned more smoothly or was capable of being utilized more promptly or with greater immediate effect in serving the purposes of national and business finance than the Canadian Finance Act of 1914. It is also my view that during the period in question and in the very trying period of so-called reconstruction following the armistice no other monetary system proved more efficient or better adapted to national needs than that of the chartered banks of Canada supplemented as it was by the provisions of the Finance Act of 1914.

And again:

And in my opinion the same high degree of efficiency has been maintained by the Canadian financial system down to the present time. Of this statement we have at least partial proof in the stability of that system during the unprecedented world depression of the past four years.

Someone who knows the man who wrote that editorial in the Financial Post should suggest to him that he read some of these things and enlighten himself! In the light of the things I have said some of the things that were written in that Financial Post article are seen to be just pure nonsense. Absolute nonsense!

May I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) upon his outlined program for the improvement of social conditions in Canada. He will require great quantities of money; where will all that money come from? The first question he must ask himself is: Can Canadians deliver the goods he will require to feed, clothe, shelter, educate, keep healthy, defend and otherwise provide for Canadians the standard of well-being which Canadians have the right to expect and enjoy, and which our present Prime Minister is eager to render available to them? Can we as Canadians, and will we if given a chance, deliver milk and milk products, meats, grains, vegetables, fruits, sugars, etc., down through the whole list of needed goods? The answer in the main must be a thundering "Yes!"

Surely then we ought to be able to have dollars! A dollar is merely a ticket to goods and services; merely a ticket or a claim. Such being the case the more goods and services a community has and can produce and can deliver, as, when and where required, the more tickets or claims to goods and services that community ought to be able to create.

A theatre manager, having 500 seats in his theatre, ought to be able to stamp 500 tickets. That theatre manager, having 1,000 seats, ought to be able to stamp 1,000 tickets. Incidentally should that manager have to borrow those 500 tickets from anyone? Reason and common sense simultaneously answer "certainly not". He should not have to borrow those tickets. Neither should Canada have to borrow the tickets she uses unless she sees fit so to do.

Now the Canadian community in the year 1957 either has produced, or will produce, in the neighbourhood of $30 billion worth of goods. Of that amount the proportion made up of consumer goods such as food, clothing, shelter, etc., would adequately supply the needs of Canada's people, up to a good standard of living. Why then are so many Canadians not able to acquire that standard of living? The production of each and every kind of those consumer goods can be rapidly and almost indefinitely increased by Canadians if potential producers could but obtain firstly the credit with which to produce, secondly markets, and thirdly, profitable prices. Yes, Canada is able to deliver the goods!

Referring again to our illustration of theatre tickets, might we not say that, in the great Canadian theatre plenty of seats are available; why are the needed tickets not made accessible? Now, can the Diefenbaker government get the tickets or the dollars that would claim these consumer goods and the other goods Canadians are producing, and can the Diefenbaker government work out a scheme whereby they can get those tickets into the hands of potential consumers in such amounts as will enable such consumers to consume the goods and services on Canadian markets, or coming upon those markets some time in the future, without bringing about any rise in prices caused by scarcity of goods? That is to say, without causing real inflation, which, after all, is "too many dollars chasing too few goods?"

May I repeat the question I have already asked? Where will all the money come from? During 20 years every Liberal minister who has spoken upon the subject has positively affirmed that all the money available to the government had to come from taxation, that is, to come from the pockets of Canadians. Are the ministers of the Diefenbaker government intending to make the same declaration? Is the present government going to maintain that it can have no dollars to spend except those which they can wring from our people through taxation or borrowing? Is it going to do that in spite of the record of Sir Thomas White, the great Conservative finance minister back in history, available for them to read of, and study? If so, then Canadians are doomed to disappointment and further frustration and suffering.

Any central government should possess, and scientifically exercise, the power to create money. Our fathers of confederation in 1867 provided that the federal government of Canada should possess that power. May I quote from the British North America Act section 91, clauses 14, 15 and 20:

> . . . it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this act) the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say—
> 14, currency and coinage,
> 15, banking, incorporation of banks and the issue of paper money,
> 20, legal tender.

Our fathers as early as 1868 legislated for the exercise of that power by enacting the Dominion Notes Act. The Dominion Notes Act of 1868 empowered Canada's minister of finance to create and issue up to $8 million worth of Dominion of Canada notes, the first $5 million with 20 per cent backing in specie, that is 20 cents worth of specie behind each one dollar bill, and the next $3 million with 25 cents worth of specie behind each one dollar bill. I would refer you to the report of the royal commission on banking and currency for Canada, 1933, at page 21.

By 1913 the Dominion Notes Act had been so modified during the years, that the minister of finance was empowered to issue $30 million of notes with a backing of 25 cents worth of either gold or guaranteed debentures behind each dollar. Notice the remarkable change there—it is very significant—guaranteed debentures instead of gold! Still more dollar bills could be issued backed by 100 per cent of gold. You notice they were not worrying very much about inflation so long as they had the gold.

Subsequently in August 1914 the parliament of Canada empowered the minister of finance to create and issue $50 million worth of notes with 25 cents of gold behind each one dollar bill. Later $16 million were issued backed by a deposit of railway securities guaranteed by the dominion government; also $10 million were issued without any particular backing and spent "for governmental purposes".

There is a case where they did not take the money they got from the taxpayer—There you are Conservatives!—do not allow yourselves to be fooled by writers in the Financial Post. (See the report at page 22.) In 1917 $50 million were issued, secured by imperial treasury bills—see the report, page 22—and spent for horses, grain, and other needs for world war I. So there was a time when Conservative governments had wisdom in this country, and we hope that time has come again.

The Finance Act of 1914 made provision for the Canadian government to issue dominion notes backed by approved securities, including dominion bonds, certain railway, provincial and municipal bonds and certain other securities subject to appraisal by the dominion treasury board. See report to which I have referred, page 22. That report is in the House of Commons library and I suggest it be read with care by everyone who bears the heavy responsibility which lies on the shoulders of all members of this house. Paragraph 49 of that report reads thus:

> A proclamation in pursuance of the act was issued on September 3, 1914, and thenceforth throughout the war and the early postwar period extensive use was made of the act.

Notice that word "extensive". Paragraph 50 reads:

> An act passed in 1919 provided for the continuance in force of the proclamation made on September 3, 1914 until two years after the conclusion of peace on termination of the war.
> This explains the continued operation of the act until 1923.

From paragraph 51 I quote:

> But extensive use continued to be made of the power to issue dominion notes to the banks against approved securities . . .

So well did the act function that the hon. W. S. Fielding, a Liberal finance minister, in 1923 re-introduced the Finance Act of 1914 as the Finance Act of 1923, using the following words, and I read from the report:

> The act was adopted as a war measure, and no doubt it was exceedingly useful in the financial operations during the war. It may be said that the war being over we no longer have any need for the act, but experience has shown that the act is still required; indeed, I am inclined to think that something of the kind will have to become almost a permanent part of our financial system.

Mr. Speaker, so do I think that; I agree with hon. W. S. Fielding. The potentialities of the Finance Act of 1914 and of 1923 are outlined by the royal commission on banking and currency in Canada in paragraphs 135-38 inclusive. At page 40 of this report, published in 1933, may I read:

> In normal times the Minister of Finance may make advances of dominion notes to the chartered banks and to those to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies upon the pledge of:
> (a) Treasury bills, bonds, debentures or stocks of the Dominion of Canada, Great Britain, any province of Canada, and of any British possession.

It is an unchallengeable fact that every Canadian finance minister from 1923 down to the passage of the Bank of Canada Act of 1934 possessed the power to create in normal times Canadian dollars backed by approved securities, and advance those dollars to Canadian chartered banks. It is uncontestably true that between the outbreak of world war I in 1914 and the end of 1917 the then Canadian finance minister, who was Sir Thomas White, issued and placed in circulation in Canada $76 million in Canadian notes with no Canadian backing except that of the credit of Canada, that is, with no backing but Canadian goods and services and Canada's ability to produce more goods and services and to deliver such goods and services as required, when required and where required. This I have shown by reference to paragraph 47 on page 22 of the report.

It is true that under the finance acts of 1914 and 1923, the backing of Canadian notes was to be securities of a particular and specified kind as listed in paragraph 135 on page 40 of the report. One class of this kind is given in paragraph 135 as "treasury bills, bonds, debentures or stocks of the Dominion of Canada." I am quoting that again so as to help the editor of the Financial Post to get it.

Any quantity of Canadian bonds could easily be created. What was to be the limit of the amount of Canadian bonds which could safely be created? That is the thing we want to know. That limit, basically, must be Canada's credit, her real credit; that is, her ability to produce or to acquire and to deliver goods and services. What was the backing of the made-beaver money? Goods and services. What was the backing of the French playing card money? Goods and services. What was the backing of the Guernsey island notes? Goods and services.

We have in Canada goods and services today. No one will argue about that. We have goods and services of sufficient variety and quantity. Dominion notes of 25 cents, $1, $2, $500 and $1,000 were legal tender which of course means, as everyone in this house knows, that when a person tendered a note of one of these denominations in settlement of a debt the person to whom he offered it was obliged to accept it or to cancel the debt. See paragraph 133 of the report. For a time after world war I the holder of a dominion note could call for gold—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: But the gold redemption clause was suspended in April 1933. Hear, hear—did you get that?—"by order in council."

Now it could be said for the purpose of illustration that Social Crediters have advocated, and still advocate, that within well defined limits—note that expression—dominion dollars, either paper or credit, should be issued by the finance minister and by him held available to be employed for helping people to buy whatever needed goods and services might be found in excess in the nation's inventories; excess, not because the consumers could not or would not consume the goods, if they could afford them, but because the consumers lack the money with which to buy. And if today we had in force in Canada the finance acts of 1914 and 1923, then issuance of such notes as I have referred to for the purpose of illustration would constitute a use of the finance acts of 1914 and 1923. Yet the Social Crediters have been called crack pots! Go to Sir Thomas White's ghost and see what he would say. To all intents and purposes it is exactly similar to the $16 million backed by railway securities and the $10 million issued backed only by the credit of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would find this a convenient place at which to stop.

On motion of Mr. Blackmore the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: We will continue with this debate tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question but, pursuant to standing order.
