House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Speaker: The Honourable Roland Michener

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY-THIRD PARLIAMENT

The twenty-second parliament having been prorogued on the twelfth day of April, 1957, and dissolved by proclamation on the same day, and writs having been issued and returned, a new parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Monday, October 14, 1957, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Monday, October 14, 1957

This being the day on which parliament is convoked by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General for the dispatch of business, and the members of the house being assembled:

Léon J. Raymond, Esquire, O.B.E., the Clerk of the House, read to the house a letter from the secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, would proceed to the Senate chamber to open the first session of the twenty-third parliament of Canada on Monday, the fourteenth of October, at eleven o'clock.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:
It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate chamber, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate,
and Members of the House of Commons:
I have it in command to let you know that Her Majesty the Queen does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law, but this afternoon, at the hour of three o'clock, Her Majesty will declare the causes of calling this parliament.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

MR. ROLAND MICHENER, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF ST. PAUL'S

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Raymond, what is uppermost in the minds of us all today is the opening of the twenty-third parliament by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. It is a great and joyous occasion, a shining moment of rededication to all the traditions and a living exemplification of our history. I do not rise on this occasion to memorialize this historic event, but only to make possible the participation of this house in that event. I know how eager we are to hear from Her Majesty, but having not as yet elected a Speaker we have no voice to speak on our behalf or no means of communication with Her Majesty. Indeed, according to law, the House of Commons is not constituted nor has it any status until that has been achieved. The representative of the crown has reminded us that Her Majesty the Queen does not see fit to disclose to us the reasons that have caused her to bring us together until we have selected a Speaker.

All this is in the tradition of parliament, for at this moment, and on this what I choose to call the Queen's day, the members of the Commons and of the Senate as well will walk with history. There is no need for me to tell you that the highest position that can be conferred on anyone, that of the first commoner, will be in the custody and keeping of that person who is chosen as Speaker. He is the link with the crown and in olden days, as the records show, the function was an arduous one, requiring great courage on the part of those chosen.

Election of Speaker

Those were the days when the Commons faced the overwhelming sovereignty of the monarch. Because of the fact that the Commons never did sit with the crown and the Lords, the practice was, and it goes back to the fourteenth century, of having a spokesman speak on behalf of the Commons. As an example, almost 400 years ago, in 1562, Speaker Williams, during the reign of Elizabeth I, spoke on behalf of the rights of the commoners. He asked for the right of free access to the Queen. He asked for the right to interpret the wishes of the members of the House of Commons. He asked for the historic and prerogative rights of the Commons in these words:

> That the assembly of the lower house may have frank and free liberties to speak their minds without any controlment, blame, grudge, menaces or displeasure, according to the old ancient order.

Finally Speaker Williams said:

> ...the old privilege of the house be observed, which is that they and theirs might be at liberty, frank and free, without arrest, molestation, trouble or other damage to their bodies, lands, goods or servants, with all other their liberties, during the time of the said parliament, whereby they may the better attend and do their duty; all which privileges I desire may be enrolled, as at other times it hath been accustomed.

That was under Elizabeth I. Today parliament is supreme, and the throne, while losing its apparent powers and authority, has gained in dignity and significance and in the hearts of the people, and this function is no longer one of concern.

Oliver Goldsmith, exemplifying what parliament stood for and the right of the rule of law in parliament, said:

> The Englishman is taught to love the King as his friend, but to acknowledge no other master than the laws which he himself has contributed to enact.

What are the functions of the Speaker? I am not going to review what has been said in the past by my predecessors in office. Summarizing the position of the Speaker, it is this: to preside over the House of Commons, to be the jealous guardian of its prerogatives and rights, without which its prestige would suffer and ultimately freedom would be endangered. The Speaker must be impartial. He must know the rules of procedure. He should have parliamentary experience for that reason. He must exercise his office with scrupulous and rigorous impartiality. He must be firm and yet patient and incisive, courteous and ever vigilant to guard the rights and privileges of the individual member.

My predecessor in office, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent), spoke of this on the last occasion a Speaker was chosen. Other prime ministers have done the same. What are the qualifications of a Speaker? Well, as one reads the ancient records one finds that they embody those qualities that make a Speaker almost above ordinary humanity. Lord Palmerston asked the editor of the London Times, "What do you require in a Speaker?" This was the reply:

> Imperturbability, good temper, tact, urbanity and, if possible, a training in the law.

Mr. Raymond, in my opinion, such a man is among us in the person of Roland Michener. He was born in Alberta, where his father took part in public life, and afterwards, for many years, was a distinguished member of the Senate. Mr. Michener was a brilliant student and was awarded a Rhodes scholarship from Alberta; a queen's counsel and a member of the Middle Temple as well as the bar of Ontario, and with wide experience in government and public service as a private member of this house and as provincial secretary in Ontario; and, above everything else, whose friendships are not circumscribed by party limitations.

It may be appropriate at this time—it has been mentioned on several occasions—when we have the Queen amongst us and when our thoughts are on our traditions and history, to point out that there is a difference between our system of the choice of Speaker and that in the United Kingdom in the mother of parliaments. There it has been the custom to keep the same Speaker as long as he retains his seat in the house. The opinion has been expressed that we should have a permanent Speaker, but up to the present time the practice of Canada has not been to do so. Our practice, as constituted, is governed by the character and historic basis of our country. Under it, with few exceptions, the Speaker in one parliament is of French origin, followed in the next parliament by one of English origin. Whatever our personal views may be as to having a permanent Speaker, only parliament can make that decision and then only when there is generous unanimity in that regard.

Mr. Michener speaks French fluently. I hope he will receive the approval of the house as being a fit and proper person to be Speaker of the twenty-third parliament. Mr. Raymond, I therefore move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent):

> That Roland Michener, Esquire, member for the electoral district of St. Paul's, do take the chair of this house as Speaker.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Raymond, when the Prime Minister approached me to inquire if I would like to second his motion for the appointment of Mr. Michener as Speaker, I readily agreed to do so. I have been a member of the House of Commons since 1942, and in all the time I have been here we have had Speakers who have worthily upheld the finest traditions of our British parliamentary system.

In the years since Mr. Michener was first elected to this house he has been, as those of us who were here then were able to observe, diligent in his attendance and scrupulous in his observance of the rules of the house and all its ancient usages. His background, which has been referred to in such fitting terms by the Prime Minister, his record as a member, and what we know of him as a man will, I feel, all commend themselves to us as good auguries for the future.

In the confident expectation—and I stress those words—that the house will be well served by Mr. Michener as its Speaker and that he will preside over us competently and with dignity and impartiality, I am happy to second the Prime Minister's motion.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Raymond, as is customary at this time I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) in supporting the nomination of a new Speaker for this parliament. The Prime Minister expressed to the house and indeed to the country what are the functions of the Speaker in this parliament and in the parliaments like it throughout the commonwealth. I noted that he stated that one of the functions of the Speaker was to see that every individual member was properly protected and properly treated in this house.

May I say that I regard one of the principal functions of the Speaker to be not only to protect the individual rights of each member of this house, but to protect groups who may be in minority positions. As a matter of fact, throughout the long period of British history when, as has been indicated, the Speaker occupied a position not only of some responsibility but of some danger, that function on occasion has been the primary function of the Speaker of the day.

I am reminded, as I often am, of one of the greatest Speakers of the British parliament, namely Mr. Speaker Lenthall. I recall again today, as I have done on former occasions, that when Charles I came to the House of Commons in 1642 and demanded that he have the right to arrest five members who had displeased him, it was Lenthall who turned to the king and said:

> I have neither eyes to see, nor tongue to speak, in this place but as the house is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am here.

Thus the Speaker established his position as the protector of the rights of a small minority. In this chamber today there is a house much different from any in which I have had the privilege of sitting, for this is my sixth parliament since 1935. There are not majorities in this house; there are a number of minorities.

Consequently the Speaker will have a particular function to fulfil, and I believe that in Mr. Michener we shall have a Speaker who will try to carry out his responsibilities impartially and give the minorities in this house, whether large or small, the proper consideration and protection they deserve.

The Prime Minister said the Speaker would occupy the chair. The Speaker of the House of Commons is, of course, no mere chairman elected for the supervision of debates. He is the champion of the legislature, against whom? Against the executive. I would remind the government—the executive—of that important function of the Speaker, to protect the house against the executive. The Speaker is custodian of the rights and the privileges that have been handed down to us through a very long period of history and of struggle. Indeed, as the first commoner he is a principal part of the very constitution under which we live and in a very peculiar way which we are recognizing today when Her Majesty the Queen opens this parliament.

So I rise to join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in supporting the election of Mr. Michener as Speaker of this parliament, and to assure him that we shall give him all the co-operation we can. I believe and I pray that his period as Speaker may be a very distinguished one and that he may function according to the historic precedents which have been so well laid down from time to time in the mother of parliaments as well as this younger institution of our own.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Raymond, I rise at this time to indicate to you and to the hon. members of this house that the Social Credit party feel that Mr. Roland Michener is a fit and proper person to assume the office of Speaker and the position of first commoner. We have confidence in Mr. Michener that has been born of our close association with him for some years.

When the Prime Minister outlined to the house the background of Mr. Michener's experience which fitted him to assume this very high and important office, he told the house that Mr. Michener was born in Alberta. We think that was the most important thing which fitted him to be the first commoner and the Speaker of the House of Commons.

We realize that the new Speaker, when he is elected, will have a more difficult time, perhaps, than other Speakers have had for some years because of the very fact, as pointed out by the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell), that this house is now a house of minorities. By force of circumstance one of the minorities now sits at the Speaker's right, and we realize that it will be difficult for him to see the members of this group, occasionally perhaps mistaking them for members of the government. But we draw attention, Mr. Raymond, to the fact that it would be desirable for the Speaker, when he is elected, to get an extra long-range lens in the right side of his glasses so he can see the members of this group when they rise and recognize that they do have a right to speak.

Mr. Raymond, in all seriousness we do feel that in Mr. Michener a good choice has been made—one which will uphold the great traditions that have been built around the Speakers of the British parliaments and we wish for him a period of happy and fruitful presidency over this chamber. We will, to a man, give him the best support of which we are capable, always remembering that the rules are here to be obeyed and we shall obey them.

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente, and Roland Michener, Esquire, member for the electoral district of St. Paul's, duly elected to the chair of the house.

Mr. Michener was conducted from his seat in the house to the Speaker's chair by Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker and Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members of the House of Commons, in the time-honoured formula, I beg to return my humble acknowledgments to the House of Commons for the great honour you have been pleased to confer upon me in electing me unanimously as your Speaker.

Being conscious of the responsibilities of that office and of my own inexperience, I am doubly grateful for the gracious and encouraging words in which my nomination has been proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and supported by the leaders of the C.C.F. and Social Credit groups.

My aim will be to understand and interpret the will and the moods of the house; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to protect the minority; to enable every member to express his opinions within the limits necessary to preserve decorum; to prevent unnecessary waste of time, and above all to be non-partisan and impartial in my decisions. If my service to this house is to contribute to the projection of its great traditions, it will come about only because of the sympathetic support, advice and co-operation of every member.

We all expect the cross-fire, the vigorous cross-fire of debate. My only request is that you give me time to try my wings before you start shooting in this direction.

(Translation):

May I say to my French-speaking colleagues how I wish I could answer them in their own beautiful tongue every time they rise to address me. However, in spite of all my willingness—of which I should like to assure them at this time—it may be that, during the first few months of my probation period in the chair, I will have to use the language I understand best.

I do toil and take pains, but alas, I am poorest in my basic knowledge of your tongue.

Nevertheless let me assure you that I love your tongue and respect the equal status of the two official languages.

Once again I thank the members of the house for the great honour they have been pleased to confer upon me.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that the sitting be suspended until three o'clock this day.

At 11.50 a.m. the sitting was suspended until 3 p.m. this day.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at three o'clock.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary announcing that Her Majesty the Queen would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker:
It is the pleasure of Her Majesty the Queen that this honourable house attend her immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

Then the Hon. Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, said:

May it please Your Majesty:
The House of Commons have elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Majesty's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Majesty the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Majesty the Queen to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, she grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to Her Majesty upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

Then Her Majesty the Queen was pleased to open parliament by a speech from the throne.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the house having attended on Her Majesty the Queen in the Senate chamber, I informed Her Majesty that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me, and, in your names and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which Her Majesty was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that, when this house did attend Her Majesty the Queen this day in the Senate chamber, Her Majesty was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I greet you as your Queen. Together we constitute the parliament of Canada. For the first time the representatives of the people of Canada and their sovereign are here assembled on the occasion of the opening of parliament. This is for all of us a moment to remember.

Parliamentary government has been fashioned by the wisdom of many centuries. Its justice, authority and dignity are cherished by men of good will. It will be the high purpose of my ministers not only to preserve these qualities but to take steps to make both houses of this parliament more effective in the discharge of their responsibilities to the people of Canada.

You have come here to form this new parliament from across a great land, a land far wider than either of those older countries that first gave it birth. I am proud to contemplate the great heritage of this nation—the minerals, the forests, the lands, the waters, the sources of power and energy which fire your ever-growing industries. But I am more proud to contemplate the spirit and ideas which brought this country to nationhood, and now, drawing reinforcement and enrichment from many lands and peoples, have given Canada a national character peculiarly her own.

Yet in this age no nation can live unto itself. Through the overcast of international affairs the bright constellation of the commonwealth illumines our times. The continuing admission of nations newly guided to self-government both broadens and strengthens our diverse commonwealth as more of us come to share the great inheritance of those institutions and ideals which make our association a quiet but pervasive force for good in an unquiet world. This was manifest when the prime ministers of the commonwealth met in London last June to talk of great affairs; and again, only a few days ago when on Canada's invitation, the finance ministers met at Mont Tremblant and in a comradely spirit laid plans for a commonwealth trade and economic conference to take place next year.

A similar spirit has been evident in the Colombo plan, which is a part of the high venture of the peoples of south and southeast Asia as they move along the path of national development, and which my government will continue to support.

My ministers believe that Canada's active participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is essential for the preservation of peace. You will accordingly be asked to maintain modern defence forces in being which, together with those of our allies, will continue to act as a deterrent to attack upon any part of that alliance.

While Canada plays a full part in these particular associations, my ministers remain convinced that in the wider forum of the United Nations we must also continue to seek such agreements as will preserve security and bring about a wide measure of disarmament. Indeed we must continue to hope that through the United Nations the aspirations of men and women for peace and security will be fulfilled.

In domestic affairs my ministers look forward to meeting next month with the leaders of the provincial governments in order to discuss fiscal relations and to seek better understanding and arrangement of many aspects of our public finances.

In the legislative program to be laid before you, it is fitting that mention should first be made of measures to improve the lot of the senior members of our society. Accordingly you will be asked to increase old age security pensions and to shorten the period of residence required to qualify for them. Changes will be proposed in the terms of assistance offered to provincial governments to enable them to increase the payments to be made under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act to a corresponding level.

You will also be asked to increase the scale of war veterans allowances and to enlarge the groups to whom they are paid. Changes will also be proposed in several sections of the Pension Act.

In order to assure to the farmers of Canada a fair share of the national income, you will be asked to enact a measure to provide greater stability in the prices of their products. Every possible effort is now being made, and will continue to be made to seek new markets for agricultural products as well as to regain those that have been lost.

Due to inability to market their grain, prairie farmers have for some time been faced with a serious shortage of funds to meet their immediate needs. In order to permit them to receive an advance payment for the grain they can expect to deliver this year you will be asked to authorize a system of cash advances for grain stored on farms.

My government will strive to secure additional markets for the products of our fisheries and to promote the development of international rules to safeguard the living resources of the sea.

My ministers believe that a national development policy carried out in co-operation with the provinces, and in the territories, is needed to enable all regions of Canada to share in the benefits to be realized in developing the resources of this great nation. It is their intention to propose to you from time to time programs and projects to implement this policy.

As an immediate start upon a program of more extensive development in the Atlantic provinces, you will be asked to authorize, in joint action with the provincial governments, the creation of facilities for the production and transmission of cheaper electric power in those provinces. You will also be asked to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project which has been under construction in New Brunswick.

My ministers will advance this national development policy further by initiating new discussions with the government of Saskatchewan in order to make possible the early commencement of construction of the dam on the South Saskatchewan river.

My ministers are pressing for a favourable settlement of international problems in connection with the Columbia river to clear the way for a joint program with the province of British Columbia to develop the immense power in the waters of this river.

My ministers will place before you a measure to ensure that those working in industries under federal jurisdiction will receive annual vacations with pay.

You will be asked to approve bills relating to certain railway branch lines, amendments to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, and, in so far as the other business before you permits, to several other statutes.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to appropriate the sums required for carrying on the government of Canada during the remainder of the current fiscal year.

Changes in certain of the taxing statutes will be submitted for your approval.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the Commons:

I wish to express to you and to the people of Canada my gratitude and that of my husband for the warmth of the loyalty and affection with which we have been welcomed here in Canada.

As I now address you here for the first time, I will call to your minds the words of the earlier Elizabeth when, more than three centuries ago, she spoke from her heart to the Speaker and members of her last parliament and said "Though God hath raised me high, yet this I count the glory of my crown, that I have reigned with your loves". Now here in the new world I say to you that it is my wish that in the years before me I may so reign in Canada and be so remembered.

On this happy day when we give thanks to God for all that He has bestowed on us, I ask that He may bless and guide you.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of Her Majesty the Queen to both houses of parliament be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Motion agreed to.

ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY

MOVED BY PRIME MINISTER—SECONDED BY LEADER OF OPPOSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that this is indeed the Queen's day, as I said earlier, and in the light of the moving experience which has been ours during the last few minutes, I could not but think of the words of the poet John Masefield in which he described the Queen in this way:

> An order and a beauty from of old
> Set by its virtue above greed and hate;
> A loneliness of living crowned with gold;
> In all life's storm a standard of the state.

Without further words I feel that all hon. members in this house would wish to join in the motion to be moved by myself and seconded by the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent in these words:

That a humble address be presented to Her Majesty conveying the loyalty and love of this house and of all her Canadian subjects, their joy in welcoming the presence in Canada of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness The Prince Philip, and their profound gratitude to Her Majesty for graciously opening parliament and making of this day an historic occasion for all Canadians.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to second the motion of the Prime Minister expressing the deep loyalty, respect and affection which I know everyone in this chamber feels for Her Majesty the Queen, and our genuine satisfaction in welcoming our sovereign lady and Prince Philip.

This is a happy occasion on which to state in formal terms the emotions we felt when Her Majesty presided at the opening of the twenty-third parliament of Canada, and stated, as was the fact, that for the first time the representatives of the people of Canada and their sovereign were assembled on an occasion of such importance. I think this day will go down in Canadian history as—in the words used by the Prime Minister—the Queen's day, and that we shall all rejoice in remembering the emotions of this splendid occasion.

Hon. members will recall that the possibility of Her Majesty and Prince Philip being in Canada at this time arose some months ago, and even then we all hoped that the situation would be such that Her Majesty might herself preside at the opening of this twenty-third parliament. I am very happy that the Prime Minister was able to arrange that this historic ceremony should take place on the occasion of this visit.

I shall defer until the appropriate time my observations on the contents of Her Majesty's speech from the throne, but I do wish to say a word about the gracious and moving speech the Queen addressed last evening by radio and television to the people of Canada.

The pride of all Canadians in our country was, I am sure, enhanced when Her Majesty referred to herself with such evident pride as the Queen of Canada, and particularly when she reminded us that it would be as Queen of Canada that she would visit the United States of America within the next few days. For many of us those words carried our minds back some 18 years to the first visit of a reigning sovereign to the United States, a visit which prepared the way for the ready acceptance today of the position that the sovereign, in visiting our great neighbouring nation, makes such a visit primarily as the head of the Canadian nation.

(Translation):

The grace and ease with which Her Majesty has addressed us in the native tongue of some five million of her Canadian subjects has warmed the hearts of those who, for more than two centuries, have realized that their traditions, their culture and their language are an ever-growing source of pride to all Canadians and, in the eyes of our gracious sovereign, are part and parcel of our national heritage.

(Text):

From the moment of the accession of our Queen to the throne she has displayed on all occasions those qualities which made her late father, King George VI, so universally loved and respected by his subjects throughout the empire and commonwealth. We have all admired her devotion to duty, her high ideals of family life, and her firm attachment to the finest traditions of the commonwealth over which she presides.

As head of the commonwealth Her Majesty symbolizes the principles of freedom, self-government and mutual understanding which unite the members of the commonwealth and make the commonwealth itself a great force for peace in the world.

We on this side of the house are happy to join in the humble address conveying to Her Majesty the loyalty and love of this house and of all her Canadian subjects, their joy in welcoming the presence in Canada of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, and the profound gratitude of the nation to Her Majesty for graciously opening parliament and making of this day, as the motion itself states, an historic occasion for all Canadians.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that in putting the motion we stand and sing.

Whereupon the members of the house rose and sang

God Save the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing the Hon. Donald Methuen Fleming, Minister of Finance, the Hon. Leon Balcer, Solicitor General, the Hon. George Clyde Nowlan, Minister of National Revenue and the Hon. Ellen Louks Fairclough, Secretary of State, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 143 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An act respecting the House of Commons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That Henri Courtemanche, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Labelle, be appointed chairman of committees of the whole house.

He said: The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Courtemanche) served in the previous parliament and he is a member again of this parliament. He has unusual ability and capacity and I know that if appointed he will discharge the responsibilities of this office with honour to himself and to this house.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That Arza Clair Casselman, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Grenville-Dundas, be appointed deputy chairman of committees of the whole house.

He said: The hon. member to whom I refer has been in the House of Commons continuously since 1925. He was first elected in the year 1921 and resigned at that time. He returned in 1925 and has been a member of the House of Commons since. I also hope that his nomination will receive the approval of the house.

Appointment of Committees

Mr. A. C. Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I am taken completely by surprise. I had not been officially informed of this. In the long time that I have been in the House of Commons I have learned to appreciate the responsibilities that accompany positions of this kind because for a period of 20 years I was the whip of the opposition. I would ask my leader if he would allow his motion to stand until such time as I can have an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the hon. gentleman the motion will stand.

Motion stands.

SUPPLY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a similar situation prevails today as prevailed in 1949 in the second session of parliament. In the second session of that year a portion of supply had been voted. When the new parliament began its sittings on September 15 in that year the Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent, then prime minister, moved that the house resolve itself at its next sitting into a committee to consider of a supply to be granted to His Majesty.

A similar situation prevails today because supply will run out at the end of this month. I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming):

That this house will, at its next sitting, resolve itself into a committee to consider of a supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

This can be done only with consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Again by unanimous consent I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming):

That this house will, at its next sitting, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

THE LATE DR. WILLIAM GOURLAY BLAIR

TRIBUTE TO LATE MEMBER FOR LANARK

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, very often during sessions of parliament the members of this house are called upon to say words of commendation of hon. members who having served have passed on, and these occasions arising from time to time serve as unhappy reminders of the shortness of life. The election had been over only a few days when Dr. William Gourlay Blair passed away. He was born in Lanark county, Ontario, the county which he represented in the House of Commons, on January 13, 1890. He attended Perth collegiate and subsequently Queen's University, where he graduated as a medical doctor. He went overseas early in the first war and served as a captain in the Canadian Army Medical Corps. Following the war he maintained a continuing interest in the militia forces of the country and became a lieutenant colonel in the militia.

He was first elected to the House of Commons in the election of 1945 and re-elected in all subsequent elections. I think it will be generally agreed that he was hard working, capable and able and devoted himself both in the house and in committee with zeal and capacity. He was the spokesman of this party on the subject of health and welfare. He will be remembered, however, by members of all political parties for the infinite care that he took whenever any member of this house was stricken in any way with illness. He became, as it were, the unofficial medical officer of parliament, and he continued an interest in the afflicted member's condition throughout the period of the illness.

I think one of the most touching descriptions of him appeared in the Ottawa Journal a day or so after his passing. I think these words, if said of us, would constitute a magnificent epitaph:

Dr. Blair, that good and gentle man, carried to the House of Commons a spirit of tolerant understanding that made no political battle bitter or any disagreement harmful to friendship.

His memory will be revered. A great and truly magnanimous spirit has passed on. His death is a loss to parliament; it is a loss to the country and it is a loss to this party in which, had he lived a little longer, the opportunity for greater service would have been accorded to him. The house will join with me, I am sure, when I express the heartfelt sympathy of every one of us to the members of the family, to his widow and to his son and daughter. He served his generation well. His memory will be revered.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all of us in the house, the new members who did not know him as well as those of us who did, will share the feeling of sadness that at the very opening of a new parliament we should be paying tribute to one of the members who enjoyed and deserved the respect of everyone in the previous parliaments in which he sat. I think it is one of the finest attributes of our parliamentary system that we can differ with one another about public questions and still retain respect, esteem and affection for one another as members of the human family.

In the case of Dr. Blair we know that he was one of those members who was deeply loyal to his own party, who worked hard in its interests but was never an extreme partisan, and I think we would all agree with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has said about him. As a consequence we all know that he enjoyed in more than large measure the regard of his fellow members in all parties in this house.

On behalf of the official opposition I should like to extend to the Prime Minister and to his colleagues our sincere sympathy in the loss of one who would have contributed to their strength in this house had he been spared to continue his service among us. On behalf of our party I should like to join with the Prime Minister in expressing to Mrs. Blair, to their son and daughter, and to all the members of the family, our very deep sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that all members of the house will agree with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) have said regarding the late Dr. Blair. Those of us who sat in the house with him for some years look upon the loss as a personal one. When a member fell ill, Dr. Blair, like other medical men in this chamber, was immediately able to render assistance to the suffering member. Dr. Blair sat very close to me—just across the way; consequently I got to know him very well. Indeed, I might say that I had not only a high regard for him but I came to have affection for him, as many of us had. When he passed away so suddenly it was a reminder, of course, that even a medical man who attends members of parliament suffering from the diseases which ultimately take them away was perhaps unaware of the condition in which he himself was.

I wish to join the Leader of the Opposition in expressing to the government and the members of the late Dr. Blair's party our sincere sympathy in the loss that they have sustained. I noted the Prime Minister said that had Dr. Blair lived a little longer his great ability might have been recognized to a greater extent than it was hitherto. I noted, too, at the time that the shock must have been very great to his family. I noticed that his wife suffered an attack almost immediately. May I express sympathy to his wife and to his family and also the hope that Mrs. Blair has fully recovered her health and that time will heal the loss she must have sustained in the passing of Dr. Blair.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it seems that all too frequently we are called upon to pause in our activities in this house to pay tribute to a deceased member. It seems to me it indicates the strenuous nature of the work that has to be undertaken by those who stand for election to this House of Commons.

It has been some months now since the shock of the news of Dr. Blair's death came to us, but I am sure it will be a long time before our deep appreciation of his many fine qualities is in any way dulled. Dr. Blair was one of those members about whom almost everything good could be said. It is therefore no problem whatever to pay tribute to him in the very highest terms and to do it honestly.

We concur in what has already been said about him. However, I would like to add this. In my judgment he was a good representative of his people; he was a good parliamentarian; he was a trusted and valued friend; and above all he was a gentleman who was always kind, considerate and very, very helpful. On behalf of the party that I have the privilege to lead I express to the Prime Minister and his party our sympathy in their great loss, and to his widow and the members of the family left behind our very sincere sympathy and our prayers that time will heal the shock and the wounds and will sublimate their sorrow into most beautiful memories.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I rise to pay tribute to an old friend, the late member for Lanark. I think I possibly knew him longer than did any other member in this house. We were in the same medical year at Queen's University; we graduated together, went overseas with the Canadian Army Medical Corps and returned and took postgraduate courses together in the city of New York. We were returned home from France within a day or two of each other and I met him at the demobilization centre in Kingston, Ontario. There I introduced him to one of the nursing sisters of the unit to which I was attached. She was that gracious lady, Miss Grace Moore, who became Mrs. Blair the following year. While in New York I noticed that he took a great interest in the two political parties in that city and I was not surprised that when he came back to Canada he entered politics.

He was a very hard working, sincere member and I am sure that he represented his constituents in the house with distinction. He was always interested in the health of the members of the house. One of the last conversations I had with him had to do with that very matter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said today that he had intended to call Dr. Blair to a higher duty, I presume to the portfolio of minister of national health and welfare. Without detracting in any way from the present incumbent of that high office, may I say that I regret that Dr. Blair was not spared to be called to take that portfolio.

I desire to join with the leader of the various parties in the house and express my condolences to Mrs. Blair and her family.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the debate in reply to the speech from the throne will be proceeded with tomorrow and will be restricted to the mover and seconder. By leave the house will then adjourn until Wednesday.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 15, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1957-58

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1958, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1957-58

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1958, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1957-58

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting further supplementary estimates (1) for the financial year ending March 31, 1958, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, (2) 1957-58

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting further supplementary estimates (2) for the financial year ending March 31, 1958, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If the house will permit, perhaps it would be of interest if I were to make a brief statement indicating the nature of the estimates which have been tabled today.

Four sets of estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958 have been tabled today. The first three of these are the same main, supplementary and further supplementary estimates as were tabled in the House of Commons during the last session of parliament. Except for the items for the Post Office Department these estimates were not finally dealt with during that session. In fact, only seven-twelfths of most of the items in these estimates, or enough to carry the services through to the end of October, were granted.

Since the programs provided for in these estimates were already well advanced when the new government took office, and to avoid the expenditure of a further $20,000 for revising and reprinting them, retabling the existing estimates is considered to be the most reasonable course of action to take under the circumstances. However, this is not to say that the present government will support all of the detailed programs contemplated when those estimates were originally prepared. Rather, such changes as this government proposes to make in the current year programs will be brought to parliament's attention when the individual items affected are being considered by the committee of supply.

The further supplementary estimates which have been tabled for the first time today provide mainly for the general revision of civil service salaries effective May 1, 1957, $31.2 million; a further grant toward the anticipated operating deficit of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, $8.1 million; and expenses in connection with the maintenance of immigrants in Canada, $8.8 million. The other items in these estimates are less sizeable and are generally of the type which it is usual to include in mid-year supplementary estimates. The total estimates, which for the reasons I have indicated I shall describe as gross estimates, for the current year 1957-58 tabled to date amount to $5,597,316,555, including old age security payments which are made from the old age security fund, and loans, investments and advances.

Motion agreed to.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO MEMBER FOR ALGOMA EAST ON WINNING NOBEL PRIZE

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, with your permission may I rise on a question of privilege and congratulate the man who was chosen for the award of the Nobel peace prize. He has shown himself to be a man of courage, initiative, kindness and courtesy. I cannot describe him better than in the words of that great people's poet: A man's a man for a' that.

Nobel Peace Prize—Mr. Pearson

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to wait until the opportunity came, but my hon. friend has preceded me and all I can do is say that I intended to rise for the purpose of saying that the recognition of the achievements of those who are politically opposed is not incompatible with my concept of parliamentary life. It is one of the joys of our system of parliamentary government, indeed it is of the essence for its preservation, that members in our parliaments, regardless of the differences that separate them, remain Canadians first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to say that the announcement yesterday of the award of the Nobel prize to one who has been a political opponent but a personal friend is a tribute to him and an honour to Canada. The award of the Nobel prize for peace has come to certain people on this continent on a number of previous occasions and the naming of those who have received that award is evidence of their respective contributions to the laying of those foundations and to the doing of those things which are necessary for the preservation of the achievement of that ideal of world peace which after all is the dominating motive of all of us in the free world.

Among those who have received the award is Elihu Root, a long-time secretary of state of the United States and a great lawyer whose contribution to peace played its part in the building of a system of international law applicable to the nations of the world, in a like manner that the law binds each and every one of us equally under the British system of government and of law.

Another who received the award was a former president of the United States, Mr. Woodrow Wilson, who in his day and generation dreamed dreams and hoped hopes that, while they were not achieved in his day nor have they been since, nonetheless were landmarks of advancement in the preservation and maintenance of those things from which peace can be built.

Then another was the Hon. Frank Kellogg, also a secretary of the United States, who in 1926 advanced, along with Mr. Briand of France, a pact which in his day was believed to have achieved peace for all generations.

These three have been the predecessors in North America of my hon. friend as holders of the award for peace by the Nobel foundation. The award to the hon. member is one, as I said in the beginning, that brings honour to him and it is with the warmest of good feelings and the most sincere of good wishes that I congratulate him on the honour that has come to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I have quite literally lost my voice from saying thank you yesterday and today, but I think I have enough left to express my grateful appreciation of the words of the hon. and venerable member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) and for the very kind, indeed very generous, words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I realize, as I have already said outside this house, that the consideration which must have governed the committee in making this award to me revolved around the fact that I was the representative of Canada at the United Nations and other international meetings where so many of us were doing our best for peace and security in this troubled world.

I know that in that sense I have had very special opportunities because of my position. I know also that I would not have been able to have made the most of those opportunities had it not been for the support which I felt that in the main I was receiving from the Canadian people; the support in the main of this house in the objects we were pursuing and, perhaps I may say, without impropriety, the friendship, advice and leadership which I always received from my leader in the work I was trying to do.

In this sense the award was a Canadian award, and I am very proud indeed to have been the particular Canadian chosen through force of happy circumstances to receive it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENERGY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I would like to make an announcement at this time, and to say that the governor in council today established a royal commission to inquire into and to make recommendations concerning a number of matters relating to energy and sources of energy that fall within the jurisdiction of parliament.

The commission is to be composed of Mr. Henry Borden, Q.C., of Toronto; Mr. J. Louis Levesque, Montreal; Mr. George Britnell of Saskatoon; Mr. Gordon Cushing of Ottawa; Mr. Robert Howland of Halifax, and Mr. Leon Ladner of Vancouver.

I will say no more regarding this matter than this: Mr. Borden is known in all parts of Canada; Mr. Levesque is a financier in Montreal who is well known, not only in his own province but throughout our country; Mr. George Britnell is a professor of economics in the University of Saskatchewan and has participated in a number of royal commissions; Mr. Gordon Cushing is executive vice president of the Canadian Labour Congress; Mr. Howland of Halifax is an economist; and Mr. Leon Ladner, a former member of this house during the period 1926 to 1930, is a businessman in addition to being a lawyer.

The details of the terms of reference of the commissioners may be of some interest to the house, and with the leave of hon. members I would like to put them on record by reading them now. The commissioners are empowered to inquire into and make recommendations concerning:

(a) the policies which will best serve the national interest in relation to the export of energy and sources of energy from Canada;

(b) the problems involved in, and the policies which ought to be applied to, the regulation of the transmission of oil and natural gas between provinces or from Canada to another country, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the regulation of prices or rates to be charged or paid, the financial structure and control of pipe line corporations in relation to the setting of proper prices or charges, and all such other matters as it is necessary to inquire into and report upon, in order to ensure the efficient and economical operation of pipe lines in the national interest;

(c) the extent of authority that might best be conferred on a national energy board to administer, subject to the control and authority of parliament, such aspects of energy policy coming within the jurisdiction of parliament, as it may be desirable to entrust to such a board, together with the character of administration and procedure that might best be established for such a board;

(d) whether, in view of its special relationship to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation and the nature of its financing and control, any special measures need be taken in relation to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, in order to safeguard the interests of Canadian producers or consumers of gas; and

(e) such other related matters as the commissioners consider it necessary to include in reporting upon the powers that I have already specified.

There is a special clause in the order in council appointing a commission to ensure that the establishment of it and the conduct of its inquiries shall not in any way delay the negotiations relating to waters crossing the international boundary.

As I am sure there will be widespread interest in this matter I ask leave to table two copies of the order in council.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and it is not for the purpose of giving him further exercise, because he has had plenty today. In my judgment a very serious omission has occurred in the naming of the members of the royal commission announced by the Prime Minister today. In view of the fact that a very large percentage of Canada's known reserves of coal, gas and oil are to be found in the province of Alberta I wonder why the Prime Minister, in naming this royal commission to investigate the whole field of energy and recommend policies, did not include a member from the province of Alberta.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we endeavoured to have representation on a regional basis and we felt that Mr. Britnell, with his knowledge of the subject, would represent not only Saskatchewan and Alberta but all the provinces of Canada. There is no omission that I know of that could have been rectified whereby all of the provinces with resources could have been included. I recognize the vast resources of Alberta and I feel that in the hands of Mr. Britnell all of the considerations that my hon. friend has in mind will receive the closest of attention from the commission.

[Later:]

EFFECT ON SALE OF URANIUM OXIDE TO WEST GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Does the establishment of the royal commission on energy cancel the deal of the Canadian government to sell uranium oxide to West Germany?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The appointment of the royal commission cancels nothing.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That Arza Clair Casselman, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Grenville-Dundas, be appointed deputy chairman of committees of the whole house.

Mr. Benidickson: Does he know about it now?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Does he accept now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell us when he will be moving for the establishment of that special committee to examine defence estimates of which he was such an able advocate before dissolution?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The government will be very pleased to announce its policy in that respect in due course.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

KAPUSKASING—INQUIRY AS TO ABANDONMENT OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister approved an application by Trans-Canada Air Lines for permission to abandon the service to Kapuskasing, and does the minister approve of Canada's national air line abandoning a service of this kind merely because the service may be unprofitable?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the application to discontinue that service has been presented to the air transport board and is under consideration at the present time.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I direct a supplementary question to the minister? Has the application by Trans-Canada Air Lines been made with the approval of the minister?

Mr. Hees: As the former minister knows, an application of that kind does not need to be made with the approval of the minister.

HEALTH INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO OMISSION FROM SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Normally this question would be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) but as this question is one that arises out of the speech from the throne I think the right hon. gentleman will agree it should be addressed to him.

[Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf).]

Is the omission from the speech from the throne of the slightest reference to hospital insurance to be construed as an indication that the government has abandoned this program which has won such wide acceptance throughout Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): My answer will be somewhat shorter than the voluminous answers that we used to receive from the former minister of national health and welfare. My answer is a simple negative; no.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to this same subject. Can the minister inform the house whether agreements have been signed between any of the provinces and the federal government under the hospital insurance act and, if so, which provinces have signed agreements?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, six provinces have indicated that they are going to come into the national health insurance plan. They are British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Have any of them signed agreements or has the government made any effort to get them to sign agreements?

Mr. Monteith: No agreements have as yet been signed.

BASE METALS

REQUESTED FLOOR PRICES—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Several weeks ago the Prime Minister received a delegation from the mine, mill and smelter workers of Canada —

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Byrne:—requesting that the government take into consideration—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Byrne:—the setting of a floor price on base metals. Has the Prime Minister given consideration to this matter, and is he prepared to make an announcement soon?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather big subject to deal with in a simple answer, but may I say that at the time the delegation met the government there was a very serious threat that the United States intended to impose very high tariffs against the importation into the United States of the metals to which the hon. member has referred. That expected action did not culminate in any way in legislative approval by congress.

Until the matter has been considered further by congress and there is any indication that action will be taken by the United States, there is little more that can be done at this time. The whole question of these two metals was discussed on a number of occasions with representatives of the United States, and when anything of a definite nature is available it will be brought to the attention of the house immediately.

[Later:]

Mr. Byrne: May I ask a supplementary question respecting base metal prices? The miners' union made their request based on the present prices of metals—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Byrne: —and is the Prime Minister considering stockpiling and putting a floor price under base metals in Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that again is a question of government policy to be made known in due course.

PENSIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE FOR RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government given consideration to increasing the pensions of retired employees of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You forgot about that for a little while.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Matters of that kind are always of great interest to this government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —and whenever the government has any information regarding the matter to give to the house it will be done in the proper form and in the proper manner.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will he give any consideration this year to increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, inasmuch as he supported my resolution last year?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that matter is under consideration and has been for a long time. I think my hon. friend is aware that other pension increases are indicated in the speech from the throne.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF FORECAST INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he tell the house what is to be the effective date of the old age and other pension increases forecast in the speech from the throne?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that matter naturally will be considered at the time the bill is being presented to the house, which we trust, of course, will be soon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the provision for $46 a month runs out at the end of this month unless further interim supply is provided, can the minister say whether the new rate will be effective November 1?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I think my previous answer covered the situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh no.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Can he tell us when the report of the royal commission on coastal shipping will be handed down?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot right offhand. I will make inquiries and at the next sitting of the house I will give an answer to my hon. friend.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE PRICE SPREADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government under consideration the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into the great spread between the low prices paid to producers of agricultural products and the high retail prices charged consumers?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could answer that question in the usual way and say it is a matter of government policy, but I may say to my hon. friend that the government has given immediate consideration to this most serious and difficult problem, one respecting which I for one have spoken on a number of occasions of the need of something being done to investigate this spread. Within a very few days an announcement will be made in this regard, the matter having been decided some two or three weeks ago.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ADVANCE PAYMENTS ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When can prairie farmers expect to receive advance payments on grain stored on farm?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the hon. member's interest in this subject. Just as soon as the house is prepared to consider the legislation indicated in the speech from the throne we will proceed with the matter, and I hope the legislation will meet with his approval.

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT ON 1956-57 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a further means of alleviating the extremely critical cash shortage on the prairies today to which the Prime Minister has referred, will the minister be able to announce shortly an interim payment on the 1956-57 wheat crop? Is the government considering the request of the wheat pools that an advance payment be made at this time?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. May I say that the matter will be taken under consideration.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ASIATIC FLU—STEPS TO PREVENT SPREAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what I think is a very important question. Indeed, it is of importance to all members of the house as well as the people of the country generally. Before doing so, may I be allowed to congratulate him upon his elevation to a very important portfolio. This, Mr. Speaker, is my question. Has the government taken any further steps to prevent, if possible, the spread of the Asiatic flu germ which is causing so much inconvenience and distress to all the people of the dominion?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first may I express my appreciation to the hon. member for his kind words concerning my elevation to the cabinet. May I also thank the hon. member for having given me notice a short time ago of his intention to ask this question.

With vaccine being produced in increasing quantities, provincial programs of vaccination are now under way. However, due to the early arrival of influenza in epidemic proportions in some provinces and the expectation that it might subside in a matter of a few weeks, most provinces have indicated their reluctance to make any commitment for vaccine beyond November 15.

In addition to meeting the requirements of the federal-provincial immunization program it has been possible, through the co-operation of the laboratories and the two senior levels of government, to provide facilities for the production of increasingly large quantities of vaccine which will be made available through the usual channels to the medical profession for protection of those not included in provincial programs.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO ENTRY OF WAR CRIMINALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a prelude to my normal sessional curiosity I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Since no person with a criminal record can legally enter Canada, does this prohibition apply to war criminals?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I understand the hon. member to ask me whether the prohibition applies to war criminals. I should like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question.

In reply, I think I must say that the words referred to in the Immigration Act are technical words and used in a technical sense, and as the words "war criminals" do not have a precise meaning it is not possible to give a categorical answer to the question. All I can say is that each case would have to be dealt with on an individual basis.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE TO STUDY INFLATIONARY TREND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister or the leader of the house. Would the government initiate a move to have a special parliamentary committee or even the banking and commerce committee meet to pursue a study of the reasons for the inflationary trend and the continued increase in the cost of living?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this government, as always, will give consideration to anything for the benefit of the Canadian people.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry I was not able to give him notice. I should like to ask him, what is the difference between the attitude of the majority of your members now as compared to the attitude shown by the previous government and to which your members strenuously objected?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not a question of attitude; it is a question of parliamentary rights.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister if he does not find there is a difference when the shoe is on the other foot?

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN PREVIOUS MONETARY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Can the Minister of Finance tell us if his government is prepared or is proposing to change the so-called tight money policy of the previous Liberal government?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there is any statement to be made on that subject I can assure my hon. friend it will be made to the house at the proper time. However, I may recall to my hon. friend's mind the fact that some five weeks ago this government made the sum of $150 million available for loans on mortgages to stimulate the construction of houses under the National Housing Act.

Mr. Lesage: It was provided in the estimates.

Mr. Fleming: It was not provided in the estimates. I just heard a mistaken interruption from the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. This $150 million, which seems to confuse my hon. friend, was not in the estimates, but was provided under the statute. It was not in the estimates, and the government in accordance with the provisions of the act in question, which is the National Housing Act, made the money available, by means of which it is hoped to stimulate house construction in the fall and winter months.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo.

Mr. Cameron: Does the minister consider that the $150 million provided for the construction of houses is in effect an amendment or reversal of the provisions of the government's tight money policy, and if so would he explain to the house of what that policy consisted?

Mr. Fleming: Far be it from me to undertake to explain the policies of the last government.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question to the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo. Is the Minister of Finance telling us now he is repudiating the statement he made to the Canadian Press after the election?

Mr. Fleming: I have never repudiated any statement in my life, and I do not intend to start now. I commend that example to my hon. friend.

CANALS

CHIGNECTO—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. To what persons has the government entrusted the task of investigating the feasibility of the Chignecto canal? This was promised in Saint John, New Brunswick, by the Prime Minister on May 3.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a number of transport and allied problems are now under consideration by my department, and at such time as there are any announcements to be made to this house concerning those studies, they will be made.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When does the Prime Minister intend to introduce legislation to provide a bill of rights for Canadians?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is receiving the earnest consideration of the Department of Justice, who are looking into it in order to bring together in proper alliance all the necessary questions which must be considered before such a bill will be introduced or could be introduced.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECENT CONFERENCES WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wonder if the Minister of Finance could tell us when we may expect to hear or receive details of the recent proposal made by Her Majesty's government in the United Kingdom under the general heading of a free trade plan between the United Kingdom and Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I shall be glad to make a statement, if it is the wish of the house, on the subject of the trade proposals and the various recent conferences on the subject of trade. I shall be glad to do that at any time it is the wish of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend will recognize the importance of this matter. Perhaps he and the Prime Minister could make an announcement at an early date when this may be done, because I think he will agree there is very wide interest in this subject.

[Mr. Murphy (Westmorland).]

Mr. Fleming: I will be glad, at a very early time, to make a statement reviewing the various recent trade conferences and the matters that have emerged from them, if that is the wish of the house.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR TRAFFIC RIGHTS, ITALY-CANADA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether negotiations which were undertaken earlier this year between Canada and Italy with regard to the exchange of air traffic rights have been concluded, and whether or not those negotiations have resulted in an agreement?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as notice and answer on the next occasion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EARLY DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Can the Prime Minister advise the house as to whether it is the intention to have a special sitting of the house at an early date to discuss international affairs, in view of the development of the intercontinental missile and the satellite, and their relationship to defence so far as Canada is concerned?

It is of the utmost importance now in the world, in my opinion, and surely the House of Commons ought to meet to consider it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to discuss that matter and all other matters will now be available when the speech from the throne is being discussed. Above everything else at the moment I desire to hasten at the earliest possible date the introduction of immediate and emergent legislation, such as cash advances on farm-stored wheat. For that reason at the moment I would suggest that anyone who has opinions on the subject of international affairs will have a full and complete opportunity to air them during the debate which will begin this afternoon. Then following the introduction of the emergent legislation—whenever we introduce the legislation in order to expedite it—and its being dealt with full consideration certainly will be given to setting aside a day or so for the discussion of international affairs, so important are they.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINDSOR—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I regret that I have not given him notice of this question but probably he will take it as notice and give an answer at a later date. Having in mind the serious unemployment situation in the Windsor area, will the minister inform us as to the progress being made in the construction of the new post office in Windsor and why it is that the accommodation which has been acquired is now being offered for rent?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is a good deal of detail to obtain in order to answer this question in full. However, I believe there is some question of a portion of the property which was acquired being under a lease which does not expire until some time next year. We are making as much progress as we can but the situation which exists at the present time is entirely the responsibility of the previous government.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Will the minister make further inquiry and give a more detailed answer at a later date?

Mr. Green: Yes. I will get the details for the hon. member.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he expects to receive the report of the royal commission on the revision of the terms of union between Canada and Newfoundland and whether, when he receives it, it will be tabled in the house.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I answer my hon. friend's question. The royal commission on the terms of union with Newfoundland concluded its sittings here in Ottawa one week ago today. The chairman of the royal commission indicated at the closing sitting that the royal commission hoped to be in a position to submit its report at an early date.

Mr. Stick: Will the minister table the report?

Mr. Fleming: In the ordinary course that will be done when the report has been received and has been made available by printing.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

PULPWOOD—PROGRESS OF REPORT OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. I regret that I was unable to give him notice of this question. Maybe his answer will come later on. When may we expect the report with regard to the investigation which was started about a year and a half ago under the Combines Investigation Act into the sale of pulpwood in certain districts in the province of Quebec?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I will have inquiries made and will bring in an answer as soon as possible.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house what steps, if any, the government has taken since assuming office toward the establishment of a Canadian coast guard?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice and give an answer tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister give us any information as to the possible date of the report of the royal commission on the dispute between the railways and the union?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): May I ask the hon. member to what dispute he is referring?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the Minister of Labour could answer that question.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will answer the hon. member's question. As is known, this royal commission has been looking into the situation here and abroad. We expect a detailed written report by that commission towards the end of November.

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. A. R. SMITH AND SECONDED BY MR. NEREE ARSENAULT

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by Her Majesty The Queen at the opening of the session.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is in all humility that I rise in my place for the first time in this house to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne by Her Very Gracious Majesty. I do not suppose that anyone has, for a few years, walked into such an anticlimatical situation after such an interesting question period. I would assume, if I were so naive, that perhaps most of the questions for this coming session have now been asked.

In all humility and in all seriousness I should like to say how much I appreciate the invitation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to move this address. I recognize, of course, that this is an honour which is not bestowed on the individual but rather on the constituency that he represents. May I therefore say to him and to hon. members of this house, on behalf of the constituency of Calgary South, that I greatly appreciate this opportunity.

I think it can be said that we should not lose sight of the fact that there is today still in this house and in this national capital a feeling of extreme jubilation as a result of the opening of parliament for the first time by a reigning monarch. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are not enough adjectives to describe the importance of this milestone in our Canadian history. I think it is difficult to do so without understating its significance. Can any man or woman who viewed the proceedings, either personally or through the magic of television, not say that this was one of the great emotional moments in his or her life?

Unquestionably it will be told and retold for generations to come that on that day of October 14, 1957, I saw Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth open the Canadian House of Commons.

I have said to myself what is it that makes this occasion so important to us? It is not, I suggest, just that it is another first for Canada, but rather that it binds this country into the senior membership which it occupies in the commonwealth. Great though the resources and reserves of this country are, I suggest that our greatest treasure is still that membership which we hold in the commonwealth of nations.

I would like if I may to pay my respects to certain members of this house. First to you. I realize that I am speaking as one Albertan to another, but no doubt the polished debonair manner which is to your credit is an earmark of your upbringing in eastern Canada. I suggest further that your compromising and friendly attitude is indeed the trademark of the fact that you were born in Red Deer, Alberta. I know that the members of this house join with me in congratulating you in your elevation to your high office.

I would like at the same time to congratulate Canada's Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I believe that whatever else Canadians say of this generation they will certainly record that one of the greatest lessons in personal achievement has been taught in that this man from the soil of Saskatchewan has established in this country a reputation second to none. We are indeed, regardless of where we sit in this house, proud of the Prime Minister of Canada. I should like also to congratulate the members of his cabinet on their elevation to high office, and in spite of the suggestion that they might not occupy those offices, I believe they have done so very admirably.

May I be presumptious enough to congratulate the new members of this house upon their election, like myself, for the first time. I can tell them now from some personal experience that the terror which overcomes you in contemplating your maiden speech, after you are on your feet reduces itself to straight fear. Speaking as one rookie to another I would like to say that each and every one of you may be assured that regardless of where you sit each one of us will be in your cheering section.

I would now turn to the business of this house and, in particular, to the assignment that has been given to me this afternoon. I think it is an accepted part of tradition that the mover of the throne speech compliment the government on its legislation as outlined in the throne speech. Let it be clearly understood by those who might be disappointed that I shall not do otherwise, that I intend to do exactly that.

It is a fact that the majority of these were the policies or the outline of a program which a very substantial number of Canadian people recently endorsed, as a matter of fact as recently as June 10 last. I am happy to see that Canada will play an important part in the shaping of world affairs and will continue to work toward the objective of everlasting peace. I agree that the best way of achieving this is through the tools of the Colombo plan, and otherwise through economic preparedness or economic persuasion or military preparedness. I believe that our participation in the United Nations is essential, in spite of the severe constitutional limitations of that fine organization.

I believe that this parliament will certainly welcome the government's intention of improving the lot of our senior citizens and of course the recipients of war veterans allowances. These fixed income groups, I suggest, are the real victims of our inflated economy. The diminishing value of our dollar has affected all of us, but far more severely has it affected those whose income is now almost entirely depleted. It is therefore, I believe, essential that one of the first considerations of this or any government should, in recognition of services past rendered be directed to those who have made this present prosperity so general for us.

As an Albertan I am naturally happy to learn that the government intends to provide a stimulant for our farm economy and that measures will be taken to greatly stabilize our agricultural products.

In assessing farm income there appears to be only one real question of debate and that is the question of urgency. I would suggest that if you examine one province, as an example Alberta, you will recognize that this urgency is indeed very real. I think that this can best be reflected by the number of bankruptcies which have occurred amongst our country merchants. I do not care whether he be a bulk oil salesman or a general store merchant, the fact of the matter is that many of the individuals who are so much a part of our integrated farm economy have had their credit extended to such a point that in many instances they are no longer able to carry on business, except of course on a cash basis. I believe that this is the real barometer by which to determine the state of the shortage of cash income in Canadian farming communities.

There will be, I suggest, a great many members in this house who have served either on municipal councils or in provincial legislatures, as it has been my privilege to do, and I am certain they will join with me in welcoming the announcement of the government's intention to call together the provinces for a dominion-provincial conference. There can be no question in our minds that many of the problems which heretofore have existed can, to some extent, be resolved through such a meeting.

I would like to suggest, and I do so in all seriousness that at some future meeting consideration be given to inviting Canada's municipalities to join in such a discussion. As an example, the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities could in my view make some contribution to a meeting of this nature because I believe that, after all, many of the definitions of inter-related responsibilities between the three levels of government were written nearly ninety years ago and in this modern economy have now to some extent become outmoded. I think it is a regrettable factor, and those who have served on municipal councils will agree, that many of our municipalities are looked upon as the poor relations in Canada's federation of governments. I believe that this group could make a useful contribution in assisting in the redefining of the division of taxation policies and municipal services and I would hope that this could be done in the not too far distant future.

There is a 13-word announcement in the speech from the throne which says little but which has broad implications. It has been referred to already in this house today; I refer to the proposed changes in the taxation structure which will be submitted for our approval. It is of course obvious that these changes cannot be announced in detail at this time, but speaking for my own constituents I hope that after provision has been made for the primary needs of individuals the taxation authorities will also give consideration to providing incentive relief or incentive encouragement to Canada's developing industries.

More specifically, I believe the Canadian independent oil producers have asked that they should be given the same encouragement for the development of our oil and gas resources as the United States government provides for United States companies which are in competition with our companies in Canada.

Finally, I congratulate the government on its proposal to initiate a national development program. If Canada is to enjoy national unity there can be no question in this house but that we should all participate equally in the national prosperity. Towards this end I believe the economic development of the Atlantic provinces, the construction of the South Saskatchewan river dam and the Columbia river project are all sound investments which will strengthen the Canadian economy immeasurably.

While on this subject may I suggest to the government that a national development policy might well at some future time include a stock-taking of Canada's natural resources. It is not purely by accident that many of Canada's provinces have been led to conduct an examination or assessment of their reserves of natural wealth. I believe that in order to assess the policies which should govern conservation it is important we should know what resources we have before we know what we can utilize or what we can preserve. I may say that in the province of Alberta—and I was a member of that legislature at one time—we assessed those resources and in consequence were able to develop conservation practices which have been in the interest not only of industry but of the people as a whole.

I believe that through the office of geological survey of this country—though I realize there may be legislative problems involved as between the federal government and the provinces—important results can be achieved. If we could do no more than provide the incentive and the encouragement for those provinces we would be doing a service of importance toward the development of our resources. The United States, if I may refer to this as an example, conducted a survey a few years ago. We in Canada are now described by foreign editorial writers as the country most likely to succeed and although time is still on our side I believe we cannot delay too long before such an undertaking as I have suggested is considered.

Having discussed the business which is to come before this house I believe it is in keeping with the traditions of the address in reply to the speech from the throne that I should say something about the constituency which I have the honour to represent. However, I do not intend at this point to take up any time in extolling the virtues of Calgary. It would indeed be a discourtesy to the city that I represent to have it suggested that those virtues were not well and widely known. I have, with your permission, taken the opportunity to provide every hon. member with a brochure on the advantages of being a Calgarian which I hope will now be in their mail boxes.

What I would prefer to do is to tell you in just a word or so, about one of the economic problems which today concerns not only my constituents and the province from which I come but which will shortly concern the whole Dominion of Canada; it may even, possibly, make the debates on natural gas of a year ago seem like a Sunday school picnic. I refer to the marketing of Canadian oil. Before I began my speech I was not aware of the setting up of a commission which the Prime Minister has announced, but no doubt the commission can also consider this problem during its deliberations.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary South).]

It is perhaps well known to this house that Canada produces on an average 500,000 barrels of oil a day—I shall be very brief and shall use very few statistics—we could, in fact, produce almost double that amount. Of the amount presently produced we export approximately one-third to the United States. We could, in certain circumstances, capture the vast Montreal outlet which represents some 200,000 barrels a day, but unfortunately economic circumstances such as the low replacement costs of Venezuelan imports, the difference in tariffs and the distance over which the oil has to be transported have combined to make it economically impossible for us to do so at the present time, and we as western producers appreciate this fact.

Recently a committee under the direction of the President of the United States exempted temporarily the area in the Pacific northwest of the United States, into which Canada today exports, an exemption which involves one-third of the total exports and which represents an important part of the life and breath of this western industry. I suggest to you that these exports could be cut off tomorrow. Therefore I am urging as strongly as I can that this government give consideration to the policies I have mentioned, or to any other means it might consider desirable, such as a meeting at top level with United States government officials or their counterparts, to discuss the oil reserves which we have in common today, so that the Canadian western oil industry and the Canadian market is not kept in a continued state of suspense. I am asking no more than that we should have a top level discussion of this problem so that we may know in what general direction we are moving.

I recognize that this is a relatively new problem to confront this very fine new government but I put it on record as one which we will have to consider in the near future.

I, like some of my friends, have experienced this Asian variety of 'flu, and I know I have rambled on long enough and that I have taken just about every privilege which a new member is entitled to take in the circumstances. I do appreciate very much the opportunity which has been given me, as a new member today. I appreciate the courtesy which hon. members have extended to me in this initial offering. I recognize, too, that a future intervention in debate might not be considered with exactly the same courtesy.

I would like to close on this note: Many hon. members will remember a gentleman of the same name as myself who sat before me in this house not too many years ago and perhaps I may say before resuming my seat what he said to you:

If when I leave this house I can feel that I have made a friend of every one of you, I feel that these years have been worth while.

I think you will agree, that I can set no higher objective for myself.

With these rather rambling remarks, and expressing once again the pleasure that the occasion has been to me, it is my great pleasure to move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault):

That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:—

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both houses of parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Neree Arsenault (Bonaventure): On this memorable occasion of the opening of the first session of a new federal government in our Canadian capital, Mr. Speaker, I am most appreciative of the tokens of esteem and confidence with which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has honoured me by asking me to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It is definite evidence of the right hon. Prime Minister's interest in the people of my riding, of the province of Quebec and of the whole of French Canada.

It is therefore with pride and gratitude that I second the address so ably moved by my colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Smith).

(Text):

It is a great honour for me to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) who gave in this House of Commons so magnificent a report on the speech from the throne. In so doing he honoured greatly his father who was formerly one of the most eminent members of the Conservative party. I understand how proud his riding of Calgary South is of him as its member.

The 40,000 Canadian citizens who make up the population of the constituency of Bonaventure join unanimously with me today in expressing their gratitude to the federal authorities. They are proud to be part of this Canadian people which has been so highly honoured this year by the presence among us of our gracious Queen.

In returning me as their member, in the last general election, my constituents put upon my shoulders the pleasant though necessary duty of explaining to the house their present economic situation and their urgent needs.

The constituency of Bonaventure has an area of about 4,000 square miles, and its needs are similar to those of the neighbouring constituencies of Gaspe, Matapedia, Rimouski and Temiscouata. Together these five constituencies are larger in area than the province of New Brunswick.

It means that our Gaspe peninsula takes on the character of a province, and I hope that this small country of mine within Canada will soon enjoy under a Progressive Conservative government, the necessary economic development which will enable its people to share in the economic prosperity now enjoyed by the Canadian nation in general.

Statistics show that, in my constituency of Bonaventure, the standard of living is much lower than in constituencies bordering on industrial centres. While the Gaspe peninsula, which includes the constituency of Bonaventure, is the oldest part of this area, it has not prospered at the same rate as the country as a whole.

Over the past sixty-seven years my constituency has always been represented by Liberal members, and during all those years that part of the country has reaped neglect. And yet it lies at the very gates of a highly efficient river outlet, calculated to promote economic development, owing to the proximity of European and American markets. Unfortunately, none of our natural seaports, any more than our railway services were adequately developed.

Moreover, censuses bring out the striking fact that our population is decreasing. Instead of growing at the normal rate expected of a sturdy and hardy stock, our human capital is less than it was. Year after year, the percentage of the rural population is declining. Our agricultural organizations had hoped to prevent a second dispersal of our Acadian sons; alas, the exodus of young farmers and settlers who are forced to go elsewhere to earn a living is on the increase. How many boys and girls of my constituency have scattered all across the country and even across the border! They have not definitely quit their native village for they still hope that better conditions may allow them to return home.

I greet those thousands of Gaspesians on behalf of their brothers who are still awaiting their return. However, this evil which affects our Gaspesian population is not confined to eastern Quebec; its ravages extend as well to other parts of our province.

The cause of this evil is that, in seeking to promote the development of eastern Quebec, emphasis has been laid chiefly on the agricultural angle. No attempt was made to integrate in our economy the necessary share of related industrial developments. The consequence of this mistake has been that, since there were no markets for our agricultural production, it has been impossible to deter our young men from the ever enticing appeal of an easy life in the cities. The development of industry, of our mines, our forests and our fisheries has been neglected, as well as the decentralization of industries centred around great cities in order to open nearby markets to our complementary agricultural production. There has been failure to provide the farmers of my area with adequate cold-storage facilities for the conservation of their green vegetables. Yet, the natural resources, the vast forests and the mines of the Gaspe peninsula, and its oil prospects should have led to the conclusion that full development was necessary. No solution has been forthcoming to our purely local problems. If, at least, the fiscal rights of the provinces had been respected, I am sure that this gap would have been filled long ago.

One of the main natural resources of the Gaspe peninsula is the forest. In my own constituency, millions of cords of wood are going to waste, with the consequent loss to the county of millions of dollars in revenue. Instead of marketing thousands of tons of paper or millions of feet of lumber, we are still content with spending millions of dollars in fighting insect damage in forests which are too old and which should have been properly cultivated. In the first place we should therefore heed the advice of experts especially when they point out the basic causes of the depression in the lumber industry and of the loss of national or international markets. We must also call upon the knowledge of economists to ensure better prospects for our lumber markets.

These markets will be improved by better means of transportation.

It would be a good thing if our seaways were kept open all year round in eastern Quebec, even as far up as the port of Quebec. The operation of a few ice breakers during the four winter months could well ensure uninterrupted shipping on the St. Lawrence. Business men could then take an interest in developing our natural resources and would thus pay into the treasury the taxes required for the implementation of social welfare legislation. Railways and sections of the Trans-Canada highway should also contribute to our economic expansion while making a necessary contribution to the defence of this vulnerable part of our country.

[Mr. Arsenault.]

I should like to point out here the urgent necessity of providing the area of the Gaspe peninsula and that of the north shore of the St. Lawrence with railways which would promote the development of mining and forest industries.

I know that under this Conservative administration, the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet will do their utmost to remove the difficulties which in the past have prevented the normal economic development of the eastern part of our country.

These few suggestions which a Canadian observer has been allowed to offer to this distinguished audience representing all parts of Canada would be pointless if they were not intended for a real Canadian of the highest distinction, that is the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

On behalf of all my constituents, I am glad to congratulate him for his accession to the function of Prime Minister of Canada. It is neither due to mere chance, nor the result of pure electoral conventions if a people such as ours chose him to guide its destinies: it is because he deserved it on all counts.

A professional man, a lawyer of great reputation, whose character enhances all his deeds, an untiring worker, he has, ever since he has represented Lake Centre and Prince Albert constituencies in this house, managed to earn the respect of the élite of all the people of Canada. The present Prime Minister of Canada rightly deserves the confidence, the respect and the admiration of the whole country.

Three months only of his present term of office have earned for this great statesman the highest praise and honours of a press which always keeps a watchful eye on the doings of those who hold high political office. When he takes part in discussions, whether it be in London, with the Commonwealth prime ministers, whether it be with the diplomats of the great American republic, or at the table of the United Nations, the right hon. Prime Minister commands attention by the loftiness of his views and the accuracy of his predictions.

All those qualities are manifest, beyond any doubt, in the plans outlined in the speech from the throne.

This house will be called upon to deal with matters which are both national and international in their scope.

In the international sphere, the preparation of a Commonwealth conference is expected, as well as the carrying on of the Colombo Plan, the active participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the co-operation promised to the United Nations.

Then, in the national field, we shall be called upon to amend our social legislation, first by increasing the old age pension, as well as the assistance to the blind and the disabled; moreover, there will be a revision of the help given veterans, and other social bills affecting industrial workers under federal jurisdiction.

In the national field also, a federal-provincial meeting for the study of taxation is being contemplated.

In regard to farmers, this government will consider the possibility of stabilizing the prices of their products, and it will study new and old markets for these same products. Prairie farmers will enjoy cash advance payments on their grain production. Ways and means of creating additional markets for the produce of our fisheries will be considered.

As to local matters, the speech from the throne states that means will be sought to provide cheaper electric powers for consumers in the Atlantic provinces; a power project on the South Saskatchewan river will be looked into, as will be the harnessing of the Columbia river for British Columbia. Some railway developments will also be submitted to this house.

Finally, we shall be asked to vote a budget to provide for the administration of this country until the end of the current fiscal year as well as certain changes in the taxation laws.

We shall all work in the same spirit for the prosperity of Canada. We are two great races. We have similar problems and, in following the advice given by our Sovereign in Her message to the Canadian nation, we shall show how proud we are of being Canadians.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to comply with the suggestion made yesterday by the Prime Minister that after the mover and seconder of the address had spoken the debate be adjourned until tomorrow, and I beg leave to move that it be thus adjourned.

On motion of Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government leader what the order of business for tomorrow will be?

Mr. Green: We shall continue with this debate tomorrow.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 4.05 p.m.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 2, to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for two weeks' annual vacation with pay after one year's service for all employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction. This bill is exactly the same as the one I have introduced on former occasions and which has had the support of hon. members opposite when it came to a vote. I trust if there is a government bill in the same field it will be at least as good as this one.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 3, to provide for pay for statutory holidays for employees and for pay for work performed on statutory holidays.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction shall receive their regular pay for at least eight statutory holidays each year without having to work on those holidays. It also makes provision for overtime rates of pay for any employees who are required to work on statutory holidays.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 4, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a minimum rate of wages with respect to all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction. This bill provides that such minimum rate of wages shall be $1 per hour. The bill also provides that its terms do not affect any employees whose rate of wages is higher than the minimum established by this legislation. However, any rate of wages less favourable to employees than $1 per hour is superseded by this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT OF CHAPTER 152, REVISED STATUTES OF 1952—VOLUNTARY REVOCABLE CHECK-OFF OF UNION DUES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 5, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act (voluntary revocable check-off).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to add a new subsection 3 to section 6 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, otherwise known as the national labour code. The effect of this new subsection is to provide for the voluntary revocable check-off of trade union dues.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXTENSION OF RIGHT TO VOTE AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 6, to amend the Canada Elections Act (voting at advance polls).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, which is similar to one which I have presented in former sessions, is to make provision for the privilege of voting at advance polls in federal elections to be extended to any qualified elector who finds that he will be absent from his polling division on the ordinary polling day for any reason whatsoever.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING COMMUNICATION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 7, to provide for an amendment to the Income Tax Act with respect to communication of information.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to remove, in part, the secrecy provisions contained in the Income Tax Act with respect to income tax returns of corporations. This bill will make it possible for information contained in corporation income tax returns to be communicated to parliament by a minister.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR HEARING OF CORPORATION APPEALS IN PUBLIC

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 8, to provide for an amendment to the Income Tax Act with respect to corporation appeals.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make an amendment to the Income Tax Act having to do with appeals taken by corporations to the income tax appeal board. No change is made in the provision for appeals to the board by individuals to be heard in camera, if so desired, but this bill would make it necessary for all appeals made by corporations to the income tax appeal board to be heard in public.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 9, to provide for an amendment to the Financial Administration Act with respect to the use of the two official languages.

This is in accordance with the principle established in the Bank of Canada Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. At the present time the Canadian wheat board has jurisdiction over the handling of wheat, oats and barley. The effect of this amendment will be that the wheat board shall have included in its jurisdiction the handling of flax and rye.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT TO ASSIST EXPLORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is it the government's intention to introduce amendments to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act during the present session, in order to provide more substantial assistance?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, quite recently, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and myself have received a delegation from the Canadian Metal Mining Association. The officials of my department are at present reviewing the suggestions and recommendations then made to us. As soon as those officials have submitted their report, we will make it available to the members of the cabinet.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE WITH RESPECT TO LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. What funds were made available by the federal government to finance a special works program by the Canadian National Railways to ease the lay-offs at Moncton and other points, and under what authority were these funds so made available?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government undertook to make available such funds as would be required to undertake such a works program, but for one reason or another the works program was not able to be started and the funds were not required.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand then that nothing has been done to prevent these lay-offs?

Mr. Hees: The answer to that question is that the offer of the government to make the funds available, and the offer of the Canadian National Railways to carry out such a program, are still open.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): May I ask a further supplementary question. Does the minister still consider the recent Canadian National Railways lay-offs at Moncton as deplorable and unnecessary, as he was quoted as saying in the Moncton Times concerning similar lay-offs two years ago when he visited Moncton in a similar situation?

Mr. Hees: That is a very easy question to answer. Any lay-offs are deplorable and regretted by the government, as I am sure they are regretted by all Canadians, but lay-offs have to take place from time to time.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour this question. Is the government aware of the rapidly growing unemployment problem? If so, what is the government planning to do about it?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are aware that there will be seasonal unemployment this winter. We have stepped up our winter program to take care of winter unemployment. We have also advised our national employment service offices to step up their tempo in obtaining jobs for people as soon as they become unemployed. I might say also, on behalf of the government, that we have curtailed for the balance of the year the influx of immigrants which swelled our total labour population. In addition we have channelled $150 million into our economy for the construction of houses. These are the things the government has done so far in order to cope with unemployment this winter.

Mr. Regier: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Did I understand the minister to say, by implication at least, that the August unemployment figures are in any way to be classed as seasonal?

Mr. Starr: No, the hon. member did not ask me that question and I made no mention of any August unemployment figures.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. He has just spoken of the sum of $150 million which has been made available for housing. Can he tell the house how much of that $150 million has actually been disbursed?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): This comes under the Department of Public Works. I have not had a report yet for last week, but as of the week before that I think there had been some $20 million committed and about $80 million earmarked. Mind you, that might not all be taken up in loans, but I think very nearly that figure of $80 million would be required. I have no doubt that the figures now, a week later, are a good deal higher, but unfortunately I am not able to give them to the hon. member today.

NEW BRUNSWICK—UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR 1956-57

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct a question also to the Minister of Labour. How many are registered as unemployed in New Brunswick at this time, particularly in the Campbellton area—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —and how do those figures compare with last year?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have not that information available, as I am not able to carry it in my head, but if the hon. member wants that information I shall be glad to convey it to him.

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Has there been a change since the government took office in the support prices provided for by the Agricultural Prices Support Act of 1944 on any of the farm products, and if so, what change?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the right hon. gentleman for having informed me a few minutes ago that he was going to ask this question. The answer is that there has been no change in the support prices which were in effect when the present administration took over. Since that time, however, two further agricultural products, turkey and fowl, have been placed under price support.

BUTTER—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION ON PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture what is the intention of the government with regard to the condition existing in the butter market today, whereby the retail price of butter has increased by approximately 10 cents a pound in the last two months while the price of butterfat has increased by less than half that amount?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. In reply I may say that during the last couple of hours I have had a check made of the market prices of butter at the wholesale level in several of the important markets in Canada. The information I have received from these markets does not bear out the statement made by the hon. member.

The prices at Winnipeg on August 3 for butterfat were 60 cents per pound and on October 12, 62 cents per pound. In other words there was an increase of only 2 cents. The price at Toronto on the same dates, August 3 and October 12, were 64 and 66 cents per pound for butterfat. The wholesale prices of butter at Winnipeg on August 3 and October 12 were 60 cents and 61 cents per pound respectively. In other words there was an increase of only 1 cent per pound. At Toronto the prices on these same dates were 60½ cents and 62 cents, an increase of only 1½ cents per pound. I might say, Mr Speaker, that if any action were to be taken in regard to controlling the price of butter at the retail level, the responsibility would rest on the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: That is right; the dominion government has no means at the present time of controlling the retail price of butter.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further question of the Minister of Agriculture. Is it not true that there was a support price on fowl prior to the election, and has there been any change made in that regard since?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker. The previous administration had passed an order in council which would have made effective price support on fowl some time, I believe, in the present month of October.

Mr. Gardiner: August 1st.

Mr. Harkness: August, was it? The first of August. We placed fowl under price support in July.

SHIPPING

REFERENCE TO CONSTRUCTION OF CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works when the government intends to begin construction of a Canadian merchant marine, which they so frequently promised to do during and after the election?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that question really should be addressed to the Minister of Transport. As the hon. member for Coast-Capilano very well knows, this is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course.

COASTAL TRADE—STATEMENT ON REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked this question yesterday at page 15 of Hansard:

> May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Can he tell us when the report of the royal commission on coastal shipping will be handed down?

At that time I said:

> I cannot right offhand. I will make inquiries and at the next session of the house I will give an answer to my hon. friend.

The chairman of the royal commission on coastal shipping has advised that the report of the commission is in course of preparation but it is not expected that it will be completed for presentation until near the end of the year.

DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING DEEP SEA FACILITIES AT LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to address this question to the Minister of Transport. What plans has the minister for assuaging the feelings of the Port Arthur city council regarding the minister's initial decision to send only minor departmental officials to confer with the council about deep sea shipping facilities at the lakehead?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): In the first place I feel sure that the feelings of the Port Arthur city council do not need any assuaging, because when I went to the lakehead some few weeks ago I was received very cordially by the officials of both Port Arthur and Fort William. Since that time I have discussed this matter with my colleague the Minister of Public Works. As a result of these discussions, officials, not minor officials but senior officials, of both departments will go to the lakehead next Monday to examine the harbour facilities to ascertain if they are adequate, in their opinion, to handle such extra traffic as could reasonably be expected to arise when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed.

A survey will be carried out from an engineering point of view. Following that survey, a thorough study from the economic point of view will be carried out by the economics section of my department in order to ascertain just what additional traffic might be expected to pass through to the lakehead as a result of the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway.

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF VETERANS AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a kindly inquiry of my former colleague on the parliamentary committee on veterans affairs. Both our hearts beat as one on this question. In view of the fact that for 12 years the minister did urge the former government to establish a standing committee on veterans affairs, could the minister tell the house when the government of the day proposes to move for the establishment of such committee?

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West for his very kindly remarks. We have been interested, of course, for years in setting up a standing committee on veterans affairs, and I can assure him and the house that the matter is receiving consideration. If such a committee is in the best interests of veterans legislation it will be done.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): If, if.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED OFFER OF SPEAKERSHIP TO HON. MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Is it true that the Prime Minister has requested the socialist member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to be the permanent Speaker of this House of Commons? If there has been any correspondence on the subject I would ask that copies of it be tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answer that first categorically. No; there was no offer to the hon. gentleman to be permanent Speaker. I am one of those who believe that action should be taken, having regard to what took place in the last two or three sessions, to bring about a degree of authority in the Speaker that would be above partisan consideration. During the election campaign and prior thereto I pointed out that one of the matters that deserved consideration was the appointment of a permanent Speaker and, if possible, when that unanimity of opinion could be secured in the House of Commons, to bring about permanence in the speakership. However, that has not been achieved, in order to place the speakership above the importunities of anyone in this house, and in order that the Speaker would never in the future, during this parliament, be in any way considered to be, or placed in, the unenviable position in which those who now sit opposite to us placed the former Speaker.

The hon. gentleman mentioned the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. There was no offer of a permanent speakership in any way inherent in the offer. What I said was this, and I will table the correspondence if my hon. friend is willing and if he expresses his willingness now. I asked the hon. member whether, because of the fact that he was regarded as an authority on parliamentary rules, he would allow me to place his name in nomination; and if he were chosen by the House of Commons, would he accept the appointment. That is the total and summary answer to my hon. friend.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I do want to make clear one thing that may not have been clear in my earlier remarks. I am very anxious to table these two letters. It has been agreed by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that they should be tabled, and with your permission it can be done at once.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REFERENCE TO APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENERGY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question of which I have already given him notice. Having regard to the establishment of the royal commission on energy and sources of energy announced by the Prime Minister yesterday, may I ask him these two questions.

Do the terms of reference include a study of the power to be developed by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the New York state power authority in the international rapids section of the seaway as well as the power now under development, or to be developed, in the Soulanges and Lachine sections of the St. Lawrence river? If not, will the government give consideration to enlarging the terms of reference so as to include these three areas of development?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the notice to which the hon. member referred, no doubt because of my absence on other duties this morning. However, I think the terms of reference speak for themselves and it is not for me to make an interpretation as to the meaning of those terms, because I think they are all-comprehensive. Nevertheless, if when the commission is constituted it is deemed advisable or necessary to amplify the terms of reference in accordance with the suggestion of my hon. friend, then consideration will be given to amplifying the powers.

NATURAL GAS

ALLEGED SALE IN U.S. AT PRICES LOWER THAN IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is it the government's intention to institute by order in council or otherwise any legal action against the Westcoast Transmission Company for having entered into a contract under which they are now supplying natural gas to United States distributors at a lower price than that granted to distributors in British Columbia, which contravenes the regulations made under the authority of a statute of this parliament?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that anything in the nature of an offence which would form the basis of a prosecution had taken place. I shall be glad to have that matter checked further to make certain I am correct in my understanding. I would imagine, however, that in any event this would be one of the sort of problems that would require the urgent consideration of the royal commission announced yesterday by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of what the minister has said with regard to this being one of the problems likely to receive the urgent consideration of the royal commission. This is an act of parliament already established that has been contravened. Why does the minister think it necessary to wait for a royal commission to study the question of the contravention of an established act of parliament before he is prepared to take any action?

Mr. Fulton: I may say to the hon. member that, as is his custom, he has jumped to conclusions not warranted by the words used. I have already told the hon. member that I will examine the matter immediately and see if in fact there be such a contravention, and I said further that this was one of the sort of problems which in addition would be studied by the royal commission announced yesterday.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECENT CONFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. In view of his ready and kind agreement yesterday to make a statement as early as possible on the United Kingdom proposal with regard to free trade between Canada and the United Kingdom I should like to ask him if he proposes to include in that statement some reference not only to the Mont Tremblant conference, which he said yesterday he would willingly do, but if he would also make some reference—in fact make a complete report—on the recent conferences of Canadian and United States ministers in Washington; and also if he would be good enough to include in that report the very important proposal made by the Prime Minister of Canada not at the prime ministers' conference in London but to the members of the press gallery immediately upon his return from England.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that it will give me a great deal of pleasure to make the report he has asked for and to see that it covers all the points he has put forward today. I hope he will enjoy receiving the report as much as I will enjoy offering it to him.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's often expressed desire to remove trade barriers between Canada and Great Britain and to increase trade between the two countries, does he intend to seize on Britain's recent offer of free trade and bring to the farmers of the west the ability to buy in the same free market in which they are forced to sell?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that whole matter will be covered by the Minister of Finance when he speaks, but I think the hon. member should certainly be commended. For 22 years he has been silent about it, and suddenly he has taken an interest.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance be rather more prepared when he makes that statement than he was at the meeting at Mont Tremblant?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I hope I will satisfy the hon. member and the house with the statement I have been asked to make by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), that it has been properly prepared, in the same adequate manner as were the preparations made on behalf of the Canadian government for representation at Mont Tremblant.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister answered my question. I asked if he was going to seize on the offer of Great Britain.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison). I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he knows of any occasion in the past 22 years when a Liberal government sitting in this house was offered to deal with Great Britain in so far as free trade was concerned?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ask your friends.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like the Prime Minister to tell me if he knows of an occasion when Great Britain offered this country a free trade agreement with them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH COMMONWEALTH FREE TRADE AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance comment on the report that appeared in the October 14 issue of Le Devoir, a copy of which I sent him, which stated that in reply to the United Kingdom's proposal of establishing a free trade area with Canada the government was considering a counter-proposal whereby it would suggest forming a free trade area with all the commonwealth countries?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for sending me notice of his question and also the article to which he has referred, appearing in Le Devoir of October 14. I do not know where the writer of this article chose to get information or inspiration to write such an article or the headline writer to entitle it in the way he did. As far as I am aware no country in the commonwealth has proposed the establishment of a free trade area within the commonwealth.

Mr. Cardin: May I ask a supplementary question? Do I take it from the answer that the government will not in fact make the counter-proposal I just mentioned?

Mr. Fleming: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has made no such proposal.

Mr. Cardin: And it will not?

Mr. Fleming: Will my hon. friend be content with the answer I have given him today and wait until I satisfy the curiosity of my esteemed friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) in relation to the statement that I propose to make on the various trade conferences which have recently been held?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED TAKING OVER OF NATIONAL FILM BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the government confirm or deny the publicized report that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will probably take over the national film board?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the government is not, of course, in a position to confirm or deny any statement with respect to the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is an independent crown corporation and not, at the moment, under the control of the government. I must say, in so far as the act is concerned, the powers of the minister are simply those of reporting to parliament, and within the scope of those limited powers I can tell my hon. friend that I have not had any word, directly or indirectly, with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation taking over the national film board.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Finance agree with the view just expressed as to the relationship of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the government?—because he did not express any such view when he sat on this side.

Mr. Nowlan: It was a different minister then.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I can assure the importunate gentleman, who has just asked this question, that there is between the Minister of National Revenue and myself a measure of agreement that he and his colleagues might well have envied.

NATIONAL PARKS

CARTIER-BREBEUF—REFERENCE TO PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to implement the promise he made in Quebec recently to the members of la Societe St. Jean Baptiste that the Cartier-Brebeuf park would be made a national historic park?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I thank my hon. friend for asking that question. I was greatly interested in the situation wherein, in our country, so many of our historic areas fall into disuse and are forgotten. We had an example right here in the city of Ottawa in the old Supreme Court of Canada building—

Mr. Lesage: I am speaking about Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker:—in which seven of Canada's prime ministers argued cases from time to time. I realize the need of action being taken in this regard. When I was in Quebec I must say I was deeply moved by the ceremony I attended there. I saw that area where Jacques Cartier spent that winter which all but ended exploration in what is now Canada. I then suggested that that area be set aside as a national historic site.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Action is being taken in that connection. A full investigation is being made. As soon as we are in a position to report the effective nature of that action, I shall do so.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources what action is being taken or has been taken?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in the past I never heard such particularization. I speak of the objective and the general means. The routine details are not going to be gone into in this house, because it is foreign to the rights of the house to go into such details except when the estimates are discussed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in principle, he would be willing to take similar action with respect to the area surrounding cape Bonavista, which was discovered first by Cabot and was also visited by Cartier before Cartier went to Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into a controversy.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no controversy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friends sitting side by side are almost in the same degree of agreement in which they used to be when they were sitting over on this side of the house, when they invariably disagreed.

FREIGHT RATES

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN GRANTING PROPOSED INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the government take the necessary steps to delay any increase in freight rates asked for by the railways in their latest request for a 10 per cent increase until a proper investigation has been undertaken, the provinces have had an opportunity to make representations, and an effort has been made to bring about a greater equality in freight rates across Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members know, the hearing before the board of transport commissioners has not been concluded and it will not be concluded before all parties are given an adequate opportunity to be heard. Then a report will be made to the government and the matter will be seriously considered.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Then may I ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that the 4 per cent of that 10 per cent which was granted on September 24 will become effective unless some steps are taken by the government?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that fact. I will immediately get in touch with the chairman of the board of transport commissioners, and will give my answer tomorrow.

PUBLIC WORKS

GATINEAU AND OTTAWA RIVERS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION WALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the minister to come back to a practice which was in effect for over 50 years up to 1953, namely to build protection walls along the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers in order to stop the land destruction along these rivers?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The policy of the department is to take action of this kind only where the damage to the river banks is caused by navigation. In my short term of office as minister I have found that there are many people in many parts of Canada who want us to take action to stop erosion. However, the dominion government is not responsible for erosion from natural causes. It is responsible only where erosion is caused by navigation.

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, following the answer made by the Minister of Public Works a few minutes ago to the question asked by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) are we to understand that the previous protection works projects of the former administration are not to be carried out during the present fiscal year?

Mr. Green: I do not know whether all the projects will be completed during the present fiscal year. As the hon. member for Levis knows, the basis on which the Department of Public Works undertakes jobs of this kind is to prevent damage by navigation, not simply to stop rivers eroding their banks, which they do in the ordinary course of nature.

Mr. Bourget: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this because there were some tenders sought for projects in my own constituency a few weeks ago. I understand nothing has been done so far. This is a question of national interest because it is a question of departmental policy.

Some hon. Members: Ask the question.

Mr. Bourget: Very often, when they were on this side of the house, members opposite were asking such questions and they will recall that whenever a point was raised or a question was asked by members now on that side—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Green: I am very glad to answer, though I am a little surprised that the hon. member should raise this question. However, if he is referring to the projects which have been put in, at least in some cases, on the basis of protecting a Liberal farmer and not protecting anybody else, I may say that I am hoping the new government will be able to do a little better than that.

Mr. Bourget: I happened to be the parliamentary assistant to the minister of public works, and I know—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Those are the trained seals.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The questions have been asked, and some of the answers given have been speeches, and have been given at such length that I submit to you they are infractions of the rules of this house. My hon. friend has risen to ask his question in the same manner as the Prime Minister gave replies, and I submit to you that he should be given the same leeway.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member drawing to my attention the fact that some of the questions and some of the answers have not been in accordance with the rules of the house. I have hesitated, partly because of my own ignorance, to intervene; partly also because I assumed that among the new members at least there would be a certain amount of unfamiliarity with the purpose of the question period. However, after today's session I hope to be a little more severe with those who do not comply with the rules. But, as I say, I have been lenient today.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Bourget: Yes. Due to the fact—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bourget: Well, give me a little time and I will ask the question. Due to the fact that the project that has been approved in my constituency comes within the terms of reference of protection works, is the minister going to accept it?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I answered the hon. member a few minutes ago. I am really astonished that he should raise this question today. The new government hopes to put this protection back on a businesslike basis, and not on the basis of awarding party prizes.

ASSISTANCE TO EMPLOYABLE UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister at this time inform the house as to when the financial and other contractual agreements will be signed with our provincial governments relative to the payment of assistance to the employable unemployed who are not covered by unemployment insurance?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member an answer to that question. It is a matter for discussion between this government and the provinces, who will be meeting here. It is one of the problems which will be discussed at that time.

Mr. Winch: Then may I ask a supplementary question. While you are waiting for that discussion to take place, how are these people supposed to live?

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

PULPWOOD—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF REPORT OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Maltais) asked me whether I could give a report as to the progress of an inquiry under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act into the pulpwood industry. I told the hon. member that I would try to give him a reply at the earliest possible date. I should perhaps say that, as the house knows, the practice has been established over the years of not making reports of such investigations until all matters are concluded and a decision has been reached. However, there are exceptions and this is one of them, inasmuch as this inquiry originated as the result of a statement made in the house. I can therefore deal with it only to the extent of telling the hon. member that it is not possible to say when a report may be made. The director informs me that the parties concerned have recently asked for a short postponement of the final hearing in order that they may bring additional information before the commission. The director anticipates that the commission will be seized of the case by the end of this calendar year, after which it will be a question as to how soon the commission can conclude their inquiry and make their report.

HOUSING

REFERENCE TO RESOLUTION RESPECTING LOW COST HOUSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister advise this house whether he has received a copy of a resolution dealing with low cost housing passed by the National Retail Lumbermen's Council of Canada at their eleventh annual meeting held at Clear Lake, Manitoba, in September of this year; and if so, what action if any has the government taken to implement the recommendations contained therein?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would be obliged to ask in my department to see whether I have had a copy of those recommendations. The action the government has taken with respect to housing has already been mentioned this afternoon and it has been extremely effective in all parts of Canada except, unfortunately, in my own province of British Columbia and in the maritime provinces, particularly in the maritime provinces. There they do not seem to be taking advantage of the provision which has been made.

Mr. Robichaud: Could the minister tell the house if any action has been taken by the government to give further consideration to the building of low cost houses which are badly needed in the maritimes?

Mr. Green: The hon. member apparently has not familiarized himself with the policy which has been adopted and which is designed to help in the building of low cost homes. It is having that effect; the average price of the homes being built under this policy is a good deal lower than was the average under the policy which was followed by the former government.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

MOOSE JAW—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the Postmaster General give assurances that commitments made by the previous government for the construction of a new federal building for the city of Moose Jaw will be carried out?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think that question would be more properly directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Lewry: Then may I direct the question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the Minister of Public Works give assurances that commitments made by the previous government for the construction of a new federal building in the city of Moose Jaw will be carried out?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is really a question for the order paper, but there are steps under way to bring about the erection of a new post office building in Moose Jaw.

QUEBEC CITY—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POSTAL TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does the government intend to proceed, as soon as possible of course, with the construction of the new postal terminal in Quebec city?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to obtain the information from my department. I will be glad to give the hon. member an answer at the earliest opportunity.

WINDSOR—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) raised a question regarding progress being made in the construction of the new post office in Windsor and why it was that accommodation which had been acquired is now being offered for rent.

The hon. member knows that preparations for this building have been under way for a couple of years. Unfortunately the former government had no item in the estimates for this project for the present fiscal year. The planning vote has been utilized in the preparation of plans and in the acquisition of property. The planning vote, however, does not make it possible to call for tenders.

Pending approval of the Department of Public Works estimates, I contemplate calling for tenders as soon as the estimates for the next fiscal year have been tabled in the house. This should make it possible to carry out demolition work during the months of February and March, and for new construction to commence immediately thereafter. I am just as concerned in providing as much employment as possible during the winter months as the hon. member, but with no funds available it has not been possible for me to have this work started earlier.

The hon. member made reference to accommodation which is being rented. Settlement has been reached with all the owners of property concerned in the new site except the Windsor Hotel Supply Company. We have good reason to believe that a satisfactory arrangement will be reached with them. However, one of the conditions is that they remain in possession until March 1, 1958. For the reasons given and the lack of funds in the current fiscal year, it was felt that this requirement was one that would not interfere with our program for next year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED TRANSFER OF RESERVE ARMY TO CIVIL DEFENCE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could he inform the house of the effective date when the reserve army in Canada will be changed from its present role to that of civil defence?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of this question, and also the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Deniset) for having sent me a somewhat similar question.

I think the hon. member knows that the training year for the non-permanent militia starts on October 1 of each year. On October 1 of this year a training directive was sent out which laid down the aims for the training in the current year. Those aims read:

> To prepare the militia for its role to assist in any future mobilization for active service and for civil defence. Emphasis will be given to civil defence.

I think hon. members will see that there is really no change in the role being given to the militia. The emphasis for the coming year is to be laid on civil defence, and I think hon. members will agree that that is a realistic subject for study in connection with the militia, particularly in view of recent scientific advances which have been made in some other countries. That may not be as glamorous a role as some of the other ones which have in the past been carried out by the militia, but I am confident that the militia will render the same patriotic service in this role as it has always done, rather than seeking some phony, glamorous role which hardly exists.

Some hon. Members: Phony?

Mr. Henderson: Do I take it in view of what the minister has just said that in the present training year which started on October 1, 1957, the militia will conduct no other training other than for civil defence?

Mr. Pearkes: No I just read the opening words of the directive, and I will read them again:

> To prepare the militia for its role to assist in any future mobilization for active service and for civil defence. Emphasis will be given to civil defence.

Arrangements are made for selected personnel of militia units to attend summer camps with the regular units. The role of mobilization is not to be overlooked.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Perhaps he could tell the house what phony, glamorous role the militia has had in the past?

Mr. Pearkes: There is no suggestion of the militia having carried out in the past any role that could be considered as phony or glamorous, but there might be roles carried out in the future which would not be practical.

REPORTED UNIDENTIFIED SUBMARINES OFF NEWFOUNDLAND COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence and this, Mr. Speaker, is a serious question. In view of the many reports of strange submarines said to have been seen around the coast of Newfoundland, what action if any has been taken by his department to look into this matter?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, throughout the summer months there have been many reports from fishermen and other residents of Newfoundland that they have seen objects which they believe are unidentified submarines. These reports have not been confirmed, although every effort has been made to confirm them, by any naval or air force personnel. In every case where there has been a report made by a fisherman or resident of Newfoundland a senior naval officer has personally interviewed and questioned the person making the report. Action is being taken by the flag officer, Atlantic, to try to confirm any future reports which might be made. I might say that action has been taken during the past several weeks by the navy and by the Royal Canadian Air Force to make a definite identification.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

VANCOUVER—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF SEA WALL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and I assure you, sir, it is not one for the order paper.

British Columbia is holding its centennial next year, and one of the questions asked of the Minister of Public Works is with respect to a contribution by the government toward the building of the sea wall which, under Vancouver's centennial plan, will take care of and hold for all time the famous R.C.M.P. ship St. Roch.

I understand that information must be received immediately if the plan is to go forward. May I ask the hon. minister to tell us whether the federal government is prepared to participate financially in this matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Vancouver East is a little behind the times on this question. I have been considering this matter for some weeks, and just a few days ago had a conference with three of the aldermen from the city of Vancouver. I am very hopeful that the government can give some help in connection with the sea wall, but I point out to the hon. member that he had better not press me too hard or I will be in trouble with the Minister of Finance. That is the situation at the present time. We are endeavouring to see what can be done in regard to this program.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON AIR TRAFFIC RIGHTS, ITALY-CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) asked a question of the Prime Minister, requesting information regarding the possibility of an agreement being reached with Italy for an extension of air travel rights. As that matter comes within the orbit of my department, the Prime Minister has asked me to answer the question.

I am glad to report that informal discussions are going on at the present time through diplomatic channels, and it is hoped that a basis for the extension of these rights may be reached in the near future.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport, before we forget his answer to the previous question, whether the traffic rights he mentioned earlier are to be exercised at Toronto?

Mr. Hees: I think the hon. member is a little ahead of himself. First it is necessary to reach an agreement, if one can be reached, with Italy. If that can be done we shall give consideration to the matter he has mentioned.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ACTION TO PROHIBIT ENTRY OF SALACIOUS LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister undertaken personally, or has someone in his department undertaken for him, the censorship of salacious literature imported from abroad, as was carried out so worthily by his predecessor in office?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue in accordance with his oath of office performs those duties ascribed to him under the act.

Mr. Cannon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of National Revenue approve, therefore, of the attitude and the conduct of the previous minister of national revenue in this regard.

Mr. Nowlan: It is not for me to pass judgment on the conduct of my predecessor. Certainly the majority of the people of Canada did not approve of him or of the majority of his colleagues.

LIVESTOCK

CATTLE AND HOGS—REQUEST FOR ADEQUATE FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the house if adequate floor prices will be placed under cattle and particularly under hogs, to protect the farmers from possible ruinous prices if a large scale switch is made by farmers as was advocated publicly by the minister in order to alleviate the grain surplus problem.

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the hon. member has noted in the speech from the throne that the government proposes to introduce a measure to stabilize agricultural prices and the agricultural economy, and when that measure is introduced the government will make a full disclosure of its intentions in regard to matters of this kind.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

STATEMENT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) directed a question to me asking if I could advise him what progress the present government has made in developing a coast guard service.

This is a very important question and one in which many members of the house are interested. To do it justice it requires a detailed and of necessity a lengthy answer. I have such an answer here, but I do not think I should take up the time of the house giving it at this time. If the hon. member is willing to put his question on the order paper I will be able to immediately table the answer in the normal way.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, I think this is of such importance that the whole house would welcome a statement of policy from the minister.

Mr. Fulton: The whole house will get it if you will allow it to be tabled. You can read, can't you?

Mr. Sinclair: I think it would be much better for the minister to tell us in his own inimitable way about this frequently repeated Tory promise.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—POSTERS PRINTED IN U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. How many contracts have been awarded in the United Kingdom for the printing of posters for the current sale of Canada savings bonds? I have just sent one example of such a poster to the minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the correct answer is one. However, I can amplify the answer, in a manner that may give my hon. friend more information. About ten days ago it was brought to my attention that some of the posters used in the current Canada savings bond campaign appeared to have been printed in Great Britain rather than in Canada.

Mr. Lesage: Even those in the French language.

Mr. Fleming: I made inquiries at once on the matter and I found that one poster answered that description, one poster only.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Part of the policy of diversion.

Mr. Lesage: Fifteen per cent.

Mr. Fleming: Order, please. May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Ask Mr. Speaker for order.

Mr. Fleming: If the hon. member will permit his colleague's question to be answered, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to proceed.

That one poster I am told had been conspicuously successful in a similar campaign in the United Kingdom, and that was the reason it had been adopted for use here. The total amount involved in the purchasing of the rights to this one poster and having it printed at its source was $2,500 out of a total expenditure on advertising in connection with the current Canada savings bond campaign of $640,000.

An hon. Member: Waste and extravagance.

Mr. Fleming: You can readily see, Mr. Speaker, that the amount involved is approximately one-third of one per cent of the total.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF BILINGUAL GOVERNMENT CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Is it true that the minister has given instructions to the treasury to issue bilingual cheques throughout the whole of Canada from now on? In the negative, is it necessary to pass legislation in order to give such instructions?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have given no such instructions. That is a matter of government policy.

(Text):

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—GEOLOGICAL SURVEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can the minister inform the house if there has been any change in policy by the present government in regard to the carrying out of geological surveys in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I will take careful note of the question and answer it at the next opportunity, probably tomorrow.

Mr. Hardie: Supplementary to that, Mr. Speaker, while the minister is giving a reply to that question could he also find out why it was that this summer the work of the geological survey parties in the Mackenzie river district of the Northwest Territories was stopped when only 80 per cent of the work was completed?

COAL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SUBVENTION POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I do so because of the widespread interest in this problem in the province of Nova Scotia.

Is the Prime Minister in a position today or later to make a statement on the general coal subvention policy of this government, and in particular whether a subvention will be paid on coal moved within the maritime provinces, as forecast by him in his appearances in Nova Scotia prior to June 10?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will hold his curiosity in control for the next hour he will have an answer to that question.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

MEADOW LAKE, SASK.—INQUIRY AS TO INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the recent replies of the Minister of Public Works I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the written request to me from the minister to supply him with the names of farmers competent to act as

P.F.A.A. inspectors in the constituency of Meadow Lake, how many so named have been called out and immediately thereafter fired?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not that detailed information with me at the present time, naturally, because I could not possibly carry it for all the constituencies in western Canada. However, I can tell my hon. friend that a considerable number of the people whom he recommended were approached or taken on as far as this P.F.A.A. work is concerned. I might tell him further that of the list he submitted I think only two were farmers. The remainder were bar keepers, barbers and people in various other occupations.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer I would like to ask a supplementary question. Seeing that I recommended only two men to him my suspicions are corroborated fully. Is this new technique the brain child of the minister or an adaptation of Mao Tse Tung's recent methods of finding out who's who in China?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CONTINUATION OF ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my first comments on the address on behalf of the official opposition in this house, I should like to repeat my earlier statement that we deeply appreciate the historic circumstance that for the first time in the history of the Canadian parliament the speech from the throne was delivered by the sovereign in person. We welcomed the Queen in this parliament because among other reasons to be valid every act of this parliament must have the Queen's assent, and the royal assent is not an empty formality. It is true that the sovereign, under our British parliamentary system, acts only on the advice of ministers who are responsible to the elected branch of our parliament, but the crown is nonetheless an essential and a vital part of parliament itself.

The crown is a symbol of the constitutional evolution of our parliamentary tradition and also of our unity as a nation. The presence of Her Majesty the Queen in our parliament here in Ottawa has for us given new life to that symbol.

I have already referred to the fact that I appear in this house in a new capacity. I must confess that I was disappointed by the results of the recent election. I do not propose, however, to dwell on that disappointment nor do I intend to speculate upon the reasons for those results. The results speak for themselves. The party which I have had the honour to lead for the past nine years accepted those results loyally, without hesitation, in what we believe is the true spirit of our parliamentary system.

I do feel that all Canadians have a right to be proud of the ease and smoothness with which the change of government was accomplished as soon as possible after the full results of the general election were known. As we look around us in the world today we note that there are not too many countries where a government which has been entrenched in office for over 20 years could be changed so speedily and with so little confusion. The fact that this change took place in the manner it did may perhaps give many of our fellow citizens a deeper faith in the strength of our parliamentary tradition and our parliamentary institutions and the devotion that all of us feel to that tradition and to those institutions.

I should like to do in parliament what I have done out of parliament and congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) upon the vigour of his campaign and upon the support he was able to enlist for himself and for his party in the recent election. The Prime Minister does not expect me to wish him any long tenure of his present office, but I do say sincerely that I appreciate the way the Prime Minister has preserved not merely the letter but the spirit of the amenities of our parliamentary system. In all of those difficult and delicate arrangements which are inseparable from a change of government the Prime Minister has shown courtesy and consideration which I have appreciated and which I trust will always characterize the relations between party leaders in this parliament.

Perhaps I may be permitted to say that what happened on June 21 was an effective answer to some of the exaggeration about the dangers to parliament which we heard so much about before June 10.

The speech from the throne forecasts steps by the government to make both houses of parliament more effective in the discharge of their responsibilities to the people of Canada. All hon. members have an equal interest in having parliament function as an effective instrument in the services of the Canadian people and we on this side of the house hope that the government's plans for making parliament more effective were not being foreshadowed by the Prime Minister in recent speeches he made in Charlottetown and Montreal of which the newspaper reports give the impression he was suggesting that the house should accept virtually without question whatever program the government laid before it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; that is a misinterpretation.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I hope that is not an accurate forecast of what the government had in mind.

Hon. members are aware of the decision I had with great regret to announce on September 6 that I did not feel I had the strength and vigour necessary to lead my party in another general election and for that reason I felt the right course was to relinquish the leadership of my party as soon as a successor could be chosen in the appropriate manner. I doubt whether any party leader in the history of our country has enjoyed greater loyalty or more widespread support throughout the whole of his leadership than it has been my lot to enjoy since I became leader of the Liberal party in August, 1948. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, it was not easy to reach the conclusion that so soon after the party had suffered its first reverse I would have to give up the responsibility and the honour of leadership. I reached the conclusion, however, that if, as I was advised, the state of my health was such that I could not reasonably expect to lead the party effectively in another general election campaign, it was important for the effectiveness of the role of the Liberal party in our parliamentary system and therefore in the interest of the country that the leadership should be assumed by someone with the necessary strength and vigour to fully discharge that task. Once I had reached that decision, and of course I alone could make it, I felt the right thing to do was to communicate it to the public without delay, so that is what I decided had to be done.

I mention these circumstances, because they do have a bearing on parliament. In this house I occupy the office of Leader of the Opposition and I hope to continue to occupy that office until a new permanent leader of our party has been selected. Once that selection has been made I shall, of course, immediately relinquish the office of Leader of the Opposition to my successor. In the meanwhile I shall endeavour to discharge the constitutional duties of that office to the best of my abilities, fortified by the knowledge that I speak in this house for a united party which, as recently as June 10, still commanded substantially more popular support than any other political party in the country.

In assuming my new task as Leader of the Opposition I am comforted by the fact that, in spite of what has been said in answer to questions yesterday and today in the house, and in spite of the fact members of the present government and their supporters campaigned on the slogan that it was time for a change, they did seem singularly reluctant to make important changes in the policies or methods we followed when we sat on the other side. One member of the government after another has asserted he found little to change in the policies or administration of his department.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) paid tribute to the efficiency of our defence forces and, as recently as October 6th, indicated that there would be no fundamental changes in our forces. However, rumours appearing recently in the press seem to have caused some uncertainty in the public mind on this score. The Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton) has apparently sought to give the impression he was following our practices. Two of the harshest critics of our administration, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) seem to have gone out of their way to praise the departments over which they preside. Even the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) seems to have found merits in the trans-Canada highway in its present state that were not too apparent to many of us on this side of the house. Indeed, the one minister who seems to have found serious fault with the previous administration, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), claims to have discovered many examples of waste and extravagance in the administration of the various departments. We shall all await with interest the particular examples the Minister of Finance is able to disclose.

We on this side of the house will rejoice with him if he is able to bring about any substantial economies without impairing essential services. Both Mr. Harris and Mr. Abbott before him were always trying to do this, and they succeeded in keeping the growth of expenditures well below the growth of the country during the past ten years. It is, I agree with the present incumbent of that important portfolio, the duty of any minister of finance to keep down expenditures as much as that can be done without impairing the services that the public needs and wants.

Perhaps the most heartening of all these assertions was the apparent endorsement given to the external policies of the Liberal government by the new Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) on the day he was sworn into office. Until about a year ago the discussion of external affairs in this house was generally carried on in a non-partisan spirit and I, for one, was very glad that the minister should have stated so definitely that he approved of the policies that were followed a year ago. We all hope Doctor Smith will continue to exhibit the admirably objective and non-partisan attitude which he proclaimed on the day he became a member of the government.

In view of the statements made before June 10, we have heard with surprise from the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) speeches about the wheat problem which, when compared with previous speeches, have echoed the very words used about this problem by his distinguished predecessor. Indeed, in so far as wheat is concerned, the only thing that seems to have changed since June 10 is that we appear to be selling less and less wheat than we were previously.

There has been from the Prime Minister the much-heralded pronouncement in the United States on Canadian-United States relations. Those of us who have compared his pronouncements at Dartmouth college with the speeches made in the United States not long before June 10 by the former minister of trade and commerce, and even since June 10 by the former secretary of state for external affairs, could only rub our eyes and wonder whether anything was changed because there seemed to be nothing whatever in the Prime Minister's speech that had not already been said, and said very well and at least as forcefully, by members of the Liberal government.

The other day the four ministers returned from a meeting in Washington and brought back a promise from the United States government not to resume the form of wheat disposal by barter which the United States had already abandoned while we were still in office. This seemed to be really all that was accomplished, unless there was something achieved that was not mentioned in the communique. One might wonder if those who voted for a change on June 10 really wanted anything more than a change of faces, because so far that seems to be the most that has been obtained, except perhaps a growing feeling of uneasiness about the future. You would not expect me to admit that that was a very substantial change for the better.

I should not neglect any longer to compliment the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address, and to compliment them sincerely upon the admirable style and delivery of their maiden efforts in the house. The house, of course, always listens with sympathy to a newly-elected member making his first effort to catch its ear, and both hon. members acquitted themselves in a manner which promises well for their future contributions to our debates. It is not customary for the Leader of the Opposition to praise the contents of the speeches of the mover and seconder of the address and on this occasion particularly as I, too, am a novice, I shall not depart from precedent. I cannot, of course, share their understandable admiration for the new government which they feel they were elected to support.

I believe I have reached a point where I should indicate, as precisely as I can, what the attitude of the Liberal opposition will be to the new government during the present session when I expect to be responsible for leading the opposition. It is over 22 years since the Liberal party was last in opposition. In the 22 years Canada has enjoyed—I use a word that I believe will become more widely used in that connection as time passes—I say in the 22 years that Canada has enjoyed a Liberal government we as Liberals have prided ourselves on the fact that every item of the program placed before the public in each successive campaign has been implemented in full whenever it was possible for the government or for the parliament of Canada acting alone to implement it. The only items in our Liberal programs which have not been fully implemented are those which have required provincial co-operation, which was not always forthcoming, or the co-operation of the governments of other countries or of international bodies. Everything we have undertaken to do that could be done by a government here in Ottawa acting on its own has been accomplished.

This is a record of which we are justly proud. We are also proud of the fact that in these past twenty years the people of Canada have come to take it for granted that the government of Canada acts in good faith and carries out its undertakings to the people. I believe that the good faith in fulfilling undertakings that the public has received from the Liberal government they will now expect to receive from a Conservative government. I understand that is also the view of the present Prime Minister.

Of course it may be argued that the situation is somewhat different because the present government has not a majority of its own supporters in this house. That is true. The Conservative party was a long way from receiving a majority either of the popular vote or of the seats in parliament on June 10 last. But as far as its promises to the people are concerned, that should not be a substantial handicap to the government. Almost all of the Conservative promises were echoed by the two smaller parties represented in this house. Indeed, the most substantial difference between the Conservative party and the smaller parties in that regard is that the smaller parties were making even larger promises.

Since June 10 I understand that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and other members of his party have pledged their support to the government in fulfilling the promises, at least to the extent to which they themselves made them. To many Liberals some of the promises have seemed to be somewhat imprudent and some of them seem to be even impractical; but the fundamental position of the Liberal party is and always has been that the people by their votes have the right to control their own government.

We do not think that a Liberal minority in parliament has any more right to frustrate the will of the people by an obstructive attitude than has a Conservative minority or a C.C.F. minority. We believe that an opposition should state its position vigorously and honestly and that it should do its utmost to persuade a majority that when it objects to legislation, its objections are sound. But in the final analysis our view is that the will of the majority in parliament and, even more, of the majority in the country, should prevail. Indeed, our view is that a minority in parliament should not seek to obstruct the will of the majority unless the minority believes—and that may be possible at times—that there is at stake a principle of such importance to the nation that the minority should do everything in its power to bring the question before the electorate itself for a decision.

In the case of the Prime Minister's election promises we feel that the Liberal opposition should not attempt to substitute itself for the will of the majority expressed so recently in the general election. It is a fundamental Liberal belief that the people are entitled to have promises made to them by a successful political party implemented, and implemented in full.

I do not intend to detain the house with a catalogue of the promises made by the Prime Minister in the recent campaign. The speech from the throne forecasts legislation to implement several of these promises. I do not refer to the sections of the speech which deal with international and commonwealth affairs. Apart from the reference to the Mont Tremblant conference, to which I shall refer later, the rest of these sections of the speech could just as well have been put there by a Liberal government. Indeed, many of the phrases are mere echoes of earlier speeches; and I am not suggesting that they are any the worse for that.

As for the measures forecast to increase old age security and other social benefits, naturally every true Liberal will welcome them in principle. Our sole concern will be to see how they fit into the whole financial picture and how far the government will take effective measures to control the rise in the cost of living which, if unchecked, could easily take away all the advantages of the proposed increases.

I think my right hon. friend would agree that the vague language used about benefits for farmers and fishermen is perhaps better suited to a party manifesto than to a legislative program, but when it is translated into a legislative program we shall see just what it can mean and what its effect can be. Like the farmers and the fishermen themselves, the opposition will be eager to see what, if anything, the proposed legislation really adds up to.

As for cash advances for farm stored wheat, it is our view that the farmers of the prairies and the country would be much more interested in the progress being made in selling the wheat.

There is nothing new in the so-called national development program as outlined in the speech from the throne except the undertaking to assist in financing Beechwood and the forecast of early discussions about beginning the South Saskatchewan dam.

Evidently part of the burden of the wider program for producing and transmitting power in the Atlantic provinces which we felt should be financed entirely out of the federal treasury is being pushed back on the provinces. In the speech from the throne there was just the gentlest hint of tax changes. The language of the speech was in singular contrast to the vigorous and forthright language used by the Minister of Finance in June.

Let me recall his statement as reported by the Canadian Press in the Montreal Gazette of June 26. The article is entitled "Tax Reductions, Pensions Boosts in Fall Budget" and reads as follows:

> Ottawa, June 25—(CP) Finance Minister Donald Fleming said tonight he plans to bring down a new budget next fall to reduce taxes, increase old age pension and possibly curb government spending.
> The new Progressive Conservative fiscal chief said also in an interview that he will be moving toward easing of the federal "tight-money" policy as quickly as possible with the hope of reviving Canada's housing slump.

"There very definitely must be an early relaxation of the rigors of the tight-money policy," said the 52-year old Toronto lawyer on whose shoulders have fallen the job of developing a financial policy to fulfil Prime Minister Diefenbaker's election promises.

The same report goes on to state that the Minister of Finance recalled that during the election campaign the Prime Minister had promised to reduce taxes, increase old age pensions and bring about a fair distribution for provinces and municipalities of revenue from joint federal-provincial tax fields. Then there is this direct quotation:

"These promises will be fulfilled," Mr. Fleming said, observing that in each case the promises required action of the finance department.

We are all looking forward to the presentation of this budget and to a full debate on the case the Minister of Finance will present at that time.

From time to time I have noticed from press rumours that the government intends to make important changes in the fiscal policy of this country without giving the elected representatives of the Canadian people an opportunity for a full debate which, under our parliamentary system, is afforded by the presentation of a budget. I refuse to believe that a government whose leading members made so much of their attachment to the rights of parliament would seriously propose, both to alter the tax structure of the country and to increase expenditures substantially without giving parliament every opportunity afforded by the rules to consider the whole financial picture and to debate fully the benefits of proposed changes upon the economy.

In the budget proposals we will await with particular interest the proposal for implementing the promises which the Prime Minister made, all across the country, to arrange for a substantial increase in the revenues of the provinces. That is a matter which we have studied very carefully, over the years. We may not have been able to reach the best possible conclusion, but we put forth our best efforts. We have therefore been somewhat surprised that the federal-provincial conference which the Prime Minister promised to call immediately after the election should have been delayed now for nearly five months.

We perhaps are entitled to expect also, in accordance with their oft-proclaimed policy of keeping parliament fully informed, that we in parliament would be advised in advance of the proposals that the government will place before the federal-provincial conference. For our part we are proud that it was a Liberal government which established the principle of equalization payments out of taxes paid by all the Canadian people with the object of placing all the provincial governments in a more nearly equal position to discharge their constitutional obligations. It seems to us that any departure from the principle of equalization will be viewed with alarm in all parts of Canada.

Now may I turn for a moment to the question of trade about which the Prime Minister made a very far-reaching proposal. I refer, of course, to the policy he announced on his return from the meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers in London, namely, that the government will seek to divert 15 per cent of our purchases from the United States to commonwealth countries. I should like to believe that the Prime Minister would not announce such a policy unless he had a concrete plan designed to carry it out. It is true that a few suggestions for increasing United Kingdom sales in Canada were contained in the joint announcement made by the United Kingdom and Canadian ministers on October 4, but I submit, with great respect, that these suggestions do not appear to be very impressive.

For most of the period since the war our government has sought systematically to direct our purchases to the United Kingdom, if they were purchases of things that could not be made at home, and there is nothing new in the suggestion that that policy be pursued. The increasing United Kingdom exports which would result from increasing the $100 exemption for tourists certainly would not go very far, and the high level trade delegation is not something new. For years a committee headed by Mr. James Duncan, and other special missions, have been contributing in the same way to the same end. I am sure that all of us who know Mr. Duncan—and many of us do know him—would believe that he had put forth very serious efforts to make a success of the mission upon which he was engaged and which he headed. It does not seem that any of these things are likely to bring about a diversion of even a small fraction of one per cent of our purchases, much less 15 per cent. We will be very interested to know what is the government's plan for this huge diversion of trade.

It seems to us that there are only three possible ways to bring about a diversion of trade on this scale, if indeed a diversion on this scale is possible at all. The first would be discriminatory increases in tariffs against the United States. Some suggestions have been made that this might be called the Bennett way. I do not think that that is the plan and I think it would create serious difficulties if it were considered as a way to bring about this desirable result of making it possible for the United Kingdom economy to earn Canadian dollars.

The second way would be by state trading and state control of exports and imports which might be called the soviet way. That certainly is not being contemplated by this government, nor would it be contemplated by any Canadian government as a proper manner in which to handle our trade policies.

The third way is by the reduction or removal of trade barriers between Canada and commonwealth countries, which I suppose you might call the Thorneycroft way. We have been given the impression that the government is not too enthusiastic about that; the Minister of Finance was supposed to have a secret agenda of his own at Mont Tremblant, but so far the Canadian public have not been given any hint of what that agenda might contain.

Mr. Fleming: He did not have any secret agenda of his own.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well there was a report published of a press conference with the Minister of Finance, held before the Mont Tremblant meeting, which was progressing splendidly until the newspaper men commenced to ask questions about an agenda and were told that the agenda was on the secret list and that the ways and means were matters that could not be divulged at that time.

Mr. Fleming: It was not my agenda.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I would imagine that the hon. gentleman would not be writing the agenda himself but would be using the assistance of the very competent staff of the Department of Finance and the Department of Trade and Commerce in preparing an agenda for that kind of meeting.

Now the speech from the throne refers to the comradely spirit at Mont Tremblant. Well, this comradely spirit seems to have escaped the notice of press correspondents. Perhaps I might be allowed to cite a comment in the last issue of the Financial Post on October 12 entitled "Months of Grace for Tories Over":

> The unfortunate fact is that the Mont Tremblant conference between Canadian and British officials was a great flop.
> The whole story of what went on behind the scenes is now available (see page 3 this issue).
> The British had prepared very thoroughly for the meeting. The Canadians had not.
> The crux of the problem of increasing trade between Canada and Commonwealth countries is in how governments can foster this without running foul of their commitments under GATT.
> The British came with their proposal which they had told the Canadians about several weeks before. Their plans got the much over-simplified name of free trade area. Stated baldly that way, it stunned the Canadians, and before it ever got adequately explained, it got buried. Fully explained, it isn't nearly such a startling scheme as it sounds.
> This is regrettable because a thorough, unexcited examination might have led somewhere. At least, a sober discussion of it would have laid useful groundwork for future conferences. But the fact is that the cause of commonwealth trade has actually been set back rather than advanced.
> What caused the Mont Tremblant fiasco?
> Despite the advance warning that the British would announce this proposal, it appears that the Canadians went to the conference without doing nearly enough homework. The big research and analysis machinery available to the government wasn't adequately exploited.
> Ottawa observers of the affair are also convinced that the new Canadian cabinet hasn't yet got its working methods organized, that cabinet members are inadequately informed on the Prime Minister's views and on each other's.
> One Briton said: "Before the meeting Canadians talked a lot about commonwealth trade, but at the conference they apparently were not prepared to face up to doing anything important about it."
> Coming into office after so long a pilgrimage in the wilderness of opposition, the new government was bound to take some time to learn how to run public business smoothly.
> But parliament meets next week. The months of grace are over. The new government should take pains to demonstrate to voters that it knows where it is going, that it doesn't make large promises it doesn't know how to fulfil.

I submit that it is time parliament and the Canadian people were told in precise language just what the plans of the government are to divert our trade to commonwealth countries and precisely what is involved in the proposals of the United Kingdom government.

We were told before the election that this trade problem was urgent: surely it cannot be shelved until a commonwealth conference is held some time next year to consider an agenda which is still being kept secret from the people of Canada. On this question of the diversion of trade we in the opposition will not attempt to comment, and no one can comment intelligently until we know what the government really proposes.

We believe the proper function of an opposition which hopes and expects to be in office again is to be fair and frank with the public, to criticize the government vigorously, and to advance alternatives to the policies followed by the government, but not to seek to usurp the functions of the government or to take responsibility for them.

Having the reasonable assurance that the fulfilment of its promises will not be obstructed at the present session of parliament, at least by the official opposition, the government will have no excuse for any failure to carry out that program.

In the special circumstances in which this house finds itself where no party has a majority but where there does seem to be a disposition to give the government the opportunity to bring its legislation before the house, it does not seem to us in the official opposition to be appropriate to move the traditional vote of want of confidence.

Such a motion could, it seems to me, have only one or other of two effects. If the motion were carried it would deny the government the possibility of attempting to fulfil their promises. If the motion were not carried it would serve merely to put forward some alternative proposition, and the beginning of this session does not seem to be the time for that.

Having decided not to move an amendment ourselves, we do not feel at this time that we should support any amendment to the address moved in any other quarter of the house.

We feel that the government has enunciated a program in the speech from the throne in general terms. No doubt the government has legislation in which we will find more precise, more concrete suggestions than those contained in the speech from the throne, and we think that the government should have the opportunity of producing that legislation. If that legislation is, as it would appear to be, in line with the pre-election promises made by the government which resulted in the situation which induced us to tender our resignation to His Excellency the Governor General then the government should have the opportunity of producing that legislation and making clear to the Canadian public that it is, and always was, its intention to carry out those promises, and that it feels this can be done without any serious effect on the future economy of the Canadian nation.

I am sure the government will have in mind, in all the measures it will be recommending to parliament, the necessity in the interest of the Canadian individual and the Canadian nation of effectively controlling inflation so that increases in expenditure may not become useless because of increases in prices which these expenses were meant to cover.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is naturally with some diffidence that I rise at this time. The Prime Minister said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Leader of the Opposition—I say immediately that so long was he in the former office that all of us wondered who would be the first to make the slip. I did.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) said he was not going to prophesy a long period of office for us. I remember a prophecy in January of 1957 when I occupied for the first time the position which he is occupying now. He then made the prophecy that I would be in that position for a long time. I am glad he did not make any prophecy today, for, after all, on that occasion and since the prophecy did not come true.

But I am not here for the purpose of going over the election. I dislike referring to that, and I would not have done so had the Leader of the Opposition not referred to it, because it is contrary to my inclinations to bring up matters that cause feelings that I do not want hon. members opposite to feel.

Mr. Speaker, my first words must be words of congratulation to yourself on the elevation to the position you now occupy. I say to you my hope is, and it is a sure one, that in the days ahead you will maintain those great traditions of the position which you occupy.

In the last few days we in this parliament have had an experience, to which reference was made by the Leader of the Opposition, of having a visit from Her Majesty the Queen. As she left us today she sent to us and to all of Canada a message warmhearted and appreciative coupled with the hope that it will not be long before she will again be visiting her country as Queen of Canada. I think I can do no better, with the leave of the house, than to table that message, as well as the message which I sent on your behalf and on behalf of the people of Canada to her on her departure.

Before I get into the debate proper I want to say a word of congratulation to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. This is not a perfunctory thing to do. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) acquitted himself in a way that was truly reminiscent of the contributions made in this house by his father, for many years a member of this body.

The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault), able to do that which all of us must envy, that is to speak in both official languages and so well, executed his task extremely capably. These two hon. members are but an example of the very considerable number of young members who have come into this parliament for the first time, young in years but old in experience, who I know in the years ahead will make great contributions as so many of them did in the days of war.

Now, I listened to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker:—or rather to the Leader of the Opposition as he revealed something of his attitude in regard to these matters of public importance. I could not quite follow him in the attitude that he took all the way through his speech. It was an attitude of criticism—sometimes captious criticism—this was wrong, that was wrong and the other thing was wrong. And yet, as he came to the end of that speech he indicated that although we did not have a majority in the house, and therefore did not enjoy the confidence of the house, he would not move a vote of non-confidence. Why? If everything that is being presented is wrong or subject to criticism, why not do that which under ordinary circumstances would be the proper attitude to adopt? Why not permit a vote to take place regarding that matter—

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you disappointed?

Mr. Diefenbaker:—which above all others is of the first consideration, whether or not we do enjoy the confidence of the House of Commons?

Mr. Lesage: We are letting you ride.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If my hon. friends will possess themselves in silence for a moment I will continue. They have already jeered themselves out of this side of the house.

One of the major reasons they are over there is because they jeered and jeered and ridiculed the situation which built up and built up whereby our parliamentary institutions were degraded.

Mr. Chevrier: Ah, get off that line.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Your attitude is not shared by your deskmate and if my hon. friends opposite think I overstate the question—

Mr. McIlraith: You do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —my hon. friends should have been present at Presqu'ile Point on the occasion of the young Liberals meeting a few weeks ago. My friend the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was not there but his seatmate was and on that occasion his seatmate spoke words of great wisdom.

Mr. Pickersgill: He always does.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He went on to point out as he peeped into the cupboard of practices by the former government—

Mr. Chevrier: Why don't you deal with the speech?

Mr. Fleming: You don't like that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He produced in words of acute and accurate observation a description of the reason why changes took place. The trouble with my hon. friends opposite is, and it was so apparent throughout the speech of their leader, they do not realize that things have changed. The hon. member for West Algoma—

Mr. Pearson: No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Algoma East.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) dealt with what the situation was in what he described as an agonizing reappraisal. He said there were reasons why the change had taken place. He indicated that the government had been too long in power.

Mr. Pearson: I did not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In describing the situation he used the words that it had lost touch with the people, according to the quotation. He said that parliament needed to be restored in its prestige, that there was a breakdown apparently in communication between the grass and the brass. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, was not that what we had said over and over again? As a matter of fact that meeting was one of the greatest competitions in "who-dunit" of which I have ever read.

The former minister of finance accepted a major portion of the responsibility for what had happened because, as he said, the agricultural policy was not as it should have been. The only one who placed the blame elsewhere was my friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). He made a fighting speech in which he indicated that nobody was to blame but the people of Canada.

I mention that, because of the degree to which every stand that we have tried to take, that we have been developing in the last few months since coming into power, was subjected to a rather meticulous examination. We appreciate the fact, and it is a tribute to us, that those who formerly formed the government expect us to do more in 22 weeks than they did in almost 22 years. I cannot understand why the right hon. Leader of the Opposition did not move that vote of non-confidence. If the things that we are doing, the stands that we are taking, the direful prospect that he pictured for the future are in anticipation, why not discharge that constitutional action, the only one that can be taken, rather than simply touching the various matters referred to in the speech from the throne and ending up by what must have been regarded by him and those associated with him as the most defeatist attitude that any party could take in the circumstances.

Our purpose will be to bring before the House of Commons the various matters of legislation which have been set out in the speech from the throne. I am not going into detail on this occasion; I am simply going to indicate some of the general principles that actuated us in proceeding so soon after the election to carry into effect those promises which we made.

We have great responsibilities as a new parliament meeting under circumstances which we inherited as a government. I refer to the trade situation with the United States wherein today we find ourselves, or did in June last, in the position of having an adverse trade balance of $1,300 million, and increasing year by year. We found ourselves in the position where inflation, to which reference was made by the Leader of the Opposition, was increasing. The cost of living had not been met. We found ourselves in the position that various segments of our population, because of the so-called tight-money policy being improperly applied, were hard hit. This policy brought about in various industries in our country a diminution in production and in productivity and a major reduction in employment. These are some of the things that we found we had inherited. We tried to meet the general situation that existed in unemployment and in particular in the housing industry by action to which reference was made this afternoon, by which $150 million was made available for the construction of small houses.

My right hon. friend mentioned the serious situation with regard to the marketing of wheat, the loss of markets. I ask, what did my hon. friends opposite do in the last two or three years while the markets for wheat were being lost? They ridiculed the endeavour on our part to bring about the establishment of sound economic conditions within our country. Throughout the years we asked them whether or not they would take action in connection with the convening of a commonwealth trade and economic conference. I am not going into the details, but from 1950 on they followed the course year by year of shutting their eyes to the situation that was developing in the loss of our trade and at the same time refusing to take effective action, or indeed any action, to meet the situation which was apparent on every hand. My right hon. friend mentioned the fact that we have already laid the foundations for that conference. He and others on the other side of the house said it could not be done. That conference is being called.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who ever said that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That conference will achieve many of the aims that we have in mind. Certainly there is no reason whatsoever for the attitude taken by the former government of refusing to do anything, to deny the existence of those things and, having denied them for the past three or four years, now point out to us as the legatees of their failure to act that the things that they did not achieve in years have not been attained in a matter of months.

Yes, we took action on behalf of the coal industry in Nova Scotia and in British Columbia. In two points in those areas we took ad hoc action as soon as we came into power. We also have taken action with regard to one of the most serious situations in which Canadian agriculture found itself as a result of the dumping into Canada of agricultural products to the detriment of the Canadian farmer. Did they act? I am not going into the particulars on this occasion. The Minister of Agriculture and others will deal with it. The Canadian farmer found himself in a position where his market in Canada was unfairly challenged by imports into Canada at prices that gave every indication of having been based on other than ordinary commercial grounds, and everywhere across this country the former government failed to act in that regard.

I am not here for the purpose of going into that except to point out—and it is only because the Leader of the Opposition raised these matters—that they existed—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And still do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —for several years. The present government when it came into power acted as far as it could within the limitations that must necessarily confine its action until the convening of parliament. I am sure nobody will say that it was improper on our part to postpone the calling of parliament until October 14 in order to permit the events of the last few days to take place; for, after all, the plans had been made long in advance of the election campaign and it would have been, in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition, most improper to have done anything to change those plans in that regard.

I mention our program in general, what we intend to do, some of the ideas that we have, and I place before parliament in a general outline the development of those policies which we advocated while in opposition. I am going to start with a reference to the social policy. Our legislative program in this regard speaks for itself; it is in keeping with our philosophy, the need of action being taken, the need of action that should have been taken a great deal earlier, and effective action, in order to do something on behalf of those older citizens of our country who because of the very fact raised by the right honourable gentleman, the inflationary trend, found themselves caught in an impossible position.

Yet, what could they do? Knowing the situation they acted, but they acted in such a way that it in no way met the dire position in which many of our elder citizens found themselves. As has been set out in the speech from the throne, we intend to place before parliament measures to improve the lot of the senior members of our society; to increase old age security pensions and to shorten the period of residence required to qualify for them. Changes will be proposed also in the terms of assistance in so far as the Old Age Assistance Act is concerned, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act. Further changes will be made on behalf of the war veterans in the payment of war veterans' allowances.

These things would have been passed by any previous parliament if it had not been for the fact that the government of my right hon. friend refused to act in this connection and the members who supported him stood behind him in his refusal to act. My right hon. friend spoke of parliament and asked whether changes would be brought about. He spoke of the need for full debate in parliament and I could not be more in agreement with him. There is need for careful examination, full consideration and debate that is not muzzled in anticipation by the application of closure.

I mention that as one of the most serious examples of the curtailment of the ancient rights of parliament. Apparently my right hon. friend looks back upon the course of action followed in 1956 with some regret, for in indicating to us the need for full discussion he pointed out, and properly so, that the essence of parliamentary government is full discussion. You say, what are we going to do about that? Well closure had its place, if properly used, in order to prevent an unjustifiable action on the part of the opposition as against the government of the day after a debate lasting for a very considerable period of time. We found out, however, that closure, necessary as it has been proven to be in times past, not only in our own parliament but in other parliaments within the commonwealth, under our rules constitutes an open invitation to the curtailment of fair and reasonable debate, indeed to the imprisonment of parliament by the government.

During the election campaign I said, and I am unchanged in this viewpoint, that having regard to its potential danger, as was evidenced so clearly so short a time ago, we intend at the first opportunity to move the necessary motion in order to remove closure from the rules of the House of Commons, to the end that parliament will be restored to something of its ancient glory. That is the first step. We have a tremendous responsibility in this parliament to restore in the hearts of the people something of the prestige of parliament. I am not entering into a discussion as to who was responsible, I am saying that if we are to make this institution the great and abiding institution that it should be to fashion freedom the responsibility will fall on each and every one in this parliament to so conduct himself that, in co-operation, we together, without in any way measuring the responsibility of any member of this house, will make our contribution to the restoration of this parliament to its proper position.

I mentioned the question of social security. I mention now the next matter to which reference is made, the subject of agriculture. I am merely going to give a general idea of some of the steps we shall take in this regard. Naturally I cannot reveal the particulars of the legislative program. I point out, however, that because parliament was not to sit until October 14 one of our first acts in order to meet the situation in which the western farmer found himself, with a vast accumulation of wheat—yes, underestimated by the last government by 75 million bushels which we only ascertained since coming into power—was to continue the loan legislation. This would meet the needs of those who chose to use the available facilities until such time as parliament might meet.

I am hoping that my hon. friends in all parts of the house will agree within the next few days, in view of the serious situation in western Canada, on the need of doing something to advance the legislation even prior to the completion of the present debate. As a matter of fact, I would not have made that suggestion if it had not been indicated there is to be no challenge so far as the official opposition is concerned. Since that is so, there is no reason now why we should not, at the earliest possible date, proceed with the introduction of the resolution and, as soon as possible, bring about the enactment of legislation if parliament will accept the recommendation of this government.

My right hon. friend said that markets were better than cash advances. I agree with him, but where have the markets been? What does one do about the 700 million bushels piled up—not under this government? It was a very great thought to place before parliament the superiority of markets and sales to advances. We supported advances when we were in opposition. We believed they were necessary. We stated that the loan system would not be acceptable. I think, in general, the farm communities of the western provinces agreed with our contention that the loan system was one that placed the farmer in the position of actually having to pay for a loan on his earnings because he could sell only through the government or its agencies. We intend to introduce this legislation at the earliest possible date.

We intend as well, as has been outlined, through the necessary legislation to lay the foundation for the stabilization of agricultural prices at reasonable levels, taking into consideration market conditions and also the costs of production. We intend to proceed with that program as a safeguard program on behalf of the farmer, as a beginning of a long-term policy to bring about security and stability to the farming population of this country. It is a positive program beginning with the legislation which we will introduce, to be expanded on the basis of experience, which after all is necessary and requisite if the legislation is to be effectual.

In addition to the fact that the farmers have not had stability, one of the major causes of disaffection has been the fact that—this is somewhat different from the situation in the United States where the farmer's share of the consumer dollar has been going up—in Canada in the past seven or eight years the farmer's share of the consumer dollar has been going down. The farmers have been asking for an investigation in this connection for the purpose of arriving at a true conclusion or for an actual explanation of the reason for this peculiar paradoxical course having regard to what is happening in the United States. In order to bring about the beginnings of an investigation of this situation I believe that members of parliament themselves in committee might make an investigation into this matter. If at any time, because of the complexities and difficulties which are incident to the examination, it is found that the matter is too widespread and too complex for a committee to handle, in that case we should certainly consider the setting up of a royal commission to investigate this matter to the end that as a result of that investigation and of the recommendations made the action necessary and requisite could be taken.

As far as the agricultural policy is concerned, I mentioned earlier that we had taken emergent action. We took emergent action in July by placing turkeys under price support. We took action by import control some days later in order to prevent Canada's farmers and producers of turkeys from being actually inundated by vast imports that had been increasing over the last several years. In addition to that, in so far as fowl is concerned, we place fowl under price support and also under import control. Both of these actions have received the approval of organized agriculture.

As well action was taken under import control in reference to dry skim milk, the import provisions to continue in effect until May 31, 1958. This was the only action that we could take consistent with the responsibility of parliament and of parliamentary control.

Then there is the next matter to which I wish to make reference and this has to do with the question of a national development policy. I am not going into detail in this connection except to say this. Throughout the last number of years we have been advocating a policy to raise the horizons of the Canadian people, to give Canadians some conception and vision of the greatness of the future, to bring about a policy of co-operation as between the central government and the provincial governments when they ask for co-operation in order to enable the formulation of a national development policy whereby our resources may be developed for the maximum benefit of Canada. In that connection we must move in those areas that are particularly affected and find themselves in a position below the level of the general register of advancement and development in other parts of Canada. This afternoon a question was asked as to what was the attitude with regard to one matter affecting the maritime provinces. The answer is given in the speech from the throne in these words:

> As an immediate start upon a program of more extensive development in the Atlantic provinces, you will be asked to authorize, in joint action with the provincial governments, the creation of facilities for the production and transmission of cheaper electric power in those provinces.

My right hon. friend said that apparently we changed their policy and that the federal government was going to undertake complete financing of the power facilities in the maritimes. I have not his speech here with me on this occasion but as I recall it, he spoke in the city of Fredericton and when asked whether this policy would provide cheaper power was unable to give any assurance in that direction. The difference between the policy we advance, in so far as the assured objective is concerned, and the policy advanced by him is this: The policy that we intend to place before parliament will bring about cheaper power to the end that industrialization may be extended in the maritime provinces. A policy of regional underdevelopment, as long as the problem remains unsolved, will permit the richer provinces to grow richer and the poorer provinces by reason of a lack of cheaper power, to become industrially poorer with advancing years. In other words, there will be an unbalanced economic growth. The maritimes, the provinces by the sea, found themselves neglected by the former government. In the dying days of the last session there was placed before parliament a dish which, under that shrewd examination that maritimers give, was recognized as not being one palatable or in any way desirable.

In addition to that we intend to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project. My right hon. friend says that the financing will all be done by the provinces. For a considerable period of time the people of New Brunswick asked for some financial assistance or guarantee from the last government. We believe that in connection with the development of the maritimes and in the general concept of our national development the Beechwood project is one of those facets that deserve the national assistance of the people of Canada.

My hon. friend asked a question on the orders of the day regarding the matter of coal subventions. Well, throughout the years my hon. New Brunswick friends in the Conservative party have been asking for action in this regard. No action was taken. Indications were given at election time that action might be taken but, with the passing of the election, there was forgetfulness of the promise. As an integral part of the power development of the maritime provinces and also out of consideration for the situation prevalent in the coal producing areas of the maritimes, we believe the time has come to inaugurate a system of freight subventions for the removal of coal for power purposes within that area. That will serve two purposes: first it will provide a steadily increasing demand for maritime coal and also do much to stabilize the coal industry, reduce the cost of power and in consequence render the climate clement for expanded industrialization and the raising of economic standards in the maritime provinces. That is of the essence and that is also of the essence of this policy of national development.

My right hon. friend mentioned the South Saskatchewan dam. I am sure that if at any time the right hon. gentleman had accepted the advice of the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) there would have been no question as to whether or not that development plan was feasible, indeed more than that was necessary for the diversification of industry within the province of Saskatchewan and to provide in addition thereto the restoration of large land areas which for many years have had successive periods of drought and of plenty.

Various plans have been offered as far as this government is concerned as a result of the examination made by the engineers and on the basis of reports the feasibility of this scheme seems to us beyond doubt. However there are difficulties to be ironed out in connection with the project and its implementation. There have been many representations and, throughout the years, the exchange of many documents between the government of Saskatchewan and the government of Canada, culminating finally in the month of May last with a clear indication by the last government that no decision had been arrived at. We want to state immediately, with no desire other than the assurance of the protection of the public interest, the proper financing as between this government and the government of Saskatchewan, and the allocation to the province of Saskatchewan and its government of the primary responsibilities for those things which are a provincial responsibility alone, that we intend to proceed at the earliest possible date to the commencement of this project, after it has received—I hope it will—the approval of parliament.

Throughout the years this party has taken a strong and definite stand in this regard. This is one of those things which we are including in our general development plan for expansion in our country and the equalization of opportunity. This is a project which deserves primary consideration.

We start with the maritimes and there is the province of Saskatchewan project to which I have just referred, and then there will of course be considered the great Columbia river plan in the province of British Columbia, respecting which further will be said at a later date. Today we are endeavouring to bring about a favourable settlement of the international problems that are incident to an international river in order to clear the way for a joint program so that the province of British Columbia may be able to develop this power project for the benefit, not only of the people of British Columbia but of the people of Canada as a whole.

These are but few of the major matters which will be dealt with during this session. As far as the international situation is concerned I intended to say no more at this time. Having regard to the developments that are now taking place and which have taken place in recent weeks we must not become apathetic. The international field still holds its grasp on the hearts of all mankind.

My hope is that while the disarmament program offered by the nations of the free world was turned down by the U.S.S.R., in the United Nations today there is springing up a feeling that serious reconsideration must be given, and will be given, to the whole question of disarmament. We must not allow ourselves to become frightened as a result of this moon that passes by us several times a day, but we must, each and every one of us, so dedicate ourselves to our cause that it cannot be said of us that we did not make our maximum contribution and go to the extreme limits in securing agreement consistent with our security and the maintenance of freedom.

We of Canada, realizing that we live in the tremendous peril of a surprise attack, as do our neighbours in the United States, laid before the disarmament committee—as I also did before the United Nations—Canada's willingness to render open for inspection all parts of the Arctic, providing some correlated action was taken by the U.S.S.R. That would have been a step forward and would have provided for the initiation of a more widely accepted disarmament plan. The suggestion that was advanced by those five countries composing the committee was turned down. We in Canada believe that we went to the very limit in that direction in order to make it apparent to the world and to the U.S.S.R. that we at least, having regard to our strategic position—and we were joined in this by the United States equally—have nothing to hide and that our joint purposes with the United States on this continent are peaceful and not aggressive.

I am looking forward to an opportunity for an early debate on international affairs wherein, providing the electors elect him to the House of Commons, Dr. Sidney Smith will be able to present to parliament as he is now presenting to the United Nations the policies of this country in regard to external affairs.

The Leader of the Opposition said today that in general there is no disagreement regarding external affairs. That has always been our stand. We have endeavoured to the limit of our responsibilities while in opposition so to chart our course that in the international field the nations would know that when the hon. member for Algoma East and those associated with him spoke in the United Nations they were speaking for Canada, and we have not gone back, as was so direfully predicted, in the field of international affairs. Indeed this is indicated by the fact that Canada has in the last few days been chosen a member of the security council, a new responsibility in keeping with Canada's international position.

I intend to conclude by one personal reference. Throughout the years in which I have been in public life, my course has not been directed to personalities or to building up animosities against those on the other side of the house. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned the recent change in government and remarked how it had changed so calmly, so smoothly, so unaffectedly. What he said was true. That change epitomized something of the concept of true democracy. There was no acrimony; there was simply a meeting of minds, and I speak not only for myself but also for my colleagues when I express feelings of deep regret that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, by reason of those things that come to us in life, should have found it necessary to take the course that he has.

Mr. Speaker, as one who sat on the other side of the house for a long while—so long, in fact, that my right hon. friend had finally reached the point where he is referred to by everyone as I referred to him earlier this afternoon—I extend to him on behalf of this party every good wish. That is the wish of all Canadians and with his permission I am going to go one step further, for after all it does no harm for anyone to make the admission that I am about to make. In all the years I have sat in this house I have never had cause at any time to find that my right hon. friend in anything he said to me told me other than the facts; and that is the highest tribute that can be paid to a political opponent—that in the acrimony of debate and among those things that separate us we still maintain in our system a regard for the better things of life. I regret that the right hon. gentleman has found it necessary to make the decision he has, and it is for that reason that I speak these words on this occasion from a very sincere and full heart.

Now, with regard to the other matters in the speech from the throne may I say that they will be dealt with in the course of the ensuing days. I think there is nothing further that I can say at this time except that we intend to get on with the business of the house, in no way denying in the slightest degree the fullest discharge of responsible government which consists in discussion, consideration and full examination. That is the kind of parliament that the Canadian people ask for; that is the kind of parliament that I hope the Canadian people will receive.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed on this occasion to extend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to hon. members of the Conservative party congratulations on the victory they won at the polls on June 10. I do not think that needs to be misinterpreted in any way, but I think the achievement was, in itself, something that was unexpected by most of the people of Canada.

May I say to the Prime Minister that I have known him for a good many years. I knew of his energy, I knew of his ability, and one of my thoughts during the election was that he might jeopardize his health. But when I look across at him today I find that his physical condition seems vastly improved.

I should like to add my word to those that were spoken by the Prime Minister regarding the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent). My first association with him was at the San Francisco conference in 1945 when we were both members of the Canadian delegation, and later we were together as delegates to the United Nations assembly at Lake Success. I grew to understand him and to respect him and, like the Prime Minister, I am indeed sorry that he has found it necessary because of health to tell his party that as soon as they can find a suitable successor he is prepared to resign as leader of the Liberal party.

The Prime Minister said that because we are divided in this house it does not mean that there are personal animosities or differences. Indeed during the years that the Leader of the Opposition has been with us he has earned our respect in every quarter of the house.

Yesterday I would have liked to have risen for a few moments to congratulate the former secretary of state for external affairs, the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). I was delighted when I learned that he had been so signally honoured by being awarded the Nobel prize. I got to know the hon. member for Algoma East very well at San Francisco where he was a principal advisor of our delegation and from time to time I worked with him at the United Nations. I think the award was never given more deservedly than on the occasion when it was presented to the former secretary of state for external affairs.

Yesterday, too, I listened with interest to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne and I want to congratulate both hon. gentlemen most sincerely. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) reminded me so forcibly of the fine gentleman who bore his name and for whom we all came to hold a great deal of affection. I hope that during his term in parliament, be it long or short, he too will have his wish fulfilled and when the time comes he will also leave with the good wishes and good feelings of the house as did his respected father a few years ago.

I also wish to extend to the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) my congratulations. I only wish I had the facility that he has in speaking the two official languages of this country and participating in the debate in the manner in which he did.

Of course this house today is meeting under extremely interesting circumstances. Apart altogether from the visit of Her Majesty the Queen which we have so much enjoyed, this house is different to any in which I have sat. I have been here since 1935 and this of course is the first time since I have been in this house when no party had a majority. Not since December, 1925 has a party failed to secure a majority of seats in this house.

In January 1926 the government met under somewhat similar but not analagous circumstances. At that time a small group in the house headed by the gentleman who preceded me as leader of the C.C.F., Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, held the balance of power. No party in this house can be said to hold a balance of power in that sense. I recollect that that was a very fruitful parliament. It lasted only six months but during that time our senior citizens received the first indication that this house would grant old age pension legislation and Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, then of Winnipeg North Centre, received that pledge in a letter of which we are rather proud and which we have framed in our national office.

I remember, too, it was in that session that we got the Hudson Bay railway which we in western Canada had looked forward to for many years. We also received a promise of consideration of unemployment insurance. Although it did not come into existence for 14 years we did receive the promise of consideration of it before the house dissolved in July 1926.

As I say, no party in this house today has a position analagous to that then held by Mr. Woodsworth and his friends. Nevertheless it is quite obvious from the speech from the throne that the government is anxious to secure support for legislation which has been promoted across this country, not by one party but by several parties, and, if I may say so, through the years we in this group have been particularly interested ourselves in improving the situation with respect to our senior citizens and in doing something with regard to farm prices. Under that pressure—whether it was needed or not is a question that everyone will have to decide for himself—we shall I hope get some fruitful legislation from this parliament before it dissolves.

The speech from the throne does foreshadow legislation in which we are indeed interested as a party. When this legislation comes down I do not imagine it will go quite as far as we would wish but whatever instalments are made will receive our support and the government can be assured of that.

We were pleased to find in the speech from the throne reference to increased pensions for our senior citizens with a reduction in the period for qualification. May I add one other thing? I think the residential qualification should be discontinued. If a senior citizen wishes to reside perhaps in the United Kingdom or even across the line in the United States or elsewhere, the pension should be paid as of right. I say it should be paid as of right today because all the people are paying directly for it. This is no longer a gift from the treasury as it was. Right from the time a young Canadian begins to earn he is going to pay 2 per cent of his personal income tax into the social security fund. Two per cent of the corporation tax and 2 per cent of the sales tax which everybody pays also will go into that fund. Our citizens are paying a fairly substantial premium if it is considered over the working period of life of a young man or woman today. The disqualification on account of residence outside the borders of Canada should, we think, be eliminated as well as the time for qualification reduced as is foreshadowed in the speech from the throne. It is our contention that this pension should be paid as of right.

I regret that in the realm of social security there is no mention of improvement in the national hospitalization plan in the speech from the throne. I look forward to the time when we shall have a comprehensive health plan in this country which will benefit every citizen of this country, regardless of the length of the purse, and provide the best care and treatment that medical science can make available. While we made a short step in the last parliament I should have liked to see the plan extended even if only to the extent of bringing under the hospitalization plan now on the statute books tubercular patients and patients suffering from mental disease.

I could go into other social security measures which I have in mind but I want to speak of some other matters so I must not dwell at too great length on this question. Because of the restrictions of time I am not even going to spend a great deal of time discussing the South Saskatchewan river dam project. I will only say when I was a new member of the house years ago I advocated from my seat on this side of the chamber consideration of irrigation and of a South Saskatchewan river plan. Consequently we are fully in favour of the negotiations for a firm and fair agreement with the government of Saskatchewan and the commencement of the dam at the very earliest possible date.

We are told we have to diversify agriculture and some farmers must get out of wheat production. I may have something more to say on that subject in a moment but I wish now to comment that irrigation is one way perhaps of taking areas of land out of wheat production and putting them into some other forms of agricultural production.

We in this group also welcome the outlined suggestions in the speech from the throne regarding agriculture. We agree that agricultural returns have been quite inadequate. We agree that our farmers need a proper share of the national income. We even go further than that and say the farmers' share of the national income should be based on a parity price system so that they may receive for their production returns comparable to what they have to pay to produce their crops and to live in our midst. We have been advocating this for a long time in the house and it is again encouraging to know the government intends to go some distance toward the stabilization of agricultural prices even if they do not go the whole distance we would go, in the establishment of a parity price system. I may add that this step forward will receive our support.

Of course we have long advocated advance payments on farm-stored grain. I am under no illusions; we are under no illusions; we know that this is purely a temporary step. It can only mitigate. The advance payments will help the farmer at the beginning of the new crop year, but it is not a solution to the agricultural problems, though it will provide a measure of very welcome relief. A solution can only come from increased sales, increased exports and increased returns. These are not in sight in spite of world food shortages. International agencies point out that there are continuous and increasing food shortages. The world problem is not overproduction; it is surely one of underconsumption. There is, as the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations recognizes, all over the world a problem of underconsumption.

To cut back production in wheat and transfer to cattle, hogs and other farm commodities on a large scale, as proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), struck me as being a counsel of despair. Ultimately it would merely spread the burden of surpluses around and increase the burden of those surpluses elsewhere. We should be proposing and supporting policies to expand consumption on a world-wide scale.

I am now going to interrupt this trend of thought because I want to move an amendment which I have at hand. If the house will permit me, I shall discuss this amendment when we resume this debate tomorrow. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the following words be added to the address:

This house welcomes the measures indicated in the speech from the throne and urges that these measures be placed before parliament with the least possible delay in order that the benefits proposed therein might accrue to the Canadian people at once. We respectfully submit, however, that in the opinion of this house Your Majesty's advisers should give immediate consideration to the advisability of taking steps to deal with the menace of inflation, rapidly rising unemployment and other serious problems facing this country. We call upon the government to give immediate effect to the social and economic planning necessary to cope with these problems.

You will observe we believe—and I shall develop this a little later—that we need national social and economic planning. That means, of course, that there must be some public control over our economy and some public direction given to it. I know that hon. gentlemen in various parts of the house have on occasion disagreed with this concept of national planning, but without national planning I am convinced that on a long-term basis the problems that are facing us today can neither be dealt with adequately nor can they be solved.

I would like you to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

On motion of Mr. Coldwell the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we intend to ask for interim supply, the need having been explained yesterday by the Minister of Finance. Then, if and when that is agreed to, we shall continue with the debate on the throne speech. In order that we do not lose the time from eleven o'clock to one o'clock, it is necessary that a motion be put through this afternoon. I would ask unanimous consent to revert to motions in order that I may move a motion to bring about that result.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to revert to motions?

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance:

That on Thursday next, government orders shall have precedence over all other business except the ordinary daily routine of business; the house shall meet at 11.00 a.m., and the provisions of standing order 2(1) with respect to the time of meeting shall be suspended in relation thereto.

If that motion were not moved we could not meet until 2.30 p.m. There will be time taken up in considering interim supply and I would hope that later on in the throne speech debate it would be possible to make some arrangement so that we do not lose the whole of tomorrow's time on the throne speech. In other words, if it takes us two hours on interim supply, then we would give that extra time at the conclusion of the regular 10 days.

Mr. Marler: Is that the significance of the second part of the motion?

Mr. Green: No; the motion has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk raises the question whether unanimous consent extends to the resumption of the debate on the address after the business covered by the motion, and I should like to ask the house whether I may assume that the consent does extend to that as well?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 17, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

MESSAGES FROM AND TO THE PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the members of the house I am sure will be happy to hear the gracious message received from Her Majesty by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday afternoon. The Prime Minister wired her subsequent to her departure in the following words:

As Your Majesty and Prince Philip leave Ottawa to visit the United States of America I send you, with humble duty, a message of loyalty and love from all Canadians. During this historic stay Your Majesty has strengthened in us all our pride in Canada and in Canada's Queen. It is with high hope that you will come to us soon again that I bid you au revoir. May God bless Your Majesty and Prince Philip.

And the reply from Her Majesty reads as follows:

The very kind telegram which you sent to me and to my husband reached us as our aircraft took off from Uplands. I deeply appreciate the message of loyalty which it contains. We have both enjoyed to the full our days at Ottawa and keenly look forward to our return. We send our best wishes and thanks to Mrs. Diefenbaker and yourself.

BRIDGES

ALASKA HIGHWAY—DISRUPTION OF COMMUNICATIONS OVER PEACE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of National Defence whether he can tell the house what action his department will take to replace the bridge at Peace river on the Alaska highway which yesterday, unfortunately, fell into the river and so disrupted communications to our northland.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I was advised by the commander of the northwest highway system that the north anchor and the north cable bent of the bridge on the Alaska highway over the Peace river at Taylor flats had moved some six feet during the night of the 15-16 October.

Hon. members will recall that the bridge was built in 1942 by United States army engineers during the construction of the Alaska highway. Traffic across the bridge was stopped immediately, and we are seeking suitable means to keep it moving by other routes.

The premier of British Columbia with whom I spoke yesterday afternoon offered the use of the new P.G.E. railway bridge. The feasibility of using that bridge is now being looked into. It is some miles upstream from the site and would require the construction of seven or eight miles of new roads and would also require planking; the rails of the railway have not yet been laid across the bridge. There is also a ferry at Clayhurst which is some 10 miles downstream. That is now operated day and night, and we have made arrangements to collect material nearer to the site of the Peace river bridge in the hope that a larger ferry may be operated there immediately. I have also sent Dr. P. L. Pratley, a well-known engineering consultant from Montreal, to carry out an on the site inspection and he is now flying to the Peace river.

I had further word this morning before I came into the house saying that the Peace river bridge is all down from the north abutment to the north pier including north cable bent. The remainder was intact, as at 2200 hours last night, but the north pier and tower may be slightly shifted.

Mr. Sinclair: Thank you.

PIPE LINES

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CROWN CORPORATION—WINTER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is there any provision in the contract to be let for the pipe line east of the lakehead under the aegis of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation for the clearing and rock work to be started during the late fall and winter season as a means of easing the growing unemployment problem in this area?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I would also like to welcome him to this house as a former comrade in arms in the 12th Manitoba Dragoons, and to congratulate him on his campaign last spring which was as successful in its results as his campaign in the second world war.

Inquiries of the Ministry

With regard to his question, the contracts for the new construction that will be done on the second main leg of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation line, running from, say, Port Arthur to Kapuskasing, will be let very soon. Whether or not the clearing may be done in the winter is something which will be looked into, and I thank the hon. member for drawing this to my attention. It may not be possible to do much of the rock work in the wintertime because of the very extensive blasting which is required in some of these sections, but I will have this matter investigated, and should I receive further information I will bring it to the hon. member's attention.

LIVESTOCK

REPORTED OUTBREAK OF HOG CHOLERA AT LEAMINGTON, ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret to inform the house that an outbreak of hog cholera has occurred, and I think it advisable at this time to make a statement in connection with it so that exaggerated rumours may not be circulated. The statement is as follows.

Hog cholera was identified on October 15 by clinical and post mortem findings on premises at Leamington, Ontario. Forty-five swine were involved. The premises have been placed under quarantine and the hogs were slaughtered on the same date. Payment of compensation to the owner will be made.

The swine were purchased through a community auction sale on September 26. As a precautionary measure the auction premises were placed under quarantine pending a thorough cleaning and disinfection, which has now been accomplished. All recent swine sales from the auction premises and all possible contacts with the herd are being examined for evidence of the disease. No further cases have been identified to the present. Hogs on all premises adjoining the infected farm are being treated with anti-hog cholera serum as a precautionary measure.

The last outbreak of hog cholera occurred in western Ontario during May to December, 1953. We hope that the prompt action taken to control this outbreak will be successful, and that it will be confined within a very small area.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his statement on the outbreak of hog cholera. Has any decision been made as to the basis of compensation to be paid to the owners of animals that are destroyed, and is the department or the minister giving any consideration to bring in amendments to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act setting forth the basis of compensation so we shall not have any risk of repeating the situation which occurred this spring in regard to the fantastic payments for sheep?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me right the basis for compensation as far as swine are concerned is the market value at the time of their destruction.

HOGS—INQUIRY AS TO COMPLAINTS CONCERNING GRADING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Notice has also been given in this instance. During the past eight months, has the minister or livestock division of his department received complaints respecting the grading of hogs in Alberta by federal government graders? If so, what action was taken with respect to such complaints?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for his notice in connection with this question. The answer is as follows. The only complaint with respect to the grading of hogs in Alberta received by the department during the past eight months was a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Alberta Livestock Co-Operative Limited alleging severity and inconsistency in grading and requesting that graders be rotated weekly from plant to plant. The complaint was of a general character containing no specific charges or evidence to support the general charges.

The application of national standards for hog carcasses on a uniform basis is recognized as being of prime importance and regular checks are made to achieve this objective. The rotation of graders between plants has been a recognized part of the program. They are rotated on a monthly basis, and it is not felt that more frequent rotation would add to the efficiency.

The situation was fully explained in a letter dated September 17, 1957, which I addressed to the secretary-treasurer of the Alberta Livestock Co-Operative Limited.

HIGHWAYS

FLIN FLON-HANSON LAKE—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. When the minister was out west recently, was he able to discuss with the Saskatchewan government the building of the Flin Flon-Hanson lake mining development road as a joint project? If so, does the minister expect that an agreement can be reached in time to begin construction in 1958?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mackenzie was good enough to give me notice of this question two days ago, and I have the answer to the first part of his question. Yes; there was an oral discussion with one of the members of the government of Saskatchewan on my trip west.

In answer to the part of the question dealing with construction, I think it should be made known at this time that several provinces are concerned in this general policy of the development of northern roads, and that several departments of government are also concerned. In view of the priority being given this session to the needs of the aged, the veterans and the farmers, we have been unable to move as fast as we in the department would have liked.

I may point out that in the speech from the throne it is stated that there will be announcements from time to time regarding these projects, and knowing my interest in this matter I think the hon. member can be assured that as soon as we are able to get agreement with the province of Saskatchewan and some of the other provinces an announcement will be made in this house.

ALL-RISK CROP INSURANCE LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister inform the house whether a request has been made by any of the provincial governments to the federal government for the enactment of a national all-risk crop insurance act, and if so by which provinces?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. We have had no official request from any of the provincial governments in connection with an all-risk crop insurance act. However, when the provincial ministers of agriculture met with me here on September 5 and 6 we had a good deal of discussion in connection with this particular matter, the desirability of putting some form of crop insurance into effect was spoken of by most of the provincial ministers present, and we in the department have been giving a considerable amount of study to this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the government plan to bring down legislation this session to inaugurate an all-risk crop insurance plan in conjunction with the provinces interested?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated more or less a few minutes ago what was the answer to that question. The matter is under study, and we have no definite representations from any of the provinces as far as any particular scheme or schemes are concerned.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—RELEASE OF PROPERTY FOR INDUSTRIAL USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise the house what progress is being made with respect to the release of certain waterfront property in Prince Rupert, B.C., now held by the Canadian National Railways, the request for the release of the property being made by an individual who wishes to build a manufacturing plant revolving around the lumber industry?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, such an application has not been brought to my notice. I shall inquire of my department and give an answer tomorrow.

CANALS

CHIGNECTO—INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in view of his answer on Tuesday that his department has under consideration transport and allied problems. That was in answer to a question about the Chignecto canal.

Could the minister tell me what persons are engaged in inquiring into the technical aspects of the Chignecto canal and what is the experience of these persons in determining the present day costs of a project of this kind?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious to all members of the house that this type of question should be placed on the order paper, and I would ask that this be done at the present time.

SHIPPING

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF PILOT BOAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we appear to be keeping the Minister of Transport busy this morning. My question is also addressed to him and it is this. Is the minister now prepared to release the findings of an inquiry which was held in Saint John, New Brunswick, on February 6, 7 and 8, 1957, into the sinking of pilot boat No. 1 with the loss of seven lives on January 14 last?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for his thoughtfulness in providing me with notice of his desire to ask this question. The findings of the board of investigation are now available for examination and will be made available to any interested party.

INDUSTRY

POLYMER CORPORATION—DEVELOPMENT AT RED DEER, ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, notice of which has been given. Can the minister indicate to the house whether or not Polymer Corporation intends to proceed with its original plan to establish a subsidiary near Red Deer, Alberta?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I am very glad to be able to assure him that it is the intention of the Polymer Corporation to proceed with the establishment of a subsidiary near Red Deer.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON, ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO LOAN FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take time from the opposition today, but as a supporter of the government I would like to ask a technical question of the Minister of Transport. Is the government giving consideration to the application of the Hamilton harbour commission for a loan to assist in the construction of additional harbour facilities in the third largest harbour in Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, later this session I expect to be presenting a bill to parliament asking for authorization to make a loan of $4,100,000 to the Hamilton harbour commission to assist that commission in the construction of three additional and much needed port facilities for that harbour.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about Windsor?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTORSHIPS HELD BY OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of certain information that was obtained in this house during the closing week of the last session can the minister now assure the house that there are no instances of heads of crown corporations being at the same time directors of private companies or corporations?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker, and make a statement later on in reply.

FREIGHT RATES

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR DELAY IN GRANTING PROPOSED INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) asked me a question dealing with the freight rate application now before the board of transport commissioners. In a supplementary question he said, as reported at page 35 of Hansard:

> Is it not true that the 4 per cent of that 10 per cent which was granted on September 24 will become effective unless some steps are taken by the government?

I replied to him yesterday that I was not aware that any award of 4 per cent had been made but that I would make inquiries and answer today. I am glad to assure the hon. member and the house that no award was made on September 24, but simply the hearings before the board were resumed on that date.

The case which is now proceeding before the board of transport commissioners is in continuation of an application made on May 15, 1956, for authority to increase freight rates, with some exceptions, by 15 per cent. On June 18, 1956, the board permitted an interim increase of 7 per cent and later, on December 17, 1956, allowed an 11 per cent increase in lieu of the 7 per cent.

On August 30, 1957, the railways amended their application to seek a further 10 per cent increase instead of the 4 per cent left in abeyance. It is only this matter which is now being heard and which, as I stated yesterday, will not be concluded until all parties are given an adequate opportunity of being heard. Of course I should state, as has been stated previously in this house, that the board of transport commissioners is a court of record, constituted as such by parliament. Its decisions are subject to appeal, as the Railway Act provides, but meanwhile the matter is sub judice.

Yesterday the railways completed their evidence before the board. Starting today those opposing the application will begin to present their evidence and, as I said yesterday, everyone who desires to make a presentation before the board in this case will, of course, be given adequate opportunity to do so.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister bring the house up to date as to the progress the board is making in the equalization of freight rates, so that any future increases in freight rates may be applied in an equal and equitable manner instead of the discriminatory manner in which they have been made in the past?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is a rather large subject. I will take the question as notice and deal with it tomorrow.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN RATE PAID FOR PRINTING OF VOTERS' LISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the first lady to be a member of a Canadian government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After that applause I should get a favourable reply. May I ask the Secretary of State whether the government has received representations from the typographical union concerning the failure of the late government to increase the rate for the printing of voters' lists, which resulted in it being impossible for many regularly equipped printing plants to take on this work? Is consideration being given to increasing that rate so that the next time voters' lists are printed—which might be soon, for all we know—they can be printed in plants that observe proper working conditions and trade union rates of pay?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member may I say that so far as I know no official representations have been made. It may be that the chief electoral officer has something in his office and I will be glad to inquire, but nothing has come to my desk.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—STATEMENT ON GEOLOGICAL SURVEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) asked whether there has been any change in policy by the present government in regard to the carrying out of geological surveys in the Northwest Territories. The answer is no. He then asked a supplementary question as to why it was that this summer the work of the geological survey parties in the Mackenzie river district of the Northwest Territories was stopped when only 80 per cent of the work was completed. The answer is that our geological survey parties operating in the Mackenzie river district this year completed more work due to favourable weather conditions than was originally planned. Had it been possible to divert extra funds for this purpose, some additional work could have been completed while good weather conditions existed.

NEW BRUNSWICK—STATEMENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR 1956-57

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) asked me a question relating to the number of persons registered as unemployed in New Brunswick, and particularly in the Campbellton area, both at the present time and at this time last year.

I have obtained figures from the unemployment insurance commission relating to the number of persons who have registered in the offices of the commission as of October 10 this year. The comparable day for last year is October 11, one day later. The total figures for New Brunswick are as follows:

October 10, 1957
Men registered	8,581
Women	2,620
Total	11,201
October 11, 1956
Men registered	4,445
Total	6,571

There is an increase of 4,630 in the total for the province this year. This is made up almost entirely of male workers. In the Campbellton area the local office reports the following registrations:

October 10, 1957
Men	659
Women	111
Total	770
October 11, 1956
Men	193
Total	261

The difference, Mr. Speaker, is 509 persons. In order that my hon. friend may have complete information, I shall provide a break-down by categories of employment of the registrations in the Campbellton area. Miscellaneous categories, which embrace some 95 classes of occupations, account for 324 registrations this year compared with 175 last year. Other categories are as follows:

Logging, 114 registrations this year, 18 registrations last year; construction, 146 registrations this year, 45 last year; pulp and paper, 57 registrations this year, 9 last year; longshoremen, 81 registrations this year, none last year. I should add that in Campbellton longshoremen depend for a large part of their work on activity in logging and pulp and paper operations. Truck drivers and taxi drivers, 48 registrations this year, none last year.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can she inform the house whether any amendments to the Civil Service Act are under consideration for this session? If so, would she define them as major or minor changes?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that is a question for an answer at this time. If and when changes are to be made in the act they will appear on the order paper.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO FISHERMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I have not given him notice of this question, but I notice that he has not had one directed to him and I would not want him to feel neglected. My question is this. Has the minister taken any steps to terminate the investigation into the affairs of the united fishermen and allied workers' union of British Columbia by the combines investigation branch? That is a nice easy question.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have not had notice of this question. As far as I know no action has been taken, but I will take the question as notice and give a fuller answer tomorrow.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

QUEBEC CITY—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF NEW POSTAL TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) asked me the following question:

Does the government intend to proceed, as soon as possible of course, with the construction of the new postal terminal in Quebec city?

The following is the answer. The Department of Public Works acquired a site for the new postal terminal in the city of Quebec and preparation of plans and specifications commenced. This site had the approval of the mayor and city council. Subsequently the planning board of the city of Quebec took exception to the proposed site and refused to give approval. Further discussions ensued with the city, and it was finally arranged that the city of Quebec acquire the new site and that an interchange of properties would take place between the department and the city. The site which the city of Quebec desires us to use is occupied by the Canadian National Railways station and tracks.

The understanding of the department is that negotiations continue between the city of Quebec and the Canadian National Railways. However, no progress can be made in commencing the construction of the new postal terminal until the C.N.R. property can be made available to us by the city.

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON ASKING OF QUESTIONS ON ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will permit me to say one word on the subject of oral questions before we proceed with orders of the day, I should like to give one or two references which, being put on the record, will make it more convenient for members to find authoritative statements of the practice on this rather difficult subject. At the beginning of each new parliament the Speaker has made a statement on the subject of the latitude allowed in asking oral questions of the ministers or of others.

There is no express provision for these questions but there is a practice which is more or less well defined by decisions of the past. I should like to refer to the Journals of the House of Commons, volume C of 1956 at page 299 and the following pages, where the Speaker of the last house made his own statement and collected the statements of previous Speakers for several parliaments. The principal citation or the important citation from Beauchesne's third edition is citation 297 which I will read inasmuch as it is quite short. I think it summarizes the situation:

> 297. A certain number of oral questions are permitted in practice by members, without notice, before the orders of the day are called; but these are merely allowed by courtesy in connection with the business of the house or with very urgent and important matters of public concern. They are always brief, no debate being permitted, and the replies are as concise as possible. The minister interrogated may reply at once or may direct that the usual notice be given. Such questions are governed by the same rules of order as questions of which notice has been given.

One further reference is to the Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, January 24, 1957, where a further statement on the subject is given. That may be useful, particularly to the new members of the house, in ascertaining just what is the scope of this practice, in order to save the Speaker the unpleasant necessity of endeavouring to apply these rules which I myself find are a little bit uncertain and a little bit difficult to understand.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming moved:

> Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $260,912,255.50, being one-twelfth of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, except items 52, 57, 116, 117, 131, 132, 156, 248, 281, 322, 324, 328, 333, 334, 335, 336, 355, 399 and 460, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $165,433.34, being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of items 100, 307 and 365 of the said estimates; a sum not exceeding $2,576,712.09, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 69, 306, 313, 359, 373, 389, and 518 of the said estimates; in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $1,497,738.25, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958 laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $2,138,888.89, being one-ninth of the total of the amounts of items 669 and 670 set forth in the further supplementary estimates (1) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and a sum not exceeding $125,000, being one-twelfth of the total of the amount of item 668 of the said estimates; in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $27,108,666.34, being one-third of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the further supplementary estimates (2) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; a sum not exceeding $280,974.17, being seven-twelfths of the total of the amounts of items 754 and 759 of the said estimates; and a sum not exceeding $10,416,666.67, being one-third of the amount of item 692 of the said estimates, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958.

He said: Mr. Chairman, I think I speak for all members of this committee in extending to you in your first appearance in the chair our hearty congratulations and good wishes for a happy and successful discharge of the duties of your very important office. To those of us who knew you and were your associates in the twenty-second parliament it is a pleasure indeed to welcome you back to membership in this chamber. We know you will discharge the duties that have devolved upon you as chairman of the committees of the whole house with equity and good judgment.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first occasion on which this new House of Commons has been called upon to deal with the matter of supply, and as a vote of interim supply is not a matter which is always easily understood, I shall with the indulgence of the members of the committee who have been here in the past, say a brief word on the subject in the hope that it may clarify for the newer members of the committee precisely what we are doing at this time. The situation with respect to the vote of interim supply at this new session of the new parliament is more complicated than usual and, if the hon. members will bear with me, I should like to explain it as best I can.

We are asking the committee today to approve a vote of a total sum of $305,222,335.25 as interim supply, and we wish to do that on the basis of retaining to the committee the fullest measure of control over the voting of supply. The estimates of expenditure are normally prepared in the fall of the year and are tabled in the house early in the normal session, let us say the month of January. Then as the session proceeds, because the estimates are already then three or four months past the date on which they were prepared in the departments and reviewed by treasury board, it becomes necessary for the Minister of Finance from time to time on behalf of the government to introduce supplementary estimates, then sometimes later in the year further supplementary estimates and, indeed, on some occasions a second group of further supplementary estimates. The main estimates are introduced normally prior to the commencement of the fiscal year to which they apply; in other words, let us say in a normal session in the month of January, for the fiscal year which will commence on the following April 1.

Before April 1 comes the estimates for the previous year and all its further supplementary estimates, of course, have had to be voted; then the government will begin a new fiscal year on April 1, without normally having made any provision for the supply for that ensuing year. Consequently as the voting of supply occupies a good deal of the time of the committee, it is necessary for the government to ask for votes of interim supply to meet the expenses of government until the time comes when the committee has completed its review and has voted all the items in the estimates. Often that is not done until the month of July or August, that is to say the completion of that voting. Consequently it is not unusual for the committee to be asked to vote interim supply in the spring of the year on several different occasions, usually one month at a time. The purpose of confining votes of interim supply to one month at a time is to ensure to the committee the preservation of control over public expenditure, control over the public purse being one of the principal functions of the House of Commons.

This year, as I have said, the situation is somewhat more complicated than usual. Prior to the dissolution of the twenty-second parliament the former government had, in the ordinary course, introduced the estimates for the year. Then at a later stage of the session it introduced supplementary estimates and later, prior to dissolution, it introduced further supplementary estimates. Two days ago I reintroduced those same estimates on the terms which I stated at that time, and with those introduced another group of estimates which are called further supplementary estimates No. 2. So now the committee has before it four groups of estimates, the main estimates, the supplementary estimates, further supplemenary estimates No. 1 and further supplementary estimates No. 2.

At the earlier session this year, that is to say the last session of the twenty-second parliament, some of those estimates had been passed, the estimates of the Post Office Department and several other items drawn from other places; but those were the only estimates in the main and supplementary estimates which had been approved in full. What the government has been functioning on—both the former government up to June 21 and the new government since that date —was a vote of interim supply which was granted by the twenty-second parliament prior to dissolution.

Actually at the earlier session this year five appropriation bills were passed. The first two related to estimates for the fiscal year which ended March 31 last, and three appropriation bills were passed with respect to the estimates for the current fiscal year 1957-1958. The first of those appropriation bills provided one month's interim supply, intended to be for the month of April. The second bill provided a vote of six months' interim supply, intending to carry the government through to October 31. There was a third appropriation bill passed which was designed to carry into legislative effect the approval given by the house to those estimates —all the items of the Post Office Department and some of several other departments— which had been finally passed.

It may seem an extraordinary situation that now, after nearly seven months of the fiscal year have passed, we should be asking for a further vote of interim supply before the main estimates have been adopted, but the situation was inevitable in view of the fact that the government, by reason of legislation passed at the spring session of parliament, has been carrying on merely on a vote of interim supply.

It is recognized by the government that control by the House of Commons over public expenditure is difficult in this situation because of the fact that when this new house is dealing with the vote which it is now being asked to deal with, and when it comes to deal with the whole range of estimates in final form, those amounts provided for in the estimates have been substantially spent already. That is the situation which confronted the new government as well as the new parliament; the programs involved in these estimates are, naturally, substantially advanced already, and the new government, like the new parliament—I emphasize this—lacked a free hand with respect to the programs involved in many of the items.

I mentioned that the votes of the last session of the old parliament earlier this year were intended to provide the government with supply until October 31, the conclusion of the seventh month of the fiscal year, but as it turns out they will not be adequate for this purpose. Unless the house authorizes a further vote of interim supply now there will not be sufficient money available to meet the expenses of government which would normally be payable on October 31. The reason for that arises from the fact that increases in the salaries of the civil servants, the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were brought into effect by a decision of this government as from May 1, and because those increases have been paid in this intervening period there is now not sufficient money to meet the expenditures of government which will normally fall due on October 31.

May I say also—and this may sound very pedantic and didactic to hon. members who have sat in this house previously—that the government meets its bills twice a month, on the 15th and on the last day of each month. We had enough to meet the expenditures which fell due on the 15th, but we now do not have enough to meet the expenditures which will fall due on the 31st of this month.

It is not possible for this government to defer until the end of the month this request for interim supply because, as members of previous parliaments are so well aware, the cheques have to be made up somewhat in advance; they go to distant places and have to be sent out at least several days before the due date of the payment. In addition, the measure which the government is asking the house to approve today must then go to the Senate. It is hoped to have the measure before the Senate when it reconvenes on Tuesday, and that the measure may be quickly given royal assent so the cheques may be made up and sent out in time to reach the recipients by the end of the month.

I wish to say a word about the manner in which the bewildering series of figures and calculations that were read out by you, Mr. Chairman, in the resolution were arrived at. We are asking, broadly speaking, for a sufficient vote to meet the expenses of government until the end of November. Broadly speaking this is one month's vote, but there are some instances, for example in some of the items, which were introduced early in the fiscal year or prior to the commencement of the fiscal year, which relate to programs which have not simply proceeded on an even basis throughout the whole 12 months of the fiscal year. For instance, some items appertaining to construction, which proceeds more rapidly during the months when it is possible to carry on building under fair weather conditions, fall into this category. Then with regard to the third group of estimates, the so-called further supplementary estimates, some of those involve increases in social security payments which came into effect on July 1. Therefore they apply only to nine months of the fiscal year. One month's vote on account of these items would necessarily be one-ninth of the total of those items rather than one-twelfth, which would be the case with regard to those which were intended to have effect from April 1.

Then with regard to the fourth group of estimates which I tabled two days ago—the further supplementary estimates (2)—those were, broadly speaking, intended to have effect for approximately six months of the fiscal year running from October 1. Therefore to provide sums with respect to those items sufficient to meet the expenditures to November 30 it is necessary to ask for one-third of those items.

In general, however, the pattern is a request for one month's vote and one month's vote only. Those items that I have mentioned particularly are exceptional for the reasons I have indicated. In no case, even though a program is completed or virtually completed, is the government asking for a vote of the entire item. Some of the construction items, for instance, have been completed in full but in every case we are reserving at least one-twelfth of the total in order that the house may have full opportunity of debate, discussion and questioning of the government on such items before it is asked to give final approval to them.

We intend to be jealous to preserve the rights of the house with respect to the control of public expenditure. I assure the committee that it is not, by the measure to be introduced today, being asked to give final and complete approval to any item. In this respect I would remind the committee that there were a few items which were finally approved by the old parliament. Those, of course, are law today and they will not be reopened. But with respect to all the other items the house is not being asked to give final approval to the total amount involved in any item; and in keeping with the time-honoured practice I assure the committee that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item of the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and an undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and not curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

May I now, sir, again ask the indulgence of hon. members who have sat in previous parliaments. I think it is only fair to the newer members of the house to say a word about the somewhat complicated procedure involved today. Speaking from my personal experience of 12 years ago I can say that the procedure followed with regard to a vote of interim supply can be very bewildering to a new member. In saying a word about this, and in saying what I have said today, which I realize may sound very pedantic to hon. members who have sat here before, I am, I hope, fulfilling on this occasion the undertaking that was given in the speech read by Her Majesty three days ago, namely, that her ministers will take steps to make both houses of this parliament more effective in the discharge of their responsibilities to the people of Canada. It is for this reason that I have trespassed upon the patience of the committee today in the hope of assisting the new members to understand precisely what the house is being asked to do.

We are now in committee of supply, which is one of the three committees of the whole house; and if the committee approves the resolution which is now under discussion the committee of supply will report that resolution to the house, at which time the house will be asked to give it two readings and concur in it. Then I shall offer to the house a motion that the house resolve itself into committee of ways and means and then, if that motion is adopted, in the committee of ways and means I shall move the adoption of a shorter but somewhat similar resolution to grant to Her Majesty the sums set out in the interim supply bill.

If that resolution is reported back to the house by the committee of ways and means and read the second time and concurred in there, I shall then move for leave to introduce the bill, and if that motion is approved the bill will be read a first and second time and then we shall go into committee of the whole on the bill. If after having been reviewed by the committee of the whole the bill is then reported back to the house, the house will be asked to give me leave to move third reading of the bill in order that it may be passed today.

I emphasize all those stages in the procedure by way of stressing the importance attached to the voting of supply and the various safeguards that are provided by the rules of the house for assuring to the elected representatives of the people sitting here in the House of Commons the control over the voting of supply.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, my first words, too, sir, must be of congratulation to you in your occupancy of the high office of Deputy Speaker and chairman of committees in this House of Commons. I join with the Minister of Finance in felicitating you, and I am sure that because of your previous experience in this house you will fill your office with decorum and dignity.

I must start, too, by expressing my own personal pleasure at again taking part in financial debates in this house. During the last five years I have not spoken very often in this house and when I did speak it was on fisheries matters; but hon. members who were here in the twenty-first parliament will recall that at that time I had a junior post in the ministry as assistant to the minister of finance and took quite an active part in debates at that time. My hon. friend the new Minister of Finance, of course, also had a junior role at that time, since he was assistant to the chief financial critic, the hon. member for Greenwood.

Our roles are now reversed. We have both gained in seniority but now my friend the hon. member for Eglinton is Minister of Finance and my leader has honoured me by asking me to be the first financial critic of the official opposition. The minister, of course, now has the advantage of the very great resources of the Department of Finance behind him and an extremely capable and efficient staff, one which I think is the envy of the world in terms of financial matters; and I hope he makes good use of that staff, better use than he made of it at Mont Tremblant.

I have a very different advantage in my new role. Hon. members may recall the lamentation of the prophet Job, "Oh that mine adversary had written a book". Well, mine adversary has not written a book. After all, writing a book does imply some thought and consideration, forethought, afterthought and study. My adversary has done much more. He has filled many books, many volumes of Hansard with a torrent of words, speeches on every conceivable subject as he hurled gratuitous advice to every corner of the house and there was no thought, or certainly little thought, and no revision of what he put in those books.

Since I have assumed the post of financial critic I have been studying these old speeches of the Minister of Finance. Hon. members who were here at the time he made them will recall how hard it was to sit and listen to his flood of words. I can assure you it is a much more appalling task to sit in the library and plunge through the jungle of his excess verbiage, his gross hyperbole, his endless repetition as he pontificated and cascaded advice on every subject to the members of this house. However, I am persevering in this task and summarizing these speeches so that as these financial debates unroll I can show the great difference between the policies preached by the hon. member for Eglinton in his role of opposition critic and the policies practised by the hon. member for Eglinton in his new role as Minister of Finance, and I intend to give some examples in this first financial debate, the granting of interim supply.

The minister has made a clear explanation to the house of the purpose of voting interim supply. It is normally just a routine matter and the necessity arises when parliament has not approved the estimates at the beginning of the new fiscal year and current expenditures have to be met. He has pointed out that because of the election we have already voted seven-twelfths of most of the estimates and even more of some items, without prejudice to our right of detailed examination, to cover the period between April 1, 1957 and October 31, 1957. However, let me tell this committee that the present motion for interim supply is certainly not a routine matter. It is without question the most extraordinary motion in this field ever presented to a parliament of Canada.

In the brief time at my disposal since the minister made his announcement yesterday I have been in the library trying to see if there is a precedent for this course, and I could find none back to 1867. The motion was presented in such a fashion that I was unable to find any precedent since confederation. I did, however, find an earlier precedent by another Tory government of 125 years ago, the family compact. Hon. members will recall the committee of grievance led by William Lyon MacKenzie which presented a petition to Queen Victoria protesting that that government did not inform members of the assembly of the purposes for which the money was requested, nor did they give an accurate account of how these moneys were spent after appropriation by the assembly. It was these grievances in part which led to the uprising of 1837 and then to subsequent parliamentary reforms.

It is because of this action that since 1867 we in this parliament of Canada have followed the practice that only the government can initiate the expenditure of public funds, that a detailed account of the purpose for which the money is requested must be submitted to parliament well in advance of the money being voted, and that an independent audit of the expenditure of these funds after appropriation be made by the servant of parliament, the Auditor General of Canada.

In following this accepted constitutional practice of responsible government the Governor General last Tuesday sent us a message signed by his own hand in which he recommended certain estimates for the consideration of this house. Perhaps I should remind hon. members of exactly what was said. The Governor General's message can be found in volume II of Votes and Proceedings in these words:

> The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending on 31st March, 1958, and, in accordance with the provisions of The British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

However, when the Minister of Finance tabled the estimates in the house he did not stand behind them in the constitutional practice of responsible government. He differed from the message of the Governor General and said the government did not intend to support all the estimates he was then submitting. He did not tell us what items in the books the government was not supporting, despite the Governor General's recommendation to this house, leaving the members of this chamber in the dark as to what items have or have not received the present government's support. In other words we are asked to vote public money blindly just as in the days of the family compact. His justification for this most unusual course is that it would save work and money to table the estimates of the previous government, and he mentioned $20,000 as the cost of printing new estimates.

Apparently parliamentary rights now have a price tag, and $20,000 is too high a price to permit the members of this free parliament to have accurate information before they are asked to vote over $300 million of the taxpayers' money in a single day.

I can assure hon. members, though, that even this figure of $20,000 is sheer poppycock. Everyone in this house will grant that the new government is under absolutely no obligation to support any or all of the proposals in the estimates tabled by the previous government. All that is needed is for the minister to submit the old book of estimates with a printed or mimeographed supplement listing by numbers the items he does not propose to put forward or the items he proposes to reduce. He surely must have such a list, and parliament is certainly entitled to this information. The cost of preparing such a mimeographed supplement would not be $20,000 but only a few dollars.

Yesterday, you know, we received our customary lecture or sermon from the Prime Minister on the rights of parliament, and today we find the Minister of Finance brazenly ignoring those rights. He violates the constitutional position of responsible government that the government stands behind all the printed estimates recommended by the Governor General for the consideration of parliament. He affronts the rights of members by blandly telling us that there are unknown items he is not supporting but about which we have no information. What a contrast here between his preaching and his practice.

There is a second criticism I have of the form of these estimates. We who were in earlier parliaments can remember the financial critic of the official opposition of that day, the hon. member for Greenwood, who is now a minister without portfolio, quoting with great support a British chancellor, I think Philip Snowden, to the effect that a chancellor who took one penny more in appropriations than he really needed—

Mr. Macdonnell: Half a crown.

Mr. Sinclair: I am talking about millions of dollars here. One penny or half a crown; I am glad to find the quotation is approximately right, that a chancellor who took one-half crown more in appropriations than he really needed was guilty of barefaced robbery of the taxpayers. Well, that is in effect what we have been asked to do today. The Minister of Finance is asking us to vote one-twelfth of the general estimates which were submitted by the last government, but he admits that there are amounts in these estimates he will not use; so in effect he is mulcting the taxpayers of unnecessary funds, the type of robbery that the hon. member for Greenwood used to deplore.

There is another aspect to this. The Financial Administration Act, which is the key act governing the finances of this parliament, an act which I piloted through this house when I was parliamentary assistant, does provide that within a department money can be transferred from one item, if it is not used, to another item subject, of course, to the approval of the treasury board. In effect the minister can now, since we are giving blanket approval to these estimates which are not to be used, later transfer these moneys and add them to the amount of the estimates which he is going ahead with, thus inflating the estimates that we are actually assenting to at this time.

I have a third criticism of a different nature. Hon. members will also recall a speech made by the then leader of the Conservative party, Hon. George Drew, in Saskatoon in 1952, when he told his audience that he and his party knew that at least $500 million could be stripped out of the estimates of the then government without affecting in any way the essential services of government. Hon. members will recall that when Mr. Drew returned to this house the minister of finance first and myself secondly implored him to give parliament the details of those $500 million savings he could so readily effect so that we could strip them off the estimates and thus save the taxpayers that money, but he resolutely refused to give any detail. Nevertheless, Tory speakers on every husting in the country thundered away at the fact that they could strip $500 million off these estimates without affecting essential public services.

Well, today is the first opportunity for the new Minister of Finance to convert his preaching into practice. If he was sincere in his claim that $500 million could be stripped out of these estimates—that, is 9 per cent of the gross estimates—then this is the time for him to show it. Instead of asking for one-twelfth of these estimates to cover one whole month, he should be asking for one-twelfth less 9 per cent, one-twelfth less $27 million, and show that he is practising what he was so loudly preaching just some few months ago. Does he do that? Oh, no; he does quite the contrary. Instead of stripping 9 per cent off these estimates we find ourselves confronted with additional estimates, with his entire blessing, totalling an extra $80 million of the taxpayers' money. What a contrast again between his preaching and his practising.

What position does the official opposition take to this most unusual request for interim supply, a request which clearly violates every constitutional principle of this parliament in the voting of money? If we in the official opposition thought this affront to the parliamentary rights by the Minister of Finance was wilfully done, then we would hold up the supply until he had properly supplied this committee with a detailed list of the items which he and his colleagues were supporting in responsible fashion, as was indicated by the message from the Governor General. However, since he is just a beginner at his new job, we want to be charitable, and so we believe that he did not do it wilfully but did it through sheer ignorance, through failing to do his homework, through failing to take advice from the very competent and capable advisers in his own department. In these circumstances we merely ask that some time during the course of the day he stand up and read to the House of Commons the list of items in this blue book that he does not intend to support, that he is either going to delete or reduce. In that way we members can properly discharge our responsibilities in voting the taxpayers' money for supply.

In addition, I would request him to ask his colleagues in the government to stay in the house today so our members can secure information from them on the various items they are now going to bring forward in this committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like at the outset to join with the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Coast-Capilano in extending to you on behalf of this group our sincere congratulations on your appointment as chairman of committees of the whole house and as Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons.

I should like also, in my opening remarks, to say that in our view the comments just made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano cannot be regarded as captious criticism but rather that his points are well taken. The only thing that amazes me about the position of the Liberal party is that their members knew on Tuesday of this week that the Minister of Finance was overlooking the constitutional provision regarding the voting of money, yet yesterday the leader of the Liberal party stood in his place in this house and said that no matter what happened they would not at this time vote non-confidence in the government across the way. We have listened to a speech this morning with every word of which I agree, but I suggest it is a speech that raises a serious question with respect to whether the house should repose confidence in the government sitting on the other side of the house.

While the hon. member for Coast-Capilano was speaking I was reminded of the last time we had a Conservative government in Canada. One of the various phrases that will be remembered in relation to that last government are the words "blank cheque". We all recall how Mr. Bennett sought from the House of Commons in the early thirties what was known as blank cheque legislation. Well, the Minister of Finance is not asking today for a blank cheque, but he certainly is asking for an inflated cheque. He certainly is asking us to vote today a sum of money which according to his own words of Tuesday, if we are to take them at their face value, is greater than the government intends to spend.

I share to the full the sense of amazement expressed by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano at the action of the government in having the Minister of Finance present a message from His Excellency the Governor General and then say that the government does not necessarily stand by the estimates which have been tabled in the house. I hope that serious consideration will be given by the Minister of Finance to the criticisms he is now receiving from this side of the house. I think the point made by the last speaker toward the conclusion of his remarks is well taken, namely that the Minister of Finance should tell us today, before he asks us to pass this legislation, what are the items in the main, supplementary and other estimates which the government does not intend to support or which it intends to ask the house to reduce. I certainly will not be satisfied with just a general statement which seems to give the impression that the government is out for economy unless the minister backs up that statement with chapter and verse.

I want to support as well the suggestion made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that the Minister of Finance ask his colleagues in the cabinet to remain in the house so they can answer questions that may be put to them on the various departments. That, I may say to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, will be a refreshing change. We had considerable difficulty in the last parliament in getting the then minister of finance, whose presence we miss in the house, to get his colleagues to remain in the house. He chose rather to pilot through all interim supply and sometimes supplementary estimates as well. The slogan just prior to the 10th of June was that it was time for a change. I hope that we will at least have a change in that practice and that we can get our questions answered not just by a know it all minister of finance but by the ministers in charge of the various departments. If what I have said sounds like "a plague on both your houses", that is what it is intended to be.

There are certain aspects of the resolution, Mr. Chairman, which interest us particularly. I think it is unfortunate that a lengthy resolution of this kind is presented to the committee of supply and read by the chairman with most members not having it before them or knowing what it is all about. I suppose there are half a dozen typewritten copies of the resolution which were placed on the desks of certain members and I am one of the fortunate few to have received one, but there is no reason why I should have it and not those in the back rows. I feel that a way should be found for this resolution to be printed in advance so that all members can have it and see what it is on which we are voting.

As I look over this complicated resolution, which in typescript takes a full, legal size sheet of paper, with seven or eight paragraphs and figures galore, I find certain items omitted. First may I point out that so far as the main estimates are concerned we are being asked to vote one-twelfth of all of them except those, and they are numbered, concerning which previous votes have brought the total amount released to eleven-twelfths or more. I interpose that there is no suggestion that any items are being excepted from the main estimates today because they are the ones the government does not intend to support.

When we get to the supplementary estimates, and particularly to the document entitled "Further Supplementary Estimates (1)", I note that the Minister of Finance is seeking further votes of those estimates only with respect to items 668, 669 and 670. By this motion today he is not seeking any further vote with respect to items 663 to 667 inclusive. I hope he will make an explanation to us today as to why no further vote is being sought with respect to those items.

Mr. Fleming: I would be glad to do that at this very minute if my friend will permit. The reason is very simple. Those items to which my friend makes reference in the further supplementary estimates, No. 1, require no further vote. They are in effect because the item in the appropriation bill actually effected an amendment of the statutes in question. That applies to statutes like the Old Age Pensions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act and so on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Sections 10 and 11 of Bill 418.

Mr. Fleming: The appropriation bill has actually effected the amendment of those statutes. Therefore nothing further is required with respect to those items in the further supplementary estimates No. 1. But with regard to the other three my hon. friend has just mentioned and which are included within the scope of the resolution now under discussion, those are not statutory items. I looked into this matter. I asked the same question as the hon. member has asked: Why was there a difference with respect to those items affecting veterans allowances? The answer I was given was that those are not statutory items, and therefore require this vote today.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the answer the minister has given. Perhaps before I reply to it I might put on the record just what it is we are talking about. Items 663 to 667, to which I referred a moment ago, provided for increases in family allowances, old age security, old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons allowances. But when these items were put through at the session in April they were put through by the supplementary estimates to the extent of two-sevenths in the case of the family allowance dollar increase and by four-ninths in the case of the other increases. The family allowance increase was to take place on September 1. That meant there were seven months left in the fiscal year, so two-sevenths was the provision for it to be continued for two months, September and October.

In the case of old age pension and other increases they were to be effective on July 1, which meant there were nine months left in the fiscal year so that four-ninths made provision for July, August, September and October. In the case of the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act the provision was from July 1, and again four-ninths was provided, and I would point out that the wording of item 664, for example, is exactly the same as the wording of item 669, to provide, effective on a certain date, that a certain act is amended.

I bow to the wisdom of the officials who have advised the minister but I find it difficult to do so. It looks to me as though if in one case the act was actually amended by what was done with respect to the supplementary estimate, it should have been so in the other case. On the other hand, I put it this way. If it is necessary by a further vote to continue the increase in the case of the war veterans allowance, it would seem to me that it would be necessary to continue the increase in the case of old age pensions, family allowances and so on. But if the minister can assure us that the law officers of the crown are clear on this point that there is no question as to any lapse in the increase, that is fine; but it is fine only as far as it goes. It seems to me that now is the time for the Minister of Finance to tell us what are the government's intentions with respect to these increases in the old age pension and other benefits.

Today we are being asked to approve the general financial program of the previous government. We are being asked to approve it with secret modifications that we have not yet been told about, but in general we are being asked to approve what the previous government proposed, which included old age pensions of $46 a month, that miserable sum which the Liberals will now admit was part of the reason for their downfall. But during the election campaign the present Prime Minister promised that if he and his party were elected they would call parliament in September, and would deal immediately with the question of the plight of the old age pensioners and see that the amount of the pension was raised in keeping with today's cost of living. The country had considerable difficulty in getting out of the Prime Minister a precise figure as to what the Conservatives would do with regard to old age pensions, but in this house and in other places he used the figure of $60 favourably. In any case, whatever the amount was to be, we were promised a session in September and immediate attention to the plight of our old age pensioners.

Here we are in October, not September. We have the promise in the speech from the throne, and we in this party welcome it wholeheartedly. But despite that fact I was unable to get from the Minister of National Health and Welfare the other day any indication as to when whatever increases are in store would be effective. Now today we are dealing with these estimates, on the basis of which we are determining the moneys that are going to be paid out by this new government in the month of November, and we are still not being told what the old age pensioners are going to get. Is the pension going to be back at $40 by virtue of our not voting on the supplementary estimate, or is it going to be continued at the level of $46, or is it going to be raised to a new figure?

When he spoke yesterday the Prime Minister more or less dared anyone in this house to suggest that parliament should have been called earlier in view of the fact that arrangements had been made for Her Majesty to be here on October 14. Important and historic as was the occasion in the Senate chamber on October 14, I suggest that it would have been even more historic and even more memorable if Her Majesty had been given an opportunity on that occasion to give royal assent in person to a bill increasing old age pensions and other benefits. That is a bill which would have been passed readily by this House of Commons, if this Prime Minister, who said over and over again that he would keep faith with the people of Canada, had kept his promise and called us here in September to deal with this important issue.

I call on the Minister of Finance, in the course of this discussion today, to do what he and his colleagues told the previous government to do time and time again, namely—take the house into his confidence, tell us what his plans are and what they mean by keeping faith. I call on him to tell us what he himself meant when, shortly after he became Minister of Finance, he announced that there would be a budget this fall and that there would be an increase in the old age pension. In fact I hope he will now answer the telegram which I sent to him at that time congratulating him on his announcement and expressing the hope that he would spell out what he meant by an increase in the old age pension. I have before me a copy of the telegram. It was taken note of by certain newspapers but as yet I have not had a reply from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming: You will get your reply in the constitutional manner.

Mr. Pickersgill: The usual courtesy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The constitutional manner—those words perhaps should be put in quotation marks—of the Minister of Finance is somewhat open to question in view of his action this week in presenting the estimates and telling us that he does not necessarily stand behind the recommendation of the Governor General.

I think we should also have a clear-cut statement on the family allowance question, as to whether any changes are planned there. As a matter of fact, if the minister has any memorandum from the law officers or officials with regard to this difference between old age security and family allowances on the one hand and war veterans allowances on the other, I think he should give it to us. Assuming that nothing has to be done with regard to old age security and so on, I point out that the fact that we have before us a proposal to continue war veterans allowances at the rate now in effect for another month means that the fulfillment of the promise to increase the rate to war veterans who are burnt-out pensioners is now being postponed.

One of the bitterest criticisms made by the Tories in the last parliament was that the government of that day had not increased the allowance to single veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Yet we are now being asked to support a motion one section of which continues for another month the rates as put into effect by the late government, which included no increase in the amounts to single veterans.

In my view that is not keeping faith. It may be fine that these things will be done eventually, but in the meantime the senior citizens of this country die at the rate of 5,000 a month and our war veterans pass on steadily. These people who hoped that as a result of the change in government on June 10 we would have a government that would keep faith, are wondering when these things are going to happen.

Mr. Chairman, I make it crystal clear that we welcome everything of a legislative character that the government has proposed. We want to see these things put into effect. I was glad that yesterday the Prime Minister suggested that there could be an interruption in the debate on the address—and we will agree to it—in order to put through some of this legislation. But this practice should apply not only to cash advances on farm-stored grain; it should apply particularly to these social security measures and to improvements for the war veterans of this country.

I may have something more to say later on this question of superannuated civil servants. Perhaps I might as well do it right now if I still have left any of my 30 minutes. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that, with the Prime Minister absent today, the person immediately to his left is the Minister of Public Works whom we have known so long as the active and aggressive member for Vancouver-Quadra; and I pay my respects to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, now Minister of Public Works, for the support he has given across the years to the demand for an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants, particularly those in the lower and middle brackets. Yet, Mr. Chairman, despite the hope we had that these people who took that position when in opposition would do something about it when in office, the answer that my friend the hon. member for Fort William received from the Minister of Finance the other day was such that I do not know why the hon. member said "thank you".

Mr. Fleming: Because he is a gentleman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The answer was as inconclusive and as unhelpful as answers given in the past by Mr. Harris, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Ilsley. If the people of Canada voted for a change, let us have more of a change than we have had indicated in the house this week, and particularly let us have it in the field of these social benefits.

I call upon the Minister of Finance to answer the criticisms that have been made today by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, in which I join, concerning the constitutional provisions about government support of estimates placed before the house. I also call upon him, before he expects us to approve of continuing all the former government's fiscal and expenditure policies for one more month, to tell us precisely what are the government's plans with respect to old age pensions, war veterans allowances and these other social security measures. What are the changes the government proposes; when are they coming into effect; and if they are not coming into effect soon, let him tell us why. The Prime Minister promised to call a session in September to do these things but, to the extent that he failed to do so, he has already broken faith with the people of Canada.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, rising for the first time in this chamber I should like to pay a brief but deeply felt tribute. I must confess that whenever I hear a reference to the member for Vancouver-Kingsway, I instinctively still think of Angus MacInnis, who from 1930 to 1957 I am sure earned respect and affection in all quarters of the house. I think all hon. members will be glad to know that Mr. MacInnis is enjoying a well-earned retirement in Vancouver, which is that part of the country most richly endowed by nature and climate for good and healthy living.

Mr. Chairman, before the committee grants the interim supply requested by the minister I think we should be satisfied that something is being done about the unemployment situation on the west coast, particularly in the lumber industry. These things in my opinion should be dealt with before they reach crisis proportions. In the lumber industry, upon which British Columbia depends for perhaps 40 per cent of its payrolls, we do have an unemployment crisis developing. The production of logs from the forests of British Columbia is down about 50 per cent from what it was in October of last year. Sawmills are cutting lumber at about 25 per cent below capacity. The same is true in plywood, with layoffs for some mill workers and short time for others. These are people with families to look after. Even in the case of pulp and newsprint there is oversupply, something we have not seen in British Columbia since the end of the war.

Who knows but that this situation may not very well worsen in the winter months ahead unless something effective is done. Now, I appreciate that the government may not accept the necessity of economic planning for full employment, as advocated in this quarter of the committee. However, I think there is one thing they can and should do, and not delay it any further. I refer to the establishment of an embassy and a trade commission in communist China, with the necessary diplomatic recognition. I heard, as we all did, Conservative speakers in the last election campaign say how much this new government would do to expand trade with China. But how can you expand trade if you are not even willing to go as far as extending diplomatic recognition? I say it cannot be done.

I do not need to say to this committee that recognition does not imply approval. Of course it does not. No one could approve of the violence and dictatorial methods which have been part of the Chinese revolution, but at the same time I think no one should be surprised that violence and brutality have followed in the wake of such a shattering social upheaval. The fact is, however, that a new China does exist and we have to live with it. One cannot escape the facts of life and, in the atomic age, it would be very dangerous indeed to try to escape the facts of history. The old order in China will certainly never return, whatever new ideas or institutions may be thrown up before the Chinese revolution runs its full course. The moving hand of history writes and, always, moves on, never backwards.

My recollection, Mr. Chairman, is that in the last year, 1956, communist China sold to us about $5 million worth of goods. Canada, on the other hand, sold only $1 million worth to China. So they had a favourable trade credit in Canadian dollars in that year of about $4 million. I think in 1955 the Chinese credit vis-a-vis Canada was $3 million. That is not much in the total trade picture, but I do suggest that a beginning has to be made, particularly having regard to the need for a share in the market of 600 million people for Canadian wheat as well as Canadian lumber.

A beginning has to be made and the question of diplomatic recognition must be faced. My recollection is that Hon. Sidney Smith, when asked about this question by the press, replied that the matter was under study. Well, there are some times when study is a very poor substitute for decision, and this is one of them. The facts are in, and have been in for a long time. This is a time when the necessary first step—the inescapable first step—of recognition should be taken.

I hope this government will not tamely follow the policy of long delays in acting on this question which was adopted by the last government. If they do that, if they tamely follow that policy, the people of Canada will find that they have had a change without a difference. I would ask the new government whether it is not avoidable that Canada should always be bound to the chariot wheels of United States foreign policy. I would remind them that Britain took the lead in this matter some years ago, and that surely there are times when Canada can give a lead which is as much in the interests of our American friends as it is in our own interests. I do not see the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the committee—

Mr. Churchill: I am here; go ahead.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Before the supply is voted I would like either the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Acting Prime Minister to indicate clearly to this committee whether they will not, in view of the trade and peace considerations, take the necessary first step in extending diplomatic recognition to communist China. It should not be said that we are leaving the 600 million people of China without any voice or influence from Canada. It should not be said that China has no place to turn in the western world but that its only place to turn is to Soviet Russia. I therefore hope the government, through its appropriate spokemen, will satisfy the committee as to this question and the trade question, which matters of course are closely related.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to congratulate you, sir, upon your election to the office of chairman of committees and Deputy Speaker and to express, with others, the confidence we have in you and your ability to handle these very important duties fairly and justly.

I listened very carefully to the statement that was made by the Minister of Finance. I thought he made a very lucid explanation of the reason for the interim supply, perhaps the best I have heard at any time since I have been a member of the house. It certainly did provide for the new members, and perhaps a good many of the older ones who have not yet been fully immersed in financial affairs, the kind of explanation they require to be able to understand the complicated system that is used.

I could not help feeling as the Minister of Finance spoke and gave us his explanation that part of the complication which he had to face when he took over his new office was inherited from the old government. They certainly left things in a mell of a hess, if I can say that, in so far as the estimates were concerned with which we were struggling last spring.

That may perhaps offer some explanation for the items which have been criticized.

I cannot go along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at all in demanding that at this time the specific details of the government's legislative program be revealed. It is not customary for any government to do that before the bills are brought down. We all wish to know as early as possible how much the old age pensioners are going to get. I would like to know that right now, and so would the old age pensioners, but it seems to me the thing to do would be to grant this interim supply measure as quickly as possible so we can have the bills brought here, and then give the government whatever advice and counsel we are capable of giving with regard to those bills. We want to get those bills here quickly, and while many of us would like very much to be the first to draw from the government the details regarding the amounts to be paid and the times when such amounts are to be paid, we quite realize that that is not customary, and we are prepared to do everything we can to facilitate the passing of other business in order to get the bills here as quickly as possible. We are as interested in war veterans and others as are members of the C.C.F. party, and I daresay the government can say the same thing.

There is one criticism that was made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano with which I think we must all agree, and that concerns the unusual nature of the request made to us today regarding interim supply, in the light of the statement made on Tuesday by the Minister of Finance. I cannot help but agree that in my judgment the house would be in a far better position to deal with interim supply if we had in our hands today a list of those items of the old estimates with which the government does not intend to proceed. At the same time it would have been much better for all concerned if copies of this mimeographed statement had been distributed to all hon. members, and I would certainly suggest to the Minister of Finance that if it is possible for him to do so he should hold over this request for interim supply, possibly for one day or even for two or three days, and give us in the meantime a list of those items in the old estimates which are not to be proceeded with.

It is quite true that if one wishes to make exceedingly fine distinctions and criticisms, the present request for one-twelfth of many of the items, one-ninth in certain other cases, and one-third in one or two remaining cases, if we were to take the minister's words spoken on Tuesday as authentic—and I am certainly prepared tc do that—means that today we are actually being asked to vote more than the government intends to spend, and that has been the object of very serious criticism in the past. I believe that in a situation of this kind there is yet time for the government to rectify its possible mistake and bring before us a list of those items with which it does not intend to proceed, and then we should be in a far better position to hurry estimates through.

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with others who have spoken in expressing good wishes to you for the successful carrying out of your duties as Deputy Speaker of the house, and I have no doubt you will bring your well-known talents in both languages to the execution of your task.

I would like to speak on much the same questions as were touched on by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I think it will be interesting for the committee to consider this matter a little more fully than we have done up to the present time. I would like to emphasize that we are dealing here, as the Minister of Finance has said in what I might describe as his professorial remarks, with the main estimates, the supplementary estimates and the further supplementary estimates (1) and (2), and if one looks at the Journals for Tuesday one finds, with respect to each of these estimates, the traditional message from the Governor General concluding in each case with the formal statement, "The Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons."

Now, we all know that these recommendations are not made spontaneously by His Excellency; they are made, of course, on the advice of his ministers, and it is perfectly obvious that in the recommendations made to the house in these four messages we are being told that the government recommends the estimates to which they refer to the consideration of the house. And we know, Mr. Chairman, that this is the traditional way in which legislation to authorize expenditure is introduced. The reading of these messages was followed by a statement by the Minister of Finance. I will not read the whole of it, but I would like to read the qualifying phrase, which will be found on page 11 of Hansard:

> However, this is not to say that the present government will support all of the detailed programs contemplated when those estimates were originally prepared. Rather, such changes as this government proposes to make in the current year programs will be brought to parliament's attention when the individual items affected are being considered by the committee of supply.

It seems perfectly manifest to me, and I am sure to other hon. members of the house, that the government has had several months, in fact, in which to go through these estimates and decide which of them it proposes to support, and I think this committee is entitled to know formally from the Minister of Finance which are the estimates we are being called upon to deal with, and which ones we shall be asked to consider in some modified form.

Mr. Chairman, I notice it is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o'clock I had just reminded hon. members of the statement the Minister of Finance made after he had tabled the estimates the other day. I drew attention, by reading a brief extract from his remarks, to the fact that he had in effect said that in tabling the estimates he was not proposing that the government would support all of them when the discussion on the estimates took place, and that at that time changes in those estimates would be brought to the attention of the committee.

I think this is indeed an anomalous situation. In one breath the government formally recommends all these estimates to the consideration of the house, and in the next breath the Minister of Finance, one of those responsible for the recommendation, announces that the government does not intend to support its recommendation for which it and it alone is responsible. Coming from someone who has spoken so frequently about the rights and prerogatives of parliament, this statement by the Minister of Finance repudiating responsibility for an action taken by his own government is strange and makes me wonder whether the government's respect for the rights and privileges of parliament has not somewhat diminished since it moved from the opposition benches to those it now occupies. In fact one might be permitted to say, judging from the answers which have been given during the question period since the house opened, that the degree of transformation that has taken place is already manifest, and we find the same sort of answer coming from the ministers today as those which—

Mr. Fleming: The former government gave.

Mr. Marler:—the government members found so objectionable when they were in opposition.

Mr. Green: You are a bit transformed yourself.

Mr. Marler: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have lived more of my life in opposition than I have in government, and I am coming back to the point in the circle from which I started.

According to the statement made by the Minister of Finance the other day the changes which the government proposes to make in the estimates are to be revealed to us only when the individual items are being considered by this committee. I would like hon. members just to consider for a moment the situation which the government is thus creating.

In the past the government presented the estimates. The minister gave the facts to the committee, questions were asked, the advisability of the expenditure in question was weighed, scrutinized and examined by the committee, and there was available to the minister who was presenting the estimates the permanent staff of his department which provided all the explanations which the minister himself was not able to present unaided. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the minister responsible for the estimate justified it to the satisfaction of at least a majority of the committee.

What is the new technique going to be? An item will be called. The minister, I suppose, is going to tell us that he does not support it or does not support it to its full amount. Whose function is it then going to be to support the recommendation which the government has made?

I would like to draw upon my own experience as an example. I was very much interested in the activities of the Department of Transport, and as hon. members of the committee know transport is a field of government activity in which substantial expenditures have to be made in order to keep abreast of progress in a field in which developments are continually taking place. My own experience while I was minister of the department was the difficulty of finding sufficient funds to provide for the activities which the department wished to undertake. In the experience I had during the making up of two budgets I found the estimates which I submitted to the treasury board always suffered a reduction because it was not possible to satisfy all the needs and, as there were limits on spending, it was necessary that my estimates should be cut down.

The process was a long and complicated one. The estimates, as certainly the older members of this house know, are prepared initially by the officials of each department. They are reviewed by the deputy minister with the minister and his officials, and then they are submitted to the treasury board. The officials of the treasury board go through the estimates with a fine tooth comb and weed out any expenditures that cannot be fully justified or which can be properly or usefully deferred. And then, as the Minister of Finance knows, these estimates which have been gone over at the official level are considered by the treasury board itself. When they have been finally adopted by the treasury board they are embodied in the estimates which are presented to this house.

Under this practice, Mr. Chairman, so far as the main estimates, the supplementary estimates and the further supplementary estimates No. 1 are concerned, these went through the process I have just described, and I assume the further supplementary estimates No. 2 have undergone the same rigorous examination. I ask myself what is going to happen when these estimates come before this committee. How is this committee going to know what action the government is going to take? Ordinarily we know when an estimate is submitted that the government stands behind it and is prepared to justify and defend it. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Finance should take us into his confidence. He should tell us what changes are to be made in the estimates. He should tell us, for example, whether the rumour which has received some circulation in the press to the effect that the estimates of the Department of National Defence are to be reduced by $200 million is a fact or whether it is mere rumour and nothing more than fiction. The Minister of Finance should lose no time in telling us exactly what estimates we are going to have to deal with.

I fully understand and appreciate the technical difficulties facing the Minister of Finance in the present circumstances, the main estimates, supplementary estimates and further supplementary estimates not having been voted. Nevertheless I believe the hon. member for Coast-Capilano this morning indicated a method which could very easily have been followed which would not have cost the sum of $20,000, the figure mentioned by the Minister of Finance the other day, but which would have given the members of this committee a complete understanding of what estimates we are being called upon to deal with and the amount of each of them.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, after the great constitutional issues that have been raised here the subject I am going to bring up will no doubt appear to some to be very trivial and insignificant, but there are several minor points in connection with the estimates as they affect the constituency of Port Arthur which I would like to refer to the ministers who answer for these departments.

Before I begin discussing that subject in specific terms I would like to mention that Port Arthur and Fort William form an economic and social unit. For the last 22 years they have been represented by a pair of gentlemen from the same political party and now that twain has been sundered. I might mention that colloquially around the lakehead the gentlemen who formed this twain were known as the gold dust twins. Now the one who has gone, of course, like the ship named after him is in very icy, far-off waters.

[Mr. Marler.]

I would like to assure the hon. member for Fort William that when I ask questions that may affect the constituency of Fort William I am not doing so in an attempt to engage in controversial strife. Rather it is simply because our two constituencies are an economic unit.

In connection with the sum of $250,000 for the Fort William harbour works in the original estimates and a further $300,000 in supplementary estimates No. 2 for harbour improvements in Fort William, the Minister of Public Works has informed me that there has been an extension of the contract for the dredging in the west port turning base. I would like to know how much of the estimate has now been spent for this particular project in the Fort William harbour. I would like him to go further and tell me how much of the estimate of $500,000 for improvements at the Port Arthur harbour has been spent, and whether there is any money left for work to be carried on this winter.

Several years ago I believe an experiment was tried at the lakehead by a contractor by the name of Hacquoil, doing winter work over the ice in developing breakwaters and groynes. Because of the developing unemployment situation at the lakehead, an emergency program could be carried on in either or both harbours which would employ quite a number of men. If any funds are left it would be a wonderful boon to our particular community this winter.

I should like to ask the minister who answers for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation what research has been done in connection with the television satellite program. The Fowler commission recommends that areas with a population of 5,000 or more should be serviced by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with some type of television satellite station. In both spoken and written answers from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation they advise me that they are in touch with events but that they have absolutely no money to go any farther or even to set up an experimental station. I just wonder whether any of the funds that are to be voted in the estimates for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are for this purpose. I might say it is a live issue in all the hinterland along the north shore of lake Superior.

Mr. Nowlan: And elsewhere.

Mr. McIvor: In backing up what the hon. member for Port Arthur has said, I just wish to express appreciation to the Minister of Public Works for keeping the dredging going in Fort William. It was the first time we were threatened with a lay-off in dredging before the freeze-up, and the minister has come through just like a Liberal.

Mr. Fleming: What an insult!

Mr. McIvor: This applies also to the Minister of Finance, because I remember how he started as the shortstop on our baseball team. He was there on the job, and if he does as good a job on the team of which he is now a member I can tell you he will be No. 1. But I am anxious to hear from him today what is to be done with respect to increased pensions for retired civil servants. I have a resolution on the order paper and I shall have something to say when it comes up, but if I can get the answer before then it will make it easier. Thank you.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say a few words on the question of unemployment because it is directly related, of course, to government fiscal policies. It is a matter of major concern to my constituents, because we have had an abnormal amount of unemployment in Kootenay West during the past summer, and conditions are growing, shall I say, darker every day.

I was rather disappointed with the answer given by the Minister of Labour to a question asked by a member on this side of the house with respect to this matter. He suggested that all his officers were being advised to search for all the jobs possible and to do what they could to provide employment for persons who are unemployed at the present time. I think that is rather a superficial approach to the situation, because as I understand it from the officers in my district that is exactly what they did all summer, without much effect. You cannot blame them, because it is going to take more than the harrowing of old fields to find the employment necessary to keep our working force employed at this time. It is going to take a change in government trade policies; it will depend on government trade policies and government attitude to public development at this time.

I am not one who is given to extravagant phrases or overestimating the situation, Mr. Chairman, but I do say in all seriousness that it is one of great concern to many of my constituents. We are faced with an abnormal unemployment situation at the present time for two particular reasons. The first is the problem facing the mining industry owing to the price of metals and the lack of markets. Then there is the problem facing the lumber industry owing to the loss of markets and the low prices prevailing. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that in that respect I can speak from somewhat painful personal experience. In addition to the loss of markets to the lumber industry, quite recently we found that all purchasing of cedar poles had been cancelled or discontinued. The same thing applies to fir poles. These products go largely to the United States.

This situation has not existed in my constituency since depression times, Mr. Chairman. Therefore you can understand the concern it is causing these men and the small operators who have been in the habit of making their living from processing of cedar, fir, tamarack and other poles. In addition to that, we recently had all our contracts for fence posts cancelled, and the market for piling is about 10 per cent of normal at the present time. For these reasons there is considerable unemployment in my district, and it will increase very rapidly in the few weeks ahead.

So far as the lumber industry is concerned, this is no doubt caused by the lack of markets on the prairies, occasioned by the economic circumstances of the prairie farmers, by the lessened housing program this year until recently, and the loss of markets in the United States.

With respect to the possible loss of markets for base metals, I do want to bring to the attention of the house the action that has been taken in my constituency, very largely, by the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers, to bring this matter to the attention of the government, of the members of parliament from British Columbia and of the public generally. I might say they have taken a most constructive approach to what I recognize, and we all recognize, as a most difficult problem. I think we are beginning to realize more and more that economic problems between the United States and Canada have been getting more difficult from day to day. The union drafted a very sensible and constructive brief and presented it to the cabinet. The members of the delegation were very pleased indeed that the Prime Minister saw fit, as I understand, to meet them on the front steps of the parliament buildings and show his interest in their proposal. I understand the brief was presented to the cabinet and every consideration was promised by those members of the cabinet who listened to it being read.

Later on the union called a meeting of the British Columbia members of parliament. Members from all parties in British Columbia attended the meeting and discussed this important situation for a whole day. At the conclusion of the day's discussion they came to a unanimous decision. In that connection may I quote the following:

> After hearing national and local union officers present the union's concern and position, the M.P.'s found themselves in agreement to a man on the following public statement which they wired to Prime Minister Diefenbaker:
> "As there is serious danger of unemployment in base metal industries because of depressing prices, the following British Columbia M.P.'s urge that the federal government be prepared to take emergency action to keep base metal mines open."

This was signed by all members present. They represented all parties in British Columbia. The union's efforts in this respect have been so constructive and the matter is one of such great concern to the Kootenays particularly and to British Columbia in general that the union has received the support of the Trail city council. At the regular meeting held on July 5 the council expressed approval of this protest and unanimously passed the following resolution:

> That your government take whatever action is felt necessary to protect the interests of our mining and smelting industries.

In addition, chambers of commerce throughout British Columbia and other organizations, including quite a number of unions, have expressed their support and approval.

This is a very serious situation so far as the mining industry and the miners of British Columbia are concerned, and we do urge the government to face up to the problem and take courageous action. It may take some strong action on the part of the government to prevent an increase in duties on imports of base metals into the United States. While the situation is, shall I say, somewhat dormant at the present time, there is no question but that the mining interests of the western states are going to do everything possible to get the United States government to increase these duties at the next session of congress.

I want to say a word or two with respect to the lumber industry. That industry can be assisted by the development of markets in Great Britain—there are possibilities there—and by government policies which will improve our markets in Canada. In addition, I think this is the appropriate time for the government to consider a revision of taxation policies in so far as they apply to the forest industry, and that section of that industry which is practising conservation methods.

In the past income taxation policy has been one of dealing with these cases on their merits. Each individual case was dealt with on its merits and, in my opinion, much to the advantage of the large operators. Like other members of this group I believe in a mixed economy. We believe in a diversified economy, and we know the value of the small businessman, small industries and the small service operator to our economy in maintaining its diversity. I suggest in all seriousness to the Minister of Finance that this is a very appropriate time for a reconsideration of the taxation levied on the lumber industry, and particularly that section of the industry which practises conservation in its operations.

In that respect I should like to quote briefly from an address given to the 1956 British Columbia natural resources conference by D. M. Carey, assistant forester, working plans division, British Columbia forest service. Mind you, this is a government servant speaking, and in his very excellent address he says in part:

> Thus many influences tend to squeeze the smaller forest owner and operator out of independent existence. We have heard it said, "The small logger is doomed." This may well be so in that his days of independence are numbered as things stand on the coast. In the interior he may survive for a few years. Before going any further let me say that personal views which follow are my own views as a forester and therefore they are not necessarily the views of either the B.C. government or the forest service.
> I do not think anyone wants to see the small logger liquidated. Is it not better to convert him into an independent logging tree farmer rather than into just one of many wholly dependent subsidiaries or employees of large corporations?

It is the responsibility of the provincial government, Mr. Chairman, to deal with provincial taxation and to determine the type of forest tenure that shall exist in British Columbia, but it is the responsibility of the federal government to devise income taxation policies that will promote the conservation of our natural resources, that will deal fairly with those who are willing to protect them and will protect the interests and rights of the smaller loggers, lumbermen, tree farmers and so on. I do ask the minister to review the policy that has been followed in the past and give consideration to the matter at this time. This is an appropriate time in that those in the lumber industry, particularly the smaller operators, are having a most difficult time to survive and in most cases are not receiving any compensation, shall I say, for trying to preserve the forests for future generations.

However, while we may do something by government policy to increase our trade with Great Britain and improve our markets in Canada, and may do something to a limited extent to improve our markets in the United States—I am not certain what we can do in that respect—only so much can be accomplished because we are harrowing old fields. We are intruding into developed fields while at the same time half the world goes hungry and lacks the ordinary necessities of life required for a civilized existence. If we face this fact fairly and squarely I think we must realize the limited opportunities there are in the fields that are more generally mentioned compared with the opportunities presented to us in the other half of the world that lacks so many things that we enjoy.

In British Columbia both management and labour recognize this fact. As was so well expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway this morning, they have indicated their recognition of this fact and their support for policies meant to improve the marketing situation in this country, to prevent unemployment and at the same time accept some responsibility for the other half of the world which, as I said before, lacks the things we enjoy. Together with other members of this group and industry and labour in British Columbia I do urge the government to face the situation realistically and recognize the government of China. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, that is not recognition or support of their policies and principles, but we have got to face facts. In recognizing China we will be able to try to develop trade with China, and trade with China means trade with 600 million people who at present require many of the products that we produce.

I might say in passing that the Conservative candidate who ran against me in the last federal election, a very fine gentleman indeed and a good friend of mine, was most ardent in his support of recognition of China and the development of trade policies with China. I hope the government will listen to the policies advocated by some of its defeated candidates now that it is in power, and will do what some of these candidates were suggesting it should do.

I mention this particularly, Mr. Chairman, because, as I said before, we can only do certain limited things by harrowing old fields. We have got to broaden out. We have got to find other markets that exist, and accept our responsibilities on a world-wide basis. I urge the government to act boldly, recognize China, develop trade with China and in so doing prevent unemployment in Canada and assist the hungry and underprivileged people of the rest of the world.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I had intended to pursue a particular matter, but before doing so may I inquire what are the intentions of the Minister of Finance with respect to replying to the very valid observations, I think, made this morning by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano on the important role which parliament must exercise as a result of the particular procedure proposed by the Minister of Finance. It seems to me that it would be very helpful and would also be calculated to encourage progress if we knew the extent to which the Minister of Finance, after listening to the able arguments of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, was prepared to accede to his submissions.

I am prepared to go on and discuss the particular matter I have in mind, but it seems to me that it would be helpful and more orderly if we dealt first with the fundamental question of whether or not parliament is going to be called upon to vote under the unprecedented circumstances postulated by the Minister of Finance.

If the Minister of Finance could say whether he is prepared to reply now, I will recognize that as the proper arrangement. Then those of us who have particular questions to ask might submit them to the particular ministers concerned.

If the minister does not intend to reply, then I might as well continue with what I have to say on another subject altogether. But I would think that the interests of parliament, particularly those interests that were so vigorously championed by my hon. friend when he was sitting on this side of the house, require that an answer should be given now as to whether or not we are going to be called upon to vote under circumstances that are certainly contrary to the concept of a free, democratic parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Excuse me, but I had asked my hon. friend a question.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I had asked a question. I had the floor and I was proposing to go on to speak about another matter; but I was asking my hon. friend whether he proposed to reply now. Surely my hon. friend can say whether he intends to speak now or later or not at all.

Mr. Fleming: Far be it from me to interrupt the speech of my hon. friend. I gather that he is fairly well through with it by now, is he not?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has been in this house for 12 years, but he has always sat on the opposition side. Before too long he will learn that the quickest way for a minister of the crown to gain wide acceptance in this house is to recognize that he is not the only member in parliament.

I want to join with others, Mr. Chairman, in congratulating you upon your designation as chairman of committees of this house. This is an honourable role which I am sure you will discharge responsibly and prudently.

I have some observations that I wish to address to my successor, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. May I say to him, first of all, what I have said to him privately already. I am sure that every member of this house joins with me in extending to my hon. friend sincere congratulations upon his being designated as Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am sure he will find this department an extremely rewarding one. I hope his tenure is brief, but I hope and believe it will be constructive, as he will bring to his assignment the kind of energy and devotion of purpose which have characterized most of his activities, other than his political activities, throughout his life. I am sure he will find this department to be composed of men and women who are devoted to the public service and to the welfare of this country in the pursuit of matters having to do with health and welfare.

I fully appreciate the fact that one could not expect the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the expenditure of a larger sum of money than that expended by any other department of the government other than the Department of National Defence, to have at his finger tips the answer to every conceivable question that might be directed his way. I do not want him for a moment to think I am taking advantage of this situation today. That is not my intention. If there are questions that I put to him the answers to which my hon. friend has not at his finger tips at the moment, I am sure we would all readily understand the reason. But I believe this particular question is of such a nature that at least my hon. friend would be expected to have the answers, as I am sure he has because they are of a general character.

I refer, of course, to the matter I raised when the house met on Tuesday last. I asked the Prime Minister whether any significance was to be drawn from the fact that in the speech from the throne delivered by Her Majesty no reference had been made to the matter of hospital insurance. I asked whether any significance was to be drawn from that omission, and the Prime Minister said that I would be unwarranted in drawing that conclusion. I therefore take it that the policy of the present administration is to do everything it can to bring about an implementation of the system of hospital insurance and diagnostic services which was proposed by the previous government and supported by every member of this house. But as we have not had much indication—if I may say so with great respect—of interest and have had little indication of detail, one wonders whether or not the government is vigorously pursuing the possibility of reaching at an early date some agreement among the six consenting provinces and others in respect of the matter of hospital insurance.

The other day, in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, my hon. friend said that six provinces had accepted in principle the proposals made by the federal government in this matter. My hon. friend will not misunderstand me when I say that information was not new. That information was available to the people of Canada before the election on June 10 last. The fact is that before the election took place six provinces had agreed to the proposal put forward by the federal government under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. Those six provinces had been named exactly in the manner and in the order which my hon. friend himself used the other day; that is to say, the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island had accepted the proposal put forward by the federal government.

One would want now to inquire what situation has developed since the announcement of the consent by these six provinces. Have any agreements been signed? If no agreements have been signed, when is it expected that agreements will be signed? What negotiations are now under way which could result in signatures by provinces of agreements put forward by the federal government or mutually devised or conceived by the federal government and the provincial governments? Has any master agreement been prepared?

The situation prevailing before the previous government went out of office was this. We had discussed with the province of Ontario the terms of a master agreement by which we hoped to be able to conclude the positions taken under the hospital insurance act and provincial enabling legislation. Has the work which resulted in the last conference between the federal government and Ontario been expanded, or has it been decided not to have agreements, as was proposed by at least one of the provinces? What is the situation with regard to the province of New Brunswick, the province of British Columbia and the province of Nova Scotia?

I had been informed, and I so announced in the house, that the premier of the province of Nova Scotia had indicated that he thought this was a measure deserving of support by that province. He told me that there were still some problems which were concerning him, and I have since learned from the press that he has established some sort of commission to re-examine the whole problem in the light of Nova Scotia's special interest. In this connection it should be noted, of course, that the previous administration in Nova Scotia had set up a commission of inquiry, and that commission had come to the conclusion that it was in Nova Scotia's interest to accept the federal proposal.

Is the minister in a position to tell us whether or not he has reasons to believe that there will be some considerable delay on the part of Nova Scotia in accepting the federal proposal? I had been told some time at the end of May by the minister of health in New Brunswick, in the presence of the minister of health of Nova Scotia, that there was no doubt that the province of New Brunswick was going to come into the scheme and that we might look forward to ready acceptance at a fairly early date by that province of the proposal put forward by the federal government.

These questions are not idle questions, because this whole matter is an important one. The previous government did not arrive at the decision to put forward a proposal which involves very considerable expenditure of public funds without the gravest consideration. It followed as the result of careful consideration by the executive arms of government, both federally and provincially. It was the result and the product of many conferences between the federal and provincial governments. There can be no mistaking the fact that there is a wide acceptance throughout Canada of the desirability of having hospital insurance, and it would be nothing short of a calamity if any undue delay in this matter was deliberate on the part of the present government. I am not suggesting that it is—

Mr. Fleming: You had better not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—well, my hon. friend says I had better not and I am glad he has made a speech, finally. However, the fact is that parliament passed the hospital insurance act and that measure was supported by the vote of everyone in the house, including the Prime Minister. Few took a more active part in the deliberations than the Minister of Finance who now looks on and listens to what I am saying, apparently with such great and understandable interest. Notwithstanding that, we have had very little mention at all about this question of hospital insurance by the present administration. With the sole exception of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I am not aware of anyone on the other side saying anything by way of support of this measure, except when the Prime Minister himself, speaking in Winnipeg, made reference to what he thought were some weaknesses of the project. Since the election, however, no one has made any reference to the matter of hospital insurance, certainly not a minister other than the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I commend him for the words he used when he recently took over the administration of his department. He said that this was one question that was going to engage his full attention, one matter to which he was personally greatly dedicated. Outside of this observation we have heard nothing from any of his colleagues, before or after the election, and since the election, so far as I am aware, nothing whatsoever from the minister himself.

Now, we are surely entitled to know whether any progress at all has been made in this matter. The province of Ontario has indicated that it proposes to implement its scheme on January 1, 1959, and when I last conferred with them in my own capacity as Minister of National Health and Welfare I was informed by the premier of Ontario that not later than the end of September he should be in a position to know definitely whether or not the federal government would be able, pursuant to the act, to provide the government of the province of Ontario with its share of the cost of the operation of the Ontario scheme.

Unless some progress has been made I am afraid this situation is not calculated to give much encouragement. If Ontario is going to begin its scheme on January 1, 1959, unless it is to bear the full cost itself it must immediately know whether the other five consenting provinces will have conformed to the requirements of the hospital insurance act, since that legislation provides that the federal money shall be paid only when the six consenting provinces have schemes in being and in support of which the proclamation of the measures under which they operate has taken place. In other words their legislation must be in force and their scheme must be in force. That certainly is not the case in any province except the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

What is the situation in Alberta? Does the minister regard the existence of what they have in that province now as sufficient to comply with the act? What about the province of Newfoundland? Does the existing scheme there satisfy his requirements or the requirements as envisaged by the law officers of the crown? What about Prince Edward Island?

If no agreements have been signed, well then, it is clear that Ontario's position, in so far as the starting date announced by the premier is concerned, is in great jeopardy unless the minister is prepared at some later date to suggest to this committee that there should be an amendment to the act to provide for payments on a basis not now envisaged by the hospital insurance act itself.

In the province of Ontario there is a demand now being made, and an understandable demand, by the insurance companies and by those who are beneficiaries or who are insured under private hospital insurance schemes, for information on the kind of rates that are going to be imposed under the scheme to be brought about at some future date by the government of Ontario. The trade unions and employers of labour are also very interested in knowing what are to be the rates under the hospital insurance scheme in the province of Ontario and, as my hon. friend knows and as I know very well, there are literally thousands of groups all over the country—I mentioned Ontario particularly since that is the province where the greatest job has got to be done because of the numbers to be covered—who are all awaiting very anxiously to know what will be the situation in that particular as well as in other particulars.

What is the real situation? Are any negotiations under way between the federal government and any one of the provinces? Are there any negotiations under way right now between the province of Manitoba and the federal government? The premier of that province is reported as saying that Manitoba is just as good as in. What is the situation in that province? Perhaps the Minister of Finance, either today or on some later occasion soon, will be able to give us some indication. Has an agreement been signed with Saskatchewan? There should be no delay there now because they have a scheme in being; they were prepared to accept the basic proposals embodied in the main agreement that we had worked out in a general way with the province of Ontario. Surely there should be some agreement signed between that province and the federal government. Has any agreement been signed with any province? If no agreement has been signed, what exactly is the situation?

The present Minister of Finance will recall that his party took a strong position in the matter of certain exclusions. The minister moved an amendment in this house to the effect that tuberculosis and mental illness should be provided for in some form. We maintained that as the act was designed to help individuals and not to subsidize provincial governments, as long as provincial governments continued to bear, substantially, the cost of the care of those two illnesses, that should not be a continuing charge on the federal exchequer. But that was not the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Fleming: No. You voted against it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is going to speak later, and I welcome it. Notwithstanding that, he took the position that those two forms of illness should be included and covered under the hospital insurance act. What is the position of the government now? Does it intend to include tuberculosis and mental illness? I am not arguing whether or not this should be done at this time; I am simply wanting to inquire. Is that one of the reasons why the government is not proceeding with the measure? I am told on fairly reliable authority that the Minister of Finance, whose generosity knew no limits when he was sitting on this side of the house, said to his colleagues, "We certainly cannot do all the things that we promised; there is not enough money".

Mr. Fleming: Oh, such rot.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "such rot". It is certainly the kind of rot given out during the election, because there was no limit to what was promised. But I am told the Minister of Finance has taken that position, and he can deny it if he wishes.

Mr. Fleming: Who told you?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend would be very surprised if I were indiscreet enough to inform him.

Mr. Fleming: Go ahead; don't be so discreet. Tell us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the position? Are tuberculosis and mental illness to be included in the deal with two of the provinces. One of them, in the maritime area, is prepared to go in right away if the government will live up to the position it took when it sat in opposition. I do not know whether or not that is the case, but surely we ought to be informed about this measure by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member for Essex East permit a question? He will feel it is quite natural to receive a question from me. Would his party now support legislation to extend this coverage?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member may on occasion find it would be possible, sitting in that eternal position of opposition as he does, but I am expressing my personal view. As long as the provinces continue to bear the substantial responsibility for the care provided to their citizens in the matter of tuberculosis and mental illness, then the hospital insurance act should not be used to subsidize provincial governments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then you have been asking the government to do something that you are not prepared to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I don't think the hon. member is fair. I am not asking the government to do something I am not prepared to do myself. I am trying to ascertain if despite the position taken by the government when it was in opposition they are now prepared to oppose that position, that opposition being, I am told, one of the reasons why at least one province is not coming in. That is surely a consistent and honourable position for me to take. But if the provinces and the federal government are able to agree on the assumption of this responsibility under the hospital insurance act, then I would have no quarrel, and then it would be the responsibility of hon. gentlemen opposite who have close and influential connections with provincial governments to see that those governments do something, for instance, by way of paying adequate supplementary old age pensions in their respective provinces with the money thus saved.

What is going to be done about depreciation? Hon. gentlemen opposite argued that we were at fault in not including depreciation in the shareable cost. Is that still the position of the government? Is the Minister of Finance now prepared to say through his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or on his own assertion, that the government is now willing to include this additional item? The Minister of Finance says nothing on this subject. He says nothing on whether or not they are going to include tuberculosis and mental illness, and his silence on these matters, as well as the silence of all others in respect of this particular situation, is responsible for the feeling that now exists in all parts of Canada that this government is going to find a convenient way out of doing anything about the matter of hospital insurance so far as the federal government is concerned.

If that is not the situation, why was it not mentioned in the speech from the throne, and why have we not been informed in this house, or before we met, of the progress that was being made? Why have we not got agreement with the provinces in respect of a matter which was brought before this house and which was referred to by the present Prime Minister as the most important social act ever presented to this parliament in the field of health and welfare? If this is an important matter, then the Minister of Finance should, not tomorrow but right now, give an answer to what I have asked and take the opportunity of saying when we may expect action on the part of the government in respect of this vitally important matter.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to express to the hon. member for Fort William my thanks for his very kind reference this morning, and to say that I hope the same kind of team play can be observed here as was observed on the baseball field out in front of these buildings in days gone by.

I should like also to thank the hon. member for Peace River for his generous remarks on the effort I made this morning to explain the business we are trying to do here today. It is only fair, I think, to tell the newer members of the house that we are witnessing an unusual procedure today on the part of the opposition yonder. In times past these requests for interim supply have been dealt with with celerity, and they have not been made an occasion for such long speeches as the one to which we have just listened—a speech which, no doubt, would have its place in the debate on the speech from the throne but which in this debate is quite out of keeping with the practice of this house in times past under the government of which the hon. member was a not altogether silent member for a good many years.

I shall say no more to my friend the hon. member for Essex East except to comment that I am gravely concerned about the degree of over-anxiety he has displayed in the chamber in the last few days. He is covering a great deal of territory in his outbursts and working himself into a lather much too often. I am concerned that he will not be able to last the three months until the 16th of January.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you for the solicitation.

Mr. Fleming: I suggest to him that he play it a little more easily because there is quite a while to go yet.

To the hon. member for Coast-Capilano who this morning informed us that he had been chosen by the Leader of the Opposition to be the spokesman of the official opposition on matters pertaining to finance I should like to extend my congratulations and assure him that at all times I personally, and I am sure my colleagues, will be delighted to receive the assistance of his constructive criticism, if any.

Mr. Sinclair: You will get it.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member for Coast-Capilano this morning was quite concerned about the use I am making of the services of the officials of the Department of Finance. I am glad indeed to embrace this opportunity of paying tribute to the officials of that department. I have never withheld my expression in times past of my sincere praise of the officials of any of the government departments and I may say to the committee that when I was honoured by being invited to accept the portfolio of finance in my first remarks to the officials of that department I assured them of the high regard in which I have always held the officials of that department, many of whom I had known well personally, some of whom I had known slightly and some of whom I had not met before. I made it very clear that I would ask nothing of them except their frank advice fearlessly given and that I would never ask any one of them nor did I want any of them to give advice simply because they thought it was the advice I wanted to hear.

I might tell hon. members opposite they need have no fear about the calls that will be made upon the services of these exemplary servants of the public in the Department of Finance. I would point out to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that they have been working harder since the 21st day of June than they had been accustomed to working before.

Mr. Sinclair: Because they now have a stupid minister.

Mr. Fleming: My friend the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has also informed the house that he has been reading my speeches. Well, I must thank him for that. I am sure he will find them fair and factual, and I commend to him the example. I hope he will derive some benefit from the effort he is now applying in that direction. He has advised us that he is working now. Well, we will all be glad to hear of that and I must say that after all these years it is not too soon.

As to the quality of his speech I make no comment beyond saying it has been a typical speech of my hon. friend, a flamboyant and demagogic display, an histrionic exhibition of the first order. There were times when the hon. gentleman found it very difficult to keep a straight face and certainly throughout the greater part of his speech I observed that his colleagues about him were also having difficulty keeping straight faces when he rolled out these old expressions to which we have all grown so accustomed. I suggest to my hon. friend that he should vary his technique now that he has been transformed into a member of the opposition. He used to talk to us about the family compact and the Tories. Well isn't it about time he found a new record to play or wrote at least one new speech now that he is working?

Mr. Sinclair: But the Tories have not changed.

Mr. Fleming: I will have something to say about what I think was the only point my hon. friend made during the course of his remarks. I might comment that the hon. gentleman tried to make it appear to be three points. I will come back and deal with the first one which I thought was his real point, but let us now have a look at what he said were his second and third points.

Concerning the measure before the house today he said his second criticism was on the ground of the form of the measure. It simply follows the time honoured form. Somehow or other the hon. gentleman led himself on from that assertion to say the government was mulcting the taxpayer of unnecessary funds. That was a remark made about the estimates which he and his colleagues drew and introduced in this house last spring, and if there is any mulcting of the taxpayer of unnecessary funds the responsibility lies and will continue to rest on him and his colleagues.

I simply make this observation in passing, that no item is being passed finally today. If the measure the government has introduced passes there is no final decision on any item.

The hon. gentleman has been out of touch with finance, as he revealed today, much too long notwithstanding his experience at one time as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance. He undertook to tell the committee that there was power on the part of the government once these items were voted to transfer moneys back and forth. He ought to know and surely I should not have to remind the hon. gentleman after he has been in the house for 17 years that it is not possible to transfer money from one item to another.

Mr. Sinclair: Within a department?

Mr. Fleming: No, not within a department. It is not possible to transfer moneys from one item to another. The items are statutory when they are passed and all that can be done is transfer amounts within the details of an item. No money can be transferred from one item to another and it is high time the hon. gentleman learned that if he is going to discharge his new function.

And then in dealing with what he called his third point the hon. gentleman went back to Saskatoon in 1953.

Mr. Sinclair: 1952.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member got his tenses all mixed up; one minute he was out in Saskatoon and another minute he was in Ottawa; one minute dealing with 1953 and the next minute back dealing with 1957. He referred to a statement made in 1953 by the then leader of the Conservative party about a reduction of $200 million which Mr. Drew said should be made in national defence. We in this house lived to see the reduction made which he said could be made without any impairment of our national defence.

Of course the hon. gentleman did not go on to say that the items we are dealing with are already committed, that the present government today does not have a free hand. We are not starting a new fiscal year. We are dealing with estimates that were already introduced, with programs that were already far underway before we came into office.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is three months now since you came into office.

Mr. Fleming: I wish now to come back to the one point of the minister's speech.

Mr. Sinclair: Thank you.

Mr. Fleming: However, before dealing with the only real point of the hon. member's address, that part of the speech which he called point No. 1, I have a word or two for my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He began by complaining that copies of the resolution were not available. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been in the house for some 15 years and I have been here for some 12 years. Never once in that time have copies of the resolutions been circulated. Indeed, something has been done today by the Minister of Finance that has never been done in the 12 years I have been in this chamber. The Minister of Finance today furnished copies of the details of the resolution to all of the three parties in the opposition and I must say that in times past sitting in opposition my question always was when such resolutions were introduced: will you tell us something about it? Give us the breakdown? Of what items are you voting one-twelfth? What items are not being voted simply on the basis of one-twelfth? We always had to take up time asking such questions. I am glad the sheets we distributed served some purpose today, but I think my hon. friend might have recognized that this is the first time this kind of co-operation has been extended by a minister of finance to members of the other parties in the house.

To my very great surprise indeed the hon. gentleman complained that parliament had not been called in September. It is well that we should pause for a moment to consider the significance of what the hon. member has said and the fact that on this complaint he built a baseless assertion that the Prime Minister of this country has broken faith with the promises made in the election campaign.

What was the fact, sir? When we came into office we found that the previous government had already long before committed the use of these buildings to an international conference. We did not have the details of the sittings of that body, but the fact is that the meetings of that international postal conference did not end in this chamber until October 3. What was much more significant, as the Prime Minister explained yesterday, was that the plans made for the visit of Her Majesty had been substantially advanced.

Mr. Pickersgill: By a Liberal government.

Mr. Fleming: I say that had the incoming government not proceeded in the light of the plans that had already been made and invited Her Majesty to open parliament, such a loss would have fallen on the Canadian people that no amount of talk on the part of my hon. friend until doomsday would ever repair; for something has been given to the soul of the Canadian people this week by the visit of Her Majesty and Her Majesty's opening of the Canadian parliament that will enrich that soul for generations to come.

Mr. Chevrier: Your speech will not.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend then went on to say that he wanted to know what was to be the basis of the new pensions that the government is proposing in the throne speech, and he wanted those included in the scope of the present measure. For one who is supposed to know something about the rules of the house, did you ever hear anything more utterly outlandish, did you ever hear of anything as unconstitutional? We are not including in the scope of the measure today payments for measures that have not even been introduced in the house, let alone brought here with a recommendation of His Excellency. Are we to be told now by the hon. member that we should be making disclosures here and now of the intent of the government with respect to the contents of legislation long before the resolutions, which must have the approval of His Excellency, are introduced in the house? I was surprised beyond measure to hear doctrine like that coming from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I can assure him that it is the intention of the government to follow strictly constitutional practice in this matter, and those measures that I think all hon. members, those on this side of the house as well as those on the other side of the house, are awaiting with no little interest will be introduced in this house just as quickly as the transaction of business in the house will permit. That means the completion of the speech from the throne debate and the emergency measure with respect to cash advances on farm-stored grain. We hope then to get on with all dispatch with these measures respecting increases in social security benefits and I hope we shall have my hon. friend's support in trying to expedite the program.

I may say to him when he complains that I did not answer a certain telegram he sent me back in the summer that I would have been violating my constitutional duty as a minister of the crown to have informed him of the contents of whatever it might be that the government intended to bring in later on by way of a measure, and that, from an hon. gentleman who has devoted long years to the assiduous study of the rules of the house.

Now, sir, he has asked for some further assurance in regard to these items in the further supplementary estimates, No. 1.

Mr. Richardson: May I ask a question?

Mr. Fleming: I am afraid I will have to ask my hon. friend to wait until the conclusion of my thirty minutes. My time is limited. I will be glad to deal with all questions if he will permit me to conclude my remarks. I am a little concerned about the time.

My hon. friend wanted some further assurance about the position of the items in the further supplementary estimates, No. 1. There were eight of those items and five of them were carried into effect by the form of legislation that was contained in the appropriation bill. Those are statutory items and I am assured by the law officer of my department that no further vote is necessary in that respect. Those payments are provided for fully for the remainder of the current fiscal year to March 31 next.

But the three final items, which are the ones referred to in the sheet which I sent him, have not attained statutory effect as a result of the appropriation bill which was passed. It may be that they were intended to have that effect, but I am informed by the law officer of my department it is necessary to make a special provision in the present bill in order to continue payment of those items, and I hope we shall have the support of the committee in seeking to do so.

Sir, I wish to come now to what my hon. friend from Coast-Capilano had to say, echoed as it was by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount. Let me say to the committee that the government is today not only following the constitutional course, it is following the only course that was physically open to it in the circumstances. It was a physical impossibility to rewrite the whole volume of estimates in the time available. The work that has been indicated with respect to seeking to find savings, where savings could be made, in the volume of estimates that has been re-introduced in the house, is a continuing task and it is going to be carried on.

The committee today is not being asked to overvote any sum, and we stand as a government behind every item for which we are asking today; that is to say, to the extent to which we are asking for it. We are standing back of it and it is perfectly clear and was made perfectly clear this morning.

What is the great to-do that was made by hon. members opposite? What is the substance of it all?

There are 802 items in these four groups of estimates altogether. In the main estimates there were 537 items. Four of them were finally adopted by the former parliament; 533 remain. Of these 533, there are 15 on account of which we are not asking any further vote today; on 10 we are asking for a little more than one-twelfth; on the remaining 508 we are simply asking for one-twelfth, the equivalent of a month, and that does not carry them beyond their proportion of seven-twelfths. There is therefore ample room to do all that the government may wish to do by way of saving without trespassing one inch upon the prerogatives, the duties and responsibilities of parliament.

Of the supplementary estimates there were 47 items. One was finally voted by the former parliament; 46 remain. On two of these we are not asking for anything further. On the other 44 we are asking for only one-twelfth, the equivalent of one month. Of the further supplementary estimates No. 1 there were eight items. Of these five were finally voted by the former parliament and three remain. On these three we are asking simply for one-twelfth, the equivalent of one month.

Of the further supplementary estimates, No. 2, I should note that it was clear to hon. members opposite that the government, having introduced these, is standing behind them all 100 per cent. But if hon. members opposite are still querulous on that subject, let me say to them that of the 110 items therein, on 107 of them we are asking simply for one-twelfth, the equivalent of one month's vote. That means that out of 802 items there are only 13 of which we are asking for more than one-twelfth, and with respect to every one of those 13 there is an explanation which I shall be happy to give and which I know will satisfy the committee and even hon. gentlemen opposite because I miss my guess if they are prepared to challenge what we are asking for in any of these. I shall be glad to give full details of these. There is a special reason in every case and a satisfactory reason.

I repeat the undertaking that I gave this morning and which in the 12 years that I have been in this house has been given by ministers of finance on every request for a vote of interim supply, I suppose 50 times in those 12 years, that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

The hon. member for Coast-Capilano said this morning that there was no precedent for what is being done here, a government submitting to the house a message from His Excellency recommending certain estimates to the house and then not being prepared to stand behind them. Precedents, he says! Well, sir, what are the facts? I wish there were time, Mr. Chairman, but I have time only to give the house 13 precedents on the subject. I have not gone back of the fiscal year 1940-41—

Mr. Stick: That is an unlucky number.

Mr. Fleming:—but there is a series of items in estimates from that time down to the past session where items were introduced by the government in the form of a message from His Excellency recommending them to the consideration of the house and ministers of the last government when those estimates were reached, in many cases after portions of them had been voted by way of votes of interim supply, rose and withdrew them or submitted to reductions in them.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a precedent at all.

Mr. Fleming: I do not quarrel with their reduction or withdrawal of those items. I believe that they should have withdrawn or reduced a great many of the items they tried to stuff down the throats of members of the last three parliaments.

But where is this great principle? We were told there is precedent for such a thing! I well recall an experience of my own when Mr. Winters was minister of public works. You will find it recorded at page 4263 of Hansard of April 29, 1954. An item was called of something over $1 million. I asked some questions about it and it turned out that there was a whole lot of money in that item that was not required. What happened? The government of that time did not even wait for me to move a reduction. The gentleman who two months later became minister of finance rose and moved the reduction in that item, an item that had come to the house with the approval of the governor in council.

Was there any shrieking then about the violation of some constitutional principle? Oh, no! It just depends whose ox is gored. But I will be glad to give chapter and verse for what I have said in regard to all of these items of estimates in the years from 1940 to 1957. In the fiscal year 1940-41 there was item 38; in 1941-42 item 137; in 1942-43 item 200; in 1949-50 item 607, in 1951-52 item 650; in 1953-54 item 487; in 1954-55 item 535; in 1955-56 items 331 and 544; and in 1956-57 items 386 and 289.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a question?

Mr. Fleming: When I have completed my remarks I will be glad to have any questions that hon. gentlemen wish to ask. I made that clear already.

Now, Mr. Chairman, because we are subject to a time limit I hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will have the goodness and the responsibility to come back and ask me with regard to these 13 items for the reason why in every case it is necessary to ask the house to vote more than one-twelfth. I remind the house, as I said this morning, that in no case is the total vote being exhausted. There is still ample room for the exercise of the responsibility of every member of the house. There is at the same time ample room for the efforts that the government is assiduously making to achieve savings in the interests of the taxpayers and of sound government.

But let me say this in the several minutes that remain to me. The hon. member for Coast-Capilano spoke in a loud voice today and with great assurance until he came near the end of his remarks. But then we witnessed what we witnessed yesterday in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, a bold start, a strong middle part of the speech and then in the conclusion a sad faltering.

If this government is guilty of what the hon. member for Coast-Capilano said about it this morning, then it is perfectly clear that as a government we have no right to sit in these places. We ought to be discharged from office if we have violated the decencies of the constitution and the rights of parliament as he asserted today. But by the same token, having regard to the responsibilities of an opposition and, above all, an official opposition and, above all, that of the spokesman on financial matters—

Mr. Sinclair: Watch your temper.

Mr. Fleming:—for that official opposition, what have you to say, sir, about the sense of responsibility of a spokesman for the opposition who in a matter of that kind accuses the government of violating the rights of parliament and constitutional decencies and then stops short of being prepared to challenge the right of the government to retain office? I say that that weak-kneed course of action is a demonstration of irresponsibility, and I warn hon. gentlemen opposite that if they think that they can deliver these sniping speeches, deliver themselves of these hit-and-run efforts and not be called to account in the house, they are mistaken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't threaten.

Mr. Fleming: After what was said this morning I can assure them that they will have full opportunity to declare whether they have confidence in the government or whether this government is no longer to retain office, for it is my intention—I make it quite clear now—to press for a division on every stage of this measure today in this committee, in the committees that follow and in the house. Personally I am going to watch with the closest interest the vote that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano casts. I shall be asking myself how he is going to cast his vote. In the first place, is he going to vote?

Mr. Sinclair: He will vote.

Mr. Fleming: That is one question. Question No. 2: If he is going to vote, is he going to vote in the vein in which he spoke for the first 90 per cent of his speech today or is he going to turn tail on his speech and run?

Mr. Sinclair: I am sure there is no question in hon. members' minds who has delivered the louder speech today.

Mr. Hees: Or who has delivered the best speech.

Mr. Sinclair: Now that the sound and fury have temporarily subsided, I want to return to my original point. When I spoke this morning I drew the attention of the committee to the remarks that the minister made on Tuesday, October 15, though not in quite the same loud voice, remarks unique in the history of this parliament. The so-called precedents he has now recounted to us are not, as I will point out in a moment, precedents at all. But this is what he said, as found at page 11 of Hansard for last Tuesday:

> However, this is not to say that the present government will support all of the detailed programs contemplated when those estimates were originally prepared. Rather, such changes as this government proposes to make in the current year programs will be brought to parliament's attention when the individual items affected are being considered by the committee of supply.

All we asked this morning was that the minister tell the committee what items he is supporting in accord with the governor general's recommendation and what are the items which, as mentioned here, he has not committed himself to support. That is what I asked the hon. gentleman, and in the midst of all this crescendo of sound coming from this little man there was one thing he said: We stand behind every one of these estimates presented this day.

Mr. Fleming: No, no.

Mr. Sinclair: That is exactly what we asked him to say.

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. Sinclair: Those are the very words, the very words—

An hon. Member: Behind the bill.

Mr. Sinclair: —and I thank him for that assurance because now he is showing more good sense than he has showed so far—

Mr. Fleming: You are running out.

Mr. Sinclair: —in his conduct of affairs as Minister of Finance. Let me tell you about these estimates he is standing behind. These estimates, concerning which he has been unable to give us one single item that he will not approve, were prepared by the gentlemen who now sit on this side of the house, and naturally we are going to support every single item of these estimates that we prepared.

We are not turning our backs on our own work. What we wanted from the minister was some indication of those items for which he was not taking paternity. He has apparently taken paternity for all these estimates. He went to some trouble to build up a straw man about those items for which he is only asking one-twelfth and those for which he is asking other fractions.

We understand perfectly the reason for that. He dealt with it very carefully and cleverly for new members in that rather professorial speech with which he began his morning's remarks. But I am glad, as are all members of the opposition, that we have smoked out the minister and that he is unable to provide us with this list of items which he is not prepared to support. He said that in the short time that he was having lunch he was able to find these thirteen precedents—

Mr. Fleming: I did not say anything about lunch.

Mr. Sinclair: Oh, he did not have any lunch. For the benefit of new members he pointed out that these main estimates are actually prepared by the various departments of government in the early fall and cleared through treasury board generally in December. Then before the actual reference of the estimates to the house there are other things which arise which sometimes occasion the need for more money and sometimes occasion the need for less money. But when these estimates were presented by a government in good faith the government believed that all the money they asked for was needed and they stood behind that submission of estimates.

Naturally if, during the course of the year as the months rolled by it was found that some requirements were not going to be needed it was of course the proper action for a minister to take to stand up and inform the house, as did the Minister of Finance, apparently to the chagrin of the hon. member for Eglinton. He beat the hon. member for Eglinton to the punch and apparently the recollection of it still rankles. It is the proper function of the minister to inform the house that this money is not needed. But that is a very different course of conduct from what we saw on Tuesday when he announced to the house that he was at that time supporting only some of the estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, in his remark a few moments ago the Minister of Finance chose to criticize me for having suggested that the Prime Minister should have kept his election promise to call parliament in September to deal with the question of old age pensions. Let me make it clear that the Prime Minister made that promise not just once but on several occasions. He did it in a speech at Toronto on April 25. He repeated the promise in the city of Hull on May 7 and in Guelph, Ontario, on May 13. He gave the same promise again in a telecast over the C.B.C. on May 22 and in a C.B.C. radio talk from Vancouver on May 24. As a matter of fact, he made the promise in a speech as late as June 9, the day before the election, that if the Conservatives were returned to power they would call a September session of parliament to deal with the question of old age pensions.

The Minister of Finance suggested that that promise could not be fulfilled for two reasons, both of which he blames on the previous administration. He says, first of all, that the previous administration had made an arrangement a number of years ago for the universal postal union to meet in this chamber during the month of September. I remind hon. members opposite—and I call the Postmaster General as witness—that they knew of those arrangements. Those arrangements were debated in this House of Commons last March or April and I presume the Prime Minister was here. At least he should have known what was going on.

The present Postmaster General who then sat near us on this side of the house complained about those arrangements. The Conservatives knew that this building was committed for September to the universal postal union when the Prime Minister made this promise to call parliament in September. If he did not intend to carry out the promise because of that fact he should have said so or, having made the promise, he should have made other arrangements so far as the universal postal union was concerned.

The other excuse which the Minister of Finance now puts forth for the Prime Minister's not carrying out this promise—and this is the Prime Minister who on election night and several times since then said, "I will keep faith"—was the arrangement made by the previous government for Her Majesty to be here in mid-October. I am satisfied that the Prime Minister knew of this arrangement as well.

Mr. Fleming: That is not true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am going to give this house the reason why I think he must have known. Last April, shortly before we came to the end of the session, the former prime minister chose to call in spokesmen of groups on this side of the house in order to indicate what the plans were for the balance of that session. My leader happened to be ill at the time and when it was the turn of the spokesman for the C.C.F. to be called in, I was called to the office of the former prime minister. He told me—and I think he would not mind my saying this—that he had already spoken to the then leader of the opposition. I do not know what he told the then leader of the opposition but I know what he told me. He told me, amongst other things, of the plans for Her Majesty the Queen to come here in October. He also told me that the reason supply was being asked for to the end of October rather than to the end of September, as had been originally planned, was so that the opening of parliament, if it was so desired, could be delayed in order for Her Majesty to carry out that function.

I do not know what the then prime minister told the then leader of the opposition but I would be greatly surprised if he told me, the second spokesman of a minority party, more than he told the then leader of the official opposition. I suggest that not only was there that private discussion—and I am sure that I am not breaking any confidence now in referring to it—but there were references in the house to the fact that Her Majesty the Queen was coming to the North American continent this fall. I am satisfied that the Prime Minister, when he was campaigning for the election and promising a September session of parliament, knew that Her Majesty was going to come here in October.

The Minister of Finance cannot get away with the display that he tried to indulge in and the suggestion that I would have robbed the Canadian people of the experience we have had this week because of the presence of Her Majesty. I recall to the Minister of Finance and repeat what I said this morning, namely that I think it would have been even more memorable and even more historic and would have given something even more lasting to the Canadian people if Her Majesty, on October 14, the day that she was here, had been given the opportunity, not just to open parliament and wonder what was coming but to give royal assent in person to a bill increasing the old age pension, a bill increasing the war veterans allowance and some of the other things that could have been passed by now if the Prime Minister had kept his sacred promise to call parliament in September. It is not good enough for the 5,000 senior citizens who die every month, the 5,000 or 10,000 who will never get whatever increase is in mind because the present government found a way to wiggle out of the promise it made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, yes; to wiggle out, to renege on the sacred promise made to the people of this country, particularly to our senior citizens, who incidentally were singled out for particular notice by being mentioned first with regard to domestic matters in the speech from the throne. I say again that it would have been far more memorable if Her Majesty had been given this other opportunity.

This idea is not original with me. In the press comments as to what would happen after the new government took office some newspaper columnists suggested that this was a solution to the problem of what to do because Her Majesty was coming in October, namely that the session could be called in September as planned and arrangements could be made for royal assent in person in October. I suggest that it would have been just as much for the pleasure of the Canadian people to have that happen as to have the interesting experience that we have had this week.

The Minister of Finance twits me for asking him for something which he says is unconstitutional or not in keeping with the rules of procedure. He says that I must not ask him in advance of resolutions being placed on the order paper, with the approval of the governor general, as to what the government proposes to bring down. The Minister of Justice will recall that last year or the year before he complained because the then prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition, announced certain proposals regarding university grants and the Canada Council in advance of the speech from the throne. He complained that this was giving, before the governor general read the speech from the throne, information that should not be given until the speech from the throne was brought down.

Well, the Minister of Finance did the same thing this year. Toward the end of June or early in July he made a speech or gave a press release in which he announced that there would be a budget this fall and that there would be an increase in the old age pension. In other words, he committed the same sin which the Minister of Justice complained about when it was committed a year ago by the then prime minister.

I do not say that it is a sin to announce some of the intentions of the government, so long as the government makes it clear that it will merely recommend certain things to parliament but recognizes that parliament has the final word with regard to these matters.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that if it was competent for him, in advance of the reading of the speech from the throne, to announce something which was going to be in the speech from the throne—that is to say, an increase in the amount of the old age pension—then it is competent for us to ask him for further details with respect to the matter. It was in that spirit that I sent him the telegram to which I referred and which I think should now be placed on the record: It is dated at Winnipeg July 2, 1957:

Hon. Donald Fleming,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Your announcement of an increase in old age pension this fall heartily welcomed by all. It would mean a great deal to our senior citizens if you would confirm now by further public announcement that the government will recommend that the pension be increased to not less than $60 a month in keeping with the figure mentioned by

Mr. Diefenbaker when he spoke in the House of Commons on March 28 this year. Retired federal civil servants also counting on early announcement of pension increases for those in lower and middle brackets in line with support to our demands for same given in past by prominent members of your party. Remember also Mr. Diefenbaker's support of our insistence on a substantial increase in basic $25 pension paid to C.N.R. employees. Trust announcement of action on this matter will be made soon. Please reply.

Stanley Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre.

As I say, I have to date received no reply to that telegram which was simply a request that the minister make more clear and more precise the details of an announcement which he had chosen to make, despite the fact that it was dealing with a matter which was to be included in the speech from the throne. As for chiding anyone on this side of the chamber for seeking information as to the intentions of the government, I suggest that no member on the other side who was in parliament before can do any such chiding and get away with it.

My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, tried time and time again when he was on this side of the chamber to get information out of the late government. Constitutional and procedural technicalities did not seem to bother him then. Now, all of a sudden constitutional and procedural technicalities seem to be something behind which he can hide because of his unwillingness to disclose this information. In that connection the motion which is before the committee of supply today asks us to continue for another month, the month of November, the expenditure programs of the old government, with a few changes involving the further supplementary estimates No. 2. I submit that a parliament which was told there was going to be a September session for dealing with old age pensions and was told that information would be given has the right to that information now. Are we going to have to wait, no one knows how long, until these changes are brought into being?

If the members on the government benches really believe in the supremacy of parliament and if they believe in the right of the members of parliament to be given information and not to be met with an iron curtain of secrecy, about which they used to complain, I submit that they have no right to stand up and make speeches of the kind that was made today by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I should like to return for a moment to the question of the large number of unemployed and the increasing unemployment problem. In my own constituency at least seven or eight lumber mills have closed down throwing out of work some four or five hundred lumber workers.

The Prime Minister in his pre-election promises indicated that he was prepared to increase the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Now while that is simply a palliative and it would not increase the market for lumber, I think in view of the rising cost of living something should be done in this regard and that it should not be left to the end of the session. Some action should be taken immediately.

I want to touch also upon the matter raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West. You will recall that I raised this question on the second day on which parliament convened. I asked the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to carry out his promise to consider the question of stock piling base metals and maintaining a floor price on those metals, that is to say, lead, zinc, copper and so on, metals which have depreciated in price to such an extent that many hard rock miners, particularly in western Canada, are being pressed to the wall. They too will, of course, be seeking unemployment insurance this winter and will be looking forward with very great interest to any increases that the Minister of Labour may be prepared to recommend. I was disappointed by the answer which I received from the right hon. Prime Minister and I hope that this is not another example of breaking faith with the people of Canada.

When the officers and other delegates of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers waited upon the Prime Minister and his cabinet there was undoubtedly a threat of increased tariffs on lead and zinc entering into the United States, but that was not the basis of their representations. The basis of their representations was that because of the price of metals at this moment, and at that moment in which they appeared which I believe was on August 6 last, many mines were being closed down. The large producers were curtailing production. As a matter of fact, in the paper—the Mine Mill Herald—which is distributed to its various members, they show pictures of deserted mining camps and ghost towns.

Now while the Prime Minister appeared to give very careful consideration to the delegation, it is quite obvious that he missed the point, and that is that prices are such at this moment that mines were being closed and miners are being thrown out of work. This was not something in anticipation of action by Congress of the United States. For that matter it is being discussed at this very moment.

I read in the paper while I was coming here on the train that the western metal mining interests had been granted another hearing on the question of the increased tariff against our metals, so that question was not the paramount one in my mind. The Prime Minister promised consideration of this matter, and I simply asked the Prime Minister if he was still giving consideration to the question; not to disclose the policy of the government, but to let us know that he is still giving continuous attention to the subject and not forgetting it, as he appears to have done judging from the answer he made to my question yesterday.

I cannot help but take a few minutes in which to congratulate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on the very good work which they did during the visit of Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh. There is no doubt that it was the finest effort on a large scale that has ever been carried out anywhere on the North American continent and I am indeed grateful that the result will remain on the record for all time and that it will be shown, undoubtedly, for many years to come. I am pleased that all Canada and all the western world will, no doubt, be able to see the pageantry that marked the occasion and the history that was made here during that visit. But there is one thing on which I am not quite clear. I have been unable to determine, despite my inquiries, just where the authority arose for the installation of television cameras in the Commons chamber for the purpose of telecasting the actual proceedings of the house. Much of the speech made yesterday by the Prime Minister had to do with the rights and the supremacy of parliament and the rights of members of parliament, and I am wondering how many members of parliament were contacted in order to determine whether they were prepared to accept this change in procedure. I know this sounds like a very small matter, but when the question of rights and privileges is being discussed in such glowing terms by members of the government I think it is appropriate that we should look into the whole question.

In 1954 the former leader of the Conservative party, the Hon. George Drew, took very great exception to the fact that a wire recorder was used experimentally in a committee—the committee on external affairs—and he had this to say in the House of Commons on a question of privilege. I will read part of what he said to show that he and many other members of his party felt that there should be no encroachment on the prerogatives of hon. members of this house. On page 3845 of Hansard of Wednesday, April 7, the Hon. George Drew said, and I quote in part:

> I place this before you, Mr. Speaker, because there has been a very strong objection to the introduction of recording devices here in this house except in those cases whereby, with consent, the speeches of persons such as President Eisenhower or Mr. Churchill or others who recently visited us were broadcast.

Then he goes on to say:

> It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that is is not within the authority of any committee to depart from established practices in regard to methods of procedure even though the committees have full right to decide their own procedure within well established rules.

I go on, quoting from the hon. gentleman's remarks:

> If the committee has the right to start taking tape recordings by microphones which could then in turn be broadcast, either in whole or in part, then the next step could easily be television.

I think it is a wonderful thing that the people across Canada should be enabled to see the opening of parliament and procedures in this house, but I do inquire with regard to the change in procedure that was made and the encroachment on members' prerogatives by the action that was taken. I do not know where this action originated; I have not been able to contact the former Speaker. Perhaps those in authority on our side of the house agreed with the arrangement; nevertheless, when members of the present government feel so strongly about the supremacy of parliament and the prerogatives of hon. members within this house I feel that they should at least have contacted the 260 or more members who were to be televised on that occasion.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, I have a few general remarks to make, more particularly on one or two of the items dealing with the Department of Agriculture. I understood the Minister of Finance to say during his statement that the passage of this motion for supply would not in any way prejudice our rights to have full discussion of agriculture or other estimates during this session. If that is right, and if the minister can assure me that we will have the privilege of discussing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for 1957 and 1958 during this session I will expedite the matter by taking my seat at this time.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I gave that assurance in the most explicit terms. There is not one item here which will not be before us again in committee of supply, and there will be the fullest opportunity for examining it. It is not a question of privilege; it is a question of hon. members' rights which are fully preserved by the undertaking I gave in time-honoured terms during the debate.

Mr. McLeod: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, then I will resume my seat.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, the debate on supply provides hon. members of this house with an opportunity to draw the attention of the administration to problems or difficulties which exist within their part of the realm, and which affect the constituencies they represent here. I rise at this time only to point out that there are very serious difficulties and problems in the prairie region, problems which have reached disastrous proportions.

The ruinous policies of the former government are only too evident in our part of the country, and at the present time in the particular area from which I come 60 to 75 per cent of the agricultural producers have not been permitted to deliver even one bushel of the grain on their farms this year. As the result of "flooded" elevators and the inability to get box cars farmers are in a disastrous position.

I wish to say that the hopes of all agricultural producers rose very rapidly when they heard from the present administration that it was the intention of this government to see that those engaged in agriculture would be assured of their fair share of the national income.

They are watching this house very closely and waiting patiently to see that this promise is carried out in meeting the dire situation that exists at the present time. I do think, however, immediate action is necessary to prevent a further decline which might occur even within the next few weeks before the debate on the address on the speech from the throne is completed and legislation is put through. I rise at this time because I firmly believe immediate action is necessary.

Agricultural producers in that area who are unable to deliver any grain have undertaken the arduous task of feeding much of that grain to livestock. Much of that livestock in the form of hogs is ready to market and cattle now constitute practically the only means by which they can receive remuneration for their year's work. The price to the producers of that livestock is dropping rapidly and they fear that a continuation of this trend will produce disastrous results.

I urge this as an immediate course of action on the part of the present administration and I direct my remarks particularly to the Minister of Agriculture because the people in that area are looking to him for action. In order to prevent a decline we urge that two steps be taken. The first is that an immediate floor price be established on all livestock products. Already the prices of these commodities on the market are below the costs of production. Should a further decline occur it cannot fail to have disastrous consequences. At this time of year particularly on the regular market operations a decline seems to be inevitable.

The second step we would urge the minister to adopt, if necessary by order in council, is that he immediately set up a board of livestock commissioners to ensure that livestock, and particularly cattle as it is taken from the producer, is properly graded. At the present time there is no proper grading of livestock to protect the interest of the producer. When he brings his livestock to the stockyard he has to accept whatever grade and price the packing house buyers offer him for his commodity. It then goes on the market and he has no assurance that his animals are graded properly and must accept whatever price and grade they see fit to place upon it.

I outline these two steps as a matter of deep concern and as a course of action which will do a great deal to restore confidence in the hearts and minds of Canadian agricultural producers that this government intends to see that this important segment of our population receives a fair share of the national income. I do not believe these producers can be assured of their share of the national income unless these two steps are taken. I sincerely urge the government to do this now in order to prevent a further decline and increased suffering on the part of those who are looking to this government for some remedy for this grave situation. I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance and seriousness of this question and it would be a matter of extremely wise policy on the part of the government to immediately carry out the two steps I have indicated.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on this motion because I have been endeavouring to find out something concerning the promise of an amount of money that was to be made available for extra work on the Canadian National Railways in Moncton and at other terminal points.

On July 10, 1957, His Worship M. M. Baig, mayor of Moncton, Hon. Joseph Bourgeois, minister without portfolio in the New Brunswick government and I sent a telegram to nine of the cabinet ministers of the present government in which we protested the layoff in the shops, asked reconsideration of the matter and recommended the building of additional railway equipment in Moncton. This was not a strange request at all because a few years ago the present Minister of Transport came to Moncton as the president of the Progressive Conservative association and at that time termed the existing layoff as deplorable and unnecesary.

However, when I ask him about the same matter now he does not give the same answer. Instead, when I ask him about layoffs although he still continues to say he considers them deplorable he brushes off the subject very quickly and advises that layoffs have to take place from time to time. Apparently now he believes that layoffs have to take place from time to time on the C.N.R. in Moncton and at other points and although I agree with him that this is true under the present circumstances I contend, as he did, that they would be unnecessary if more equipment was built and repaired at the Moncton shops, especially dining car equipment which used to be repaired and built there. There would then be more employment available and these men would not have to be laid off.

When a proposed layoff in the C.N.R. was suggested some two or three years ago the present Minister of Transport as president of the Progressive Conservative association was reported in the press as offering an explanation for the layoffs in these words:

Mr. Hees charged that the situation created by shops lay-offs in this area was aggravated because the work was being shifted to Montreal where the additional employment would mean little, if anything, to that city.

Apparently there is lots of work available in Montreal. The press report continues:

"But," he said, "it is a very serious blow to the Moncton area."

If that was the policy of his party at that time, and he was speaking as president of the Progressive Conservative association, it should be his policy today as Minister of Transport and that of his party.

In answer to our telegram and to the many others addressed to the minister on the same subject we were advised that money would be made available to the Canadian National Railways for the purpose of carrying out extra work in the C.N.R. shops. When I left Moncton a short time ago the men who had been laid off were still not working. The minister advises that the offer is still open to the C.N.R. to institute such a program but apparently that is where his sense of responsibility toward these men who are now walking the streets of Moncton ends. Incidentally some of them told me they voted for the Progressive Conservative party.

What I and the people of my constituency and people in other C.N.R. points as well want to know is how much money has been set aside by this government for extra work at the C.N.R. shops in Moncton and how much has been set aside for additional work at other points on the C.N.R.? I want to know if this situation is going to be corrected or if that is as far as the minister intends to go.

The minister made an interesting statement which is reported in the August 21 issue of the Moncton Times. He said:

"As far as the federal government is concerned, I feel we have done our part."

I do not for one moment believe that the federal government has done its part and it will not have done it until these men are again working in the C.N.R. shops. As the minister said on a previous occasion, the layoff is unnecessary and deplorable and should be remedied by the creation of additional employment in the Moncton shops.

He told us before that the layoff was caused by work being shifted to Montreal. I want to know whether that has any effect on the present layoff. Is that what is happening now? Is work being shifted to Montreal? Besides those men who are laid off from the Canadian National Railways, which is making our unemployment situation worse and worse because there are twice as many people unemployed in the province of New Brunswick now as there were a year ago, there are the former employees of the Canadian government railways and C.N.R. who are on very small pensions.

On May 6, 1957, the former leader of the opposition visited Moncton. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Moncton Times in which the present Prime Minister promised a reconsideration of the Canadian National Railway pension schemes which he claimed were "totally inadequate". The Minister of Transport, in an answer to my question concerning these pensions, gave me the old "due course" answer; when there was anything to announce that he would do it in due course. Well there are not too many pensioners of the old government railway in Moncton; there are several Canadian National Railways pensioners and in due course they are all going to die. I want to know from the minister what action is going to be taken to assist these aged pensioners of the C.N.R., and whether he believes, as his leader does, that these pensions are wholly inadequate.

I have taken up this time to put this on the record because I find there is a great deal to be learned from new cabinet ministers. They are not the same people that they were when they were private members sitting on this side of the house. They are now very concerned with following the rules and that questions must go on the order paper. They disregard your questions by suggesting that you put them on the order paper. This is a practice that I can well remember was not carried out by the new Minister of Transport when he was a private member.

These matters concern money and the voting of money and I would like the answers some time before this motion is passed. How much money has been allotted to the Canadian National Railways for extra work at C.N.R. points? What is the authority for granting this money? I should like also to know how much money has been set aside to look after these—to use the words of the Prime Minister—wholly inadequate pensions of the former Canadian National Railways employees? I know the minister will not repudiate his statement of 1954 and I urge that answers be given and that he tell us what is being done to assist these men in Moncton and in other centres.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter which I wish to raise at this time. It has considerable urgency or else I would not be taking up the time of the committee in raising it. It is also a very practical matter. I assure the committee that there will be no sound and fury connected with this. It is a modest request which I think the Minister of Finance will appreciate very well, and which I am sure his colleagues will be willing to go along with at the earliest possible opportunity.

Hon. members will recall in previous sessions the question of aid to municipalities, so far as this parliament grants aid, has been brought up on a number of occasions. One particular field in which this government could help many municipalities at this time would be in making available funds for capital outlay which today is costing the average municipality a large amount of money. I think it is commonly known that the issuing of debentures for capital expenditures is becoming more and more expensive. Because of the increase in the cost of such debentures and the discounts which the municipalities have to offer at this time the problem is becoming of very serious concern to municipalities right across the country.

The former member for Okanagan Boundary on many occasions raised the question of reactivating, or making use of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, which was placed on the statutes in 1938 and which has a provision under which the Minister of Finance, with the consent of the government, may advance moneys to municipalities at 2 per cent for self-liquidating projects. We know that this act has not been used for a number of years. The standard reply, whenever the hon. member, and others to whom I shall refer in a moment, asked the government to put the provisions of this act back into practice was that this was designed primarily as a relief measure during the days of unemployment, and that it was not considered desirable to use the act in recent years.

From that point of view alone, considering the speech we have just heard from the hon. member for Westmorland, and from hon. members who have spoken in the last day or two, it would appear that the situation now calls for a re-appraisal of this act. Perhaps the unemployment situation alone would warrant the use of this act, but there is a more important reason than merely the unemployment situation, namely the financial position in which the municipalities find themselves.

I do not need to weary the committee with many statistics. All we need to do is to look through the accounts of the municipalities of Canada and we shall find that they are going into debt. Not only that, they are finding it increasingly difficult, even at an enhanced interest rate, to sell their debentures unless they offer them at a considerable discount. The result of that is that many very desirable projects either are being postponed or delayed by the municipalities because of the cost of money during these inflationary times. The cost of materials and labour is high. The cost of raising capital, in addition to other costs, is becoming prohibitive. If the government were to reactivate this act, put it into effect and make use of it, I feel sure that they could make a very substantial saving for the municipalities right across this country.

I have hope that the government will do this because looking back through the record I find that not only did the former member for Okanagan Boundary champion this cause in the house very ably but to his assistance came various other members of the opposition, including the then official opposition. The hon. member for Greenwood spoke on this question as late as the 21st of February of this year and in order to show how strongly the Progressive Conservative party was behind the idea of granting some assistance to municipalities he put on the record an amendment that had been moved by the former leader of the Progressive Conservative party, Mr. Drew, on April 30, 1956. I should like to quote that part of the amendment dealing with the question of aid to municipalities. It can be found at page 1510 of Hansard of February 21, 1957 and is in these words:

> This house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to measures to assist the municipalities of Canada to meet their mounting financial problems . . .

That is not the end of the amendment but I stop there because that is the part having to do with the matter I am now discussing. I draw to the attention of the government the fact that that amendment was moved on April 30, 1956, and the speeches which followed indicated that the problem was immediate and urgent at that time. A considerable length of time, approximately a year and a half, has elapsed and the problem has become more urgent and more immediate. I think that the government should now be prepared to make use of that act to help to alleviate the situation.

I should also like to mention that later the same day the hon. member for Vancouver East made a very strong plea for the use of this legislation in order to help municipalities to obtain capital funds at a reasonable cost. Referring again to the record, we find that on the 21st of February the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary once more made his plea, and as we go through the record we find that even as late as March of this year all three parties then in opposition were advocating strongly that the act should be used for that purpose. I do not wish to take the time to find the references but members of the Social Credit party also took the same position.

In view of what had taken place I wrote to the Minister of Finance about this matter on September 30 this year and in that letter I brought to his attention by way of reminder the demands that had been made by the three parties in opposition which, incidentally, now control a majority of the house and are in a position to carry out the things which they advocate. I asked him if he would be prepared to recommend to the government at the earliest possible opportunity that the act be put back into operation. I received a reply from the minister on the 5th of October, and I will only quote that part of the letter having to do with this matter. It is in these words:

> I have carefully noted your suggestions concerning the revived use of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. This subject has been given some consideration. I know that you realize that the concurrence of the provincial government in each case is required with respect to every project under the terms of that legislation.

That is the end of the letter so far as this question is concerned. I am going to make particular reference to the last part of the minister's reply where he points out that in each case the concurrence of the province is required with regard to funds advanced for a particular project because I would not want the committee or the public to get the impression that the concurrence of the provincial government is required for the purpose of putting the act back into business. That is not the case.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

All that is required is an order in council by the government. The matter does not even require parliamentary action. The act is now on the statute books. It has been there since 1938 and is still valid legislation. All that would be required would be for the government to pass an order in council proclaiming that the act is available to municipalities requiring such funds. It is only if any municipality then applied for a loan under the act that the provincial government would come into the picture. The way that the government of the province comes into the picture is simply that they have to guarantee to the federal government the loan advanced to the municipality, something which in the natural course of events I feel sure any provincial government would do.

In fact some provincial governments are now doing something similar to what is provided in this act without any participation by the federal government at all. They are doing it on their own. It would be very much easier for them simply to have to guarantee such loans than actually to have to advance the money involved.

That being the case and considering the history of the demands made by the members of the parties then in the opposition I would expect that with the least possible delay and at a very early date the federal government would make such an announcement. If they feel that they would like to consult with the provinces before doing so, I see nothing wrong with that. In fact, that is one reason why I am raising the question at this time. We know that in a reasonably short time there will be a dominion-provincial conference at which this and other related matters will be discussed. That would be a most appropriate and convenient time for the federal government to consult with the provincial premiers as to their readiness to participate in the operation of the act if the federal government should decide to put it into effect.

I do wish to make an earnest plea to the government not to forget the provisions of this act and I do so because of the plight in which municipalities find themselves. I suppose examples could be given by any member of the house. I refer only to those that concern my own constituency, and I happen to know that there are municipalities in my constituency which are finding it very difficult to sell debentures at the interest rate to which they have been accustomed traditionally, and even at the higher interest rate at which such debentures are now being offered they are finding that they have to sell them at a considerable discount.

This means that there is a totally unnecessary drain upon the taxpayers of the particular municipality in providing funds which are available under federal legislation which the government of recent years has not seen fit to use, but which I hope the present government will be prepared to make use of in view of the attitude they took even as late as February and March of this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising to say a word or two about the further supplementary estimates, No. 2, the part of the estimates for which I imagine the Minister of Finance takes full responsibility along with his other colleagues even though he seems, in a singular display of lack of collective responsibility, to have dissociated himself from his other colleagues with respect to the earlier estimates. However, my hon. friend, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, smoked out from the Minister of Finance an admission which we were all interested and, I think, surprised to hear, that after four months in office he had not yet been able to find any savings he could make in the estimates we brought before the house.

Mr. Fleming: I said no such thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: And he hoped that by trying hard for the next six months he would be able to find something somewhere.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Are you preaching for a call too?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Fleming: That bears no resemblance whatever to what I said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not preaching for a call nor am I preaching. I leave that to the Prime Minister. I, sir, have no pretensions of being a Billy Sunday or even a Billy Graham.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There is another form of "Billy" though.

Mr. Harkness: You certainly do not have the qualifications.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor do I pretend to have them. When hon. gentlemen opposite have finished their jeering, perhaps I can, following the example that the Prime Minister gave us yesterday, continue with my remarks, which are serious. When Mr. Harris was minister of finance I was able to persuade him to put into the estimates a sum of some $40 million for the department for which I then had responsibility.

I observe that far from finding any savings to make in that department, the new government has increased the estimates of that department—and has done it entirely on its own responsibility—by practically another $10 million which is a 25 per cent increase. That is, I suppose, as big an increase as there has ever been in the estimates of a peacetime department since confederation.

I had lunch, unlike the Minister of Finance, and therefore I was not able to look up any phony precedents. But I should be greatly surprised if halfway through a year, the estimates of a civil department in peacetime ever before had to be increased by 25 per cent. No doubt that was because Mr. Harris was so very thrifty and I was so very willing to go along with him.

Mr. Fulton: It might be bad estimating.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not bad estimating on the high side, as I think the acting minister will be obliged to admit, because he must take the responsibility for asking for this amount of money, namely nearly $10 million. I would not be greatly surprised if the minister asked for more and, like Oliver Twist, got treated by the Minister of Finance in the way in which Oliver Twist was treated, this Minister of Finance who is trying to give the public the impression that he is the same kind of overseer as there was in Oliver Twist, but who is not making much of a job of it.

I should not be at all surprised if the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, for whose abilities I must confess I have more respect than I have for those of most of the other occupants of the treasury benches and for whose abilities the Prime Minister evidently has more respect than he has for those of most of his colleagues because he has given him two extremely heavy portfolios to carry, has good and adequate reasons for all these increases.

I am not rising with any suggestion that they should be opposed, at least until I have heard the explanation of them. I am rising for another reason. A good deal has been said since the election about the subject of immigration and something was said about it before the election. What was said before the election, by hon. gentlemen opposite, is so different from the things they have been saying since the election that I feel that before this large sum of money is voted we should be given some kind of explanation of this light which they saw, not on the road to Damascus but on the road to office, which seems to have changed so completely the kind of opinions they expressed before the election.

The Prime Minister made a speech to an organization which we all know and which I certainly respect greatly. This organization has done a great deal to help in making better Canadians of the newcomers who have come to our country to become citizens. I refer to the Ethnic Press Association. The Prime Minister made a speech to them which is reported in the Globe and Mail which at that time was an almost slavish organ of hon. gentlemen opposite. I understand the Globe and Mail now sometimes criticize them but at that time it did not do so. I would presume that the Prime Minister and his colleagues would be quite satisfied with the Globe and Mail report. It appeared on April 27 of this year and states as follows:

At his first stop of the day—

That refers to the present Prime Minister.

—a conference with the Ethnic Press Association in Toronto—Mr. Diefenbaker filled in the detail of one aspect of that program.

I may say that the previous part of the report refers to his program generally.

Development, he told the editors of foreign language publications, demands manpower. The only way to meet the needs for skill and talents is through accelerated—

And I emphasize that word "accelerated".

—immigration.

Mind you, this was in April of this year.

A government formed by the Conservatives, he added, will undertake an intensive immigration policy that will make available to all sections of the country those talents and skills.

The Conservatives, he continued, will end the arbitrary and unjust interpretation of immigration regulations which have been a feature of Liberal immigration policy and which have constituted a denial and vote of immigration legislation.

I think there must be a misprint of some kind there.

The only limit on immigration—

And this is the part I should particularly like to draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite.

—should be the capacity of Canada to absorb newcomers into her economic life.

That, I may say, is straight Liberal doctrine taken from Mr. Mackenzie King's statement in this house on May 1, 1947, a statement about immigration policy that has worn very well and one that I think the present government will find it fairly hard to depart from without getting themselves into serious trouble.

Australia's forward-looking immigration policy,—

In those days the Prime Minister was perhaps a greater admirer of Australia than he was after he came back from London.

—Mr. Diefenbaker emphasized, has produced the conclusion that it can absorb just under four per cent a year of its total population.

Such a yardstick applied to Canada would establish the target of 640,000 immigrants a year, or more than four times the number that came to Canada in 1956.

I leave hon. members to form their own estimate as to why this speech was made to the Ethnic Press Association instead of, for example, being made to the Loyal Orange Association. However, it was a fairly definite statement that the Prime Minister intended to increase immigration by two or three times what we were achieving in the year 1957, which is, or will turn out to have been, the greatest year for immigration since 1913. Of course I regard the figure of 640,000 as being a completely fantastic figure for any one year. However that is the figure the Prime Minister used, presumably when he was appealing to the people to vote for him to carry out his policies, and presumably he meant what he said. Of course, if he did not mean what he said, those of us on this side of the house would think that he should not have said it.

But what do we find? The first thing this government did, the very first action they took to change anything after they came into office, was to restrict the existing immigration. Far from accelerating it or intensifying it, they restricted it severely and handled it in such a ham-handed fashion, if I may use that expression, that the officials of the department for days afterwards were obliged to explain what the minister had meant by the original statement he issued.

Those of us who have had some experience in this field know that after the efforts that had been made by Mr. Harris, myself and the officials of the department under our direction for a good many years to build up a service in the United Kingdom, we were really getting a response this year and were getting the best class of immigrants that we have obtained for years from the United Kingdom. This whole movement had cold water poured on it by the hon. gentleman who was giving his spare time to the immigration department while he was learning how to be Minister of Justice evidently because his colleague the hon. member for Three Rivers was not considered to be worthy of occupying the post of Minister of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: There may be another explanation, but that is one the press gave.

Mr. Fleming: Pretty mean!

Mr. Pickersgill: In any event, whatever the reason the Prime Minister may have had for giving no departmental responsibilities to the hon. member for Three Rivers, the hon. member for St. John's West or the hon. member for Greenwood and giving two portfolios to the hon. member for Kamloops, I do not know it.

An hon. Member: And you will probably never find out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, but I do know that there are probably very few members on either side of the house who will accuse me of being indolent in the performance of my duties when I occupied the office of Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

An hon. Member: Not indolent but ineffective.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, of course, I think the proof of the pudding is probably in the eating. Yes, I was ineffective. I was ineffective because I encouraged immigration, but the hon. gentleman is effective, yes, in stopping it.

Now it has always been the policy of the Liberal party, and it still is our policy, that we should not encourage people to come to this country to be unemployed. I would not for a moment advocate an immigration policy which was going to bring more people into Canada than could be absorbed and be absorbed fairly readily and quickly into the economy. That was our policy and it was one which proved pretty successful over the past 10 years when we had a greater growth in our population than in any previous period in our history. It may be that it was wise in all the circumstances to give careful consideration—as I had planned to give had I remained in office—to what should be the course to be taken later in the year.

Mr. Fulton: You had already decided to restrict immigration and issued instructions on April 12.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement, Mr. Chairman, is not in any proper sense of the word correct.

Mr. Fulton: It is absolutely correct and I have the departmental papers in front of me to prove it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say that I did ask the officials of the department to make a very careful study of what should be done after the election. I made no final decision except with respect to certain arrangements that had been made with regard to transportation and certain other technical arrangements which it had begun to appear to me would not be necessary. I did consider, however, that later in the year—and this has happened of course every year—it would be desirable to discourage persons coming into Canada to seek employment. It has been our experience in every year but one since the war that it was not wise to encourage people who were coming here to look for employment to come in the later months of the year.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. gentleman says no decision was reached before the time he relinguished office, how is it that a memorandum was issued to officers overseas on April 12, 1957 instructing them not to make visas valid after July 31, 1957, and I include in this question the question of the shortage of employment, which is the point the hon. member is making.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I can answer that with the greatest of ease. I think perhaps this may be a very dangerous confession to make in this chamber but perhaps I was not so optimistic of my chances of remaining in office as some of the hon. gentlemen opposite were of the chances of the Liberal party remaining in office. I tried in the period from the time of dissolution of parliament on not to commit myself or the government to any course which I was not quite sure I would have the responsibility to carry out.

However, I had a second reason for doing this. It was perfectly apparent in the middle of April that the number of immigrants who were coming this year—particularly from the United Kingdom—was so great that before the end of July, it seemed to me, it would be necessary to take another look at the numbers involved. This instruction that no valid visas for open placement were to be issued after July 31, 1957 was simply a precautionary measure which any prudent minister should have taken and which, it happens, I did take.

Mr. Fulton: That was the decision to which I referred.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the minister first made his statement he did not try to blame it on me or on the Liberal government but, when the Tory newspaper began to criticize him—

Mr. Fulton: No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill:—then he went about the country saying that all he had done was what we had decided to do before he took office. I had thought better of him than that. I had thought that the hon. gentleman could stand on his own feet and take the punishment for his own acts and not try to shift responsibility onto others.

No, the fact of the matter is that after the election I made only one decision which was not purely on a day to day matter. In the interval between June 10 and the day I relinquished my portfolio I made a decision to continue the airlift to Vienna until July 31. The contract expired on June 30 and I thought it only fair, right and proper to give my successor a reasonable opportunity to decide what policy he wished to follow with respect to the Hungarian refugees. I had to make up my mind whether to extend that contract for another month and I thought, "Now, if I were coming into office what would I consider the fair and decent thing to do?" It seemed to me it was to give a reasonable time for a decision to be made. I therefore extended the contract until July 31. What is more, and I am sure my hon. friend will corroborate me, I telephoned him and told him what I had done and I said I thought I ought to bring this matter to his attention because there was a question of policy involved.

Mr. Fulton: Correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: I felt he was entitled to have time to consider what policy he would adopt. Perhaps that is not the way party politicians should behave but I think it was the proper way, if I may borrow a word from the Minister of Finance, for gentlemen to behave.

I come to another aspect of the immigration policy which I must say shocked me even more and I think it shocked a great many Canadians even more than this matter to which I have referred. There are some of us who have the most vivid recollections of those days at the end of October and the beginning of November last when the world situation was even more tense than it is today and when one part of the soviet world was in flames and the Russians, with a brutality that some of us have not yet forgotten, came and crushed a people seeking to be free when a quarter of a million human beings had to flee from their country with nothing but the clothes they were wearing.

At that time the present Minister of Justice, the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, made a statement which is reported in the Ottawa Journal of November 6, a statement which I think I should read:

> Davie Fulton proposed Monday that Canada give unrestricted asylum to Hungarian refugees fleeing from Soviet butchery.
> The Conservative member for Kamloops, B.C., candidate for the national Conservative leadership,—

That is in the story; I would not have brought it up otherwise.

> —said this was the least Canada could do.

Mr. Hees: You are making a pitch, are you Jack?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish the hon. member for Broadview would answer the questions that are directed to him by other members of the house instead of interrupting those who as private members are making their maiden speeches.

Mr. Hees: Is this your maiden speech? It is an awful poor one.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend from Essex East says that the Minister of Finance has instructed the Minister of Transport not to reply to the questions asked him. This is my maiden speech as a private member in opposition, and if I am behaving too responsibly I can only apologize to the house.

An hon. Member: You are shivering.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very nervous, I admit, and perhaps it is rather unwise for a novice to advertise an experienced politician like the hon. member for Kamloops as I am doing, but I still think we ought to have on record in Hansard these words from the article in the Ottawa Journal on November 6, because they have a bearing upon what that hon. member did later.

> An offer of immediate asylum by Canada would, I believe spur other free nations to similar action, he added in a statement released in Ottawa and at Kamloops.
> We are all in full accord with the resolution of the United Nations assembly condemning this latest butchery on the part of the soviet. But it is essential that the free nations do something to prove to those who risk their lives for freedom that their efforts are supported by more than the passing of resolutions.
> I believe Canada should offer immediate and unrestricted asylum to all those Hungarians whose efforts in the cause of liberty now force them to flee as homeless refugees. They were in fact fighting our battle, too.

This is pretty eloquent language. I continue to quote the brief statement:

> There is little enough we can do to assist by direct intervention and the task of those trying to liberate their countries from the iron yoke of communism must be almost beyond bearing when they see how remote are the prospects of immediate help.

Just let me repeat one sentence of those I have just read:

> I believe Canada should offer immediate and unrestricted asylum to all those Hungarians whose efforts in the cause of liberty now force them to flee as homeless refugees.

That was said by the same gentleman whose first act as a minister of the crown which was not a purely routine act slammed the door in the faces of these Hungarian refugees.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, it is with a certain diffidence that I enter this discussion which to a large extent appears to be in the nature of a family quarrel between the ardent supporters of the government on the other side of the house and their no less determined supporters sitting on this side. And I am sure we who belong to the only opposition party will be forgiven if we derive a certain sardonic amusement from watching the embarrassments of the late administration. The first thing they should remember is that like the ancient mariner in Coleridge's poem they always have the albatross of their past misdeeds hanging around their necks.

However governments come and go but our constituents still have a number of urgent problems, and it is some of these urgent problems which affect my constituents that I wish to bring up now.

I was very pleased when I saw that one of the cabinet offices had been filled by a friend from British Columbia in the person of the Minister of Public Works. The matter I want to discuss comes within his department and it is a matter whose importance we have always had great difficulty in impressing on previous holders of that office. I refer to the very serious situation that now exists on the Pacific coast with regard to the provision of small boat harbours on Vancouver island and the adjacent mainland. I have a suspicion that previous ministers, not being fortunate enough to come from the Pacific coast, tend to look at the map and to see a very serrated coastline and to imagine that there must be unlimited numbers of safe harbours in the region. However anyone who is familiar with the situation knows that this is not the case and that the number of harbours in which small boats can tie up in safety in all weathers is extremely limited.

The problem is becoming very acute because of a new development—one which I presume is taking place on the Atlantic coast, too—namely the tremendous expansion of small boat ownership. There are places in British Columbia where small harbours are literally carpeted from side to side with boats, and there are innumerable small boats which are unable to find safe anchorage at all; indeed, some of my neighbours are obliged to haul their boats up by tracks to safety rather than leave them at anchorage in the event of the mildest of storms.

I would urge the new Minister of Public Works to have a very comprehensive survey made with regard to the need of the people of the Pacific coast for a large extension of small boat harbours, and to do so in connection with what I believe is the projected plan of the provincial government for the development of marine harbours. Here, I think, is a sphere in which the Department of Public Works should take the initiative more vigorously than it has done in the past.

There is another matter I wish to deal with, one that I have already taken up with two of the incoming ministers. It is a question I took up two years ago with the then minister of labour, and that is the employment of Canadian welders on the new pipe line project now going on throughout the country. I made particular reference to the fact that in British Columbia two years ago I had received complaints that Canadian welders were not being given employment on these pipe line jobs. In most instances the contractors in charge of construction are United States firms, and in many instances the companies for which they are operating the pipe lines are controlled by United States capital. I received numerous complaints that it is virtually impossible for Canadian welders to get employment.

I brought this up in the House of Commons and asked the then minister of labour to investigate the matter. He did so, and gave me a reassuring answer that the only United States personnel being admitted to the country to work on these pipe lines were a limited number of supervisory personnel. Later, I received still more complaints, very well substantiated, and these I investigated as fully as I was able. I interviewed those in charge of the technical school in Nanaimo, I interviewed the graduates at that school, and some men who were personally known to me as having worked on engineering projects. Everywhere I found the same story and it was to my mind a shocking story.

It was brought extremely forcibly to my attention during the election campaign when I was speaking at one of the large construction job sites in my constituency. The first man I encountered was one with whom I had worked four or five years previous in the shipyards at Victoria. When I knew him he was a highly skilled welder and in addition to that he took extra courses to familiarize himself with the specific job of pipe-line welding. He told me that the first job he went on required the service of 24 welders of whom 23 were American citizens and that the company and the 23 American welders made life so miserable for him that he quit within six weeks. This story was repeated to me over and over again by responsible people.

I wrote to the Minister of Labour and to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and I have no complaint whatever with regard to the replies I received from those two gentlemen. I have no suggestion whatever that their replies were anything but perfectly sincere replies. I feel, however, that they were grossly misinformed, otherwise they would not have been able to write me in the reassuring terms in which they did.

I found for instance that the union which has the certified bargaining rights for these jobs in British Columbia is called on to supply welders. They do supply welders and within about three weeks these men are eased off the job and the company concerned applies to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration advising that there are no more available welders, they having exhausted the supply from the union, and then welders from the United States are permitted to enter and this is done under somewhat dubious classifications. In fact they invented a new classification of a pipe-line specialist which does not explain exactly what they are a specialist in.

I suggest to both the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that they should have a much more thorough investigation made of the situation before next spring when work is going to open up again on these projects. I think everyone knows that at that time we are going to be facing a rather high level of unemployment and there is going to be gross unrest if this same situation continues as has obtained in the past.

I would also suggest to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that he should consider some revision of our immigration relationships with the United States because no Canadian can go down to the United States and obtain work on projects of that nature in the way in which citizens of that country have been able to enter Canada.

Many of them, I might add, come into Canada deliberately under false pretences and make no bones about it. In fact, some of them boast of it. Some of them boast of coming to Canada pretending to come in as landed immigrants to be settlers and then they jeer and say, "The only reason we came here is to skim the cream off and we are going back to the United States when this is done". Such things are happening and I suggest that this new government had better twist the arm of some of their officials in order to obtain a more realistic report than they have had in the past.

There is one other matter with which I want to deal and it is a subject of wider importance than the two I have already discussed. I note that in the measure before us we are to vote one-twelfth of the estimates for the Department of National Defence which will mean if my arithmetic is approximately correct the sum of $145 million. I am, of course, quite ready to admit it may be very difficult at this particular time to suddenly terminate certain projects that have been undertaken but I do hope that some time before this session ends we shall have from the Minister of National Defence an indication that he and his officials are making a realistic survey of Canada's defence position in light of the new technological achievements of which there has been so much publicity in recent weeks.

I was particularly pleased when I heard the Minister of National Defence, as reported at page 38 of yesterday's Hansard, say these words:

> I am confident that the militia—
> In its new role of civil defence—
> —will render the same patriotic service in this role as it has always done, rather than seeking some phony, glamorous role which hardly exists.

I submit that only a gentleman with the impeccable military record of the Minister of National Defence perhaps would dare to make such a statement but I heartily applaud him for having done so and I trust he will apply the same rather brutal realism to some other aspects of our armed forces in light of the developments that have taken place.

I think there is very little doubt that it would be quite difficult for the minister or his colleagues to justify from the point of view of actual real defence the expenditure of the $145 million we have been asked to provide today. As I said at the beginning, I can appreciate the difficulties at this time of suddenly chopping things off but I do hope that the new minister is going to be as courageous as I know he can be and face this matter courageously and tell the Canadian people exactly where they stand in the age of the spudnik.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of the new government some of the problems that exist under the Disabled Persons Act. This act has never worked satisfactorily. In my estimation a disabled person is a person who cannot earn his livelihood. People in various provinces who have applied for the disability pension have been denied it because they are not confined to bed or because they are able to dress themselves or for some other reason. I want the new government to do something about this problem.

I believe I have been in every province in Canada and when travelling I always make inquiries concerning the administration of this act. I have learned that in some places the disability pension can be obtained easily and the doctors who examine the applicants are humane. On the other hand it is denied to applicants in other provinces.

I appeal to the appropriate minister to do something about the situation. I appealed to the former minister to call a conference of the doctors involved in the administration of the act across the dominion with a view to obtaining agreement between them as to who should be awarded the disability pension. I know people in my own constituency who are unable to earn their bread and butter and who are unable to draw a pension under the act.

I also wish to draw to the attention of the government the fact that in the Red river valley we are having trouble getting our boats out to the lake. This is a matter which requires immediate attention because the men in Selkirk and in various towns around the lake depend on the boats bringing in the fish for their livelihood. I appeal to the Minister of Public Works to do something about this very soon.

We will have to have a survey at the end of the lake. Perhaps if the department investigates the situation it will be decided that a better outlet could be provided. There are quite a few outlets at the mouth of the river and perhaps it would be desirable to open up a new one to prevent the boats being held up for eight or nine hours when entering with a load of fish.

I am not going to take up the time of the committee in speaking at length and I have no wish to delay the rest of the debate. However, I am not going to say I do not want results from my plea because I do want results, if you please.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have the ear of the Minister of Public Works for a moment in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister and, I presume, Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am not sure whether the minister was in the house this morning when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made his excellent maiden speech in which he urged the Prime Minister to give careful consideration to the question of recognizing the government of the mainland of China.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway indicated that he expected Vancouver to become the principal city in Canada some day, and if we would face up to the potential trade with the vast area of the world that is close to Canada it would establish the right of the city of Vancouver to become one of the largest Canadian cities. Because of the situation of our trade position today and because of the large number of people in China who are potential customers the government of Canada might follow the pattern of the British government rather than the pattern of Washington and try to promote trade with China.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway pointed out, the recognition of the government of China does not mean the approval of what has happened in that country. I think the time has come now, because of the large volume of commodities that are piling up in Canada, when we should explore potential trade with China. I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would give some indication that his government are prepared to change the attitude of the previous government of Canada on this important question.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I have always been interested in national hospital insurance. I am sure that most of the people of Canada are greatly interested in this matter, and particularly those connected with hospitals. I would respectfully ask the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of National Health and Welfare to answer some of the questions that were asked in the debate today.

Mr. Herridge: It was not my intention to speak again in this debate but I am moved to do so by the matter which was brought before the committee by the hon. member for Nanaimo. I heartily support his remarks with respect to the immigration of certain United States workers into Canada, because the same situation has existed in southeastern British Columbia in the building of the pipe line, which the hon. member so ably described. I have had a number of cases brought to my attention where these men freely admitted to fellow workers that they came in as landed immigrants and our immigration officials knew nothing about it. They work on the pipe line until it is completed and return to the United States. In addition to that, there are others coming in as visitors. I know our immigration officials are doing the very best they can in the circumstances but certainly some amendment to the regulations is required in order to correct the situation.

The immigration officials in the ports in British Columbia are keeping a very close watch on this situation. I told them these immigrants were coming from somewhere else and they discovered that quite a number of these chaps were coming in through Coutts, I think it is, in Alberta. Whichever way they come in, it is difficult for the immigration officials to do anything about it when they come in as landed immigrants. I was very interested in a story which one immigration official told me. A Texan came in and he had a gun on each hip. He was told he could not bring his weapons into Canada and he said he had never been separated from his shooting irons at any time in his life before. Anyway he was persuaded to leave them on the desk in the immigration office and the immigration officer had a peek through the barrels and found that both of them were plugged with rust. This is a sample of the importance of the attitude of mind in understanding Canadian procedures. I do urge that an amendment be considered.

I might say that in southeastern British Columbia the company refuses to have anything to do with the national employment service. They hire at the shed door every morning. They like to line up the workers for jobs, and they go down the line and say, "You, you and you", and so on. If they had co-operated with the national employment service it might have been of some assistance on keeping a check on who was employed and who was not.

I rose to bring this to the attention of the ministers concerned. I also thank the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration for writing me fully, as he did. I am quite sure, as the hon. member for Nanaimo said, he wrote according to the information he had in hand.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, in an exchange during the question period the Minister of Public Works attempted to point with some pride to the new low-cost housing money which is being made available. However, I should like to suggest that the effectiveness or otherwise of the proposal to which some publicity was given in the papers not so long ago, depends on how is it working out in individual cases. I hold in my hand a report which I have received as an example of just how the so-called low-cost housing proposal, as it has existed up to now, is working out in many instances. I feel that it might be valuable, while we are considering this interim supply motion, to pass on this information to the minister and to the committee.

This report comes from a couple who are interested in the proposals as they read them in the newspapers. They report that they have been busy investigating, as they hoped it would be of help to them and many people in their category to get a start on owning their own home instead of paying out high rent which has no ceiling, as they say, in British Columbia. This is their report of their actual experience and what happened. They said:

> First, my husband went to a bank for information which was not available from the manager as he said he knew no more than what was in the papers.

Then the wife went one day to the manager with some other questions and was informed that they would have to see the Central Mortgage and Housing office in Nanaimo, which is the nearest office to them. Her husband took a day off from work and they went to Nanaimo to find out about it. This resulted in the fact that they found the manager and his assistant both away from the office. There may have been a legitimate reason for that. They were able to get some little information from the stenographers in the office on the rules and regulations. The next day they telephoned the manager in charge and were told that they would have to go and see the bank. They went to the bank and by that time the manager apparently was able to tell them what they could do and what they could not do and, as they comment, it was mostly what they could not do. This woman goes on to explain that her husband has a good job at a wage of approximately $2.00 an hour but they could not qualify because the wages would not come within the specifications required. I think this is important if one is going to think in terms of low-cost housing, because certainly to many of the citizens in many parts of Canada $2.00 an hour is not considered to be a low wage.

Following that, they went to see a contractor. He told them that a house with a thousand square feet of floor space and two bedrooms would cost between $13,000 and $14,000 and possibly more, if they had to follow the specifications laid down by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. They go on to say that they cannot see how that kind of price can apply to people in their income category. They go on to explain that apparently they would need at least $4,000 to put into the project before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation provision could come into effect. As they explain, if they had $4,000 they would not need to go to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation because they could easily use that $4,000 as a down payment on an older type of house and pay off the remainder on the basis of monthly rental payments.

They go on to say that they want something they can handle, that they need to have a two-bedroom house because the father of one of the couples who is an old age pensioner lives with them. They are anxious to get away from the never-ending payment of high rent which is, as we all realize, money down the drain as far as the position of these people is concerned.

I put this little story before the committee because it is an actual instance of the need and desire of a couple receiving what I imagine the minister would agree is not a low wage to be able to take advantage of the so-called new low-cost housing money that he mentioned was being made available when he answered a question the other day. I submit that if the experience this couple has had in attempting to secure information and in finding how far the proposal actually goes when it is translated into an individual request is an example of what the proposal means, then certainly we should be looking for something much better before the minister has any right to suggest that he has made any major change as far as availability of low-cost housing money is concerned.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to have the officers of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation investigate this particular case but it happens that I have received a statement from the president this afternoon which reads:

The fifth week of operations under the agency arrangement was highlighted by a record volume of approvals and indications that both British Columbia and the maritimes are now taking fuller advantage of the facilities afforded.

This has only been in effect for five weeks.

The value of loans processed during the week—

That is, the fifth week.

—was in excess of $13,500,000 for 1,396 units. This brings the total for the period September 9 to October 11 to more than $34,100,000 for 3,440 units.

I point out to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that works out to an average loan of less than $10,000.

In addition, there still appears to be a potential of approximately $67,500,000, which comprises requests for loan amount or requests for approval in our offices, or applications still in the hands of approved lenders.

That would indicate that already the total is likely to be over $100 million, which I regard as a very satisfactory showing in view of the short time the plan has been in effect.

Mr. Barnett: The statement made by the minister is quite an interesting one. Certainly it shows that some advantage is being taken of the plan. But I notice that no reference is made in the statement, nor have I seen any direct references in the press—there may have been some which escaped my notice—at what sort of income level the money is available. The question arises in my mind whether the money is going to people who are in a financial position far above the particular people I mentioned whose income is at an average level of $2 an hour. As I understand the announcement made by the minister before the house opened, the purpose of the new proposal was to make money available to people in the lower income categories who had not been able to take advantage of the provisions put into operation by the previous administration.

Mr. Green: That is correct.

Mr. Barnett: I should like the minister to give us some indication of how far down the scale of annual or hourly income this money is being applied in the case of the applications now being approved. If in fact the proposal is making it easier for people in the lower income brackets to secure their own houses, I am certainly glad to see it, but the information that has come to me is very similar to the kind of complaint I heard about the availability of housing money under the previous administration.

Mr. Green: I believe the plan has brought about a big reduction in the income level. I admit it would be much better if we could get it even lower. We are getting it down just as low as we can and it certainly has been reduced a great deal over what it was earlier in the year.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I should like a standing vote taken.

Motion (Mr. Fleming) agreed to: Yeas, 147; nays, 0.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Fleming moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, the sum of $305,222,335.25 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As this resolution is in effect a companion one to the resolution that was passed just before the recess, I would suggest to the Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues that it gives them an opportunity to answer some of the questions that were put to them from this side of the house today and which have not yet been answered. Perhaps I might draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to some of those questions but before I do so I should like to offer this comment.

It is interesting to us on this side of the house who in the last session supported the estimates that were placed before parliament to note that hon. members on the government side who were critical of those estimates are now in support of them. I wondered a bit why the Minister of Finance was so anxious to call votes on this measure. He now is prepared to vote for every stage of this resolution. That makes one wonder what he meant the other day when he said that there were some of these estimates that the government was not prepared to support. It looks as though the action today supersedes that announcement and we now know that the government is in support of the estimates that are before the house.

I should like to draw the attention of the minister and of his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the fact that no answer has been given to the questions that were asked earlier today by the hon. member for Essex East and also by the hon. member for Welland, if not by other members as well. It seems to me that when we are being asked to vote a portion of the moneys asked for by the Department of National Health and Welfare we should have a statement as to what, if anything, this government is doing with regard to the program of hospital insurance.

The other day I was told by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that no agreements have yet been signed. The only information he was able to give was information we had before we left here last April, namely that six provinces had agreed to the plan. I think we should be told whether any effort has been made to get those six provinces to sign an agreement. I think we should also be told whether this government has made any effort to get the other four provinces to enter into the agreement. I feel that he should also tell us whether consideration is being given to broadening the coverage under the plan along the lines which the members of the Progressive Conservative party supported at the last session. After all, this is an extremely important matter, despite the lack of attention paid to it by the Conservatives during the election campaign and despite the absence of reference to it in the speech from the throne.

I noted with interest the one or two statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the press shortly after he became minister; but so far at this session of parliament we have had nothing but silence from the government side on this question. I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East call for a reply and I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will seize upon this opportunity to tell us what is being done with regard to this matter.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not possible for me to get a reply from the minister to whom I directed my question?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, in order to set at rest the doubts that have been conjured up in the mind of my hon. friend, may I repeat what I am recorded at page 11 of Hansard of October 15 as having said in retabling the existing estimates. I said this:

> Since the programs provided for in these estimates were already well advanced when the new government took office, and to avoid the expenditure of a further $20,000 for revising and reprinting them, retabling the existing estimates is considered to be the most reasonable course of action to take under the circumstances.

The word "and" should be in there before the words "to avoid".

> However, this is not to say that the present government will support all of the detailed programs contemplated when those estimates were originally prepared. Rather, such changes as this government proposes to make in the current year programs will be brought to parliament's attention when the individual items affected are being considered by the committee of supply.

Every hon. member knows that one of the important tasks that confront this session of parliament is the voting of supply for the current year. Although there is, in relation to the season of the year, a heavy legislative program otherwise, nevertheless every hon. member knows that we shall require to spend not a little time in the committee of supply reviewing all of these items. At that time there will be a full opportunity for every hon. member to indulge to the full his rights as a member in relation to the voting of final supply.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister vote for all the items then as he did today?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What did you do?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I voted for them just as I did last spring.

Mr. Fleming: The minister will proceed in accordance with the plan indicated in the passage which I have just read from page 11 of Hansard.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am still waiting as, I believe, is my friend the hon. member for Essex East for an answer from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is this? Is this a form of closure?

Mr. Fleming: No; go ahead and talk all you wish. Nobody is closing off anything. Go ahead and talk all you like.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not incapable of speaking. He has just as much right to speak as has the Minister of Finance or anyone else. Surely he can take the floor and answer the questions we have put.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, if I may just interject a word, may I say this. The former minister of national health and welfare this afternoon prefaced his questions to me by a statement to the effect that if I were not prepared to answer this whole question in detail he would be delighted if I would answer at some time in the future. I trust the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will view the whole picture in somewhat the same light. I have not been in office so very long. I am studying the whole matter of hospital insurance in great detail and before too long I hope to be able to make a complete statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said, I think the house would find it desirable to recognize the fact that it can afford to be generous in this particular instance,—

Mr. Monteith: I am not asking for generosity.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No generosity is needed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—not because of what the Minister of Finance has said but because of what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said just now. I think it is understandable that a man who takes on the heavy responsibility of Minister of National Health and Welfare should have the opportunity, if he finds that he is not in a position to answer in detail, to postpone his answer. I think the significant thing is not so much the reply that we have just received but the fact that it has taken so long in the course of this debate for this observation to have been made.

Mr. Fulton: There is too much nonsense being talked on the other side of the house. That is the main reason why it could not be made before.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One reason is the attitude of the Minister of Finance who told the Minister of Transport today, who was about to reply, "Do not make a reply; I do not want any replies at this time".

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why do you not vote against the resolution?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is what we should object to in this house and that is what we are objecting to.

There is no objection to the attitude taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare but one could have expected that answer to have been given much earlier. Let it not be forgotten that the hon. gentleman who looks at me in such comfort and ease—the Minister Finance—has given an example today of the new form of closure which this government is going to impose on parliament.

Mr. Fleming: That is utter rot and nonsense.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The member for Essex East can, of course, speak for himself, but it does seem to me that at least some of the questions which were asked today could be answered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Surely he knows whether any effort has been made since he assumed his portfolio to have any of the six provinces sign an agreement. That is not a matter for study, that is a matter of fact. Surely he knows whether a master agreement has been prepared; surely he knows whether he has made any effort to get any of the other four provinces to agree. It would seem to me appropriate to have a more elucidating answer than we have had thus far, but if all the minister can do is ask for more time then I suppose we will have to give it to him.

I wonder if the Minister of Finance will permit himself to make a more complete answer to the questions which have been asked about superannuated civil servants. As he knows, when he and his colleagues were on this side of the chamber they were second to none in their insistence that something be done for the retired civil servants whose pensions are in the lower and middle brackets. This applies particularly in the case of the hon. gentleman's colleague in the cabinet, the Minister of Public Works.

We thought last spring that at long last we had made some headway and that we were getting some action on this matter from the former government, in which the Hon. Walter Harris was minister of finance. The last words we had on this subject, which I believe were in answer to the questions of the member for Fort William, gave us hope that something would indeed be done. That government went out of office without dealing with this matter after all. Now when the new government is in power, composed of members who supported the idea that the position of these people should be improved, all we get is the same answer that we got from Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Abbott and Mr. Harris—"The matter is under consideration."

The minister made the statement that the government's intentions regarding other types of pension are referred to in the speech from the throne. Of course, that is part of the answer that the previous government gave. One of the answers given by the government to the Minister of Public Works when he was only the member for Vancouver-Quadra was that since we first started asking for improvements in the position of retired civil servants the universal old age pension had been brought into being and had in fact improved the position of these people. That did not satisfy the Minister of Public Works when he sat on this side of the chamber as member for Vancouver-Quadra. I cannot imagine he is satisfied yet. I believe the kind of representation he was making to the government last year he is still making to the Minister of Finance now that he is in a position where he has a greater influence than he had before.

Here too I do not think the Minister of Finance should impose any closure on himself. I think he should tell us whether the statement he made the other day, in reply to a request from this side that action be taken is just a stock answer or whether we can actually look to the new government to fulfil the implied promise that the lot of these people would be improved. This promise I think was implicit in the stand they took when they were in opposition to the government.

I have not the record before me but figures have been mentioned many times as to the large number of people who are drawing very low pensions despite their faithful service to the federal government. We think now, as the Conservatives thought before, that the government should be a model employer. I hope the Minister of Finance will take this opportunity to speak more fully and more hopefully on this question than he has yet done.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I believe that already in this session we have found that the Minister of Finance is being quite coy with parliament in regard to exactly what the policy of the government is going to be. Coming back to a new session of parliament members are, of course, usually loaded with a lot of problems from their constituencies and indeed most of us are quite anxious to place on record some of these problems. It is not my intention this evening to try to exhaust all the problems confronting my constituents and the people I represent, or indeed the people of Canada, nor to even deal in their entirety with the various matters I intend to bring out. However, I think when the government is coming to parliament and asking for more money with which to carry on its functions there are some things which should be drawn to its attention early in the session.

My constituency of course is mainly agricultural and the problems confronting that industry are foremost in my mind. This afternoon some of my colleagues brought to the attention of the committee certain conditions facing agriculture. Indeed one of the main problems and arguments during election time was just what each party was going to do for that key industry in Canada. I do not want to deal with all these problems now, but I would like to point out to the Minister of Agriculture and to the government that there is a trend in agriculture today that is certainly very alarming. It is not only the poor farmer who is leaving the farm but that some of our finest people are doing likewise. This is not the natural course of events which one might assume would follow increased mechanization of the farms but it is purely and simply the question of the cost-price squeeze in which the farmers are caught. Some of our best returned men, who perhaps have now had 10 years on the farm, are leaving farming completely, finding it impossible to continue.

It is very disturbing to me when I ride through my constituency to find, not one but literally dozens of these young men leaving their farms and giving up in desperation on account of this cost-price squeeze. I hope that this government, in its deliberations and in the legislation it brings before parliament this year, will deal adequately with this problem and not just give us stock answers or partially meet the problem.

One of the things I want to indicate to this government as something I think should be considered because of its inherent dangers is the large amount of financing which we know is required to start a young man in agriculture in western Canada. I suggest that it should be made possible for a young man to go on the farm without equity or other financial backing, but with the help of some kind of government loan at low interest rates so that he can profitably mechanize his farm and operate it efficiently.

Another thing which I would like to mention early in this session is something which we and the government members when they were formerly on this side of the chamber often brought to the attention of the then government. This is the question of veterans' pensions and the eligibility of a war veteran for such pensions. I had occasion to work very hard on one case for some two or three years to get a pension for a second world war veteran who went into the service as an A-1 man and came out in the lowest category. The board said he was not eligible for a pension.

I hope I can convince the Minister of Veterans Affairs that he should prevent this type of thing happening in Canada and ensure that a veteran who entered the service in the last great war as category A-1 and who then for some reason came out in a low category on discharge should be eligible for pension.

Another matter I wish to deal with concerns the problems of road construction and maintenance throughout Canada. On reaching my desk today I found there a letter from the Saskatchewan No. 14 highway association. I am not going to talk about the route of that highway, but I do want to point out that in many parts of Canada we are facing the ugly head of increasing unemployment, and I suggest that not only will we benefit from an enhanced tourist trade but we would have better highway routes throughout Canada if this government would look across the border to the United States and observe what that government has done with regard to roads over the whole of that country. There is not a single state or county road in the United States which does not receive some federal money, but here to date former governments have seen fit to assist only the trans-Canada highway.

I may say that we in Saskatchewan are quite proud that we have this highway finished throughout our province, and during the summer we had a celebration in connection with that event, but I would like to point out that the suggestion I have made could be the means whereby the government could assist not only the provinces but the whole of the country.

Another matter with which I should like to deal concerns tax sharing, the sharing of taxation derived from corporation and inheritance taxes. All hon. members of the house know that the Rowell-Sirois commission recommended that taxation from these sources should be collected by the central government which would in turn allocate it to the provinces. Since 1947 when such a plan was undertaken by the provinces and the dominion government this program has always been carried out on the basis of fiscal need and the potential revenue of the various provinces. I wish to bring this to the notice of the government because I understand that later this year a dominion-provincial conference will be held and I am hoping that at this conference that the government, in agreement with what the Prime Minister said during the election to the effect that the government would see that there would be a more equitable sharing of taxation, will give this question very high priority and that provinces such as my own province of Saskatchewan will in fact receive a more equitable share of these funds in order to meet their fiscal needs.

I wish also to deal with the tight-money policy. Of course, such a policy was initiated by the former government and it certainly discriminated against a large number of greatly needed works throughout Canada—I am thinking chiefly of municipal endeavours such as the construction of schools, roads, sewage and waterworks. As a result of this policy many of our towns and municipalities were placed in the position that they were not able to get sufficient money to undertake these municipal responsibilities. I wish to urge the government to take a new look at this problem, and I hope the whole question will receive top priority at the dominion-provincial conference to be held later this year.

At the present time my own constituency is very adversely affected by the tight-money policy. As hon. members probably know, we have tremendous oil developments taking place in my constituency with the result that a great many people are flowing into the area. The city of Estevan has now a population of some 8,000 or 10,000 people, and towns or cities such as this are demanding the same kind of service as the larger urban centres are providing. However, as I have explained, many of these towns and cities are not in a position to go out and borrow money because they lack the financial backing. They have sold debentures and the province of Saskatchewan has bought up several million dollars worth of these debentures, but the fact remains at the present time they are financing their projects at interest rates of 6 or 7 per cent.

I want to urge the government to take into consideration the desirability of development being on an equitable basis throughout Canada. I would like to see some such money provided by the federal government as is provided for the assistance of many projects in the United States. This is not a new proposition. It has been done in the United States for many years and many hundreds of millions of dollars has been advanced to municipal authorities and urban councils in order that they may carry out such projects.

Members of the Conservative party, and in particular the Prime Minister, promised during the election to undertake a natural resources development program. I was happy to hear that. An announcement was made by the previous government that they, too, were prepared to undertake such a survey. This matter also affects my constituency as I think it affects most constituencies throughout Canada. I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that at Estevan at present the provincial authority is building a $40 million power project, and I think it is only fair to ask that even though this project is already under development it should be made eligible for some assistance.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take the time of the committee any longer. I do hope, however, that the government will take cognizance of some of the points I have made and bring them into full consideration this session.

Mr. Regier: I would not have risen at all to speak on this resolution had it not been for an article which appeared in today's copy of the Gazette. The question I raised on the orders of the day yesterday was a vital one and an urgent one. I asked the Minister of Labour what this government intended to do to head off a serious, developing unemployment problem, having in mind especially the situation on the west coast. The article in the Gazette is set in heavy black type, and if I am to take it that that newspaper is a supporter of the government or reflects the thinking of the government, then I am indeed alarmed. The opening paragraph says "labour minister Starr was ready in the Commons" when I asked him about the problem of unemployment. But I am a little concerned that this government is not ready to meet the situation in any shape or form. Among the people in my province I noticed before I left for Ottawa a deep concern in all walks of life about the situation that is likely to develop this coming winter. The minister indicated in his reply to me that the government did expect seasonal unemployment. I attempted to call his attention to the fact that this unemployment already existed; it exists right now. It was there in August and September, and a situation like that must be recognized by the government.

The minister indicated a proposed housing program which might provide some relief. I am not going to deny that the announcement in regard to housing was a welcome one. However, I believe I should point out that the decline in housing will not be offset even by that most welcome announcement. The amount of money allocated by the government in that announcement is not sufficient to offset the decline in housing which is severe as compared to the same time one year ago.

The recommendation made this morning by the new hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway—and I might say made so ably—should be given serious consideration by the government at a very early date indeed. It was promised to the people of Canada by Conservative candidates in the most recent election. My Conservative opponent, a most highly respected candidate for public office, gave us the assurance that the Conservative party would sponsor trade with red China if her party should form a government. The people on the west coast are looking to this new government to implement that promise.

We are urging this government to take action in finding additional markets for Canadian products in the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth and thereby supply employment to Canadians. I personally was very discouraged when I found out that a member of the British government had to undertake to inform the Canadian people that they were willing to do business with us; yes, they were more than willing to do so. It was very apparent that the Minister of Finance did not want the Canadian people to know just how willing the people of the United Kingdom are to do business with us.

We have also urged that additional markets be found for Canadian products by the acceptance of foreign currency. I remember full well that the present Prime Minister of Canada at one time on a motion put forward by the Social Credit party in this house bolted his party and voted for the acceptance of foreign currency for Canadian products. I would like to know at this time whether those who are unemployed will have some reason to hope that this new government will find additional outlets for the products of Canadian labour. We need not necessarily go abroad to find markets for our products. A great many Canadian citizens are in want and an adequate welfare legislation program supplying all our people with at least a minimum of purchasing power will help create employment for Canadians.

In closing, I wish to point out that when we have unemployment everyone in Canada suffers, rich and poor alike. Perhaps the Canadian economy can tolerate a certain amount of unemployment but when it exceeds the danger point no government in office can handle the urgent problems created by that situation. If this government desires to avoid extremely serious difficulties both for the Canadian people and in terms of its own political future welfare I must say I hope the answer given to me yesterday by the Minister of Labour, especially as it was interpreted by the Montreal Gazette, is not an indication of the thinking of this government.

Mr. Robichaud: It is not my intention to delay the passing of this resolution because I realize it is essential to keep the public service in operation. However, I would like to quote again those remarks of the Minister of Finance as reported at page 11 of Hansard for Tuesday, October 15 when he said:

> However, this is not to say that the present government will support all of the detailed programs contemplated when those estimates were originally prepared.

I am aware that in Gloucester county, my own constituency, some of the public services have already been curtailed in spite of the fact that the estimates of the Postmaster General had been voted last spring. For example in Middle Caraquet a post office had been in existence for over 50 years. It has been closed since June 12 and up to this date the Postmaster General has not seen fit to recommend a postmaster to replace the one who has been dismissed. As a result those people who are normally served by this post office have had to walk four or five miles in order to pick up their mail or have had to pay anywhere from $1 to $1.50 a day for taxis in order to do this.

A similar situation exists in Shippigan Gully where a post office had been in existence for over 50 years. This was closed around the middle of June and the clients of this post office have had to go to the post office at Shippigan for their mail. This return trip of over 10 miles works a hardship on them. If they cannot walk the distance they too have to pay for a taxi. If that is the way the present government intends to save money I think it is high time they took a second look at the situation. I realize that there may be a shortage of money—

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Robichaud: Surely.

Mr. Fraser: If the post office was closed on June 12 that would indicate it was the Liberal government which closed it and not the present government.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in reply to this question I would say that the Post Office Department was fully justified in closing the post office at the time because there were irregularities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fraser: Now we are hearing the truth.

Mr. Robichaud: Nevertheless there is no reason why another postmaster should not have been appointed to replace the gentlemen who were dismissed. If it is going to take four or five months for the present Postmaster General to replace a postmaster in the meantime this important public service will suffer.

I now have something to say which may be of interest to the Minister of Justice. An account has been submitted by a gentleman in my constituency who acted in the purchase and transfer of lots for a public building at Bathurst. His account was submitted approximately the 1st of June and up until last week he had not been paid. In another instance a surveyor was engaged by the Department of National Defence to do some work in relation to the Eel River rifle range in Restigouche county. His account was submitted at the end of May and as of yesterday he had not been paid. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I realize just how essential it is that we pass this resolution in order that these payments can be made.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 11, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1958.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Fleming moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. Fleming: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be read the second time?

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Fleming) which was agreed to on the following division:

[Mr. Speaker.]

NAYS

LaCroix—1.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Sinclair: Since the members of the official opposition took ample opportunity when the subject matter was in committee of supply to discuss the items they had in mind we do not intend to prolong the debate by adding anything at this stage of the committee proceedings.

Mr. Harkness: That is wise.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister one question? In view of the information that was obtained this afternoon to the effect that certain items in the supplementary estimates last session were actually given legislative effect on a permanent basis by virtue of the wording of the supply bill, may I ask whether there is any such provision in the bill now before us? Are any of these items being given legislative effect beyond the appropriation of money for the current fiscal year?

Mr. Fleming: No. I said a number of times today that no item is finally carried by the present measure at all. With respect to something like 98 per cent of the items it is simply one-twelfth. There are 13 items for which more than one-twelfth of the total item is being asked for and provided for in this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the minister did not understand my question. I know the answer that he has now given. He will recall that this afternoon or earlier today I referred to the fact that some items had been passed last session to the extent of only four-ninths. The minister replied that by virtue of the wording of the appropriation bill, those items had the effect of amending certain statutes. I am now asking whether any of the sections of this bill have that effect.

Mr. Fleming: With respect to these three items this bill has an effect corresponding to the effect of the appropriation bill that was passed last spring. In other words, the act is amended but the item does not become statutory. The only effect of this legislation tonight is to provide an additional fraction of the total amount for the year.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, one or two of the members are discussing clauses of the bill but there do not seem to be any copies of the bill around. How can a member discuss clauses of the bill when he has not seen it or cannot get a copy of the bill?

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—$260,912,255.50 granted for 1957-1958.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, we have no bill. Apparently there are not enough copies to go around. I think we should wait until such time as we have copies of the bill to look at.

Mr. Fleming: May I say to the hon. gentleman that this practice is a time-honoured one because of the fact that the second reading is moved immediately after the bill has been given first reading. The bill simply follows the standard form of appropriation bills. The section we have just passed is simply the short title of the bill. It is "Appropriation Act No. 6, 1957".

The remaining clauses simply provide for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of the various amounts that have been under discussion throughout the day. Clause 11, the final clause of the bill, provides that sums expended under the authority of this act shall be accounted for in the public accounts in conformity with section 64 of the Financial Administration Act. But the terms of this bill are the standard provisions of the appropriation measures.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A, B, C and D agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, we do not know what we are passing. We have not copies of the bill. We are just going over numbers. That is all we are doing.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has been in the house for four years and in that time he has participated in the passing of I suppose anywhere from 15 to 20 of these interim supply bills and he has never before raised this question. As I have said, the bill is simply in the standard form. There is no departure in any respect from the standard form. All that is changed in any of these measures is the amount in each of the various clauses and those are the amounts that we have been dealing with all day. The schedules to the bill simply contain those items of which I have already spoken several times today, namely the 13 items which are not within the ordinary monthly provision.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, —

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I see that my hon. friend is rising again. Notwithstanding my respect for him, which is great, I wish to suggest to him that there was a phrase once used by a former leader of this party which seems to be applicable now, namely that we should have some regard to "the immortal grounds of common sense."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point made by the Minister of Finance is perfectly correct, namely that it has been the practice through the years to put this bill through without copies of it being in the hands of more than half a dozen members. But on June 10 we understood that a change took place. I suggest that in the future it would not be too difficult to have enough copies of these bills printed so that after first reading they can be placed on the desks of all hon. members. I think it would save time in the long run.

Mr. Fleming: I think it should be said for the record that copies of this bill were placed in the hands of the spokesmen for all the parties. That is the practice which has been followed. There are only 20 copies of the bill available in this form. I come back to the point again, that there is nothing in the bill that calls for review except the amount in each case. Every clause is the same except the first and the last and in every case it has a provision that "out of consolidated revenue funds there may be paid—" and then the amount and the reference to the item follows.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I know of nothing much worse—except perhaps the experience of Scrooge as recorded in "A Christmas Carol" regarding the undigested piece of cheese which caused him to suffer from indigestion—than carrying around for some time a half delivered speech. This has been my lot today. However, I am very happy to finish a speech which has been on my mind throughout the day.

Yesterday I interrupted my remarks when I was saying that the problem of farm surpluses was one of world-wide underconsumption, not of overproduction. Indeed it is still true that two-thirds of the human beings in the world go to bed hungry every night.

We should, as I have said, be proposing or considering worldwide policies to expand consumption rather than any policies which would restrict production. Such plans would require time of course in which to bring about any significant changes.

Thus we must take the long-term as well as the short-term view of the situation which confronts us and indeed confronts the whole world. As I said yesterday, we believe that economic planning under public control and public direction in the public interest is the only possible ultimate solution. This view we share, of course, with the democratic socialist parties in western Europe and in southeast Asia. It was from this position that our amendment was placed before the house yesterday. It is true that according to time honoured custom such an amendment is regarded as a want of confidence motion. Under some circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I submit that that might be unfortunate. Rather our intention was and is to place before the house the fundamental economic and social principle upon which our philosophy and program are based.

As to planning on a world-wide scale, neither the former government nor the new government have given support, for example, to the United Nations fund for economic development to enable countries like India, Ceylon, Pakistan—to mention a few that are vital to the democratic cause—to plan their development on a publicly conceived and directed economic plan though they are proceeding to do so.

Now as a result of our failure to support such proposals as a worldwide food bank, for instance, and the special United Nations fund which I have just mentioned, we, in common with the United States, at the present time find ourselves in possession of a very large food surplus.

Those of us who have recently travelled across the western plains know to what extent the principal product of those plains is piled up in the prairie country. The warehouses are full, the granaries on the farms are full, every disused barn is full and every bit of space that has been provided by the farmers themselves in recent years is full also. As I came through the prairies the other day, at least in my constituency—the heart of the wheat belt as it is sometimes called—there were piles of No. 1 high protein wheat—some of the best wheat we have grown in years—piled under the snow.

I have already stated that until satisfactory arrangements for the sale of this wheat and other grains have been made, advance payments on farm-stored grain, as well as storage payments for grains stored on the farm, are absolutely essential and will I hope be met without delay by the present government. We have urged this and we have moved resolutions in the house to this effect over the years and at last, perhaps, we are within sight of seeing something done in this regard.

I might add that yesterday I welcomed the suggestion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we might interrupt the throne speech debate, as we have interrupted it today, in order to put through the necessary legislation and bring into early effect advance payments on farm-stored grain. I would like to say that we would be very happy to co-operate in the same way to facilitate the enactment of the necessary legislation to bring into effect the improved old age pensions which were foreshadowed this week in the throne speech.

Now let me repeat this: Until satisfactory arrangements for the sale of Canadian wheat and other grains have been made, advance payments on farm stored grain as well as storage payments are absolutely essential and should be made without delay by the federal government. We hope that this is now the intention.

Furthermore, recognizing as we do that the long-term solution rests in the sale of wheat wherever there may be a market for it, Canada should promote trade relationships throughout the world, whether behind the iron curtain or on our side of the iron curtain. As has been pointed out by other members of this group today, a vast potential market has been denied to Canadian producers by the failure of the government to establish diplomatic relations with the government of the most populous country in the world, namely the government of China. It is clear that diplomatic relations must be established with potential customers.

May I say in this connection that if the hon. members follow the writings of one of the most brilliant commentators on economic and international affairs in our newspapers, Walter Lippmann, and will turn to page 16 of this evening's Ottawa Journal, they will find an article by him in which he takes his United States government to task for failing to be realistic and to recognize the fact that there is a government in China.

It is clear, as I have said, that there must be established diplomatic relations in order that our traders entering a country and looking for sales may be adequately protected and arrangements may be made for them to see the right people in any country.

Recognition of the actual government of China is right, not only in principle but is a necessary step in the approach to a solution of Canada's trading problems, and in particular the denial to Canada of the opportunity to sell to the vast Chinese market.

Other democratic countries such as Britain and the Scandinavian countries have recognized the Peking government. Denmark and Sweden joined India last month in urging its admission into the United Nations Assembly and in doing all this, of course, neither Sweden nor any other democratic country approved the policies or the philosophy of the leaders who today are in control of China. We do not either, but we believe that in the interest of world trade and in the interest of world peace the time has come when that recognition should be given. It would, we believe, assist the Canadian people to dispose of some of their commodities in that country with its teeming population.

Thirdly, Canada must endeavour to provide potential customers with the opportunity to earn Canadian dollars with which they can buy goods from us. Trade is not a one-way street, and any policy predicated on such an assumption is doomed to failure. We must lower the barriers in the way of the importation of goods from the sterling area, for instance, so that our purchases will enable those countries to purchase more from us. About this I shall have more to say in a few moments. And we should take, at least in part payment where that is mutually agreed upon, local currency which we could invest in those countries or in areas developed by those countries.

Fourthly, we urge that Canada should be prepared to enter into long-term marketing agreements and if necessary even barter arrangements under which Canadian products could be exchanged for products we can use. Here again, of course, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations recognizes that the so-called free market is completely inadequate to deal with the problem of selling agricultural commodities.

Fifthly, the Canadian government should promote vigorously the establishment of a world food bank and a greatly expanded program of economic aid such as I have already mentioned—the special United Nations fund for economic development and other funds such as the Colombo plan.

May I say immediately that I am sure the people of Canada will be extremely disappointed by the summary way in which the Canadian government dismissed the trade proposals of the United Kingdom. This was particularly disappointing in view of the fact that statements by the Prime Minister had led people to conclude that the new government was prepared to make a new departure in Canadian trade matters. The Prime Minister announced his aim, hon. members will recall, of diverting 15 per cent of Canadian trade from the United States to the United Kingdom, but when the United Kingdom took up this suggestion and put forth a carefully considered proposal which might have gone some distance toward achieving this objective, the government adopted a most negative attitude. It seems clear that in spite of reports that Britain's proposal for free trade had been before the Canadian government since September 10, they had not been given any careful study at all and there has been increasing concern about the failure of the government generally to make positive decisions on economic and trade policies, an attitude which is so completely reflected in the Conservative reaction to the United Kingdom proposal.

The Canadian government did not even publicly pledge itself to give the United Kingdom proposal serious consideration, but contented itself, for the time being at least, with suggesting two or three steps which, while good in themselves, cannot even make a dent in the trade balance. Let me put the three steps on record.

The first of these, indeed, which pledged to switch government purchasing from the United States to the United Kingdom, is an objective which we have urged in this house for the past ten years, particularly for purchases by the Department of National Defence both here and overseas.

The second was a promise by the Canadian government to consider some increase in the $100 tourist exemption granted to Canadians returning from overseas. I think that is worth while, but it is a very small thing; even if it were increased to $500 it would not amount to very much in the way of trade from the United Kingdom or anywhere else overseas.

And then, thirdly, was the promise of a high-level trade mission to visit the United Kingdom before the end of this year with a view to stimulating purchases from the United Kingdom of goods presently imported from elsewhere, that is to stimulate purchases not only from the United Kingdom but from other commonwealth countries.

Now these are mere patches on present policies and they will not suffice; a mere carrying over into the new government of Liberal trade policies which I do not think this house should support any longer. Surely a new approach must be taken. Surely the British proposals ought to be considered with the care and with the sympathy they deserve. We are living increasingly in one world. The time has gone by when nations can expect to raise tariff barriers high against the world and live in prosperity behind those barriers themselves.

We in the C.C.F. party have always felt that tariffs are an outmoded, archaic and ineffective way of planning the Canadian economy. For instance, at no time were Canadian tariffs higher than during the period between 1930 and 1940, yet I doubt whether there was any other period in which Canadian consumers and producers alike suffered such hardships as were suffered in Canada behind those tariff walls during those years.

Canadian tariff policies have placed a burden upon the consumer, and particularly on the consumer in some regions of Canada, and it has been demonstrated again and again that they are quite ineffective in safeguarding the jobs of Canadian workers. As for the regional disabilities, those of us who have lived in western Canada, as I have done now for nearly 50 years, can look back over those years and see how the west has been exploited behind tariff walls built up to protect so-called infant industries which have since become giants in our midst. Over a period of years those infant industries have grown up into lusty middle age, and when they heard the proposal for free trade with Britain they began to scream that it would never do, because it would ruin them. As a matter of fact, I believe some of these industries, such as the electrical industry and the automobile industry, would actually benefit from free trade with the United Kingdom because they would then be able to sell some of their products in the United Kingdom market which is virtually closed to them today.

We say there should be a vast change in Canadian trade policies. We believe that rather than relying on a tariff structure to maintain a share of a restricted market we should be seeking to enlarge the market available to us, and not only to retain our proportion of that larger market but to free it and expand it. We believe that if the international trade organization which was proposed after the war had not been scuttled by those who were anxious to see the old trade policies of the world re-established, world trade today would be in a much healthier condition than it is.

One of the fundamental goals of the proposed international trade organization was to plan trade at the international level so as to ensure full employment and a high standard of living to all. The supporters of the international trade organization realized that international cartels were an important factor in some of the trade problems that were prevalent and it was to deal with these and other matters that it was proposed to set up the organization to assist trade between the nations on a freer basis.

The international trade organization was not established, but Canada should continue to press for this kind of development and as far as its own trade is concerned adopt a positive rather than a negative attitude. We believe that planned international trade through the establishment of national export-import boards would serve to enable us to carry out beneficial trade agreements, expand trade, safeguard our national interest and benefit our economy generally.

The magnitude of our trading problem can be seen when we compare the deficit on current account for the first half of this year with the same period of 1956. For the first half of this current year our deficit stood at $914 million as compared with $798 million for the previous year and $348 million for the first half of 1955. This is a phenomenal figure and when we consider that almost 25 per cent of this balance or $212 million arises from a deficit on interest and dividend accounts it becomes very clear that we cannot continue to rely as we have been upon the import of United States capital in order to balance our current account.

Interest and dividend payments have increased sharply from the level at which they stood in the same period for 1956, namely $154 million. As the total of outside investment in Canada climbs the deficit on interest and dividend accounts will steadily mount. That is why the reliance which we have had in the past on United States investment will pose a greater and greater problem for the future, leaving the deficit in our cash trade balance increasingly dependent on the flow of United States investment in Canada. This leaves Canada most vulnerable not only to economic trends in the United States economy but also to economic pressure and I believe ultimately to political pressure from abroad.

I remember that, just a short time ago during the election period and since, the Conservative party made ardent declarations about the necessity of safeguarding Canada from the control of huge United States corporations that played a prominent part in United States investment in Canada. I read just a few days ago that the Conservative Minister of Finance appeared in New York to soothe the troubled minds of United States investors assuring them of an open-armed welcome into Canada.

We are not opposed to foreign investment where and when it will be beneficial. Let me repeat that what we need is the planned development of our resources and our industry. This requires control and direction of investment by a national planning board responsible to this parliament of Canada. Because we lack both planning and control in the public interest we have been plagued with uncontrolled inflation. I know for instance that the consumer price index has continued to climb and in August of this year stood at the highest level in Canadian history. The cost of living was one of the principal issues that concerned the Canadian public in the last general election. This matter, however, has been completely dismissed by the throne speech. We are anxious to know why the government has ignored this problem in the same way as the previous administration did.

Of course we know that our Liberal, Conservative and Social Credit friends united to oppose the efforts of this group in the House of Commons to retain the beneficial price controls which we believe are essential to deal with inflation, but it is surprising to discover that the new Minister of Finance should merely suggest that Canadians should fight the high cost of living by saving. Surely the minister should be aware that it is the high cost of living which makes saving difficult, if not impossible.

We have now seen that whenever as a result of defence expenditure or other causes a high level of employment has been obtained inflation has come to the fore unless there were social and economic controls and some economic planning as we knew it during the war. The unplanned economy has always shown this inherent incapacity to maintain both full employment and a stable price level so that today we hear prominent businessmen—indeed the general manager of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce—suggesting that the question is how much unemployment the people will stand in order to end or control inflation.

We do not believe the tragic wastage of human resources that is involved in unemployment can be supported at any time as a device for combatting inflation. We believe these twin evils inflation and unemployment must be eliminated together by the kind of public planning that was used during the war to put the tremendous productive capacity of this nation to full use. But we should also plan not only for ourselves but to make the world a better place in which to live instead of devoting so much attention as the nations of the world have been doing of late to providing instruments to destroy the world.

I referred to the attitude of some businessmen who have suggested that unemployment should be used to combat inflation. The alarming thing today is that while inflation is continuing—and as I said usually inflation is accompanied by full employment—in this instance we have increasing inflation and at the same time unemployment figures are showing a sharp rise over the figures for this time last year.

There is justifiable alarm in many sections of the country about the situation that might possibly come into being this winter. I think it is important that the government should indicate the steps it is going to take. In this morning's paper I noted that the city council of Toronto is highly alarmed at the sharp increase in unemployment in that city and is approaching the provincial government. The federal authority having control in a large measure of the finance and economy of this country has in my opinion a primary responsibility in connection with the problem of unemployment.

I suppose, however, the steps that will be taken will be nothing more than a modification of what the former government did. We should have an indication of a new approach, evidence of a determination to turn away from the unplanned private enterprise economy that has failed to meet some of these problems that confront this country and the world today.

According to the latest available figures I was able to obtain, those for August 22, 1957 compiled by the national employment service, unemployment stood at 249,000 as of that date compared with 170,000 at the same time last year. As I have said, the newspapers today indicate how alarmed the city council of Toronto is. The city council of Vancouver is alarmed, too, as is the city council of Winnipeg and other centres in Canada. Yet there is no mention of this important matter in the speech from the throne.

The government has left untouched the tight money policy instituted by the Liberal government when it was in office and which policy was so strongly criticized by the Conservative party when in opposition. Four months have passed since the new government was formed and a policy which did not require legislation to adopt and certainly would not require legislation to amend, change or rescind, has been carried on in the same form.

I am not suggesting for a moment that a mere change in monetary policy would suffice. Indeed without proper direction of investment, a loose-money policy would increase rather than diminish the inflation from which we are suffering. The crux of the situation is, as our amendment indicates, the planning of the development of our resources and industry under a national plan whose directors would be responsible to this parliament. This we believe is the only real solution to the economic and social problems which confront Canada today.

I am going to take the opportunity to turn to another topic for a few moments. I had thought of dealing with it today when we were discussing the interim supply bill, but knowing that I was going to speak tonight and not being quite as restricted in time as I usually am because of the amendment we moved, I decided I would include it in this talk this evening.

Naturally, I welcome the appointment of the royal commission to study the question of the use of Canadian energy resources and to ensure the most effective use of such resources in the public interest, but I am not unmindful of this, that the present party in power is faced with a problem in this regard because of its attitude in the house during the pipe line debate. I could not put my finger on it today but I know it is in Hansard where a former prime minister said that the establishment of a royal commission was often an excellent way of shelving a difficult problem. I hope that the setting up of this royal commission to deal with energy, oil, gas, pipe lines, and so on, is not being undertaken in order to shelve a very important problem. I think such a study is entirely desirable and, indeed, overdue.

However, there are a number of matters on which it is necessary that action should be taken before the report of any royal commission is available. Indeed, they are questions of policy that should not be shelved. I am thinking particularly of the reference of the matter of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to the royal commission. I note that the question is referred in this way and I am quoting it:

> Whether in view of its special relationship to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation and the nature of its financing and control any special measures need to be undertaken in relation to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited in order to safeguard the interests of Canadian producers or consumers of gas.

I believe that immediate steps are necessary, not steps that may be taken a year from now, 18 months or two years from now, after a lengthy inquiry by a royal commission.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I submit to Your Honour that what the hon. member is saying now is not in order. He is dealing directly with the terms of the royal commission and a subject referred to it and I submit that is not in order.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not dealing with the report of the royal commission. When does an announcement that a royal commission is being set up preclude discussion in this house?

Mr. Green: On the point of order, it is not a matter of a royal commission to be set up. The royal commission has been set up by order in council and it has been a recognized rule in this house for many years that such a subject cannot be discussed.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, I am astounded at my hon. friend making the statement he has. I remember a few years ago when I sat on the other side of the house an attitude such as he has taken tonight was taken by some hon. members then and he was the one who protested most. But let me say this. My hon. friend is discussing the speech from the throne. Under the rules, as I understand them at least, he has the right to discuss any subject. Certainly the Prime Minister when he made his point the other day and the announcement which followed did not indicate in any way that anyone was precluded from discussing the terms of reference. The commission has not made a report. There is nothing sub judice. In the circumstances I submit to you, sir, with deference, that the hon. member has every right to do what he is doing.

Mr. Green: If the commission had made a report that would be an entirely different matter. It has not made a report and this matter is sub judice.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard enough to determine the matter. There is nothing on the order paper which would preclude a discussion of this matter. The royal commission is not a court of record and matters before it are not sub judice. Therefore I see no reason why the hon. member should not discuss it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Closure by order in council.

Mr. Coldwell: I will say immediately I will not refer to the royal commission again though I have the right to do so, but what I am going to do is to refer to some of the statements made by my hon. friends in this house in 1956. I submit that we have to look into this matter in this parliament apart altogether from the fact that it may be looked into elsewhere.

It has been suggested in this house by this group on a good many occasions that we should go into the matter of the trans-Canada pipe line and other matters associated with oil and gas very thoroughly in order to safeguard the public interest. Indeed it was suggested by the very Conservative party now in power that the crown corporation, that is the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, should be enlarged in its powers to do certain things in order to protect the public interest. I quote Mr. Drew on June 4, 1956, as reported in Hansard at page 4673:

> Enlarging the powers of the crown corporation (Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation) so that the entire pipe line may be constructed immediately under public ownership.

So that there may not be any doubt about the position put by the Conservative party at that time, let me read something of what Mr. Drew had to say before moving the motion. I quote from Hansard at page 4672. Mr. Drew said this:

> The Prime Minister said that we made no suggestions.

That is, the Conservative party made no suggestions. I continue:

> We were not given the opportunity. There could have been proposals. Now, on third reading, we say to the government: You want to get ahead with the pipe line. All right, if you are determined to follow the course of going ahead with the pipe line with a crown corporation, go ahead with it but expand the crown corporation and give that crown corporation the power to build the whole line from the Alberta boundary right to the east. That was what I said on March 15, and I repeat it.

He went on:

> Therefore if it comes to the stage where the government forces through an unnecessary venture of this kind, then there is only one thing to do and that is to build the whole pipe line and not just part of it and have control over the whole line.

Mr. Drew, on behalf of the Conservative party, issued a challenge to the government. He declared at that time:

> Let them go ahead, let them introduce a bill to expand the operation of the crown corporation to embrace the whole line.

That is the challenge Mr. Drew made to the government on that day and that is the challenge that has returned to haunt the government of today, for that is the challenge I am making to them tonight. So that there may not be any confusion or any charges of misrepresentation of the Conservative position at that time, I would like to read the whole motion that Mr. Drew moved at the time.

Mr. Fulton: You forget that part of the line is already built; the circumstances have changed entirely.

Mr. Coldwell: The reference may be found at page 4673 of Hansard. This is what Mr. Drew's motion was on that day:

> That the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend sections 5, 6 and 7 thereof to include the agreements made with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited as schedules to the bill and add other sections necessary to ensure that the bill shall give effect to one of the following principles:
> First, the immediate agreement of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to reorganize as a company under effective Canadian ownership and control and to undertake construction without a grant of public money, in accordance with the assurances upon which its charter was granted by parliament; or—

That is the assurance that the promoters gave to parliament five years earlier.

> Second, failing such agreement, the immediate consideration of other proposals submitted by any other persons or companies for the immediate financing and construction of the pipe line under effective Canadian ownership and control and without a grant of public money; or
> Third, enlarge the powers of the crown corporation so that the entire pipe line may be constructed immediately under public ownership.

Those were the three alternatives placed before the house by Mr. Drew. Let us examine these proposals for a moment. The first proposal immediately falls to the ground. The second is eliminated by the passage of events. The grant of public money has been made to the pipe line company. Therefore the Conservative party is driven back to the third proposal made in March, 1956 and reiterated on June 4 when Mr. Drew said:

> Therefore if it comes to the stage where this government forces through an unnecessary venture of this kind, then there is only one thing to do and that is build the whole pipe line and not just part of it, and have control over the whole line.

That was the Conservative policy. What is their policy today? They called Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited the pet of the Liberal government. Whose pet is it today? The pet of the Conservative party? Apparently they are going through with the deal that they described as fantastic, rotten and every other adjective that could be used against it. We used them too in speaking against that proposal when the bill was before the house. What are they going to do about it now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They have joined the Texas buccaneers.

Mr. Coldwell: The Liberal government forced through the proposal over the opposition of this group and of the Conservative party, and I want to say to my hon. friends of the Liberal party that I believe that more than anything else the pipe line was responsible for the position of the two main parties in the house at the present time. To repeat the words of Mr. Drew, "there is only one thing to do", and that is to bring the whole line under public ownership. It is inconceivable to me, therefore, that the Conservative party in power could consider supporting or maintaining the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation Act and not move an amendment to it in precisely the same form that they suggested should be done on June 4, 1956. Let them amend the statute according to their own suggestion of June 4, 1956.

What was the position of the present Prime Minister at that time on the Conservative amendment that I have read into the record? I see that on June 5, 1956—and I have Hansard here; it is to be found at page 4763—he voted in favour of it. I see too that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) also cast his vote for this policy, as did the present Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough), the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and so on. I cannot see how these hon. gentlemen can tolerate for one moment the carrying on in 1957 of a Liberal policy that they so thoroughly denounced in the house in 1956.

The people of Canada surely expect that the Conservative government will carry out the policy that the Conservative opposition recommended just a little over one year ago. The reference of this particular matter to the royal commission may be at the moment so far as the government is concerned a useful way of dealing with it temporarily but I say it is a complete abdication of the government's responsibility. I fear that this indicates that the Conservative party has changed its mind and that it is using this method of postponing until some future date when the line is built and when it can announce to the public with more safety the reversal of the position it took a year ago.

So, as I said, while I welcome the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the use of our resources, including oil and gas, I deplore the fact that it appears that some important steps are being postponed in such a way as to arouse the gravest suspicion about the government's attitude. There is other government action that should not be postponed until the report of the royal commission. I am thinking now of government action to prevent promoters of pipe line companies from making millions at the expense of the public. They are raiding the purses of the public by stock and other manipulations, by getting into their hands stock options for next to nothing, by insiders going out and selling stock to the people, raiding their purses and making millions and millions of dollars. I am thinking of that. It is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and as I want to say something about these raids on the purses of the public of Canada I shall hope to resume tomorrow.

On motion of Mr. Coldwell the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the government what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall continue with this debate.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PIKE CREEK—DREDGING AND RETAINING WALL

Question No. 16—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Question

1. Were tenders called for in connection with certain dredging and the erection of a retaining wall at Pike Creek in the constituency of Essex East?
2. If so, was an award made by the Department of Public Works during the past summer?
3. Has the work been proceeded with?
4. If not, for what reason?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. No.
4. Funds were to be provided jointly by the provincial and federal governments. The amount of the low tenderer was higher than estimated and the matter is being reviewed with the provincial government which has expressed reservation about participating in view of the higher cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 18, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SYRIAN-TURKISH BORDER—SUGGESTED USE OF UNITED NATIONS EMERGENCY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Green). In view of what appears to be a tense and dangerous situation on the Syrian-Turkish border, would the government consider instructing their delegation at the United Nations assembly to explore with other delegations, as a matter of urgency, the possibility of stationing elements of the United Nations emergency force on that border in the interests of greater security and the avoidance of aggression?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. I agree that this is a very serious situation, and we will be glad to give consideration to what he has said.

COLOMBO PLAN—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker? In view of the fact that one of the ministers without portfolio is now on his way to Saigon in South Viet Nam to attend the meeting of the Colombo plan, and in view of the repeated declarations made in this house by the present Prime Minister as to the inadequacy of Canada's contribution to the Colombo plan, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether or not the minister without portfolio will be announcing that Canada proposes to make substantial increases in its Colombo plan contributions?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not the type of statement that should be made without some consideration, but we will be making a statement to the house at the earliest opportunity on this question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But will the minister without portfolio who has now left the house for Asia be making an announcement on the lines I have indicated?

Mr. Green: That is the same question dressed up in a somewhat different form, and my answer is the same as the answer I gave to the first one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps I would be correct in saying that the Acting Prime Minister is not aware of the situation.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Essex East would be very incorrect to assume any such thing.

SHIPPING

TRANSFER TO TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT OF H.M.C.S. LABRADOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with the transfer to his department of H.M.C.S. Labrador. What physical changes are to be made to this ship, by whom are they to be carried out, and have tenders been called for?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question. The answer is that discussions with regard to the arrangements for the transfer of the Labrador from the Royal Canadian Navy to the Department of Transport are still going on, and no decision has yet been taken by my department as to what physical changes to the ship, if any, should be undertaken in this connection. At such time as a decision has been made I will be very glad to give the hon. member the information he seeks.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Before the minister goes on, may I ask a supplementary question. Did the minister not make an announcement quite recently that the transfer of the Labrador from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Transport had actually taken place?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member is mistaken. The announcement I made was that arrangements were being made between the departments for the transfer, but the transfer was not expected to take place until later on in the year when the arrangements between the two departments had been worked out.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Marler: So I take it the minister was misquoted.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker, the minister was not misquoted; he was quoted as saying exactly what I am telling the house now.

An hon. Member: Read the St. John's News.

UNION STEAMSHIP LINES, B.C.
—SUBVENTION PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the following question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Perhaps it could be taken as notice. Has there been any change in policy in respect to payment of a subvention to Union Steamship Lines to carry cargo into the northern ports of British Columbia?

Mr. A. R. MacDonald (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport I will take this question as notice and the information will be supplied as soon as possible.

FREIGHT RATES

STATEMENT ON EQUALIZATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) asked what progress was being made with regard to the freight equalization program.

The board of transport commissioners is continuing to make progress with the freight rates equalization program. It had submitted an earlier report on action with regard to equalization of class rates. It has now submitted a further progress report regarding equalization of commodity rates. This further report has been forwarded to the governor in council, and I expect that it will shortly be tabled or otherwise made available.

[Later:]

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of his statement that class rates are being equalized. Since those rates affect, I understand, only 10 per cent of the traffic, is the government considering any policy different from the one of further discriminatory increases in freight rates which may take place as a result of the present application? Has the government considered any policy different from that of allowing further discriminatory increases?

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, these are all matters which are examined by the board of transport commissioners. I have reported to the hon. member the results which have been obtained so far from the examination that is being carried out, and I have given him a full answer to his question.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I was inquiring whether the government itself is considering any change in policy, such as that brought about a few years ago by the $7 million subsidy spent on maintaining trackage in northern Ontario. Is the institution of that type of policy being considered?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any plan to encourage discriminatory freight rates. We have always been very much against discriminatory freight rates, and if at any time people in various parts of the country believe that freight rates are discriminatory, they have a perfect right to be heard by the board of transport commissioners in the normal way, and the findings of the board will be examined by the government in due course.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN RATES ON GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. While I have not given him notice, there has been an exchange of correspondence between us with regard to this matter. Is the government taking any action at the present time in an attempt to reduce the very discriminatory freight rates on grain moving from the prairie towns to the lakehead?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): This question, Mr. Speaker, has been and is being considered by the board of transport commissioners, and if there is anything to report to the hon. member in the future I will be glad to let him know.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—STATEMENT ON RELEASE OF PROPERTY FOR INDUSTRIAL USE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to take this opportunity to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). He asked if information could be given in connection with the disposal of certain Canadian National waterfront property at Prince Rupert, B.C.

I have been in touch with the management of the railway, who advise that negotiations are at present actively under way, but that final arrangements have not yet been concluded.

[Later:]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if he could advise me when the negotiations to which he referred between the Canadian National Railways and this other private concern might be expected to be completed?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the management of the Canadian National Railways have advised me that they will be completed just as soon as possible.

CANALS

CHIGNECTO—STATEMENT ON PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) asked who are carrying on studies regarding transportation problems in the Atlantic region, and what is the competence of the people who are carrying out this work.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): That was not the question.

Mr. Hees: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, that was the question, and my answer is that this work is being carried out under the direction of the bureau of transportation economics within my department. The staff engaged in this work are the regular employees of that bureau, employed by the civil service commission in accordance with the normal procedures, and selected because of their competence in dealing with economic and other aspects of transportation matters.

I would like to assure the hon. member that I have the greatest confidence in the competence of those who are carrying out these studies, and if he has any doubt as to their competence I suggest he speak to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) or the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) under whose direction these men were appointed to carry out this type of work for my department.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that the question he was asked related to the Chignecto canal and not to transportation problems in general.

Mr. Hees: I am always glad to put the hon. member straight on these matters—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question before the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the answer he has made. Does the government now consider the Chignecto canal project as part of the St. Lawrence seaway, as did the Prime Minister in Saint John, New Brunswick, on May 3 of this year?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the Prime Minister said any such thing.

Mr. Sinclair: It is hard to keep up with all the promises he made during the election campaign. I do not blame you for not knowing them all.

WELLAND, ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO RELIEVE TRAFFIC CONGESTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I tried to reach him this morning but was unsuccessful, so I could not give him any notice. Has the minister of highways of Ontario approached him regarding federal financial assistance for the relief of traffic bottlenecks across the Welland ship canal in the Niagara district?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

CRIMINAL LAW

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION RESPECTING SALE OF OBSCENE LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and I ask this because of the very fine remarks the minister made about the sale of obscene literature when he was in opposition. I am wondering if in his present ministry, when it is within his power to bring in legislation in this parliament, he is going to do so prohibiting the sale of obscene literature.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for his kind remarks and also for having indicated to me yesterday that he was going to raise this matter. In reply I should like to inform him that this question was considered at the recent meeting of the committee on uniformity of laws which met in Calgary just prior to the annual convention of the Canadian Bar Association. They gave consideration to the subject and their consideration raised certain further problems which are now being studied in the Department of Justice.

I can assure the hon. member that I am still as interested and concerned over this matter as ever, and as soon as it is possible to reach a decision and make recommendations I will be happy to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think you are stalling.

[Later:]

CAPITAL AND CORPORAL PUNISHMENT—FAUTEUX REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister in a position to inform the house what action is being taken on the report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries, and also on the Fauteux report? Will any action be taken this session on the introduction of legislation which comes completely within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is rather a lengthy one and, as I recall it, contains three parts. I will try to deal with it as briefly as I can.

As the hon. gentleman knows, there was no opportunity provided at the previous sessions of the house to take into consideration the report of the joint committee on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries, and until that is done it is difficult to say just what will be done by the government in that regard.

With respect to the second part of the question regarding the report of the Fauteux commission, I can tell him that this matter is now receiving the exclusive attention of an officer in my department, with a view to preparing what I might call a working paper which will then form the basis of discussions which it is hoped to hold with the provincial attorneys general.

As to the last part of the hon. gentleman's question, I regret that I do not recall the details. However, I will read it in Hansard and give him the answer at the earliest possible opportunity.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Winch: Well, may I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is action going to be taken at this session on those sections which come completely within the purview of the House of Commons and the Senate, dealing with such matters as stamps, the retail trade, the give-aways in the retail trade in various other aspects, having regard to all the reports which are now before you?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, attention is being given to these matters within the department; but I should say it is our feeling that it would be desirable, before introducing any legislation dealing with any of them, to attempt to reach as unanimous agreement as is possible with the provincial officials concerned, and that there is at the moment not too great a unanimity of view in that field. Therefore we are continuing to explore the matter and are not at this time in a position to introduce legislation.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED TRADE MISSION TO U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on the report which came from the Prime Minister's office yesterday to the effect that a 50-man mission may be flown to London on November 22 and might stay there for three weeks. Would the government make a statement on this matter and tell the house whether or not this is a government-sponsored mission and who is going to pay for it?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, a full statement will be made in due course with regard to the proposed trade mission.

NON-STRATEGIC GOODS—EXPORTS TO SOVIET UNION AND COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the interests of increasing our exports of non-strategic goods, has the government taken any action, such as that taken by the United Kingdom and others members of NATO, to remove the differential between the list of prohibited exports to the Soviet union and that of communist China?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under review, and when there is anything to announce with regard to government policy, that announcement will be made.

Mr. McIlraith: It is a question of fact that he has asked, not of policy.

[Later:]

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question supplementary to the one I asked a moment ago. Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce be kind enough to tell the house whether or not the government is taking any action to remove the differential between the list of prohibited exports to the Soviet union and that with respect to communist China?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I know of no action that has been taken recently.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR OPENING OF NEW OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, and I trust he has had sufficient notice of my intention to ask it. What steps are being taken to establish offices of the unemployment insurance commission and the national employment service in the communities of Terrace, Smithers and Burns Lake?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any notice of this question but if the hon. member wishes me to look into the matter I will have a report prepared.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHERN ONTARIO SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Further to the Prime Minister's announcement appointing a royal commission on energy and more specifically to paragraph "d" covering details of its terms of reference, will he assure the house and in particular the people of northern Ontario that this will in no way be used either now or in the future by his government to delay the construction of the northern Ontario section of the trans-Canada pipe line, the construction of which is so important to the future development of northern Ontario?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a copy of the order in council before me at the moment but I can assure the hon. member—

Mr. Garland: Section "d" refers to northern Ontario.

Mr. Green: —that we are just as anxious as he is to have the trans-Canada pipe line completed.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah.

Mr. Harkness: We always were.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

JOYCEVILLE—INQUIRY AS TO ADMINISTRATION BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Would he please advise the house if the contract for the construction of the administration building at Joyceville penitentiary has been let to date?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question, and in reply I should inform him that tenders for the construction of the administration building have been invited, with a closing date for submitting tenders of October 30.

Mr. Henderson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister please rush the matter along to alleviate unemployment in the locality during the winter?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that construction may be expected to commence as soon as a contract has been let.

PENTICTON, B.C.—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct three questions to the Minister of Public Works. I have given him notice of these questions. Have any steps been taken by the government to purchase land in the city of Penticton, British Columbia, for the purpose of constructing a proposed federal building thereon? If so, what has been done? When does the government anticipate the construction of such federal building will commence? To what specific use or uses will the building be put?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of these questions. The answers are that the department is at present investigating suitable sites. It is expected that construction will be started in 1960. The building will provide accommodation for the Department of National Revenue, income tax division; agriculture; citizenship and immigration; veterans affairs, and the unemployment insurance commission.

QUEBEC CITY—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POSTAL TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the government to proceed as soon as possible in connection with the construction of a postal terminal in Quebec?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency has not read the answer I gave to his question yesterday.

The difficulty is that the Department of Public Works has acquired a site and that site was approved by the municipal authorities of Quebec city with the exception of a planning board which apparently has certain overriding powers in that city.

When that situation arose an attempt was made to have the city acquire the site on which they wished to have the post office erected and then bring about an exchange of the two properties, but the proposed site which the city prefers is owned in part by the Canadian National Railways and I believe the C.N.R. station is located on that property. As yet the city and the Canadian National Railways have not been able to come to terms, and for that reason the Department of Public Works is held up and is unable to proceed with the construction of the building.

ROYAL VISIT

INQUIRY AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF FILM TO FILM COUNCILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Are any plans being made for the immediate release through the film councils across Canada of the film covering Her Majesty's visit to Ottawa?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not the latest reports on this matter but my understanding is that plans are being made for the release of the film as soon as possible. A review is being made of the script which will accompany the film. I understand the interest of the hon. gentleman, which will be shared, of course, by all the people of Canada. I can assure him that the release will be arranged for at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Byrne: Through the film councils?

Mr. Fulton: I will note the hon. member's interest.

GRAIN

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED SHORTAGE IN AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware of the grain shortage in our sister commonwealth nation of Australia? If so, has anything been done to assist in the sale or barter of Canadian wheat?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have heard that drought conditions are affecting the agricultural areas of Australia but I do not quite follow the hon. member in the latter part of his question. I did not get the significance of it. Perhaps he would like to repeat the latter part of his question.

Mr. Lewry: I was wondering whether the government is doing anything to assist the commonwealth of Australia in getting rid of the drought?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we have not entered into the rain-making business yet, but perhaps the hon. member has some suggestion along that line.

[Later:]

Mr. Lewry: Mr. Speaker, may I follow up my first question in connection with the grain shortage in Australia and ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the government will at this time accept so-called soft currency to overcome the Australian shortage of wheat and our surplus of wheat?

Mr. Churchill: I do not know how this would help Australia, if that is what the hon. member has in mind. They will be able to market all the wheat they have at their disposal. We have no trade with Australia in wheat.

LIVESTOCK

HOG CHOLERA—IMPORTS OF PORK FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the statement he made yesterday regarding hog cholera in the Leamington district. Has there been any importation of pork into Canada from the United States and, if so, in what form? Does the United States hog producer use live serum for the control of cholera in that country?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take these several questions as notice and produce an answer at the earliest possible moment.

BUTTER—GOVERNMENT PRICE ON SALES FROM STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question supplementary to the one I asked the other day. At what price is the government selling butter held in government storage to the trade at present?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I wonder whether the hon. member would repeat his question. I did not get the significance of it.

Mr. Schulz: At what price is the government now selling butter held by it to the trade?

Mr. Harkness: I am not able to hear the hon. member. I will take note of his question in Hansard and answer it on Monday.

SOYBEANS—INQUIRY AS TO STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the house whether the government intends to provide adequate storage space for soybeans? My question arises from a communication directed to me by the Ontario soya-bean growers' marketing board.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation with regard to the large crop of soybeans. The matter is being considered, and the hope is that adequate storage facilities will be available.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DIRECT TAXES AND SUBSIDIES—POSITION OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Breton (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. As he is an official representative for the province of Quebec in the cabinet, in view of the federal-provincial conference on fiscal relations that will be held next month can he tell us if he agrees with the well-known opinions of the Quebec government on matters relevant to direct taxes and subsidies?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have too much respect for the constitution to consider that I am any more an official representative from the province of Quebec than any one of the other 74 members from that province who have been elected by the people.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are not many in the government.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Nor, on the other hand, do I feel that it is proper for me to comment in this house in the way requested on the policy of a provincial government.

(Translation):

Mr. Breton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Solicitor General a question?

When sitting in the opposition the hon. Solicitor General has, on various occasions, given expression to the well-known thought that federal subsidies are unconstitutional. The opinion which he voiced then was shared in every way by the government of the province of Quebec. In view of the proposed federal-provincial meeting on fiscal matters, could he tell us now if he will oppose the subsidies which his government seems to be preparing at this time?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my hon. friend that I am still opposed to subsidies such as were proposed by the former government. As to his question, it seems to be a hypothetical one, but I am—

An hon. Member: A political one—

Mr. Balcer: And a political one, yes. I want to tell him that the proposals of the federal government are not yet known, but I am convinced that they will be made on a very different basis from those of the former government.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Careful now! Don't go too far!

(Text):

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the leader of the government if the Solicitor General was correctly interpreting government policy when he foreshadowed an abandonment of the equalization grant, as he did in the answer he gave to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm?

Mr. Balcer: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, although he is fluent in French, should brush up on it a little more, because he has not properly interpreted my answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, did the hon. gentleman not say—I am directing this question to him—that the grants that were going to be proposed by his government would be different from those that had been proposed by the former Liberal government?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is right.

Mr. Balcer: My answer was that the propositions of the federal government have not been formulated as yet, but I am sure they are going to be based on a different attitude toward the provinces from that of the last government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the most important question that has yet been brought before the house. I have a supplementary question which I would like to address to the leader of the government. I feel that—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I ask the leader of the government, is there any intention whatsoever on the part of the federal government to substitute something else for the equalization grants?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Well now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member for Twillingate-Bonavista—

Mr. Pickersgill: Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Green: Oh, Bonavista-Twillingate—he is all twisted up anyway. I suggest that he has already had his answer from the Solicitor General and he should know better than anybody else in this house that announcements of policy will be made in due course by the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite satisfied with that answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Breton: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys? The stand taken by the Quebec government being well known in connection with direct taxation and subsidies granted the provinces by the federal government, could he tell us whether, as the official representative of our province, he concurs in the opinions of the Quebec government about these matters?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) for giving me notice of this question. I believe it is not appropriate, in view of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference, to answer this question or to express my opinion on this matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISPOSITION OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Breton (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I have another question I should like to ask the Postmaster General. Since the government has disposed of the simultaneous translation system that was installed in the house for the benefit of the universal postal union, can the minister tell us to whom it has been sold and at what price?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I should thank the hon. member for having given me notice of both his questions, which notice arrived just a moment ago. The simultaneous translation system which was installed in the house was developed and built by the Department of National Defence. It was installed in the House of Commons by that department, used for the purposes of the universal postal congress, and then taken back by the Department of National Defence which at all times retained ownership and possession of it. My understanding is that it is the intention of that department to retain it and keep it available for such conferences as it might be needed for.

If I may add one word, Mr. Speaker, because I have had comments and questions from several of the members, it should be pointed out that the simultaneous translation system which was installed in the house for the universal postal congress was on a temporary basis only and was for many reasons not suitable for permanent installation.

Mr. Breton: A supplementary question—

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Perhaps I can answer part of the hon. member's question. At the present time a committee is being set up to study the possibility of installing a simultaneous translation system in the House of Commons.

Mr. Breton: May I ask a supplementary question. The Postmaster General just said a system had been installed by the Department of National Defence, and an estimate made in March of last year of $30,000—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Order paper; question No. 18.

(Translation):

Mr. Hector Dupuis (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. From the answer he gave a moment ago, I understand that the government proposes to give special consideration to this matter of simultaneous interpretation. He told us a committee had been formed to study the matter. I would like to know when this body was set up and who are its members.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the original plan was to keep the simultaneous interpretation system which had been set up in this house for the universal postal congress. It was discovered that this system, having been used for simultaneous interpretation in four languages, was far too cumbersome and required the setting up of cabins for the interpreters. We therefore concluded that it would be impractical—

Mr. Dupuis: Do it with part of the $500 million you intend to save.

Mr. Balcer:—and could not adequately provide for a perfect simultaneous translation service. We have therefore decided to appoint a committee which I believe will be made up of the Speaker, representatives of the various parties and representatives of the departments concerned. I cannot say at this time who the members of the committee will be nor when their report will be ready, but you can be assured that instructions have been given to appoint a committee.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken,—it can be checked in Hansard tomorrow—the Solicitor General stated that a committee had been appointed. Well then, he did not answer my question, because I asked him when that committee had been appointed and who were its members.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the committee has been appointed or will be appointed shortly. The order has been given but unfortunately I am not aware of the choice made of the members of the committee. Moreover, I am not the one who has given the order—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Dupuis: When a person does not know about something, that person should not talk about it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRINTING BUREAU—REPORTED REQUEST BY EMPLOYEES FOR INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has any action been taken with respect to the request of the printing bureau employees for a wage boost?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): I am afraid I do not understand the hon. member's question. I do not have a request in that form.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Did the Secretary of State not receive a request from the printing bureau employees to meet with her to discuss this matter?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Better see the Postmaster General.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—INCREASE IN SALARIES OF TEMPORARY STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, or his parliamentary assistant or any suitable minister. Will the increase which was granted to the permanent staff of the House of Commons be granted also to the temporary staff? Has it been approved and will it be retroactive?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): I believe this is a matter under the jurisdiction of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: Oh, no.

Mrs. Fairclough: Oh, yes.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: If hon. gentlemen will permit me a word I would like to reply in particular to the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard). The Speaker is not ordinarily asked questions and does not ordinarily make answers; nevertheless I understand the hon. member's question related to the increases in pay for the temporary sessional employees.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I can tell hon. members that increases corresponding to the other general increases are being attended to.

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—EFFECT OF DOSCO PURCHASE ON COAL AND STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can he tell us whether any studies have been made by the department to determine the possible effect of the purchase of Dosco by A. V. Roe on the Nova Scotia coal and steel industry?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I shall take note of the question and an answer will be given at the first opportunity.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister not aware of the situation?

POWER

DISPOSITION OF DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS IN INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I would like to address a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister tell us the progress of the high level discussions between Canada and the United States with respect to the disposition of downstream benefits in the international waterways; that is to say, the whole of the international waterways?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In view of the importance of this matter to the people of Canada I would like to make it very clear that at this time, in the public interest, there will be no statement from the government.

Mr. Byrne: The order in council sets out the terms of reference and—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Byrne: —refers to the international joint commission relating to waters crossing the international boundary and the development of electrical energy therefrom. I would like to ask the minister whether these negotiations are being transferred back to the international joint commission or are they remaining on the high diplomatic level on which they were.

[Mr. Richard (Ottawa East).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the supplementary question I would like to say that there will be a statement by this government, not at this time, but that the statement will give all the answers and information which it is necessary for the people of Canada to know with regard to these discussions.

Mr. Byrne: The country is definitely interested in this question and I would like to ask that at least on Monday or Tuesday the minister be in a position to tell us whether or not the negotiations have been transferred back to the international joint commission. This is a very important question, and does not require any study.

TRANSPORT

ALBERTA-NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Transport inform the house if surveys are going on at the present time in regard to the construction of a railroad from the province of Alberta to the south shore of Great Slave lake in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but since he is not in his seat perhaps his parliamentary assistant would take it as notice. Has the Minister of Transport given any thought to the appointment of a transport controller with the authority and responsibility of seeing that there is an equitable distribution of box cars in western Canada at all times?

Mr. A. R. MacDonald (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Speaking on behalf of the minister I will take the question as notice and advise that a reply will be forthcoming as soon as possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE

RED DEER, ALTA.—ESTABLISHMENT OF HIGHWAY SUFFERANCE WAREHOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, notice of which has been given. Have representations for the establishment of a highway sufferance warehouse in the city of Red Deer been received by the minister? Has a decision been rendered, and if so what was the nature of that decision?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice. The answer is: Yes, the establishment of a highway sufferance warehouse has been approved in principle, pending submission of warehouse plans by the applicant for final approval.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED FEE-SPREADING BY SOME MEMBERS OF MEDICAL PROFESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Is a thorough investigation into fee-spreading or "kick-back" now under consideration or is any action being taken because of disclosures recently made and the income tax return manipulations by certain persons in a certain section of the medical profession?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have had no notice of this question and I would like to get the full import of it, but if I understand the general import it would imply a disclosure of information with respect to the affairs of taxpayers which, of course, would be contrary to public policy and which I would not consider.

Mr. Sinclair: It has all been in the papers, names and all.

MONTREAL—UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR 1956-57

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. How many people are registered as unemployed in Montreal? Could I also, perhaps, have the comparative figures for the same period last year?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I will take the hon. member's question as notice and get the information for him.

R.C.A.F. DEPOT, MONCTON—REQUEST FOR INCREASES IN PAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance or to his parliamentary assistant. Perhaps the question could be taken as notice. Will the government consider an increase in the rates of pay for labourers and mobile equipment operators and mechanics at No. 5 R.C.A.F. depot in Moncton, New Brunswick?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will take that question as notice.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO FARM WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is it the intention of the government at this session to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to extend the benefits of unemployment insurance to farm employees?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Because of the shortness of this session and the great deal of consideration that must be given to the study of this act there is no intention to have the act reopened during this brief session of parliament.

Mr. Marler: Who said it was going to be short?

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. I noticed he used the words "shortness of this session". Does the minister not agree that parliament and only parliament determines the length of a session, or is the minister aware of any plan on the part of the government to obtain dissolution at a certain date? If so, will he tell us what that date is?

Mr. Speaker: That hardly appears to me as a question which is asking for information.

EXTENSION OF PERIOD OF BENEFITS TO UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc). Is it the intention of the minister or his department to extend the period of benefits to the unemployed under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that matter is being given serious consideration by the unemployment insurance commission. As soon as we have a report the government will decide what action to take in that matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REPORTED DEPLETION OF CARIBOU POPULATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources arising out of a report by his department concerning the serious depletion of the caribou population in the Northwest Territories. Of course this report substantiates the warning I gave this house over a year ago.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hardie: You will get the question. This report stated—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hardie: This report stated—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Hardie: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I would like the minister to tell me if it is true, as this report stated, that restrictions against the hunting of this animal by native Indians and Eskimos were being considered by his department, because I am sure—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): You have asked the question; now stop.

Mr. Hardie: I am sure it is not a question of this department ruling on it in any event, because it is the function of the Northwest Territories council, but should the council pass legislation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is very interesting information that the hon. member is giving the house, but as I understood it his purpose in rising was to ask a question.

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Speaker, I just got to my question. Should the Northwest Territories council pass legislation restricting the hunting of this animal by Indians and Eskimos, could the minister advise me what ways and means are being considered to supply these people with meat?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's hypothetical question I would like to suggest that we will wait until that circumstance arises.

Mr. Hardie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister consider that waiting until legislation is passed by the Northwest Territories council is going to solve the problem of feeding these people when it does happen?

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mr. Starr.]

HEALTH INSURANCE

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH FEDERAL AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since he assumed his portfolio on August 19—

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): August 22.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since August 19 when the Prime Minister announced that the minister would be given the portfolio, which I understand he assumed on August 22, have there been any discussions between the government of Manitoba and the minister with respect to the possibility of that province coming into the national hospital insurance plan? If so, what is the status of those discussions at the present time?

Mr. Monteith: There have been no discussions, Mr. Speaker. There has been some correspondence between my department and the minister of health of Manitoba.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister be prepared to table copies of that correspondence?

Mr. Monteith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, providing I have the approval of the provincial government involved.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

STATEMENT ON DIRECTORSHIPS HELD BY OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) directed the following question to me:

> Can the minister now assure the house that there are no instances of heads of crown corporations being at the same time directors of private companies or corporations?

The answer is that in so far as the heads of those crown corporations which report to parliament through me as Minister of Trade and Commerce are concerned, there is one who is also a director of a private corporation.

Dr. C. J. Mackenzie is president of the atomic energy control board. He was formerly the president of the national research council and president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. After relinquishing his duties as president of these two organizations, and before he was appointed president of the atomic energy control board, he accepted a directorship with Canadian Chemical and Cellulose Company. He receives no pay whatever from the atomic energy control board.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED TRANSFER OF RESERVE ARMY TO CIVIL DEFENCE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence in view of his statement appearing at page 37 of Hansard for October 16, to the effect that in the training period for the non-permanent militia starting October 1 emphasis will be given to civil defence. May I ask the minister whether literature, directions for courses of study, equipment and instructions have been provided to the militia to carry on its training to date with emphasis on civil defence?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The annual training instruction to which I referred described in general terms the type of training which was to be carried out by the militia in connection with the civil defence duties; in particular, it laid down that certain staff discussions would take place with civil authorities. It directed that study should be given to the application of corps training to civil defence requirements, and also that there should be mobile support group exercises. Beyond that, there has been a block syllabus of some 60 periods based on the civil defence précis which have been issued. Furthermore military publications dealing with first aid, traffic control and radiation monitoring have been issued. I think that covers in general the publications which have been issued. These will be followed up by further instruction as the training proceeds.

Regarding equipment, no special equipment has been issued as yet to army units. This matter is under consideration with the civil defence authorities, who in the past have been responsible for the issue of such equipment.

A large number of militia officers have attended the civil defence college at Arnprior over a considerable period of time. It is hoped that it will be possible to step up the attendance at these courses by other militia officers, non-commissioned officers and men.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON FISHERMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yesterday the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked the Minister of Fisheries whether he had taken any steps to terminate the investigation into the affairs of the united fishermen and allied workers' union of British Columbia by the combines investigation branch. The Minister of Fisheries promised a reply today, and since the combines branch is under my department he asked me to reply.

The investigation referred to is an investigation into the production, purchase and sale of fish in the province of British Columbia, which was commenced by the director under the Combines Investigation Act as the result of a formal complaint under the act. The matter has been the subject of considerable previous discussion in the house, particularly between the hon. member who asked the question yesterday and my predecessor in the former government.

The position is that no steps have been taken by the minister to terminate the investigation because, under the present legislation, the minister has no authority to direct that an investigation be discontinued. The terms of the act require that the director in such a case as this:

> . . . shall cause an inquiry to be made into all such matters as he considers necessary to inquire into with the view of determining the facts.

Such an inquiry then proceeds until, again in the words of the act:

> . . . the director is of the opinion that the matter being inquired into does not justify further inquiry—

—or until the inquiry culminates in a written report by the restrictive trade practices commission to the minister. The minister himself, by the legislation, is given no authority to terminate the investigation.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister regarding the investigation by the combines branch into the activities not just of the fishermen's union but of the fishing industry as well in British Columbia. I appreciate the position taken by the minister that he cannot interfere, but can he ask the director of combines to speed up the investigation, since it has now dragged on for over a year?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, in that connection I should advise the hon. gentleman that although the formal application was received in November, 1955, the inquiry had to wait several months to be placed on the agenda. After it was so placed the union brought action for an injunction which had the effect of delaying the investigation further. Then the selection of a time for calling witnesses which would not interfere unduly with the fishing season caused further delay, and as a result witnesses are being called before the restrictive trade practices commission this month in Vancouver.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I watched events in the house yesterday with a great deal of interest. As a matter of fact, as I sat patiently through the whole day waiting to begin my speech one of the things that struck me was this. On Wednesday last the Prime Minister stated that he would introduce legislation to do away with closure in this house. I may say at once that I think under some circumstances a government has the right to use closure. Under circumstances that existed in the summer of 1956 that right, or that privilege, was abused, but I believe in straightforward closure when justified.

I do not want to see this house gagged indirectly. Yesterday two ministers gagged this house. When the Minister of Transport rose to answer quite a proper question from the opposition side of the house I saw the Minister of Finance gesture and order the Minister of Transport to sit down and not answer that legitimate question. I also saw my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) questions that were perfectly legitimate and which he should be able to answer after two months in office as minister, and I saw the Minister of Finance order that minister to remain silent.

Mr. Fulton: Nonsense.

Mr. Coldwell: Last night I rose to discuss a matter of important business and the Minister of Public Works immediately rose in an attempt to gag me from following that course.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar well knows I rose on a point of order. Every time a person rises on a point of order is he to be considered as attempting to gag somebody? I suggest that is not in line with the usually very fair comments made by the hon. member.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say this—

Mr. Green: I raised the point of order simply because I thought it was my duty to do so, and I am sure the hon. member will accept that statement.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Coldwell: May I say this to the minister. He has been in the house as long as I have been here, 22 years. He knows the rules of the house; he knows that a point of order should not be raised on a matter which is not before a court of record. That is my point, but I take his explanation. I thought he was trying to stop me from following up a matter which the government does not want brought before the house at this time.

Yesterday at the conclusion of my remarks I began to discuss the trans-Canada pipe line. I want to make it very clear that I am in favour—and so is my party—of transporting gas from the gas fields of Alberta, or anywhere else, to the users in eastern Canada or anywhere else, provided it is done in the public interest, in the interest of the consumers as well as in the interest of those who produce the gas wherever it may be found. We are in favour of that.

I raise the question of the trans-Canada pipe line today because that pipe line will remain the property of the people of Canada for a long period of time. It is being constructed, it is being paid for by the Canadian people and then leased. We objected to the lending of money to a private corporation to build the first leg of the pipe line as far as Winnipeg, and I think the government still has the right and should exercise it to expropriate that leg of the pipe line which the people of Canada financed. At the time the Conservative party agreed that the people of Canada were financing it for a private and very largely alien-controlled corporation.

The profits that accrue from that public utility should accrue to the people of Canada and not to any group of private promoters who, as late as February of 1957, were described by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) as "buccaneers". When he was somewhat taken to task in the house by the then minister of trade and commerce, Right Hon. C. D. Howe, he defined what he meant by "buccaneers" when he used the word. I find the definition he gave at page 1607 of Hansard of February 25, 1957, and it is in these words:

> A buccaneer is one who reaps a piratical profit without any danger or fear to himself. It is in that sense that I use the expression.

But the present government apparently is quite content to allow men whom the Prime Minister described as buccaneers to reap a piratical profit. They have already reaped huge profits without any danger or fear to themselves.

I said last night that while I welcome the appointment of a royal commission I deplore the fact that it now appears quite evident that the government's intentions and, indeed, the Conservative party's sincerity in June, 1956, can be questioned. Their whole attitude in that debate can be questioned unless they take action to prevent these buccaneers from reaping the profits that will accrue because of the expenditures made by the government and the people of Canada.

What did the Prime Minister say in that debate? He said a lot of things. I have the Hansards here. When he spoke in the debate on May 17, 1956, he said, as found at page 4032 of Hansard:

> The perquisites here—

I think that must be a typographical error. I think the word should be "prerequisites" and not "perquisites". I continue:

> —are that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should abdicate his belief in democratic principles and deny those in opposition the right to advance their arguments and to educate public opinion or to find out why there is such solicitude on the part of the members of this government. For five long years this pampered pet—

This is what the present Prime Minister said.

> —Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, by deviation, by change of direction, by protestation, by alteration in course, has postponed that estimable end of securing a market for Alberta gas and the making available to other parts of Canada of that necessary form of energy. I ask the Prime Minister today to tell this house why he is so fearful of the facts; why he was afraid to allow the true facts of this nefarious scheme to be elucidated? I ask why he found it necessary, and the members of his government found it necessary, to muzzle the representatives of the people in advance of anything in the nature of a filibuster or an interference on the part of the opposition with the policy and program of the government. I ask him to explain that today, for certainly the day of silence is past. Are they afraid of the truth over there? Is that why they hide behind the caricature of parliament which they have substituted by the adoption of the parliamentary form of closure in a way that it has never been adopted before?

A caricature of parliament, a nefarious deal. I ask the government today if the Prime Minister stated the opinion of his party at that time when he said this was a nefarious deal. If he did state their opinion the facts which brought him to that opinion are facts that are there today; and if the facts are as he believed and indicated them to be, then the present government should not allow Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to operate the line across northern Ontario. Indeed, they should go further than that. They should restore to the people of Canada ownership and control of that portion of the pipe line which was alienated from the people of Canada by money provided by this parliament. That is their clear duty.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) spoke at some length regarding this same proposition. I am not going to quote him at the great length I have quoted the Prime Minister. As found at page 3955 of Hansard of May 15, 1956, the Minister of Public Works said:

> I conclude my remarks by this statement, and I make it after careful consideration. I believe that this measure now proposed by the government is the greatest betrayal of the Canadian people since confederation.

What is he doing about it now? If he believes that this was the greatest betrayal of the Canadian people since confederation then he should restore to the people the utility with regard to which he says the former government betrayed the trust of the people of Canada. That is the clear duty of the Minister of Public Works, particularly in the capacity in which he now finds himself.

Then we have the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

Mr. Byrne: This will be good.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, it is a very short quotation and is to be found at page 3935 of Hansard of May 15, 1956. He referred to the trans-Canada pipe line as "this infamous proposal". Infamous proposal. Now the government is apparently quite content to go along with this nefarious deal, with this group of buccaneers, and to carry out this infamous plan, this infamous proposal. I say that if they do so there has never been a greater betrayal of the Canadian people by a government than the betrayal that the present government of Canada contemplates.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that one can question their sincerity. How they made the halls across this country ring. How television portrayed the Prime Minister denouncing the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines deal, denouncing the destruction of parliament because of the manner in which it was done. I say that unless they rectify the situation they will have done more to destroy parliament than even the previous government did, because they will have betrayed the trust that the people of Canada had in them when they elected them on June 10. Again, the Minister of Finance had this to say a little later, as found at page 4694 of Hansard of June 5, 1956:

> Well, sir, it seems now we are narrowed down to a choice between two courses, the government's iniquitous proposal to hand over to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited great sums of public money to help them out and public construction of the entire line.

Apparently the present government is quite willing to go ahead and finance, by public money, the construction of the entire line in northern Ontario, which has just begun and which the present Minister of Finance described as an iniquitous proposal. He will be the minister controlling the finances of this country. He will make the necessary financial arrangements in order that the iniquitous proposal can be carried out. Was there anything more insincere than that?

Then the Prime Minister spoke on May 29, 1956, at page 4423 of Hansard for that date. He said:

> What have you been doing for five long years? Playing around with this corporation, with these adventurers from Texas and New York trading away Canada's natural resources at the expense of the Canadian people.

This is the Prime Minister of the present government which has the power to prevent this being done. Are they going to use that power, or are they going to betray the Canadian people to the adventurers from Texas and New York, the buccaneers as the present Prime Minister called them on one occasion? At one time he referred to the pipe line proposal as "this ramshackle caricature of national development". Yet he and his colleagues have the nerve to set up a royal commission to inquire into this ramshackle caricature of national development, under the guise that this is part of the Conservative policy on national development which they tried, and probably successfully, to sell to the people of Canada prior to June 10.

There is another aspect of this with which I intended to deal last night. Perhaps I would not have put on the record today just what I have put on the record if it had not been for the interruptions in my address last evening. I am thinking of government action to prevent the promoters of pipe-line companies from making millions of dollars at the expense of the public of Canada. Of course, they have already made many millions of dollars by having allotted to them promotion shares, about which the people knew nothing and about which this parliament knew nothing, at prices that were so small. Perhaps it is already too late to catch the real culprits in this matter. Certainly it will be even later if the government waits for the many months or years it may take the royal commission to make its report.

Those of us who know the history of the North American continent remember that in the early years of the oil and railway industries the robber barons, as they called them, built up for themselves huge fortunes. We are allowing a few people in this country, and their friends across the line, to follow the examples of these robber barons. The government, which shared these views with me and those associated with me, are now in the seats of power and are apparently prepared to betray the Canadian people to these robber barons or these buccaneers, as the Prime Minister referred to them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I understood him correctly the hon. gentleman said there were promoters of this enterprise who were able to buy stock at prices about which this parliament was never told. I am sure the hon. member does not recall—I am asking him if he does not recall—that his seat mate pointed out that this information was in a return which was made to this house before this measure was ever voted upon?

Mr. Coldwell: My hon. friend and seat mate pointed out that that return was available ten months later, when he raised the matter on the floor of this house in February of this year. As a matter of fact I went through the documents in connection with this whole deal very carefully. I went into the agreement, which was never attached to the bill as an appendix, as it should have been.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was tabled in the house.

Mr. Coldwell: It was tabled in the house; quite right. I managed to get a mimeographed copy of it, but some of the members of the house never saw the agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: This was all in the agreement, was it not?

Mr. Coldwell: No, it was not in the agreement. I can say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes, it was.

Mr. Coldwell: However, I am not going to argue with my hon. friend at the moment. I am arguing with the new government of Canada, so allow me to argue with them.

I want to take a look at a few of these people to whom reference was made in connection with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. There was another outfit which was headed by a gentleman named McMahon. Those of us who were in the house will remember the name McMahon. Mr. McMahon was to have been the chosen instrument of the Conservative party if some of their front bench members had had their way. I said at the time that I agreed that Mr. McMahon's operations certainly did not recommend him to parliament and the people of Canada. I think that is quite right. For example, let us see what he has done with the Westcoast Transmission Company. Let me say that when I first made these computations some months ago the results, of course, were very much higher than they were yesterday when the computations were revised, because there has been a significant fall in the stock market during the last three months. However, even revising these figures at present stock prices, the profits made by Mr. McMahon and his associates are still enormous, just as the profits made by the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines interests were enormous. May I add that these shares were very largely unloaded at high prices on smaller investors in Canada and elsewhere. They have seen their investments diminish in value since.

I am quite happy that my colleagues, during last session, were able to prevent the splitting of the shares of Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company because, had the company been able at that time to split the shares which were then worth $124 five ways, making them worth approximately $25 each, the people today would find they had shares valued at less than $12, because yesterday the shares were selling at $58. Hon. members will recall that the president of Westcoast Transmission was Mr. Frank McMahon, the favourite of the Conservative party in June, 1956. Mr. McMahon was in a very fortunate position throughout these operations. He was an insider. He was able to obtain the common stock of this company at a special price, indeed at only 5 cents—make no mistake—5 cents a share for stock that was offered to the public at $5 a share and which today is selling at $27.50.

He bought 155,000 shares at that price of 5 cents. These cost him in the neighbourhood of $7,700, and for that investment he acquired an equity worth over $4 million. I repeat, an investment of $7,700 at 5 cents a share brought $4 million of equity.

In addition the same Mr. McMahon, whom some members of the Conservative party would have brought into the picture in preference to Mr. Tanner and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Coates, was granted options on 200,000 additional shares to be purchased at any time before January 31, 1960, at $6 per share. This stock is now selling, as I have said, for $27.50. In other words he could invest a part of the tremendous capital gain he has already made, even under present comparatively depressed prices, to realize a further capital gain today in excess of another $4 million. Surely it does not take a royal commission to establish the vicious exploitation by these robber barons of the Canadian people which is taking place in the gas and oil industry.

I say it is the duty of this parliament to protect the people of Canada from exploitation and raids of this description, and the present government has taken office because many of the people in Canada believed that this government would do just that. Now it is clearly prepared to betray the Canadian public in this regard.

This kind of thing is something that has happened in any pipe line company that one might name. I referred to the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited. Mr. McMahon is not the only person to make tremendous capital gains on this company's stock. For an initial investment of something like $20 million the stockholders of this company acquired shares now worth $125 million, or a capital gain of $105 million. I will just mention also Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, which stock originally sold for $54 million and is already worth $124 million, or another capital gain of $80 million.

An hon. Member: Tax free.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, of course, tax free; and I am dealing, with the stock that was sold to everybody. I am not talking about Mr. Tanner's options or Mr. Coates' options and I am not, in another field, talking about some of the stock that sold in some other companies at four-fifths of a cent to insiders, out of which they have made hundreds of thousands of dollars. I am talking about shares that have been put on the market since. There is Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company, to which I referred a moment ago. The stock purchased in this company by a few large United States corporations at $10 per share is now selling at $59. In other words the value of the stock has climbed from $15 million to $89 million, or another capital gain of $74 million. There is the case also of the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, where the stock was originally sold for $44 million and now has a market value of $192 million, or a capital gain of $148 million. I am using the current price of the stock, not the high prices at which a lot of this stock changed hands, from the promoters to the public, until the drop last July.

Now, to take a couple of smaller companies like the Alberta Gas Trunk Line which owns lines in the province of Alberta gathering the natural gas for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, the stock here sold for a total of approximately $13 million and is now worth about $33 million, or a capital gain of $20 million.

Mr. Hahn: To the people of Alberta.

Mr. Coldwell: I am not complaining about the little fellow getting any of this; I am complaining about the great big fellows.

Mr. Hahn: But he is the one who got it.

Mr. Coldwell: I am fair—I am fair—

Mr. Hahn: In principle it was the little fellow who got it.

Mr. Coldwell: I say that the thing to have done would have been to make this available to all the people of Alberta, even those who had no spare dollars to invest, and give them an opportunity of receiving a return on what was called by Mr. Aberhart their cultural heritage.

Mr. Hahn: That is what they did this year.

Mr. Coldwell: —which they have been alienating—

Mr. Argue: Twenty-two dollars.

Mr. Shaw: How much did Saskatchewan pay?

Mr. Coldwell: —which they have been alienating to promoters almost ever since they took office, under false pretenses, in 1935.

Mr. Low: While you are at it, why don't you tell the house about your cement company in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Coldwell: Certainly I will. I do not want to interrupt what I am saying to do that, but I am going to say that the Saskatchewan cement company bonds, which were guaranteed by the province, required that that company pay 2 per cent for the guarantee of those bonds, and the government was adequately protected in the deal which was made with the cement company.

Mr. Low: And the promoters made $2½ million.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, the promoters may have made something on it.

Mr. Low: It was exactly the same thing.

Mr. Coldwell: No, it is a very different problem.

Mr. Low: The principle is exactly the same.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say this, and I want to make this very clear. I am not opposed to persons who invest risk capital getting a return for the risk they take. What I am opposed to is giving the natural resources of Canada to groups of promoters who take no risk—I repeat, take no risk—and make hundreds of millions of dollars out of the people of Canada.

There is also Quebec Natural Gas Company which is to retail natural gas to the Montreal area. That stock was sold for about $1 million and it is now worth $24 million, or a capital gain of $23 million. I could go on; there are the Union Gas Company of Ontario, Consumers Gas Company of Toronto, Northern Ontario Natural Gas, which hold franchises throughout northern Ontario, and what has been done in that connection will not bear examination.

Just taking the six companies I have mentioned there is a total original investment of $148 million now worth $598 million or nearly $600 million. The point I am making is this, that this has been made possible not by those people, in the main, taking all the risk, but because Canada took the risk. Canada, in part, put up the money for the initial steps and the present government of Canada is going to put up the money to build the pipe line for them all across northern Canada. They will reap any profits that accrue from the flow of gas in that pipe line.

We can be sure that taking the other companies into account, there have been capital gains of more than half a billion dollars. I could go on of course to elaborate further, but I say to the government, surely this is something that calls for immediate action, particularly in view of their record in the house during the pipe-line debates of 1956. Instead of any kind of equivocation or abdication of responsibility properly theirs, and which they assumed when they so bitterly opposed the Trans-Canada Pipe Line deal in 1956, I say that action should be taken now to stop the carrying out of the deal as far as we are able to do so.

Second, it is about time the government of Canada instituted a capital gains tax. A capital gains tax would bring back to the people of Canada some of those immense speculative profits, as well, of course, as bringing the pipe-line companies over which we have jurisdiction under public ownership and control. These are, after all, public utilities to the same extent as the great system of hydroelectricity in Ontario of which this province is so proud and which, I would remind the Conservative party, was established by a great Canadian, Sir Adam Beck. But perhaps the Conservative party may have changed since it added the word "Progressive" to its name, though it is, in any case, a strange combination of names. Yes, the Ontario hydroelectric system of which the people of that province are so proud was promoted by Sir Adam Beck but built by a Conservative government of that province.

It may be said by somebody, in connection with all this, that there may very well be some Canadian control over these companies. I notice that the Minister of Public Works dealt with that matter in the House of Commons during the debate in 1956. On page 2195 of Hansard he discounted a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce very well indeed. On March 15, 1956, he said:

> The minister has said that shares are to be offered to the Canadian public. He might have gone on to point out that even though several thousand individual Canadian shareholders bought up to 51 per cent of the shares, which is most unlikely—

Of course it has not happened.

> —there would be no possible chance that they could overrule these three great United States companies—The Delhi Company is also a United States company—working together as a closely knit unit. It is absolutely fantastic to suggest that private Canadian shareholders would have the slightest chance of controlling the company. Control rests with these United States companies and it is going to remain there unless the government makes some change in its policy.

I say those words are as true today as they were in March, 1956. What steps will the Conservative government of Canada, which so bitterly opposed this bill when in opposition, take to ensure to the people of Canada the public use, public control and public profit with regard to these utilities which the people of Canada have financed already, in part, and which they will finance to an even greater extent when the pipe line goes forward. It is not yet built. We have an opportunity now. I challenge the government to seize that opportunity and to do the right thing in this regard.

Having said this, I want to put on record again the amendment I moved to the speech from the throne, because now, I think, it may be better understood than when I introduced it on Wednesday afternoon, wishing to make sure that the amendment would be introduced that day:

> This house welcomes the measures indicated in the speech from the throne and urges that these measures be placed before parliament with the least possible delay in order that the benefits proposed therein might accrue to the Canadian people at once. We respectfully submit, however, that in the opinion of this house Your Majesty's advisers should give immediate consideration to the advisability of taking steps to deal with the menace of inflation, rapidly rising unemployment and other serious problems facing this country. We call upon the government to give immediate effect to the social and economic planning necessary to cope with these problems.

As clearly as I am able, I have pointed out to the government what in my opinion is its duty in this regard. I wish to reiterate, before I sit down, that we welcome the measures announced in the speech from the throne, measures which we—though not we alone—have long advocated, namely an increase in the pensions provided for our senior citizens, an increase in disability pensions, an increase in pensions for the blind, an increase in pensions for our war veterans, some steps toward a stabilization of agricultural prices to prevent a continuance of the price-cost squeeze from which the farmers right across Canada are suffering acutely, advance payments on farm-stored grain and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time than I have ever taken on any occasion in this house. I hope hon. members will forgive me, but I had the right to do so, moving as I did this amendment. For the first time I have taken advantage of this because I felt that the problems I wished to bring before the house on behalf of my colleagues as well as myself were of sufficient importance to merit devoting so much attention to them.

Mr. J. A. Simmons (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make a short statement on my position as member of parliament for the Yukon Territory.

Shortly after the result of the general election had been announced my Conservative opponent challenged the legality of the election on the grounds that there were irregularities in the taking of the vote. The charge was heard before two judges, as provided for in the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. Last week they gave their decision, to the effect that irregularities had taken place in the taking of the vote and that the election should be voided.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that the judges found no evidence of fraud or corruption, but merely of minor technical irregularities committed by the supporters of both candidates. I am afraid that our ways in the Yukon are more casual than in the more densely populated areas of Canada, and we have generally been more concerned with the spirit rather than the letter of the law. An election act designed for taking the vote in southern Canada is not necessarily the best way to get out the vote in the vast reaches of the Yukon Territory. Because of our sparse population, everyone knows everyone else, and so the special identification requirements of residents not on the voters lists are scarcely needed in the Yukon. Therefore I would respectfully suggest that the elections act be amended to remedy these special problems peculiar to the northland.

Perhaps the house would be interested in the type of irregularities discovered. For example, a clergyman resident in Whitehorse preached in Mayo Landing, a settlement 250 miles north of Whitehorse, the Sunday before the election and cast his vote there, as he would not be back in Whitehorse until after election day. Another clergyman of a different faith cast his vote at the proper poll, but the poll was a divided one and the ballot was put in the wrong box. There were many others in the same position as the clergyman I have just mentioned who were absent from their normal places of residence, but who voted at polls in the communities they happened to be in on June 10.

Disfranchisement of our citizens in my opinion is not the intention of the act. Every Canadian no matter where he lives in Canada should be given every opportunity to exercise his franchise. When such errors could be made in good faith by clergymen, it is easy to understand why other minor technical errors were made by other persons.

I have the right to appeal the decision of the judges to the Supreme Court of Canada, and to hold my seat until their decision is reached. I have decided, however, not to exercise this right but to accept the judgment of the lower court and vacate my seat when the court order is formally received by Mr. Speaker.

I do this, Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no cloud on the Yukon representation. Our great territory needs an active spokesman in parliament and I urge the government to call the by-election as soon as possible so that a Yukon member can be seated without undue delay. The constituents of this important, far-flung riding expect the government to take prompt action to avoid further resentment and annoyance, and to give them the representation they so justly deserve in this House of Commons.

I believe it is possible to call the election before Christmas, which would permit representation in parliament in January. As a man who has lived almost all his life in the Yukon I can assure this house, Mr. Speaker, that it is perfectly possible to have a winter election there, because we have certainly solved the problems of transportation and communications in winter. All the remote settlements not served by highway are readily accessible by ski-equipped aircraft.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be proper for me at this time to speak on any of the many Yukon problems which need attention. I shall reserve those remarks until I return from winning the by-election, which I hope will be called for December.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was very glad to relinquish my regular turn in favour of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Simmons) in order that he could place his statement before the house today, as I understand time is running out. I only regret that such a statement was necessary, because no matter who the member might be it is an extremely difficult thing for him to do.

May I take what few minutes remain before one o'clock to get through some pleasantries before I begin the more serious part of my remarks which I have to make this afternoon. I only wish, sir, and I say this without casting any reflection on your own good self, that Mr. Speaker were able to be in his chair at this time. I understand he cannot be here because of illness. I would like to convey to him my warm congratulations upon his election and to state I have confidence that he will carry on his high and important duties with dignity, decorum and justice. I wish for him a happy term of office, one that will be satisfying both to himself and to hon. members of this house while he is in the office of speaker.

I had the opportunity of congratulating you, sir, yesterday, so I will not do that today.

I would like also to say that I express my felicitations to the government on having won their present position on Mr. Speaker's right. I cannot help but feel a bit sorry for the government at this time, however, after listening to the discourse of my hon. friend the leader of the C.C.F. party. I am sure the government as a whole recognize that they are here under most unusual circumstances, in a house which has already been described as a parliament of minorities. Not only that but unfortunately a good many of the things that have been said by them in the past are now being thrown into their faces. I suppose this goes to show that we all have to expect these chickens to come home to roost, and I would imagine that if by some ill wind that should chance to blow my hon. friend across the way ever formed the government of Canada, a lot of these things which have been said by him and members of his group in the past would be thrown back at them with equal vehemence and equal effect.

I must say, though, that the government is in the enviable position of having people pay great tributes to it, and I can only say that never in my experience have so many opposition parties and members been determined to keep a government in office. This is indeed an unusual circumstance. All governments that I have seen thus far are ones that the opposition wanted to defeat at the first opportunity, but here we have a changed circumstance and what a drastic change it is. I am sure the people of the country will watch with vast interest what happens here in the next few weeks.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, this could very well be one of the most fruitful sessions of parliament in Canadian history provided, of course, that we see a strong measure of statesmanship instead of political manoeuvring. I am certain the next few weeks are going to witness the separation of the supreme politicians from the statesmen in parliament, and it will be most interesting to see into what category various hon. members fall.

And now, Mr. Speaker, with those remarks may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Low: Mr. Speaker, at this stage I would like to add to those already offered to the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) my own warm congratulations on the honour that was conferred upon him by the Nobel foundation. I think that it can safely be said that the fellow members of the hon. member in this chamber will feel that when one of their own in this parliament should be considered worthy of the Nobel peace prize it must be a source of great pride and satisfaction to them all.

At this point I should like also to add a word of sincere and warm commendation to the two young men who introduced the motion we are now debating. I was impressed with their fluency and with the excellent quality of their maiden speeches. There is no doubt in my mind that both will make many fine contributions to the debates in the days ahead. If I single out the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) for further mention it is only because I knew his friendly and illustrious father so well and also because he comes from my own province. I might say here, Mr. Speaker, that word comes to me almost universally that this young man made a fine impression while he was a member of the legislature in the province of Alberta. I only want to say that if he follows in his father's footsteps he will indeed make a warm friend of every member in this house. In addition to that, I am sure he will avoid the serious error into which some other members from our province fell, the error of believing that when they were elected to this house they were given a mandate to libel their own province and belittle everything that was done to improve conditions there. Art Smith, senior, never was heard at any time when he was in this house to criticize unjustly, and we all had a great affection for him.

The events of the weekend, Mr. Speaker, and the first three days of the present week have made me even more proud to be a Canadian, a loyal subject of Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. I am grateful indeed that I can live in this wonderful land, a land which I greatly appreciate, and partake of the many privileges and blessings of citizenship here. I think we are all blessed in that we have at the head of our parliament a constitutional monarch of the quality of our beloved Queen whose ancestry has been traced back to David of old who was anointed King of Israel by the prophet Samuel. Our Queen was also anointed for service in the spiritual as well as in the temporal realm and a part of the solemn covenant she has taken is that she shall jealously and zealously safeguard the liberties of her subjects. It was for me a soul-stirring moment when our lovely Queen made history by presiding at the opening of this parliament on Monday.

I am grateful, too, that I could be here as an elected member to witness the event and in my small way to take a part in it. It was a moment that I shall always remember and about which I shall never tire telling my children and grandchildren and whenever I do retell the tale I will try to impress upon those children the facts about the very important role the royal family plays in holding together the many and extremely varied parts of the commonwealth of nations as well as providing visible substance to strengthen government in Britain, in Canada, and in some others of the commonwealth countries.

It is a new experience for the Social Credit party, Mr. Speaker, to be sitting to your right. Since 1935, when Social Credit members first came into this house, they have sat to your left, facing the government. They have been a part of the opposition and as such they have always taken their responsibilities seriously. As a matter of duty they have been constructively critical of measures placed before parliament either by the government or by private members from whatever party. We have supported those proposals which we thought were in the interest of our country and its people. We have strongly opposed those things which we thought were departures from principle or which threatened the liberties of Canadians; but as we did our duty as we saw it we faced the government, and I say that is always a good place to have your opposition, out where you can clearly see what they are going to do to you. It is easier to keep track of them that way. There just was not room for all of the opposition in that section of the house to Your Honour's left following the election of June 10. Someone had to sit over on this side. We were asked to do so and being the reasonable people we are we took our place here. It may be that some of our political opponents will try to read something into the fact that we sit on the government side of the house, something that just is not there. Just in case there is such an inclination we felt that it did not matter very much where we sat because we think that we can do our full duty as well here as elsewhere in the chamber. We are still members of the opposition. We shall try to be justly and constructively critical of all measures that are brought before us.

We have never been carping critics nor at any time obstructionists, and we shall not begin to be now. As long as the government tries faithfully to fulfil those of its election promises with which we were in agreement and to stand on sound principles we shall give them and their measures our full support. If they depart from good principles or neglect their promises or if they ever forget that the real source of their power and authority to govern is the people of Canada whose will is expressed through the elected representatives to parliament, then, Mr. Speaker, we shall feel obliged to oppose them with vigour. We will support fully any effort by the government to enact just as quickly as possible their legislation providing for cash advances to the farmers and for increases in old age pensions, pensions for the blind and war veterans allowances. We thought, sir, that yesterday's show was hardly in keeping with a sincere desire to get those important pieces of legislation into early effect. That was one reason why we felt that it was not our privilege or our right to delay unduly the time that was taken to put through interim supply. I think, sir, that pretty well sums up our position clearly enough.

There is one more thing I should say about the situation and that is this. During this session we shall get the feel of the atmosphere on the government side of the house and we think the situation is one which very likely is well designed to give us training against the time in the not too distant future when we become the government of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just the tail wagging the dog.

Mr. Low: Well, it is something to be a part of the dog which is something I am afraid my hon. friend cannot say.

I would like to turn, sir, for a while now to a discussion of the provisions of Her Majesty's speech. We were glad to see that the government is prepared to fulfil its election promises in connection with old age pensions, war veterans allowances, pensions for the blind and pensions for the disabled. These are things which we have fought for constantly over the years. Reference to these matters in the speech from the throne was in very general terms, as has already been pointed out. Nothing definite is yet known about the amount of the increases or when the increases will be made effective. I presume that in good time the government will make these things known to us and that at that time we shall be in a far better position to express our views about them. However, I should like to say that the government is to be commended on thinking about our aged citizens, the veterans and the unfortunate ones in our country. Surely, it must have been evident to any thinking person that our senior citizens should not be expected to try to eke out a miserable existence on $46 a month, in the light of the serious increases, as it were, being made almost monthly in the cost of living.

We think that long ago there should have been an escalator provision in the old age and blind pension arrangements, and perhaps even in the war veterans allowance arrangements, to make possible automatic increases to take care of increases in the cost of living. We are impressed by the fact that the government recognizes the need for increases and that they are prepared to make some provision for them. We want them to know that we support also any effort that will be made to shorten the residence qualifications and we believe that since old age pensions are now contributory they should be paid as of right to the recipient no matter where he may live. We ask the government to take that matter into very serious consideration.

I am certain that the people of Canada generally are aware of the fact that if the Conservative government can increase old age and blind pensions and war veterans allowances in October of this year there is no reason whatsoever why the Liberal government could not have done an equally good job in March of the same year or even earlier. In the intervening months so far as I know there has been no real change in the economic condition of the country, certainly no upsurge or change for the better which would justify the Liberals in saying that they could not do it.

There is one thing however, that the government must bear in mind and that is this. Unless something fundamentally sound is done to check the continuous price rise, what they have proposed to help the aged, the blind and the war veterans will be of no lasting value whatever. One of the big reasons why the people of Canada elected a new government last June was that they wanted people in office who would bring to bear upon the problems of the country a different approach and different thinking, and especially people with the mental attitude that says, "it can be done."

It is refreshing, therefore, to see the new government taking the stand in some things that changes for the better can be made, and for that I congratulate them. I suggest it is time that a new approach was made to financial policy because I am convinced that with a fresh attitude towards it something of a worth-while nature can be accomplished that will be of lasting advantage, not only to the aged, the infirm and the disabled but to all the people of Canada. I hope that the Conservative government will not get into the same frame of mind that was so obvious all the while the Liberals were in office. From 1935 to 1957 they seemed to feel that so far as financial policy was concerned the present state of affairs was the necessary state of affairs. They constantly indicated the closed mind on that subject and the people of the country just got tired of it. Therefore I throw out the warning to the government that they will have to be very careful not to fall into the same frame of mind as did the Liberal government, especially with respect to this most important fundamental, a sound monetary policy. It is easy to do that, especially when ministers of the crown depend so much for their advice on the civil servants they inherit. That does not cast any reflection whatsoever on the civil service of Canada.

I sincerely hope that the old age pensions, blind pensions, war veterans alowances and disability pensions are given a substantial boost at this time, one that will be in keeping with the needs of the good people concerned as well as with the productive capacity of this great country. I suggest that a $60 a month basic pension for the aged would not be out of line at all.

We noted with some satisfaction that the government is to provide cash advances to farmers against farm-stored grain. We have already made our position clear in this regard in previous debates of other years. We think that cash advances are more fair than and preferable to government guaranteed loans through the chartered banks. Here again, Mr. Speaker, the details of the government's proposals have not been revealed to us and we will have to wait until we see exactly what the program is before we can go too much into detail in our discussion. We sincerely hope, however, that this is not the sum total of the government's program for assuring the farmer his fair share of the national income.

Her Majesty's speech does indicate in a rather indefinite way that parliament will be asked to enact a measure to provide greater stability in the prices of farm products. These words may refer to the commodity price support legislation now on the statute books of the country but which was never put into effect fully by the former government. It must be clear to the present government that some definite provision will have to be made through stabilization of prices and marketing arrangements, and perhaps in other ways, to assure the farmer his fair share of the national income.

My colleagues and I have been advocating various measures for years which we thought would have to be applied if the aggregate income of Canadian farmers was to bear a fair relationship to farm costs. It will not be good enough in my judgment to provide cash advances against farm-stored grain and that only. At best these cash advances can only make available to the farmers a small amount of cash to meet their most pressing bills and keep them one step ahead of the sheriff. Moreover, the government is going to find tremendous difficulties in taking security and in making the advances.

The situation would be far different if the former government had been wise enough to provide approved storage as they should have done. I do not mean to imply that the farmers of this or any other country have to be molly-coddled or want to be because I am sure they do not want to be, but I think it can be laid down as a sound principle that governments should do for the people those things which they cannot do for themselves or things that the government can do so much better. Provision of adequate inland and terminal storage facilities for grains especially is one of these things that enlightened, forward-looking governments have felt it their duty to provide. In the United States the government has doubled the amount of storage capacity for farm products since 1953, and thus when surpluses mounted approved storage was available and that made it much simpler to make cash advances against farm products properly stored.

I think that this government must face up to the fact that in the years ahead it will be desirable in the interests of our national security and in the interests of the hungry people of the world for Canada to have enough inland and terminal storage capacity properly and wisely dispersed to carry over safely from one year to another not less than two full years' grain production. When the time is more appropriate I intend to put forward to the house an irrefutable case for the establishment of a 2 million bushel storage elevator in the Peace river country, my own constituency, as one unit in what will be a necessary, broader government program. Here again the people of Canada are bound to ask if the Conservative government can make available cash advances to the farmers in the fall of 1957, why could not the Liberals have done equally well in the spring of 1957 or 1956 or 1955 or even earlier?

However that may be, the problems facing the farmer will not be solved unless and until great improvements have been made in marketing and in pricing. We are convinced that the basis of any real improvement in the farmers' position will be the adoption of the two-price system that has been used so successfully by many industries in this country. Colleagues of mine will go more fully into this situation in the course of their speeches.

I note some rather vague references to taxation in the speech from the throne. I sincerely hope that this is not merely window dressing in preparation for another election. The people of Canada are expecting relief from the heavy burden of taxation. One of the reasons they changed governments was the failure of the Liberals to come to grips seriously with the whole taxation problem. I think the former minister of finance must have realized that when he took upon himself this summer much of the burden for the loss of government status by the Liberals. The government will have to realize that what I am saying is true and if they ever expect seriously to tackle the increasing cost of living they will have to begin to remove those taxes that inevitably push up prices and add to the burden of consumer costs.

One of the most prolific causes of inflation is the government's habit of imposing hidden taxes against commodities, and a right good place to start tackling the cost of living problem and the rise of the price index in any program of tax reduction is in the field of commodity taxes, the sales and excise taxes that are applied at the manufacturers' level.

Of course, the Canadian people would welcome a reduction in income taxes. I am told that if some relief in income taxes is provided Canadians generally are prepared for the time being to forget all the others so that they can at least sleep nights.

The government is to be commended for their intention to propose from time to time projects and programs to implement a national development policy which is to be carried out in co-operation with the provinces and territories and which will enable all regions of Canada to share in the benefits to be realized from the development of the resources of this great nation. But I warn the government that as they proceed to develop the ideas programs and projects for this purpose they will come face to face inevitably with the absolute necessity for a change in the financial policy of this country. I point out that financial policy and national development are inevitably and unalterably tied together. If the government is to fulfil its promise to give effect to proper national development policies they will have to change their whole approach to finances in Canada, particularly their concept of the role and functions of the Bank of Canada. They will not get far if they do not solve the tight money problem and come to a definite decision with regard to this very important question. Who is to devise and lay down financial policy in this country? Is it to be a bunch of jobbers or must it be the parliament of this land?

I think one of the most serious omissions in the speech from the throne is the lack of any mention whatever of the tight money policy of the previous government. Thus far I have seen little evidence that the new government is prepared to come to serious grips with this disastrous policy. They must know—I am speaking now of this government—as many thinking people across this country are coming to know that the tight money policy of the Liberal government was a policy laid down largely by the Bank of Canada. It is a policy which was enunciated about two years ago and was supposed to have accomplished three things. According to the governor of the Bank of Canada, it was designed to bring about a reduction in the cost of living or at least to curb rising consumer costs. In the second place, it was supposed to bring about a reduction in Canada's serious adverse balance of trade. Thirdly, Mr. Coyne's policy was supposed to bring about a reduction of the huge consumer debt that had been brought about very largely by credit buying.

Those are the three things that the governor of the Bank of Canada and his associates emphasized and about which they expressed deep concern in the banking and commerce committee in 1955. I ask hon. members of this house to pause for just one moment and think of what has happened since then. The government of Canada established a market for treasury bills, that was the Liberal government, and they allowed the interest rate on those to rise to 4 per cent. Following this the Bank of Canada claimed that they had no alternative but to increase the rediscount rate to 4 per cent. The governor of the Bank of Canada issued requests at the same time, which many people of course interpreted as commands, to the chartered banks of this country to restrict credit. This they immediately started to do. As a consequence the tight money policy was foisted upon the people of Canada. General interest rates jumped by more than 1 per cent in a single year; development in many areas of Canada fell off seriously and soon came to almost a full stop in several areas. Our municipalities, school divisions and provincial governments were forced to either completely curtail their present projects or go into the money markets of the United States to borrow to fill their money needs.

The tight money policy which started in 1955 has unquestionably been a miserable failure. Let us take a look at what has definitely happened in those two years in the three important things Mr. Coyne's policy was supposed to have accomplished. I remind you that it was supposed, in the first place, to curb the rising cost of living. Has it done so? Well, in September 1956 the consumer price index stood at 119, and today it stands at 122.6, the highest in history, and it continues to go up. Unless something is done about it, Mr. Speaker, I predict that within a year it will stand at 125. The fact is Mr. Coyne's policy, rather than curbing living costs, has actually built into our economy definite inflationary trends, some of them on a long-term basis.

Consider for example, if you will, the serious increase in mortgage interest rates. The family man who tries to provide a home today finds that as a result of the credit restrictions and tight money policy he must contract to pay higher interest rates, not just for one year but over a period of 15 or 20 years, no matter how interest rates may go down in the next few years. That is what I call built-in inflation over a long period of time. What strikes many people as very odd about this whole situation is that prices go on rising in spite of the fact that industrial and business inventories have been accumulating at a rapid rate over the last two years. There have been very few commodities in short supply, except money and the will in high places where policy is made to tackle the problem in such a way as to help the average citizen. Mr. Coyne's policy has been a miserable failure too, so far as reducing the cost of living is concerned or even in curbing the rising cost of living index.

What about the second thing Mr. Coyne's policy was supposed to have accomplished, namely a reduction in our adverse balance of trade? Since the tight money policy began in 1955 our adverse balance has more than doubled, and so the tight money policy has been a miserable failure in this branch also.

What about the third reason for Mr. Coyne's policy? How has it operated in connection with consumer debt since 1955? The governor of the Bank of Canada expressed grave concern two years ago over the tremendous increase in credit buying by Canadian people. If I remember my figures correctly, in 1955 consumer debt brought on by credit buying by the people of Canada stood at about $2.2 billion. Today it stands at no less than $2.6 billion which is a good $400 million above the figure for 1955. This simply means, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada have had to mortgage future incomes to the extent of $2.6 billions in order to satisfy present needs and wants out of the great pile of production already in existence and crying for a market. I say that nothing emphasizes quite so much as this fact the imperative need for a new approach to our whole financial policy in Canada.

We Social Crediters have that approach. Our financial policy can solve this problem and can make completely unnecessary the tight money policy. It must be evident to hon. members of this house that Mr. Coyne's policy has failed all the way along the line. In fact it has intensified inflationary trends rather than reduced them. I remember back in 1955 that one of the reasons given by Mr. Coyne for initiating the policy of credit restriction was a claim of insufficiency of labour in Canada. I think it can be safely said that the framers of the policy cannot use that argument now, because the dominion bureau of statistics reports that today the registered unemployed labour force stands at 174,000 individuals, and it is growing daily.

We are charging Mr. Coyne with foisting upon Canada a policy of foolish restrictions just at a time when our chief competitor, Russia, is going all out to expand all the way along the line. This in our judgment puts us in a very dangerous position. I bring these things to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because this government will have to face up to the situation in a very realistic manner. They will have to make it abundantly clear to the Bank of Canada that financial policy from this time forward is going to be framed by the parliament of Canada. Until the government makes that point very clear and then sets about asking parliament to give Canada a new, realistic financial policy, they never will be able to fulfil their campaign promises. In fact the best thing we will be able to do will be to take care of the fringe things, that is until they fight out this battle with the Bank of Canada and win.

We commend to the government a serious and uninhibited study of Social Credit financial proposals. I am sure they will find in them the real foundation for the establishment in Canada of a policy of freedom. Moreover, they will find in the techniques we suggest for the application of that policy the only hope in the world today for individual liberty. We see most of the present policies stripping the individual of his liberties and progressively narrowing his range of free decisions.

It is because we feel so keenly about that situation, and the necessity of doing something about the tight money policy, which has not been mentioned in the speech from the throne, and because we cannot go along with the full import of the amendment which was moved by my hon. friend the leader of the C.C.F. party and the implications therein of the necessity for socialistic planning, that we wish to move a substitute amendment. Therefore, I move, seconded by my hon. friend the member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch):

That all the words in the amendment after the word "once" be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

However, we regret that there is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that it is the government's intention to ask parliament to lay down a scientific, modern financial policy for Canada that will guide the Bank of Canada in its operations, bring about a speedy end to the present tight money policy, and effectively check the ever-rising cost of living.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker—I see I have three or four minutes left—I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) a very important matter about which I have received a sheaf of telegrams from various bodies in my constituency of Peace River. This has to do with the unfortunate and tragic collapse the other day of the bridge across the Peace river at Taylor flats. This has had the effect, of course, of stopping traffic along the Alaska highway from Alberta in the east and from eastern British Columbia into the northern British Columbia area. The collapse of the bridge brings us face to face with the necessity of providing some alternate route for the people in this country to travel.

In his announcement the other day the Minister of National Defence did suggest that he was looking for an alternate route and I would like to draw to his attention that there is one such route. In order to give him the facts in the shortest possible time I will quickly read two telegrams, one which I received today from the president of the Peace river chamber of commerce and the other from the Berwyn men's club in the Peace river country. The first one reads:

Collapse of Peace bridge and inadequacy of ferry transportation at Clayhurst and Dunvegan renders imperative that road from Hines creek north of Peace to Fort St. John be brought up to standard immediately. Ferries will be inoperative within few weeks. Peace river bridge may have to take bulk of traffic once ice flows in river. Will you take this matter up in the house and with department of defence as one of urgency.

J. Ersfeld President Peace River Chamber of Commerce

And the other one reads:

General Pearkes enquiry for alternate route to serve Alaska highway in view of bridge out Taylor flats. Please advise him only alternate route north side of Peace river via Hines creek cutoff distance approximately 125 miles which will require some gravelling and improvement to Beatton river hill to handle heavy traffic.

Total distance via this route five hundred thirty miles from Edmonton which is comparable with present route via Dawson creek.

Berwyn Mens Club

Mr. Speaker, I have done my duty with respect to the speech from the throne and the telegrams received with regard to this matter requesting us to bring the position before the house. I will take the first opportunity to talk to the Minister of National Defence personally and to acquaint him with further facts concerning this alternate route which might be used by people who wish to travel in the northern part of British Columbia over the Alaska highway.

Mr. Winch: May I address a question to the previous speaker.

Mr. Low: Yes indeed, if you wish.

Mr. Winch: With respect to your last comment, are we to take it that you are in opposition to the offer of the premier of British Columbia that a bridge now completed on behalf of the P.G.E. should be used? I ask that because there is now only about 17 miles distance involved to the bridge which has not collapsed.

Mr. Low: No, I am not in opposition to that. I think that was a very fair offer and, if I remember correctly, the Minister of National Defence did say the other day, when making his announcement, that the proposition had been made by the premier of British Columbia, but he felt there might be some difficulty in providing an alternative road route from the present bridge up to the new road. It may be possible that the suggestion made by the premier of British Columbia will be the practical one—who knows—but I have done my duty in simply bringing forward this matter in the house as requested by the chamber of commerce and Berwyn men's club.

Mr. Winch: But you are not opposing the offer of British Columbia?

Mr. Low: No, no, not at all.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke in this debate his designation of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) provoked a great deal of merriment in the opposition benches. I must say that is not a cause for laughter; it is a very serious matter. I have found continually when I come into the chamber I bow to the right to the Sergeant-at-Arms and turn my back on you. I hope you will forgive this unseemly conduct on my part. I might even go further and say that I have run into these doors out here so often that I am convinced the hinges are on the wrong side and perhaps you might run at them a few times yourself to see if I am correct.

I think at this time it is the usual custom to offer congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, to your new deputy, to the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South), to the seconder (Mr. Arsenault), to the Prime Minister and to the Leader of the Opposition. In all sincerity I do so to all.

I think, however, if one were looking for a good way to obtain additional material with which to pad out a speech this would be a very obvious way to do it. One might even continue and offer congratulations to all of us who got here but, in doing so, I think we would be touched with some sadness for those who did not. As the Prime Minister said the other day, no matter what may be said in the heat of debate across this chamber or in an election campaign it does not affect those personal friendships which exist along the way. So, Mr. Speaker, I say as I welcome new friends in this chamber that I will miss many old friends from the last parliament.

If I might add one further word of congratulations I think it would be to say to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) that he and the people of his department worked miracles in their preparations for the visit of Her Majesty the Queen. The staff in this building was extremely competent and courteous and I have never seen parliament hill so beautiful as it was the other night when we witnessed the final 1957 performance of the musical ride of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The municipal authorities, the shop owners, yes all the people of Ottawa should be given a sincere thank-you for their work and thoughtfulness in helping to make our capital city on this occasion as beautiful as any you would find anywhere in the world.

Let us turn now to the business in hand. I have said before that I know my constituents in York West would be quite satisfied if I discussed their problems as they form part of the problems in the national scene. The Leader of the Opposition said he felt there was little to be gained by any post mortem examination of the last election. Perhaps that may be true with regard to those who voted, but for those of us who are here I am not so certain. Of one thing I am sure, the result of the elections of June 10 can be attributed to a drastic change in the thinking of the man in the street, the little man who saw things happening which could not be seen by those who were engrossed in the study of their own balance sheets.

While the government gloried in the rising gross national product and the phony figures of total trade, while many watched with satisfaction their soaring sales figures, studied with frowns their rising costs, took pride in their new product development or worried over increased taxation, here were the things which were happening in Canada; these were the things that others noticed and, Mr. Speaker, they did not all come from one political party.

First, the relegation of the House of Commons, the real basis of democracy in this country, to being a mere sounding board for the chore boys of the administration, out of touch with the real wishes of the people, the ignoring of the plight of our senior citizens faced with the continued rise in the cost of living, the use of ex parte foreclosure against the provinces in their attempt to get a fair division of the tax revenue sources to assist them in providing the educational facilities and the development costs needed for them to get ahead with their progress; the disappearance of effective means of communication in connection with the conduct of our foreign affairs to the point where we were not even consulted by our best friends when drastic action was taking place in the Middle East. Not a question, Mr. Speaker, about what was right or wrong at Suez, but of what happened before Suez. As a matter of fact there was the same breakdown in the lines of communication with our neighbour to the south, a breakdown that left us with no say in procedures of investigation affecting the rights and political status of our own citizens. The general deterioration of our international trading position, the continuing pile-up of our western wheat crops, the mounting trade deficit on current account and the situation in which more and more of our basic industries are owned outside our own country were also among the realities which were not being faced.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, United States investment in Canada now amounts to over $12 billion, and those who say that is not much should remember that Canada needed $914 million of capital in the first half of this year to balance its current account deficit with other countries, and $790 million of this was financed on long-term money from the United States. This is certainly an unenviable record to have achieved. Has any hon. member as a shareholder in his company ever gone to a banker and asked for a loan when his balance sheet was showing thousands upon thousands of dollars in the red balanced only by some long-term loan over in the righthand corner. He would not have very much to offer.

These problems, Mr. Speaker, did not arise suddenly after June 10. They were well known and well published by three of the major parties prior to that date, and if there is any impression that they were used solely for the purpose of gaining votes I think that impression can be dispelled now, because now we see that even the opposition recognizes that these problems exist. When our ex-minister of foreign affairs goes to California or to some other place to make a speech, or whether it be down at Presqu'ile Point talking about the economic problems of the country and the failure to recognize, as the Prime Minister says, the "lack of communication between grass and brass", no matter where it is the opposition now realizes apparently that these conditions existed and grew up during their tenure of office.

It took the United States two world wars to take care of a similar situation on a much smaller scale. No one wants an economic benefit while others suffer, but I am wondering whether we have not reached the point where if we are to maintain control of our own resources, have the wherewithal to do it, we may not have to say to our allies that we must take care of our own economic requirements while they take care, on a larger scale, of continental defence. Surely there is an object lesson for us, an indication of the need to get away from the usual standard of percentages based on population figures in connection with defence requirements, and an opportunity to arrive at a more realistic standard. If our ally to the south, maintaining a higher living standard than our own, having a basic tax structure as low, if not lower than ours, can meet their global commitments and still have enough money left over to dominate the capital investment field in this and many other countries, then I think it is time we said: "We can no longer afford to bear the burden of some of the defence costs that are facing us."

I wish to interject at this point that I do not say that these people are in any way not generous, or that they do not have open hearts. They have done everything they can, everything that money can buy to provide these facilities, but there is no indication that they are at any time prepared to buy the product of any other country's manufacturing facilities in order to provide the protection that we need, I do say to the Prime Minister that perhaps we have reached the stage where that type of representation should be made to them.

[Mr. Hamilton (York West).]

The choice for us is serious. I have lived to see many countries maintain their political independence even though they had lost a war, but I have never seen a country maintain its political independence when it has lost control of its own economy.

There is no question of the government not being aware of these problems. This party was elected on a program which promised that we would move forward and attack the problems confronting Canada with vigour and vitality, and recreate in Ottawa an atmosphere of sound thinking. The Prime Minister is determined that this government shall remain responsive to the urgent social and economic requirements of the people. We recognize that the needs and tempo of the Canadian people demand a dynamic program. That is the type of program, which is contained in this speech from the throne, and if I have seen anything at all in this chamber I have noticed one thing very definitely, that all the howls of protest, all the use of exaggerated expressions such as "robber barons", and lack of sincerity are caused by one thing only—that this speech from the throne has cut the feet from under the whole bunch to your left.

I have told you what the problems are; now listen to the answers. Here they are in capsule form. We have been talking about the problems involved in foreign affairs. Listen to the speech from the throne:

The Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth Met in London Last June

Another reads:

The Finance Ministers Met at Mont Tremblant. Laid Plans for a Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference to take place Next Year

Mr. Pickersgill: 1959.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): What a change.

Mr. Pickersgill: Secret agenda.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I am glad to see that you are waking up. You have been asleep for 22 years. Take a look at the headlines. What a change there is from the last ten years. What a change from the time of the crisis in Suez. Now that we are talking about a crisis in Turkey and Syria what do we see? We find newspaper headlines like the following:

MacMillan Will Fly to U.S. For Talks With Eisenhower. Diefenbaker, President Swap Views.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, there could not have been conferences of this kind before Suez.

An hon. Member: You never asked for them.

Mr. Pickersgill: We fixed them.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): You certainly did.

Mr. Pearson: That is a quotation.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Now, just listen to the fixer, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). Of all the people in this house he is truly the fixer of all time. Let us listen to the rest of the answers, the following drawn from the speech from the throne:

> In domestic affairs my ministers look forward to meeting next month with the leaders of the provincial governments in order to discuss fiscal relations and to seek better understanding and arrangement of many aspects of our public finances.

Mr. Habel: Then you will have a headache.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): What a change, Mr. Speaker. There is the group over there who when asked questions time after time had nothing more to offer to the provinces—

Mr. Sinclair: We will see what you have to offer.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): —and I suppose more especially not a cent to a Conservative province.

Mr. Pickersgill: And you said this morning you were going to take back what they have.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): And yet it is possible for the present administration to bring these people together around a conference table to discuss with them programs for assisting them with their financial problems in relation to education and development costs. Hon. members opposite used complete foreclosure just a few short months ago in relation to the requests of the provinces.

Mr. Stick: We are glad to hear that.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If you people really believe the criticisms you are making of the speech from the throne then why not vote against it?

An hon. Member: You are asking for it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Do you think you will get a portfolio the next time?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Here is another answer from this government, drawn from the speech from the throne.

> In the legislative program to be laid before you, it is fitting that mention should first be made of measures to improve the lot of the senior members of our society.

What were you doing for them, paying them 20 cents a day? You thought that was the solution to the problem.

An hon. Member: What will be yours, to offer them ten cents more?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If you do not think the speech from the throne is of value you will be given an opportunity to vote. Here is another Conservative answer to be found in the speech from the throne:

> In order to assure to the farmers of Canada a fair share of the national income, you will be asked to enact a measure to provide greater stability in the prices of their products. Every possible effort is now being made and will continue to be made to seek new markets for agricultural products as well as to regain those that have been lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the next paragraph.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Here is another one:

> My ministers believe that a national development policy carried out in co-operation with the provinces, and in the territories, is needed to enable all regions of Canada to share in the benefits to be realized in developing the resources of this great nation. It is their intention to propose to you from time to time programs and projects to implement this policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Oh, do not laugh. One after another the answers appear: Beechwood, the South Saskatchewan river dam, the Columbia river development project. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I feel sorry for the former minister of agriculture. For years and years he tried to do something for his own province and what did his party do? They turned him down.

Mr. Gardiner: You have not done much better.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): It has taken the present administration to set up a program to—

Mr. Pickersgill: To start discussions.

Mr. Hamilton (York West):—to ensure that these national resources will be developed by Canadians for Canadians.

Mr. Winch: When are you going to start on the South Saskatchewan dam?

Mr. Gardiner: They do not know.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, times have changed. My last experience with the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) on the final day that parliament sat last year was not very pleasant but I want to tell hon. members this.

An hon. Member: Are you afraid of him?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): No, I am not. In fact, I have not met anyone in this chamber yet of whom I am afraid, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Not even the supermen of last year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why don't you answer them?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): And this includes the superman who sat to the right of the Prime Minister in the last parliament. There has been a great change even in the headlines of the newspapers. Look at them now and see how they read. I have one before me which reads:

Canada Comes First

Here is another:

Election Promises Backed Up

And yet another:

Prime Minister's Promise Lauded by C.C.F.

And again:

Liberals Sidestep No-Confidence Vote

Mr. Studer: What did that cost?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Another reads:

First Confidence Vote Backs Progressive Convatives, 147 to 0, As Fleming Battles.

Mr. Ellis: You are a press agent now.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Yes, a great change has been made.

Mr. Henderson: Tell us about the press agents.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I am sure that parliament will be given back to the people. Never has a government moved so quickly and with such sure strides to rehabilitate our relations with friends and neighbours. Never has a Prime Minister spoken so clearly on the problems of trade and economic development. There is no longer a cap in hand attitude as all are aware if they listened to the Prime Minister's radio broadcast from Dartmouth college. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there are truly more signs of action in 22 months than there were in the previous 22 years.

Someone has said 22 weeks and this serves to demonstrate that we are even more efficient.

Before closing my remarks I wish to say a word with regard to the comments made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). I have said before there is ample reason for his being so upset because there is every indication that this government can take care of the problems about which he has been speaking for many years and I suppose this has removed from him one of the greatest talking points he could find for an election campaign.

I noticed that he and the leader of the Social Credit group had a great deal of trouble with their mental gymnastics in figuring out where the balance of power is in the present parliament. While I am not sure where the balance of power is in this house, Mr. Speaker, I am nevertheless sure of one thing; that the true balance of power as long as this House of Commons exists will remain in the hands of the people. And if hon. members opposite want to find out where the balance of power lies at the moment they will have a perfect opportunity of doing so in ten days.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is with a legitimate pride that I rise today in the house. After having been away for three years, I am glad to be back in the house where I am pleased to see again many a familiar and friendly face, and where I also find that unfortunately, some of the people I had known have disappeared, swept away, as it were, by the fortunes of politics.

When, in June 1954, I introduced in this house for the last time the estimates of the Department of Transport, I was convinced it would be my last appearance here. After three years as chairman of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, I am glad to be back in politics, and if I have come back to them, it is primarily because I was asked to do so by the right hon. the former prime minister. I could not possibly refuse to co-operate with the leader of the party, who himself had given such an example of sacrifice for the sake of his country by leaving not only his profession, but his family life, in order to dedicate himself to the service of Canada.

In view of this example of devotion to public affairs given to all of us by our leader, I was happy to come back to Ottawa and to find myself again at the side of former colleagues in the House of Commons.

When I quit politics in 1954 to accept the chairmanship of the St. Lawrence Seaway Administration, I was conscious then of doing what I considered to be my duty for the common good of the country. When I returned to active politics, at the side of those with whom I had been associated for some 19 years, I was also conscious of answering a no less urgent call, but in a wider and greater field. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I have no regrets at all about the decision I made because, one way or the other, I felt I was doing my duty.

Speaking in this house for the first time since my return, I am happy to do so in French, as a citizen of a country which is officially bilingual and as a member representing a French-speaking constituency of the province of Quebec. In so doing, I am conscious of exercising a fundamental right which the Liberal party has always been mindful to respect fully. In the minds of the French-speaking members particularly, that right, which was won following the struggles of the first year of responsible government, constitutes a duty from which they could not shrink without betraying the mandate entrusted to them.

It seems to me that in 1957, even more than was the case 50 or 100 years ago, French-Canadians, by their attitude inside as well as outside the house, are duty-bound to assert this inalienable right, for the recognition of which their ancestors struggled so gallantly.

It is also in French, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to pay Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain and Canada, the homage which is due her. All Canadians, of whatever origin, are deeply grateful to their gracious sovereign for the great honour she has shown them in coming here to open the first session of the 23rd Parliament.

I believe this is the right time to express again to her, as well as to His Royal Highness Prince Philip and the whole royal family, the feeling of attachment, respect and loyalty of French-speaking Canadians for the British political institutions.

May I also congratulate Mr. Speaker not only for the honour conferred upon him by this house, but also for the way in which he is performing his duties. I trust that he will keep on fulfilling his functions with dignity and efficiency. And allow me, Mr. Deputy Speaker of the house, to convey to you my congratulations and my best wishes for the future.

I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to depart from the tradition of this house whereby those who take part in this debate should first congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Messrs. Smith (Calgary-South) and Arsenault. I congratulate them in the first place for the honour conferred upon them by the government, and also for the way in which they have performed their task. Remembering a similar occasion, more than twenty years ago, when the government had chosen me to assume a similar function, I have listened to their speeches with attention, and it is also with sympathy and admiration that I have heard what they had to say.

After those preliminary but necessary considerations, I cannot forget that I owe first and foremost to my electors of Laurier the privilege which I am now enjoying of sitting in this house. I am proud to represent that riding, first because of its name, since to me, Sir Wilfrid Laurier not only devoted himself for the greatest part of his life to the cause of national unity but was also one of the greatest among Canada's prime ministers.

As many other Canadians, I have been influenced by the thought and doctrine of that master. He has remained for me a living leader, a master whose teaching, in spite of the passage of time, is as valuable today as ever. However, the reputation of Laurier riding does not derive exclusively from its name. It has had worthy representatives in this house. To name but a few, there were Sir Lomer Gouin, Mr. J. A. Mercier, the hon. Ernest Bertrand, and my predecessor in the House of Commons, Mr. Eugene Lefrançois, now a member of the other house, to whom I wish to pay tribute now, for he represented that constituency with great devotion in the years preceding my return to politics.

Since the last session, our Canadian political life has undergone rather important changes. Following the June 10 elections a new government was formed, headed by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). We must congratulate him on this appointment, even though he is there only temporarily. He is in fact in large measure responsible for the results of that election, even though we can hardly approve the means which he has used or the promises which he made.

It is no exaggeration, however, to say that never in the political history of this country has an election been marked with so much exaggeration or so many promises. I believe that in this case we could paraphrase Sir Winston Churchill's famous statement and say: "Never in Canadian political history have so few politicians made so many promises to so many."

The Prime Minister and his chief lieutenants have been rushing around the country promising everything to everybody. Then, following a victory which was as uncertain as it was unexpected, a large number of them have, privately at least, begun to feel sorry that they had attempted to play Santa Claus in the middle of June.

Those of us who sit on this side of the house have certainly not been long in noticing that these gentlemen have suddenly become full of circumspection and filled with dread about the statements they had been making in this house.

That is why my leader was right in saying here the other day that nothing much has been changed by what happened last June 10, save that we have some new faces among us. One after the other the new ministers have risen to go on record as approving either the statements made or the policy followed before their time as far as their own departments were concerned.

I would have a great deal more to say on that score, Mr. Speaker, but I now wish to deal with another subject.

(Text):

Now, sir, I should like to turn to another subject. Early in the month of September the people of Canada learned with a great deal of regret the news that the leader of the Liberal party had decided to retire. I need hardly tell you that those of us who sit on this side of the house felt perhaps more keenly than others the news that soon our leader would seek to be replaced at a convention to be duly called. There can be no doubt, sir, about the place which history will give to the former prime minister of Canada. I have no intention of making his eulogy because I know what he thinks of compliments of that nature. I would rather have it come from another source. A day or two after the announcement which he made the Vancouver Sun of September 9 had this to say about his decision:

> Mr. St. Laurent gained wide respect and admiration for his leadership in international affairs, particularly for his role as one of the fathers of NATO. He certainly was always keenly aware of the big problems of our age and intent upon grappling with them. But his greatest contribution as prime minister of Canada was to Canada, to Canadianism. He reconciled French and English Canada during the war. He was the chief negotiator for Newfoundland's entry into confederation. His government abolished appeals to the privy council. He appointed the first Canadian governor general.
> Of much greater importance, however, was his concept of unity. His message was simple: What French and English have in common as Canadians is far more than the differences that divide them, for it is Canada itself. And this man, straddling the nation's basic split by his very birth, carried the message as few men could.

This is an excellent account of the important part played by our beloved leader. We on this side of the house, as well as all true Canadians will always be most grateful to him for the role and the part which he has played and for the services which he has rendered to Canada in that respect.

Under his able leadership national unity has made great strides. The two main ethnic groups have come to understand each other better and, what is even more important, they have come to undertake national projects, they have come to work hand in hand together with one common end in view, greater Canadian advancement. They have learned too that after world peace there is nothing more important for this country of ours than national unity, that it is the indispensable basis of all progress in all spheres of our national life.

Unfortunately this national unity which we have acquired in recent years under the leadership of the Liberal party is now being threatened by the political strategy of the Conservative party. I should like to recall some of the history of the Conservative party in that respect before referring to this strategy in detail.

In order to understand the background of the matter, however, we have to remember that Canadians have always been divided into three groups insofar as national unity is concerned. At one extreme there are those Canadians who throughout our history have always been more British than the British themselves, have always been imperialistic in their tendencies and have always thought that it was impossible for French speaking Canadians to be British without ceasing to be French.

At the other extreme, however, there are those Canadians in Quebec who have always been anti-British, who are always reluctant to participate in national undertakings except on their own terms. In fact they think and behave as if Quebec was not an essential part of Canada but a separate state. In the 19th century these people were called the ultramontanes or "Les Castors".

Finally, midway between these two extremes was the great number of Canadians, both English and French speaking, who always had a Canadian outlook, which is certainly not incompatible with a deep attachment to British and French traditions, who accepted quite willingly the fact of our different ethnic origins and who were ready to participate in common undertakings in a spirit of conciliation and mutual respect.

Under the leadership of Macdonald and Cartier the Conservative party was a national party in the true sense of the word. However, quite early in its history, and especially under the leadership of Blake and Laurier, the Liberal party adopted a Canadian outlook and recruited its supporters from the third group of Canadians which I have just described. Since the Liberals occupied the position at the centre, the Conservative party felt itself obliged to seek its support at the extremes among the so-called imperialist group in English speaking Canada and, especially after Cartier's death, among the ultramontane group in Quebec.

Since these two extreme groups had nothing in common with each other there was only one alternative for the Conservative party to adopt and it was this, to have two policies, one for Quebec and one for the rest of Canada.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Brooks: You know that is not a correct statement.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says that I know that is not a correct statement. If he will follow what I have to say I will cite Professor MacQuarrie of the University of Toronto who confirms exactly what I am saying. This division within the Conservative party became quite evident when Laurier was elected leader of the Liberal party. All his life Sir Wilfrid Laurier had to fight these two tendencies of the Conservative party. In Quebec he was accused by the Conservatives of being a traitor to his race and to his religion and of trying to be an instrument of British imperial policy.

Mr. Brooks: A very good stump speech.

Mr. Fulton: What have Liberals in Quebec said about our leaders in the last few years?

Mr. Chevrier: If you will just hold your voice I will not only tell you what happened in the province of Quebec but I will tell you about the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) in Montreal the other day. While this was happening in the province of Quebec what was happening in the rest of Canada? In the rest of Canada Laurier was accused by the Conservatives of being too French, too Catholic and of attempting to detach Canada from her traditional ties with Great Britain.

Finally, in 1911 the strange alliance of Quebec Conservatives, supported by Bourassa and other French Canadian nationalists, with English speaking Conservatives succeeded in defeating Laurier and the Liberals. It is quite possible, sir, for two opposing elements, two opposing groups, to unite in opposition but it is impossible for those two groups to unite in power, and that is where I come to answer my hon. friend.

Mr. Brooks: This is the unity you are speaking of.

Mr. Chevrier: If you will follow closely you will see how the Conservative party down through the years, and even today, has been trying to split the country from the point of view of national unity.

Mr. Cardiff: What are you doing right now?

Mr. Chevrier: On the eve of that election of 1911 the Hamilton Spectator, a stalwart Conservative supporter, spoke out plainly on the matter and had this to say:

> Mr. Borden has been returned to power with a majority sufficient to permit him to be independent of Quebec, or rather that portion of it which is hostile to Canada's participation in imperial naval warfare. He is in an ideal position and he should take full advantage of it . . . Mr. Monk may not like (the Canadian naval policy) and his nationalist friends may object, but they are after all only a meagre minority and, like all minorities, must yield to the will of the majority or move elsewhere.

Professor MacQuarrie of the University of Toronto in an article dealing with the formation of the Borden cabinet had this to say. I say to my hon. friend who interrupted me, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks), that he should listen very carefully to this article. These are not my words, these are the words of a professor from the University of Toronto.

Mr. Brooks: You will always find words to suit your purpose, no matter where you look.

Mr. Chevrier: The article reads:

> In bringing the nationalists into his cabinet, Borden showed a realistic awareness of the forces and combinations which had helped to make him Prime Minister of Canada. But at the same time, he was also taking a step which might lead to the resuscitation of the Conservative party in Quebec where it had not won a majority of seats since the election of 1887. In the hope that such a happy end might eventually be attained, he was willing to forgive the past disloyalty of Monk and to endure cheerfully the shocked resentment of some of the stalwart imperialists within the Conservative party. It would appear that far from repudiating the nationalists, as some of his followers urged, Borden was determined to cultivate them. The generous bestowal of cabinet posts was followed by many other gestures designed to strengthen the alliance which had been so effective in the recent campaign. Blondin, the fiery young nationalist was chosen Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. (The member selected as Speaker was Doctor Sproule who had been for fourteen years the grand master of the Grand Orange Lodge of British America.) At the opening of the session, the address in reply to the speech from the throne was moved by the empire-loving R. B. Bennett of Calgary, and seconded by the brilliant young nationalist Sevigny, whose pronuncements on naval defence had been as outspoken as Bourassa's. To the Toronto Globe, Borden's balancing artistry rivalled that of a tightrope walker.

Of course, Borden's attempt to reconcile what was incompatible did not succeed. What happened? Monk left the cabinet in 1912; Pelletier and Nantel followed his example in 1914. Borden found it increasingly difficult to find cabinet material from the province of Quebec, with the result that from 1917 to 1921 there was no French-speaking representative from the House of Commons in the cabinet.

The Conservative party has never succeeded since that day in overcoming this deep internal division. Following Laurier,

Mr. King, Mr. Lapointe and the present leader of the Liberal party had to fight the same old battles against the two wings of the Conservative party. There are many English-speaking Conservatives who ask why it is they cannot have more followers in the province of Quebec. There is one in particular who sits on the other side on the treasury benches, and for whom I have the highest respect, who said to me one day many years ago when I was a minister of the crown, "Can you tell me how it is we have not been successful in getting more seats in Quebec than we have?" My reply was this: "The real cause is that the old guard of the Conservative party has not yet succeeded in developing a genuine Canadian mentality." That is the real challenge of the Conservative party today, but it has not as yet had sufficient courage to meet it.

Recently, rather than try to face it and deal with it, the Conservative party has preferred to adopt another approach. According to press reports, when the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) became the organizer of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker's) campaign for the leadership of the Conservative party last year, he made a long and detailed study of the results of each election since confederation. After an elaborate analysis of the data he reached a most astonishing conclusion, namely that the Canadian voters outside of Quebec elected more members of parliament than those in the province of Quebec. From this strange conclusion he drew the inference that it would be necessary for the Conservative party, in order to form a minority government, to centre their attention on the maritimes, Ontario, the prairies and British Columbia.

As a test case, in order to try out this strategy, it was decided that these tactics would be put into effect at the convention which was being called to select the now Prime Minister as leader of his party. We all remember what happened at that convention. Well-established precedents of collaboration between the two main ethnic groups were broken. It was necessary to go back to Mr. Bennett's day 30 years earlier to find a precedent. No major proposals from the Quebec delegation were included in the party's platform. It become evident that it was impossible to ignore Quebec without being, more or less, openly against it.

An hon. Member: What do you know about it?

Mr. Chevrier: I know from the press and I have statements to confirm what I am saying.

Mr. Green: He is just promoting unity.

Mr. Chevrier: If my friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) will contain himself for a moment I will show who is for unity and who is not, because there was no greater example of national disunity than the events which took place at the convention which selected the present Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You worry about your own convention.

Mr. Chevrier: The proof of that is that the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) had the courage to rise and to denounce the tactics which took place on that occasion. Not only did the Solicitor General denounce the tactics, he denounced his own leader. Moreover the Quebec delegation walked out of the convention in protest against what was taking place.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: The Conservative convention of December last ended in an open split between the two traditional wings of the party, and, as I said, with an unfortunate demonstration of disunity.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): You were a little afraid to pick your riding?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not need to be interrupted by my friend, who thinks he is very smart and who made the kind of speech a moment ago that deserves to be treated very lightly because it was light in every sense of the word. I realize that this is not very quotable in so far as my hon. friends opposite are concerned.

Mr. Cardiff: We are enjoying it.

Mr. Chevrier: But if I may be allowed to come back to what I was saying, I would like to state it was clearly shown at that convention, that it was possible because of the strategy of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to choose a leader without making any compromise with Quebec and indeed without the support and against the express will of the majority of its delegates. Throughout the campaign the same strategy was followed and systematically applied by the Conservative party which, in the rest of Canada, appeared to ignore the province of Quebec.

Now that strategy was apparently designed to gain the support of English speaking Canadians in one part of the country but it was not the only tactic used by the Conservative party in the last campaign. I have said earlier that since Cartier's death there were in fact two very different Conservative parties in Canada, one in Quebec and the other in the rest of Canada. This fact was never more evident than during the recent campaign. While English speaking Conservatives were applying the new strategy, ignoring Quebec and accusing the Liberals of having surrendered to Mr. Duplessis, what was happening elsewhere? There was a French speaking Conservative party at work in the province of Quebec and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the real leader of the French-speaking Conservative party in the province of Quebec was not the present Prime Minister but was the premier of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Same old story.

Mr. Chevrier: Just listen—I say that without the active support of the Union Nationale party of Mr. Duplessis there would not be one French-speaking Conservative member from Quebec in the House of Commons today.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Chevrier: If I am so foolish as my hon. friends in the front benches state I challenge the seven Conservative members from the province of Quebec outside the greater district of Montreal to rise in their places and prove that what I have said is not the case.

(Translation):

Mr. Lambert: A fine example of unity, isn't it?

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Green: He asked for it, let him take it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind the hon. members that they should not interrupt a member who has the floor.

An hon. Member: He invited it.

Mr. Chevrier: The two hon. members who have risen to interrupt me now—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: —are men who were elected unquestionably with the support of the Union Nationale. There is still a lot of speculation going on in Canada about the nature of the political relationship which exists between the federal Progressive Conservative party and Mr. Duplessis' Union Nationale. There was one fact quite apparent to those who campaigned in the province of Quebec—and I happened to be one of them—and that was that in those areas and constituencies where the Union Nationale entered the field there was no doubt about who was the boss, there was no doubt about who dominated the scene and there was no doubt about who carried on and directed the campaign—it was the Union Nationale party and not the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: The Conservative party did not only make a strange alliance but it carried on a very strange campaign. It proposed a platform which I am sure is quite unacceptable to the hon. members who are interrupting me now—and quite unacceptable to those who sit opposite in this house. I do not intend to recall in detail what these points were but I do want to put on the record a summary of the promises as indicated by the Solicitor General in several speeches during the campaign.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the hon. member will recall his party's alliance with Tim Buck back in 1945.

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Justice would do far better to look after his two departments, one of which he is poorly administering, rather than to interrupt me.

Mr. Fulton: I could do far better than listen to this sickening speech. It is a travesty of every feeling of national unity.

Mr. Chevrier: If my hon. friend thinks it is then all he has to do is to leave the house. I will carry on and I will refer to him towards the end of my remarks,—and not in a complimentary manner.

Mr. Fulton: I would not expect it.

Mr. Chevrier: Because he does not deserve compliments when in Montreal he goes down and threatens the province of Quebec.

Mr. Fulton: What nonsense are you talking?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend will see just how nonsensical it is.

Mr. Brooks: The whole speech is nonsensical.

Mr. McPhillips: I would just like to ask the hon. member, what is the matter with Mr. Duplessis? Do you not in your province refer to him as Maurice the Magnificent?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should go on to put on record the policy of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec during the last campaign. While the Conservatives in the rest of Canada were accusing the Liberals of being dominated by Quebec, the Solicitor General and his friends were claiming in Quebec that the French-speaking Canadians had no voice and very little influence in the administration of the country under the Liberal government. Moreover, the Conservatives in Quebec clearly implied that if their party were in power bilingualism would be established in the federal service and a much greater number of French-speaking employees would be appointed to top positions in the federal administration.

While the Conservatives in the rest of the country were accusing the Liberals of weakening the British and commonwealth connections the Solicitor General and his friends in Quebec were favouring the name "Chateau Maisonneuve" for the new C.N.R. hotel in Montreal and the adoption of a distinctive national flag. While the Conservatives in the rest of the country were promising increased old age pensions the Solicitor General and his friends in Quebec were stressing the need for increasing family allowances and, finally, the Conservative party in Quebec campaigned in favour of an ambassador to the Vatican.

I want it to be clear, Mr. Speaker, that I am not blaming the hon. member for Three Rivers and his friends in Quebec for holding such views, but I say in all seriousness that the Prime Minister should tell the house whether those members were speaking for the Conservative party in making these statements on time allotted to the national Progressive Conservative party and, if so, whether those electoral pledges will be implemented.

The Churchill strategy and what I might call the Balcer strategy, which I have just described, may compliment each other during an election campaign but once these two incompatible groups get together they do not operate in the same way in parliament.

In Dorchester, in Lotbiniere and Bellechasse, the Prime Minister had been more or less forced to follow the Balcer strategy by promising to appoint at least five ministers from Quebec if his party formed a government. However once the Conservatives took office the Prime Minister apparently decided not to keep his solemn promise to the electors of the province of Quebec. Borden tried and failed in 1911 to reconcile the two opposing trends in the Conservative party. In 1957, as in 1917, there has been no real attempt at reconciliation of these two tendencies.

During the first stage of cabinet formation —and we had two very painful stages of cabinet formation and it took several days, even weeks, to form the cabinet—only one French speaking Canadian became a minister. He was the president of the National Conservative association and a senior member and leader of the party in Quebec. However, as Solicitor General, he was not even given a department; he is assistant to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am very sorry to have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you on this basis—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you on the basis that when speeches are interrupted in the manner in which my speech has been interrupted by hon. members opposite—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: —it is the custom in this house to allow an hon. member to complete his speech, or at least to use the time which was taken up by the interruptions, and I ask you to allow me to complete the remarks which I had intended to make.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to allow the hon. member to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I am the next speaker in this debate and I have another engagement which requires me to catch a plane at a certain time.

Mr. Chevrier: I think I can complete what I have to say in just a few minutes so that the hon. member may be free to keep his engagement which, I am sure, is of an important nature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to let the hon. member proceed?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call on the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who has just spoken was not here when the rules were amended so as to impose a definite time limit on speeches in this debate, since when courtesy has required that no one member should exceed the 40-minute period allotted to him in order that every one might have the opportunity to express their views.

I would also add, Mr. Speaker, that the maiden participation of the hon. member for Laurier when he came to the house in 1935 was much more effective than his maiden speech as a private member on the opposition side, because in that participation he made no comments whatever.

As to his remarks in French, they were a little better than his comments in English. He was kind in his comments in French, and it seems to me that when he referred to the former prime minister he expressed thoughts that we all share. We regret, however, that when that right hon. gentleman was prime minister he saw fit to surround himself with people who did not have quite the democratic tradition that he has, and we regret that those hon. gentlemen still surround him.

As for the little comment which the hon. member for Laurier made in French that during the election never were so many promises made by so few to so many, I suggest to him that never have so few come so far so fast.

Mr. Pearson: Twenty-two years is a long time.

Mr. Pallett: I am very pleased to have the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of taking part in the debate on a historic occasion such as this. This is a very rare privilege. History was made when a ruling monarch opened parliament. There is no division in this country. All one had to see were people of both tongues turning from that monarch with a smile and a light in their eyes. To think that the hon. member for Laurier would suggest that there was a division—such poorness, such lowness, and many of us thought it did not quite fit in with the person who used once to be—I am sorry the hon. member for Laurier is leaving, because I am not finished with him yet—does not become the occasion.

Perhaps, of course, his general remarks can be taken as being on the same basis of accuracy as those in which he congratulated the mover and the seconder of the address when he said that he shared the same experience on his first visit to the house. I took the liberty while he was speaking of checking Hansard and found his name did not appear in Hansard as either the mover or the seconder of the address. Maybe we should give the same attention to the rest of his remarks as is indicated by the index to Hansard with regard to that particular comment.

I would like to join with others who have spoken in congratulating the Speaker on his elevation to that office. We have known him well, and we have admired him, and I am sure he will discharge his duties with alacrity and fairness. To the Deputy Speaker I wish to say exactly the same thing, and as for the mover and seconder of the address, they spoke with vigour, they spoke with intelligence and they spoke with a deep knowledge of the matters that they discussed, a combination which speaks well for this parliament and which augurs well for the future of this country.

When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) concluded his comments the other day I rather expected that all those people sitting behind him would get up and cross the floor and attempt to sit on this side of the house. Some of them might have to get used to sitting on the back benches here, though they had sat on the front benches before. But if the hon. gentleman is correct when he says he represents over half the popular vote of the country, is he being fair in not giving those people whom he represents an opportunity to express their views in the expected fashion?

If, on the other hand, the view of the members of the constituencies which his party represents are the same as the views of members on this side of the house, does he not think they should be given an opportunity to express those views, and soon?

It should be comforting to hon. members on this side to note that there have been other occasions when an amendment was not moved on the address, and they were usually followed in the ensuing election by a thundering defeat of the party which failed to move it.

On the subject of criticism: The Leader of the Opposition says he is not going to criticize; his party are going to make minuscule suggestions, but they are not meant to be taken seriously. He has placed an extra burden on hon. members on this side, but one which I am sure they will discharge with a full sense of their responsibility, a sense of responsibility which was completely missing on the government side in the last parliament.

We are quite prepared to perform a double function on this side; the government will introduce legislation and hon. members sitting beside and behind the government are quite prepared to criticize that legislation so that when it leaves this house it will be in a form as perfect as their efforts can make it. This was a matter in which, during the last parliament, hon. members then supporting the government failed in their responsibility, but I can assure the people who now make up the government that their own members will watch their legislation.

Do not be surprised if we criticize it because that is our function in this house. I also assure them, Mr. Speaker, through you, that knowing the lady and gentlemen who make up the government we have the utmost confidence that the legislation they introduce will be, not only sound, fair and well drafted but by and large will represent the views of the country as a whole.

The events of June 10 raised the horizons and opened new vistas for Canada. Canadians can now go forward in solid step, surmounting the supineness of the last 22 years. The step will be quickened. It will be to good purpose if we follow a course of high principle and dedication and not one of expediency.

On the debate on the address it is customary to deal with some matters concerning one's own riding. I do so with no diffidence whatever because the county of Peel is one that owes a great deal to this country. We feel we are rather fortunate in that we have every means of transportation including road, rail, airport and deep sea water. We have ideal agriculture and the best industrial sites in Canada. Ours is a fast-growing, rapidly developing section of this country. A great many of the problems we meet, I think, are not unlike the problems that are met by the rest of the country and certainly our agricultural and horticultural problems are much the same.

We are pleased that the government has taken some steps to assist the agricultural industry. We anticipate that more steps will follow and that the agriculturists and horticulturalists will be enabled to receive their fair share of the national income.

I come next to aircraft production. In Peel county we have a large industry centring around the production of aircraft and employing many thousands of workers. It has been in the forefront of aeronautical activity for years. The workers in those plants cannot be allowed to be subject to the whims and vagaries of defence requirements as they exist from day to day. These workers are highly trained and skilled and constitute a valuable pool. It is up to the private industry in which they work and other groups to ensure that their employment is guaranteed. The future of Canada is in the air and we in Peel are fortunate that we can make such a marked contribution to that future.

The next matter with which I choose to deal is housing. Although we welcomed the announcement of the release of $150 million, that in itself is not and will not be sufficient. Our municipalities want housing developments and we are aware that such developments create employment. There is no industry in the county that of itself creates as many jobs as does housebuilding. We also know that in the development of subdivisions many problems arise. We cannot have new homeowners paying extra levies to take care of capital construction costs of services if we follow the principle of maintaining low-cost housing.

At one time the municipalities were prepared to accept the burden of this cost of providing services but today they cannot do this. I am informed a dominion-provincial conference will be held shortly. We anticipate—and we trust we are right in our anticipation—that moneys will be made available to the provinces to pass on to the municipalities to handle the cost of these new services so we as a federal body can provide the necessary low-cost housing and the accompanying employment which it is our responsibility to do.

Previous parliaments have seen fit to increase the funds set out for the elimination of level crossings in this country. Traversed as we in Peel county are by two main lines, both the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific railway, there are many level crossings in my riding which present both a problem and a hazard. I am pleased to say it is contemplated that one of the most serious and dangerous of those crossings will be eliminated with construction commencing in 1959. That is a perfect example of co-operation on three levels of government, if I may express it that way, and I welcome the announcement of the elimination of the crossing north of Port Credit on No. 10 highway.

I come now to a subject that has been mentioned on the floor of this house many times, the fate of the Long Branch rifle ranges. Much was said but not too much was done about this. It now appears that it can be said the ranges have been declared surplus and subject to the requirements of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the building of its massive generating plant, the lands of the city of Toronto can be dealt with and the balance may be referred to the municipality of Toronto township. That to me was a very welcome announcement. It will require a working out of details but I was pleased to learn that these valuable lands which have been dormant for so long can now once more be made useful.

We in the county of Peel and I am sure all hon. members of this house welcome the social security measures set forth in the speech from the throne. Because of our industry and the generally high level of employment the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) receives what we at least consider to be more than his fair share of the revenue from Peel county. We realize that with increased social services we will perhaps be paying a large portion of the cost of those services for other parts of the country. Nevertheless I say to this house we do not regret this situation in the least because we know that social services wherever they may be not only help the economy, but what is more important they assist those who are not able to help themseelves. The fact that we can participate in this way makes us proud of our present government in that it has seen fit to include mention of this type of legislation in the speech from the throne.

On behalf of my riding I wish to pay personal tribute to our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). The hon. member for Laurier has not yet realized what has happened. There was a spark that lit the fire of democracy in this country. It has nothing to do with the division of the races. You know I have a name that is pronounced differently in Ontario from the way it is pronounced in Quebec. The hon. member for Laurier made a speech. It was different when he represented a riding in Ontario from what it is when he represents a riding in Quebec. This is the first time in this house that I have ever heard him make that type of speech. He made it because he is now from a Quebec riding. Read the speeches he made when he was from an Ontario riding. You will find they were quite different. If he wants a lesson on national unity let him read the speeches of our Prime Minister. There is a man we congratulate as a political winner, a man who knows how to put first things first and a man who has restored the jaunty step to Canadians.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as a newly elected member I am pleased to be able to speak in the throne speech debate at this time through the courtesy of my colleagues. I was pleased with the promises implied in the throne speech but at the same time was very disappointed by the fact that the needs of the unemployed in the lumbering industry particularly were overlooked, or worse still, not recognized. The inflation that cuts into everyone's pocket and steals half the pay cheques of our workers creates an emergency situation that is in no way alleviated.

Many of the problems of my constituents are pressing and I must ask for some consideration from the house regarding those problems. As I listened a few moments ago to the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) I wondered whether he is afraid that perhaps his party will be forced to pass the legislation that we have all wanted and waited for for so long and which is only hinted at in the speech from the throne.

I come from a riding that is dependent to a large extent on the gold mining industry, the riding of Timiskaming, and I should like to say a few words on the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act and its position in my area. I was pleased to be able to read in Hansard of June 12, 1956, at page 4972, a statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in which he said:

> I have emphasized, sir, that this measure—

He was speaking of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. I continue:

> —is no solution of the deep-seated problem of the gold mining industry. The difficulty and the flaw in measures of this kind is that they often lull the government and lull parliament into thinking that the problem has been solved, or at least the problem has been met for the time being. No hon. member should delude himself into thinking that this measure is any solution, even on the short-run basis, of the needs and the problems of the gold mining industry. These problems are going to require much more farsighted solutions than are offered by the hand-to-mouth, stop-gap type of assistance that we have in the present measure.

I wish to say that I agree wholeheartedly with his views, and we look forward to hearing something more very soon on the things that he said could be done for these people and these mines that are existing on emergency gold mining assistance, but we look at it from a different point of view. We think that the act did not go far enough. It did not go far enough for the simple reason that it offered no assistance to be made available to the mining communities and the miners in those communities. Some stipulation must be put in the act so that the workers in those communities and the communities themselves will receive some benefit from the assistance.

I believe the Canadian people have been pleased over the years to be able to do something for a situation which was not the making of the mining industry itself. As everyone knows, the price of gold is a set price. It appears to be much too low for the economy of Canada today. The situation has developed where the people of the mining communities have had to exist on wages that are substandard by all accounts, and certainly are not in keeping with the standard of living which is enjoyed by miners in other fields throughout Canada.

We have found that the assistance has been of little value to communities like Matachewan and Cobalt. Matachewan is an example where cost aid was paid and it did not eliminate the problems of those mines. They eventually shut down. We have found that although the people were willing to subsidize that industry no provision was made for assistance to encourage secondary industries to come into the community so that when the day comes that the mines disappear, when they are no longer advantageous to operate, there would be something for that community to turn to in the form of secondary industry. The people who have gone into the mining communities and established their homes in those communities should be given some consideration, even if it means that the government may find it necessary to subsidize secondary industries, at least in their initial settlement in that area, so that there will be some continuity in those communities and they will not be left in the position that Matachewan, part of Kirkland Lake and a number of other communities find themselves in at the present time.

I think everybody knows the history of Cobalt. We have found that that town has continually suffered from booms and busts. Recently, the previous government had a contract on a long-term basis under which they subsidized the production of cobalt. Cobalt is a strategic metal and I think that even more than gold it should be considered when subsidies are paid. We have been subsidizing cobalt, as I say, but the term basis has disappeared and cobalt is no longer of any account. Cobalt is not even being developed. If it should become necessary to procure cobalt, in the event of an emergency, development work is not being done. In these mining communities they have not blocked out the amount of cobalt ore that remains in the mines. As a miner of many long years experience underground I know that the people in those mining communities must be given assistance, not only so that dividends can be paid but so that decent wages can be paid and working conditions can be improved in those mines. Consideration should be given to the communities in which the miners live.

In my particular area there is a large iron ore development. This development is taking place in a community called Dane. It requires some assistance to get it started. A large company has come in and bought up the rights. The ore is there. We have the miners available in the area but so far nothing has been done. We would suggest that the federal government give some consideration to subsidizing freight rates in that area in order to get this mine into production as soon as possible.

One of our primary industries in Timiskaming is lumbering. If there is a field that has been neglected in the speech from the throne that we are now asked to consider it is, I am sure, the lumbering industry. The white pine industry is faced this year with a situation where all its lumber is in the yards in Temagami and Matachewan. Throughout the White River area no lumber has been sold this year and very little was sold last year. This problem rests directly on the doorstep of the government and its tight money program.

In speeches that have been made we have heard references to the sum of $150 million for housing. It would appear to me that the $150 million is not going to be of much more benefit than the money available before because the working people are not able to buy or build houses on account of the great difficulty they have in obtaining the down payment. I would suggest that we should consider some of the plans that have been followed in the last few years and in the last few months, particularly at Blind River, Elliott Lake and Bancroft. At these places other methods have had to be used than those found under the National Housing Act to promote housing in those areas. I certainly hope that the government will consider extending the application of the methods used at these places with respect to down payments so that we can get the housing industry started again and get our lumber moving from northern Ontario.

I suggest that no solution for the sale of our lumber can be found by asking the producers to reduce the price because I do not think we will even then find any market for it. We are again faced with the problem of imports in the form of very fine plywood. By "fine" I do not mean that it is exceptionally good plywood; it is very thin plywood. In fact, we do not cut veneers that thin. This plywood is coming into Canada, and I suggest we are going to have to do something to expand our markets in the lumbering field so that we can market our products from east to west rather than from west to east as we are now doing.

In Timiskaming we have probably one of the finest agricultural areas in Ontario. We find in that area, as I think is true in many other areas, a great number of farmers leaving the farms. There is one particular township near my home in which at one time there were over 100 farmers and that area is now supporting only five full-time farmers. If the situation has not reached the catastrophic stage, in my opinion it has pretty nearly done so.

I should like to suggest that I believe the throne speech should have included something with regard to parity prices for farm products based on the cost of production of the product compared with the selling price that the farmer receives, parity being the amount of profit that the farmer could reasonably expect should be maintained.

We find farmers in Timiskaming growing some of the finest timothy seed that has been produced anywhere in Canada. During the recent election campaign the government's candidate suggested that if elected he would be able to find international markets for timothy seed. If such markets for timothy seed do exist then I ask the government to take advantage of them without delay so that some of our farmers who are finding it exceedingly difficult to exist at the present time will have a good cash crop.

Yesterday we heard something about rain and drought and have read about these things in Hansard in past years. In northern Ontario we are not particularly worried about drought but we are worried about rain and unseasonable weather. Our growing season is short and on many occasions we find ourselves not able to get our crops into the barns with the results that there is very little money for the family on the farm with which to live throughout the year. I suggest that some consideration be given by the Department of Agriculture to encouraging the provinces to set up crop insurance and, if it can be set up, help to finance such a scheme.

We also suggest that this could be extended to take care of crop failures so that something will be available to alleviate such situations. I should like to point out that last year the grain in the fields was not good on most of the farms in the clay belt of Timiskaming. When the farmers went to get seed grain in the spring they found they had to borrow money from the banks to buy it and that the price was out of their reach. The result was that inferior grain was planted, grain with a germination of only 15 per cent in some cases. I believe consideration should be given to alleviating this problem of the farmers in my riding.

I do not want to take too much time but I should like to say that in my riding there is a very large lake, lake Timiskaming. It is 85 miles long and a number of miles wide. On that lake there are a number of steamers. There is a pulp log flow through the lake to south Timiskaming pulp mills. There are a large number of private craft on the lake. At Haileybury the dock is such that it cannot even be used for docking a small boat and the dock at New Liskeard was destroyed by fire. I suggest that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) should give consideration to the restoration of both these docks as they are vitally important to a number of people and are most necessary to the pleasure craft that make use of the lake.

I support the amendment because it will result in the realization of some of the promises made in the throne speech, because it deals with other problems that have not been mentioned that affect my riding and because it requests that immediate consideration be given to some of the larger problems such as national health insurance. Some protection must be afforded in the face of the disaster of rising unemployment, the disaster of low and in some cases negligible farm income and the rapidly rising cost of living. I ask the house to give consideration to these most pressing problems.

(Translation):

Mr. J. Armand Landry (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted first to congratulate you upon your election as Speaker of the house. We are confident that, as your predecessors, you will do honour to the functions of Speaker by maintaining our parliamentary discussions on a dignified level and by being fair to all members of this distinguished assembly. I am also pleased to say how much I appreciated the form, the elegance and the delivery of the speeches made by the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Smith and Arsenault), even though I confess that I do not agree with everything they have said concerning the government's program for this session.

Mr. Speaker, I feel I must take this occasion of my maiden speech in this house to go back to the last general election held in Canada, in the province of Quebec, and particularly in the fine constituency of Dorchester, since this election will no doubt go down in history as "the surprise election". As a matter of fact, neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives nor any other political group expected the defeat of the Liberal government.

The Canadian population was visibly satisfied with the St. Laurent government. The reverse would have been surprising since, under the Mackenzie King and St. Laurent administrations, our country, in war as in peace, has known a tremendous development and enjoyed its greatest prosperity.

It is for that reason that the St. Laurent government, at two general elections, has gained the greatest majorities of our political history, without resorting to fraudulent electoral means.

How is it then that the St. Laurent government was defeated at the last election? The explanation is simple: the Canadian people seemed so well satisfied with the external and internal policies of its government, led by a great statesman, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, that the Liberal party was perhaps too optimistic, concentrating all its energies on the administration of the country without taking enough care to show, day by day, how efficient it was. I do not hesitate to say that the St. Laurent government was ahead of its time by eliminating from politics numerous things which form together what is called "electoralism".

There are many who claim that the government was so preoccupied with the continuing process of improving legislation and administration, in the interest of the Canadian people, that it did not give sufficient thought to its own fate. However, in consideration of the moral and material progress for which it deserves full credit, history will grant it a summa cum laude degree of democratic generosity.

In a much more immediate future the Liberal party can expect another reward: its return to power.

After twenty-two years of uninterrupted government, during which so many marvellous realizations were achieved, it is normal that the Liberal party should regroup its forces in opposition. This is in accordance with the history of all the great political parties in the world. But there are already several serious signs indicating that the Liberals' stay in the opposition will be of very short duration; just time enough to brace up in this refreshing atmosphere. Here are some of those signs:

The memory of the Liberals' achievements is vivid in the people's mind. First of all, even if the Conservatives managed to get a few more members elected than did the Liberals, one must remember that the Liberals obtained 200,000 more votes than the Conservatives, and that it is the number of votes which more adequately reveals the popular appeal of the parties.

The general impression seems to be that the Liberals were swept out of power by accident; over-confidence in their victory at a time when, precisely, the Conservative party was labouring more than ever to improve its electoral machinery. In the opposition, the Liberals will not take long to tone down their over-optimism after twenty-two years of uninterrupted power. Not really expecting to get into power, the Conservative party made a great many promises which were so contradictory that the implementation of some would make it impossible to keep the others; but people always remember election promises, and always callously insist on their being carried out.

While denouncing what they called the incompetence and the mistakes of the Liberal system, our Conservative friends have put themselves under the obligation to prove these accusations once they were in power. Now our new ministers admit one after the other, and even publicly, that there are no scandals, no costly errors, and that very few things will be changed in the administration. This is decisive proof that the Conservatives have, let us say, far overreached themselves in order to find the "mote" in the Liberal party's eye, and to camouflage the "beam" in their own. Canadian voters will not be slow to recognize those who deceive them and those who tell them the truth.

But now, after having been fooled by the glaring campaign of the last election, which had blinded them, the people are already back on their feet, remembering the deeds of the Liberal rule, including the march of Canada to full nationhood, at the head of the middle powers of the world; the building, over years of very difficult international trade, of a prosperity which is the envy of all nations; a national machinery providing for the economical needs of our country for at least another quarter of a century; social security measures shielding the people from want; family allowances, pensions for the old, the veterans, the blind, and the disabled, unemployment insurance, and soon, I hope, health insurance, if the new government agrees to continue this highly social undertaking, so well started by the St. Laurent administration; a substantial and intelligent help to agriculture, for instance, the price support act; careful thinking, thorough research, and happy solutions to educational and intellectual problems at the national level; and finally, a true policy of national unity in accordance with the generous principles that have inspired the whole public life of a very great Canadian: The Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

These achievements and many others, we, Liberals, are here to make them prevail and to demand that they be continued by the present government, as well as to watch for the carrying out of the promises so lavishly made by our opponents, until the chivalrous revenge which we will no doubt obtain at the next election.

And if our friends opposite try to appropriate credit they do not deserve, for instance, if they continue to give the public the impression that the Liberals made an excessive use of patronage whereas they, Conservatives, abolish political favouritism, we will not fail to straighten the record by showing:

1. That the Liberal administration has made very little use of patronage.

2. That there is no more patronage to suppress in federal politics, and

3. That the change of advertising agencies already made by the Diefenbaker administration is a flagrant breach in this policy of non-patronage so loudly proclaimed by this government which has, so far, so cleverly played on the keyboard of illusions.

A record full of brilliant deeds, such is the record of the Liberals; bold promises and obstruction to the wonderful work of the Liberal government, such is the record so far of the Progressive Conservatives.

On the other hand, the Liberal party is united, while the Conservative party is suffering, and will suffer for a long time, from the disunity which marked the national convention of last fall.

Under those circumstances, it takes a lot of conservative faith to hope that the new government will live long.

Mr. Arsenault: We have that faith.

Mr. Landry: It is appropriate, I think, to say a few words about the last federal election in the province of Quebec. It has been said that on June 10 the Quebec vote was a sentimental one. This is not so. If the people of Quebec have been voting for the Liberal government, it is because on the federal scene, for over half a century, the Liberal mind has seemed far broader than the Conservative mind.

True, the fine personality of prime minister St. Laurent was an important factor. But this is due not so much to the fact that Mr. St. Laurent is of French origin through his father, but rather because he possesses an admirable combination of qualities which ideally fit him for leadership in a heterogeneous nation such as Canada.

And it is precisely because of that that, for two general elections, the party led by Mr. St. Laurent has gained the most decisive victories ever recorded throughout our political history, not only in Quebec, but also in English-speaking provinces.

May I also be allowed to recall the loyalty of the province of Quebec to Mr. Mackenzie King, former Liberal prime minister, whose deeply social and humane outlook has had a most salutary influence over Canadian society, in all respects.

The province of Quebec did not vote for sentimental reasons on June 10 last; it voted for reasonable ones. I would be the first to admit that Quebec, from a political point of view, is far from perfect. But please do not say that we voted sentimentally when we know that twice English-speaking Canadians voted with equal enthusiasm for the same liberal leader! We have paid homage not to Mr. St-Laurent's French name but to his true worth.

And I have no hesitation in adding that such an attitude is in keeping with the principles of true democracy as well as with the needs of Canadian unity and Canadian progress. Quebec need have no regrets concerning its attitude on June 10. And I do hope such will be the case for the country as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to thank the electors of Dorchester who returned me with a good majority in spite of the coalition and alliance of the Progressive-Conservatives and of the Union Nationale who spared nothing to defeat me. In my constituency, as in many others, all opponents spent fabulous sums during the elections, as is the case in every campaign in which the Union Nationale takes part. This party is far richer than any other for reasons of which everybody is perfectly aware. In spite of everything the people of Dorchester have remained faithful to the Liberal party. And thanks to the young people of my constituency who, nearly to the last one of them, considered your humble servant and the Liberal party as the living impersonation of human liberty, I succeeded in overcoming the oppression of dictator or dictators who put all their faith in asphalt, concrete, brick or gravel rather than in the human value of their constituents. In my constituency as in those of Montmagny-L'Islet, Chicoutimi, Lapointe and so many others, the Diefenbaker-Duplessis axis was not successful.

Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with local problems, with which I must deal here in order to properly fulfil my duty to my constituents, I wish to express my opinion on a few general questions while proposing to deal at some other time with other problems of the same nature.

It is unfortunate that Canada should not have its own national flag. On several occasions, the former prime minister, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, has said with his usual and remarkable frankness that he certainly would like to see a truly Canadian flag but on the condition that such a flag be a factor of Canadian unity and not a cause of impassioned controversies and disunity. Should the government succeed in getting all to agree on the project of a truly and exclusively Canadian flag, it will have done a great service to our country, Canada.

I could say as much about a national anthem which should be a hymn of national unity heard with the greatest respect from coast to coast.

The government will soon have to choose a successor to the right hon. Vincent Massey as governor general. It is most important that the next representative of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada be a Canadian citizen. Acting otherwise would be going backwards in our constitutional development. Now, if we want Canadians to have a truly Canadian spirit, they must be satisfied that their only country is Canada, and that it is a sovereign state, without any link of political dependence with either England or the United States, nor any other country. In this way, Canada will be on good terms with every other country and Canadians will all be each other's real friend.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Diefenbaker government, which counts many friends among the Quebec Union Nationale party, to see that the scandal of political influence is stopped with regard to the distribution of old age pensions, and pensions to the blind and disabled. These pensions being paid partly by Quebec and partly by Ottawa, the present federal government should use its friendship with the Union Nationale in order to suppress this preposterous discrimination often affecting our senior citizens, as well as the blind and disabled in Quebec when they are not Union Nationale sympathizers.

May I, Mr. Speaker, now plead for the people of my own riding.

The riding of Dorchester, which stretches along the south bank of the St. Lawrence, is surrounded by the counties of Bellechasse, Lotbiniere and Beauce, as well as by the State of Maine. The riding comprises about 35,000 people who derive their main revenue from agriculture, lumbering, and the maple syrup industries.

In the part colloquially called the "lower county", the soil is rather bountiful and our farmers manage to live, in spite of the nearby cities and the lack of stability in farm prices.

In that part which is called the Upper county, the situation is different; one must go there to appreciate the courage and tenacity shown by our farmers in order to make their lands somewhat productive. Those who come to visit me are always surprised to see, in the fields, huge piles of rocks, which our farmers have removed from their soil. This made one of our good farmers say that he had to till his land, not in rocky earth, but actually in earthy rock. It has therefore become an act of heroism for our people to open up new lands or increase their tillage on lands which have become too small for their needs.

There is often much talk about people leaving the land. This applies to our district perhaps more than to anywhere else, because the land is not very good for agriculture. That is why, in order to prevent our people from leaving their lands, the government must carry on this stabilizing price policy and even, if need be, improve it so as to provide some measure of security to this large group of our population.

During the last federal campaign, our opponents promised they would increase support prices. I hope they will keep their promise. Here is an example: if we consider that the price of pork—support price, I mean, —is now fixed at 23 cents, such price, according to the Quebec farmers' organ, is but the actual cost price established at 23 cents, which means that any slight loss or accident occurring during breeding means a deficit for the farmer.

Of course, the price of pork, on the Quebec market, is now 30 cents, and perhaps 35 cents in some places; but it happens that many people, who are not farmers, take up hog breeding, the result being an over abundance of this product on the Canadian market. There is therefore, as in the past, a constant threat of a sharp decline in price on the hog market. Those who have begun to sell pork when prices were high are now giving up this business whereas our farmers must continue to live on the land and to accumulate repeated deficits. It would therefore be the proper time for the government to set the support price of pork at 28 cents at least, instead of 23 cents in order to stabilize our market and to allow our farmers to live.

The same holds true of poultry, that is of chicken, the price of which is now 23 cents. I am sincerely convinced that the government should set the support price of poultry at 27 cents.

And again, the same is true of eggs, the floor price of which is at present 38 cents instead of 43 cents, as it should be normally. We must not forget that the support price of these must cover the cost to the farmer of candling and grading, which amounts to approximately 5 cents a dozen. This means that the price of eggs falls to 33 cents when the cost price is fixed at 31 cents.

I would also suggest that the government reduce, on behalf of the farmers, the interest rates on agricultural loans. This rate, I fear, should not exceed 3 per cent, whereas it is now over 5½ percent.

As a consequence of the conditions just mentioned, it happens that our farmers, with support prices being so low and soil conditions so poor, have to find a living somewhere else. That is why many of them go away for four, six or even eight months a year, to bush camps in order to support their families. Many go to Canadian bush camps (about 6,000) but a great many go to the United States.

For some time, the situation of lumbering has been more than alarming for our people. I am living in anxiety, with the approaching winter months, for hundreds of homes in my county because I know, for having visited many of them, that hardship will be their lot unless the problem is solved very early.

Several large companies have decided not to cut any lumber this year, and some others have reduced their operations by 50 per cent or even more.

Our bush-camp workers are therefore faced with a problem which will cause in my county such hardship as has been unknown since the 30's. This is an urgent problem for hundreds of families in my county, and I urge the government to consider it as such.

There is, I was assured, in the Unemployment Insurance Act, a clause providing for allowances in extremely urgent cases. I do believe that our bush workers, who now find themselves in a very difficult situation, should benefit from that clause of the unemployment insurance act.

That is why I feel that I must make here a few practical suggestions. The former minister of labour had started negotiations with the administration of the State of Maine with a view to creating a system of reciprocity between that state and Canada, for those of our workers who have to earn their living on the American side. It is well known that under the unemployment insurance act, our bush-camp workers who seek jobs in the United States cannot, when they come back, benefit from Unemployment Insurance, because they have not paid their contributions. I was told that several American states had accepted reciprocity with the exception of Maine and a few others. May I suggest to the Canadian government to keep up negotiations with those American states, in order that Canadians may receive the benefits of unemployment insurance when they come back home. They pay taxes in Canada, and even if they work in the United States, it is still in Canada that they spend their money.

May I also suggest to the government to lift restrictions on farmers who have to leave their land to earn some money, for a part of the year, either as bush-workers or otherwise. According to unemployment insurance regulations, as they now stand, bona fide farmers must have left the farm for a certain number of weeks. The officials concerned generally rule that a farmer who has left his farm for over 22 weeks, or more, in some cases, is eligible for unemployment benefits. This gives rise to constant criticism from our farmers. It also adds greatly to the work which must be performed by the officials of our various Unemployment Insurance offices.

I might also suggest that the district office of St. George de Beauce, which serves most of my constituents, be relieved of part of the load it has to carry. To begin with, the devoted officials at this point should be provided with healthier quarters. Their working conditions should be more humane. Does the department know that from January 1956 to December 1956 the amount of unemployment benefits paid out by this office was $1,106,831.80 as against a roughly equal figure, $1,072,890.50 for the period January 1 1957 to May 31 1957, that is for the first five months of this year, as against the twelve months of last year? Does it know that a total of 38,130 cheques have been issued by this same office? And all this has been accomplished by 16 permanent employees, seven more being employed by the national employment service.

I do feel justified, therefore, in asking that the crowded situation at this district office be remedied by the establishment in my constituency of a sub-office which would serve the parishes of Cranborne, Ste. Germaine, Ste. Rose, St. Camille, St. Louis, St. Cyprien, Ste. Justine and Ste. Sabine.

Because of the great distance between the parishes of St. Leon, St. Malachie and Frampton and the district office in Levis, these communities should also be detached from this office and come under the new sub-office which I would like to see the government establish in my constituency.

While facilitating the work of our employees, at the district office, this improvement would save a lot of money to the unemployed who are often obliged to travel to the district office to file their claim.

The maple syrup industry occupies an important place in the economy of my riding. In fact, every spring, hundreds of our farmers draw from our maple trees that delicious sap later made into maple syrup. Unfortunately, for a few years now, that industry has been suffering from a regression which discourages our producers. In fact, while the cost price of a pound of maple syrup is estimated at 21 to 22 cents, our sugar producers seldom get more than 20 cents a pound. Last year, the Dorchester Maple Syrup Producers Association had to be satisfied, for its production of more than a million pounds, with a selling price of 18 cents while the consumer often had to pay 30 cents, 35 cents and even, in some cases, up to 50 cents a pound. Of greater consequence still is the fact that markets are now very scarce and that many of our producers still have on hand their 1957 production. Could not the government do, as it does for wheat, butter or for New Brunswick potatoes, make available to the maple syrup industry a certain amount which could be spent first to make this marvellous product known throughout our country and also to provide for a support price for maple syrup, thus ensuring the producer that his yearly production will be sold?

In my opinion, the support price for maple syrup could be set at 28 cents a pound and the government could undertake as it does for other products, to buy the surplus, if need be.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to say a few words in English on behalf of the several hundred people in my riding who do not speak French. The riding of Dorchester, like several others in Canada, comprises the two elements from which our country was formed, and I must say in this house that, to the satisfaction of all, the two groups get along beautifully in an atmosphere of harmony and mutual help. I am happy therefore to mention these English speaking voters and to assure them of my wholehearted devotion in the service of our riding. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that I am proud to represent such a beautiful riding as Dorchester and to be able, in this chamber, to speak on behalf of such an intelligent people.

I would like, on the occasion of my first speech in this house, to say a word about national unity because I am convinced that national unity is the essential condition of the greatness and strength of our country. Although I am an ardent and earnest follower of Laurier, King, Lapointe and St. Laurent, I have nonetheless deep admiration for Sir John A. Macdonald, who was a Conservative and the co-founder of our Canadian confederation. It was Sir John Macdonald who, on February 17, 1890, in reply to Dalton MacCarthy, an influential Conservative of that time, had this to say—and I am translating now from the French version of the original text:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other . . . There is no paramount race in this country; there is no conquered race in this country; we are all British subjects and those who are not English are nonetheless British subjects on that account.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the language of justice and truth and it serves the cause of Canadian unity infinitely better than the slogan repeated here and there during the last electoral campaign in a spirit that is very demagogic but not at all Canadian: "We do not need Quebec to form a government."

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that such provocations will no longer slow down the march of Canadian unity.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude my first speech in the house on a note of national unity because I am convinced that national unity is the primary condition of the greatness and strength of our country.

As I just said in English, I am an ardent and staunch follower of Laurier, MacKenzie King, Lapointe and St. Laurent, four great statesmen who particularly concerned themselves with national unity. I have nonetheless great admiration for Sir John A. Macdonald a former Conservative leader and a co-founder of the Canadian confederation with Sir George Etienne Cartier and other illustrious representatives of both great races making up Canada, the English and the French. It was Sir John A. Macdonald who, on February 17th, 1890, replying to Duncan MacCarthy, a very influential Conservative member at the time, said:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other. I believe that there could be no success in such an attempt and it would be a folly and a malicious thing to do, if it were possible. The statement made that Canada was a conquered country was certainly unhappy.
> Whether Canada has been conquered or relinquished, we have a constitution whereby all British subjects are equal, having equal rights in matters of language, religion, property and as individuals. There is no paramount race in this country; there is no conquered race in this country; we are all British subjects and those who are not English are none the less British subjects on that account."

That, Mr. Speaker, is the language of justice and truth which serves the cause of Canadian unity so much better than the slogan repeated here and there during the last electoral campaign in a very demagogic but by no means Canadian spirit "There is no need of Quebec to form a government."

I do hope that such provocations from one side or the other will cease delaying the progress of Canadian unity.

In the circles of the St. Laurent government, which know how to direct the minds towards a generous ideal of Canadian unity —an ideal which is neither French nor English but intensely and profoundly Canadian—no such provocative language is heard from the leaders of that party.

More than his predecessors, Mr. St. Laurent has endeavoured to educate our public men with regard to national unity. In his own party he has forged a spirit so generous, so broad, so Canadian that, even after his departure—which he has unfortunately announced for the near future—the Liberal party will remain the champion of national unity in Canada.

That is why I am a Liberal, Mr. Speaker; that is also why I call upon the public, and particularly on our friends opposite, to find out about the true doctrine which inspires Liberal policy in matters of national unity as well as in other matters of Canadian life. To the extent that there will be sincerity of effort, there will be great cause for gratification.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have heard over the years of attacks of butterflies in the stomach and jittery feelings when a member arises for the first time to address any legislature and particularly this House of Commons. Well, sir, this is the first time in seven sessions I have had the honour and pleasure of addressing Mr. Speaker and I am frank to say I do not feel too badly about it. True, six of these sessions were spent by me in the provincial legislature and the reason for my reticence in addressing the house then was founded on the fact that when a person occupies the position that you do, sir, and is found talking to himself he is looked upon with a large degree of suspicion.

I want to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your elevation to the high position you now occupy as first commoner of this country and Speaker of this House of Commons. It is indeed a position of great honour and responsibility and I feel you will fill it with honour and dignity. I feel it incumbent on myself to assist in this matter by behaving in an ordinary rational manner.

May I congratulate, too, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) for the able manner in which they moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne or, probably more correctly, the causes of summons.

Contrary to the opinion expressed by an hon. member on the opposite side of the house who rather regretted the fact that the proceedings of parliament were televised on opening day I wish to congratulate those persons who were responsible for televising the opening of parliament. Even granting the rights of hon. members of this house to preserve it from the invasion of outsiders, the rights of the Canadian people to see and hear what is going on in this house do have some place in the annals of this country. I believe that radio and television are an extension of the press. While technically members of the press are not in this house I fail to see that television and radio invade the rights of this house any more than the presence of the press reporters. At least radio and television are factual and not expressions of opinion as to the proceedings.

The constituency which I have the honour to represent is a reasonable cross section of the industrial life of this country having within its boundaries a large number of small industries and many large ones. Also, we have extensive fisheries on the Fraser river and much shipping in the same area.

On examining the text of the speech from the throne I am afraid that my constituents are going to deluge me with queries as to the effect of some of the matters mentioned therein because it is a somewhat nebulous document. I feel it could have been a little more precise in giving the people of this country, and those in my constituency in particular, a feeling that the government intended to implement all the delightful promises that were dwelt upon by my opponent in the election on June 10.

The needs of our senior citizens in the light of rising costs are particularly urgent and already some question has arisen as to the implementation of the extent to which old age pensions should be supplemented. Newspaper reports, which are of course notoriously speculative, have given rise to some doubts in this matter and I sincerely hope the government will go the full distance suggested during the election. Specifically it is to be hoped the government will make it its business to see that the regulations under which the means test is applied are ameliorated to a degree that will permit the participation of a greater number of people who have reached the age of 65.

I am quite well aware, as I was told by the Minister of National Health and Welfare a couple of years ago, that the government denies any responsibility for these regulations but the fact remains if the Department of National Health and Welfare is going to insist on either accepting or rejecting regulations that are sought by the provinces then that department is responsible to that extent for those regulations.

The allowable income under the old age pensions regulations is too restrictive. I am quite sure the government will agree that $46 a month is an impossible income upon which to live in most parts of this country and yet the allowable income, unless it has been raised recently, is only $840 a year. I earnestly suggest that the government give this matter close scrutiny with a view to alleviating these conditions.

The foregoing remarks regarding old age pensions are most emphatically applicable to war veterans allowances and I sincerely hope the government will adequately implement its promise to see that conditions are made easier for these unfortunate people who have given their services to their country and are now unable to care for themselves. I would like the government to consider altering the regulations for the War Veterans Allowance Act to permit those men who served in the first war and who did not get any further than Britain and are therefore classified as not having served in a war area to be included as eligible for war veterans allowances. It must be remembered that a great many of those men who did not leave Britain were held there for the reason that they were over age. Sure, they lied about their age, but they put no strings on where they were going to serve; they were willing to go anywhere, but because age or health prevented their going any further than the British isles the government has thus far taken it upon itself to rule that they are not eligible for assistance under the act. Certainly they lied about their age, but so what? They were interested in the welfare of Canada and they offered their lives in its defence.

Many of these men have reached an advanced age now. I know one old gentleman who is 92 years of age. He served in the first war under the conditions I described and is now in receipt of only $46 a month. He is not eligible for assistance or treatment under the War Veterans Allowance Act and is forced to live on the paltry sum of $46 a month. I regard this situation as desperately unfair.

There is another class of people that should be considered and that is the widows of war veterans' allowance recipients. When a disability pensioner dies and leaves a widow she is eligible for a pension which may be considered reasonable but the widow of a recipient of the war veterans' allowance is eligible only for a widow's pension and thus is in a different classification from the widow of a disability pensioner. It would be well to ask why, because both are the widows of ex-servicemen and surely there should be no discrimination as to their status.

Another class that has been discriminated against in my opinion is the Imperial veteran. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that when these men or women comply with a reasonable residence qualification,—and I do not regard 20 years as reasonable—they should be eligible to have their pension from Britain raised to the same level as Canadian pensions for the same percentage of disability or they should at least receive their British pensions in Canadian currency at the old par of $4.86.

At the moment there is a post office in my area which was established under conditions which were not altogether favourable for its establishment. It is a rented building and was built specifically for the Post Office Department but it is in an unfortunate position. It is over to the one side of the area in which I have the honour to serve. It is not central. I believe the lease expires in December of this year and therefore it will be necessary to renew the lease. I sincerely hope that the department of the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) will regard this building as being inadequate for the needs of my constituents.

My constituents and I look forward to the establishment of a dominion government building in that area which will serve the needs of the 80,000 people who are residents of Burnaby at the present time. I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) will agree with me that Burnaby as a whole has now arrived at the point where it is entitled to a federal building to house all the various departments of government which are necessary in that fast growing area, and I would respectfully request that the Minister of Public Works give that matter his earnest consideration.

I note there is some indication that this government proposes to co-operate with the provinces in the development of natural resources. Nowhere in this country, Mr. Speaker, will this government find greater scope for activities of this kind than in British Columbia, and from no other source will it reap greater reward. The growth of population in British Columbia since 1941 is 23 per cent higher than the next highest province, Quebec, and nearly twice that of the Canadian average for the same period. This puts a terrific strain on provincial health and welfare services; for the equable climate of the southwest corner of the province makes it a mecca for those seeking refuge from the more rigorous parts of the dominion and the opportunities for advancement hold out an inducement to young men and women to establish themselves and their families there, thus accentuating the pressure on our educational system.

What should be of interest to the dominion government, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the development of British Columbia's natural resources is a veritable pot of gold for the dominion government and yet comparatively it has done nothing in past years but milk the prolific British Columbia cow that has been fed and nurtured by British Columbians. The 1940 report by the Rowell-Sirois commission on British Columbia at page 11 says that the population increase in that province has been greater than in any other province in this dominion and because of that the pressure on the provincial government is terrific. It is even more important to consider that opinion today because the development in the past seven years has been phenomenal.

The commission to inquire into energy resources, so recently appointed by this government, will in all probability hit a snag in Bill No. 3 passed by this house some three years ago when it considers the development of the Saskatchewan dam. This will also be true of the development of the Columbia river. The water rights act and its regulations in British Columbia are recognized as a pattern for that type of legislation throughout the world and this government would do well to study it, look at some of its effects, and then place their faith for a right and proper development of British Columbia water resources in a government that has the interest of the people of British Columbia at heart.

What benefits British Columbia will benefit Canada, and vice versa. This government will find that co-operation will bring results and to that end the Pacific Great Eastern railway should be of special interest. This railway, stretching as it shortly will from Fort St. John and Dawson Creek to rest its head on the shores of Burrard inlet, taps one of the greatest sources of wealth in this country and offers a scenic trip that is unequalled in a country richly endowed with majestic beauty.

The hon. member for Calgary South made mention of a suggestion that the mayors and reeves should be brought into consultation with the dominion government because they could probably contribute to discussions on dominion-provincial relations. In my opinion the most potent contribution they could probably make is that of convincing themselves that they have sufficient trouble on their hands with their creators, the provinces, without taking on another creation of the provinces, the dominion government.

If the provinces make it their business to maintain their autonomy they will be doing something worth while. This autonomy is slowly but surely slipping from them. Take a look at the Canada Year Book. In 1949 the division of public revenues was as follows: dominion government, 52 per cent; provincial governments, 27 per cent; municipal governments, 21 per cent. Look at it for the year 1956. It is as follows: dominion government, 72 per cent; provincial governments, 17 per cent; municipal governments, 11 per cent. There is a danger arising out of a continuation of that trend. The municipalities are the form of government closest to the people. They provide the facilities to make life pleasant, but if their creators, the provinces, are to have their revenues absorbed by the dominion government to the extent indicated, then they are fighting a losing battle.

I find when I look at the question of the division of this revenue that the provincial governments are being hard put to it from year to year to make it their business to see that the municipalities receive the assistance they should get. The taxation on land values and improvements in order to provide revenue for the municipalities has gone just about as far as it can go as far as the owners of property are concerned, and I feel the time has come when the dominion government should make it its business to relinquish some of the hold it has on public revenues in this dominion and leave more of them available to the provinces so that the municipalities may be assisted in looking after the welfare of the people.

It would appear that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) feels that there should be some material difference between the policies pursued by the Liberal government and the one now in office. This group has been telling the public of this country for many years that there is no material difference between the two parties, and under the present circumstances the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition prove that assertion. If further proof is needed, it comes from the Prime Minister himself, for on at least two occasions during this session he has used the term, "since we came to power". If he had said, Mr. Speaker, "since we came to office", I would not have thought too much about it, I would not have commented upon it, but may I point out that the use of that word "power" has unfortunate implications. We have had some years of that already. Are we due for some more of the same? I hope not.

This government has my sympathy, Mr. Speaker, not because it is a minority government. That should not worry them too much, for so long as this government is prepared to bring down legislation that is in our opinion for the benefit of the Canadian people we will go along with it. We will help them out. In fact, we will help them out in more ways than that. We are prepared to step in and give them the benefit of our advice in these matters.

Mr. Winch: Any advice from the Canadian Legion in Cloverdale?

Mr. Irwin: Well even that advice might be very valuable. So far as I am concerned, my sympathy is based on the fact that we as a country are merely getting a deal from a minor shuffle of the old deck of political cards. We as a people want, not only a new deal, we want a completely new deck of cards. Furthermore we do not want the deuces wild and we want the jokers removed from the pack too.

The old line parties have nothing to offer but rehashes of outworn policies that bring no relief to the Canadian people as a whole. We have had 12 years of the Bretton Woods agreement, and its concomitant stupidities which have cost Canada her overseas markets. There is only one reason for production and that is consumption. Canada does not care where her consumers live. We have the capacity to produce goods and services away beyond our capacity to consume. Other peoples do not have the capacity to produce their actual needs.

Let us go back to section 91 of the British North America Act, take unto ourselves as a parliament the right to control and issue our own purchasing power and not strangle our economy by leaving that function in the hands of a private monopoly. My leader put forward a subamendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne and for the benefit of the house I want to repeat it. It is in these words:

> That all the words in the amendment after the word "once" be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:
> "However, we regret that there is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that it is the government's intention to ask parliament to lay down a scientific, modern financial policy for Canada that will guide the Bank of Canada in its operations, bring about a speedy end to the present tight money policy, and effectively check the ever-rising cost of living."

The need of this country at the present time, Mr. Speaker, is to have the cost of living, which is rising at the rate of between 3 and 4 per cent a year, stabilized first of all and then slowly but surely reduced to the point where our dollar will resume a value that it has not had for the last 40 years. I appreciate the very close and kind attention I have received from the house and so far as I am concerned I will now take my seat.

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to extend rather special congratulations to the Speaker because he happens to come from a riding right next to mine. I have known him for many years and have no hesitancy in going along with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, namely, that he will do an excellent job. To the Deputy Speaker I also offer my congratulations. While I am extending congratulations, I should also like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder, (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I am inclined to think that I am only echoing what has been said by other members when I say that because of the young men who have joined the Conservative ranks in the house our party is truly in a healthy position and this augurs well for the future of Canada. It is something of which we on this side of the house are very proud.

While talking about that, let me mention a couple of other things. Besides the people of various racial origins whom we have in the Conservative party and in the house, we have two ladies in the house, one of them the first cabinet lady in the history of the country. We have several Ukrainians, one who is a minister, and to complete the picture we have a Chinese member for the first time in Canadian history sitting in the House of Commons on the Conservative side. I think that speaks very well that the Conservative party is truly a Canadian and national party.

I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Landry). He spoke in glowing terms of the unity of the English and French speaking people of his riding and how by working together they became true Canadians. With that I fully agree. My mind also goes back to a speech made a couple of hours earlier today by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), one who has had a great deal more experience than the hon. member for Dorchester. The hon. member for Laurier made a speech that to my mind was strictly a propaganda speech designed to destroy the unity of Canada. I have never heard such a speech before. I am sure that Quebec wants to be treated as one of the ten provinces of Canada and not as a province that has to be treated in a special way.

When one of our members was speaking he asked the other side why they did not change their minds and make us go to the people and the answer was "We do not want to let you fellows off the hook." We know who is on the hook. Those who are afraid to fight are on the hook. Do not worry about us.

To come back to the speech from the throne, hon. members have all heard it or read it and the comments about it are excellent. One can only come to the conclusion that for the first time in 22 years a party that has been elected to form a government is starting right at the beginning to put every election promise into effect.

Mr. Ellis: Reduce income taxes?

Mr. Rea: All you have to do is read the speech from the throne. Wait till the next one is brought down. It is going to be better. In a country that is growing as fast as Canada and needs so many good people from various parts of the world I think we will all rejoice that the period it is necessary to live in Canada to qualify for the old age pension is going to be reduced. Just imagine what good news that will be for the older people who have come over here bringing with them their young people to contribute to the steady growth of our country. Their culture, which in many cases is hundreds and hundreds of years old, will eventually form part of what will be known as a Canadian culture. In this regard may I say I am sure the time will come when many people from what we now call the ethnic groups will be represented on the Canada council.

We have done a great deal, as have many other organizations, to try to help these newcomers to learn our language and understand our ways. I have often wondered whether those of us who were born here have ever tried to do our part in learning to understand the emotions and problems that have to be faced by these newcomers to our country. I am inclined to think that all of us should spend more time in this direction because while we are trying to teach these people our ways we are also being taught to understand their problems. It is only by this method that they will enter much faster into the various societies that Canada has to offer.

I also think that we are all trying sincerely to show these newcomers that we just have one class of citizenship in Canada, and that is first-class citizenship. The proposed legislation to decrease the length of time that one has to live here to qualify for the old age pension is something that will help to equalize all people in this country and it is certainly something which should have been done a long time ago by the do-nothing former Liberal government.

I shall just take a moment or two to speak about our senior citizens. We all know how long they tried to exist on the meagre allowance that was dealt out by the former government. Just before the election, of course, the government tried to bribe them with two extra cups of coffee each day. I should like to remind you of the proposal that has been made in the speech from the throne. I am sure these senior citizens are going to be very happy when this measure is actually implemented.

At this point I might say that there are no farmers in the Spadina riding, but we all know that if the farmers are successful then the remainder of the population in Canada is successful. We must operate as a team, and the suggested legislation will be of help to farmers in the future and therefore will be appreciated not only by the farmers but by everyone else in Canada.

Some hon. members may have heard me talk some time ago about the deplorable situation in the electrical fixture business. For example, a manufacturer who manufactures electrical fixtures in Canada must manufacture them according to very high standards and rules. This is essential for the protection of human lives. Unfortunately certain fixtures can be imported from the United States which do not meet these high standards. Naturally, because the manufacturers do not have to use high class materials, these fixtures can be manufactured a great deal more cheaply and constitute not only unfair competition for the Canadian manufacturer but put the lives of everyone who uses them in danger. The loss from fires resulting from faulty electrical materials runs into many millions of dollars a year, and the loss of life of course is appalling. Those who were here, I believe it was two sessions ago, will remember what happened in Ottawa and will realize the seriousness of this situation.

You can have the best firefighting equipment in the world, the best trained firemen in the world, but when a person uses what we might call the "killer type" fixtures, firemen with all their equipment do not have a fair chance. Not long ago I bought a set of Christmas tree lights which had been imported from another country. The country of origin was not stamped on the box. I want to tell you that if I had ever connected those lights to a socket the whole thing would have gone up in flames. These lights were purchased in a reputable store, but I do not believe the purchasing agent realized the situation. I showed them to him and he immediately withdrew what he had left on the shelf. You will note I said, "what he had left". There had been some sold and goodness knows what happened as a result. Since being in power this government has actually started to ascertain what can be done about this matter. I am sure that before long they will correct another oversight of the "don't bother me" former government because I tried to get the former government to correct this situation. Evidently it was too much of a problem because the provinces had to be consulted and they did not want to take the time to do that.

On motion of Mr. Rea the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: It is the intention of the government to continue with this debate on Monday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON OCTOBER 18

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday of last week the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) in referring to me, said this, and I quote from page 159 of Hansard:

Perhaps, of course, his general remarks can be taken as being on the same basis of accuracy as those in which he congratulated the mover and the seconder of the address when he said that he shared the same experience on his first visit to the house. I took the liberty while he was speaking of checking Hansard and found his name did not appear in Hansard as either the mover or the seconder of the address. Maybe we should give the same attention to the rest of his remarks as is indicated by the index to Hansard with regard to that particular comment.

Mr. Speaker, on January 16, 1939, I had the honour of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne in this house. That is a matter of record, and if the hon. member for Peel is the person I think he is, then he will do as a gentleman would in the circumstances.

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the hon. member for Laurier did not share exactly the same experience, as he implied in his remarks, because he first appeared in this house in 1936. It was in that light that I made my comment, and if the hon. member had read my remarks more closely he would have seen that I was referring to the first occasion when he entered the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, again on a question of privilege, of course I understand the difficulty in which the hon. member found himself because I was speaking in French at the time. If the remarks are carefully followed there can be no doubt but that what I was referring to is exactly what was said at the time. If the hon. member wants to be fair to himself and to the house it seems to me he should at least take the position that the statement was made in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, the rules of this house say the house must accept what an hon. member says, and if the hon. member for Laurier says it, it must be accepted by the house.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the house accepts the statement of the hon. member standing in his place.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRINTING OF BALLOT PAPERS

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 12, to amend the Canada Elections Act (ballot papers).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mr. Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical to one I introduced in this house on a previous occasion. The purpose is to provide that the political affiliation of candidates shall appear on ballot papers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the making of advances on account of initial payments for grain produced in the designated area, as defined in the Canadian Wheat Board Act, prior to delivery thereof upon undertakings by the producers thereof to deliver the grain to the Canadian wheat board; and to provide for the costs, expenses and other financial obligations required in the making of such advances; such measure to include such further related and consequential provisions as are necessary to give effect to the foregoing.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT—REPORTED ANNOUNCEMENT OF GIFT TO INDIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on the reported announcement made at Bombay in India by the minister without portfolio, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne), that a large gift of Canadian wheat is to be made to India, presumably under the Colombo plan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report. I will examine the report and give the hon. member an answer after having done so.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFFS IN B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that 1,830 plywood plant workers in British Columbia were laid off this week end with little prospect in view of employment; and if he is aware of this situation what plans has his department to provide these men with alternate employment?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have no information as to the number of men who have been laid off in the industry the hon. member mentioned. As to the plans, I wish to inform him that we will give this matter very serious consideration upon investigation.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO EXPLOSIONS IN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a series of questions to the Prime Minister. Has the attention of the government been drawn to the repeated explosions which have taken place in the Trans-Canada pipe line in Manitoba? Is any form of inspection being made by any department of government before the pipe is buried? If not, will the government consider making such inspection? What is the thickness of the pipe being used in this project?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of the several questions he has asked.

The answer to the first question is that the government has had its attention drawn to one or two explosions that have taken place.

The answer to the second question is no. After the completion of a job, or a series of jobs, the inspection that is made is made by the board of transport commissioners. Once the pipe has been laid, then, under pressure, gas is put through the pipe and the inspection is made to determine whether there are any weaknesses. Indeed, my information is that any other inspection, except under actual conditions, would not be effectual to reveal inherent or hidden defects. The responsibility for inspection has been placed by parliament on the board of transport commissioners.

The answer to the last question is that I have not been able to procure the information. I had a communication directed to the proper authorities but as yet I have not that information. When it is secured it will be given to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister say whether the board of transport commissioners has made any report on the explosions that have already taken place, as to their causes or as to anything that may be done to prevent further such explosions?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have no information in that regard, but will communicate with the board in order to secure an answer.

Mr. Campbell (The Battlefords): Does the Prime Minister not think it might be desirable to have an inspection of this pipe by one of his departments before it is put under the ground?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the desirability, of course, would be determined by the results to be achieved. The information that has been given to me, based as it is on experience, indicates that any visual inspection or anything of that kind would not be effectual in revealing those defects which have brought about the explosions in question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CANCELLATION OF ANNUAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister reconsider his decision to cancel the annual conference of federal-provincial agricultural officials with the representatives of organized farmers to discuss current farm problems?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think there is any need to reconsider this decision. The decision was made in view of the fact that the provincial ministers of agriculture were all here at a meeting with me. The advisory committee on agricultural matters met here for two days. The federation of agriculture and the farm unions both presented briefs to the new cabinet during the course of the past several weeks; therefore it was felt that no good purpose would be served by having a further conference. I might say that the great majority of people concerned who were consulted in regard to this matter before any decision was taken took the position that it would be better not to have a conference this year in view of the numerous conferences which had already been held in connection with those agricultural matters which would be normally discussed at the annual conference.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture a further question on the matter referred to a few moments ago. I am not sure that I am clear as to what conference it is that he has decided not to call. Is it some conference that was convened and has been dropped?

Mr. Harkness: It is the annual agricultural conference—

Mr. Gardiner: The first week in December.

Mr. Harkness: —which is normally held the first week in December in the railway committee room. I might say that a further reason why it was not felt that it would be wise to hold a conference at that time this year is that the dominion-provincial conference which has been announced will likely be in session around that time.

REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIVES OF MUNICIPALITIES TO ATTEND FORTHCOMING MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is in connection with the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference. Would the government consider extending to the municipalities invitations to send representatives to the dominion-provincial conference, at least as observers?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of municipal representatives at a dominion-provincial conference would necessarily depend upon whether or not each of the provinces, which have set up those municipalities, so determines. That is not a matter for this government to give consideration to at this time, as I understand the constitutional position.

WATER RESOURCES

RED DEER RIVER DIVERSION—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the federal government prepared to enter into an agreement with the government of Alberta in order that an early start may be made on the construction of the Red Deer river diversion project?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for Acadia for giving me notice of his question. The government of Alberta has not requested that discussions for the construction of this project be reopened. Furthermore, I am informed that the land classification report is only partially completed, and until this is finished the engineering, power development and economic reports cannot be satisfactorily compiled and completed.

HOUSING

N.H.A. LOANS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the minister to bring forward at this session amendments to the National Housing Act to provide loans with low down payments to the great number of prospective home owners in Canada who now earn incomes below the $4,000 figure?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid it will not be possible to bring in legislation of this type during this fall session because of the other matters which are on the program.

POWER

PEACE RIVER AREA—DEVELOPMENT SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the proposals of the Wenner-Gren interests with respect to power development on the Peace river, is the government contemplating any power development survey of this area in order to safeguard national interests?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In reply to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, may I say that this matter is under study at the present time by our department with a view to protecting the interests of the territories and other provinces that may be concerned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REDUCTION IN PERIOD OF MILITIA TRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): I should like to direct four questions to the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should point out to the hon. member that a series of questions is hardly in accordance with the rules, but I will allow him to ask the first one.

Mr. Deniset: They are related questions of which I have given notice to the minister, and I would think that he would probably like to answer all four at the same time. The first question is: Is it a fact that there will be no summer camp training for the militia in 1958? Second, is it a fact that the training year for the militia has been reduced from 60 days to 40 days? Third, in the 60 day set-up there were 45 days for local headquarters training and 15 days for summer camp and other training. What is the breakdown, if any, of the new 40 day set-up?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Deniset: Fourth—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think my first suggestion was the proper one. I would ask the hon. member to confine himself to the first question. It seems to me that a whole series of questions is not in order and should properly be put on the order paper. Would the hon. member mind repeating his first question?

Mr. Deniset: The first question was: Is it a fact that there will be no summer camp training for the militia in 1958?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): As I announced in the house the other day in answer to questions from other hon. members, it is intended that personnel of the militia will train next summer in camps with the regular units rather than militia units as such proceeding to camps.

Mr. Deniset: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the training period for the militia has been reduced from 60 days to 40 days?

Mr. Pearkes: I think this question should be placed on the order paper as you suggested, Mr. Speaker. The answer in brief is that the training period for the militia for the coming year is 40 days.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

R.C.A.F.—REPORTED ABOLITION OF AUXILIARY SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, based on an article in this morning's Globe and Mail.

Is it true, as is stated by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton), that the R.C.A.F. auxiliary squadrons will be abolished? If that is true, does he not think it would be better for him to announce it in this house rather than for the hon. member to announce it at a private gathering?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): As the hon. member knows, since the introduction of jet aircraft into the R.C.A.F. it has become increasingly difficult to maintain auxiliary fighter squadrons up to operational standards. When the supersonic interceptors are introduced these difficulties will be enhanced. The role of auxiliary squadrons will then have to be reviewed again. In the meantime the auxiliary squadrons are providing a reserve of partially trained personnel. However, emphasis must be placed on those forces that will provide the most effective deterrent to war. At this moment there is no intention of disbanding the R.C.A.F. auxiliary squadrons. If they are to be disbanded, an announcement will be made in this house if the house is in session.

Mr. Sinclair: I thank the minister very much. Then we can take it that the hon. member was misinformed when he made that statement last Saturday night.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECENT MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is his intention to make a report soon on the recent conference of commonwealth governments which he attended in London?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): On October 18, 1957, the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose asked me the following question:

Has the Minister of Transport given any thought to the appointment of a transport controller with the authority and responsibility of seeing that there is an equitable distribution of box cars in western Canada at all times?

Co-operation between the Canadian wheat board and the railway companies appears to be the most satisfactory method of dealing with this situation at the present time, and accordingly no consideration has been given to any other steps, although the matter will be kept under review.

ALBERTA-NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): On Friday, October 18, the hon. member for Mackenzie River asked me if surveys are going on at the present time in regard to the construction of a railway from the province of Alberta to the south shore of Great Slave lake in the Northwest Territories. My answer at that time was "No".

Since then I have had further information and I should like to explain my answer. The president of Canadian National Railways, appearing before the House of Commons sessional committee on railways and shipping on March 19, 1957, stated that the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National, because of their joint interest in the Northern Alberta Railways, were currently bringing up to date a study with respect to the advisability or otherwise of building this line. It is my understanding that they are looking into the best route for the line to follow, its probable cost, and the probable amount of traffic which might be generated by the line. This study is being undertaken by the railways entirely on their own account, and I understand that it has not yet been completed. The report is expected later in the year.

[Later:]

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the answer given by the Minister of Transport this morning concerning the survey of a railroad to Great Slave lake. Am I to take it from his answer that these surveys are being carried on behind desks in the railroad offices in Montreal? If so, would the minister take the bull by the horns and have his own department do the survey?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, surveys cannot be carried on behind any desks; they have to be carried on in the field with regard to the particular situation. That is being done, I am confident, in a very efficient manner by the railways, and I feel sure that a thorough investigation is being carried out and that we will be advised as soon as possible of the results of the survey.

SHIPPING

UNION STEAMSHIP LINES, B.C.—SUBVENTION PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The hon. member for New Westminster asked me if there had been any change in policy with respect to payment of a subvention to Union Steamship lines to carry cargo to the northern part of British Columbia.

The coastal shipping subsidy to Union Steamship lines in British Columbia, along with certain other similar subsidies, is presently under review, but I am not in a position to make any statement on this matter at the present time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SYRIAN-TURKISH BORDER—STATEMENT ON SUGGESTED USE OF UNITED NATIONS EMERGENCY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Algoma East asked this question on October 18:

In view of what appears to be a tense and dangerous situation on the Syrian-Turkish border, would the government consider instructing their delegation at the United Nations assembly to explore with other delegations, as a matter of urgency, the possibility of stationing elements of the United Nations emergency force on that border in the interests of greater security and the avoidance of aggression?

Mr. Speaker, the government has given consideration to the proposal that Canada take the initiative to explore the possibility of stationing elements of the United Nations emergency force on the Turko-Syrian frontier. In that connection I would refer my hon. friend to an answer he gave to me and the then member for Vancouver-Quadra on November 29, 1956, as recorded at page 136 of Hansard. On that occasion I had asked whether or not, in view of the situation in Syria and Jordan, consideration had been given by the secretary general to increasing the numbers of the emergency police force, and what requests, if any, had been received as to the allocation of members for that additional force.

I am not going to read the answers given to me and to the then member for Vancouver-Quadra. However, they set out the difficulties in connection with the setting up of such a force. In particular, if I understand the answer correctly, the reason no action was taken or was to be taken at that time was that a fact-finding group was operating under the United Nations in that area. I proceed with the answer to my hon. friend's question:

As the hon. member knows, the United Nations general assembly is already seized of this matter. It seems to be making progress toward a United Nations solution. There are many ideas being considered, but the one best suited to the particular circumstances appears to be one which would involve the creation of an impartial fact-finding body to determine on the spot the causes of the present tension in that area.

I listened to my hon. friend last evening on his appearance on television. If I interpreted him correctly, his suggestion was that a UNEF force operating on the Turko-Syrian boundary would do so as observers and not as an armed force. That being so, the question seems no longer to be of importance because at this particular moment consideration is being given at the United Nations among the various representatives to the end of establishing a fact-finding body. The Canadian government will consider any proposal put forward by a fact-finding body including, if acceptable generally to the parties directly concerned, the possibility of setting up under the aegis of the United Nations a UNEF type force. Meanwhile one advantage of a United Nations fact-finding mission will be that its mere presence would have the desired tranquillizing effect.

In the light of the information now at the disposal of the government I do not consider it would be well advised to pursue at this stage the suggestion made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR SHORTENING OF QUESTION PERIOD THIS DAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to shorten the question period but I wonder, having regard to the fact that half an hour has gone by and the labour congress representatives numbering several hundred are waiting for members of the cabinet, whether any further questions could be postponed until tomorrow.

I merely suggest this. I am not asking for any special consideration, but merely pointing out that these representatives of labour from all parts of Canada are here and waiting.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this question because it is one in which the labour representatives in my riding are interested. I wish to address the question to the Minister of National Revenue, who is so far away from me now that I almost need field glasses to see him.

In view of the fact that the royal commission on broadcasting reports there are still almost half a million Canadians without satisfactory radio reception, would the minister kindly inform the house what steps are being taken to correct this situation, naturally with particular reference to Kootenay West?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his question, though in fact I only received it on my desk after I arrived here this morning. I want to assure him that I miss him, and I hope that one of his intelligence will find himself some time sitting nearer me than he is at the moment.

In so far as his question is concerned, the hon. member refers to the extension of broadcasting services in this country which, in the terms of his question, are obviously the responsibility of the C.B.C. I have discussed this matter on various occasions with the corporation, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that this problem is receiving active consideration and attention from the corporation. Of course, the degree to which these extensions can be created and the time within which they can be provided would depend to a substantial extent upon the moneys made available to the corporation by parliament.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION ON OUTBREAK OF HOG CHOLERA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister give the house any further information regarding the outbreak of hog cholera? Has it been checked, and have any public markets been closed?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yes. There have been no further outbreaks of hog cholera, and it is now thought that the outbreak which took place in the southern part of Ontario was an isolated case. All the swine which were at the auction market at the time of this particular outbreak are being checked, and the tests on them will be completed soon.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS RESPECTING TRADE UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the Prime Minister tempt me to say that the representatives of organized labour have been waiting a long time for a lot of things, and I do not think a few more minutes of waiting would worry them very much. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and my question is this. In view of the minister's statement on Friday last that he has no authority under the Combines Investigation Act to direct the discontinuance of the investigation into the affairs of the united fishermen and allied workers' union, will he introduce amendments to clarify the intent of the act in order to ensure that trade unions in the future will not be subject to this sort of investigation?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, combines legislation generally is presently under consideration in my department and I can assure the hon. member that we will give very full consideration to the point of view he has just put forward.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR OPENING OF NEW OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong this question session, but I directed a question to the Minister of Labour the other day. The minister did not have the information available at that time, and I wondered if it was available now.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Skeena asked me a question regarding the steps being taken to establish offices of the unemployment insurance commission and the national employment service in the communities of Terrace, Smithers and Burns Lake, B.C. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member communicated with officials of the unemployment insurance commission, and that they replied to him on July 2 with regard to this subject. In the circumstances, having read this letter, I do not think there is anything I can add to it at the moment.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is the policy at the moment at ministerial level with respect to this question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions of that kind are not such as should be asked on orders of the day, and when the house has before it the request of the Prime Minister, for reasons which he has explained, to curtail these questions today, I find I must rule this one out of order.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in rising to complete the speech I began on Friday may I recall that I was talking about the national character of the Conservative party and pointing out the number of people of various origins who belong to our party. I would like at this time to point out one more hon. member, the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Martini), who is the first Canadian of Italian origin to be elected a member of parliament by any party in Canada.

We have heard a lot from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who was giving all sorts of advice here on Friday to new members, and I think I should tell those new members something about this hon. member for Laurier.

As hon. members know, he was minister of transport in the years between 1945 and 1954; and while he was minister of transport he was, of course, one of trade minister Howe's "sputniks" circling fitfully around the same Mr. Howe and emitting subservient beeps. On top of that he left a terrific job not too long ago to take up a $27,000 a year job, and now he ends up with a $10,000 a year job. Now, when a man does that I would not pay too much attention to his political sense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Schneider: Can't you be a little more mature?

Mr. Rea: The leader of the Social Credit party in his speech on Friday spoke about chickens coming home to roost. I think what he really meant as to where the chickens were going to come home to roost would be when the Liberals hold their convention in January to elect someone to head the broken-down, unorganized remnants of what was once a great Liberal party.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It still is.

Mr. Rea: Mr. Speaker, since the United Nations began meeting this fall it has been my privilege to be part of the Canadian delegation. I was present when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke to the general assembly, and I am sure that regardless of party affiliations all of us were proud not only of what the Prime Minister said but the way he said it. I might add that the comments made by other countries following the Prime Minister's speech were glowing and complimentary.

I would like to speak for a moment or two about Israel, as I represent a riding where there are many Jewish people who are extremely concerned about this problem. As we all know Israel was created through the United Nations, and it should be the work of all the members of that organization, especially as they all read the articles of the charter and agreed to live up to them before they were accepted as members, to attempt to adhere to the articles of the charter. Yet in this present session of the general assembly several of the representatives of Arab countries have risen and slandered Israel. They have actually come out and said that under no conditions will they attempt to come to an agreement with Israel, or even sit down and talk to her.

Something must be done to put an end to that chronic state of unrest in the Near East, because if matters are allowed to continue as they presently exist they can only become progressively worse. I would like to quote a few comments made by Mrs. Meir, minister for foreign affairs of Israel, in her speech at the general assembly:

> Ten years ago on November 29, 1947, the general assembly passed an historic resolution providing for the establishment of a Jewish state. In May 1948 the Arab league states launched against Israel a war intended to destroy the new state. They failed in their attempt and a few months later Israel was admitted to the United Nations; and yet to this day these same states, despite their membership in the United Nations, refuse to accept the charter as the basis of their relations with Israel—a fellow member.
> This long standing violation of the charter is a basic factor in the unrest and tension in our area. It has expressed itself in the illegal continuance by these Arab countries of a declared state of war, of belligerency, blockade and organized acts of hostility. It was directly responsible for the crisis of last winter which in turn led to United Nations intervention. It continues unabated to this day.
> Shipping is once more passing through the Suez canal, but the conditions of passage are by no means satisfactory. As long as Israeli shipping is prevented from using the canal, the provisions of the 1888 convention will not be fully carried out, and the international character of the waterway will be infringed.

This discrimination against Israeli shipping is a flagrant violation of the security council decision of 1951, and of the six principles adopted by the security council in October, 1956. It is a part of the continuing breach by the Arab league states of the charter and of their international obligations.

In its failure to meet this challenge to fundamental charter principles the United Nations has not lived up to its responsibilities. The standard for observance by United Nations members must be the same for all. Equality is indeed the first condition for justice. This is a question not only for Israel but for every nation, for action in respect to one sets a precedent for all.

The apparent soft attitude of the United Nations in the face of Arab political terrorism and obstruction is unfortunately also reflected in the regional activities of the United Nations. This is something many people do not realize. The ramified boycott operations of the Arab league against Israel extend into the fields of health, education, agriculture, science and economics. In this tireless campaign the Arab states seek even to involve the United Nations and its specialized agencies, despite the fact that their constitutions expressly or implicitly outlaw every form of discrimination.

As a result, on the economic side for example, the Middle East is today the only region in the world without a United Nations economic commission. The regional office of the world health organization in Alexandria is inaccessible to one of the members of that region. The international civil aviation organization, the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization and the food and agricultural organization are other examples of bodies whose work has likewise been detrimentally affected. One is driven to ask whether the United Nations really has to accommodate itself to Arab tactics so that even its regional agencies are paralysed or severely handicapped in their efforts to secure higher standards of economic and social progress, of health and education for all.

The basic problem in Israel has been aggravated since 1955, when symptoms of the world struggle were introduced into the Middle East. Since then the great power rivalry has resulted in an increase in the offensive armed strength of those very states which openly and repeatedly express their intention of attacking and destroying Israel. For Israel there is a special and unique danger in the fact that while Egypt and Syria are being flooded with arms from the Soviet union, other Arab states, no less vigorous in their hostility to Israel, are receiving arms from other quarters. Mr. Dulles has said:

> Those who feel an abnormal sense of power, as a result of the recent putting into their hands of large amounts of Soviet-bloc arms, are being incited against their neighbours by violent propaganda. And that, I say, is risky business.

Since 1948 Israel has received nearly one million immigrants, the great majority of whom are refugees, hailing from over 70 countries and from all corners of the world, including nearly 400,000 from Arab-speaking lands. Its population within nine and a half years has increased from 800,000 in the middle of 1948 to almost two million now, inclusive of some 200,000 Arabs living in Israel today. But above all, as Mrs. Meir has said, the state of Israel is proud of what has been done for the people. The great majority of those who came to Israel during these 10 years came either from the post-war camps in Germany and Italy or from Arab-speaking countries.

Practically each one from the camps reflected in his loneliness the destruction of all who were dear and close. These were the remnants of the six million, the Hitler slaughter of the Jews of Europe. Broken in body and spirit, they came to a country of hardship; yet at the meeting of desolate desert with victims of horror and destruction, both the land and the people have come to life. The desert has given way to cotton and wheat; forests and vineyards are covering barren hills, and with a new dignity and hope the settlers themselves bear witness to the unconquerable spirit of free man.

Just one more word on that point, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister talked about Turkey and Syria, and I think we have only to read the papers to know the seriousness of the situation. These are problems that are hard to solve, and I do hope that Canada will take a firmer hand to try to find a peaceful solution to those great problems that are facing the world. Perhaps we can do a lot in that direction.

While I am on this subject may I offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) on winning the Nobel peace prize. I must say that at the United Nations the endearing terms used about the former minister of external affairs were very glowing, and I think justly so. Just to show how he endeared himself to the people of New York, when the Prime Minister was down there he was staying at the Drake hotel. When someone wanted to meet him very badly he went up and rapped on the door and there was no answer. He said to the maid just coming down the hall, "Is the Prime Minister of Canada in?" She said, "Oh, is Mr. Pearson here?"

An hon. Member: Next year she will be right.

Mr. Rea: I tried but I could not find out whether that maid had ever lived in the Windsor area. I doubt it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They all think that way there, too.

Mr. Rea: While at the United Nations it was a pleasure to be joined by the new minister of external affairs, Dr. Sidney Smith. His ability and charm, even without a bow tie, were immediately evident. I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on his excellent sales ability in making this important appointment possible.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I could go on with a lot of other things but there are other hon. members who want to talk. This is my first speech in the house from this side and after rereading the speech from the throne over the week end—and every time you read it you find something new in it—I think we shall be sitting on this side of the house for a long time to come.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I should like to reply to a statement made by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea) just a few moments ago. He mentioned this broken-down Liberal party. Let me inform the hon. gentleman that the Toronto Telegram in a recent article said that the Liberal party was still the biggest party in Canada and that we polled half a million votes more than the Progressive Conservatives had received in the last election. We do not feel we are a broken-down party, and I believe those sitting on the other side of the house will be convinced that that statement is correct within a very few months.

Mr. Rea: Why don't you try it now?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): In the speech from the throne we were informed that this government would give financial assistance to the Beechwood project in New Brunswick. We all regret, and I say this sincerely, that this government has reneged on the generous offer made by the Liberal government only in the last session. When the proposals were placed before the governments of the Atlantic provinces at that time they were much more generous than the offer suggested in the speech from the throne at this session. The estimated cost of the proposal made to the Atlantic provinces by the former Liberal government was $210 million, and I can assure hon. members that it is much larger than the amount suggested by the Conservative party in the speech from the throne. I would also suggest to the government that they might do a little more investigating before they move too far in that direction, because there are still many people in the province of New Brunswick who are of the opinion that thermo power can be generated in the province of New Brunswick more cheaply than power can be developed at Beechwood.

The leader of the official opposition described very well on Wednesday last the offer by this government, and I should just like to quote his words.

I quote from page 44 of Hansard of Wednesday, October 16:

> Evidently part of the burden of the wider program for producing and transmitting power in the Atlantic provinces which we felt should be financed entirely out of the federal treasury is being pushed back on the provinces. In the speech from the throne there was just the gentlest hint of tax changes. The language of the speech was in singular contrast to the vigorous and forthright language used by the Minister of Finance in June.

I believe the people of New Brunswick realize fully that the offer made to our province in so far as development of power is concerned was not really as generous as the offer made by the Liberal government last spring. The increase in old age pensions, which is suggested in the speech from the throne, will be welcomed by every person who is benefited by that service; but at the same time these people are well aware of the record of previous Tory governments in the field of social welfare. This government could well establish a record for all time by introducing for the first time in history some social benefit which would be welcomed by the Canadian people. As it now stands every single piece of social legislation on the statute books of this country was put there by a Liberal government. There is not a single piece of social legislation put on by anyone but a Liberal government.

Mr. Hodgson: Always as election bait.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If there is such a thing as election bait I think all you have to do is look at the speech from the throne which was read here a few days ago, and you will find all the election bait that it would be possible to find anywhere.

For a few minutes I wish to review the attitude of the Conservative party past and present toward the fishing industry. When I go back to 1935 I find that in the dying days of that session—it was just six days before parliament prorogued—a bill was introduced in the House of Commons by Hon. Grote Stirling. He moved second reading of Bill No. 120 for the purpose of establishing in Canada a system of long-term mortgage credit for fishermen. Immediately upon his introduction of the bill the late William Duff from Antigonish-Guysborough rose and spoke on the matter. He pointed out the fact the bill was to be administered under the farm loan act and not in any way to be dealt with by anyone connected with the fishing industry. He also pointed out that $1,500,000 would be made available to fishermen under this legislation whereas, during the same parliament, $90 million had been voted for agriculture.

This is the treatment the fishing industry has received from the Conservative party as far back as I can remember, and this bill was introduced 22 years ago. Several members spoke on the bill, and one who spoke during the latter part of the debate was our old friend T. L. Church from Toronto, who has passed away since. He had this to say at page 4031 of Hansard on June 27, 1935:

> Part of the loan may be used to discharge liabilities already accumulated. The interest is not to exceed 8 per cent. It seems to me that is a very high rate of interest today, though I admit that so far as this industry is concerned, with the difficulty of getting loans, the overhead charges might be high. But 8 per cent is a very high rate of interest.

That is where the Conservative party left off in so far as the fishing industry was concerned in 1935. During the period they sat in the House of Commons, from 1930 to 1935, I was actively engaged in the fishing industry, and no one needs to tell me what the fishermen went through during that period. I had the sad experience myself.

I want to start by showing where the Conservative party make their start again in 1957. This is taken from a St. John's, Newfoundland paper. It is a Canadian Press report of July 8, 1957.

This is what was said by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker):

> Discussing Britain's participation in the proposed European free market, Mr. Diefenbaker said Canada would take a benevolent view of this so long as commonwealth farm products were not included. He added that Britain also is inclined this way though some of the continental countries are not, and that the U.K. realizes such inclusion would be serious not only for Canada but also for Australia and New Zealand. He was asked whether he would include fish in the commodities that should be excluded.

This was the answer of the Prime Minister:

> "I don't think that's a very serious matter", he said.

That is the attitude of the Conservative government toward the fishing industry. I well remember the 1930's, when we were selling all the products of the sea for practically nothing, with no encouragement from the government of that time although other industries received some little encouragement. I well remember the position of the great canning industry in the county from which I come. We were purchasing cottonseed oil at that time from Great Britain. It was a commodity that was not manufactured or produced in Canada and came in duty free. When the Conservatives could find no other way to hurt that industry they placed a value for duty of $4 on the barrel in which the cottonseed oil was shipped. Everything was done to try to injure the fishing industry rather than to help it.

I remember when fish were delivered over the wharves for 20 cents a hundredweight. I sold sardines at that time for $1 a hogshead and may I point out that a hogshead contains 1,200 pounds. I worked nearly four years alone on the salt water because I was not able to take anyone along. I went through that period, and that was the encouragement that fishermen got from a Conservative government.

I can assure hon. members that the election promises that were made as to what would be done have been completely ignored. In the speech from the throne mention was made of the fishing industry, and I want to put the words on the record.

> My government will strive to secure additional markets for the products of our fisheries and to promote the development of international rules to safeguard the living resources of the sea.

That sounds good, but I can assure hon. members that it is insignificant when compared with the promises made to agriculture. When I came here in 1945 a Conservative government had placed a duty on sardines and lobsters coming from the state of Maine or any of the New England states into Canada. For years and years we had been shipping sardines, lobsters, any product of the sea into the United States without any difficulty. Those duties have been removed.

At the present time in the county of Charlotte the sardine canners have all available storage filled with canned sardines. Our groundfish producers, who produce salt fish, have everything it is possible to use, filled with salt fish. They have an enormous investment and they realize it will be a long time before there is any hope of any return. But there has never been any suggestion from the government of giving financial assistance of any kind. An article appeared in the Saint Croix Courier of Thursday, August 29, from which I should like to quote briefly. It is in these words:

> The disheartening job of removing large quantities of large pollock from weirs and selling them for about $4 a hogshead takes the tuck out of even the thickest skinned fisherman, who may be accustomed to hard knocks but has had about enough of them.

I should like to point out to hon. members that it refers to 15 hogsheads, or in that particular sale 18,000 pounds of pollock, being sold for $60. Compare that with the prices agriculture is receiving today. In other words, these producers received one-third of a cent a pound for one of the finest fish that ever came out of water.

During the past year lobsters were at the lowest price they have been in 20 years, 30 cents a pound, and in many cases in the State of Maine the fishermen took up their traps. I was talking to a crew of the best fishermen to be found in the bay of Fundy area, who have a dragger which I would think cost $35,000. I talked to them before I came here, and I asked how things were going. Their answer was that if they wanted to work for the oil companies or the engine manufacturers it was o.k. but they could not make anything for themselves by fishing because although there were all kinds of fish to drag, they could only get 3 or 4 cents a pound.

During the past two months in the county from which I come thousands and thousands of tons of sardines were put into fertilizer at $4 a hogshead. That is $4 for 1,200 pounds. The sardine fishermen have waited four years to get a catch of sardines. There were four lean years, but when the sardines did come the price was $4 a hogshead, $4 for 1,200 pounds. Again I would ask hon. members to compare this price with the prices that are being received by agricultural producers at the present time.

The government has also informed us that there will be a complete investigation in connection with the price spreads on agricultural products. I should like to know why one single primary producer is singled out for this service and all other primary producers are completely ignored. Why should there not be a price spreads investigation with respect to every primary product? Why is there this discrimination?

The government has also informed us that legislation will be introduced to enable them to make cash advances on farm-stored wheat. I have been a member of the house for 12 years, and on every occasion I have supported every single piece of legislation that was of benefit to agriculture. I regret that I will not be able to support this measure unless the government decides to place all primary producers in the same category and give them the same consideration.

In the few days we have been here in Ottawa many members from all parts of Canada have ably described economic conditions in their areas. They have referred to unemployment and lack of markets for pulp and paper products, base metals, fish and others. Yet the only primary producers in whom the government would seem to have any interest or concern are the farms of Canada. In fact the very existence of other primary producers is being jeopardized in order to satisfy agriculture.

I refer to the tariff increases imposed by the government at the request of those engaged in agriculture during recent months. This action could very well result in the ruination and elimination of several branches of the fishing industry. I can assure hon. members that I am not only expressing my own opinion. I should like to quote from a bulletin issued by the fisheries council of Canada, an organization with membership in every province. It is composed of the greatest men in the fishing industry today. They have done and are doing a magnificent job, and this is what they have to say in the bulletin of July 29, 1957, with respect to the United States market:

> The Prime Minister of Canada has signified that his government will take a much firmer stand on trade matters with the United States in future and has already opened a barrage on the United States policy of disposing of surplus wheat and stated that efforts will be made to switch 15 per cent of our imports from the United States to Britain.
> On increasing imports from the United Kingdom Mr. Diefenbaker will receive general support and from the fishing industry in particular. Indeed, this industry, on its own initiative, has gone to considerable trouble and expense to achieve this objective—and with good results.
> However, on the question of a "farmer" stand on trade with the United States, the fishing industry has some definite reservations. Dollarwise, one-half of Canada's fisheries products are consumed in the United States market, amounting to sales of about $90 million annually. These sales are vital to the welfare of all sections of the Canadian fishing industry.
> Efforts have been made on numerous occasions by various sections of the United States fishing industry to curtail fish imports. Since 1951 there have been three United States tariff commission investigations into the importation of groundfish fillets. Only the veto of the United States president prevented action being taken as the result of the last two investigations.
> Current private bills in congress are aimed at a section of the Canadian lobster industry.
> Mr. Diefenbaker's policy is disquieting, therefore, to the fishing industry. Will it maintain the friendly atmosphere in Washington which has been largely responsible for the fact that the U.S. market is still freely open to our products? May it not encourage the U.S. domestic producers to once again go after curbs on imports of fishery products?
> Possible consequences to the fishing industry of such a policy should be carefully weighed before the government proceeds any further in this direction.

That is the feeling today on the Atlantic coast in so far as tariff changes by this government are concerned. I can assure hon. gentlemen that the views I am expressing here today would be endorsed by at least 85 per cent of the fishermen in the Atlantic provinces. Tariff protection, even in a small way, for agriculture could adversely affect every Atlantic coast fisherman. For 22 years we had a prime minister from either Ontario or Quebec, the two provinces which we would expect would be seeking tariff protection. We had ministers of national revenue from Nova Scotia and Ontario, but in all those years those men fought for the lowering of tariff barriers, not the raising of them. In fact, if you look back over the record you will find that Canada led the way, in so far as tariff moderation was concerned, at every international gathering where trade was discussed.

We now have a Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) from Nova Scotia and a Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) from Saskatchewan, two provinces which certainly would not benefit from high tariffs. In my opinion they are selling the maritime provinces down the river. I had expected the Minister of National Revenue would be the first maritimer to protest any increase in tariffs which would have a serious adverse effect on those fishermen whom he so ably defended when he sat on this side of the house. I had hoped also that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) from Prince Edward Island would protest any measure which might be harmful to the fishing industry of his province, and particularly the lobster fishermen whom he knows so well. Where was the minister without portfolio (Mr. Browne), from that grand old fishing area of Newfoundland, when these tariff changes were discussed? Did he have any idea they would benefit the citizens he represents? The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) from New Brunswick, while he was in opposition, was a great friend of the fishermen. Why did he sit silently by and allow the fishing industry in his own province to be sold down the river? The actions of these gentlemen as members of the government are so different from their talk while sitting in the opposition that apparently that talk was just lip service.

Did these maritimers stop to realize that over 90 per cent of the lobster produced in the Atlantic provinces is sold to the United States and less than 10 per cent of that enormous production finds markets in Canada? Do they realize, as was pointed out in the bulletin issued by the fisheries council, that more than 50 per cent of the fish produced in the Atlantic provinces are sold in the United States without any tariff barrier? We have always had that market open to us. At this very moment there is a bill in congress which, if adopted, would greatly curb the importation of Canadian lobster. I can assure hon. members of this house that it is a most serious worry to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces.

These gentlemen I have mentioned, who now sit on the cabinet benches across the way, were great maritimers while in opposition. Since June 10, however, their interest would seem to have moved farther inland. They are now just yes men, regardless of the serious implications which may follow as a result of their failure to protest. I do hope that some of the members from Nova Scotia, who represent these grand old fishing contituencies, will get to their feet and express their views on this serious matter. It would appear that those from the Atlantic provinces who now occupy the treasury benches have three leaders, the Prime Minister, Hon. Mr. Frost and Hon. Mr. Duplessis; that is the opinion of many in the area from which I come. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, this is a serious problem, because I have discussed it with the fishermen on both sides of the international border.

I live right at the border. Who could criticize the fishermen of the New England states for seeking protection from the importation of Canadian fish? No one could criticize them for that; because we are supplying the greater part of what is consumed in that part of the United States. However, the material to strengthen their argument for protection has been provided already by the government of this country. In other sessions we have heard statements from Progressive Conservative members concerning our trade and other activities with our friends in the United States. They had the answer to our trade deficit with that country. All they required was the opportunity to tell these Yankees where they fitted into the scheme of things. We listened to that line of talk on many occasions. We were told that the Liberal government was too easy going; they were taking too much from our friends to the south.

Only recently there were four musketeers selected to invade Washington for the very purpose I have mentioned. They left the capital city of Ottawa with great hope. It is not known if they took along some of the blasting powder that was left over from 1935. I have not been able to get that information. It is now quite apparent that their invasion was not a complete success. In fact it has been described in some quarters as a complete flop. Their approach to our friends in the United States was directly contrary to the views they expressed in the House of Commons as members of the opposition. It is quite apparent that their great knowledge of international affairs did not make headlines in either the United States or Canada.

The whole affair has been surrounded with secrecy. These men who, when they sat in the opposition, were always so insistent upon having an immediate report from any delegation of the former government which left this country are not making any report now. Their capitulation was obviously viewed with great suspicion by their hosts in Washington. It did not seem to have that ring of sincerity when coming from those who talked so differently year after year.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member had better confine himself to something about which he knows something, because he does not know anything about this.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can tell my hon. friend that some members of the press in this country which have supported his party year after year have recently made disclosures which you do not like. One of them, the Financial Post, has aptly described this trip to Washington as the "brush-off". These hon. members sat on this side for years and told us what they would do to those south of the border if they were ever in the driver's seat. They did not want United States dollars to come into this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am speaking about the facts. These hon. members were greatly worried about United States investments in this country. Everything the people of the United States did was wrong, and these members wanted the privilege of telling them so. The four musketeers went to Washington for that purpose, and what did they accomplish? We are trying to find out what they accomplished.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We fixed them.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I believe if you went back over the records of this country you would be unable to find a more humble bunch returning from any mission since the time of confederation.

In the years gone by we heard a lot of criticism of our Liberal government from those who sit across the way over the loss of British markets. We listened to that time after time. The markets referred to could have been regained at any time had we been willing to accept the prices Britain was prepared to pay. Those men knew that, and so did we, but still they hammered away at the loss of British markets. Well, the free trade proposal recently offered to Canada by Britain was the answer to everything these men had requested during the past 20 years. It was exactly what they had talked about during the last 20 years, yet how was it received when they had the opportunity to rectify this great injustice? There is a very good cartoon in this week's Maclean's magazine, which again is a magazine that has supported the Conservative party down through the years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —It shows the Prime Minister holding the door against the British delegation, while the Ontario manufacturers are standing behind him and telling him "Hold on, John."

This is true to Tory philosophy. That is exactly what they have preached every session, and they can never change their spots. They believe in protection. As to this talk about trade with Britain, it was just lip service and did not mean a thing. The government had an opportunity to do something about it but what was done? Some day we may get an answer, but I feel that it will be a long time before we get an intelligent one.

It is quite obvious that when the delegation arrived in Ottawa no one here was prepared to talk with them. That is common knowledge today, and I think it was borne out to a great extent by the demonstration put on over television by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his weak-kneed attempt to explain the situation in which he said nothing, as usual. It was the most dismal display of nothing that I have ever watched on television.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): He took quite a little bit of time to explain the thing and, when he was through, he had said nothing as usual.

The Atlantic provinces and the western provinces would welcome this trade with Britain. The premier of Prince Edward Island has endorsed the proposal. In fact he said, "Free trade is what we want in the maritimes". It is to be regretted that some of the other premiers down there on the Atlantic coast would not take exactly the same stand and express the same opinion. It was only last week that there appeared in the Financial Post an article under the heading "Ike's reciprocal trade act backing may set off battle". Here the Republican president of the United States is trying to ease world tension by lowering the trade barrier between countries and making it less difficult for his people to understand the problems of others. I quote from the Financial Post of October 19:

> There is also a report that the president may ask for congressional authority to cut tariffs by 15 per cent over a certain number of years.
> This is what he asked for and got in 1955, after a narrow squeak, through congress.
> On the last renewal, however, Mr. Eisenhower had to agree to a crippling amendment tacked onto the law which opened a few more doors to protectionists by authorizing restrictions on imports for defence essentiality reasons.

I watched the manoeuvring in connection with tariffs. To me it has always been most amusing. As to these people who like to fly that flag of free enterprise and boast that they stand under it, the very minute they begin to feel the squeeze of competition they immediately run to the government for protection. I do not blame them for doing so. I blame them for calling themselves free enterprisers, because they are not.

If you people over there on the other side of the house would just stop and look at the situation and reason it out, you would see what I mean. What could be more disgusting or more unreasonable than for General Motors of Canada, the Ford Motor Company of Canada or the General Electric Company of Canada to come here to parliament seeking protection against General Motors of the United States, the Ford Motor Company of the United States or the General Electric Company of the United States? To me it does not make sense. That is what they asked for; yet still they fly that flag of free enterprise. But let them feel the squeeze, and the first thing they are looking for is protection.

At this point let me say, Mr. Speaker, that in the eyes of maritimers protection is nothing more or less than a subsidy. You are subsidizing an industry and there is no other description for that type of thing. So if we are going to be free enterprisers, let us be free enterprisers.

In closing I wish to say that there are just three sources of all wealth, the same old three sources, namely the land, the sea and the forest. One is of as great importance as another. All those who produce this wealth, from whatever source it may come, expect and should have the same consideration and the same protection. The program as outlined by this government completely ignores all those thousands engaged in the fishing industry, the pulp industry, the lumber industry and the base metals industry; and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that all those industries are passing through a period of depression at the present time. Unemployment is rapidly rising in all parts of Canada, more particularly perhaps in the Atlantic provinces. In the meantime this government has increased the floor price on butter. It increased the duty on several products of the farm. It has promised to bring about parity prices.

Mr. Harkness: You are quite wrong. We did not increase the support price on butter.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can disagree.

An hon. Member: The selling price.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I believe it was the selling price. I will put it this way and it may sound better. The working man with a family is now obliged to pay more for butter than when a Liberal government was in office. That may sound better.

Mr. Harkness: A cent a pound.

Mr. Sinclair: The farmer does not get any more but Canada Packers get more.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Free enterprise.

Mr. Harkness: You do not know any more about it than the man who is speaking.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): What is that?

Mr. Harkness: I say that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) does not know any more about butter than you do.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Let me tell the hon. member this. There are a great many working people in this country with large families who know more about paying for butter than does my hon. friend who interrupted me.

The government have also promised to make cash advances on farm-stored grain and to bring in other improvements for agriculture, including the building of the South Saskatchewan dam. At this point let me say this briefly. All these services have been provided for agriculture. The fisherman is producing a perishable article. You cannot store it in a fresh state. It cannot be done. Live lobsters can be held for only a very short time. Grain can be held not indefinitely but for a reasonable period. Why are all these services provided for agriculture while every other primary producer in this country is completely ignored? This gross discrimination by the government is, I believe, a complete betrayal of every other primary producer in Canada and a repudiation of all the promises they made prior to June 10.

In my province unemployment is rapidly rising.

Mr. Fraser: Thanks to the former Liberal policy.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): We heard that in 1930 in the depression period.

Mr. Fraser: That was thanks to the Liberals also. They left us holding the bag.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can tell my hon. friend that in my experience there never has been a Tory government elected when exactly the same conditions did not appear. Then the bottom falls out of everything. The hon. member asked for that remark.

Mr. Fraser: We had to clean up the mess the Liberals made.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Let me tell you that the mess the Liberals made was in leaving a surplus of $350 million which the Conservatives have to play with, and they do not even know how to play with it. The other day I asked a question of the Minister of Labour about unemployment in New Brunswick. He very kindly gave me the figures, which I appreciate. Unemployment in that province is three times greater than it was this time last year.

Mr. Brooks: Greater in June than now.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Let me tell you that before the winter is over there is going to be a great deal more. I know it is coming. The figures indicate that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) will need more stenographic help this session than he needed last year. Last year he was receiving hundreds of letters from the unemployed. With an increase of 300 per cent in unemployment next year I would imagine that two or three more girls will be necessary to take care of his dictation.

Mr. Sinclair: But he has not said a word yet about unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Last year the hon. member carried a weekly advertisement in his local paper urging those who were unfortunately unemployed to write to him outlining their problems. I have looked for that advertisement this session, but so far he has never had it in any paper.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or a question of privilege. That is not what I said at all. I can give the hon. member a copy of that advertisement.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I think I have the floor. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to speak. I saw the advertisement he had inserted last session and I can quote from Hansard, if he wants me to do so, the portion where he said he was receiving hundreds of letters. At that time he had one girl. I would imagine that now he would have to have three or four.

I now want to speak just briefly on unemployment insurance for fishermen, which could have been of great benefit to the fishing industry. A grat deal of thought and effort was put into it by the hon. member from Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) and the former minister of labour and officers of his department. But in the election campaign every Tory candidate in New Brunswick condemned if from every standpoint when he spoke in a fishing community. They said this was election bait and that it could not work.

Now, if the Minister of Labour were given a little encouragement, it could work, but he has not yet been given that encouragement. Why? Because it would be of benefit to a primary producer who was not a farmer. I said at the outset that I have always supported every bit of legislation that has come forward in this house for the benefit of the farmer. I will say this, and resume my seat. This government should decide that there is more than one primary producer in Canada, and find some way to get away from this discrimination and assist those in the fishing industry, who are in a much more serious position than agriculture is at this time.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay my respects first of all to the former member for my constituency, Mr. Karl Eyre. Many hon. members who know him will recall that he suffered a very grievous loss just over a year ago in the death of his wife, a loss from which he did not completely recover and which, I feel sure, was in no small way responsible for the breakdown in his health which made it impossible for him to contest this last election on June 10.

Next I wish to pay tribute to the C.B.C. for their fine coverage of the opening of parliament this year. I had the opportunity to make a brief visit to my constituency this week end, and I can assure all hon. members that the impression left on people throughout Canada through viewing not only the visit of the Queen but also the opening of this house was such that they will remember it for a long time. I think it is a good thing for the future of this country that older people and children should have an opportunity to view the opening of parliament, for I feel they will take a much greater interest in the parliament of this country in the future as a result of that experience.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have watched with great interest, as I am sure most new members have done since the opening of this twenty-third parliament, particularly in view of the slogan "It is time for a change", to see in operation that change which the people of Canada voted for and which they have a right to expect. But I am afraid, from what I have seen so far, that about the only change we can see is that certain hon. members have moved from one side of the house to the other. As the former prime minister pointed out in his remarks last Wednesday—and he made his point very well—there is a similarity between the current government and the former one, and he was fully justified in pledging the support of the Liberals to the policy of the new government, because from all indications it will be no more and no less than we have had from the Liberal administration for the past 22 years.

This cozy atmosphere of mutual trust and co-operation is nothing new to the people of northern Ontario, and particularly to the two ridings of Timmins and Timiskaming. Just two short years ago we witnessed the experience of Liberal candidates being kept out of the race and prominent local Liberals supporting Conservative candidates. Since June 10 the grapevine has it that already the plotters are at work again, and are going to try to give me the same treatment they gave to Mr. Bill Grummett, who represented the riding of Cochrane South in the provincial house for so many years with such dignity, diligence and respect. But I would like to say this. The loss of the two ridings of Timmins and Timiskaming by the Liberals, who have held these ridings ever since they were formed, was a direct result of the shenanigans that went on two years ago, and any further demonstrations of this kind, even the ones we have witnessed in this house, are going to hasten the journey of one or other of the old parties down the road to oblivion.

As many hon. members know, my riding takes in the fabulous Porcupine gold mining camp, and is dependent almost entirely on the gold mining industry. Mr. Speaker, the problems of the gold mining industry have been well outlined in this house on earlier occasions. The gold mining industry has never lacked speakers willing to bring its difficulties to the fore in this House of Commons. My plea today, however, will be for the gold miners and the communities in which they live. In other words, I believe it is time we heard a little less about the poor gold mines and a little more about the poor gold miners and the towns and communities from which they come.

The people of Canada have subsidized gold mining to the extent of many millions of dollars since the enactment of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, but the gold miners are in the untenable position of subsidizing the industry twice. They subsidize it first of all in the same way as all other Canadians through their share of the taxes that go to make up the subsidy, and they subsidize it in the second place in the receipt of substandard wages, wages paid in the gold mines being approximately one-half the wages paid in comparable industry. That is why we in the C.C.F. party say that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act must make provision for an equitable portion of that subsidy to go to the miners. If the industry must be subsidized by Canadians, let all Canadians subsidize it equally.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I now say how I admire the magnificent battle fought by the workers of Murdochville (Quebec) during the last spring and summer.

By their courage under such unusual circumstances, and by the restraint they showed in fighting for their rights, they deserve to be commended by all workers' unions and all the people of Canada.

Never in the history of labour's struggle in Canada was there such attempt at intimidation. Every legal manoeuver was attempted. Countless numbers of rascals, several of whom had arrived here as poor immigrants, were hired by company agents as soon as they landed in this country.

And to top it all, in order to cow the strikers, a supposedly neutral police force was called in which later on let a group of well-organized and equipped bullies ransack the union's offices, upset cars and threaten the property and even the life of the union leaders.

And yet this was no ordinary strike for higher wages or better working conditions, not even one requiring the use of union members or non-members. Rev. Father Cousineau, a Jesuit, writing in Relations, explained very simply that the strike was one "for basic human freedoms: the right to a professional association".

The existence of such conditions in Canada is a disgrace, and, until all trace of them have disappeared, all hon. members of this parliament must assume their share of responsibility.

Two men died directly as a result of the strike, and their names will go down in labour history, with those of all heroes who devoted their time and their lives to the labour movement, so that we might live in a better world.

That is why, in Shawinigan Falls, Que., last week, after reading these exploits on posters, the Quebec workers changed the name of Murdochville to that of "Murderville", the city of murder.

(Text):

The people of Timmins, Mr. Speaker, have watched very closely the battle which occurred in Murdochville this year, and the reason is this. Noranda Mines Limited, which own Murdochville, also own three of the local mines in the Timmins area, the Pamour, the Hallnor and the Aunor. In addition, five of the nine directors of Murdochville who are responsible for this black page in the history of the Canadian labour movement are also directors of Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited, the largest mine in the Porcupine camp. The miners in Timmins owe a debt of gratitude to the gallant fighters in Murdochville who have stopped, at least temporarily, this attempt at dictatorship by the mining magnates.

I was pleased to see in the speech from the throne that the government has arranged a meeting with the provincial governments for the near future, and I hope top priority at this meeting will be given to the problem of education which has reached such terrifying proportions in Canada today. I am fully aware that in the past government policy was to shrug its shoulders at the very mention of the word education and say, "That is exclusively a matter of provincial jurisdiction". However, if we are going to face up to reality, if we are not going to bury our heads in the sand as the ostrich does, we will either take action in this field or wake up to find we have made our greatest and possibly our final blunder.

If the information I have received is true, and I have no reason to doubt it, at the present time in Canada we are graduating from university seven students per 1,000 pupils enrolled in our schools. The United States is graduating 22 per 1,000 and in Russia today they are graduating 70 per 1,000. This situation is monstrous. If we value our liberty and have any regard for democracy we dare not allow this situation to continue.

The argument has been used that possibly the standards of education behind the iron curtain are not on a par with ours, but in view of Russian developments in terms of atomic and hydrogen bombs, intercontinental ballistic missiles and the launching of a satellite into outer space, I am afraid that argument no longer stands. We in this country must change our whole basic concept of and attitude toward education. In the past education has been something an individual was encouraged to acquire in order to ensure and enhance his own economic future. Education has had a price tag attached to it that placed it beyond the reach of far too many of our young people. The waste in Canada over the past 100 years in terms of our natural resources makes a sickening story, but the waste of our human resources in this country has been far greater.

The price tag we have placed on higher education in the past has established in Canada a stupid form of segregation. Deserving pupils with brains but no money were excluded from universities, and at the same time in far too many cases our institutions of higher learning were cluttered with people with money and no brains. We can use no better example of this waste than that of the exceptionally gifted child. Surveys have shown that 2 per cent of our children fall into this category, those with IQ's of 135 or over. From this 2 per cent should come our future leaders, scientists, engineers, teachers and professors; but what is the picture? Surveys have also shown that less than 50 per cent of our gifted children are even able to complete high school. Our exceptionally intelligent children are a gift given to us by our Maker and cannot be bought or substituted in any way.

Frequently these young people leave school for economic reasons. As soon as they are old enough to be physically capable of accepting employment they are compelled to leave school to help support themselves and their families. The second major reason is much more complex, and is the fact that our present educational system is not geared to handle these exceptional children. We find they go through school with a group of other children not as talented as themselves. The gifted ones have no difficulty in learning and do not have to study, with the result that they have plenty of time on their hands which they frequently use to get into mischief and in far too many cases finally wind up as delinquents. This happens because of the inability of their teachers under the present educational system to maintain their interest, and they turn to the challenge of mischief through boredom. In other cases these bright children go through the lower grades never bothering to study. When they reach high school and are required to study they discover they have never learned how and so they become frustrated and discouraged and leave school to accept employment.

Some attempts have been made in the past to deal with this problem. One such method was advancing the pupil by having him skip grades. Contrary to the cartoonists' conception of the gifted child, usually depicted as a slight, undersized, myopic bookworm wearing heavy hornrimmed glasses, it has been revealed that the exceptional children are generally as advanced physically as they are mentally, with the result that they can skip two or three grades in the first six or seven years without encountering any serious difficulty. However, if this practice is carried too far the situation develops where you have 10-year old children attending school with 15 and 16-year olds. This immediately creates a social problem, because the younger children are too small to compete in the games and other activities engaged in by their fellow students and thus are left by themselves. They come to think of themselves as different and set apart, and begin to develop all kinds of quirks and phobias.

Segregation, the grouping together of all gifted students in one class, again carries a social stigma. They become a group apart from the rest. Immediately they find all the other classes allied in a common front against them. The best solution offered by the experts so far is a combination of advancement and enrichment. Enrichment is a matter of broadening out the education, giving those clever students two, three or four extra subjects in order to keep them fully occupied and give them a challenge at all times. But this immediately raises another problem. In order to handle classes of this nature we must have teachers with special training. We are not beginning to meet our need for teachers now, ordinary teachers. How much less are we going to meet the need of teachers with initial special training?

In view of the problems I have mentioned today, Mr. Speaker, and in view of many more that I have not time to deal with, I feel it is the duty of this government, in conjunction with the provincial governments, to face up to this situation and do something without delay. If we are to survive, if we are to maintain what is so commonly referred to as our way of life, we cannot let the totalitarian powers outstrip us in the order of 10 to one. Every child in this great country of ours who has the ability and the initiative must be given the opportunity to further his education for the benefit of himself and of his country.

In the face of the scientific advancement that we see around us today; in fact, in the face of the spare moon that we have in the sky at the present time, I am reminded of the words of the song, "It's Later Than We Think". I pray, Mr. Speaker, that it is not already too late.

Mr. Hayden Stanton (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, first may I congratulate you on having been nominated and elected as Speaker of this house. I know you will uphold the dignity and decorum of the house, and at the same time you will be sympathetic to members of all the political groups within this house, especially the new members who were elected on June 10, 1957.

I also wish to congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They did a magnificent job, and their task was made all the easier by the abundance of magnificent legislation which is forecast in the speech from the throne.

I am sure the official opening of the 23rd parliament is an event that will long be remembered, not only by the older members of parliament but also by those who are newly elected and are sitting in the House of Commons for the first time. Her Gracious Majesty's presence and participation in the official opening of this parliament, coupled with her four-day visit and many public appearances in our national capital, which was so well televised to the citizens of Canada, will I am sure interlace our loyalty and solidarity even more firmly with the motherland.

I intend to give rather an abbreviated address now and go more fully into the business of the session when the bills are presented. I must congratulate the Prime Minister and his cabinet on the legislation which they propose to bring to this parliament at this session. It is truly evident that they are doing their utmost to implement the promises they made to the people of Canada prior to June 10, and to do so immediately.

After listening to the Leader of the Opposition and his criticism of the legislation as proposed, and his query as to why the government have not implemented their promises to the people sooner, I am really amazed when we consider the immense amount of legislation that is coming before parliament this session, such as greater assistance to our older citizens who are in the sunset of life and in many cases find it very hard to exist, and assistance offered to provincial governments in relation to increased aid to the recipients of old age assistance, disabled and blind persons. No person in this wide, wide world is more entitled to adequate pensions than those afflicted with blindness. There is also an increased scale of war veterans allowances and the allowances to go to larger groups. This parliament will also be asked to enact measures to provide greater stability in the prices of farm products and advance payments for farm-stored grain, which will aid the hard-pressed western farmer.

The representatives of the various provinces are to be called together for a dominion-provincial conference, and there is to be a discussion with the province of Saskatchewan looking toward an early start on the South Saskatchewan dam. This is only a small part of the vast amount of legislation that this government proposes to enact this session. In fact, it is more useful legislation —legislation that will really help the common people—than the former government placed before parliament in the four years I have been a member of this house. And still the official opposition claim that this government is not carrying out its promises. I can tell them that with all the legislation that has been mentioned in the speech from the throne, along with much more that the Prime Minister has suggested, there will be a larger and much better bill of fare for the common citizen, more help to those engaged in agriculture, more help to the average person, than the previous government has given them in the past 22 years.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is a government of action, not a government of promises before an election. When we think of the health insurance plan, which was first suggested to the people by the Liberals in 1919 and before every election since that year as a political carrot, as bait, it makes us laugh. The people of Canada are apparently not taking their promises any more. As I look across the house—I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not in his seat—I wonder whether the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) will say when he views the good work of this government, "Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister".

I would suggest to the government that I believe it would be a good idea, with the consent of the provinces, not only to have a conference of the dominion and the provinces but also of the municipalities. I realize that to have all the mayors and reeves would be too cumbersome, but surely representatives of the mayors and reeves associations of each province could sit in and present their problems, because they have problems in trying to finance the services they have to provide for their people by direct taxation. I believe that every member of this house agrees that municipal taxation has reached the saturation point.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Stanton: Mr. Speaker, as my constituency is approximately 50 per cent rural I wish to take a few minutes to discuss the problems affecting our farmers at the present time. I am particularly gratified, I may say, and I know that farmers in every part of Canada are most gratified, to know that the government intends to give them immediate relief by bringing in legislation that will help to stabilize farm prices so they will have a more just share of the national income. I am sure that not only farmers but also consumers will welcome the announcement by the Prime Minister that a parliamentary committee and, if necessary, a royal commission will be set up to make a study of the particular problems of the farmers.

The farming industry is and has been in an untenable position as the price squeeze is ever tightening. Some people look with dismay on floor prices, but we must realize that nearly every country in the western civilized world contributes more to stabilize agriculture and to bring farm income closer in harmony with that of other vocations than Canada has done. In the year 1956, I believe, Great Britain subsidized agriculture to the extent of £3 million.

Give the farmer his just share of the national income. He is a good spender, and every segment of our economy will benefit. Those who are engaged in agriculture are the largest buyers of commodity goods of any group in Canada. I also intend to deal more fully with agricultural problems at a more opportune time later in the session.

I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) is not in his seat, but I should like now to make a few remarks with respect to a particular situation. I have brought the matter I am about to describe before the house on many occasions, and I shall not hesitate to bring it again to the attention of the government because I know the minister is always sympathetic to the difficulties in which the citizens of the various constituencies find themselves.

My beef again is about the railway facilities at Brockville. If the present conditions exist much longer those who are waiting for and departing from trains will find themselves under nothing better than an umbrella. Not only that, but the hazards of the railway crossing are by no means diminishing. They are growing and will continue to grow. When the by-pass for highway 401 is completed all traffic from the west, the north and the east will be coming into Brockville over these dangerous tracks and will be halted constantly by waiting trains.

I was never more humiliated, Mr. Speaker, than on the occasion of the visit of the Prime Minister to Brockville when he spoke on my behalf on May 8 last, and most effectively as the results have shown. After stepping off the train he and Mrs. Diefenbaker were compelled to walk nearly two blocks over the rough, corduroy railway road bed to the dilapidated station where a taxi awaited them. Nor was that the worst. When the taxi in which they were riding swung, along with other cars, up Perth street toward his hotel the gates were down and no passage was allowed. The taxi driver then turned and retraced his route for two blocks, but lo and behold, the gates on William street were also down. So the Prime Minister was detained there until the train passed on.

This same thing happens day after day and week after week. Many industrial workers are detained at these crossings time and time again. The delays are getting so pronounced that the city council has threatened legal action if they are not shortened. This is an inconvenience to those travelling by train and a hazard to automobile traffic. It is especially dangerous to pedestrians. There are now two large schools located north of the tracks, and it is necessary for many of the children to cross the tracks in order to go to and from school.

I was amazed, Mr. Speaker, to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) on Friday last, so critical they were of the present government supporters and creating disunity between the people of the different provinces. Disunity was never mentioned during the election campaign in the constituency which I have the privilege to represent, and I am sure the same holds equally true for my colleagues. If the right hon. gentleman after whom the constituency of the hon. member is named could have heard the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier he would have shuddered with humiliation. On Friday the hon. member for Laurier sowed more seeds of disunity than any person inside or outside the house has ever done. But I am sure the people will take his remarks lightly, for after all none of my colleagues on this side of the house has found it necessary to go outside his or her province to find a constituency in which to be elected.

In my opinion the criticism of the C.C.F. party was most unfounded. Surely opposition members can wait and give the government time to implement the promises of which they have spoken. When the bills are brought forward I am sure that not one opposition member will dare oppose them. I am sure, as are all of us, that it is not the government's intention to bring about the passage of legislation by order in council. I am certain it is the government's intention to bring all legislation before parliament so it may be fully discussed. How could that have been done in only a very few days? Is there any person in the house or throughout the dominion who will say that parliament should have opened earlier? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made the suggestion that the house should have opened in September, I believe. Is there any person in the dominion who would have wanted the house to open in September when our Queen was coming later to open parliament officially? I think not.

I remember a prediction made in the house last January by my good friend the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). I should like to refer to page 146 of Hansard of January 11, 1957, where I find that the hon. member had this to say:

> I have sometimes said that one of the easiest ways to destroy a political leader is to make him leader of the official opposition.

I wonder what he thinks now. He went on to say, as found at page 147:

> I am going to make a prediction, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps someone will read back to me what I have said after the next election. . . . I predict that the result of the next election will not see the Conservative party sitting on the government side of the house. I go further than that. I will particularize my prediction. I predict that the Conservative party will come back here with fewer members west of the great lakes.

Later, as found on the same page, he said:

> I should like to see—and perhaps I shall—a little game of leapfrog that we sometimes play, whereby we leap over all the rest of the parties and leap from a third party to the government.

Mr. Byrne: A short hope.

Mr. Argue: He almost made it, too.

Mr. Stanton: I spoke in the same debate a few days later, and on page 282 of Hansard of January 15, 1957, it will be found that I said:

> With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few prophecies, and I do not believe that I will have to go too far out on the limb in doing so. I prophesy that the Social Credit party will not elect a member east of the Manitoba border, and that nearly all their candidates will lose their deposits. I will also make a prophecy that they will not elect a member east of the Alberta border. . . . I will make one more prediction and it is this. The good people of the constituency of Prince Albert will have a third prime minister of Canada as their representative after the next election.

Mr. Hansell: You are a good prophet; much better than I am.

Mr. Stanton: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that before the hon. member for Macleod makes any more predictions perhaps he should change the lenses in his glasses so he will be able to look into the crystal ball a little more accurately, because his predictions were just as accurate as the Gallup poll or those found in the editorial in Maclean's magazine published the day after the election.

I would also suggest to my hon. friends to my right that while they are all good fellows and we enjoy seeing them there, perhaps they had better change their political thinking. If they do not do so, then after the next election they will probably be moved across the way because there will be no desks left for them on this side of the house. They will all be occupied by Conservative members.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have not my notes before me, but no man should stand in this house unless he has sufficient to say that he can speak without notes. I congratulate you, Sir, because I am sure you will do your duty as Deputy Speaker. I shall defend both the Speaker and Deputy Speaker, just as I was willing to defend the former Speaker from any incursions from any source. I congratulate the new members. They have a splendid opportunity to do something for Canada. I hope their eyes will not be blinded by narrow politics or selfishness.

I should like also to welcome the page boys, because they are very important to this house. I hope that this year, as in a former year under a Liberal administration, the page boys will get a trip to some place that is worthy of their responsibilities. I should like to congratulate the government whip. He was very kind to me. Generally when a man is told to go up higher it means a promotion. However, when he said to me, through our whip, "Stay where you are", that meant a promotion for old Dan. I appreciate it very much. I think the real reason I was left in that office was that the whip wanted a youth with red blood in his veins to pep up the old P.C.'s on that floor.

I congratulate the government upon two things that are contained in the speech from the throne. I feel the proposal to increase war veterans pensions is good. I feel this move is to be commended, and we should give honour to whom honour is due. However, there is something that has been omitted from the speech from the throne insofar as the veteran is concerned, namely old age pensions commencing at 60 years of age for those who served in an active theatre, without a means test. I spoke of this during the last four years. Last year I mentioned that one man had had four Christmas dinners in the trenches. Another man was assigned to the trenches where there was not a dry spot on the ground, and he was kept there for 31 days without a dry sock on his foot.

No one can tell me that this is not injurious to a man's health and to his chances of longevity. I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs will take this into consideration, because he has spoken of it before.

Another thing that is contained in the speech from the throne, and for which I commend the government, is the proposal to increase old age pensions. I spoke on this subject last year.

There are two good things that are not mentioned in the speech from the throne, and one is health insurance. In 1937 I introduced a resolution on this subject which received the support of the former member for St. Boniface, now Senator Howden. We had a full dress debate on health insurance then, and last year the former minister of national health and welfare got a bill through the house. I am sorry to find that the Conservative government apparently does not intend to implement this measure.

Another omission from the speech from the throne, and something which received the support of the present Minister of Veterans Affairs last year, is adequate pensions for retired civil servants. I said during the debate on my resolution that a man who has worked ten hours a day six days a week has the right to a pension as good as that of the man who works eight hours a day five days a week. This is one of the outstanding things, an increased pension for retired civil servants.

There is another matter about which I want to speak, but before I do so I want to say that the people at the head of the lakes felt that one of the reasons for the change on June 10 was the need for a stronger opposition. Well, if you have not got it now, you will never get it. We have a strong opposition on this side, and the Prime Minister knows it very well. The question that is in my mind is, how can a weak opposition make a strong government? That is a question hon. members opposite will have to consider. I wish them success in the way they deserve.

At the lakehead we have a large harbour in Thunder bay, perhaps the largest in Canada. Delegations have been coming from Manitoba and other areas outside of the lakehead to tell us that we should get the lakehead harbour ready to receive the big ships that will come from the ocean. I should like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the man who looked after the lakehead harbour knew what he was doing. He was one of the greatest men Canada produced, Right Hon. C. D. Howe. For 22 years he looked after that harbour and there was never any complaint. There are long docks for both railways, and the area in front of them is now dredged to a depth of 27 feet. There are long docks in front of the elevators, and the area in front of these docks is dredged deeply enough to receive the big boats from the ocean. We have four paper mills, and the water in front of them is deep enough to receive ocean-going vessels. For 22 years boats have been coming in and going out from these dock facilities without objection from the railways, industries or even the labour unions.

I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, that any request that came through me from the city council of Fort William for more harbour facilities was considered favourably. We got a new harbour for the fishermen at Squaw bay, and that was greatly appreciated because it helped the fishermen in handling their fish. We have a new breakwater at Chippewa in order to protect an area for the children, tourists and others who come there. The last request sent to the former minister of trade and commerce and finally to the Minister of Public Works was for a large dock in the centre of the city, marine harbour. It was a 280-foot dock. I would say to those who are anxious about dock facilities at the lakehead that they were well looked after during the last 22 years.

When the present Minister of Transport called on us a little while ago, I toured the harbour with him. He did a god job. He told us he was not stating now what was going to be done, that he was merely on a fact-finding tour. I must say it gave me great pleasure to introduce my former baseball catcher to the lakehead aristocracy. I believe he appreciated it. Fort William harbour is well looked after.

Somebody from Winnipeg said that Duluth was spending $40 million. The chairman of our harbour board, who knows very well what our harbour contains, says that if you had to put in the present equipment it would cost you $300 million or more. I would therefore say that our harbour is in good shape. However, our city council has wisely advised that before any money is spent on our harbour a full investigation should be made. I am looking to the Minister of Transport to see that that investigation is carried out. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has asked for such an investigation. We are asking for it so we shall be fit to receive the big boats that come from overseas.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about the hub of Canada. It is agreed at the lakehead that Fort William is the hub of Canada. The Prime Minister, when he sees more of it, will agree with me. Fort William is growing rapidly. Just imagine what has taken place. The Great Lakes Pulp and Paper Company, with its two large mills, has now doubled its capacity. Two new paper mills have been built at an expenditure of more than $40 million. It is the greatest paper manufacturing company in Canada today.

We therefore lift our heads high. We are proud of the new man who came from Quebec to take over the Great Lakes Pulp and Paper Company mill as superintendent. I refer to Mr. Fox. I pay my tribute to him as an outstanding businessman, well able to take care of the workers in a harmonious way. The Abitibi Power and Paper Company has also spent a large sum of money. But one of the things that pleases me best at the lakehead is the situation at the Canadian Car and Foundry Company. Last year we announced to the then minister of labour that they had had two million hours without an accident. They are now fairly well into the third million hours without an accident. I am extremely happy to represent the hub of Canada in this respect.

I think that is all I have to say. I should just like to conclude by saying that I am not looking forward to an election this year. I am going to support the speech from the throne because I do not think the government yet has done enough for us to pass a vote of non-confidence. It is true that they promised to have a session of parliament in September, but any man who has a garden, as I have, would not like to have a session in September, so he changed the date. However, I was not so glad when I was criticized for saying so at the lakehead by the old age pensioners.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not agree with the reasons given by the Prime Minister for extending the date. I was glad that we were not called before October 14 for that selfish reason I have mentioned. I think the government should be given the opportunity to make good on its promises of cutting taxes and raising pensions all round. Let us give them a chance to make good. That is what I want. When I was engaged in the manly art, I remember that I liked to have a chance to show whether or not I could handle myself. I should like the government to have a chance to show whether or not they are able to handle themselves and to measure up to the task confronting them.

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary I should like to congratulate you, as Deputy Speaker, and Mr. Speaker on being elevated to the positions which you now occupy. I am sure you will carry out the duties of your offices with every efficiency and dispatch. Coming into this house as, if I may say so, the tallest rookie, I am happy to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) sitting in the seat he occupies and holding the position he now holds, as he hails from Vancouver-Quadra. In that particular area he is held in high esteem, as he is throughout the Dominion of Canada. I think it is only proper for a new member of the house to recognize the merit of other hon. members, no matter to what party they belong. I appreciate the fact that in this House of Commons today on both sides of the house are men of great ability. I think it is the duty of these men, as well as of all members of this house, to try to carry on the government of this country as efficiently and as ably as they possibly can.

The hon. member who preceded me mentioned Fort William and described it as the hub of Canada. I would say there is another hub of Canada known as the Okanagan Boundary area. It is sometimes called the California of Canada by many people. Nevertheless, like the rest of the people of this great Canada of ours, we have our problems there also. Basically our industries consist of farming, ranching, mining and logging. In addition there is also the tourist industry. The farmer complains because he is not getting a sufficiently high price for his products. Similarly the rancher complains because the price of beef has come down substantially. In our particular area a number of mines actually have been closed down. The small logger also is bitterly complaining because he cannot get a proper price for his logs. That is the situation which exists.

May I say this respectfully. Having been in this house for the short time I have been here, I feel that there should be less and less of politics in this House of Commons and that we should come as Canadians, trying to assist our government. I feel that we should try to rise above personalities and obstructionist methods. Let us try to get things done for the Canadian people.

I commend the government of this country for having the foresight and zeal to try to stabilize the prices of agricultural products. As to the matter of cash advances against the farm-stored grain, I think the principle is good and I personally am going to support it. However, I would say this. While cash advances to prairie farmers will be in the nature of an emergency measure, after all it is a temporary expedient. I think there is one danger, namely that sometimes these temporary expedients can develop into matters of a permanent nature. It may very well be that when some of the hon. members of this House of Commons later on go back to their respective constituencies the people there—as, for example, in my own constituency of Okanagan Boundary—will say, "When are we going to get cash advances on our apples?" or "When are we going to get cash advances on our various fruits?" However, in this particular case, so far as the prairie farmers are concerned, I think a definite case is made out and that we are dealing here with an emergency. But I certainly hope that this matter is and will be treated as being in the nature of a temporary expedient.

As to a national development policy, I again commend the government. It is about time, and I think the government saw this, that the Dominion of Canada and the provincial governments throughout this great Canada worked together to develop this nation. There is only one suggestion that I should like to make. As I came from the Okanagan valley down here to Ottawa I could not help being impressed for the first time by all the land that is idle and not being used in this great dominion.

I think it would be a good thing if we, the government and everyone concerned, tried to bring about decentralization of industry throughout this Canada of ours. Why, after all, should the industries of this country be concentrated in the large cities? Some day there may be an emergency, and we might be very sorry that industry is concentrated in this manner. Would it not be much wiser if industry were distributed more evenly over this land? If this were done the results would also be helpful to smaller communities such as the Okanagan valley, for example, where we can and do welcome new industries into our midst. Basically we are a fruit growing centre, but if we had industry established there the economy of the whole area would be improved.

Having mentioned the subject of farming I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers in the Okanagan valley are not happy, and I would like in particular to bring one matter of importance to the attention of this house. The fruit growers in the valley are keenly disappointed over the federal government's failure to establish a minimum fair market value for prunes to protect against distress quotations and imports. The tariff committee of the British Columbia fruit growers' association supplied to the Minister of Finance data published by the United States department of agriculture on the price of prunes in the three northwest prune-producing states, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, over an eight-year period from 1949 to 1956, all years inclusive. This data indicated that the average f.o.b. price for the standard lug of prunes for the eight years under observation would have been about $1.19 per lug in Canadian funds.

American prunes were quoted and sold to Canadian importers at about 90 cents in Canadian funds, or approximately 30 cents below the level which the British Columbia fruit growers' association felt should be regarded as an emergency minimum. Our fruit growers found it difficult to comprehend how the government could suggest that British Columbia producers have not suffered because of United States prices or exports. Neither could they understand why it should be considered a violation of GATT when it was not considered so in the case of the minimum fair market values set for cut flowers, for textiles and for strawberries. By the time the government made its decision on August 30 the damage had been done to the point that little if any increase in prices would have been possible.

I know that a good many of our prune growers in the valley did not even bother to pick the prunes off their trees because they were not getting the price that they should receive, and consequently it did not pay to pick them. That is one of the problems, to obtain a fair price for our various farm products throughout this country; and we as members of parliament, irrespective of party, should seek to ensure that farmers do receive fair prices for their products.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with the Income Tax Act. Hon. members may know that at the present time a person having a married status may deduct from his or her income the sum of $2,000 a year; a single person is entitled to deduct $1,000 a year, and if a person has a child who is eligible for family allowance, the amount of the permitted deduction is $150. In the case of a child who is not qualified for family allowance the amount is $400 a year. A deduction of $500 a year is permitted to a taxpayer who has reached the age of 65 before the end of the year.

These amounts have been in effect ever since the bill received royal assent, namely December 10, 1949. I have interviewed and consulted many accountants, and they all feel that these particular exemptions or deductions are not sufficient at the present time; that they should be scaled upward so that to some extent the taxpayer will benefit. I know the government is in favour of giving some tax reductions or concessions to those people in particular who find they are having a hard time getting by, and I mention this section of the Income Tax Act because I feel that this is one field in which help could be given to the men and women in this country who have families to bring up and who are having a very difficult time under present conditions. I respectfuly suggest, therefore, that the government should give consideration to amending the relevant sections of the Income Tax Act.

Another matter about which I am concerned is the question of Senate reform. I notice that in the speech from the throne nothing was mentioned with regard to this subject. It seems to me that basically the Senate of this country should be truly representative of the Canadian people. I would point out, however, that at the present time British Columbia has the same representation in the Senate as Newfoundland, although British Columbia has four times the population of Newfoundland. Then again, British Columbia has twice the population of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick taken separately, yet British Columbia has only three-fifths of the representation in the Senate that these provinces have.

It seems to me that a better way of dealing with representation in the Senate would be on the basis of representation according to population. That seems to me an equitable way of arranging things, and it may be that the government in the course of time can progressively bring about changes in the representation on this basis. After all, we have had great men in the Senate, and I respectfully suggest again that when further appointments are made the government should choose men according to their ability; young men, like the young men who are holding office in the Conservative government today. Let the authorities pick men of that type and calibre, people who have strength, and who can work for the brighter future of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to note, further, that this government have undertaken to increase the amount of the old age pension to senior citizens, and I hope they may see their way clear to grant the sum of $60, affording a more generous increase than has been made in the past.

I was glad to note, also, that there will be increases in the payments under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. I was particularly glad to note that veterans allowances will be increased. A large number of these men went to European wars, and to South Africa also, then found themselves in the unfortunate position of being told that the time they had spent out of this country could not be taken into account when the matter of residential qualifications was being considered. I am certainly glad to see that it is the intention of the government to reduce the residential qualification now demanded.

With regard to the national hospital plan. I noted a number of questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I feel as he does, that those questions should have been answered. I sit here as a new member of the house and, respectfully, I wanted to know the attitude of the provinces regarding this hospital plan, what has been the attitude of the municipalities, what the hospitals of this country think about it, what the medical practitioners think about it, and whether this plan, if it is brought into existence, will cause the cost of hospital care for the average citizen to rise.

These are vital questions, and questions which I suggest the government should answer. This matter of a national hospitalization plan has been under consideration for a considerable number of years. I would like this government to display the same courage it did in the speech from the throne and as time goes on come up with answers to the questions on a national hospitalization plan. I think it will be a wonderful thing for the people of Canada if it is properly worked out with the provinces and municipalities.

Another matter I wish to raise is the case of the young man named Calvin Klingbell. On September 25, 1957, this young man, only 23 years of age, was sentenced by Mr. Justice Wilson to be hanged on December 17, 1957, for the murder of an elderly grocer in the city of Vancouver. The circumstances surrounding this alleged crime were these. This young man, apparently in need of money, entered a grocery store, struck an elderly man on the head with a can and stabbed him. Calvin Klingbell did not leave the scene of the crime and remained there until the police came. His explanation was that he simply blacked out mentally and was not aware of what he was doing when the offence took place. This was the first offence ever committed by this young man. As a child Klingbell attended Sunday school and participated extensively in sports.

I realize that every person at some time in his life is capable of making a serious mistake. I do not personally believe in capital punishment. One important aspect of our British system of jurisprudence is that justice is tempered with mercy. At the present time petitions are being circulated and signed by people who know this chap, and no doubt in time this matter will be brought to the attention of the cabinet. I would respectfully request that they consider with meticulous care all the facts of this particular case, and I hope the governor in council, pursuant to section 656 of the Crimal Code, will give this matter earnest consideration.

I wish to conclude by briefly dealing with the question of the tight money policy. I noticed in the throne speech there was nothing whatever mentioned with regard to this policy. I heard the leader of the C.C.F., I believe yesterday, mention that he did not think a solution to our problems could be brought about by a change in monetary policy.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, might I say immediately that if the hon. member will read my speech he will find that I did not say that.

Mr. Christian: What did you say, may I ask?

Mr. Coldwell: I said a change in monetary policy was no solution to the general economic problem.

Mr. Christian: Well, that is basically how we differ. We say there must be a change in the monetary policy of this country, because as a result of the tight money policy we can see evidence today of things levelling off. Times are not as good as they have been, and this winter we can expect to see increased unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Winch: Under the government you now support.

Mr. Christian: There is a beginning to everything.

Mr. Winch: Also an end, thank God.

Mr. Christian: In the course of time the Canadian people will realize that the monetary policy of this country is not what it should be. What party in this house today is trying to improve our own monetary policy?

Mr. Winch: The C.C.F.

Mr. Christian: The Social Credit party is attempting to give leadership in that regard. Let me read to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) something that has been said by one of the greatest Liberals we ever had in Canada, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, which appears in the September 1957 issue of The Canadian Social Creditor:

> The Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, prior to the election of 1935 which returned the Liberal party to power said: "I plead for a sweeping Liberal majority in order to carry out my policy of public control of currency and credit. Until the control of currency and credit is restored to the government . . . all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and democracy is idle and futile".

[Mr. Christian.]

Those words were spoken by one of the greatest Liberals we have had in Canada. After all, it is the people of this country who are the supreme authority, and they should control the country's monetary policy. When that policy does not work to the satisfaction of the Canadian people then the Social Credit party, the Liberal party, the Conservative party and even the C.C.F. party should put their shoulders behind the wheel and examine our financial institutions to see if they are working for the benefit of the citizens of Canada. We cannot assume that any existing condition is working perfectly and in high order. Let us scrutinize our monetary policy and observe it in the future with a watchful eye to see that it meets the needs of the existing situation.

The leader of the C.C.F. party mentioned that a serious world problem today is underconsumption. We are able to produce ample goods in Canada, but unfortunately many Canadians cannot get the goods and services they require. This situation exists under the tight money policy. Is it not reasonable, therefore, to put the finest financial minds in Canada to work on the problem in order to bring about a solution that will benefit all Canadian people? Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this distinguished house with the emotions that we are told inevitably accompany this event when it occurs for the first time in the life of a parliamentarian. I will be excused, I know, if at the outset I make what you may feel to be a personal reference when I refer to my late father, Dr. Martin James Maloney, who sat in this house from 1925 until 1935 and three of whose colleagues still remain, the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman), the hon. member for York East (Mr. McGregor) and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). If on leaving this place, Mr. Speaker, either voluntarily or by the settled design of my constituents, I can boast of having served this house, my constituents and my fellow Canadians with the same loyalty and devotion he did, and if I can boast of having earned the affectionate good will of all hon. members in this chamber regardless of their political affiliation, then I shall leave with the same feeling of satisfaction I know he enjoyed. It is rather significant that I should have taken my seat for the first time on October 14, 1957, 22 years to the day from October 14, 1935, when he was defeated as the representative for South Renfrew.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as someone whom my colleagues from Toronto will confirm has had in his professional career not a little to do with the criminal law, naturally I scanned the faces of the hon. members opposite with a great deal of curiosity on opening day, and in fairness I must assure my colleagues on this side of the house that I have never encountered any of them in my professional capacity.

I want to thank the Prime Minister for the honour he conferred upon me when he invited me to be the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour. The duties of the office, I shall attempt to discharge to the very best of my ability, and I should like at this moment to say what pleasure it gives me to attempt to serve the Minister of Labour even in that humble capacity. The Minister of Labour, with a long background of experience has, in my opinion, a natural understanding of the problems with which his department is daily concerned; and in my observations of the operations of the department under his supervision I am satisfied that he will in a very short time be regarded as one of the finest incumbents that office has ever had.

I should like to join with the speakers who have preceded me, Mr. Speaker, in the congratulations that they extended to you and to the Deputy Speaker, and I should like also to add my congratulations to those that have already been extended to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) for the addresses they gave at the commencement of this debate.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that on this occasion it is customary for members to discuss some of the particular features and, of course, the needs of their constituencies. In the case of my riding, Parkdale, I am sure it is well known to the members of this house through the efforts of the illustrious members who have preceded me. I should like to say a few words about the people of my riding. Parkdale is a fair cross section of Canada. In addition to a stalwart Anglo-Saxon group of slightly in excess of 50 per cent, virtually all of the ethnic groups of Europe are also represented, including the Baltic peoples, Byelorussians, Hungarians, Italians, Germans, Croatians, Serbs, Czechs, Slovaks and the largest groups the Poles and Ukrainians.

I would like to make just a few comments about these newcomers. These lately arrived people are proudly aware of the traditions of our country and are eager to participate in its forward movement. They make an invaluable contribution to Canada's future promise. In the same way as did many of our forefathers some came to this country for adventure, some for freedom, but freedom was the spur which drove most of them here. Having found freedom they have a strong determination not to give it up, and they have an abiding desire to assist the enslaved peoples in their own home lands to regain theirs. It is this devotion to freedom, Mr. Speaker, exemplified as it is by so many of the people in my riding, which in my opinion is the bedrock on which all our future hopes must necessarily be founded.

Recently, in a speech at McGill University, the Prime Minister referred to the challenge presented to the free world by the launching of the Soviet satellite which, according to the news reports, is now circling the world at the unimaginable velocity of 18,000 miles an hour. On the occasion of that address the Prime Minister said:

> The free world will get nowhere by resorting to fear nor will it meet the challenge by the spirit of apathy based on defeatism.

I believe these are words, Mr. Speaker, with which every member in this house will agree. The Prime Minister's remarks on that occasion emphasized the great central defect of the Soviet system, a defect for which no number of satellites, no number of intercontinental missiles, no display of military or scientific achievement can compensate. That is, of course, the total and complete absence of freedom under its operation.

We know that under the Soviet system matters which we take for granted—free parliaments, free press, free trade unions, are unknown. The Soviet union is able to offer guns but not freedom. This is so in China, in Egypt, in the Philippines and now in Syria, where the Soviet union does not offer freedom, only arms. It is not unexpected, with its record of subornation of freedom, that the proudest scientific achievement of the Soviet union should have been the production of a satellite.

I commend to this house, Mr. Speaker, the United Nations report on the Soviet intervention in Hungary. There was Soviet freedom at its very finest. Another case is Poland, where the urge for freedom, the strongest urge of man, again is beginning to make itself increasingly evident. This, Mr. Speaker, is a great challenge to the Soviet monolith, the spirit of freedom which constantly manifests itself among the tragic peoples she oppresses and will continue to do so until, as we hope, it overcomes slavery and bondage.

The newcomers to Parkdale and the newcomers to Canada, besides helping to enrich our culture, bring to us a practical and often personal experience, and the experience as well of their friends and their relatives of days and nights of agony that are incomprehensible to us who have never felt the horror of the almighty state. Were I to bring before this house the tribulations of the Polish people represented in my riding, the Hungarian people who are also represented, the Baltic peoples, the Ukrainian peoples, and the other peoples of the states of central and eastern Europe, peoples who have experienced at first hand the barbarities of the Soviet system, I am sure I would obtain the universal sympathy of this house.

The evil of communism feeds and fosters on disaster and decay. Excessive material hardship and moral decline are the breeding ground of communism. It is my hope that in international affairs our country will continue to raise its voice on the side of the weak and the oppressed, and that in our own affairs we shall continually strive to provide our citizens with such a standard of living as will render ineffective what has elsewhere proven to be the sometimes attractive argument of the communists.

The people to whom I have been referring came variously from countries in Europe between which there often were traditionally historical animosities and hostilities. In this country these hostilities are beginning to disappear. One of the reasons that accounts for their disappearance is the mutual anxiety they entertain about their own oppressed fellow countrymen. This has served to create a bond between them which constitutes a firm foundation for friendship and harmony in this country. These people teach us that Russia, in order to achieve her ambitions, counts on the tolerance of the peoples of the western world and counts upon disunity among the free nations of the world. They would have us believe that understanding and co-operation with soviet Russia are mere illusions, and indeed many of them go the length of suggesting to us such a drastic measure as the breaking off of diplomatic relations between the democracies of the world and what they describe as "the criminal regime in Moscow".

Today the tragic peoples who are enslaved in Europe look forward out of their present darkness toward a future in which they will witness the removal from the face of their home lands every last vestige of the disfigurement which was wrought upon them by the bolshevik conqueror. After his release from confinement last October and during the course of his New Year's message to the Polish people, His Eminence Stephan Cardinal Wyszynsky said:

> I wish to everyone patience as in patience you will be masters of your souls.

Those were words of hopeful advice to his own people and to the other peoples of central and eastern Europe. It was a tribute to this country that so many of these outstanding people should have chosen Canada as the country of their adoption and yet, on reflection, Canada really furnishes a natural setting for people of diverse ethnic origins.

Almost 300 years ago there commenced the process of two diverse races, each with ancient and different cultures, each with different attitudes and outlooks, living side by side. Differences of race and of religion were duly recognized and we were able to find a common ground in respect of our system of government. This country, then, furnishes a natural setting for the people to whom I have been referring.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, it is most gratifying indeed to me to address a few words to this hon. house in its other official language.

It was a source of very great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, for me to observe, as a newly elected member, that differences of opinion in political matters do not prevent the formation of friendships among hon. members of this house even though they belong to opposing political parties. I should like at this stage to follow the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who the other day paid tribute to the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent, Quebec East). It is a source of regret that the right hon. member proposes to resign from the leadership of his party after a new leader has been selected to replace him. For me, and I know for all newly elected members, it will be a proud boast always that we served as members of the house contemporaneously with the Leader of the Opposition.

Differences of political opinion on specific matters have not in any way minimized the esteem in which the distinguished right hon. gentleman is held. In serving now as Leader of the Opposition destiny is conferring upon him the same privilege it conferred upon two of his distinguished predecessors, Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

I am of the belief that our nation is a greater nation because of the historical association of two great races of people, the English and the French. They have lived side by side, more often than not, in harmony and good will. Out of this association has developed a nationality which not only makes us a more interesting country in the eyes of the world but an example in tolerance and understanding.

At the moment on this side of the house there are not as many representatives of my French Canadian friends as I should like to see, but in the expectation that when the first opportunity presents itself this situation will be corrected we are holding in reserve as many as 50 places to accommodate the newcomers. In the meantime, it will be the proud privilege of all of us on this side of the house to see to it that the ancient rights and privileges of French Canada are jealously maintained and safeguarded.

In the meantime, it will be the proud privilege of all of us on this side of the house to see to it that the ancient rights and privileges of French Canada are jealously maintained and safeguarded.

In attempting to understand what is embodied in the concept "Canadianism", sometimes that can be done by means of an experiment. If you were to try to exclude from your understanding of Canadianism some of the glories of French Canada, the historic sites of Montreal, ancient Quebec, Ste. Anne de Beaupre, St. Joseph's Oratory, how sombre the result would be. By the same token, by the same process, if you were to exclude from the ambit of what you understand to be Canadianism British Columbia, the prairies, Toronto, the maritimes, the tenth province, the result would be equally disheartening.

Canadianism then is of necessity as well as of desire a concept from which neither can possibly be excluded.

I hope that, however long or short my career in this place may be, I shall never utter a single syllable that will in any way interfere with the steady progress of our march towards national unity.

I was impressed on June 10 with the national character of our party. I was impressed with the support it received from all quarters. The support we got knew no boundaries of race, of class or of creed. We were supported by the poor people; we were supported by the rich people. We were supported by workingmen; we were supported by the people who hire them. We were supported by the English; we were supported by the French. We were supported by the Protestant, the Catholic and the Jew. We were supported by every group, every race and every class, in other words, we proved ourselves to be what others might sometimes suggest we are not; we proved ourselves to be a truly national party, the party of all the people in this country.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to subscribe to the national development program initiated by my party and already foreshadowed in measures announced in the speech from the throne. The surveying and development of the Canadian north, the erection of projects to facilitate the extraction of our vast resources, the processing and control of these resources in Canada, are all projects which cannot but commend themselves to fellow Canadians. I may say, that it is with pride that as a member of my party I have witnessed the alacrity with which the Prime Minister and the new government have proceeded to translate these programs into effective measures.

The measures of social welfare too, Mr. Speaker, will greatly assist the aged and needy in my riding and throughout our nation. They are deeply welcomed and are prophetic of a successful administration which will bring together the conflicting forces of this country and all this, in a way that will best serve the interests of its people.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I ask you, at the beginning of my remarks, to be so kind as to express on my behalf the usual congratulations to Mr. Speaker on this particular occasion. I saw him in this house at a time when all we heard was of trouble and difficulties; I saw him when some members trooped toward the Speaker shaking their fists; I saw him then remain seated and very calmly wait until the storm had died down. He therefore showed at that time that he had all the qualifications required to adequately fulfil the role which is given him today. I was glad also to note—I did not know it before—that he handles the French language with wonderful ease. This, in my opinion, is essential for a Speaker of the House of Commons in Ottawa, where both languages are official, and both races represented.

I should like also to congratulate you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for having been appointed chairman of the committees of the house. I feel the choice has been a very wise one, since you already have a good parliamentary training, having sat here for many years; moreover, you are known as a good lawyer, which will help you analyse and properly construe the rules and regulations; you are also conversant with both official languages of this country, and I am convinced that you will always be able to replace the Speaker with dignity, should he be absent from the house.

(Text):

I should like to offer my congratulations to the mover of the address, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith). He has spoken in this house with all the characteristics of a perfect orator. I was not a member of this house when his illustrious father was a member, but I am told he is following in the footsteps of that hon. member, and if that is so he will prove to be one of the best members of this house.

(Translation):

I also want to commend the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) who expressed himself admirably in both languages. A member's maiden speech in this house is always the hardest to deliver. However, he got along splendidly.

Of course, he will learn in time that issues discussed here are generally federal issues. Provincial rights can also be mentioned, but my hon. friend will soon realize that, in this house, we mostly discuss problems under federal jurisdiction. However, he has done wonderfully well, and I wish him the best of luck.

I also would like to congratulate the previous speaker on the magnificent way he spoke French. We noted that his was not French of the written sort, spoken by rote. He has a good command of French, and he proved it. Even if I do not share all his views, I have to commend him and I trust that some other members will try to address this house in both our country's official languages.

I seize the opportunity of my first speech in this new parliament to thank the voters of my riding who were kind enough to return me to the house. In this last struggle, I had to cope with the united efforts of all those who dislike liberalism. A so-called independent Liberal candidate was put up, but this was done in the office of the Union Nationale in Quebec on February 7 last.

In spite of the concerted efforts of the supporters of this party and the money they spent, the people of Hull have recognized the services I had tried to render them ever since I have been their representative, and they gave me a substantial majority. I take this opportunity to thank them from the bottom of my heart.

(Text):

When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) spoke last Wednesday he informed the house that the Liberal party would not move a motion of non-confidence, nor would the Liberal party support any motion of non-confidence. At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) rose and seemed to blame the Liberal party for not offering a motion of non-confidence. I want to assure him that we are not following this course to be pleasant to the Conservative party. We are doing so because we recognize that even if the Conservatives did not receive a majority of the votes, they did get a majority of the seats and we therefore desire to respect the opinion expressed by the electorate of this country. If we had moved a motion of non-confidence the Conservatives would have been the first ones to say we were trying to prevent them from accomplishing the promises they made during the election campaign.

We reserve the right, however, to criticize what we feel should be criticized, and this is what we intend to do until the end of the present session. Last Friday the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) rose in this house and spoke of the attitude of the Conservative party towards national unity. He was rather severe in his expressions, but as a matter of fact he was right. Since the departure of Cartier and Macdonald the Conservatives have tried to run on a division of policy, one policy for one part of the country and another policy for another part of the country. While the hon. member was speaking some hon. members opposite stated he was working against national unity. Why is the claiming of the rights of a minority said to be working against national unity? We have rights in this country because we were the first citizens to come from Europe. We have rights in this country because we form almost one-third of the population. When we claim those rights it cannot be said that we are working against national unity. We are making an appeal to the well balanced people of both races to recognize those rights, and that is what the hon. member for Laurier was doing and that is what I intend to do today.

Following the speech by the hon. member for Laurier I am told that some newspapers, the Toronto Telegram for one, said that if the Prime Minister had been in the house he might have called an election right away. I doubt that he would have done that because he would have had no reason to call an election unless he was afraid of not being able to fulfil the promises he made during the election. He would have no reason unless he is afraid he has no means of stopping inflation and unemployment which are increasing continually.

I really believe that, with the developments which have taken place since the opening of this session the Conservative party would not dare to go to the people before a certain time. As long as we do not place a motion of non-confidence before the house and as long as we do not approve any motions of non-confidence I think the Conservative party will be only too glad to keep power as long as they can do so.

The hon. member who preceded me said that they have 50 seats reserved for French-speaking Canadians. May I say that they can keep them if they want to. However, they will be filled by French-speaking Canadians but they will almost all be Liberals because we did not receive the representation we were expecting when the present cabinet was formed. As I said before, we make up almost one-third of the population. But what did we get in the present cabinet? We received representation to the extent of forming one-tenth of the cabinet, two out of twenty. Why is that? Is it because the Prime Minister has no confidence in the ten French Canadians from all over Canada sitting on the other side of the house? I do not know. However, the first thing he did was to honour one of them. He called on the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer). What post did he offer to him? He offered him the least he could offer to any man, namely the post of Solicitor General which is generally used as a stepping stone for somebody coming into the cabinet or as a post for a member of the Senate put into the cabinet as a representative of the government.

Mr. Balcer: You do not have to worry, you will never have such a post.

Mr. Caron: I am not worried about my hon. friend, but I believe he has a right to something better in view of those he represents. I believe that if he had done the right thing when he was offered such a job he would have either refused or resigned, in view of the fact that he was representing French Canadians of the province of Quebec. That is what he should have done. Today I want to give him a little bit of fatherly advice. He does not seem to realize the spot on which he has placed his French Canadian colleagues.

Mr. Balcer: You had 67 members from Quebec and you never did anything for 22 years.

Mr. Caron: During the Liberal regime there were always four to five and sometimes six in the cabinet representing the minority in this country. If my friend the hon. member for Three Rivers is satisfied with the situation as it is, may I say that he is easily satisfied. Certainly we are not satisfied.

Mr. Balcer: With six in the cabinet Quebec never received anything from you.

Mr. Caron: Even with ten, with the Conservative party in power I do not think we will receive much. At the present time we do not know what we are going to get. However, I know one thing, namely that we have not the representation that we should have.

An hon. Member: Just like an old maid.

Mr. Caron: Like an old maid, did you say? You should look in the mirror and you would see what an old maid looks like. Then they came along again and they increased the number from one to two and they gave a post to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Comtois); they gave him a portfolio. I agree that it is an extremely important one. However, they took a man who has spent all his life in agriculture, a man who possesses a smattering of knowledge on matters other than agriculture, and gave him the post of Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. What is the reason for that action? Is it because they were expecting that in a new post, dealing with a matter about which he does not know a great deal, he would be a flop? I do not know.

But one thing I do know is that the province of Quebec and the French Canadians of Canada are not satisfied with the way in which we have been treated and we shall not be satisfied until the Prime Minister changes his attitude toward us. I am wondering why he did not give us more representation. I am wondering whether it is because the hon. member for Three Rivers at the time of the Conservative convention worked against the Prime Minister in favour of the present Minister of Finance and was telling why he was working against him. At that time he was telling everyone in the province of Quebec that the French Canadians could not have confidence in the Prime Minister. That is what the hon. member for Three Rivers said before and during the convention.

Then when the choice was made, they walked out in protest against the action of the rest of Canada which made the decision. I do not know whether it is true that he was refused a better post in the cabinet because the Prime Minister believed he did not have the necessary qualifications. I do not know if it is because the Prime Minister, even after having been in the east for quite a while, has retained his opinions of the years of 1928 and 1930, when with the Anderson Conservative party he was working against the Gardiner government. I do not know why, but I know one thing, namely that we did not get the representation we had the right to get. We are going to claim that representation.

Even if he could not find in the province of Quebec all he wanted, there are available some English-speaking French Canadians from elsewhere. There is the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) whom I have known outside of this house. He is an able man and a good worker and is well qualified in many fields. He would have been a good representative of the French Canadians of the west. He was good enough to be called upon to be parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence. He would have been a very good man.

Then there is yourself, Mr. Speaker, you are a good representative of the province of Quebec. You have had the qualifications to become the president of committees. I believe you have the qualifications to become a minister in the present cabinet.

Until the Prime Minister has decided to change his views and give to the province of Quebec and the French Canadians in the rest of Canada the representation we deserve I think we will not have any confidence in him. I believe that the right-thinking population in Quebec and in the rest of the country, both from the French-speaking ranks and from the English-speaking ranks, will look at the Prime Minister as a man who is working against national unity in this country.

An hon. Member: Oh, bosh.

[Mr. Caron.]

Mr. Caron: That is what I think and that is what the people think.

An hon. Member: That is untrue.

Mr. Caron: Wait until the next election and you will see whether or not what I am saying now is true.

Mr. Churchill: You do not want another election.

Mr. Cardiff: If you make another speech like the one you have just finished you will not be back.

Mr. Caron: I heard a voice saying that I would not be back. If there is anyone who will not be back, it is the man who spoke just a while ago because I do not think he is here by anything else but plain charity.

Mr. Cardiff: Will you repeat that remark?

Mr. Chevrier: You heard him.

Mr. Caron: I said that from what I have known of the hon. member, if he is elected in this house it will be only as a result of plain charity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caron: If hon. members want to interrupt me I should like them to speak out in a way that I can understand them. Otherwise it is difficult for me to answer them. Did an hon. member want to put any questions?

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Caron: Now that I have said what I wanted to say about the representation of French Canadians in the government, I want to go to something else. There is an important problem as between the city of Hull and the city of Ottawa. The city of Ottawa, being the seat of the national capital, I really believe that the government should look forward to developing it in the way in which it has been developed, but a little bit faster.

Mr. Balcer: How old is the problem?

Mr. Caron: The problem is much older than the hon. member who has spoken. But something has to be done. He, for one thing, is a good friend of Mr. Duplessis and I wonder if he could do something for the national capital and for the city of Hull. For a long time the former minister of public works (Mr. Winters) had been trying to secure the approval of Toronto and Quebec in order that a new bridge might be built as an alternative to the Alexandra bridge. The government in Toronto answered by sending experts to study the matter in order to ascertain what was possible. They made some proposals which were not acceptable at the time, but they did make proposals and that is something. But the government at Quebec consistently refused to send anybody to study the matter, or to see whether anything could be done. The only answer Mr. Duplessis gave in Quebec was: Ottawa is the national capital, let the federal government build the bridge itself.

Mr. Speaker, it has been the practice in such matters for the cost of construction to be borne one-third by the federal government and one-third by each of the two provinces concerned, the approaches being the responsibility of the two municipalities. We have seen the minister of public works in the former government, and the present Minister of Public Works giving consideration to what could be done in the matter. There has been an acknowledgment by the provincial government in Toronto. What we need at the present time is the help of the Duplessis government. The Duplessis government did not want to speak with the Liberal government, but now that there is a Conservative government in power I think it should be very easy to obtain co-operation, and I suggest the hon. member for Three Rivers should speak to his friend Mr. Duplessis about the matter. Whether a new bridge comes from the Conservative party or the Liberal party the population will be equally glad to have it. If any hon. member had to cross from the city of Hull to Ottawa or from Ottawa to Hull at five o'clock in the afternoon he would find that under present conditions it takes between three-quarters of an hour and an hour and a quarter.

This is an undertaking that neither Ottawa nor Hull can carry out on their own; it is too expensive for municipal consideration, and can be done only by governments which have powers of taxation. I hope the hon. member for Three Rivers will look into the matter together with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works to see whether something can be done during the short time they will be in office.

Mr. Balcer: Is that the new Liberal way, to insult, and afterwards come to ask for favours?

Mr. Caron: There is no insult. The hon. member, who is a lawyer should know the difference between a claim of right and an insult; if he does not, he should not be a lawyer at all. There is another thing—

Mr. Hodgson: I don't think the hon. member's judgment amounts to much.

Mr. Caron: I don't know that it amounts to much in the eyes of the Conservative party, but I think it does among the population which elected me.

Mr. Speaker, there is another question which I want to bring before the house. For over 50 years up to 1953 a succession of ministers of public works have assisted the municipalities in building protection walls. After 1953 the Department of Public Works decided that since most of the rivers were no longer navigated the federal government had nothing to do with the problem. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, under the British North America Act the waters spoken of are not "all navigated waters" but "all navigable waters"; whether they are navigated or not, if they are navigable they are the responsibility of the federal government. As I said, up to 1953, all the ministers, Liberal or Conservative, helped to build some of these protection walls. A while ago I asked in this house whether it was the intention of the present Minister of Public Works to continue this kind of work. He answered me in the same way as I was answered by the previous holder of his office.

I contend that either it is the responsibility of the federal government, because it is navigable water, or it is the responsibility of the provincial government because the bed of the river is the property of the province. We have been trying to reach an understanding about this with both the provincial government and the federal government. I know some cases where a river has cut into farmers' land for a distance up to 200 feet. The farmers are not responsible for that, and somebody should take the responsibility. If the present Minister of Public Works wishes to accept the view that "navigable" and "navigated" mean the same thing, I hope he will bring the question forward at the next dominion-provincial conference so that we may discuss once and for all where the responsibility in this matter lies. If the matter cannot be determined there, then let the matter be brought up before the supreme court so that everyone may know for certain to whom they must go to find a responsible body to look after this matter. It is a pressing problem and one which I hope the present government will consider.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude on a Canadian note. Some newspapers have been conducting quite a campaign suggesting that the next governor general should be the Queen Mother or another member of the royal family. I want it to be very clear that I have all the admiration for the royal family that any Canadian should have for that family. Three years ago at the end of 1954 when I was mayor of the city of Hull we had the honour to receive the Queen Mother, and at that time I said a few words. I would like to take advantage of the opportunity of reading what I said at that time just to prove that though I intend to speak on this matter it is not because I have anything against the royal family but because I only wish that a real Canadian should continue to be governor general of Canada. At that time I said this, speaking in French:

(Translation):

The city of Hull is very glad that Your Majesty thought it proper to pay us a visit on the occasion of your trip to the capital. We appreciate all the honour which this means to our city as well as to our province, and we wish to thank you.

It would be superfluous to welcome you, since our gracious Sovereign, being Queen of Canada, is everywhere at home, and the same is true for the Queen Mother.

We should like, however, to express our joy in having you here among us; I am voicing now, not only my personal feelings and those of the aldermen, but those of the whole people of Hull.

From time immemorial, alchemists have sought the philosopher's stone and the Fountain of Youth. If these men of science came back among us, "a miracle" would be their cry, if they could see, as we do, how intact, after 15 years—the date of your last visit to Canada—you have preserved your grace, your charms, your refinement, your enchanting smile which still continues to warm all hearts, your radiant beauty, and also how time seems to have suspended its course to keep you eternally young.

(Text):

As I said in French, we value highly the honour given to the city of Hull in having an official visit and I expressed the wish that she would have the kindness to tell Her Majesty the Queen of Canada that we all repeat again and again with great pride and sincerity the words of our national anthem, "God Save the Queen".

This is the way in which I dealt with the question at that time. With regard to having a representative of the royal family or anyone else from England as the next governor general of Canada I think this would be a step backward. For the past few years we have had as governor general a man who has been a perfect representative of the Queen. I do not think anyone could imply that the present governor general of Canada has not filled his high office with honour and distinction and I believe we will be able to find other Canadians to replace the present governor general when the time comes. Canada has attained its majority and, as some would say, we should not allow those who are more British than the British themselves to decide on this matter. Instead it should be one to be decided by Canadians for Canadians. I really believe Her Majesty the Queen would not consider it disrespectful to call upon her to name another representative from Canada as governor general. I hope the present government will look into the matter carefully before making a decision. In saying this I am convinced I am speaking for the majority of Canadians, that the next governor general should be, as is the case now, Canadian-born.

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this house I should first like to express my gratitude to those who have given me the opportunity to come here. I consider it a great privilege to have become a part of this most important institution, the Canadian parliament, and to belong to a group of people who have the responsibility of designing and instituting policies for the purpose of directing the affairs of this country in a proper and progressive manner.

Of course, since I came here I have noticed that some hon. members occasionally become rather noisy in going about their tasks, but I suppose this is permissible in a democracy. Her Majesty the Queen renewed the pledge that there shall be free speech. I hope during my term in this house I will be helpful, not in making noises but in doing something worthwhile, by conducting myself and directing my efforts in such a way that the result of my work shall be of the greatest good to the greatest number, and especially to those who have been neglected and forgotten and who are now suffering from privation and poverty in the midst of plenty.

The fact that I am somewhat acquainted with the surroundings on parliament hill should be of some assistance to me in performing my duties. I have been here on various occasions with farm delegations presenting briefs to the government and pointing out and explaining the gradual but constant process of deterioration that has taken place in the agricultural industry during the years and which since 1951 has gone from bad to worse.

I venture to think I have made some valuable acquaintances down here while on these missions, perhaps even some friends who will support me. I can think of one in particular, the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), who at that time was minister of agriculture but who is now sitting with me in Her Majesty's loyal opposition to which is assigned the task of expressing the wishes of the people and impressing the government with the need of taking the necessary action to implement those wishes. I believe I have friends all over especially in my own province. By the way, I have enemies too.

When I left the farm union movement at the beginning of this year the Winnipeg Tribune published an editorial and declared that I am the most beloved and most hated man in Manitoba. Being a fairly young man it is natural that I should have both friends and enemies because being without enemies is such a privileged position in life that it is perhaps enjoyed only by the very old.

For example, there is the case of the gentleman who celebrated his 100th birthday. It was a great occasion and even the press became interested in this fortunate man who lived to such a ripe age. As the reporters interviewed him at one point he said, "Gentlemen I am 100 years of age and I am proud to say I haven't an enemy on earth". The reporters looked at him rather curiously and one of them said, "That is a beautiful thought, sir". "Yep", said the old man, "the last one died about a year ago."

Well, as I said, I still have enemies and sometimes I even have trouble with my friends. For instance, I would single out the previous minister of agriculture. For years we have tried to impress upon him and his colleagues the need of doing something to alleviate the desperate conditions in agriculture which are slowly but surely spreading to other sections of the economy and will have far-reaching ill effects on the whole economy if nothing is done, but it was to no avail. I regret to say that most of our pleas fell on the deaf ears of the former government. Again and again we had to return home empty handed in spite of the fact that we brought with us volumes of proof of the need of agriculture, and we had to sit and watch the plight of our industry and pray that the day of judgment might come soon.

Mr. Argue: It came, all right.

Mr. Schulz: Yes, it finally did come.

An hon. Member: And how!

Mr. Schulz: The 10th of June was a great day not only for Canada but for democracy as a whole.

Mr. Pickersgill: We hope you like your friends.

Mr. Schulz: Those who during their long years of office had become detached from reality to the point where they refused to listen to the truth have been cast into darkness and transformed into shadows of the past. I do hope they will be long shadows and that they will reach right across the floor of this house so that the ministers on the government side will always have a chance to look up and recognize them as a symbol of the pride that goes before a fall.

In certain sections of the country they do not even exist as shadows any more. This is proven by the fact that the group to which I belong is today the greatest political party in the four western provinces taken as a whole, and even in Ontario our vote has increased by 26 per cent and in Quebec by 29 per cent. I do know, of course, that we are not the government yet but we are the party of the future because the good book says that John the Baptist was not selected by providence to save the world; he was there only to prepare the way for the one who came after. With the name of the government leader being the same as the apostle I just mentioned there could be some resemblance and they do claim that history always repeats itself.

In the circumstances I am glad we have a new government no matter by what name they are known. It was high time for a change. If the speech from the throne read by Her Majesty the Queen means what it says,—and I say this advisedly—then we must give credit to this government for at least recognizing one part of our problem, which is more than the previous government ever did. As a matter of fact, even at the very last minute they did not admit the problem existed.

We appreciate the fact that the present government is prepared to do something especially for the senior citizens of this country by increasing their pensions and those of others who are worthy of the same treatment. It was they who made this country what it is. They worked for it in peacetime and they fought for it in wartime and they deserve real consideration.

Advance payments on grain which farmers cannot sell, even though they can be regarded only as a stop-gap measure, are most important. During the last two days before I left home I made a trip around the constituency I have the honour to represent and I visited 10 delivery points trying to find out how many farmers have not delivered any grain in the new crop year.

Here is what I found. The percentage figures are as follows: Oak Bank, 50 per cent; Whitemouth, 50 per cent; Lac du Bonnet, 50 per cent; Beausejour, 65 per cent; Hazelridge, 65 per cent; Alma, 65 per cent; Cloverleaf, 75 per cent; Tyndall, 75 per cent; Stead, 75 per cent; St. Owens, 90 per cent. These people have not sold one single bushel of grain, even though we have progressed nine weeks into the new crop year. I put these percentages on the record mainly for the benefit of those hon. members who come from industrial centres and no doubt shall have difficulty in understanding our problem out there. This problem was often brought before the previous government.

Just about this time last year, as chairman of the interprovincial farm union council I sent a memorandum to the former prime minister on this particular problem. Do you know what happened? He did not even find it worth answering. This is what I received from his secretary:

> Mr. St. Laurent wishes me to say that he is fully aware of the situation with respect to the marketing of the grain crop in the west and that he cannot but regard many of the assertions in your memorandum as exaggerated.

Mr. Argue: He found out.

Mr. Schulz: To make it still more clear, I have decided to reveal the contents of a letter I received last week from a Manitoba farmer who asked me to use it in any way I saw fit in the hope that it will help. He states that the size of his farm is 709 acres, with 695 under cultivation. He goes on to give the income of this farm in the last five years. The figures are as follows: In 1952, a loss of $1,376.02; in 1953, a net income of $1,197.22; in 1954, a loss of $1,848.64; in 1955, a loss of $1,743.06; and in 1956, a net income of $674.89. He states that anyone wishing to challenge these figures may check them with the income tax department. Since this covers an average period of five years, he claims it was checked and counterchecked by the department.

This should complete the picture of the perplexing dilemma of an industry which for years has been subjected to a cost-price squeeze unprecedented in history and mercilessly driven to the bottom of the economic ladder. How far the destructive process has progressed is proven by a letter this farmer received from a mortgage company and which he enclosed. The letter is dated September 17, 1957, and is from the Great West Life Assurance Company. It is addressed to Mr. P. A. Schick, re account No. M. 42824. The contents of the letter are as follows:

> Some time ago we wrote you regarding the outstanding arrears on this mortgage and you were in touch with us saying that you could not draw any grain out, but that you had been to see the wheat board about the situation.
> Has anything developed since that time? As you know, these arrears are becoming acute and we cannot continue indefinitely without something more than just interest.

They are not even satisfied with interest. I think they are lucky to get that. Then they go on to say:

> If some definite arrangement has not been made by November 1, 1957, regarding a substantial payment, we might be forced to take other steps to collect.

This is the bankrupt position of Canada's basic industry in the midst of prosperity. This is not an isolated case; this is general. Nobody who knows anything about agriculture will dare deny it. We are desperate and helpless under the misfortune of several abundant crops. You can understand the situation in its full dimensions only when you see it or, more accurately, feel it and immerse yourself in it. These people are driven from their homes like beggars. They are losing their homes by the thousands and are driven to seek work in industry where there is no room any more.

The big question now is: What will this government do about it? I suggest that first of all the government should sell wheat. I mean sell it by any possible means. To do that the old fashioned, outworn Liberal marketing policy must be discarded because this is what has driven us into the mess. But from what has transpired since the government took office it would seem that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and the government as a whole are not yet ready to collect their wits and dig in. Speaking at Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, on the 19th of April, and reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of April 20, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made this statement:

> The United States is actively trying to sell their agricultural products all the world over, and have been doing so for years. Canada has done nothing.

How much has been done since the government took office? I cannot see anything unless it is some place under cover. If it is, then I hope the government will bring it out soon because the farmers are getting desperate.

The next question is prices. This I think is our biggest problem. Rising costs created by inflation are the core of most of the troubles facing farmers and labour alike. In the last four years the farmers got it in the neck. I predict that in the next four labour will be hit. Living costs are climbing rapidly while the wheels of industry are gradually slowing down. As an example I want to mention the Manitoba Pulp and Paper mills at Pine Falls. For years this mill has been operating on a 7-day week. Now it is on a 5-day week and the rumour is that it will soon go on a 4-day week. The mill at Canora is already operating on a 4-day week.

I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that the government has proven in the speech from the throne that it is not ready to lift its eyes and look at our most fundamental problem, that of inflation. President Eisenhower, when speaking to the twelfth annual meeting of the international monetary fund, said:

> The phenomenon of inflation must be curtailed before it spins into a depression.

What is our Prime Minister saying? He and his ministers did not even find this question important enough to mention it in the throne speech.

The assurance given in the speech from the throne that the government would introduce measures to stabilize farm prices in order to assure farmers a fair share of the national income will, of course, go a long way, if it means what it says or if it means what the Prime Minister said in the election campaign. Here is what he said at Shellbrook on the 19th of April as reported in the Tribune of the 20th of April:

I want to see the farmer protected. The parity we want to introduce would bring a level between prices and costs.

If this is true then I will not only give the government credit but will congratulate them on doing something worth while. But there is one thing I want to point out. No halfway measures will be good enough at this time. Millions and millions of dollars will have to be pumped into the bloodstream of this sick and dying industry to revive it, and there can be no more delay.

In the brief presented to the government by the interprovincial farm union council in August of this year it was clearly pointed out that in the last 18 months farm costs have increased by 16.7 per cent while at the same time the price of wheat went down by 23 cents a bushel. How can any farmer live in the face of these figures? Just last week it was pointed out in the Toronto Telegram that farm cash income turned sharply down in the second quarter of this year.

To stop this there must be prompt and immediate action. The dwindling buying power on the farm is today affecting not only every business establishment in every rural community but the whole business life of the country. Slowly but surely it is dragging down the entire economy.

The government was elected for the purpose of stopping this and to keep the economy on an even keel. It cannot be done by doing just something. There must be full-scale and purposeful action. It must be everything that is humanly possible, and we know what is humanly possible when the almost unlimited resources of this great, rich and wonderful country are put into action by a government. We have learned that during the war. If this is not done, then there is one thing that is certain in my mind and that is, this time there will not be any 22 years of grace.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): It is with deep humility that I rise for the first time to bring to the attention of this house a problem that is of grave concern, not only to my constituents but to all the people of Nova Scotia. May I first express the gratitude of the people of my constituency to this government for the deep concern and prompt action shown by the bringing forth of the $100,000 subvention covering coal from the No. 2 colliery in Springhill. This prompt action prevented what could have been an economic tragedy for 7,000 people in the town of Springhill who are completely dependent upon coal mined from this pit. Let me say further that this $100,000 subvention was not a solution but it was an action which provided the time for the finding of a solution to this problem. The failure to take such action could very easily have turned this progressive community into a ghost town. When I say that the government action was of a temporary nature, I mean just that. This action provided the time necessary for the finding of a solution.

It is my humble opinion that a coal marketing board is the solution to the ills that have befallen the coal industry of Nova Scotia. In Canada we have the Canadian wheat board whose principal job is the marketing of western wheat. As a result of the actions of this board we exported wheat to the tune of $338,216,000 in 1955 and $567,907,000 in 1953. This is a wonderful thing for Canada. We need this money coming into the country. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, is it not unfortunate that in 1955 we were forced to watch $74,453,000, and in 1953, $94,680,000 leave Canada for the United States in payment for bituminous coal, while in the province of Nova Scotia we saw coal mines being closed, whole areas in a depressed state, which were sitting upon millions of tons of the same type of bituminous coal as we imported from the United States. We imported greater quantities of coal than were mined in this country. In 1956 we mined 15,100,000 tons of bituminous coal and imported 19 million tons.

In 1946 a royal commission on coal recommended that the mines of Nova Scotia be mechanized in order to cut production costs. A further study of the coal situation was made by the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. This study indicated that the mechanization has reduced production costs but unfortunately other problems have arisen and are apparent today. With mechanization has come increased production and the owners of the coal mines, through necessity, have had to either sell more coal in order to maintain employment at the mechanization level or to retain production at the pre-mechanization level and employ fewer men. I do not believe I need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, what has happened. Dosco indicated very clearly the road it would take in both Cumberland and Pictou counties. If the commission data is correct, then by 1960, 4,000 miners in Nova Scotia will be thrown out of work and 40,000 people directly affected.

A coal marketing board would do three things. It would keep the mines at full production, thereby lowering production costs still further. It would market the coal, both in Canada and overseas, thereby stopping large sums of money from leaving Canada and bringing much needed money into Canada. This board could also make a close study of the prospects of the gasification of coal, and if feasible, establish such plants. It is my humble opinion that many of the problems facing our coal mining communities would be solved with the establishment of these plants. We would then have not only a use for our coal but the basis for the establishment of industries in communities now entirely dependent on coal.

May I turn now to the speech from the throne, and say how happy I am, as a member from the Atlantic provinces, to realize that at long last a federal government has felt that this area deserved something besides unfilled promises. We in the maritimes have had a great many promises since 1867. We have received promises in every election campaign that has been held, but let me tell you very few have ever been fulfilled. It was very gratifying to a young man from the east, like myself, to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) refer to the maritimes as "these provinces by the sea". It is wonderful to even hear these promises mentioned in the speech from the throne, and it is indeed gratifying to know that some of the things that were studied and pooh-poohed by the former government have come to be realities for the people of these provinces. This represents a new deal for the east. May I say that as a result of this new deal there is a possibility of a reappraisal of a project which in 1867 stood fourth on the list of public projects in Canada. I refer to the Chignecto canal. May I say that with the attention given the necessity for power in the east this Chignecto canal may now become a reality.

May I offer my sincere thanks to the government on behalf of the elder citizens, the blind, the disabled and the veterans. It is indeed gratifying to know that at long last their services have been recognized.

May I now refer to the speech made this morning by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart), who said that we in the maritimes could look forward to nothing except industries that were built on subsidies or dependent upon subventions. In the last house Nova Scotia was represented by only one Conservative, but let me say that today that province is represented by ten Conservatives.

[Mr. Coates.]

The reason for this change is the fact that the former members from Nova Scotia all had that same idea, namely the idea that we in the maritimes must look to subsidies and subventions. We are not looking for something for nothing. We are not looking for a handout. What we are looking for is recognition to be given, just a little bit of recognition that we have always desired and never received. We have it now and you will see the maritimes come forward and become a part of Canada the equal of Ontario and Quebec.

May I say further to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) that as a young man, I am indeed impressionable and that the speech he made last Friday, under the guise of Canadianism, was one of the worst speeches that any man could make in this house and contained the worst kind of tripe. It was made under the guise of Canadianism but in fact all he was doing was rabble rousing in the province of Quebec and trying to disunite this wonderful, great country of ours that can go so far if united.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with all the hon. members of the house in extending to the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Michener) my heartiest felicitations and warmest wishes on his appointment as Speaker of the House of Commons in this twenty-third parliament. Everyone realizes, I am quite sure, perhaps even more so than ever before, just how important, how difficult, and sometimes how ungrateful, is the role of Speaker. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is to be commended for the excellent choice he made in assigning the hon. member for St. Paul's to this extremely important and responsible position.

The position of Speaker in the house has been referred to on many occasions as the foundation and the cornerstone of our democratic form of government, and the Speaker has been referred to as the guardian of the dignity and the prestige of this venerable house. Although I agree with both those statements, Mr. Speaker, I feel that they reveal only part of the true picture. In practice the dignity and the prestige of the House of Commons rests principally on the sincerity, the good will and the profound sense of responsibility of each member who has the honour of representing a section of the Canadian people in the House of Commons. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the Speaker alone cannot preserve the dignity, the prestige and the effectiveness of this house unless all the members are willing to recognize and to share that responsibility with him.

One of the essential facts which apparently is forgotten sometimes in this house is that the purpose of the house is to discuss and to transact the nation's business in the best interests of the people of Canada and that the House of Commons is not and should not be used as a political platform or stage to further the interests of any one political party by putting on displays on trumped-up or non-existing issues which, of course, always get a good deal of publicity but whose aim is not to enlighten but rather to confuse public opinion. It seems to me that the real problems that face Canada today, whether in the national field or in the wider international sphere, are sufficiently important and sufficiently complicated without confusing them further with small-time political strategies which have never solved a problem in the past but which have been known to destroy the very essence of good and responsible government.

One must read a little bit of history or even again keep in tune with current events in the world today in order to realize that it is actually frightening to see how conveniently there can be compromise for the sake of expedience, how easily liberty can degenerate into licence and how narrow a margin there is between democracy and anarchy. One of the basic responsibilities of your high office, Mr. Speaker, and that of each member of the house, is to assure Canadians of a sound and responsible form of government whose only aim is to serve the best interests of the Canadian people and not those of any one political party. For this reason may I assure you—and I am sure I am speaking for all members on the Liberal side of the house—that, while expressing our point of view as forcibly and as energetically as we can we will do all we can to co-operate with you in the exercise of your functions in your very difficult position and that under no practical considerations, whether political or otherwise, will we act in such a way as to undermine the prestige of the Speaker or jeopardize the dignity of this house.

I should also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) on the excellent manner in which he moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Of course, I am not expected to agree with all of what the hon. member said but at least I appreciate the fine manner in which he expressed himself. I hope we shall have the opportunity of hearing him often taking part in debates in the house.

(Translation):

I also want to commend the hon. member for Bonaventure for so ably seconding the motion on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I know that in this house, with its sometimes rather stiff atmosphere, it is somewhat difficult to give a first speech to one's own liking, but I can assure the hon. member that he carried his task out very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I also want to congratulate you on your appointment to this very responsible post. I am satisfied that you will carry out your responsibilities with your well-known dignity and talent.

(Text):

Although it is perhaps an established custom in the house to congratulate a newly elected prime minister and the members of his government, I cannot help feeling that it is premature at this time to offer congratulations. As a matter of fact, I would be ill at ease in doing so. Although I have great respect, esteem and even friendship for the Prime Minister and for the members of the government, I am afraid I disagree completely with the line of argument and the tactics used by the Progressive Conservative party in the last electoral campaign in order to win the election. Nor am I convinced that if the Prime Minister were to put into effect all the promises he has made the result would necessarily be a more stable economy or for the general welfare of the Canadian people. Before offering my congratulations I prefer to wait for the result of the government's legislation as reflected in the general economy and welfare of the country.

If the far-reaching and popular-sounding program of the government is successful I shall gladly take my hat off to the government and extend my congratulations. If, however, the Conservative program is not put into execution in a reasonable time or if the results of the program are not successful I shall be confirmed in my present opinion that the speeches and the promises made by the Progressive Conservatives were not made for the general welfare of the Canadian people but for the exclusive welfare of the Progressive Conservative party.

I do not think I will be surprising anyone who has been following politics within the past few years when I say that the plight of the Conservative party was for a long time the cause of great anxiety for many Canadians. The Conservatives had no real political policy or platform upon which they could campaign, and even today they are administering Canada with Liberal policies.

As members of the loyal opposition they offered no real alternative, no real solution to the pressing problems which faced Canada in the last parliament and, if you will recall,

Mr. Speaker, in the previous parliament they could not find an issue on which to fight an election. So during the last parliament they decided in conjunction with other political parties to create an issue and staged the filibuster on the Emergency Powers Act. And they found that by doing theatricals they secured a great deal more publicity than they could have hoped to gain from their speeches.

In consequence, they were good enough to inform the Liberal government in the following year that on the Trans-Canada pipe line they intended to stage a filibuster such as the house had never previously seen, and they did just that. In the course of the 16 days during which they could have discussed the bill intelligently they in fact impeded discussion on the bill by—

An hon. Member: By closure.

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, by closure. Closure was applied and, if hon. members will recall, the purpose of the opposition at that time was not to discuss the pipe line bill but to stop it and to block it. I agree that the minority in this house has rights, but then so has the majority and if it should come to pass in this house that legislation considered by the majority to be in the interests of the country can be effectively blocked by the minority, then there will no longer be democracy in this chamber.

Even though closure would most likely be applied to us as members of the opposition, if the Prime Minister goes through with the promise he has made to strike the procedure of closure from the rule books he will be opening a wide door to the abuse of the rules and regulations of this house. It will cripple parliament and pave the way for anarchy and on his head will fall the responsibility.

During those black days of the pipe line debate, apart from the speeches and apart from the loud words, apart from the insults and the attacks which were made, there was also a great deal of theatricals. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), with all the pomp and indignation of an exaggerated Shakespearean actor, stalked from the house, according to the script, and on his desk flew a little Union Jack to mark the spot where the supposed hero was supposed to have fallen a victim of an allegedly tyrannical Speaker.

Then, shortly afterwards, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), who is considered to be a bright young man, saw the tremendous publicity potential there was in being a victim of parliament, and not wishing to be outdone by his rival in the race for leadership of the Progressive Conservative party decided he was going to do things right. So before anything else he invited the members of the press gallery, the photographers, the television men to be in the hall outside the chamber with full lights blazing, so that they would not miss the hon. member for Kamloops as he came marching out of the house.

Some people may consider that to be pretty shrewd politics, Mr. Speaker, but I maintain it is not only unworthy of parliament but is dangerous. The hon. members who were the principal actors in this episode have been paying a great deal of lip service to the rights and prestige of this house. Their very acts not only contradict their words but also prove that they are willing to jeopardize the dignity of this house in order to achieve their aim.

Of course, the relative success of these shenanigans and political histrionics gained for the Conservatives the keynote of their entire political program, the keynote, in fact, of their entire campaign. That program may be summarized very simply: Sensationalism rather than soundness; fanfare rather than facts, and sophistication rather than solutions to national or international problems, with the result that Canada is now endowed with the greatest grandstand government of its history.

Hon. members opposite have been trying to make a very important point from the fact that the opposition will not move a want of confidence motion. Some of us regret that members of the government do not appreciate that the opposition is not only willing but actually anxious to have the government put down in legislative form this fine political manifesto it has been talking about. Of course, there are many reasons why the opposition should not move a motion of no confidence in the government and I daresay that any intelligent political observer knows those reasons. The reason I prefer—the reason I think is closest to the truth—is this: Canada and the Canadian people have been endowed with a generous and well-developed sense of humour and on June 10 they called the present government's bluff. Now we are all waiting to see how long the Conservative government can ride its bicycle with no hands.

Although the Conservative promises may have made very interesting speeches at the election, members of the government will soon find out that words are not enough and that the Canadian people have been accustomed in the past to expect from the government effective action and successful results. We shall have the opportunity of discussing in great detail all the aspects of the government's program and activities during the months to come.

I would like to mention at least one of the activities which took place during the past few weeks and that, of course, was the commonwealth finance ministers conference at Mont Tremblant on which the Progressive Conservative hopes were so firmly fixed as a way of solving the very real problem of an unfavourable balance of trade with the United States. I can say that we were all very happy that the conference took place in Canada, and that we could be hosts to the finance ministers of the different countries of the commonwealth in the beautiful Canadian setting of Mont Tremblant. However, I have some very serious doubts as to whether we are any closer to a solution to this question of our unfavourable trade balance with the United States than we were before; in fact, I have the distinct feeling that we are further away from a solution, and it seems to me that it would have been perhaps much more successful, and certainly much more enjoyable as a get-together, if there had been no conference at all, and if the ministers had just sat around and had tea.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or skied.

Mr. Cardin: The United Kingdom proposal of establishing a free trade area with Canada came as somewhat of a shock, not only to the Canadian people but to the Minister of Finance as well. As a matter of fact I doubt very much if he has as yet completely recovered from that shock. The United Kingdom proposal of course certainly pushed the Prime Minister's rather striking suggestion of diverting 15 per cent of our trade from the United States to the United Kingdom right out of the limelight and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it is just as well that it is so.

It is also perhaps fortunate that the discussion at Mont Tremblant centred around the United Kingdom proposal rather than around the Canadian proposal because now it gives the Prime Minister the opportunity of deciding exactly how he is going to go about diverting the 15 per cent of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom without becoming dictatorial about it and without having to subsidize either directly or indirectly the importers for the disparity in prices, in standardization differences, in costs of production, etc.

There is also no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the declaration of Lord Thorneycroft, who himself announced to the Canadian people the United Kingdom proposal of establishing a free trade area with Canada, profoundly embarrassed our Minister of Finance. As a matter of fact the minister felt he had to give some explanation of his eloquent silence following Lord Thorneycroft's press release and more particularly, I think, after the minister had read some of the comments and opinions of our leading producers and workers. So, rather sheepishly, the minister made a statement which was reported by Mr. Blakely in the Montreal Gazette on October 10. Mr. Blakely refers to his interview with the Minister of Finance on the talks held at Mont Tremblant and the minister is quoted as saying:

> In these talks we have, of course, been mindful at all times of the interests of the Canadian producers in the Canadian market . . . I think this (free trade) proposal has been somewhat misunderstood in some quarters . . . It will thus be seen that the interests of Canadian producers have not been overlooked and we have no intention of doing anything to prejudice the interest of our own Canadian producers and workmen.

I should certainly hope that the Minister of Finance of Canada would not intentionally do anything that might prejudice the interests of the workers and producers of Canada; and what interests could the minister have in mind other than those of the Canadian producers, the Canadian workers and the general Canadian economy? Surely the Minister of Finance would not jeopardize the economy of Canada to save the face of the Conservative party.

Mr. Stick: I would not trust him too far.

Mr. Cardin: There is one last subject about which I feel very strongly and which I wish to bring to the attention of the house; it concerns national unity. The fathers of Confederation realized very early that no province could achieve the full potential of its natural resources and attain a stable economy by itself. Only through effective co-operation with the interdependent economies of the other provinces could the maximum of prosperity be realized by the provinces individually and collectively.

In spite of the fact that some of the wealthier provinces now feel more economically independent and more financially powerful than in 1867, the situation is still exactly the same today. Not one province could afford to be cut off from the economic and social advantages given to it by the British North America Act. On the other hand each province has contributed in making Canada what it is, a relatively prosperous country with an enviable future; but it will be a truly great country only if it is united. It must be united not only constitutionally but morally with a maximum of understanding, co-operation, patriotism, loyalty and kinship among Canadians of all provinces.

The greatest statesmen in our short history have striven to achieve this aim and indeed I am proud to state without fear of contradiction that one of the greatest champions of national unity has been and continues to be the leader of my party.

National unity is not only a possible goal but it is one which has been achieved to a very great sense during the last quarter century. There is no longer any real difference in the minds and hearts of true Canadians no matter what their ethnic origin may be. All have the same aspirations, all have the same patriotism and loyalty for Canada and for Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. There are no second-class citizens in our country; all have equal rights and these are acknowledged and respected by all true Canadians.

The Prime Minister is certainly aware of all this and yet while paying lip service to national unity and pretending to be the great defender of human rights he did not hesitate for one moment for political purposes to play the nine provinces of Canada against the province of Quebec on grounds that had nothing to do with public administration. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister once again placed the interests of the Progressive Conservative party before the general interests and welfare of all Canadians.

Because of the great breadth of our country; because of its history, its economic, geographic and economic differences; because of its rapid industrial expansion which is not felt equally in all provinces, there are bound to be different points of view, different problems and different interests in the various areas of Canada. But none of these need be or are in fact obstacles to national unity as Her Majesty the Queen so eloquently stated in her talk to the Canadian people just about a week ago. In those very true words which the Queen spoke to the Canadian people there was more sound common sense than we have heard from members of the government for a very long time.

Canadians on the west coast are anxious to protect their salmon industry. In Alberta the problem is to exploit natural gas and oil as effectively as possible. In the prairie provinces the disposal of wheat is the major problem. The chief concern of the industrial provinces today is to protect both the producers and the workers. In the maritimes the problem is to protect the coal industry.

Mr. MacInnis: We will speak about the coal industry ourselves.

Mr. Cardin: I beg your pardon?

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. MacInnis: There are enough of us here from the maritimes to take care of a discussion of the problems of the coal industry. You stay in your own province.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, that is unity for you.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): No interference in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I think we have just had a classic example of the Progressive Conservative party's broad national outlook.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, these are the problems that face the people in the different provinces of Canada. In Quebec we wish to protect our culture and our rights, to worship as we see fit without being considered as different or apart from any other Canadian. It seems to me that that is not so much to ask. Just as it is in the interests of all Canadians, from an economic point of view, to see to it that the interests, the varied interests, of the various parts of Canada are protected and our respective problems solved, so too is it in the interests of all Canadians, from a democratic and from a human rights point of view, to respect and to protect the fundamental rights and freedom of culture, language and worship, not only of Canadians living in Quebec but of all minority groups living in Canada. Because, Mr. Speaker, without the former you cannot achieve economic stability in our country and without the latter we have not even got a real democracy in Canada. As I say, Mr. Speaker, anyone who disregards these fundamental principles and who is willing to jeopardize national unity for the sake of political advantage is rendering a very poor service indeed to Canada and to Canadians. I may say, also, Mr. Speaker, that in the long run he is not aiding but he is destroying his own political party.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help referring briefly to the visit to Canada of Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and of her worthy consort His Royal Highness Prince Philip. For the first time in the history of this country, the opening of parliament was presided over by the gracious Queen of Canada in person.

The opportunity afforded us, on this memorable occasion, of greeting the Queen, in whose person the governmental authority finds such a worthy representative, has been a very great honour for Canada. I am convinced that, throughout the various forms which our greetings took during those days, Her Majesty was conscious not only of the loyalty of her Canadian people but also of their affection and of the love they were so anxious to show.

I was extremely gratified to be able to represent my constituents at those imposing ceremonies. As the member for Richelieu-Vercheres, I was extremely honoured to have been presented to her Gracious Majesty and I will cherish that memory as long as I live.

As I closely followed the traditional procedures of the opening of parliament and as I observed the innate dignity of the young Queen of Canada, I could not but feel once more that a tradition with its time-honoured splendours is an unappreciable source of cohesion, of strength, of legitimate national pride, of patriotism and of respect for constituted governmental authority.

As she spoke to the Canadian people, a week ago, Her Majesty showed herself to be really the Queen of Canada and of all Canadians.

The eloquent words of our sovereign have, to my mind, been another important step towards that national unity which strengthens the very real existence of this Canadian nation of ours, whose first principle is a deep respect for the culture, traditions and faith of every citizen of this country.

(Text):

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to extend to you my congratulations on being chosen as the first commoner. I would like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne who used words to the effect that the terror one has in making his maiden speech reduces itself to a straight fear when one rises to speak. I sympathize with him. I can assure him today that he has a lot of company in this house.

I also wish to congratulate the seconder, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault). I shall also take the opportunity at this time to thank the people of the Vegreville constituency for the privilege and the honour they have bestowed upon me for making it possible for me to rise in this house to present their problems and perhaps offer possible solutions.

I am told the tradition has been that a new member usually goes to considerable length in his first speech to describe his constituency. I will try to do this to a lesser degree. The problems that the people are faced with are of prime importance and should be brought to the attention of this house for immediate remedial action. At this time I shall only bring in enough history and statistics so that one may understand more clearly the problems of my constituents and their possible solution and also so that he may be able to see more clearly the errors, the lack of appreciation on the part of our former government and the injustices that some of those people have received.

The Vegreville constituency is an agricultural area. Its history is new. In the same way that Canada is a young nation among nations the history of the Vegreville constituency is young as compared with that of other parts of Canada. Before 1890 very few white people knew its terrain or very much about it. There was the odd cattle ranch in the area that grew grass but, however, the biggest portion was very heavily wooded with timber and bush and was of no commercial value. To this wilderness came the first settler. In many instances it was necessary to cut some of the bush to make room for a little eight by ten shack because the only clearing was a slough or a bog. There were no roads or bridges nor any of the modern tools or equipment that one would consider an absolute necessity before going into a wilderness today.

The first settlers were of Anglo-Saxon origin, the English, the Scots, the Irish; the hardy people first settled in the Beaver lake area and as more of them came in, they settled in the Vegreville, Lamont, Manville, Andrew, Mindburn areas. The odd one, of course, took scattered holdings throughout. We then had a few French and German settlers arrive in the territory. They took up holdings not too far away from those who were already settled.

When the immigration policies of this country were changed to encourage more settlement and development in the new territories there was an influx of immigrants mostly from the central European countries which began about 1897. The Ukrainian people came in, the Polish people and, of course, more German people. Practically every European country was represented. The first Ukrainian settler who came to this country, Mr. Wasyl Elenik, who lived practically all his life since coming to this country in the Vegreville constituency is today buried in a small village that I call my home town of Chipman.

Today about 80 per cent of the people are of Ukrainian origin, of which I am also a descendant. We have never had any integration problems. There appears to be an unwritten law that is followed by practically all the people, a law that says more or less: I am proud of my nationality, I am proud of my church but I honour and highly respect the other man's nationality and the other man's church.

Perhaps with the conditions under which they first began they could not afford otherwise. Today they are all proud to be Canadians, proud of the fact that they can enjoy the freedom and the privileges of this country, proud also of the fact that they went into a wilderness not too long ago and within their own lifetime have developed that wilderness into an area that is as fine an agricultural area as we have in this country.

It was not an easy task. They had no capital and in many cases they had little more than a strong back and a couple of strong arms. The process was slow and tedious. Their health today is perhaps not what it would have been had they chosen an easier life, but then again this country might not have been as prosperous as it is today had they decided to do so. This does not apply only to the pioneers and senior citizens of Vegreville constituency but also applies to a greater or lesser degree to all our senior citizens. If it were not for their hard work, their courage, their clear thinking we might be doing business today in the terms in which this country was doing business at the turn of the century instead of having a gross national product of over $30 billion.

It is, therefore, only fitting and proper that our government should give our senior citizens the consideration they are entitled to. When the government brings before the house its proposed legislation on old age pensions we trust that the amount will be at least $60 per month per person and that where there is need there should be an additional $20 if it is matched by the provinces.

In 1949 when old age pensions were raised to $40 a month our gross national product was approximately $16½ billion. Today it is over $30 billion. It would be no more difficult for the government to pay $60 today than it was to pay $40 per month in 1949. Our senior citizens should not live in want or anxiety.

The Vegreville constituency is an agricultural area. In it I believe we have as fine and as productive land as there is in the country, bar none. With the exception of the brown soils found in the southern part of the province, we have every other type of soil found in the province, all of different productive capacities. This, coupled with the fact that most of the holdings are small, makes it urgent that government policies be more flexible to meet and face conditions as they actually are, rather than to formulate policies that they believe or think should exist under these conditions.

We do not have the really large farms that we find in the southern part of the province or in Saskatchewan, but what we call the larger farmers in my constituency, are faced with problems very similar to those faced by the large farmers of southern Alberta and Saskatchewan. Therefore I repeat, that the urgency is there.

I do not want to bore you with too many statistics at this time, but I should like to mention briefly what has happened to the agricultural industry. From 1951 to 1954 net farm income was cut almost in half, about 45 per cent. The situation since then has improved only slightly. In a lot of cases some of the farm people have been forced to live off depreciation. I would ask you, sir, what would the situation be in this country if other industries were forced to take a similar cut? What would be the situation if labour had been asked to take a 45 per cent cut in salary?

I would ask the ministers and the other members of the house to place themselves in a similar position and in similar circumstances where the prospects of improvement were not too bright and definitely very slow in coming. If there were a power above, that through its bungling and its policies or lack of policies, forced the ministers to take a 45 per cent cut in their salaries, if such a power were to force the members of the house who say the farmers want to be coddled or want hand-outs to take a cut in their salaries in similar proportions, I am sure that the heated accusations I heard thrown across the floor of the house by former ministers and some of the present ministers would seem like a Sunday school picnic. I am also certain that they would do enough hollering and raise enough of a ruckus to be heard in the high heavens. Yet a lot of people expect the farmers to accept such a condition and say nothing about it.

I am happy to see in the speech from the throne that the government has suggested it will introduce remedial legislation this session. To these measures we will be giving our support but we reserve the right to criticize constructively and, yes, to criticize severely if the legislation is too slow in bringing about action or is insufficient to assure the maximum stability of income to Canadian farmers and to re-establish their rightful place in our economy.

In the Vegreville constituency roughly 90 per cent of the people are dependent either directly or indirectly on the agricultural industry. When that industry was set back, through no fault of its own it affected every other business there. It affected the merchants, the fuel dealers, the implement dealers and so on right down the line. Some of these businessmen have told me that their sales have been reduced by about 20 per cent and in some instances by almost 30 per cent. They have extended credit to the limit and can go no further. In turn, they are being pressed by their creditors. It is not a healthy situation, nor is it one that should exist when the rest of our economy is enjoying a much higher level of prosperity.

The tendency has been to lay the blame on the farmer. This is something I most heartily disagree with, and I again ask the house, Mr. Speaker, is it the fault of the farmer who has produced the food that the people of the world require or is it the fault of statesmen who have failed to keep pace with the scientific and technical knowledge of our age? Science has given the farmers knowledge, has given them more modern tools and equipment in order that they may be able to produce more efficiently, whereas our government's policies are still in the horse and buggy days.

The farm people have been told by the Food and Agricultural Organization founded at Hot Springs, in which Canada has representatives, that farmers must grow more food if the people of the world are to be fed. They must grow almost two blades of grass where one grew before. They must increase the production of cereals such as wheat, rice and the like by at least 50 per cent. They are also told that the world wheat supply on hand is only enough to last about three months if the people who so desperately need it were able to get it. Two out of three people go to bed hungry every day.

Our governments in the past have talked of surpluses. It has been said that the reason prices have dropped and the farmer finds himself in economic straits at this time is that he has overproduced. When the question was raised at the Food and Agricultural Organization, can modern agriculture supply the real need of human beings for food, the answer given them was yes, if the hobbles are taken off agriculture. What of the surpluses, it was asked. There are none, said the delegates. What had been called surpluses were surpluses only in relation to purchasing power and not in relation to the need of human beings.

Full production must be the goal so long as there are people anywhere in the world who are in need of food.

This idea did not have the support of the former government, as was made quite clear by the former prime minister in a speech at Regina some months ago. His message was quite clear. Wheat should not be produced, he said in effect, in excess of what could be sold in the ordinary course of business. If more were produced, then the farmer himself would be the chief offender. I have noted that according to the press there may be a slight inclination on the part of the present government to follow the same policy. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) stated a short time ago that farmers should produce less wheat or perhaps convert it into livestock. This, in effect, would simply mean that the farmer would be jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

The farmers and businessmen are not the only ones who are adversely affected by a depressed agricultural industry. Farm people, and others as well, find it difficult to meet their everyday obligations. They find it difficult to meet their hospital bills and doctor bills, and the hospitals are also running into difficulties that should not exist. Some of these problems may mean the difference between life and death to some of our people, but I hope such a situation will never arise. Perhaps I should mention at this time that the first hospital was built in the Vegreville constituency through the kindness and generosity of the United Church and some of the local settlers shortly after the first settlers arrived. Today there are two hospitals, one of which has grown to be quite an institution. I am speaking, of course, of the Archer Memorial Hospital at Lamont. It is an institution of which the local people, as well as many outside the constituency, are very proud. I might mention that again, within the space of not too many years, the doctors of this country have seen fit to choose a fine man from this hospital, Dr. M. A. R. Young, as the president of the Canadian Medical Association.

We have some other fine hospitals that are being operated by the Catholic churches and nursing orders. Some are municipal hospitals, but all of them are doing a wonderful job. Practically all of them are running into financial difficulties because of the inflationary trend in our economy and the depressed position of our agricultural industry.

I regret very much that there was no mention in the speech from the throne of a health program. The highly flaunted national health scheme, proposed by the previous administration, apparently has been sidetracked by the present administration. Does this mean that the Canadian people must wait for several years before they have a workable health program?

There is mention in the speech from the throne of certain changes in some of the taxation statutes, and of a federal-provincial conference to discuss fiscal relations as well as to seek a better understanding or arrangement of many aspects of public finance. As a former reeve of a rural municipality and a councillor today, I can well appreciate the many problems that face the junior levels of government across Canada. Changes will indeed be welcome. When we find that people are taxed in some cases beyond their ability to pay their municipal taxes; when we find the people paying six times the amount of their municipal taxes to the federal government through direct and hidden taxes, certain changes are long overdue. When we find that almost 25 cents out of every dollar the people earn must go to taxes, we begin to wonder how much farther we can go. The exorbitant amounts that the people of Canada pay to the federal treasury through hidden taxes is one of the major causes of the inflationary trend in our economy. I trust that the present administration will propose legislation at this session to rectify this unfair situation.

It was with a great deal of interest that I read the interprovincial farm union's brief of August 15, as presented to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and members of the cabinet, and found that Canada had lost approximately 48,000 farm units. It was with a great deal of interest also that I listened to the questions on the orders of the day and to the debate in committee of supply last week concerning the seriousness of our unemployment situation. It was most interesting because I found that Vegreville constituency, according to the 1956 census, had lost approximately 4,600 people as compared with the 1951 census figures. Last fall we lost a few more. This year a large portion of the Vegreville riding has had poor crops, and the result will be a loss of many more people. These figures do not include the many people who put in their crops and then were forced to supplement their farm income by seeking employment in other industries in Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan or in the oil fields. Should the present condition of agriculture continue then the trend towards unemployment will become worse.

This brings to my mind the unfairness of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. In areas where there has been a crop failure—and as I said we will have a fair-sized area in this situation in my riding this year—and it becomes necessary for the farmer to seek other temporary employment to keep his family, we find he does not qualify for prairie farm assistance. Even though these conditions exist, nevertheless he must make his contributions under the act from every bushel of grain he sells. The inconsistency in the act is most unfair. There are other stipulations also which make the unfairness particularly noticeable where the farm units are small.

The interprovincial farm union council has brought out quite well the factors that have contributed to the present emergency. I trust that I may have the privilege of speaking on the subjects of cash advances, the two-price system for wheat and others as they are brought before this house. I would ask that the government bring these forward at the first opportunity.

I have before me a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail. The headline reads, "P.C.'s Action to Match Party's Vote Pledges Says Confident Prime Minister". In one part of the article it is stated that he again made it abundantly clear he expected the co-operation of opposition parties during the session to carry out his government's legislative program for the benefit of all Canada. I have here as well a folder entitled "Progressive Conservative Agricultural Policy", with its thirteen points. On it there appears to be a reproduction of the Prime Minister's signature. I can say to the Prime Minister that I will be giving not only my fullest co-operation, but should the government forget these promises to the Canadian farmers to re-establish them to their rightful position in our economy I may remind him from time to time of those promises. Perhaps on some other day, Mr. Speaker, I shall be able to speak again.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time in this house to take part in the debates, may I congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They acquitted themselves in a manner that speaks well for their constituencies and assures them of a healthy future in this house. May I also congratulate you, sir, on your elevation to your high office.

The constituency that I have the honour to represent lies in the southeastern part of Manitoba.

Its people are from almost every national origin, and they live and work together in the true spirit of Canadianism. Whether they be Mennonite or Ukrainian, French or British, Scandinavian or Polish, they have all made their contribution to the social, cultural and economic life of that part of Canada.

The progress that has been made in that constituency is characteristic of its people. The free enterprise philosophy that has built the town of Steinbach is in contrast to the co-operative philosophy of the people of Altona. Both are thriving communities, and both have developed industries that do business all over Canada.

The French-speaking Canadians have blended their culture and planning into such communities as St. Pierre, St. Malo, and St. Jean Baptiste while the people of hardy Ukrainian stock, despite many hardships, have thrived.

Although its products are varied, ranging from special crops to lumber, this is an agricultural constituency, and its economic destiny depends on the farm. The farmers in Provencher, like the farmers everywhere in Canada, have been caught in the giant squeeze, and recently many sad changes have taken place. Not since the thirties have we seen the awful spectacle of abandoned farms. But last year, they began to appear again. My constituency has suffered heavy losses due to excessive rains during the past few years, and some of the municipalities are in dire need of some form of assistance.

Having said this, and remembering the tragic flood of 1950, it may sound strange to say that one of the major drawbacks to the establishment of industry is the lack of a sufficient potable water supply. The people of this area are concerned to the extent that they have taken steps to plan for a water system throughout the area. This program, when it gets under way, will pay for itself, but assistance will be needed to get it started, and for that assistance I am sure we can depend upon the co-operation of the Department of Agriculture.

Being a farmer it is only natural that I am concerned about the future of agriculture, and I propose to deal with the problem in general terms because I feel that the situation is a general one. There are certain fundamental things that must be preserved, and I believe they could have been preserved had the necessary policies been implemented in time. I am afraid that some of the measures that must be taken now may conflict with a long-range policy. This is regrettable but, under the circumstances, necessary. Our objective should be to create an atmosphere that will enable the farmer to compete with the rest of the economy, and not to place him in the position where he becomes a permanent ward of the government.

The problem with regard to agriculture is many pronged. Frequently I feel that in talking of the "problem" there is a tendency to forget that we are talking about the lives and destinies of men and women and that instead we are talking about economic factors, about pawns in the broad sweep of the development of Canada's resources.

But then we have in the alternative those who talk about agriculture only with tears streaming down their faces, those who damage our case for an equitable deal by overselling. The very natural reaction to a speech that indicates that all farmers are desperate, and indeed hungry, is that the situation cannot be that bad. The reaction is to reject even the legitimate claims of our farming industry in both the east and the west.

Mr. Speaker, I have not risen here in order to make extravagant demands for agriculture. But I will say soberly and sincerely that our farmers are missing out on the boom, that they are failing and, indeed, for a number of years have failed to share in the prosperity that has marked this nation.

I believe that I can say with the utmost confidence that the eyes of the farmers of Canada are turned toward this parliament. They know what we should know, namely that a depressed agriculture slows the economic heart beat of the nation. They know that the farms of any nation are the rearing grounds for those who go on to accomplish great things in their nation; and they know, as we must know, that if we allow the economic and social plant of this nation to wither we shall be responsible for the slowing of the cultural as well as the economic growth of Canada.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Speaker, when the house arose at six o'clock I was saying that this government could not allow the economic and social plant of our farmers to wither, for to do so would be to endanger the cultural and economic growth of Canada.

I do not wish to labour these points, but I do wish to make it clear that in my view there is an even higher claim than the claim of equity for agriculture which should dictate our policies here, and that is the claim that only in a truly secure and stable agriculture can the continuing growth of a great nation be assured.

Food surpluses, and especially wheat surpluses are very much discussed today. The system of cash advances on farm-stored grain that is being proposed to this assembly will take much of the sting from this surplus situation. And I believe that the long-run policies of this government and a measure of true leadership in agriculture will finally deal with this problem.

It is roundly predicted that some shift out of wheat acreage will serve merely to remove our surplus problem to other farm products. In part this may prove to be true. But I am quite satisfied that the problem of surpluses will never be solved without an effort, and if it does result in the need for some adjustments I am sure they can be made.

But surpluses are not a problem in all parts of Canada or, indeed, in all sections of the prairie provinces. The one thing that farmers have in common across Canada is high production costs. Production costs are high only relatively to the prices of the products that a farmer has to sell. As far as the man on the land is concerned, this can be attacked from either end—prices can go up or production costs can come down. But as long as both continue at their present level the farmer is squeezed, and squeezed almost beyond economic endurance.

It should be clear by now that agriculture in this country has never been a prosperous industry. There have been short bursts of relative prosperity. For a short interval at the end of world war I the relationship of costs and returns was favourable to the farmer. After the end of world war II and especially around 1951, on the prairies at least, we knew a brief respite from economic pressure on our farms. But let us make no mistake: the normal destiny of a farmer in Canada is to know more of depression than of prosperity.

We have perhaps been prone to assume that this is inevitable. Certainly policies that now exist do not grapple with the fundamental sickness of the farm economy. Indeed one of the primary reasons we are in power as a government and the previous government is not is because the problem of the farmer has not been dealt with.

Why has it never been resolved? I believe I would be safe in saying that it has never really been confronted. It has never been grappled with because, in the counsels of government, the consumer point of view—the view that food should be cheap—has prevailed. The hard fact is that the people of Canada are buying their food for less than the cost of production; the people of Canada are being subsidized by the farmers of Canada, the one economic group that is least able to afford to subsidize anyone.

Where is this money for the subsidization of the consuming public coming from? Farmers are borrowing it from the brief spurt of prosperity they enjoyed in the early 1950's. For a short period farmers were able to invest rather heavily in capital goods. Indeed it was essential that they should replace the worn out machinery of the 1930's and during the war years and since millions of dollars have been invested in machinery alone. Now this investment has slumped; farmers are not purchasing capital goods to the same extent, nor are they setting money aside in a depreciation account to replace the machinery as it wears out.

Farmers are wearing out their capital assets without arranging for a capital fund to equal the wear, a process which the economists would refer to as net disinvestment. Their farms, in effect, are becoming worth less. And they are doing this, unwittingly and unwillingly, in order that they may subsidize the Canadian consumers.

Is such a situation desirable? A case could be made in its favour; in my view it would be a false case, but there are those who might sincerely support it. The fact is that cheap food is a benefit to 85 per cent of the people in Canada, the non-farming public. I can very well see that a consumers' point of view might prevail; and I can certainly see where powerful production forces might well think it desirable from an economic viewpoint that food for the immense labour force in Canada should be cheap. In the final analysis, cheap food presumably means that the earnings of labour will go further in providing a decent standard of living, and the cost of production of many goods may be reduced.

The gain to the economy when that gain is based on a low standard of living for the farmers in the economy is an entirely false gain. The farmers cannot be expected to underwrite the prosperity of the nation; if we must have cheap food then it must be by design, not by exploitation.

Under a laissez faire government, the standard of living of the farm community will for most of the time be low. This lesson has been harshly learned in the past half century in Canada. The competitive position of agriculture is weak. There is free competition between farm producers. Farmers are numerically weak and small in number. I believe it can be categorically stated that if the government stands idly by the relative position of the farmer will deteriorate further rather than improve.

What, then, is the solution to the difficult and pressing needs of the farmers. The solution, ultimately, must be government intervention—policies that will weigh the economy slightly in the farmers' favour, that will correct the imbalance that now exists and equate the real farm income position with the income of other segments of our prosperous economy. Thinking will have to be in terms of short-run policies and long-run policies.

At the moment the need for cash in the farm communities is critical. I would hesitate to suggest that the net income position of the western farmer is worse than that of the eastern farmer, but the western farmer has been unable to convert a substantial part of his net income into cash income. In other words, bins are flooding with unsold grain. The cash advance policy that this government has introduced will convert, at least, part of this net income into cash, and in this way the western farmer, in terms of spendable income, will be brought to a position parallel with that of farmers in other parts of Canada.

That is a short-run policy for the western prairie producer. But agriculture across Canada is in a strained position, and, as I have pointed out, farmers are subsidizing the remainder of the consuming public. I am confident that no consumer in Toronto or Vancouver, in Winnipeg or in Montreal, in Edmonton or in Halifax would knowingly visit a low standard of living upon the men and women who produce their milk and their bread, their butter and their eggs. They sincerely fail to realize that the price they pay falls short of covering the cost of producing this food. If they ever came to realize it fully I am sure they would willingly pay the real costs.

I believe price supports must be raised to the point that will, in the short run, give a farmer the cost of producing the food he sells, plus a reasonable return. I think that if this is done with adequate explanation to the consuming public they will agree that it is just.

Grains are, of course, a special case. A minimum floor price—the initial payment—must be maintained. But when we come to the perishable foods that are consumed primarily upon the domestic market, then clearly the full production cost must be met.

Hon. members may tell me that we will arrive at incentive prices; that great surpluses will appear in meat and butter and the other alternatives to the small grains. To this I can only reply that we must put our salesmen out and try to sell our production and try to find new uses for our land in the growing of new crops and produce and the selling of as diverse a package as is humanly possible. If in spite of all this some surpluses do appear we will have to deal with the problems as they arise.

We have problems now. The problems that some already visualize will simply be of another form and, presumably, will be at least as susceptible to solution as the difficulties that now exist with regard to small grains.

I also think I should point out that an increase in the production of livestock anywhere in Canada would be made at the expense of the small grains. Land resources are limited, and increased herds of cattle or hogs, or bigger flocks of sheep or poultry anywhere in Canada would be made at the expense of prairie wheat acres. So although we might face some possibility of an increase in supplies of some of the protective foods, it would almost inevitably be made at the expense of some wheat acres.

The longer term policies for agriculture are the great challenge. May I quote from an article written by Mr. Ralph Hedlin, an agricultural economist which appeared in a recent issue of The Country Guide, a statement which I think sums up the needs of our industry:

> Agriculture can never be legislated or subsidized into a position of secure economic equality, at least without fundamental changes in the national farm plan and in national consumer attitudes. In the long run, the land in Canada must produce the food that is wanted by the people of Canada, and the people of Canada must be prepared to pay a reasonable price for it.

Consumers must be prepared to pay a reasonable price for farm products, a price which at the same time will be economic. But farmers must be in a position where they can hold down the cost of producing through the use of the most effective and modern devices. At the moment many of us cannot use such devices because we lack the essential capital.

In the short run we need income assistance, but in the long run we need reasonable prices, good markets and capital resources that will permit us to help ourselves. In the interim this will mean creative government policies and assistance.

I do not propose today to deal with the long-term policies in exhaustive detail because I hope opportunities may exist for further discussion at a later date. However, I do wish to outline some of the policies that are of first importance.

A realistic credit policy is a pressing need. A program of the general type of the Veterans' Land Act would be of great assistance to Canadian farmers. I do not believe I am giving credit where it is not due when I say that this program has been eminently successful. It has provided the farmer with a qualified consultative service on his production problems and the organizing of his farm enterprises and has also provided him with the capital at reasonable interest rates for making his new projects efficient. An extensive credit program along these lines would be of immense value to Canadian agriculture.

Crop insurance should be examined in detail. Price supports will provide income for those who produce but an actuarially sound crop insurance program would meet the critical needs of those who through no fault of their own suffer a crop failure. Many such people find themselves in the position of needing relief. I believe that a well qualified royal commission should be named to quickly and completely examine the economic possibilities of starting a farm production insurance program, perhaps initially with modest coverage and on a modest scale. With even modest assistance to production and prices the destitution prevalent in the agricultural industry today could be alleviated and perhaps eventually avoided.

Marketing research should also be increased. It is my earnest hope that when the commission on price spreads is named it will have something of value to say on this subject. Admittedly marketing research is not directly related to price spreads as such but the whole question of farm marketing might fall under their scrutiny; this certainly would be my hope.

This government must also consider new markets and new products. If necessary the agricultural attaches at our embassies should be increased in number and markets for our farm products should be sought in the four corners of the world. If we find any new markets for products that we do not grow, our market specialists and researchers should co-operate to devise strains that can be grown in Canada and marketed from our farms at advantageous prices.

This government should co-operate closely with extension agencies in the provinces. I fully realize that extension is under the authority of the provinces according to the provisions of the British North America Act but we can at least co-operate in helping farmers to combine their undertakings more effectively.

One point which should have been clear long ago is that a really effective farm extension policy will have to wait for the organization of larger local units of administration in a number of the provinces. In Manitoba and in Saskatchewan, for example, we have small nine-township municipalities. It is too small an area for most types of administration and much too small for the proper organization at the local level of a really effective farm program.

There are many points with which I have not dealt in any detail, if at all. Producer-marketing boards should receive every encouragement from the government. Agricultural research and agricultural education are vital and co-operation with the provinces in these fields should be invited. The annual farm conference should be a real planning conference and farm leaders should return from it fully conversant with the production needs of their industry. Farm leaders and farm organizations both should be invited to co-operate with the government in designing farsighted policies.

[Mr. Jorgenson.]

The farm industry is essential to the health of this nation. It is not healthy itself at this time and therefore cannot transmit to the rest of the nation that which it lacks. I ask nothing for agriculture that I do not think is vital to the continued well-being of the entire nation. We cannot build a strong economy on a weak foundation. Agriculture is one of the cornerstones of our economy. A powerful structure cannot be built upon an ailing cornerstone.

The needs of agriculture should be of concern to every person in this country. I am not pleading only for the agriculturists of Canada, I am pleading for the well-being of the entire nation; therefore I say a farm policy which accomplishes the relative prosperity of our farm community is one of the really pressing needs of Canada and one of the grave responsibilities of this government.

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I would like to join with those hon. members who have preceded me in offering my sincere congratulations to the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) on his good performance in delivering his speech. I wish him good luck. I think his constituents must be happy about the able way he delivered his first speech in this chamber.

May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I fully concur in what has been said by all hon. members who have extended congratulations to you on your election as Speaker of the House of Commons.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, at the outset of the few remarks I propose to make, I feel I should thank my constituents for the marvellous support they have once more given me and for the confidence they have shown in the Liberal party, at the general election, last June 10. Having been returned with close to 80 per cent of the vote in my county, I think I can say that my constituents have brought to the Liberal cause vigorous support and keen interest. This also means, I think, that they have approved the measures adopted by the last parliament.

During the sessions of the last parliament, of which I was a member, that is since January 10, 1956, I had occasion to raise a few problems with regard to which the people I represent would like some concrete action on the part of the government. I have already urged amendments to the personal income tax legislation for farmers who operate their farm on a family basis. I raise this problem once more, even though I now find myself sitting in opposition.

In my opinion the demands of the various local groups of the Catholic Farmers' Union throughout the province of Quebec, in this regard, are perfectly fair and reasonable. They should meet with favourable response from the government. I have more particularly in mind at this point the formula used for calculating the revenue of a farmer who operates his farm with his sons. This work done in common is such that, to my mind, the total revenue of a farm, under those conditions, cannot properly be charged to the head of the family alone, whether the children have been paid in money or otherwise since, in the final analysis, the farm becomes the property of the whole family.

At the last session of parliament I also raised in this house the question of decentralizing the unemployment insurance offices, and here I want to congratulate my colleagues the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Landry) and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) for their remarks in that sense. The purpose of such decentralization would be to put the offices within easier reach of the unemployed and to facilitate the quick processing of their claims. At that time I had pointed out, and I repeat it today, that the unemployed is in urgent need of money and should not be forced to cover great distances to reach the unemployment office in order to submit his claim.

The decentralization of unemployment insurance offices is closely related to the essential purpose of the act which created the commission, that is to say, assistance to the unemployed while seeking a new job, especially assistance to relieve seasonal unemployment which exists particularly in areas such as the one I represent. I am convinced that such improvements can be brought about without further increasing the burden of administrative costs of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I also wish to point out to the house the fact that there is at this time in my constituency, as in various centres throughout the country a considerable number of workers who will not be able to find sufficient work to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, even seasonal benefits during the coming winter. In this regard I do wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) to this problem so that the regulations for the application of the act be amended in order to allow unemployed people greater facility in qualifying for seasonal benefits.

Mr. Speaker, under present regulations, an unemployed person cannot benefit unless he has fifteen weeks worth of stamps in his book since the month of March before his application. At the present time there are —and this is something which has never happened before to my knowledge—a great number of people in my riding who have not worked for more than six months in a single year, and I doubt very much that they will be able to find work before next spring.

The Unemployment Insurance Act should, to my mind, be continually readjusted to meet the present needs and those of the immediate future. I therefore think I am speaking for many of my fellow citizens when I say that if seasonal benefits are not made more accessible, a large proportion of Canadian workers will, apart from being unemployed in winter —which is already the case of quite a number —be barred from all help.

About this very matter of unemployment, I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the motion of non-confidence tabled by the Socialist group of this house, upbraiding the present government for its failure to apply the necessary measures with regard to unemployment. Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, that I consider this motion on the part of the Socialist group as mere publicity, at this stage, because it does not agree with the statement made by the leader of the Socialist group, on the day following the last elections, when he said that the Conservative party should be given the opportunity of running the country for a certain time.

Now, two days only after the opening of the present session, the Socialist party propose an amendment liable to involve the dissolution of parliament and consequently, a new general election. I would therefore ask the Socialists whether they are not actually bracing themselves for another electoral campaign or, at least, if they do not admit that their amendment would prevent the house from sitting and enacting the necessary legislation.

That is why I say that the statements made by the leader of the CCF party, in the wake of the last election, and his deeds and gestures are in fact contradictory and can but serve a publicity purpose.

Like all my colleagues in the opposition, Mr. Speaker, I have heard the numerous promises of the Conservative party concerning tax cuts; considering that it would be difficult for the Conservative party not to make good on at least some of these promises, I would like to suggest that all school and university fees be made deductible and that the law be amended so that school teachers, whose salary is below $3,000 in the case of bachelors and below $5,000 in the case of married people, be totally exempted from income tax. In my opinion, this would provide the government, under the constitution, with means to help the education and instruction of our youth and would also, on the one hand, encourage parents to give their children a higher education and, on the other hand, would promote the recruiting of teachers throughout the country.

I have followed with interest, Mr. Speaker, the last campaign of the Conservative party and I have also found that the spokesman of that political party expressed different opinions according to the place where the said opinions were voiced. We all know the result of the last general election which was, in my opinion, a direct consequence of that double thinking of the Conservative party which does destroy the very foundations of national unity, a goal which has always been and still is one of the fundamental objectives of the policies of the party I support.

I have been shocked, as were several others, by certain statements made by Mr. Alvin Hamilton, of Saskatoon, leader of the Conservative party of the province, when he said, during last election campaign—repeating by the way, what had been said by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) that the government of the country could be made up and did not need Quebec to govern. And while the Conservatives were boasting that they are the confederation party, which had as its essential aims the union of the two great racial groups composing the nation, they were jeopardizing this union which is essential to the development of our country. This conservative thinking was again exemplified in the political pamphlets distributed even in the province of Quebec, and representing 26 important figures of the Conservative party, among whom we cannot find one single Canadian of French origin belonging to a group which includes nevertheless one-third of the population of our country. This provocating attitude of the Conservative party is again confirmed by the formation of the present cabinet with only a token representation of French-speaking members.

It is an insult to five million Canadians, and all the flattering speeches made by Conservatives for Quebec consumption have nothing in common with reality.

I wish to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the hon. member from Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) to whom I listened carefully this afternoon, for the wonderful statements he made to this end, and, as all the hon. members in this house, I look forward to the time when the Conservative party translates all its fine ideas into action.

[Mr. Laflamme.]

The best and finest years of harmony and economic expansion Canadians have known have been under the Liberal governments which have always based their fate upon the undeniable fact that Canada is a great country, because two important racial groups had decided in 1867, to work together to the composition and development of our country as a nation.

Those who, among French-speaking Conservatives, have accepted to play a token part in the present government, are acting detrimentally, to my mind, not only to their fellow citizens but to their own party, which is guilty of more than refusing to work for national unity. When in 1930 the Conservative party came into power, it was with the support of a good majority of the people of Quebec; but since 1935, the Liberal party has obtained majorities not only in Quebec but in nearly all provinces. The formation of the present cabinet constitutes a major insult to our whole history and a humiliating blow against a third of our population. This we will never forget.

I condemn the Conservative theory under which the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) say to the province of Quebec: give us more members and you will have more ministers. Accepting such an understanding would be extremely humiliating and would go against our democratic freedoms, for, until now, all members of this house have been chosen by the will of the people, and whatever their number, no government may commit any grave discrimination with regard to a racial group in this country.

We must keep in mind that our country has a dual ethnical character and to put an end to proportional representation within the cabinet would gravely affect national unity. The present Conservative government had some members of French origin elected in other provinces of Canada, but none of them were actually asked to join the government. Moreover, supposing a larger Conservative representation from Quebec would bring about a more numerous representation within the cabinet, it must nevertheless be kept in mind that, as all ministerial posts are filled, what would the Prime Minister do in case of the re-election of all his ministers, if he wanted to find portfolios in order to give the French element a larger representation on the morrow of the next election? In any event, I repeat, every important post has been filled. My objections have regard both to the prominence of those posts and to the number of French-speaking Conservative representatives in the cabinet. The statements made by the Prime Minister and by his Minister of Justice are very unfortunate indeed. This type of tactics can only be interpreted by the people of Quebec as meaning: "Vote Conservative and then we will recognize you."

Of the three Progressive Conservative members who were returned from the Prime Minister's own province, two have been appointed to the cabinet. Seven Progressive Conservative members were returned from British Columbia, of which three were appointed to the cabinet. I fail to see how the same argument cannot hold true for the province from which I come.

Mr. Speaker, in closing these few remarks I simply wish to say that I was quite impressed by the attitude taken by the member for Parkdale and the member for Timmins (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Balcer: A good lesson for you.

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, the lesson has been taught the Conservatives for the past twenty years, that is to say the Liberals have been teaching the Conservatives a lesson in bilingualism for twenty years.

I merely wanted to tell the house how gratifying it was to me to see that two representatives of different parties in this house took the trouble of expressing themselves in both official languages of this country, and I congratulate them sincerely. Their gesture was a commendable one, which should be repeated. Such a gesture was started and stressed, as it will be in the future, by the party to which I belong, the Liberal party.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, as the constituency of Prince Albert adjoins Mackenzie for about 150 miles I should like to say to my next door neighbour, congratulations on the splendid achievement of June 10. I have known the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) longer than most members of the house. When I knew him years ago he was a very well known criminal lawyer in Saskatchewan. During the time he has been interested in politics I have seen his party led by Messrs. Bennett, Manion, Hanson, Meighen, Bracken and Drew. The present Prime Minister is the seventh and had he not had long experience as a criminal lawyer I am sure it would not have been possible for him to take the leadership of the Conservative party and become Prime Minister. In my view he has performed a great public service in having demonstrated to the Canadian people that they could get rid of a government that had lost touch with the people.

After listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) the other day, it appears as if it has become established now that there is really no fundamental difference between the members on the government side now and the official opposition sitting on this side. We will look forward to establishing the right to become the alternative to the present government when, as the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schulz) said, the people will not be prepared to give them 22 years to look after the affairs of the country.

I was interested in the speeches delivered by the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I cannot recall any other first two speakers in such a debate admitting that Canada had a serious agricultural crisis. They should be commended for facing up to that fact at the very first opportunity. The hon. member for Calgary South comes to parliament with a name that is highly regarded here. During the time I have been here very few members have had as many good friends and as few enemies as his father had, and I am very glad to hear the hon. member speak out boldly at the first opportunity and say, as found at page 21 of Hansard of October 15:

> In assessing farm income there appears to be only one real question of debate and that is the question of urgency. I would suggest that if you examine one province, as an example Alberta, you will recognize that this urgency is indeed very real.

I must congratulate the hon. member for including this reference in his speech. Likewise, the hon. member for Bonaventure in rising for the first time referred to the fact that year after year the percentage of the rural population is declining. He went on to say that their agricultural organizations had hoped to prevent a second dispersal of their Acadian sons but that, alas, the exodus of young farmers and settlers who are forced to go elsewhere to earn a living is on the increase. As found in the English translation of his speech he said.

> How many boys and girls of my constituency have scattered all across the country and even across the border! They have not definitely quit their native village for they still hope that better conditions may allow them to come back home.

Therefore I am very glad that at the beginning of the session the first two spokemen for the government have pointed up the fact that all across Canada we have a serious agricultural crisis. I intend to devote most of my time to discussing this matter but before dealing with it from my particular angle I should like to mention that since the election I have visited some of my Indian friends in my constituency. I have been honoured to represent over 3,000 Indians in the parliament of Canada. I think hon. members should remember that one of the highest honours conferred on the Prime Minister was his election as an honorary chief, and I am hopeful that he will never forget that the Indian people of Canada are looking to him to do something better than has ever been done before.

At Cumberland House, Pelican Narrows, Sandy Bay, Beaver Lake and Deschambault I find that the Indian people are facing new problems as the population increases. As the result of improved health services and family allowances the birthrate is increasing and infant mortality is decreasing. But we have forced the Indians farther and farther back and have made it more difficult for them to make a living. When I visited Pelican Narrows for the first time some years ago there was no school at all. For the first time in Canadian history the federal and the provincial governments reached agreement in connection with providing an education for Indian children, metis and whites and established a one-room school at Pelican Narrows. That school has grown to five rooms.

The principal of the school is a young girl, Stella Easton, who was selected by the superintendent during her last year at teachers' college. After one year in the north she was persuaded to take over the principalship of this five-room school. I wish hon. members could appreciate the tremendous responsibility we place on many of these young people. The Pelican Narrows hospital is managed by a young nurse who is employed by the federal department of health. When you consider that there are no doctors within several hundred miles of some of these centres, it becomes apparent that we must accept our responsibility and provide better medical and educational services for our native Indians in these northern communities.

At Cumberland House I met an old college mate of mine, the Rev. Mr. Parker. He married an Indian girl who taught school some years ago and he has given more than 30 of the best years of his life to looking after the needs of the people at Cumberland House. There is a great contrast between his parishioners and the parishioners of some of the churches that hon. members attend in the city of Ottawa. I appeal, therefore, to the Prime Minister to keep faith with the Indian people of Canada who have conferred such a high honour upon him.

Coming to the problems confronting the majority of the people I represent, the farm people, I should like to tell the members of this house that the situation is even worse than that described by the hon. member for Springfield this afternoon. The conditions in my constituency are worse. As I mentioned previously, the Prime Minister's constituency and mine have a common boundary for about 150 miles. Before coming to Ottawa I visited some 15 rural municipalities and local improvement offices in the constituency to secure first-hand information regarding tax arrears. While these are only figures to many people, I should like, in a few minutes' time, to deal with a few cases which those figures represent.

As I said, there are 14 rural municipalities and one local improvement district. In the last five years the arrears of taxes have gone from $775,421 to $886,755, then to $1,439,612 and then to $1,810,343 and $1,873,957. There is one municipality that is partly in the Prime Minister's constituency and partly in mine, Moose Range. The arrears in that municipality have gone up from $89,526 to $306,205. I am sure the Prime Minister, as well as I, realizes that farmers in those areas have not allowed this situation to develop for fun.

I also visited the larger school unit offices such as Sturgis, Nipawin, Tisdale, Wadena, Canora, Kamsack and Hudson Bay. These school unit offices have owing from taxes $2,149,000 and they are paying on bank loans of $1,223,000. Let us look at the larger unit of Nipawin, which is chiefly in the Prime Minister's constituency but partly in mine. In 1952 the Nipawin school unit had owing from these municipalities $272,000. Last year Nipawin unit had owing $545,000, from the municipality and they are paying interest to the banks on loans which amounted at the end of last year to $226,000.

Hon. members might be interested in knowing that it is necessary to have posted in the elevators a list of farmers who have not been able to meet their taxes. The elevator agents are required to notify the farmers that they will have to make some adjustment for the payment of their taxes before they can have any cash for themselves from the sale of their wheat. You see in all the elevators in Saskatchewan, and I presume the same thing applies in Manitoba and Alberta, these lists posted when the grain is ready for market.

Let us take as an example local improvement district No. 949 in northern Saskatchewan and I shall cite two examples from the list. I shall not mention any names. Here is a farmer who owes $1,637. This farmer fought to make the world safe for democracy between 1914 and 1918. He settled in northern Saskatchewan on the bushland in that area when they were able to get 160 acres of fine bushland for $10. Then when world war II broke out he still was not too old to do his bit and he spent four years in the second world war. He now owes $1,637. Mr. Speaker, if hon. members could visit the homes of these people and see what they are like they would realize something of what it is like to fight in two wars and then be in a position where your tax arrears have grown to such an extent you are forced to conclude that perhaps you had better walk out.

Here is another veteran. He also fought in world war I and in world war II. He owes $1,138. I saw him a few days before I came away and he said, "I will soon be 60; after fighting in two wars and after trying to build up an equity in a farm, I guess I had better pull out and take to the city or do something else."

Just today I wrote to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) about one of these veterans who is in the same position. He thought he could take some temporary work without losing his war veterans allowance. He wanted to do something about those tax arrears. When the Department of Veterans Affairs got word he had taken work at 80 cents an hour they cut off his war veterans allowance. I hope that these regulations can be changed so that a war veteran is not in that position. This particular war veteran was a sergeant with the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes). I am sure the Minister of National Defence will agree that the economy of Canada should not place an old veteran in a position where he cannot earn a few dollars to try to bring his taxes under control.

Hon. members who live in big cities like Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver find it difficult to place themselves in the position of these veterans. Before I leave these lists I mentioned, here is someone who is in arrears and who is living in London, Ontario; someone in Edmonton, someone in Brandon and someone in Field, British Columbia. These are farmers who have pulled up stakes and gone elsewhere hoping that conditions will change and they may be able to come back some time and do something about it. Hon. members will find it difficult to believe that the 45,000 people living in Mackenzie now have not a dentist available to them. There was a time when we had five dentists to look after the needs of the population.

The first time I was in the penitentiary, some years ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh. oh. The truth is out.

Mr. Nicholson: —I was there on a visit—I found that there was a qualified dentist being paid to look after the inmates of the penitentiary. Times have changed, and we do not have a full-time dentist on the staff now. However, we do provide excellent care for the people in the penitentiaries. For example, in the penitentiary in the Prime Minister's constituency we pay over $4,000 a year to a dentist to work part time to look after the needs of the inmates. I am not complaining about that; I am not suggesting that a country like Canada should ignore its responsibilities to the people in the penitentiaries, but I am saying that there is something radically wrong with an economy when it places 45,000 farm people in a position where there is no dentist to look after them.

We have ten medical doctors and most of them are there on contract with a municipality.

However, we have some real problems that are arising there. I visited one of the municipal councils when they had been notified by the provincial government that since their population had gone down from 3,400 to 2,500 they would get a smaller grant, that the provincial government could not pay as much to look after 2,500 people as to look after 3,400 people. They therefore went to the doctors to announce that from now on the doctors were going to get less pay. "Oh, no", the doctors said, "you are going to pay more. Everything is going up. We can go to the city and make a great deal more than we are making here." The doctors said, "According to our records we are looking after more people now than we ever did before. The people who are leaving are the young and strong who go east or north or south or west. The old and the invalids are staying behind and someone must care for them."

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) who has taken over his portfolio is going to have to face this problem soon and to face it squarely. May I say in passing that I think the Prime Minister made the best possible choice in the selection of the Minister of Agriculture. I know of no one else on the other side of the house who would be as sympathetic toward farm problems and who would do a better job. But after saying that, I am going to stress what was said by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schulz), namely that the people are going to require action very soon.

The farm people are disturbed by what they read in the papers. I have here the Wheat Pool Budget from Alberta. When the people in Canada read that the price of bread ranged from twelve cents a pound in Canada to eighteen cents a pound in the Unite States they think it is time that some responsible organization got busy in Canada and found out why it is, when our labour costs are so much lower in Canada, the staff of life sells at a price which is so much lower than the price down in the United States. I think something about the monopolies would be of real interest.

Then in connection with the handling charges we read that the board of grain commissioners announced this week an increase of one-eighth of a cent per bushel in the maximum elevator charges. While the farmers are facing bankruptcy the powers-that-be do not seem to hesitate to boost freight rates or to increase handling charges.

I also read that in the United States about one in every ten is receiving free food from the government. According to a recent United States department of agriculture figure, the number of people in the United States who get free food is running up over 13 million, and 12 million are school children. If they are able in the United States to dispose of some of their surplus food by making it available to the school children, we in Canada should be able to do something.

Then we read figures like those which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) put on the record the other day; and may I say in passing that I am sure we are all delighted that the leader of this party is in such good health and that he was able to make such an outstanding contribution to this debate. But when they read that Frank McMahon, with an investment of $7,700, buying shares at a nickel apiece, was able to build up an equity of $4,000,000, it is not something which is easy for my veterans of world war I and world war II to contemplate. As I say, it is not easy for these veterans of two wars to contemplate that situation after serving their king and country in two wars and working to build up the roads, schools and other essential services, and who now, in the evening of life, are contemplating walking off without being able to pay their honest taxes.

The Saskatchewan wheat pool has supplied the government with an extremely interesting illustrated pamphlet entitled "The Farm Income Situation". Farm costs have gone up year by year, from a base of 100 in 1947, until they have reached nearly 150. Farm prices followed up until 1951, although not as rapidly as farm costs; but since 1951 they have gone down to 110, 100 and 90. In other words there is between 1955 and now a spread in farm costs of 140, with farm prices down below 90. The average farm price of wheat was away up to $1.65 in 1947; it kept coming down, with a little spurt in 1952, to about $1 or $1.25 at the present time. With the index of farm prices going up all the time our farm people are in an impossible position.

I am interested in noting that the Canadian Labour Congress has faced up to this problem and that it has come out with some interesting material showing how important it is for the whole economy of Canada that this problem be recognized. I submit to the present government across the way that two members of the previous cabinet were chiefly responsible for allowing this crisis to develop as far as it has gone. I refer to the former minister of trade and commerce and the former minister of agriculture. Those two senior members of the cabinet kept insisting year after year that the farmers never had it so good; that if a farmer was not successful he had no one to blame but himself. However, the Canadian Labour Congress comes out with this interesting research bulletin showing what the dwindling farm income is doing to our economy. The income of the workers has kept increasing as a result of the ability of the unions to bargain collectively. They are not quite able to keep pace with the increase in the cost of living and the profits that are being made but they consider it to be a serious national crisis for the farmers to be in this position.

Last year in the same debate I reviewed at considerable length the statistics which had been released a short time before in connection with the national income. There is an edition to be out shortly and I am sure that it will demonstrate that the farm position is even more serious at the present time. But according to the statistics last year, out of 601,000 farm families in Canada only 39,000 made enough to pay income tax. That would be less than seven farmers out of 100. I think most hon. members will agree that while that situation exists the buying power of the people involved is seriously reduced and we are not likely to have a recovery that is going to establish high levels of income.

I am glad that the new Minister of Agriculture is continuing such publications as "Agriculture Abroad". There was some fear that there would be some slashing in connection with publicity. However, it appears to me that Canada can afford to have a look at what is being done in other countries. In "Agriculture Abroad" for December I find that we get some information about the competition we are getting from some of these other countries. I should say in passing that the offer made by the British recently to wipe out tariffs really does not attack the fundamental problems of today when nearly every country in the world is supporting subsidy programs that take much more money than tariffs previously took. In this article in "Agriculture Abroad" I find that France paid between $1.40 and $1.48 per bushel for every bushel that went into the export market.

I ask hon. members this: who can expect to sell even the best quality of wheat in European markets if one of our competitors is putting wheat down at a price which carries with it a subsidy of $1.40 a bushel? There was a time when France was a major importer, but times have changed and France does not wish to be caught in a situation again when she must depend to such a large extent on overseas countries for her foodstuffs. So this policy in France is there to stay.

Also in this periodical are interesting articles about Argentina, Belgium and a number of other countries. Some interesting figures are given with regard to subsidies paid by Great Britain, and I am sure that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) when he comes to discuss these matters in Britain will ask what they propose to do about the $551 million paid in farm subsidies over there. The subsidy for cereals amounts to $69 million; for eggs, $75 million; for fatstock, $139 million; and in production grants to $190 million.

I find no fault with the British for carrying out policies of this sort to make it possible for their farmers to stay in business, but I do not think the Canadian government should ask the Canadian farmer to buy his machinery in the highest priced market in the world while he is carrying on and attempting to sell in competition with wheat carrying a subsidy of $1.40 a bushel or, in the British market, in competition with British farmers who are receiving subsidies running up to $551 million.

The United States has, of course, a very extensive program of subsidies. Last year they made arrangements for the soil bank to cost something over half a billion dollars; farmers who co-operate can expect to receive over a three-year period something over $27 an acre. I was interested to read in the Ottawa Journal of last April an article by a well known radio commentator James M. Minifie. Mr. Minifie is a Rhodes scholar from Saskatchewan who has had an interesting career as a commentator and writer. Apparently he still has his father's farm near Vanguard, Saskatchewan—he has 480 acres there—and this article, which appeared in the Journal on April 6 of this year, mentions a plan to set up a belt conveyor to load his farm and move it down into North Dakota. Along with that would go a binful of the 1955 crop which was sitting in what used to be his dad's living room. After he got that down there, he would cash in; he would be able to get twenty cents a bushel more for his barley.

Mr. Minifie points out that an important difference would be that when he grew his crop he would be able to get cash; he would not have to sit on the farm forever and dribble it in on a 2-bushel quota. "I would just take it into town and the government would have to sweat it out from then on", the writer says. Mr. Minifie pointed out that he would probably put the northeast quota out of cultivation; it was not very good land, containing quite a bit of alkali. If he would take 200 acres out of production and devote it to not growing wheat he would make $4,200 down in North Dakota.

How can farmers in Saskatchewan who were not able to sell more than a 5-bushel quota last year possibly compete on such terms, having to buy their equipment in a high-priced market and then sell in a low-priced market? They have not solved all their problems in the United States, but they are continuing to devote their best efforts toward a solution.

For the coming year the United States department of agriculture is very much back in the export business. The bill amending the agricultural trade development and assistance act became law on August 13 and provides an additional $1 billion for concessional sale of agricultural commodities abroad and an extra $300 million for relief and other "give-away programs", according to the October issue of "Agriculture Abroad".

I have here also, a very interesting article explaining how the government of Switzerland is giving very high priority to keeping farmers solvent and prosperous.

The Minister of Agriculture also publishes the Economic Annalist and I commend him for continuing to make this publication available. In the August issue there is a particularly interesting article on West Germany's plan for agriculture.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a country which is as rich in its resources as is Canada should study what other countries are doing. Here is a table compiled by the Department of Agriculture which shows that for the year 1957-58 Canada is paying producers on the basis of $1.40 per bushel. The price in France is $2.06; West Germany begins at $2.49 and rises each month until it reaches $2.77 to the farmer who holds his grain on the farm. Other figures are: Ireland, $2.09; Italy $3.61; Netherlands $1.92; Spain $4.20; Sweden, last year, $2.15; Switzerland, $3.92; Turkey, $3.73; the United Kingdom $2.01; the United States $1.93; Uruguay, $2.92.

Proposals now being mentioned in the press indicate a price of 50 cents a bushel for six bushels and a price of 30 cents for barley, 20 cents for oats and a maximum of $3,000 to a farmer who has 1,000 acres. This does not begin to meet the problem, so I hope the cabinet will give immediate consideration to the promises which were made to the Canadian people before the election that steps would be taken to see that those in Canada who produce food for this nation and other nations will receive a fair share of the wealth which is produced by all our people. I think it is very important that the government should give careful consideration to the submissions made recently by the interprovincial farm union council and the federation of agriculture.

I must urge that special consideration be given to the large markets available here in Canada. The bureau of statistics has made an interesting study of the distribution of non-farm income which appears in its most recent reference paper No. 76. It is pointed out that the average income per family in Canada in 1954 was $3,654. At first glance this seems to be a fairly high average but we must not forget that, according to this study, 12 per cent of the families in Canada received less than $1,000 a year income and a very large group received less than $2,000. I would therefore suggest that the question of family income be considered and all the people in Canada be given an opportunity of receiving a decent income so no one will be short of foodstuffs and the necessities of life.

I hope we will not lose sight of the fact that it remains true that two-thirds of the people in the world have never enjoyed one good meal. In a booklet published by the Department of National Health and Welfare in connection with world health day it is pointed out that if all the people in the world were to have enough of the right kind of food the production of cereals would have to be increased 50 per cent, the production of meat increased 90 per cent, dairy production increased 125 per cent, oil production increased 125 per cent and fruit and vegetable production increased 300 per cent.

Having established in Canada during the war that whatever is physically possible can be made financially possible I submit the time has now come when we should see to it that those who are producing food are given an incentive to produce all the food we can use, all we can sell and a large amount of food which we can give to the underdeveloped countries of the world to raise their standards to a much higher level.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I can understand any difficulty hon. members on the other side of the house or at the far end of the chamber had just a moment ago in realizing that I was in fact standing in my place. My colleague from Halifax is a full foot taller than I am. On June 10 the people in my constituency voted for both the long and short ends of the Conservative ticket.

Mr. Studer: And they got the short end, all right.

Mr. Morris: It is symptomatic of the change that came over Canada that day, Mr. Speaker, that in our two-seat constituency, one of two still remaining in Canada, we Conservatives now do not have a senior member for Halifax and a junior member for Halifax; we have simply a taller member and a shorter member.

Once upon a time I observed the goings on in this house from the gallery of the fourth estate above us. By all standards I have been subsequently exalted though it is permissible for me to wonder how I have gone up by coming down.

My first sense of gratitude at this time for being here is understandably to the people of my own constituency. My second, Mr. Speaker, is sincerely to the parliamentary press gallery wherein I spent the formative years of my political belief, wherein I received my first on-the-spot education in the labyrinth of government and from whence I watched with slow disenchantment the gradual decline of a once great political philosophy. I used to sit up there and think of Gilbert Keith Chesterton: "As much as I ever did, more than I ever did, I believe in liberalism, but there was once a rosy time when I also believed in Liberals."

The members of the parliamentary press gallery are indispensable to good representative government in this country. They are indeed the vital link between this house and the people. Under your direction, sir, they enjoy—and quite properly so—certain facilities to assist them in their work. Over the years as their numbers have grown with the increase in government activity and the people's interest in it the facilities allotted to them in this building have become crowded to the point where they are no longer conducive to the best effort on behalf of this house and, what is more important, they are not wholly conducive to the best interests of their readers, listeners and viewers. Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully ask your consideration in due course for the provision of improved facilities in this building for the membership of the parliamentary press gallery.

There is a second reason I ask your consideration which has to do with the honour and dignity of this house. It is no part of the intent of the press gallery, but its inevitable expansion into cramped quarters has necessarily involved the use of a corridor of this building, which cannot be as satisfactory as it might to those journalists who must work there and, Mr. Speaker, without their intent—indeed with no other choice—this constitutes in part a physical use of a small part of this building which is not in keeping with the use of the rest of the building.

As a new member I am sensible of the traditions of this house of assembly. We Nova Scotians have a long inheritance of representative government. Indeed we are preparing to celebrate a year hence, in October 1958, the 200th anniversary of our first house of assembly.

This building in which I stand represents to every Canadian the strength and glory of his self-government. I had walked many times the wide walk to this building but never before and perhaps never again with the same feeling with which I came to Ottawa soon after the election to take my oath as a member of parliament and to come quietly by myself to this house to which I had been sent in trust by my people. What did I encounter? A series of make-believe post offices, a stage at one end of the chamber, a congress of visiting persons—beyond doubt distinguished but not members of the Canadian parliament—with every seat taken, the aisle filled, the government lobby full of wires and box lunches and television receivers.

I do not question the worth of the organization that gathered here this summer but I do wish to object to the former government's allowing the use of this chamber for that or any gathering of a non-parliamentary nature and I do not think the government I have the honour to support would have allowed it.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Well, well.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, I do not want any post offices in this chamber and I do not want any strangers in my seat—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Morris: —whether we are in session or adjourned. This seat, or some seat, belongs to my electorate. I belong to them. I do not want any stranger in it; they have a right to a seat without let or hindrance. There are other places in the city where congresses may foregather. We are more than glad to have them among us, but not in this chamber which is the meeting house of Canada. It should be preserved for one purpose and one purpose only, to house the elected representatives who have the trust from time to time of the majority of their constituents.

To me, Mr. Speaker, as a fledgling member of parliament, trying my wings for the first time, the most important part of the speech from the throne I believe is appropriately at the very beginning. The Queen said:

> Parliamentary government has been fashioned by the wisdom of many centuries. Its justice, authority and dignity are cherished by men of good will. It will be the high purpose of my ministers not only to preserve these qualities but to take steps to make both houses of this parliament more effective in the discharge of their responsibilities to the people of Canada.

This is essentially the ideal that motivated the people of Canada, especially those in my constituency, on June 10, Mr. Speaker. If members are indeed honourable in the sight of their fellow men, then all other reform of legislation will come in good time. If parliament is debased, then the processes of representative self-government are in jeopardy.

We come to this particular parliament in the midst of a period of danger that is likely to be as profound as any in the modern history of the human race. Its symptoms are disintegration and conflict. We inhabit a world confronted with ballistic missiles, hydrogen and atomic bombs and now man-made moons. We stand very literally at the crossing of the ways. When the first atomic bomb was detonated in the Nevada desert 13 years ago, one reporter who witnessed it wrote:

> What I have just seen, the last man on earth, in the last milli-second, will see.

Another reporter who sat beside him saw a different light. He wrote:

> I felt as if I had been present at the dawn of creation, when the Lord said, "Let there be light".

We have to choose, Mr. Speaker, whether we are to go forward into the future to greater light or backward into the ooze and slime of the beginning. Unless our world is to revert to a chaos of competing barbarisms, a new and a better spirit must soon preside over the destinies of mankind. It halts in coming externally only because one country, and its earthly sputniks, refuse to open their iron curtain to grasp the hand of mutual survival which is offered to them. Internally, our greatest task at this first session of a new parliament, in the presence of a new government, is to undo any harm that may have been done the good name of parliament and to restore it to the people as the fountain of their liberties and the shield of their faith in their country.

I do not presume to say what other hon. members are expected to do by their constituencies but I am certain that my constituents did not send me here to engage in a reciprocity of childish invective and thoughtless insult across the floor of this house. I happen to differ in my political philosophy from hon. members on the other side, and indeed at the far end of this house, now inhabited by Social Credit members. This is only to say that they differ with me. We are all Canadians. I am only a young man; I make mistakes. A parliamentarian who does not make at least one mistake a day is not working, but I hope never to impute to those across the floor motives which I think are meaner than my own. We can disagree and do disagree but it is honourable disagreement of opinion that makes horseracing a gamble, marriage risky—and democracy work.

I do not propose at this time to speak at great length of the constituency of Halifax which I and my colleague (Mr. McCleave) have the honour and the duty to represent. There will be a better time and place for that, though I shall refer to it briefly in a moment. I should like, however, to make one or two brief general observations. If in doing so I violate the good spirit which I have just bespoken, I hope hon. members across the floor of the house will do me the honour of upholding the usual parliamentary usage of understanding that I am not to engage them in any reciprocity and they do not interrupt me in my maiden speech.

I have been sent here, Mr. Speaker, not only by Conservatives but by Liberals and by C.C.F. supporters. I regard myself as the member for all the people of Halifax. The duty assigned me on June 10 is, I think, to represent all my people along Conservative principles of conduct and government. I think the most significant reason I am here is that it was felt that my predecessors represented only those who they thought had supported them.

[Mr. Morris.]

Secondly, 10 of the 12 members of parliament from Nova Scotia sit on this side of the house. Most of us are young, 29, 33—my colleague and I 34—37 and 39. And who can call the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), our provincial caucus leader, anything but a sprightly youngster? I think we are likely to be more idealistic; we are likely to be more open-minded, I suspect that we are likely to be much more aggressive, than our predecessors.

We were not sent here by our fellow Nova Scotians to whine; we were not sent here to set our faces against the rest of Canada. We were sent here to get fair play, nothing less but nothing more, individually if we can, together if we must. We intend to work tirelessly to achieve for our people a fairer share of the gross national product. In nothing we shall ever do shall we intend to set ourselves against any other part of Canada. As I trust that nothing I shall ever do or say in this house will deny me the prospect of mutual respect with any member, so in everything we do we shall hope to prosper our country as a whole.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, it is a tradition that a new member in his maiden speech will constrain himself to deal with the opposition lightly, if at all, and his opposition shall not interrupt him. I do not intend to violate this usage when I say sincerely that I regretted as a new member an observation which I believe was made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was being "professorial" when he described to the house the procedure for the introduction and passage of interim supply. I personally was confronted for the first time in my life with the fact that I had a hand in the expenditure of $305 million and I was grateful for the minister's guidance. I would be surprised if new members on the back benches across the way did not appreciate the minister's consideration at a time when we were being asked for the first time to vote such large sums.

One of the two-twelfths of the Nova Scotia representation who do not sit on this side of the house, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen), told this house just before the supper recess that he would withhold congratulations to my leader but, sir, I entertain no such patronizing reservation about his leader. It has been an honour to have come to this house and to have shared its duties and the high honours of the past week—

Mr. MacEachen: May I rise on a question of privilege? I believe the hon. member for Halifax is sincerely mistaken in attributing remarks to me because I have not yet taken part in the debate.

Mr. Morris: I am sorry if I incorrectly addressed the remarks to the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond. The member on the other side of the house who spoke immediately prior to the recess made the remark that he would withhold congratulations to my leader. In any event, as I was saying, it was to me an honour to come to the house and to share what we have shared in the last week with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent). On behalf of my constituents, those who voted Conservative, those who voted C.C.F., those who voted Liberal, I join in extending to him and to Madame St. Laurent every good wish that their future years, after his announced resignation takes place, will be enriched with both peace and the honours his unquestioned service to his country have earned for them.

We have heard in the house in the last few days, Mr. Speaker, forecasts of gloom from the opposition benches. I should like to tell hon. members that they are not accurate as a description of the new government's support of my constituents. Since the 10th of June the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has undertaken to pay to the city of Halifax an annual sum equivalent to the business, or higher tax rate in the city on the vast bulk of federal government properties if the city will seek and secure remedial legislation to amend a technical phrase in the present city charter which requires the federal government to pay the residential, or lower, tax rate. This will mean an increase of $600,000 in the federal payment for the first year of its application, a payment which will rise in later years if the city tax rate rises.

Within 60 days of the election federal government agencies, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), announced contributions of $400,000, the largest single share, toward the removal of the notorious Fairview underpass which had been promised for more than 20 years. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has publicly promised sympathetic consideration for any proposal by the city of Halifax and the province looking forward to the large-scale urban redevelopment recommended by the Stephenson report, most of the cost of which was in turn borne by the federal government.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) has visited my constituency and has talked with us about the very real problems of the fishing community. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) has toured defence installations in my constituency as recently as early this month and is considering a joint proposal with the town of Dartmouth and the county of Halifax which will provide improved water services, not only to H.M.C.S. Shearwater but also for residential and commercial development on the Dartmouth side of Halifax harbour. Canada's first wholly-owned aircraft carrier, H.M.C.S. Bonaventure, has arrived and is now based at Halifax, and a new jetty for her use will shortly be available full time at H.M.C.S. Shearwater.

A large-scale campaign of public works has been undertaken since June or is being recommended for the next 12 months at Indian Harbour, Prospect, Sambro, Portugese Cove, Herring Cove, McNab's Island, Three Fathom Harbour, Owl's Head, Murphy's Cove, Cooper Point, Carter Point, Petpeswick and Ecum Secum. A mammoth new international airport at Kelly Lake, just outside the Halifax-Dartmouth metropolitan area, which will be able to handle the largest airliners is well under way and is being pushed. A new $2-¾ million federal government building to accommodate most of the previously scattered federal government offices in Halifax will open next year in my city and, Mr. Speaker, it will be heated by Nova Scotia coal.

New postal services are being established or are in process at Spryfield, Rockingham, Birch Cove and Eastern Passage. Last Saturday we were able to announce that tenders would shortly be called for a post office in Bedford. The supplementary estimates introduced in the house last week include an additional item of $900,000 for pier A-1. We are asking for action on several other projects, including greatly improved postal facilities in Dartmouth and additional harbour projects in Halifax. We will seek assurance of a fair and just share of Canadian shipbuilding and repair contracts.

But these projects I have cited are only examples of the government's concern for Halifax and its willingness to listen to the members from Halifax. It has done more in 22 weeks than our predecessors did in 22 years.

What is more important than the recitation of these public works is the attitude of the government. No longer do we come hat in hand as poor relatives. We are given fair play, no more and no less.

All these projects, Mr. Speaker, are in addition to the pay increases granted the armed services, federal civil servants and the R.C.M.P., increases which, in truth, were in part considered by the previous government and which are of great meaningfulness in my constituency. They are additional to the increased old age security, old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons payments promised in the speech from the throne. They are additional to the increases in war veterans allowances.

The forecasts of gloom are a part of and about as accurate as a prognostication told in Nova Scotia about a representative of a Liberal candidate in one of the constituencies on Cape Breton Island. This gentleman went canvassing one day prior to the last election on the great man's behalf. In a field he spied a farmer spading his garden, so he stopped his car, reached into the glove compartment, took out his little black book and found the name "Angus MacDonald". I hasten to say that this is neither the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. MacDonald), the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Macdonald) nor the late premier of Nova Scotia.

So he climbed over the fence and went up the field to the farmer. "MacDonald", he said, "I am canvassing for the Liberal candidate. If you could see your way clear to support him on the 10th of June he would appreciate it". "My friend", said MacDonald, "I knew his father. A bigger blackguard never watched the mist come up on Big Bras d'Or. I knew his brother. He was the laziest man from Dingwall to Judique and that sister of his, she talked more and said less than anyone I ever heard on the north side."

Mr. Studer: Like a Conservative.

Mr. Morris: "I would not vote for your man," he said, "if he was the only candidate running on any ticket in the country." Mr. Speaker, the Liberal canvasser went back down the field, over the fence to his car and took up his little black book and opposite the name of MacDonald he wrote the one word "Doubtful".

No one in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and I venture the judgment that no one in Canada expects miracles from a new government. Decent opinion in Nova Scotia is more than prepared to extend to the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet every loyal and patient understanding. Nova Scotians live today with a new hope. We hope for a greater justice from a new government. We trust that its measures for the Atlantic provinces' betterment will recommend themselves to the support of all members on all sides of the house.

On his way from Halifax to Ottawa for the opening of the first session of the first parliament of Canada Joseph Howe spoke words of his colleagues from Nova Scotia which are as appropriate for this day as they were when uttered by the great tribune 90 years ago. He said:

> When myself and my friends from the lower province were leaving, we did not know how we would be received here; but I am glad to say that we have been shown nothing but kindness and attention from all classes and creeds since we came to the city, and I can only say that if at any future time it is in my power, I shall be glad to participate in your enjoyments and to be of any assistance that I can . . . whatever opinions I hold will be honestly and openly expressed. I only ask that they be weighed fairly, and that I may be judged without prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, when the roll is called I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment moved by the Social Credit group and I shall vote against the amendment moved by the C.C.F. I shall vote for the gracious address in reply to the speech from the throne, moved and seconded so eloquently by my colleagues, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault).

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am a firm believer in traditions. One of them is that when a novice makes his maiden speech in this house he feels very much impressed; one might say that he feels as if squadrons of butterflies were reenacting the battle of Britain in his stomach. I am a follower of this tradition and believe me I feel the fluttering of each and every butterfly. However, I feel very much fortified by the realization of the fact that I do not speak for myself but for the thousands of Canadians who have sent me here. The Canadians of the constituency of St. Boniface have given me a mandate. It is my duty to act and speak on their behalf, and this I propose to do. I might add further that the results of the election were such that I acquired a further responsibility, that of representing the Liberals of the province of Manitoba in this house. There are many of them, young and experienced, women as well as men, farmers, craftsmen and labourers. They come from all walks of life and represent the very cream of the province. As a bit of further information regarding the present Liberal representation from Manitoba, it might be added that in the caucus for this province there is no discussion and all decisions are carried unanimously.

At this point I think it would be in order for me to congratulate Mr. Speaker and yourself on your appointments to your high offices. I wish also to congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I trust that by now the butterflies have left them.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, there are others and very different traditions that are extremely important and affect us closely. I cannot ignore what everyone keeps repeating: the tremendous joy, the very natural pride and the sincere emotion stirred in our hearts by the visit of our Queen. We were captivated by her charm and loveliness, and perhaps that which touched us most was the statement that she was indeed Queen of Canada. It is true that she is also the Queen of other countries to which we are bound by tradition or otherwise. But it was verily our Queen to whom we were giving homage and acclaim, we were bowing to the symbol of authority in Canada. In fact, our homage went beyond her person to take her along with us to the altar of our own land, Canada. For our own country alone has a right to our full and ultimate loyalty. Our Queen not only recognized this fact, but guided us in that direction.

Other thoughts came to my mind during those memorable days. I asked myself what my country was, in actual fact, and I came to a conclusion which, in changing but a few words, would perhaps apply to all Canadians.

For me, it is Langevin street, the Red river and the Seine and the Assiniboine, La Salle and Rat rivers. It is the vast plains with their rippling expanse of golden wheat, where snow squalls start before winter sets in. It is the Rockies and the Laurentians, the gardens of Victoria and the tiny harbours of Newfoundland.

This is no attempt to be lyrical, Mr. Speaker; I only wish, above all, to stress this basic fact that Canada begins at home, for each and every one of us, and then extends to our relatives and friends, then to each of our communities, to our parishes and municipalities, to our provinces, the ten of them, and to the great North. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what is sometimes heard out west? "What's the use? What chance have we got? Two-thirds of the population live down east. They do not care two hoots for us." But we do know that, deep down, the eastern people are quite fond of westerners. Nevertheless we have been faced with examples of ignorance for things western which, to say the least, have been most disconcerting. For instance, you are speaking with an easterner and he says: "So, you are from Winnipeg! When you get back you might say hello to a friend of mine". So you inquire politely what street he lives on and the answer comes: "Well, I cannot remember, but I do know he lives in Calgary."

The other day a lady from down east somewhere politely inquired if it was true that we had horses and cattle at the corner of Portage and Main. There is without a doubt greater ignorance of the west by eastern people than of the east by westerners. This is not good for Canadian unity and the harmonious understanding which should always be present when any decisions of a national nature are taken.

Mr. Speaker to return to what I was saying a moment ago, Canada begins in the home. If there is anything on which we can all be agreed here, it is that the greatest sacrifice a politician can make is to sacrifice, to some extent, his home life. Our duties and responsibilities are such, though, that we are far too often called away. It could be said of each and every one of us that the orbit of Canada is not its capital, but that our homes are the orbits of this country. Recognition of this fact should make us realize that all those homes, whether they be in the slums or in apartment homes, in the country or in modern cities: Vancouver, St. Boniface, Toronto or Saint John, are all equally important. All our decisions should have regard for this great truth. The family home is the basic unit of society and we must therefore, with the aid of Divine Providence, give it every opportunity for full development under this Canadian sun of ours, the sun of our country, Canada.

(Text):

Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is our Canada first. I said at the outset that I was very much impressed. I tried to describe my emotions. This leads me to understand the emotions of other members of this house, including not only the newcomers to parliament generally but the newcomers on the government front benches. They have given evident signs of anxiety at the magnitude of the job at hand. They surely realize the necessity for them to perform. To use the same words as those addressed to me by one of their members during the last election campaign, may I say: "I cannot wish you the best of luck but I wish you the very best". You will need all of it, even for what might be a comparatively short term of office.

Some of these gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, I know very well. I well remember, for instance, the then G.O.C. of the first Canadian division in England. I am sorry to say that he is not here in the house tonight. Undoubtedly he is busy with other duties. I think he would have liked to hear what I have to say. As I say, I remember him as the G.O.C. of the first Canadian division in England under which I served as a platoon commander with the royal twenty-second regiment at the beginning of world war II. His enthusiasm was infectious. He would show officers personally how to conduct a reconnaissance. On one occasion, on one of the hectic days of some manoeuvres where the Van Doos happened to steal the show, I remember his exclaiming with pride, "My French Canadian regiment in Hitchen". He was no doubt expressing his admiration for the many Canadians of French origin who have served their country in the armed forces. I have no reason to believe that he still does not have the same respect for their admirable fighting qualities. One might be surprised that I speak in this fashion but I believe in giving unto Caesar that which belongs to Caesar. I also want to let the hon. gentleman know that when I rise again and at that time quite possibly disagree with him, I still have respect for one of Canada's finest soldiers.

I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, if at this stage, it being almost ten o'clock, I might move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Deniset the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the government leader what is the business of the house for tomorrow. I also wonder whether he would not be good enough to outline in his remarks whether it is the intention during the course of the week to interrupt the debate on the address in order to discuss other matters of a government nature.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we plan to continue with this debate and also on Wednesday. However, on Thursday I think we shall interrupt the throne speech debate in order to deal with the resolution preceding a bill providing for cash advances on grain.

On motion of Mr. Green the house adjourned at 9.57 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 22, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister is it his intention to lay on the table of the house the correspondence, if there was correspondence, with the provincial governments about the forthcoming federal-provincial conference that the Prime Minister mentioned some time ago?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, at the earliest moment.

TRADE

REPORTED TRADE MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister. I notice that in the newspapers we are told a trade mission is proceeding to China. Could the Prime Minister give the house some information regarding this mission, if it is a mission, so that we may know something about it officially?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer that question for the hon. member. There is no trade mission as such proceeding to China in the sense that a large group of people are going on a mission; nothing of that sort is taking place. The situation is simply this. For a number of years we have had a trade commissioner living in Hong Kong and looking after Canada's trade interests in that area. During the course of the summer his area was extended to include adjacent territory, and some time ago our department suggested to him that he might look into the possibilities of trade on the mainland. It was left to him to use his own initiative as to how he would go about that enterprise.

What is happening at the moment is that his proposal is to leave some time in early November for a period of perhaps two weeks. He may visit four cities in China: Peking, Tientsin, Canton and Shanghai. What he will discover in the course of his visits I do not know. If there is a possibility of disposing of some of our good Canadian wheat in China, naturally he will report to us with regard to that. Actually, he is doing simply what the trade commissioner service throughout the world attempts to do, and that is initiate discussions with people who are interested in trade, discover possibilities for trade on the part of Canada, and inform Canadian businessmen as well as the Canadian government as to what the prospects are. It is a routine mission. It is not really a trade mission; it is just routine business, and it is just the initiative on the part of a trade commissioner dealing with the area that comes under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question. I understand he is going as an official of the department. May I ask who is making arrangements before he goes so that he may meet the right people? Is that being done through any other diplomatic agencies, through the United Kingdom or through any other agency of a government having diplomatic relations with China? Who are the officials who are making the arrangements for him to receive the right treatment in China?

Mr. Churchill: I have not the information at hand to answer that particular question, but I will obtain it.

Mr. Benidickson: The press report says that an external affairs man is to accompany him.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): May I ask the Prime Minister whether it would not facilitate the sale of wheat if we recognized the government of the mainland in connection with this visit?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have seen no facilitation or acceleration of the trade in so far as Britain is concerned in communist China, as a result of her recognition of the Chinese government prior to hostilities in Korea.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask what credentials the trade commissioner will be carrying on this mission, and to whom they will be addressed?

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is simply a plan that has been put forward, and it has not been finalized.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Hon. members across the house may laugh, but this has simply come to notice at this particular time without the final plans being made. It may be that I will have more information for the house in a few days with regard to this particular suggestion. So far as the details are concerned, I have not them available at the moment.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. Can the minister tell us whether or not the proposed visit has or has not the approval of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Churchill: I would say this, Mr. Speaker. Our trade commissioners stationed throughout the world are empowered on their own initiative to investigate ways and means of increasing trade with any country.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce supplementary to the questions that were asked earlier by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and others.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the house that supplementary questions are to be used sparingly to elucidate answers, and are not to be used for the purpose of engaging in debate. I have permitted five supplementary questions to the original question directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I feel that should satisfy the house, and that we should not go forward with further supplementary questions on that point.

GATT—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT MEETING AT GENEVA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Prime Minister another question on trade, based on the Department of External Affairs release announcing the start of the meetings of GATT at Geneva this week. What position has the Canadian delegation been instructed to take when the treaty for the establishment of the European free trade community and the possible adherence of Britain to this community are before the meetings of GATT?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I could answer that question for my hon. friend. So far as the GATT negotiations in general are concerned, a Canadian delegation will be there and it will have instructions to enter into negotiations for the renewal of GATT with certain modifications. As to the effect on those negotiations of the proposed plan for a European free trade area, it will be necessary for Canada to know more as to how far the countries in western Europe and the United Kingdom are going to go in this respect before it can attempt to give detailed instructions to its delegates in that regard.

From the extent to which this subject has been under current discussion for some time on the part of the countries of western Europe and the United Kingdom, I should think some clearer statement in that regard as to how far these countries intend to go in that direction, and how soon, may be forthcoming before the present GATT negotiations have run their course this autumn.

INQUIRY AS TO MINISTER JOINING UNOFFICIAL DELEGATION TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Before the cabinet leaves as a whole I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether it is his intention shortly to join the unofficial trade delegation to the United Kingdom?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, an announcement with regard to the mission will be made in due course.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF SCIENTIFIC INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question not related to the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I should like to direct the question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether, as a result of his discussion with President Eisenhower, steps are being taken to exchange scientific information, and whether it is contemplated to undertake any joint scientific projects?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I want to thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of this question. I will say this. This week end, when the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom visits Ottawa, one of the matters for consideration will no doubt be the exchange of scientific information. I am one of those who believe there is a necessity, having regard to the scientific advances being made today, for the free world to unite to the greatest degree possible in a spirit of co-operation to pool scientific information so that the free world will maintain its superiority in that direction. After I have the opportunity of discussing this matter with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom I will say more. At this time I can say no less.

GRAIN

LICENSING OF OFF-SITE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce giving consideration to the licensing of off-site storage for grain at country points in order to ease congestion?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I have a reply here which deals with the situation as of last year and the present position. The licensing of off-site grain storage was the subject of discussions between the board of grain commissioners for Canada and the Canadian wheat board in June, 1956. At that time the two boards issued a press release and an instruction to handling companies which read as follows:

> The licensing of off-site grain storage is a matter of concern to the board of grain commissioners for Canada and the Canadian wheat board. The board of grain commissioners are interested from the standpoint of actual licensing and the adequate warehousing of grain. The Canadian wheat board are interested from the standpoint of availability of grain for prompt shipment. Both boards have carefully reviewed their position in respect to the licensing of off-site storage facilities.
> As a result of discussions between the two boards it has been decided that no further applications for off-site storage will be considered. This decision has been reached after careful consideration of the storage position, including the extent of off-site storage presently licensed and the immobility of grain stored in many types of off-site facilities.

As indicated by the statement at that time, the two boards were concerned about the volume of grain which was then being warehoused in off-site facilities. Should deterioration set in, there was no way in which this grain could be turned and there could never be assurance that grain in off-site facilities would be moved forward promptly for treatment in terminal elevators. Another factor was that off-site storage facilities were confined to certain delivery points, giving advantages that could not be extended to producers generally.

I have inquired from both the board of grain commissioners and the Canadian wheat board as to whether, in their opinion, any change should be made in the policy which was announced on June 25, 1956. Both boards are of the opinion that the present restriction on licensing of off-site storage should be continued. In their opinion off-site storage is not a solution to the congestion problem, and could result in serious problems in respect of grain stored in these immobile positions.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Would the minister make inquiries himself to see whether in fact grain in off-site storage is not just as mobile within a 24-hour period as grain in any elevator annex? Would he further make his own observations as to the quality of the grain in off-site storage, which I believe to be generally superior to the quality of the grain in present annexes, many of which are not up to standard?

Mr. Churchill: I shall be glad to look into the question the hon. member has raised.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Acadia relative to off-site storage. Is it not a fact that the government is now approving and authorizing elevator companies to acquire off-site storage?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

R.C.A.F.—REPORTED EQUIPMENT WITH CF-105 PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence based on an article in last night's Citizen headed "Tory Corrects Quotes on Auxiliary Airmen". Is it true, as implied at this most recent press conference by the hon. member for York West, that the government is intending to proceed to equip the R.C.A.F. with the supersonic CF-105?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): No, it is not correct.

Mr. Sinclair: I would suggest that the hon. member be better informed before he gives more press conferences about that department.

Mr. Pearkes: No member gives press conferences about my department except myself.

Mr. Sinclair: That is a commendable statement, and the hon. member should keep it in mind.

Inquiries of the Ministry

U.S.-CANADA—INTEGRATED OPERATIONAL CONTROL OF AIR DEFENCE FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house whether the system of integrated operational control of the air defence forces of Canada and the United States through a joint command, as agreed to on August 1, has yet been set up and, if so, will he table the order in council and other relative documents?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Air Marshal Slemon is now at the headquarters at Colorado Springs, and I will be pleased to table the order in council.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LEVIS DIVISION—REPORTED DECREASE OF SECTIONS AND CONSEQUENT LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the decision of Canadian National Railways to decrease the number of sections in the Levis division, which is on the south shore of the St. Lawrence and covers my constituency? I do not have to add that this means the laying off of a number of sectionmen?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I think it is obvious to members of the house that the Minister of Transport cannot be advised at all times of any decrease or increase of traffic on the Canadian National or any other railway.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister be kind enough to inquire about it, because this decision is effective on November 1 and affects a great number of heads of families?

Mr. Hees: I shall be glad to look into that. If that had been the original question it would have been acceded to at once.

LIVESTOCK

HOG CHOLERA—IMPORTS OF PORK FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) asked several questions, as follows:

> Has there been any importation of pork into Canada from the United States and, if so, in what form? Does the United States hog producer use live serum for the control of cholera in that country?

The answer is importations of pork into Canada from the United States in the first six months of 1957 were as follows: Fresh pork, none; bacon, ham and other pork in prepared form, 160,548 pounds. All importations were cooked pork, in accordance with the provisions of a ministerial order prohibiting the importation of swine and uncooked pork into Canada.

In connection with the serum question, a live virus vaccine is used for the control of hog cholera in some states. I had perhaps better say in connection with that matter that anti-hog cholera serum, used widely in the United States in inoculating hogs against cholera, does not contain any virus, living or dead. Its effectiveness lies in its content of antibodies which protect against the disease.

Vaccines, also used in the control of hog cholera in the United States, are a totally different product from blood serums. Hog cholera vaccines contain the hog cholera virus itself and can be made with the virus either in live or attenuated form. I think that is what the hon. member was referring to rather than a serum.

[Later:]

FREE DISTRIBUTION OF TROLENE FOR CONTROL OF WARBLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I might say I gave him notice of the question at the opening of the house today. Owing to the interest of the livestock industry in this matter perhaps he will be disposed to take it as notice. Has the minister been informed of the systemic treatment by trolene for the control of warbles in cattle? If so, can he inform the house whether the government has any plan to undertake the free distribution of this treatment, as has been done with certain serums, in order to wipe out most of the annual loss of $14 million now estimated to be caused by warble fly infestation?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): As suggested by the hon. member I will take this question as notice and give an answer at the earliest possible time.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—GOVERNMENT PRICE ON SALES FROM STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, also on Friday the hon. member for Springfield asked this question:

> At what price is the government selling butter held in government storage to the trade at present?

I was sorry I was not able to hear his question at the time. The price is 63 cents a pound. There have been no sales, as a matter of fact, by the agricultural prices support board since the price was put at 63 cents, which is a price designed to cover our buying price of 58 cents a pound plus the costs of storage and handling.

[Later:]

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture in view of the answer he has just given. If the government is supplying this butter at 63 cents a pound to the trade, how then is it possible that the wholesale price of butter is 62 cents?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I stated in my previous reply that there has been no demand as far as the wholesale trade is concerned for this butter, and we have not been selling any of the butter held by the agricultural prices support board since the price was placed at 63 cents.

Mr. Schulz: May I ask another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Why did the government raise the price of butter in the first place?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, it was not a matter of raising the price of butter. We placed the selling price of the butter held by the agricultural prices support board, as I explained a few moments ago, at 63 cents in order that there would be no cost to the taxpayer in handling this butter.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not in the house when the question was asked with regard to butter. I heard only part of the answer and therefore I may have misunderstood; but did I understand from the last answer given by the Minister of Agriculture that the prices board has directed that the wholesale price of butter be raised to 63 cents?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker. What the prices board have done is set their selling price for butter at 63 cents.

Mr. Gardiner: That means the same thing, then. They have raised it from 58 cents to 63 cents.

Mr. Harkness: Yes; as I explained before this was done so there would be no expense to the taxpayer involved in handling this butter.

Mr. Gardiner: But is it not true that this will mean that the consumer will pay the difference?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact the wholesale price of butter has not yet reached 63 cents, and as I said previously we have not sold any butter as a result.

SHIPPING

LAKEHEAD—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT OF OCEAN PORT FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question of which I have already given him notice. Since the United States has announced plans to develop Duluth as the western terminal for the St. Lawrence seaway, will the federal government take immediate steps to develop a suitable harbour and harbour facilities at the lakehead to act as an ocean port for western Canada when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of the question he has put. I think I can best answer it by repeating the answer I gave to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) when I replied to his question on October 16 last. At that time I said:

> I have discussed this matter with my colleague the Minister of Public Works. As a result of these discussions, officials, not minor officials but senior officials, of both departments will go to the lakehead next Monday—

That was yesterday.

> —to examine the harbour facilities to ascertain if they are adequate, in their opinion, to handle such extra traffic as could reasonably be expected to arise when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed.
>
> A survey will be carried out from an engineering point of view. Following that survey, a thorough study from the economic point of view will be carried out by the economics section of my department in order to ascertain just what additional traffic might be expected to pass through to the lakehead as a result of the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway.

COASTAL STEAMSHIPS—REVIEW OF SUBVENTION POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question, notice of which I have sent him. Is it the intention of the government or of the Department of Transport to review the policy with reference to subventions for coastal steamships across Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Laurier for his courtesy in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question; and as he as a former minister of this department well knows, these steamship subventions have always been subject to annual review and this government intends to continue that practice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—STATEMENT ON CONTRIBUTION AND PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in connection with a question asked by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) relative to the prospective Canadian contribution to the Colombo plan and also questions that were asked by some other hon. members, I wish to advise that, subject to the approval of parliament, Canada will contribute $35 million to the Colombo plan in 1958.

For some years now the basic Canadian contribution to the Colombo plan has stood at $26.4 million. In order to meet certain additional expenditures in connection with the Warsak project in Pakistan and the Canada-India reactor, this amount was supplemented by a further $8 million both this year and last. We have now decided to do away with this idea of a basic contribution to which additional amounts are added. We shall therefore seek the authority of parliament to provide that the total vote for Canada's regular Colombo plan program be, as I stated a moment ago, $35 million for this year.

In connection with the expenditures being made thereunder we have agreed, first, to provide $1 million worth of flour to the government of Ceylon. The proceeds of the sale of this flour will be used by the government of Ceylon for various development projects.

Second, the government of Pakistan has drawn our attention to the very serious floods that occurred recently in west Pakistan and to the resulting need for food grains. We have therefore offered $2 million worth of wheat to the government of Pakistan out of Colombo plan funds and the government of Pakistan has indicated that this would be very welcome. This wheat will be shipped very shortly.

In India we have proposed to the government of that country that the balance of counterpart funds held by the Indian government which have been created by the sale of Canadian commodities supplied under the Colombo plan will be used to meet the further rupee costs of the Canada-India reactor. These counterpart funds amount to the equivalent of $2,900,000.

In connection with other proposals concerning the Colombo plan program they will be announced in due course after they have been discussed with the governments concerned. Might I add that later today the leader of the Canadian delegation to the Colombo plan conference at Saigon, Hon. W. J. Browne, will be announcing in that country what I have stated here.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question with reference to the report which was read by the Prime Minister. Will the increase the Prime Minister announced today in the Colombo plan payments be endorsed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Thanks for mentioning my name.

[Later:]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with his statement about Canada's contribution to the Colombo plan. Does the government consider making a contribution to the special United Nations fund for economic development?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact the minister is in New York at this moment, and consideration is being given to that problem at this time.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's answer to my friend the hon. member for Nanaimo regarding the special United Nations fund for economic development, to the effect that the minister was considering it at the United Nations, may I ask what instructions, if any, the government has given the minister in this regard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The instructions were to give the best possible consideration to that question.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister not aware that it is usual with delegations at the United Nations to have any proposal of this nature involving the expenditure of money come from the government at Ottawa rather than from the minister who is present at the assembly?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned no one needs any lecture of that kind from the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are several matters before the United Nations at this time, and when the matter of decision comes up it will be the decision of the government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES—PASSES FOR MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to address to the Minister of Transport. Now that he is the Minister of Transport when will he implement the proposal he made so often as a private member in this house that all members of parliament who came from a distance of more than 500 miles from Ottawa should be given passes on Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing this matter at some length with the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and I have recently received a report from him which I am studying. I might say that I am rather startled at the cost to the taxpayers which it appears this would involve. However, I can assure the hon. member and all hon. members that I am just as interested as I ever was as a private member in this matter.

Some hon. Members: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Byrne: Well, might I ask a supplementary question, then? If he thinks this would be too difficult would he be prepared to extend it to say 1,000 miles?

Mr. Hees: I was just about to say before I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is receiving my very serious consideration and that of the management of Trans-Canada Air Lines. I very much hope that something can be worked out.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact members of parliament have passes on the railways does he consider that with the limited facilities of Trans-Canada Air Lines this parliament would be justified in proposing passes on Trans-Canada Air Lines in view of the financial burden involved?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the matters that is receiving very serious consideration at the present time.

REQUEST FOR SHORTENING OF QUESTION PERIOD THIS DAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again I rise as I did yesterday to ask whether or not the thirst for dependable information has not been assuaged. The Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour has been waiting since eleven o'clock to meet with the ministers of this cabinet, and with the consent of the house—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Some ministers will stay here?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think 50 minutes is a fair length of time.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the leader of the government a question. Is it the intention of the government or of the house leader, when important delegations meet with the government at certain fixed hours, to abridge the length of the question period in the house?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I have not noticed that the time allowed for questions has been abridged very much to date.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—APPOINTED DAYS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the throne speech debate may I point out that routine proceedings and orders of the day describe today as the fifth appointed day. Hon. members will recall that on Thursday last less than an hour was devoted to the throne speech debate. For that reason it is not the intention of the government to count that day as one day in the debate. Therefore I am asking that tomorrow's order paper show tomorrow as the fifth appointed day.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare has now given notice of resolutions with regard to the matters in the speech from the throne that come under his purview, will the Minister of Veterans Affairs give notice of his resolutions regarding amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): We will take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker, and give the hon. member an answer later.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION—MONTREAL COURT DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the very serious charges which his other department laid in the courts and in view of the report of the judgment given in the court of sessions in Montreal yesterday, is the minister giving consideration to appealing and, if so, would he advise the house of the results of that consideration?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are expecting a report from counsel today and as soon as that is received consideration will be given to the question of appeal. As requested, we will announce the decision as soon as it is made.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK—CONSTRUCTION OF SPUR LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house if it is his intention to bring before the house during the present session a bill to authorize the construction of a spur line from the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation deposits to the proposed location of the new harbour at Caron point near Bathurst?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no plans for such a spur line at the present time.

CRIMINAL LAW

CAPITAL AND CORPORAL PUNISHMENT—ACTION ON REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I regret I have not had an opportunity of giving him notice. What action is being taken by the government to implement the report of the joint committee on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries made to this house last session?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I said in reply to a question raised by an hon. gentleman opposite earlier, the previous administration did not make available an opportunity for that report to be discussed in the house. Before we can make any definite decision on it we are inclined to consider that parliament should be given an opportunity to discuss it, and that matter is under consideration at the present time.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

KITIMAT, B.C.—CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, of which I have given him notice, in relation to what plans there are and what steps are being taken with respect to providing a much needed federal government building in Kitimat?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of this question. The answer is that the department is at present studying the requirements of the various departments in order to establish the size of the site required. A private architect has been retained to prepare the plans and specifications, but no start has been made as yet.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have any discussions been held with the Aluminum Company of Canada about acquiring property?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries about that question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, and I believe this concerns the Secretary of State as well. Does the government at this session intend to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act by removing the objectionable section 55 of that act, which presently bars the way to collective bargaining for federal civil servants?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member intended to direct his question to the Secretary of State or to the Minister of Labour. Was the question directed to the Secretary of State?

Mr. Ellis: Well, I believe both are very much interested in this matter, and I am not too concerned as to who prefers to answer. Nevertheless I want an answer from the government.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is probably aware the matter is under consideration, and representations have been heard from several of the associations.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, my desire is to find out whether the government intends to take action on this matter at this present session. I fully realize the matter is under consideration.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, if and when a decision is taken in this matter the hon. member will find out.

POWER

STATEMENT ON DISPOSITION OF DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS IN INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the supplementary question directed to me on the orders of the day on October 18 by the hon. member for Kootenay East. The hon. member asked whether negotiations have been transferred back to the international joint commission. I have consulted with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is more directly concerned in these matters of diplomacy, and the answer is that the negotiations were never transferred to or from the international joint commission. Concurrent with discussion within the international joint commission under the reference made to the commission in 1944 by both the United States and Canadian governments, diplomatic talks were initiated in 1956. Both forums remain open to the governments as regards the matter within the respective spheres of these forums.

As to the main question asked, there will be a statement on this at a later time.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether since I led a delegation to Washington on May 20 on that subject there has been any correspondence exchanged or any meeting with the United States authorities on that very important matter?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's supplementary question on this point, there have been negotiations with members of the United States government, but I am not prepared at this time to give any more details than that.

Mr. Lesage: Will the minister inquire in his department and give an answer to my question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will be glad to inquire, but I have already given the answer.

BRIDGES

NUNS' ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO SITE AND NAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yves Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister describe to this house the specific site of the new bridge which will span St. Paul island, commonly called Nuns' island, facing Verdun? Has a name already been selected for that bridge?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question, but since I received it just as I was coming into the house it was impossible for me to obtain a plan or a detailed description of the exact location of this bridge. However, there has been quite a bit of publicity in the press about its location, and if the hon. member would care to call at the office of the national harbours board they will be very glad to show him the plan giving all of the information that he would like to obtain.

Mr. Chevrier: He should get the information in the house.

Mr. Hees: Second, I would like to advise him that no name has yet been decided upon for the bridge.

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): A supplementary question about the name. Will the minister who has jurisdiction over this bridge agree with my suggestion made in this house last year that such new bridge be named the Louis St. Laurent bridge.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, this being a democratic government it is always willing to consider any suggestion. However, I think that in the democratic way the people of Canada decided otherwise on June 10.

ALASKA HIGHWAY—DISRUPTION OF COMMUNICATIONS OVER PEACE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Perhaps I might give a further reply to various questions which were asked concerning the bridge over the Peace river which collapsed recently. I think hon. members will be interested to hear that as a result of the emergency measures taken, traffic has now been restored on the northwest highway. A ferry capable of carrying 50 tons is now operating a short distance upstream from the collapsed bridge at Taylor flats. The offer of the premier of British Columbia to use the Pacific Great Eastern Railway bridge has been accepted. Detours from the highway to this bridge are being constructed. The bridge will have to be planked before it can be made passable for vehicles. It is hoped that these roads will be built and the bridge put into a condition for vehicle traffic within the next three weeks. The use of the Pacific Great Eastern bridge will ensure full resumption of highway traffic, while the ferry meets immediate needs.

I might say that there has been a splendid spirit of co-operation shown by all parties connected with this operation. These include provincial government officials, construction companies and personnel of the Royal Canadian Engineers. Meanwhile, alternative routes are being utilized via the towns of Peace River and Dunvegan.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS TO ACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that in the resolutions of which he has given notice calling for amendments to the Old Age Security Act and related statutes he has been good enough to give us all the other details, can he now tell us what is to be the effective date?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the effective date will appear in the legislation when the bill appears before the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There will be no gap?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to address a supplementary question to the house leader. Can he say whether consideration is being given to arranging for the house to proceed with this social security legislation at an early date?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The government hopes to be able to go ahead with this measure at the earliest possible date.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

R.C.A.F. DEPOT, MONCTON—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR INCREASES IN PAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Westmorland asked a question of the Minister of Public Works regarding the rates of pay of labourers and mobile equipment operators and mechanics at No. 5 depot, R.C.A.F. station, Moncton. Since these personnel are employed by the Department of National Defence perhaps I might answer the question.

These employees, in accordance with long-standing practice, are paid rates of pay prevailing in the area of employment for the class of work performed. The government gives continuous consideration to the adequacy of the wage rates of the personnel who are paid on the basis of prevailing rates of pay.

Wage surveys have recently been conducted in the Moncton area by the Department of Labour, and that department expects very shortly to submit to my department recommendations with respect to wage rates of labourers, operators of large and small tractors, mechanics and other classifications employed at No. 5 supply depot, Moncton. When these recommendations are received they will be submitted promptly by my department to the treasury board.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY REGARDING DEDUCTIBILITY OF MEDICAL EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister giving consideration to his own often-expressed ideas concerning the deductibility of medical expenses for income tax purposes? Does he intend to make arrangements for all medical expenses to be deductible, including payments for eyeglasses and other such items?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows quite well that whenever a decision is taken on this matter it will have to be announced by the Minister of Finance at a particular time in the session, because this is something that obviously affects the balance of ways and means.

I should like to add this for the benefit of my hon. friend, who keeps bringing up subjects upon which members on this side of the house have spoken, and spoken very earnestly, in times gone by. We have been in office for four months. We have been preparing for an important session with a heavy volume of legislative work. No government in this country's history has done as much in the space of four months as this government has done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the minister not to trespass on the rules.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister did not hear my remarks. I was just suggesting that ministers as well as members who ask questions are bound by the rules, and that it is not desirable to enter into too lengthy explanations or to begin arguments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's reference to announcements of this kind being made at certain times in the session, can he say whether, in pursuance of the suggestion that there would be income tax changes, he will be introducing a budget at this session—

Mr. Sinclair: As he promised.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —so there will be a budget debate, as required by the rules?

Mr. Fleming: Measures to implement the undertakings of the government and to carry forward the program outlined in the speech from the throne will be introduced in due course, and the sooner we have co-operation from the hon. member and others the sooner we will get that program before the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the minister's request for co-operation, may I ask if he will co-operate by answering the question whether there is to be a budget introduced at this session and a budget debate as provided by the rules of the house?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, whatever is required to give effect, in accordance with the sound practice of parliament, to the program which has been announced in fulfilment of the undertakings made to the Canadian people in the election campaign, and which they endorsed, will most assuredly be done.

Mr. Sinclair: I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The rule book is still in the river.

Mr. Sinclair: Does the Minister of Finance not recall his own solemn promise last July that there would be a budget at this session?

Mr. Fleming: I do not know what solemn promise the hon. member for Coast-Capilano is talking about. Promises were made in the election campaign and those promises—

Mr. Sinclair: Since the election.

Mr. Fleming: —will be fulfilled to the letter.

Mr. Sinclair: Since the election.

Mr. Fleming: I suppose the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, with no more than his usual accuracy, is referring to a statement that was referred to by the Leader of the Opposition the other day. I can say that what was indicated then on my part was that whatever was required in the way of resolutions—

Mr. Pickersgill: A budget.

Mr. Fleming: —to give effect to the undertakings of the campaign would be introduced. That is still the position. I am indeed flattered, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member should be so impatient to hear a speech from me after what he said last Thursday.

Mr. Sinclair: It is not a speech. It is either yes or no as to whether or not there is going to be a budget. No speech; just yes or no.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is one of the most evasive replies we have ever had.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made a few remarks in French and in English, and then the inexorable hand of time indicated that it was almost ten o'clock, at which time the house kindly permitted me to resume my speech today.

(Translation):

Yesterday, most of my remarks were in French, but today I propose to speak in English, because I do not want the immediate effect of my words to be lost on the members of the government. That this should be the case is regrettable. However, in this loyal and friendly though earnest joust, no one will blame me for making use of the best weapons at my disposal.

(Text):

Yesterday I was paying my compliments to one of Canada's great soldiers, and I still pay my respects today. However, I did advise the hon. gentleman that when I rose again it might be quite possible that I would disagree with him, and I find that it is my duty to bring to his full knowledge the great concern aroused throughout the country concerning government policy with regard to the militia. We know now that summer camps are not to be held in 1958. Militia personnel will have the opportunity to attend camps with the regular forces, but of course there will be fewer militia people interested because one of the great attractions of the militia is for one to train with his own unit.

Another loss could be from the point of view of teamwork. Teamwork is one of the fundamentals of sound military training. Furthermore the days of training have been reduced from 60 to 40 which means a total of 80 evenings of training. But if one excludes week-end schemes and range firing which should take at least five or six days of training the evenings of training will be reduced to about 68. In addition we now have the block syllabus based on civil defence precis taking 60 periods. This would mean at two periods an evening 30 evenings out of 68.

What does the department propose to do regarding recruit training, basic training, weapon training, qualifications for infantrymen, group 1, specialist training, signals training, driving and maintenance, qualification of N.C.O.'s, professional advancement training for officers, and so on? These are all questions that people across the country in the militia and people interested in the work of the militia are asking.

I must confess that at this stage I am a bit bewildered, and that many Canadians are bewildered. It is of the utmost necessity that the government determine what its policy is and, furthermore, state it clearly for the benefit of all.

I must turn now, Mr. Speaker, to some remarks which were made in this house by the Minister of National Defence. I refer to Hansard for Wednesday, October 16, at page 38. The minister was speaking of the militia, and I read what he is reported as having said:

> That may not be as glamorous a role as some of the other ones which have in the past been carried out by the militia, but I am confident that the militia will render the same patriotic service in this role as it has always done, rather than seeking some phony, glamorous role which hardly exists.

[Mr. Deniset.]

It is true that the minister backtracked somewhat in his remarks, as is evident from what I shall read farther down on this page:

> There is no suggestion of the militia having carried out in the past any role that could be considered as phony or glamorous, but there might be roles carried out in the future which would not be practical.

I feel it is possible that at that time the minister made a slip of the tongue, but I should like to have it placed on record that during the last three years I have had the privilege of commanding one of Canada's finest regiments, the Winnipeg Grenadiers. I relinquished that command at the end of September because of my obvious duties here in Ottawa. I will say this, that I do not consider the officers, non-commissioned officers or men under my command have performed any training during the last three years that could be termed either phony or impractical. We did not intend, during the winter training program, to contemplate any training that could be termed either phony or impractical.

Furthermore, I have been associated with the militia during the last eleven years, and I must say that neither the Winnipeg Grenadiers nor the 19 militia groups in greater Winnipeg have contemplated or carried out anything that could be termed either phony or impractical. I believe the same remarks will apply to the militia right across Canada. I feel that the thousands of Canadian people who have sacrificed so many evenings, so many week ends and so many vacations during the summer time, purely as a result of devotion to duty to carry out training with the militia, deserve an explanation, and I trust this explanation will be forthcoming sooner than in mere due course.

Another hon. gentleman on the front benches, Mr. Speaker, is one who has the job of selling wheat. He no doubt remembers the years we spent together at law school, and he can expect that we will resume the discussions that were started in those days. Following the example set by my leader, I do not propose to obstruct the minister's work, but certainly he can expect criticism, which I shall try to make as constructive as possible. The minister's task is so difficult and the difficulties facing Canadian agriculture are so great that I would rather help than engage in petty politics.

The agricultural problem in Canada is not new. It has been with us for many years, and is of such a nature that it is likely to remain with us for a great number of years. It cannot be solved in one day. As a matter of fact there are few solutions to the problem that could be said to be of a permanent nature because of the economics involved. I have paid close attention to the many speeches that have been made, particularly by western members, concerning agriculture. Yesterday I found great enjoyment in listening to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), and I want to congratulate him upon his speech. It definitely showed that he had done his home work. I would say that his remarks proved that the agricultural problem is indeed a very intricate one.

I was surprised, therefore, to hear the Prime Minister, in his address in reply to the speech from the throne, try to lay the blame on the previous administration. Surely he does not expect the Canadian people to be so naive as to believe him in that regard. He knows quite well that the previous administration did its best to try to retain markets and find new ones. He has the files at his disposal. The present government, after studying the matter with experts, created a committee of three wise men. They then sent four heavyweights to the United States for a conference on economic matters. What happened? The United States secretary of commerce is reported to have stated, "We fixed them." I do not believe that this is really what happened, but that is what was said.

These four heavyweights, including the Prime Minister, must have realized the tremendous difficulties, not only those that lie ahead but those which the previous administration had faced. Although I am a novice in this house, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised and saddened to hear a man as responsible as the Prime Minister of Canada trying to throw the blame for this situation on persons of whom it was never said they had been fixed, and when the present administration does not seem to be doing any better. It would appear that they are doing much worse. The people of Manitoba, at any rate, are not as gullible as the present government would like them to be.

We heard statements that there would be more trade with Great Britain and less with the United States. This interested the western farmer. It meant the possibility of greater sales of wheat and other grains. Then, when the British government proposed free trade between Britain and Canada, it was really humiliating to find the only reaction one of "intensive examination and consideration". It appeared as if Britain was calling Canada's bluff. I do not propose to say that at this time it is possible to implement complete free trade, although it is a goal of which we must not lose sight. There are, indeed, very formidable difficulties in the way. But why try to impress the western farmers by saying that free markets are to open in Britain; that wheat "galore" will be sold, and then when there is a chance for the western farmer to sell his wheat the government admits that finding markets is not as easy as it would look on the surface. I might say, too, that one day the western farmers will call the Conservatives' bluff.

I should like to turn now to certain problems in my own constituency. I would point out that while these problems are local in their application, their solution will stem from government policy which has to be applied in many other constituencies across Canada. First of all I would refer to the matter of erosion. At the junction of the Assiniboine and Red rivers, in the very heart of the metropolitan area of greater Winnipeg, the combined waters of these rivers eats the earth away from the east bank of the Red river. This is where the St. Boniface hospital is situated, as well as many other buildings having a total value of well over $10 million. There is also Tache avenue, which is a main artery of the city of St. Boniface.

The situation thus created simply cannot be allowed to continue. I understand that some proposals were made to the government, but they are still under study. I noticed the statement made by the Minister of Public Works in which he said the federal government could not be held responsible for erosion unless it was attributable to navigation. I wonder what the government would do if the erosion was endangering navigation itself. The earth that is continually taken away from the bank falls into the river and lifts up its bed. Consequently it endangers navigation and, furthermore, increases the danger of floods. It is not necessary for me to recall to the house the anxious moments of the inhabitants of the Red river valley during the 1950 flood. In this regard I might add that the people of Manitoba are still very grateful for the assistance provided at that time. I shall leave this point now because I propose to take up the matter again with the Minister of Public Works.

Another problem in my constituency is caused by the fact that the town of Transcona used to be only a railway town practically under the control of the Canadian National Railways. Now it is a growing, prosperous and industrious community, the hub of southeastern Manitoba. The Canadian National Railways take the stand that they do not legally have to pay taxes to the municipality. All the town of Transcona gets is a grant in lieu of taxation. The town of Transcona is demanding that these grants be more realistic. Year after year resolutions are passed by meetings of mayors and municipalities asking for more realistic grants.

There is also in Transcona the matter of getting the Canadian National Railways to pay their share of sewer and water installations on Pandora avenue, east of Madeline street. The railways have been asked to pay their share of these improvements but they refuse to do so, and their reason is that they feel that such sewers and water mains are of no useful purpose to them. This means that a municipal taxpayer who is close to the railways must pay more taxes than do other taxpayers.

It may very well be that the railways stand is solid on legal grounds. However, I am not speaking of the law at this time but rather of what would be a fair way in which to deal with taxpayers. One would expect that the Canadian National Railways could more easily afford to pay taxes than the small taxpayer. This again is a matter that I shall bring up again in the near future with the minister concerned.

I understand further that one line going through the municipality of Springfield does not pay anything, this again because of an old statute. One cannot but have a feeling at times that big people do not care about small people, many of them railway employees. Surely statutes do not exist solely to protect big people. Other statutes may be passed.

In conclusion I should like to set out the reasons why I do not propose to support the amendment to the amendment nor the amendment itself to the motion. I have first of all to look at the motion of the Social Credit party and I read as follows:

> However, we regret that there is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that it is the government's intention to ask parliament to lay down a scientific, modern financial policy for Canada that will guide the Bank of Canada in its operations, . . .

The important governing words, I submit, are "scientific, modern financial policy". This would mean a scientific, modern financial policy according to Social Credit principles. I have read many articles about Social Credit and I have read a number of speeches made by Social Crediters, and as yet I must confess that I find their financial theories to be rather nebulous. Furthermore, their financial theories have not been applied in the two provinces which have Social Credit governments. I would venture to say that the success of the Social Credit party in these two provinces has been caused by the fairly sound administration by the people concerned, but it is in no way a proof that Social Credit principles are sound. For that reason I cannot support that particular amendment.

I now turn to the C.C.F. amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I will try to read the governing phrases:

> We respectfully submit, however, that in the opinion of this house Your Majesty's advisers should give immediate consideration to the advisability of taking steps to deal with the menace of inflation, rapidly rising unemployment and other serious problems facing this country. We call upon the government to give immediate effect to the social and economic planning necessary to cope with these problems.

Here the governing word is "planning", and "planning" here can mean only planning à la C.C.F. I should now like to say a word about the C.C.F. I have followed their progress with great interest throughout the years, and I have found many admirable things in what they said. As a matter of fact, when they speak of social security and social justice I believe that they are preaching pure Liberal doctrine. I go along with them 100 per cent along those lines. I believe that the big must help the small and that the rich must help the poor. That is only charity, and that should be done.

On the other hand, when I follow their philosophy and principles to their logical and ultimate conclusion, I cannot but fear that we would end up with a form of bureaucratic government of the worst order. There is enough bureaucracy as it is. Too much government interference is not good. We would lose a sense of initiative and we would lose fundamental rights to private property and free enterprise. For these and other reasons I simply cannot go as far as they do. For that reason I cannot support their amendment.

Turning to the motion for the address itself, I should like to state that I do not propose to vote against the government on this occasion. The reason is simply this. My electors have asked me not to do so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deniset: That statement applies not only to my electors but to the electors of the province of Manitoba. I am not speaking of parties right now; I am speaking of electors generally. In order to explain what I am talking about, let me refer to a certain statement that was made by the Prime Minister in his own speech. You will recall that he was asking us why we did not permit a vote to take place. Then pointing to the heckling he was receiving he said, "They have already jeered themselves out of this side of the house". It was a Shakespearean gesture. I cannot here re-enact the scene, Mr. Speaker, but at that time I could not help but think to myself, "If anything, the Conservatives have done nothing but promise their way out of this side of the house where I am".

I say this in all seriousness. Since the June 10 election I have been out in my own constituency and elsewhere in Manitoba. I have spoken to hundreds if not thousands of people. We talked about the election. We said, "What are we going to do now?" The most common remark was, "Well, we will see what they can do. They are in office. They promised many things, such as reduction of taxation and increases in services. Let us give them a fair chance but"— and it is that "but" that stands out—"watch out if it does not come true." Some even say, "Watch out when it becomes impossible". One cannot help but remember the old saying, Mr. Speaker: "You can fool some of the people all of the time, you can fool all the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time." Beware, I tell you—

Mr. Fulton: That is what you discovered on June 10.

Mr. Deniset: The bubble may burst.

An hon. Member: Which bubble?

Mr. Deniset: Yours. The Canadian people will stand for only so much oratory, and I would suggest that in the final analysis they will prefer to a cascade of words, however eloquent they may be, the record of achievement to which they have been accustomed during the last 22 years.

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): As a new member, Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to congratulate you on your appointment to the high office you hold and to pledge my support in first learning the rules of this house and, second, in abiding by your rulings which I am sure will always be given in full sincerity.

May I next congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the speech from the throne, which I feel they did excellently.

As the member representing the southern portion of the great northern city of Edmonton I am, of course, particularly interested in congratulating the member for Calgary South, our neighbouring southern city. As you know, out there normally we fight it out in football or anything else, but when we get here we have a rather close affinity. It is therefore, I feel, important that at this stage I agree with him on at least one question. He brought forward the question of the position of Canada's oil companies in comparison with American oil companies so far as income tax is concerned. I feel that it is fully justified that he should work within his party to achieve an improvement in this situation. Of course Calgary is the paper oil capital of Canada and therefore it should be his duty to continue with this job. We in Edmonton have the production facilities.

I note that the hon. member who spoke immediately before me on behalf of the Liberal party took issue with our amendment to provide a scientific, modern, financial policy, on the basis that we had not already done so in the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. May I remind him that the Liberal party proved through the courts that this was their responsibility at the federal level. I am very pleased to acknowledge the great compliment he paid our provincial administration in saying that what has been done has been accomplished through very sound administration.

In my opinion the importance of the memorable occasion which we witnessed at the opening of this parliament is not to be found only in the glorious traditions which were represented but rather the effectiveness displayed in the present and the good omens portended for the future. My wife and I were deeply conscious of the honour which had been given us when we had the privilege of meeting the sparkling eyes of Queen Elizabeth and attempting to return the smile of Prince Philip. As we shook hands we were well aware that our duty on this occasion was to bring the greetings of everyone in our constituency at home to the royal couple and through them to Canadians everywhere; and, yes, to the members of that great association of peoples throughout the world which our royal family represents.

It was very apparent here in Ottawa and in Hull as the crowds gathered from day to day, as the children cheered and the members of this parliament mixed happily together, that the royal couple have a unique power to bring us together on a common ground in joyous jubilation. For a time at least our newspapers, radio and television forgot the tragedies, crimes and fears which normally form their headlines, to unite across the country and bring us joyous news of every event which happened throughout the opening of this parliament by Her Majesty. Even if our royal family served no other purpose than to bring us happily together they should be cherished as irreplaceable. May it ever be thus.

We notice in the speech from the throne that it is the intention of the government to continue the Colombo plan, for which I am sure they are to be complimented. As was mentioned on the floor of this house this morning and at other times, it appears that we intend to use wheat as part of our contribution in that area. May I note that this will have a twofold message of good will, first to the recipients in that area of southern Asia and other distant lands and, second, to the western wheat farmers. All too often in the past the only gifts which we as a nation seemed to think of were those of arms and weapons of war. These in some instances can have a twofold purpose, in that they may be used either for or against our best interests.

We note that there will be held shortly a dominion-provincial conference. While the government are conducting this conference I would ask them to keep in mind that the taxes paid by the people of Alberta are to a large extent collected by the dominion government in other provinces, and I charge them therefore with the job of ensuring that equalization payments are made in a fair and just manner.

It is with great pleasure that I note there is to be an increase in the old age security pensions. I may say that I had the privilege of campaigning strongly as a Social Crediter on this matter right from the beginning of the campaign, and that I was immediately joined by my C.C.F. opponent. My Conservative friend—and that can be taken literally, as we were school friends together—proudly announced at the first of these all-candidate meetings that he had no platform whatever, and proceeded to criticize me for the fact that I had one, but very shortly on this question at least he was very pleased to join ranks with us. In view of the fact that the Liberal party therefore appears to be the only party in opposition, there should be no trouble in bringing this legislation quickly to fruition.

In this connection, while of course this increase will bring assistance to many of our senior citizens throughout the land, I would like to mention another phase of the matter which was particularly brought home to me by the eventide home operated by the Salvation Army in our particular community. I might mention that a former member of the legislature of the province of Alberta is now living out his days there among old friends.

The people who pledge their lives to the work they are doing in providing homes and friendship for our senior citizens should not have to be perpetually plagued by financial problems as they have been in the past. Therefore the increase in pensions will carry a message of goodwill throughout all these organizations across the land.

However, I would ask one question about the next part of the speech from the throne. Is it wise to shorten the period of residence for qualification for the old age security pension? What effect will this have on the amount of increase which will be available for those who are already entitled? Perhaps this shortening of the period is based on the assumption that those who pay into a fund should reap a benefit from it. If this is the case then may I ask the government to bear in mind the fact that a person may live in this country for the full 70 years of his productive life, yet when he receives his pension he may lose it again if his doctor suggests that for health reasons he should live in Arizona. Therefore I charge the government that if it is to consider the period of residence necessary to qualify, then it must also consider the period of residence necessary to disqualify.

We welcomed the announcement that blind allowances will be increased in proportion to the others. If any of you have not had the privilege of being associated with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and meeting their executives, who in most instances conduct the business of that organization in total blindness themselves and do such a wonderful job of it, who come out into the seeing world among us and put forth the problems of their fellow men who are similarly afflicted, I say you have missed an education. You have been deprived of an important lesson in life if you have not had the privilege of attending some function held by the blind, usually very casual, at which they rise so easily, again in total darkness, to take part in whatever activity it may be.

As a veteran I welcome the increase in veterans allowances and pensions, and charge the Minister of National Defence to fight within the government a final and lasting battle to ensure that all veterans will secure a just allowance at this time. In conjunction with this I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton West on his appointment to the position of parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence. I might say I have had the pleasure of being associated in business with the hon. member for Edmonton West, and look forward to him playing a vital role in securing those allowances which are so greatly required by veterans throughout the country.

The constituency which I represent contains a wide belt of excellent, black loam farm land extending around the southern and eastern edges of the city of Edmonton. This is, of course, a highly developed area in which there are many of the finest dairymen, poultry men, pig men and other producers, and the rich market gardens supplying the city of Edmonton. Many of these producers are known across the country for their efficiency.

What does the wheat question mean to us? As you know, the Minister of Agriculture has told those who grow wheat and rely on it to diversify production. If you are familiar with what happened in the case of eggs last year you will realize that in large part this has already been done. For a period of some six months eggs remained at the floor price. Comparisons are sometimes odious, but if you would compare the price which our farmers received during the six months including the middle of winter with the price received in the 'thirties you would find they were receiving less. This appears a strange situation, but we must commend the farmers for the job they have done in finding ways and means of producing efficiently in winter, which they could not do a short time ago. I would point out that while cash advances are most welcome they represent only a temporary measure, and this government must do its best in accepting the responsibility which rests with it through the Canadian wheat board, that of selling our wheat.

To a large extent the sale of wheat is more an internal problem than people realize. Each time we attempt to sell wheat the purchaser feels he should sell us something in exchange. This is called trade. We have protections for industry which are known as customs tariffs, taxes, duties, etc. In many cases we are therefore unable to import from the countries to which we can sell our wheat. When the Prime Minister said an attempt would be made to divert 15 per cent of our present purchases from the United States to countries that could use our wheat I think his statement was justified, and this represents practically the only method by which we can sell Canadian wheat without disrupting our own economy. I am not suggesting for an instant that duties are not needed for the protection of our industry. However, as a new member arriving here and visiting the office of stationery supplies I was surprised to note that the ink well, stapler and pair of scissors for which I signed—and which they said would be available for only one session and therefore must be carefully accounted for—were all made in the United States.

While the South Saskatchewan river dam project is important and worth while on its merits, I submit the time may not be ripe for proceeding with it if in doing so it is the intention to irrigate a large part of southern Saskatchewan and place there men to compete with those who work in the irrigated areas of Lethbridge and the highly developed special producing areas of Manitoba.

In the area from which I come we are faced with powerful competition from the Lethbridge area, which is better developed and organized than our own. We are also confronted with keen competition from the distant area of southern California with regard to our vegetable products. I would therefore charge the government, when considering the South Saskatchewan river dam, with ensuring that there will be markets available for those who will farm that land and that we shall not add to our problems by launching a huge project prematurely, thus bringing about a situation in farming which is worse than the prevailing one.

The price spread between producers and consumers has been mentioned in this house. It is suggested that by investigating this circumstance we shall improve the situation. Usually when any investigation is going on those who are being investigated are in danger of being blamed. I am quite sure that the entire food industry will prove its strength and efficiency during this investigation. I might mention that during hurricane "Hazel" I had the privilege of being in Toronto to attend the convention of the retail merchants' association of Canada. At that time we were asked by the milk foundation whether we as retailers would give assistance in moving our butter surplus. In reply we suggested that this could be done simply by enclosing a coupon with family allowance and pensions cheques across the nation, and that by doing so it would promote the sale of butter, not only at that particular time but for a considerably longer period, for butter would be going to the homes of many people who were not accustomed to using it.

We received from the Minister of Agriculture what I thought was rather a strange reply, which in general suggested there was not a surplus of butter. However, it was not long until we found that a large quantity of butter had been sold to Poland at a price nearly equivalent to the price of margarine which we, the people of Canada, were eating and which we were importing almost entirely from the United States, at least the product from which margarine is made. I can assure hon. members that the food industry generally will be very pleased to extend invitations to them to visit their plants and their stores, as we have done in Edmonton, to find out just how this giant industry works.

In the bureau of statistics somewhere here in Ottawa—I have not found it yet—there are many facts concerning the food industry. In these facts you will find it is pointed out that generally speaking the entire industry works on lower margins, in comparison with sales, than practically any other industry. I would suggest that a fact-finding body composed of members of this parliament should do the job. It would be more appropriate to give this job to members of parliament than to pass it over to a royal commission.

There is another reason for the rising cost of food, and it is a very important one to consider. Some time ago our homes were equipped with a washboard and a clothes line at a total cost of perhaps $2.50. I am sure most of the homes of hon. members here today contain a dryer and an automatic washer worth perhaps $600 or $700. When compared with the price of the washboard and the clothes line the increase in cost is fantastic.

Many improvements have been made in the food industry, and most of them have been asked for by the housewife. There are ready mixes and prepared food, which relieve drudgery in the kitchen. There are items such as washed potatoes. I do not think in the fine modern home the housewife would appreciate our old custom of buying a 100-pound sack of potatoes and getting with it a large quantity of the good earth. I therefore charge the honourable lady member of the government to work toward the emancipation of the home-maker and impress upon the government the fact that it is quite all right for the home-maker to demand that which she wants, namely prepared foods. I might say that is the difference between our way of life and that of the totalitarian states, where somebody decides what everyone should have.

In our constituency we are very proud to have the University of Alberta appropriately situated on very nice grounds on the banks of the North Saskatchewan river. It has now, of course, been enhanced by the glorious Jubilee auditorium built so recently. In this connection I might say that Calgary also has one. In this regard we are, of course, interested in the grants being made by the Canada Council. We say they should be equitably distributed, and we trust the government will see that this is done. In so far as grants for culture across the country are concerned, it is our desire that these grants should not attempt to control culture. We are very proud of the varied cultures which are our heritage in the west. Our people have come from all around the world and have brought those cultures to us, and we trust it will be the policy of this government to encourage those various cultures rather than attempt to put them all in the same mould.

The international airport in Edmonton is now under construction in my constituency. The Minister of Transport was very pleased to take his place at the opening function at that airport. You can imagine his surprise when, instead of being handed a silver spade, he was handed a giant bulldozer. However, he carried on very well and after a while was in charge of the controls in the midst of the proud assembly there. After his departure his wife climbed aboard and added an interesting part to our ceremony that day. I say to the Minister of Transport that he has accepted this airport as his baby, and we trust he will ensure that everything goes forward at full speed and that the problems surrounding it will receive his full attention.

I may say that already the municipality of Leduc in which the airport lies is rather concerned regarding some problems that are developing. As hon. members know, when you start to build an airport you move heavy equipment. There will be a continuous stream of trucks hauling gravel to this airport. We trust this government will assure the municipality of Leduc that it will repair or rebuild the roads which these gravel trucks may destroy.

Edmonton-Strathcona is one of the most progressive and fast-changing constituencies in Canada. At the end of the war there was only one factory of any size in the constituency, and that was the factory of Gainer's Limited. This was true until a few years ago. We now have the refineries of Imperial Oil, McColl-Frontenac, British American and the giant Celanese Corporation plant, which is a city in itself. The C.I.L. company have completed their plant and are developing their facilities very rapidly. I cannot claim the Sherritt-Gordon plant; it is just on the other side of the line, but most of its workmen live in the fast-growing town of Fort Saskatchewan, from which you will be hearing much in the future.

These industries have in turn brought subsidiary industries which either supply them or process their products. Many changes have taken place in our community. As all these industries work round the clock; there is continuous shift work and shift changing. We have now become accustomed to having our highways suddenly clogged as shift changes take place, and to having perpetual traffic throughout the night.

We are starting to realize more of the problems throughout the country and to feel a closer affiliation with the industrial east. We are also interested now in markets throughout the world, not only for wheat but for many other products as well. As you know, the production of the celanese plant will be seeking markets wherever they can be found anywhere in the world. Yes, the single wheat economy is leaving our area.

I come now to changes in taxation. I, of course, do not know at the moment what these may be, but I should like to mention those which I feel are most important to my constituents. First of all there is the matter of the personal exemptions now provided under the Income Tax Act. The income tax of the average person in the country has been increasing continually as his wages have increased to keep up with the cost of living. This did not require any act of parliament. However, in order that he may be relieved of continually increasing income tax the exemptions must be increased. Over any considerable period, if wages continue to rise this would not necessarily mean any reduction in the return to the government from the income tax field.

May I also say a word about corporation income taxes. If it is the intention of the government to do anything in this connection I suggest that a similar policy should be adopted. In other words, the amount on which the 20 per cent levy is made, that is $20,000, should be increased in order to give small business a better opportunity, rather than to decrease the higher taxes on larger corporation profits. If it is the intention of the government to reduce the sales tax on cars I suggest that they keep in mind the position of the dealers holding cars and ensure that they are treated equitably.

In our urban area we of course have problems similar to those throughout the country, but in the fast moving city of Edmonton I think the housing shortage is more pronounced than in other places. At a time when immigrants were flooding into the city and we were reaching the period when the large increase in the birth rate of the war years was going to be felt in the number of young families seeking homes, action was taken to curtail house construction.

In addition, we saw the development of high interest rates, which meant that those providing the money suddenly had an increase in profits greater than the builders could ever hope to make in the construction of houses.

I submit it is most important that our house-building industry be revived, for individual homes are the stronghold of democracy. We saw small business crushed and destroyed by the sudden imposition of a blanket policy across the country to protect us from supposed inflation. Financially strong companies could weather such a change but many solid, efficient firms were suddenly destroyed because they were caught short at that particular time. This was called a tight money policy and introduced to curb inflation.

Our Liberal friends have accused this party of having a policy which would create inflation. It was certainly most interesting during the election campaign to be able to challenge them on what they meant by inflation. Mr. Speaker, rapid deflation could have a worse effect on the country than any inflation. I do not mean to say that rapid inflation is a good thing either, but rapid deflation represents in a way a strike of the top bracket organizers of industry and business across the land, of the men who have the know-how to develop Canada. This is no time for a pessimistic attitude, for I predict that regardless of what we may do Canada will surge on to claim the last part of this century as Canada's own.

Finally may I say that while I am sure it is the feeling of my constituents that in the house I should always criticize anything which affects their interests adversely, I am also sure it is their feeling that they elected me to come here and do a job. Therefore I shall always be ready to co-operate with the government as far as possible in attempting to ensure that this parliament shall continue in session and shall not become such a fiasco of procedural debate as that one which had for its excuse the trans-Canada pipe-line issue. I hope we will not hear anything more about closure, for it would appear that the government in power are the only ones who can use closure and if they were to eliminate it, it would suggest that they intend to be sitting in the opposition very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I gather that I should call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): As I rise to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend to you my sincere congratulations upon your so well deserved appointment. I should like also, through you, to congratulate the Speaker of the house on his elevation to his very high office. As Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip return to England I know they leave in the hearts of all Canadians feelings of loyalty, gratitude and joy at the knowledge that we have a real Queen of Canada. I am sure she takes with her the best wishes of the Canadian nation.

I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith) and seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Certainly it is fitting that the address should be moved by a western member. When the hon. member for Bonaventure speaks of the backward conditions along the Gaspe coast, I can assure you that he speaks the truth. The Gaspe coast, like the maritime provinces, has been a neglected part of Canada for the past 22 years.

I wish to say a word to express to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) my sincere best wishes for many happy years in retirement. While we were celebrating the victory of June 10 in premises that had been arranged for long before the election, because we knew we were going to win, I could not escape noting that a great chieftain had fallen. Later I was pleased to hear that he intended to lead his party through the next general election. Then those young Liberals came from Ontario and decided to see how far they could go, aided and abetted by some of the Leader of the Opposition's own colleagues on his left and right, in criticizing their chief. This action strikes me as the height of ingratitude to a man who has given so much to his party and his country. Certainly I for one and many members of my party were quite willing to give the former government advice which, if followed, probably would have meant their re-election last June. However that may be it is well to reflect that my people, and the people of Canada, will long remember how these young, two-bit political hoodlums treated their chief after this last election. Our people can hardly wait for a chance to rid this country of the remnants of the soon to be leaderless Liberal party.

Quite apart from all this, sir, I wish to assure you that there has never been on my part, and there never will be, any feeling of animosity toward any member of this house, let alone the former prime minister. We come here to do a duty, sent here by the people we are elected to represent. My loyalty in the past has always been, and will continue to be, to the people I am here to represent, regardless of party politics. At the outset I should like to congratulate one minister of the new government who has done more for my riding, and for the maritime provinces, than any other minister of public works in the long history of Canada. I recall coming to Ottawa a few weeks ago on a Sunday night with Mr. Leo Hachey, the unsuccessful candidate in Gloucester county. This was just before the announcement had been made that $3.5 million had been made available to develop the harbour at Bathurst. I noted then that Mr. Hachey was doing more for his riding, although he had not been elected, than all the Liberal members had been able to do during the past 22 years.

By the way, I should like to thank the ex-minister of national health and welfare for the help he gave me during the campaign. He was down in my area, and I am assured that if I received the largest majority in the history of Campbellton it was due in no small part to his efforts on my behalf.

For many years the port of Dalhousie had been a sore spot because the minister of transport had refused, times without number, to have it declared a year-round port, although it had been open for five consecutive years without expense to anyone. The only trouble that developed was ice forming in the gulf during two weeks one winter. No sooner had the election taken place than the present Minister of Public Works dispatched to my riding his chief economic adviser and other distinguished members of his staff. Even the editorials in the Liberal papers in my riding mentioned the fact that these officials came to us for the first time since confederation. We have been getting recognition for our problems that we have never been able to get before. It is indeed satisfying to learn that just last week arrangements were made, in collaboration with the president of the Canadian International Paper Company, whereby the port of Dalhousie will become a year-round port, and whereby a fine new wharf will be established there in the course of the next year.

The former government never quite appreciated our problems, because I am sure if they had they would have acted. This was due in part, I think, to the fact that Liberal representatives were so sure they would not be listened to that they did not see fit to speak. I can tell the former government that if it had taken, for instance, some of the advice given to it by the hon. member for Westmorland the result of the vote in the last election might have been quite different, especially in the maritime provinces. In any event the port of Dalhousie will now become a reality.

I should like to deal for a few moments with the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge. Twelve surveys have been made in connection with this bridge by various governments since confederation. Sets of plans have been drawn up and at various times estimates have been prepared. At election time these plans were hauled out and shown to the people. This bridge became a political football during one election after another. Now, less than 22 weeks after June 10 a proposal has been made whereby the federal government will undertake to pay $1,400,000 toward the cost of that bridge, plus one-third of the balance. The government was paying $70,000 a year in subsidies and repairs to the ferry wharves. The government made a brief mathematical calculation and saw that the $70,000 a year would be better spent in taking care of a capital expenditure of something like $1,400,000.

Instead of expecting the two provinces and the dominion to each pay one-third of the cost, as the previous government had so often declared was its policy, the new government proposed to pay $1,400,000 plus one-third of the balance, leaving Quebec and New Brunswick each to pay one-third. When Hon. Hugh John Flemming received this proposal I was immediately summoned to Fredericton. Within five minutes of the commencement of our meeting to discuss this proposal it was accepted by the province of New Brunswick. The federal government has now been advised that New Brunswick accepts the proposal and is prepared to pay this one-third of the cost. We are waiting momentarily for word, which we understand will be forthcoming today or tomorrow, from the government of Quebec, indicating their approval in contributing in a like manner.

There is a concrete example of good business administration and a sound investment. There is an example of a government that is trying to do something for a part of the country which we all know was neglected for too long by too many governments.

I should also like to say a word of thanks in connection with the new federal building which will be going up in Campbellton. I should like to say a word of praise for the splendid co-operation we have been getting from the Minister of Transport, from the Prime Minister's office and from all branches of the government. Our people in the maritime provinces now know that we have in Ottawa a government that is prepared to sit down and listen to their problems and endeavour by all possible means to bring about a solution to those problems which have been ignored ever since confederation.

In connection with the throne speech I should like very much to express my gratitude. I know I speak on behalf of the people I represent when I say that this throne speech is indeed indicative of the new deal which this government is prepared to give to the people of the maritime provinces. How often in the past have we pleaded, in this house for help for Beechwood, and how often have those requests been turned down. Yet, I dare say there was not a man in this house who did not recognize the merits of that case and who did not in his own heart feel that something should be done. It was only because of the indifference of the past government that nothing had been done. Yet within weeks of taking office this new government has indicated in no uncertain way that the Beechwood project, along with the other four accompanying projects which will completely harness the Saint John river, costing as they will something like $215 million, will not be retarded because of lack of co-operation and help from this government.

Likewise as to electric power development in the entire maritime provinces; we are grateful that at last we have a government that is willing to help us out. We do not ask for favours. We are asking merely that we be given a chance to develop in the same manner as the rest of Canada has had a chance to do. We are indeed gratified, and the news in the throne speech fills the heart of every person in the maritime provinces with pride in the new government that is finally prepared to recognize its duty to do it.

I should like also to say a word in connection with social security. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this government, which I am privileged to support, will take advantage of the opportunity it has to do everything possible to rid this country of the means test. I confidently expect that old age pensions will be increased to $60 a month and be made available to all Canadians at the age of 65.

I have been asked before where I stood in this house. As long as I am here I will continue to repeat the demands I have been making in the past. What I ask is reasonable. Certainly if the late government had implemented only a portion of those demands it would still be in office today. This is a case of not punishing people because they want to supplement their meagre pension by earning a few extra dollars while working some place in the summer months. It is a case of not punishing a person because he has had the courage to save a few dollars and has a little bank account of $1,000 or $2,000. It is a case of not punishing the father of a family who had the courage to save his money, and who is now denied that pension precisely because he had the courage. In my opinion the situation is most unjust, and this government will be unworthy unless it does everything within its power to bring about the abolition of the means test at the earliest possible moment.

I should like to say a word about the Chignecto canal. I realize that the canal has been another political football ever since confederation, at which time it was promised as part of the inducement offered to the maritime provinces to have them join confederation. As a supporter of this government I know it will not delay in appointing the commission which has been promised and which will be appointed to investigate all phases of this important canal. The Chignecto canal must be built. This government must recognize the fact that the canal was a premise upon which the maritime provinces entered confederation. I am sure this government will do that.

I should probably take a minute to speak of unemployment since it was mentioned by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) the other day. I realize that unemployment is a problem that has plagued the maritime provinces for years without number. In June there were 1,109 people unemployed in Campbellton. It is true that today there are something like 710 persons unemployed. This means that there are 339 or approximately one-third fewer unemployed than there were at the time of the election.

I certainly have investigated this problem. I have gone to the heads of all the pulp mills in my area. Their explanation is clearcut. They say that had it not been for the tight money policies of the late government, and were it not for the unfavourable exchange on United States money, our mills would be going at full capacity and all our people would be working.

I remember discussing this problem with the presidents and other officers of the Irving Pulp and Paper Company, and they decided—not entirely, I may say very frankly, without grave consideration and expense—to employ this year twice as many men as they employed last year in order to offset the unemployment situation that developed in that part of the province with regard to the lumber industry. In other words, instead of 1,000 men being in the woods cutting pulpwood for the Irving Pulp and Paper Company, there will be this year over 2,000 men.

I visited these camps some time ago and asked one man how much he was making cutting pulpwood. He said, "In the past three months I have averaged $24 a day". The International Paper Company told me that those employed by it doing similar work average $15 a day. Certainly those wages compare favourably even with the salary paid to a member of parliament, I might say. The management of the International Paper Company have also tried to do everything possible to put men to work early in the summer in order to offset unemployment.

So while possibly the hon. member for Charlotte and I are in agreement as to the grave dangers of unemployment, I may assure him, as I assure this house, that the industries operating in that area are not lacking in knowledge of the situation and are not lacking in the desire to do everything possible to assist the workingmen of my riding.

What I was complaining about last year I shall be complaining about this year if the situation arises. I refer to delays in settling unemployment insurance claims. Those notices to which the hon. member for Charlotte referred were invitations to those people in my riding who were experiencing six weeks, seven weeks and eight weeks of delay in getting their unemployment insurance cheques to let me know about those matters. If this year these complaints can be handled by three stenographers that will be a help, because last year it would have taken twelve.

I should like also to speak briefly this afternoon with regard to housing. I am very grateful that this government has recognized the difficulties of the average wage earner in purchasing a home, and the $150 million which has now been made available by this government will certainly go a long way in providing houses for thousands of our families. But I say this in all frankness, as I have said it before in this house; that this is not sufficient. I have long advocated in this house, and I advocate again, the adoption of the American national housing act, lock stock and barrel. Why is it, if in the United States legislation can be introduced and properly carried out whereby a person can purchase a house with 4 per cent down of the first $10,000 and with nothing down in the case of a veteran, this government cannot do the same? I certainly see no reason why similar action would not be possible here in Canada.

There is nothing that gives more pride or satisfaction to a young father of a family as the knowledge that he can possess his own home. There is nothing which encourages good citizenship like property ownership, and nothing which would more effectively relieve the unemployment situation or would move our unsold lumber, of which our people down home have over 10 million feet in one yard alone, than an entirely new approach to our housing problem.

In the United States even the utensils in the kitchen, such as the electric stove, electric refrigerator, dryer, washer and even the fan that takes the smoke from the kitchen, are all included in the cost of the house. So a person who makes his down payment of $400 on a $10,000 home buys a house that comes to him almost fully equipped in regard to the heavy equipment which is needed in a modern home. If this system would cost this government anything I might take a different approach, but this government is making $15 million one year and $16 million the next in profit under its national housing scheme. In the United States the same situation exists.

Why was the late government so afraid of the Canadian citizen that it would not trust him? There is not a valid reason that could be advanced as to why the down payments on homes could not be on the same scale as they are in the United States. There funds are provided with interest at 5¼ per cent, and there is no reason why funds could not be made available to the Canadian people in like manner. There is also no reason why we in Canada, under our housing scheme, could not recognize the loan value of a house already built. The effect of our housing scheme is to diminish the equity which people have in homes already built outside of our national housing scheme.

It seems unfortunate that the late government did not recognize its duties in this connection. Goodness knows, and I have spoken about this often in the house, if we are to solve our housing problem we have to do what has been done successfully in other countries. I remember in one little operation, in a town where a housing project was started, 104 people applied for homes. Yet not one person was able to purchase a home because not one person had the $3,000 or $4,000 needed for a down payment. Certainly I trust that this government will take every occasion to make sure that the National Housing Act, as we know it, is altered to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

I would like to say something about agriculture. In my riding since June 10 something like $400,000 has been expended in an effort to help the potato farmers in the northern part of New Brunswick. This help is certainly very much appreciated, but four or five weeks ago our small potato farmers had upwards of 600,000 barrels of potatoes which they were unable to sell and which they were unable to keep because of the lack of proper storage facilities. If a diversion program had been undertaken at that time I feel sure that the small potato farmer would have been greatly helped; and I know that although everything possible has been done since June 10, a whole new approach to agriculture as it exists in northern New Brunswick should be undertaken.

I should like also to say a word of commentary in regard to a statement made last Friday by the member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). If ever there was a party in this country which pitted religion against religion, race against race and province against province in a deceitful effort to gain votes during the past 20 years, it was the Liberal party. I come from a riding where the population is 85 per cent French speaking or Acadian, and I know whereof I speak. In the past I have no doubt that under the vigorous leadership which existed in the Liberal party those tactics were not permitted to be mentioned in this house. Now, however, when the Liberals are about to become leaderless, they have brought these tactics into the open in the House of Commons. I could tell you stories of happenings in my own riding that would make your hair stand on end with respect to disgraceful tactics in bringing race and religion into elections. It is a disgrace to the member who brought up the subject in this house. It was bad enough when they kept it behind closed doors, as in the past.

Before taking my seat I would like to mention one more subject. I presume this combines investigation into pulpwood fixing prices may have had its place, but I wish to state publicly here that I very much disapprove of the actions taken by members of that investigation committee or board in their conduct with many of the officials of our paper companies. I know of one instance where after rifling through the files in the president's office, they took advantage of his absence to go and rifle his desk without any form of authority from any court.

We are determined, and I know this government will take every opportunity to do this, to rid these services of the Gestapo methods which have been customary in the past. The people who operate these industries, the people who operate these mills, have a hard enough time getting along without the government interfering as it has done. I maintain that this investigation was properly set up, but it miscarried and was conducted in such a way as to bring discredit on the Department of Justice and the government as a whole. Certainly we have a right to expect a different kind of attitude, and I know we will have a different kind of attitude from now on.

Before resuming my place I invite hon. members on both sides of the house to give us a hand in the maritime provinces. I know we will have to await another election before we will have 10 Conservative members from New Brunswick, but in the meantime we urge the five Liberal members to not stint their efforts to co-operate with us to bring about the improvements we have so long needed in the province of New Brunswick and indeed in the maritime provinces generally.

In closing I would like to say I am very grateful and glad to be seated on this side of the house, but I wish to make it very clear at the same time that our problems are above party politics, and the needs of our people demand immediate action. While it is a pleasure to work and co-operate within the framework of a party may I assure you, as I assure this house, that the duty I owe to the people of my riding and to the people of the maritime provinces will always come first.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I should like to join with those who have spoken before me in congratulating the hon. member who was chosen as Speaker of the house on the first day we met, and to say to him I feel confident that in the period he occupies the chair of this house he will do so—and we are acknowledging that he does so—by maintaining the traditions of the speakership. During the long history of Canadian parliaments I think there has been no occasion upon which the Speaker himself was responsible for any unnecessary scenes which may have taken place in this house.

I would also like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The seconder of the motion, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault), is not very well known to me and I regret that I am not sufficiently familiar with the language which is his natural language to have followed him closely throughout the entire course of his remarks, but I am assured from the discussions which have taken place since that he fulfilled his duty in a manner which is most acceptable to the house.

As far as the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne is concerned, I have been familiar with his family for a long time. His dad and I knew one another well in our school days when we took part in college and other sports. He was always known as Sport Smith, which indicated that he was not only a good athlete but that he had the proper attitude toward the game he was playing and toward both those who were with him and against him.

Mr. McIvor: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gardiner: As we listened to our young friend, his son, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) as he made his first speech in the house the other day I was reminded of the fact that in those days his grandfather used to walk up and down the field where a game was being played and every time one of the boys kicked, he kicked too and gave the best of encouragement to those of his family who were participating in the game.

I am sure had he been present the other day sitting in the gallery—and if he had been following the same line of thought he followed in those days he would have been sitting in the gallery facing the opposition, but it would not have made any difference where he was sitting—and, had been listening to our young friend deliver his first speech in this house, he would have been extremely proud of his grandson. So would his dad had he been able to be here. I am not sure whether his uncle who lives in Regina was here the other day, but he too would have been proud of our young friend and would have followed his remarks with keen interest. I understand his mother was present, and I am sure she felt proud of the capable manner in which her son made his maiden speech.

These people were all friends of mine and friends of Saskatchewan in the early days. They lived in Regina and conducted an important business there in the pioneering days. We all acknowledge them for what they have done for us and share their pride in this young member of their family to whom was given the honour of moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I personally wish him every success.

I should now like to refer to what has been mentioned by most speakers who have participated in this debate, namely the 10-day period immediately past during which Her Most Gracious Majesty was present on this continent, four days of which were spent in association with the opening of parliament and other matters in this capital city of Canada and the other six in connection with the affairs of the country to the south. I think this 10-day period will go down in history as one which has done more to promote the best interests of the commonwealth of nations, and through the commonwealth the best interests of all the people in the world, than any other 10-day period in the entire history of the commonwealth.

To watch the proceedings of yesterday on television when the Queen was in the city of New York, and to have observed the previous proceedings when she was in the city of Washington, would suggest to one that at least those people on the other side of the line who associate their beginnings with Great Britain, and perhaps not less the people whose ancestors came to this continent from other parts of Europe, where they had monarchies for a long period of time, were very proud of the fact that the race to which many of them belong could produce a sovereign of the type we have today as Queen of Canada and Queen of the other nations of the commonwealth.

Just an hour ago I heard over the radio that the royal plane had arrived at the London airport. I am sure we all congratulate Her Majesty upon her fine appearance on this continent and upon the fact that she and her husband have arrived back home safely.

Before going on to say more I think I should ask why we are here and try to give an answer as to why, in my opinion, we are gathered in this parliament. I am not speaking so much about the fact that for the first time I am sitting in the opposition in the House of Commons, which is a rather new experience for me. I have spent 44 years in politics. Out of that period I have been in opposition for only five years, and during that period of five years I was leader of the opposition in the legislature of Saskatchewan. So I cannot complain about the treatment I have received from the voters of the province of Saskatchewan and more particularly of my own constituency over that long period of time. Finding ourselves on this side of the house we must of necessity ask not only why we are here but we must attempt to answer the question why we are taking the position we are with regard to certain matters.

In the first place I might point out that this house was dissolved in April before we had voted all our estimates. As a matter of fact we had voted only a small part of them. At that time full expressions of opinion had not been given about a considerable part of the legislation which had been introduced in the house by the government of that time. It is probably going too far to say that the new government is in any way responsible for the legislation which was introduced but not passed, and of course we do not expect that it will be reintroducing that legislation in the house in the form in which it was then brought down either now or at any other time. On the other hand the system under which we operate presupposes that the money required for the conduct of the affairs of this country must be voted by parliament. Dissolution of the house at the time it took place resulted in that money not being voted; therefore it is necessary for us to be here at this time in order to see that that vote is carried through.

Of course we do not expect, and it has not been the case, that the present government is going to agree in every particular with the legislative program and the votes that were brought down by the preceding government, but it will be necessary to vote in general the greater part of the funds which were to have been made available through the estimates at that time, and we are here for that purpose.

Since that time we have had an election which has produced certain results. Every member of this house knows that under our constitution the leader of the party which can command a majority in the House of Commons is called upon to form the government. Therefore on this occasion when the people of Canada did not select any party with a majority of seats in this house; at a time when they gave to the Liberal leader the greatest number of votes in his favour obtained by any person but gave to the leader of the Conservative party the greatest number of seats given to any party, then it stands to reason that we are in a very peculiar situation at the present time.

This is not new to me at all, because most hon. members know that I went through a similar experience in Saskatchewan back in 1929, although there was this difference then. Although we did not have a majority we had the largest group. I was advised then, and I am advised now, that under our constitution when the government itself has the largest group following an election but there is no majority in the house in their favour, it is necessary for them to meet the house. They should meet the house and have the house determine as to who should be responsible for forming the government.

On this occasion the government party did not have the largest group. I am advised that under the constitution, in those circumstances, it is not necessary but is a matter of choice with the leader of the party which forms the government for the time being as to whether he should meet the house or whether he should advise the Governor General to call upon some other member of the house to form the government. Well, the leader of the government decided on the latter course, that is was advisable to go to the Governor General and discuss with him the possibility of resigning and not meeting the house, and turning the government over to some other party.

Well, naturally on an occasion of that kind the first thing the Governor General would want to know, the first thing a representative of the crown would want to know, is how do you propose that the government should be able to carry on sufficiently long to make it possible for the people of this country to know as to whether the person to whom they have given the largest representation is a person who can command a majority? There was only one way in which that information could be given to the Governor General, and that was for his adviser of that day to give it. Before going to see the Governor General the leader of the government naturally went to see the leader of the official opposition, who had the largest group in the house, and found him not only willing but anxious to form a government and take the responsibility for setting up a government under our democratic institution.

When the government of the day found it necessary to give assurance to the Governor General those assurances, of course, were given to the effect that we would carry on in such manner as to make it possible for the new government to have sufficient support in the house to be able to place their policies before the people of this country and carry on from there.

I recite these facts in order to say this, Mr. Speaker. I find it a little difficult to understand some of the criticisms that are made at the present time of the attitude of the present opposition. Before going on to speak further with regard to that point I would call attention to this also. Before the prime minister of that time went to the Governor General to discuss the matter the leaders of the two smaller groups in this house gave interviews to the press, in which they stated that they were not prepared to join in a coalition with either of the larger parties, but that they were prepared to give whichever party undertook to carry on sufficient support to allow it to make it apparent in what direction they wanted to go after forming a government or continuing as a government.

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend says "no". Perhaps I am giving him a little too much credit; perhaps he did not go quite that far in so far as the old government was concerned. However, we had been in power a long time, and having been in power a long time—

Mr. Coldwell: Too long.

Mr. Gardiner: He says "too long". Since we had been in power a long time they thought we should turn over the government to some other group, and therefore they supported our turning the government over to the Conservatives. I am quite sure I am correct—I am sorry I did not bring the clippings from the papers with me—when I suggest that sufficient assurance was given to the party which now forms the government that if they did form the government they would be given an opportunity to make their views known to this house before they were voted out.

Therefore I say, with regard to the official opposition of today, that we feel we owe an obligation not only to the government of the day, not only to the group who form a minority in this house and who form the government, but we owe a duty to the crown and to the people of Canada to see to it that the affairs of this house are conducted in such a manner as to permit of the government placing their views on certain matters, on legislation, on the budget and on estimates, squarely before this house with their support and their recommendations to the Governor General behind them.

Before there was any thought of choosing a new Liberal leader in this country the prime minister of the day made the announcement, when he tendered his resignation, that he had given those assurances to the Governor General; that we would carry them out, and at the time he gave the assurance that it was his declared intention to lead the Liberal party in the next election in this country. When it is suggested here by some critics that anything we do in this house has anything to do with the fact that a Liberal convention is to be held to elect a leader, I want to say to the house and to the people of this country that the whole matter under discussion was settled before it became necessary to choose a leader at all.

I do want to say this—I have not consulted with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) or anyone else about this—that so far as I am personally concerned and I think so far as most of the Liberal members, or all the Liberals in Canada are concerned, if the press which is advocating such a policy, or if those on the other side of the house think it is a good line to follow, there would be nothing that would be more helpful to the Liberal party in the next election, whenever it may be called, than that we should be fighting it under the leadership of the present leader of the Liberal party. I wanted to say that in order to leave the impression that it had nothing to do with the matter of our giving assurances under the constitution as it exists that we would give the government an opportunity to place their policies before the house and the people of the country before we would consider it necessary to move a vote of want of confidence.

I would like to submit, Mr. Speaker, that I think the smaller groups would have been well advised to follow at least the intimation that was made prior to the calling of the house and to have desisted from moving votes of want of confidence at this stage. While this party is not moving a vote of want of confidence, it does not mean that we have absolute confidence in the government.

It does indicate that our constitution has got to be allowed to operate. At the same time I feel personally, believing as I do that the two opposition groups had given an assurance very similar to the one we had given, that they are moving their motions of want of confidence at too early a stage in the development that has taken place since the election. So as far as I personally am concerned I am going to vote against both of them. When I do vote against both of them I will not necessarily be voting against anything that may be in either one of them, but I will be voting against the fact that two considerable groups in the house, having given everyone to understand that they would allow the constitution to operate, are placing party above the welfare of the country at the present time.

We in this group do not intend to do that. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we should get on with the business we came here to do, namely to provide the money with which the government is going to be able to carry on until March 31. That is really the only work we came here to do. When the government finds it necessary to make some changes, slight or otherwise, in the provision for the spending of that money we must, of course, give consideration to that, and express our opinions as we go along; but in my opinion we should get on with the business of providing supply, clearing the order paper of legislation necessary to authorize expenditures and return to our homes until the government is prepared to bring in legislation and a budget and estimates they are prepared to recommend to the Governor General which will set out a policy based upon their criticisms of the last government and their election promises.

I would judge from what has been said and the attitude taken by the leaders of the party facing us that is what they intend to do. Of course if they intend to do that they will expect that some members on this side of the house may raise some objection to some of the things they are suggesting should be done which the previous government had not intended to do had it remained in office, but I think they will find that if they can listen to the expression of opinions on those matters without too strong political feelings resulting from such expression we will get along fairly well to the end of this particular session.

There is only one further remark I should like to make with regard to this discussion, and it is this. I was a little surprised at the attitude taken by the Minister of Finance early in the discussion, when he rose in his place at a time when the Prime Minister was not here—there is no criticism in that; I think he was in Washington—and said in effect that he intends to make all members in the house stand up and be counted on every occasion when any advance is being made on any estimates.

Mr. Fulton: Only on that one occasion.

Mr. Gardiner: In other words he is showing that lack of self-control which is necessary to the administration of a department such as the one over which he is presiding. I am sure, since he and I come from the same town in the western part of Ontario, he will learn in due course that is not the proper way to proceed in this house or even outside the house. After all, we are working under a rather peculiar set of circumstances and we must perhaps work in peculiar ways sometimes in order to accomplish the task that is ours as citizens of this country, no matter what political party we belong to. Therefore I would suggest that if we can all accept the position that we are here to do the particular job that ought to be done, we can express our criticisms from any place in the house from time to time, put them on the record and refer to them in times to come when we desire to do so.

It is not my intention to spend any more time on that matter in dealing with the speech from the throne. It is my intention to spend most of my time on past and present proposals with regard to agriculture. But I must first call attention to the similarity between the campaign of 1930 and the one just past. Quite a number of those who have spoken since the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) spoke last Friday have chosen to use his remarks as the basis for a discussion of an old issue that has been present in this country for a long time. But I should like to remind hon. members that this is not a new and unheard of situation. Prior to 1930 and after Mr. Bennett had been chosen leader of the Liberal—the Conservative party; I think it was Liberal-Conservative at that time—his supporters decided to put on a sham battle in a section of Canada that had never been anything but Liberal since it came into confederation, and that sham battle was fought on the issue that has been referred to in the debate here.

It had the result of electing eight members of that party from the province of Saskatchewan, which is the most it has ever elected either before or since that time. The election which followed a year later was won by Mr. Bennett and his party and he came into office. It does not make any difference what members on the other side of the house think. It is quite proper that they should think whatever they wish about the matter, but it has some effect when I hear persons get up and object to criticisms being made when everyone in the house and the country knows that this has been an issue between two sections of Canada over a long period of time. The introduction of certain ideas into the Conservative party convention last year did introduce the subject whether or not anyone said anything about it. So we had a section of the country that for two elections had been more strongly Liberal than at any other time in our history reverse its position and go to the opposite extreme in its voting.

It is all very well for members of the house and people outside the house to try to convince themselves that some other issue decided the last election, that it had something to do with economics, something to do with other things. All I want to say to the government is that if they are of that opinion they have an even greater task before them in 1957 in satisfying the people that they can create a better economic situation than Mr. Bennett had before him in 1930. I think the more you think about that the more you will agree it is correct.

Mr. Bennett had other ideas that were similar to those that are held now. He thought it was necessary to call a session of the house right after the election in 1930, as a matter of fact in September also, and he called that session. I sat in the gallery some place—I had great difficulty in getting into the galleries at all—and listened to the speech he delivered to the house on that occasion. In that speech he reviewed a considerable number of the things he had said during the campaign, and he said, "We are here to put them into effect."

Well, there is no doubt that he did put them into effect. If there ever was a man who led a party in the Dominion of Canada, who advocated conservatism and put it into effect when he came into office, that man was Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, later Lord Bennett. He put those ideas into effect.

Now, what was the result? He had stated in that campaign—note the similarity of subject—put me in and I will pay 100 per cent of old age pensions. Did he ever do it? No, he did not. He did get it up to 75 per cent at one time, but he did not get it any further than that. I sat in a legislature at that time and they did not bring down a dollar to pay their 50 per cent share of the old age pension, with the result the legislature had to be called upon at a later date to vote the money because the federal government could not carry out its policy.

I listened a few moments ago to the hon. member speaking about Chignecto. I do not know if that is the way it should be pronounced but I think that is about right. Here is what Mr. Bennett said about that, according to the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of July 1, 1930:

> We offer you the St. Lawrence waterways; the Chignecto canal is a possibility, yes, even a probability.

He said this in Saint John, right in the neighbourhood from which my friend who has just spoken comes. We have had two governments since those days and we have not got a Chignecto canal. We have had two governments since then and it was the second one, the Liberal government, which built the St. Lawrence waterway.

I hope our friends are not going to do as Mr. Bennett did in 1930, bring policies into this house in a rush in the first session a few weeks after an election. He pushed them through with his majority and made it absolutely impossible to pay 100 per cent of old age pensions. These policies made it absolutely impossible for him to build the St. Lawrence waterway or the Chignecto canal, and later made it impossible for him to carry on with the trans-Canada highway system, which had been introduced by Mr. Meighen, or the Trans-Canada Air Lines system, which had been introduced by Mr. King. The policies he introduced in that short session, without having given sufficient thought to them, raised great issues with the result that in 1935, speaking in New York, Mr. Bennett said this:

> I say that tariffs in many of the countries in the world today are much too high.

This is after he had been in office for five years. I could read earlier statements made to the effect that he was going to cure everything with tariffs.

He continued in New York:

> I say that tariffs in Canada are too high.

One could go on reading statement after statement by Mr. Bennett indicating that after five years experience he had learned that it was not a good thing, either for the party or for the country, to rush legislation through the house without much consideration.

I believe I have said sufficient to indicate that there are similarities between the party of that day and the party of the present day. There is a little more to which I would like to call particular attention with regard to agricultural conditions. Mr. Bennett, speaking in Winnipeg on June 9, 1930, said this:

> Listen, you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade. Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

Anyone on the other side of the house, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) if he wished, could say that tariffs did work in the case of butter. They have. Governments since have continued what Mr. Bennett did with regard to butter. However, I believe it will be found difficult to suggest that these policies worked in any other place in the interests of agriculture. One policy was the use of higher tariffs, together with quotas arranged at conferences. This is another similarity. A conference was held immediately after the election, and another one was held in 1932. Out of these conferences came policies which ruined the agriculture of this country. My friend shakes his head. I would suggest to him that he go over to the apple growing country of Great Britain, as I was invited to do two years ago. He will find there one family which, under the preference forced upon Great Britain by two dominions in 1932, has a third as many apple trees as there are in the whole of Nova Scotia and a quarter as many as there are in the whole of British Columbia. In other words, when you try to force your way into the markets of the world, and to control your marketing of products by the use of tariffs, you can do yourself much more harm than good.

During that period under these preferences these people have put in more new apple trees than we have in the whole of the Dominion of Canada. Since Britain has planted more new apple trees during that period than we have in Canada how could we expect to sell many apples in Great Britain? One has to give most careful consideration to these policies as we go along.

The present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), speaking at Portage la Prairie during the last campaign stated, as reported in the Regina Leader-Post of May 10, as follows:

> The Liberal government is doing nothing while the United States attacks Canada's wheat markets with almost ruthless abandon.
> He called for several measures to regain markets, including an approach to Britain to take wheat in place of some $17 million in interest owed to Canada on a postwar loan.

It is true that this statement does not mention tariffs, but some of the others do. Tariffs were mentioned as a means of taking care of this situation. Not very long ago the Minister of Agriculture announced that he was advancing the date on which fowl would be prevented from coming into this country. It would come into this country under the conditions set up by the order in council which we passed. I must say that at the time I discussed the matter with the officials of the department and the government, I was advised that fowl did not come into this country in any considerable numbers until August 1 and therefore we made it August 1. I would say it is a sort of bid for votes to tell the people of Canada under those circumstances you are advancing the date two weeks to the middle of July and say, "We are going to apply the same thing as the previous government, but two weeks in advance."

Then there was the announcement that there would be a duty on turkeys. The only reason there had not been something done about turkeys before was that turkeys were selling at 6 cents per pound higher in Canada than they were in the United States. That is the reason products come to this country from the United States or from anywhere else, the person who produces them and has them for sale can sell them at higher prices here than in their own country. If you want to stop that, there are two or three ways of doing it, but the Conservative way of doing it is to use tariffs. Another way would be to use embargoes. May I say to the government that they have been doing a lot of talking about ways and means of dealing with our wheat problem. The biggest obstruction to the proper disposal of our wheat in this world is right on this continent.

Prior to the last war there was a duty of 42 cents on our wheat going to the United States. When the president got the authority to reduce that he made it 21 cents, but just prior to that they imposed an embargo on our wheat so it could not go in at all.

Those are two ways of performing. If the government desires to perform in either one of them they will run into some difficulties which will give them considerable trouble over the weeks that are ahead. So I would again warn those who have been talking in the election of 1957, as their predecessors did in 1930, to study the aftermath of the action of their predecessors in the session of 1930 and to avoid the mistakes of that earlier time. This government should ask support at this session to do only what must be done now and should call us back to consider their well-thought-out policies early in the new year.

When the Liberals took over in 1935 we had two trans-Canada railway systems, a telegraph line and a telephone line to provide communication across Canada. When we turned the country back to the Conservatives in 1957 those railway systems were greatly developed, along with our telephone system and our telegraph system. But in addition to that we had a trans-Canada highway system which a world traveller said, as reported the other day in a newspaper, was one of the best that he found anywhere in the world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Gardiner: I am speaking, of course, on the amendment to the amendment. I shall be obliged to finish on the amendment.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to every word just spoken by the former minister of agriculture. Having regard to the majority of the time he took and what he said, out of the generosity of my heart the best I can say is that never has it taken so long to say so little. To me the majority of his speech seemed to be only an expression of the rabid fears of the Liberals that they may be forced to face an early election. When added to the other speeches to which I have listened emanating from the Liberal side of the house, it can only be interpreted as an admission of the fact that in the general election campaign and since this house has met they have been caught with their political pants down and now they are trying desperately to cover up the fact that they are exposed.

I noticed that the hon. member who immediately preceded me went out of his way, and made it a point to do so, to go after the C.C.F. because we had moved an amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne. May we make it emphatically clear that we deliberately moved an amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne and that we did so as a matter of fundamental principle and not as a matter of expediency.

We in the C.C.F. recognize the fact, as do most others, that although we welcome and will support—and have so stated—the beneficial proposals that have been mentioned in the speech from the throne, we differ in basic economic principle. We believe that the government, despite all it has said it is going to do, has missed the boat in connection with fundamental policies that will meet and solve the problems of this nation and will give and guarantee full employment, security and prosperity to the people of Canada. Because of the failure of the government to recognize that fact we have moved, as a fundamental principle, an amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am most grateful to the voters of Vancouver East for the fact that they saw fit to return me as a result of the poll taken on June 10. I feel absolutely sure that this is going to be a most interesting and intriguing session. Those of us who have been here previously cannot help but be amused at the session thus far in seeing the Liberals, as an official opposition, screaming to high heaven because they cannot get answers to their questions or do the things they want to do, things which they denied when they were on the other side of the house; and then at the same time to see the Conservatives, in what they have done thus far, giving exactly the same type of administration of parliamentary procedure as the Liberals gave previously and which they the Conservatives screamed to high heaven against. This sham battle would be most amusing if it were not actually so crucial. That is the way in which I want to introduce what we have to say.

Just as the previous Liberal government did not do so, the present Conservative government is not facing up to the real facts of Canadian life, the Canadian economy and developments throughout the world. Already this session we have heard from the parties of free enterprise—all three of them—a denouncement of the public ownership policies of the C.C.F. and a denouncement of the requisite social and economic planning as government policy which we say is so necessary at this time. Yet not only have we seen it year by year under the past government, but now we see through the medium of the speech from the throne the recognition by the present Conservative government that, in part at least, the future of Canada depends upon the co-operation of the federal authority and the provincial authorities in the realm of development under public ownership.

Knowing the free enterprise spirit of the other three parties, but in particular that of the Conservative government, may I say that this preliminary recognition must have been brought about because circumstances have forced it. We see it in the announcements already made of joint participation between the federal and provincial authorities in British Columbia on the Columbia river development, with the government of Saskatchewan on the Saskatchewan dam and, as mentioned by one hon. member—I think it was the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne)—on development in New Brunswick.

That is good, Mr. Speaker, as far as it goes but it is not going to solve the problem. Much as we welcome increases in pensions and allowances, that is not going to solve the problem either. Analysis will show that the only answer is an accelerated, deliberate policy of greater participation between the federal government and provincial governments on the development of natural resources under public ownership.

If that policy is not soon established then Canada is going to suffer from betrayal by, not only the past but the present government; because the way things are going today, in certain provinces under free enterprise governments there just are not going to be any natural resources left as a heritage for the people of those provinces and the people of Canada generally.

Here we have, or we should have, recognition that Canada spent billions of dollars to fight and win a military war, not so many years ago at that. Now having won the military war we find our natural resources being handed away to those against whom we fought and those who lost the war. We are rapidly finding ourselves in the position where those who lost the war, under private enterprise policies in Canada are approaching the position where they own a great deal of our country.

Take the situation in British Columbia where there are now 71,000 square miles of that great province which have been handed over to the Wenner-Gren interests. One can pick up the paper every week and read of the infiltration of industry by the Krupp interests and others into the Canadian economy.

Now no one is going to oppose the development of our country, but if the major benefits of the wealth produced through the development of our natural resources is to remain in Canada then surely common sense dictates the policy to be established in the public interest is public ownership by co-operation between the governments of Canada. If the members of the free enterprise governments of the provinces are not prepared to go that far, if the free enterprise parties in this house are not prepared to go that far, and if the government now in office is not prepared to go that far, then surely it is not asking too much that they insitute policies to give the greatest possible return to the people of Canada to whom the heritage of our natural resources belongs and whose work produces the wealth.

It is with a great deal of regret that we in this corner of the house have to note that there is no indication whatsoever of this recognition, nor is there any indication of a line of action being taken and policies established which will retain in this country to the greatest possible extent the wealth produced here. We have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that it is wrong that outside capital can come into the country and reap untold millions of dollars' profit and yet pay no tax to the Canadian people through the medium of a capital gains tax.

Coming down from Vancouver to Ottawa I had a most interesting discussion with two very wealthy Americans on the train. They told me how much they loved Canada and I replied that I understood that because of our beautiful scenery, our natural resources and so on and so forth. They said we do not mean that, what we mean is that Canada is the land of golden opportunity for the profiteers. They told me quite honestly, knowing that I was an M.P. and a socialist one at that, that what they were doing was getting their capital out of the United States, putting it into Canada and leaving it here. I asked why, and they told me it was because there is no capital gains tax in Canada.

Time does not permit me, and I do not think it is even necessary because you, Mr. Speaker, should know from the records—especially with respect to the gas lines and oil pipe lines—that what has and is taking place is legal, financial highway robbery. This was pointed out by my leader who referred to the activities of the robber barons during the past months and years. If the government will not recognize the responsibility of public ownership in order to hold our natural resources for Canada, if they will not go along—and they have already said they will not—with a capital gains tax, then is it unreasonable to expect that the government and the government agencies should live up to the laws of Canada and that Canadians should not be made to subsidize Americans in the export of our raw materials to the United States.

Only a short time ago we had the opening of the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited operations in British Columbia. I made an investigation of what took place and I thought it was a matter for action by the Department of Justice but have since found that there is no legal action there, at least as far as it comes under that department. In the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited operation, under their present contract they are going to sell 500 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. Of that, 200 million cubic feet per day is contracted for by the B.C. Electric in British Columbia at a price of 32 cents a thousand and at a demand rate of 90 per cent.

Now they branch off to the United States at Huntington I believe, just alongside of B.C. Electric's takeoff, but immediately that gas crosses the border, coming down the same pipe line, 200 million cubic feet per day is supplied to the United States company at 22 cents per thousand cubic feet. I would like to know why the citizens of British Columbia should have to pay almost 50 per cent more for our own gas on the whosesale basis than the cost to the wholesaler when it crosses the border into the United States.

I, through you, Mr. Speaker, most certainly direct these questions to the Conservative government in view of all their talk in this house during the past five years, in view of their campaigning across the country prior to June 10 about Canada first and the protection of Canadians, and how "we were not going to be rooked by the United States interests." Would they explain why the present situation has been allowed to develop. Not only, as I say, has the situation been allowed to develop, but this is something which I maintain is contrary to the law of Canada because we have an act entitled Exportation of Power and Fluids and the Importation of Gas Act. In the regulation of this act, which has not been repealed because I checked up on that, it says

> The price charged by a licencee for power or gas exported by him shall not be lower than the price at which power or gas, respectively, is supplied by him or his supplier in similar quantities and under similar conditions of sale for consumption in Canada.

That is a regulation in effect made under authority of an act of parliament. We want to know why a law enacted by this House of Commons is not lived up to. Even if there were no law, what is the political morality of a government that will allow a situation of this kind to continue?

I want to be absolutely honest. I believe this was the first such contract ever made in Canada and perhaps it slipped by those who are responsible for its ratification as far as the government or one of its agencies is concerned. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, may we ask assurance from the present government that there will be no repetition anywhere in Canada and that there will be a close scrutiny made of all contracts which may be presently under consideration or approaching consumation to ensure that the regulation will be lived up to and that Canadian consumers will not be placed in the position of subsidizing United States consumers in the export of our own raw materials.

I am certain the cabinet ministers from British Columbia will look into the point I am about to raise. I hope they will investigate the possibilities of examining into the re-drafting of the contract now in operation and which covers a period of 20 years. That is all I want to say on that matter at this time; but I wish to deal somewhat briefly with something else although it is a most important question.

A number of hon. members have spoken already on the question of unemployment and I feel I must, too, because of my knowledge of the situation as it exists in British Columbia and because on checking with the appropriate department I find, as I suspected was the case, that on a percentage basis unemployment in the Pacific region is higher than elsewhere in Canada.

During the past few months more than ever before I have been approached as a member of parliament by people in search of employment who were unable to find it. According to official figures I have been able to secure there were 29,138 registered unemployed in the Pacific region in September of this year as compared with 15,892 in the same week a year ago. In the city of Vancouver, one constituency of which I have the honour to represent, there were 15,141 registered unemployed on September 12 this year as compared with 8,019 in the same week a year ago. When you have an increase of almost 100 per cent in unemployment within a 12-month period it is a situation that cannot and must not be ignored.

I regret the evasiveness of the answer I received from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) the other day when I asked what action was contemplated by his department in meeting the unemployment problem. Whether there are 100 or 100,000 unemployed we have to be interested because these people are hungry. A great many of them are not covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act and with regard to those who do come under the act there is the essential need for an increase in the allowance paid comparable at least to the increases contemplated under other acts.

I wonder how many members of this house, especially those who are married, could pay rent and live on the amount paid under the act today with the existing high cost of living? It cannot be done. The allowance paid under the act is too little to live on and too much to die on; it should be better than that. We certainly hope that the matter is under active consideration and that immediate action will be taken. We hope also the government will not wait for some future dominion- provincial conference to determine federal financial responsibility before extending benefits to those who are not covered by the act.

Time after time such people have come to my home; they have no unemployment insurance either because they are not eligible for it or because it has run out. They are being evicted from their homes for non-payment of rent and find themselves with nothing to eat and no means of providing for their family. Where do we send them? In most instances the best we could do is send them down to the community council where they can get assistance for one, two, or perhaps three days; but what do they do then? M.P.'s cannot support them.

I cannot stress too strongly the seriousness of this situation. I believe that if the federal government would not wait for the proposed conference but would immediately notify the departments of labour of all the provinces that it is prepared to pay 50 or 60 per cent of the assistance to those not covered by the act prompt action would be taken in most provinces. I constantly encounter unemployed individuals in Vancouver who come to me for advice and assistance. I sincerely hope something will be done immediately and that it will be based on a decent standard.

In the few minutes left at my disposal I wish to draw to the attention of the government one other matter. I ask the government not to plan just from day to day but to look forward with creative vision. Despite all the questions that have been asked on the subject and all that has been intimated it is my belief that the government is going to proceed with a hospital insurance plan. God help them if they don't. If they fail to meet this challenge we will not have a new election in Canada, we will have a revolution because the people expect that at least hospital insurance will be brought into effect in the near future.

The experience we have had in British Columbia—and I think I can add the experience in Saskatchewan—when hospital insurance was first introduced was that people who required hospital treatment over the years requested hospitalization. This involved the construction of new hospitals. The time to start is before the over-all national plan comes into effect in order to be ready to meet that situation. If a plan for the construction of hospitals were undertaken now it would greatly assist the lumbering, construction and related industries as far as employment is concerned. But in addition to that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) should take under advisement a change in government allocations for the construction of hospitals.

A very good principle was introduced, I believe in 1948, by the previous minister of national health and welfare under which a federal contribution was made toward the construction of hospitals based on a payment of $1,000 per bed for acute treatment hospitals, $1,500 per bed for chronic, convalescent and tuberculosis hospitals and $500 per bed for the erection of nurses' quarters. There has been a vast increase in the cost of construction since that time. In Vancouver the cost of construction of a hospital in 1948 was $9,000 per bed and at the present time it is $15,000 per bed but there has never been an increase in the federal grant.

We heard from the previous government about rising costs and I am sure we will hear about this from the present government. Well, as it affects you, why not recognize that it affects the provinces and municipalities as well and give benefits to them such as I have outlined. The principle is still good but the payments by the federal government should be in line with the increases in construction costs presently being faced by our municipalities and provinces in the erection of much needed hospitals. I earnestly hope this matter will be thoroughly investigated and that speedy action will be taken on it by the present government.

That is all I am going to say now. There are many other things I would like to speak on but there will be opportunity to do so as the session progresses. May I conclude by just saying that as an individual I am 100 per cent behind the amendment moved by my leader. It is an amendment of principle. By this amendment we hope to draw to the attention of the government that as much as we welcome the progressive measures they have in mind we feel it imperative for the security of Canada and the prosperity of its people that they should broaden their vision and lay down policies which will be, not only a fulfilment of their campaign promises but will go a lot farther and lay an economic, a philosophic and a parliamentary basis for a real prosperity guaranteed to all Canadians for all time.

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a privilege to rise in my place in this house for the first time. It is an honour because I stand here with men of the calibre of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent), the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). It was indeed a great thrill for me to have been elected on June 10 and I hope I can convey to this house the fact that I intend to represent the people of Hamilton South in no small measure. I think it is the duty of a parliamentarian to represent his people. In the past few days I have heard more speeches on history, on religion and on other things than I have ever heard before. I have learned more about the political history of Canada in five days than I have heard of constructive criticism of the speech from the throne.

I am not so naive as to pit myself against such experienced veterans as the former minister of agriculture, but I do recall reading that it was the hydro electric system of Ontario and New York state which prodded the Liberal regime to immediate development of the St. Lawrence seaway.

I should like to take this opportunity to commend my room mate, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), on the wonderful speech he made in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and with a little practice I hope that I may be able to give the same type of oration as he gave.

As a young man looking forward to a great future in Canada I want my children to have all the benefits of the resources and of all the facilities available. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) took a great deal of pride in telling this house about the wonderful immigration policies of the Liberal party. I believe that in the next 25 to 35 years Canada should have a very large population to cope with the economic developments of this country. We should have an immigration policy based on that fact, and we should tell the people in the countries of Europe and in Great Britain that it is not a picnic over here; that this is a place where they must strive to make their living.

I come from Hamilton South where we have a great cross section of peoples from all over the world, Scots, Irish, English; from Italy, Yugoslavia, Serbia and from all over western and central Europe; with language difficulties, which we have heard talked about here, far surpassing the difficulties between the French and the English. They come from countries operating under the suppression of Russian dictatorial masters. I hope that we can have more constructive criticism in this house than that which was put forth by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I am not trying to criticize in any way the manner in which he put forth his suggestions, but I believe and hope that everyone here has high ideals and a high regard for this House of Commons which holds the traditions and the heritage of the Canadian people.

As a young man watching the course of Canadian politics, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, I do not want to see or hear ever again—and I am not saying this in a very jovial kind of way—the petty and stupid politics played by any member in this house, whether he be on our side or on the other side, with regard to religion or classes. Where can a young man turn for another example than to the senior members of this house. I hope that we shall all do our duty to the best of our ability.

The riding of Hamilton South consists of a population which is half residential and the other half industrial, with innumerable small businesses, along with large steel companies, rubber corporations, textile mills and the house-building industry. They are looking for a new deal and I think they are going to get it.

[Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South).]

I am rather young, perhaps the second youngest member in the house today, and I eagerly look forward to the government's policies of the future. I really do not want to hear about the great traditions of the past. We all know that the Liberal party has done a lot for Canada, and I believe they have; but we are looking to the future of Canada, not for political speeches in this house which give me a very disgusting taste. If I could bring some of my constituents down here to listen to the political speeches before the coming election, whether this year or next, I believe they would be disgusted.

I am very happy to hear that the government intends to do something about the social security program, rehabilitation and blind pensions. I am very interested in these things. I believe this government can do it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) would not have promised anything that he knew he could not fulfil. I believe he has as good a political brain as anyone on the other side of the house and I think he knows what he can accomplish.

In Hamilton the housing industry is very grateful for the $150 million which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation released into the market. This represents perhaps 15,000 homes in the Dominion of Canada and approximately 600 homes in Hamilton. This will assist the plumbing, electrical, heating, tinsmithing and lumber dealers to facilitate winter work, which I know we really need. I heartily agree with the C.C.F. party in the plea they make, and in which I join, that unemployment be stopped, and this $150 million will help to stop it.

I have a note here which suggests that the ordinary insured loan for the second quarter of 1957 by lending companies and other government agencies was $10,500, and an average income of $5,800. Through the agency of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the average loan has been dropped to $9,920 and the average income to $4,357. I believe we can go farther and bring this average down.

In Hamilton during the election campaign, which was fought with the Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough), the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Martini) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard), some of us advocated a new plan of housing, and I should like to take just a few moments to mention this for the consideration of the house.

Under the government land assembly act the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities buy land. This is cheap land. I think it could be used to great advantage. It seems to me in the housing industry today the land grabbers, if one can call them that, are exploiting the land and making a great deal of profit.

The average income per worker in Hamilton is $71 a week. Under the last regime the average worker was finding it impossible to buy a home but today it is coming within his means. However, the man in the $3,200 to $4,000 income bracket is probably going to have a very difficult time to buy a home today and I should like to advocate a lease-purchase program which might enable people in that bracket to buy homes. The plan would operate in this way. A person would purchase a house on a five year option and pay rent for the five year period. Interest on the mortgage and taxes paid to the municipality would then be deducted from the amount he has paid and the remainder would be used as a down payment on the house with the balance owing on the house then being amortized over a period of say 20 or 25 years.

Such a plan will enable the person who is striving to achieve pride ownership of his own home to go ahead and buy a house instead of having to pay high rent for a long period of time and not being able to save the money for a downpayment on a home. I hope this suggestion will be given consideration. I have talked to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and he assures me that he will look into it.

Hamilton has a very large harbour of which we are all proud. It is the third largest tonnage harbour in Canada. We are very grateful to the government for the assistance that it has given since coming into power. The government is going to build a $4\frac{1}{2}$ million lift bridge over the entrance to our harbour which will facilitate greatly the passage of ocean-going ships. We were quite worried that if such a step were not taken one of these large ships entering the harbour might knock down the railway swing bridge across the harbour entrance and block the passage for shipping, thus crippling the economy of Hamilton. The government's foresight in the proposed lending of $4,100,000 to the harbour commission of Hamilton will enable the commission to build proper docks and other facilities to cope with the tremendous development that will take place in my riding as the result of the completion of the seaway.

I should like to say at this time that I am here to represent all the people of my riding. I do not propose to make a lengthy speech because I am not capable of doing so at present. But if I should feel at any time that the privileges and rights of the people of my riding are being infringed upon I shall be here to say so. I am very glad indeed that in our strong Conservative party the grass is very close to the brass and that in our caucuses we are allowed to talk freely and express our opinions. With the co-operation we are getting now I believe that in the next election, whether it takes place early or late, the people of Canada will know that our policy for Canada embraces national development, organized immigration and a general development program which I think Canada has been needing for a long time.

I do not want to end my remarks without saying something that I believe should be said. I believe that a true parliamentarian is one who represents his riding faithfully. He is the one who alone can judge himself and when I reach the age of some of the members in the house I should like to be proud of the fact, whether I am here for one month, two months, or 10 or 15 years, that I have tried to serve Canada and the people of my riding effectively and that my children will be able to say that I tried to do a good job.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you and the Deputy Speaker on your high appointments. I feel sure that you are both fine and honourable men and will conduct the affairs of the house in keeping with the British parliamentary system. I want to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on his selection of the two members who moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I think they both did well although I do not think they can expect me to agree with them fully. Nevertheless they expressed their views and their views, taken with the views of all other members of the house, go to help to create good government for the people of Canada.

I listened with great interest to the speaker who has just taken his seat. I do not want to deal today with anything mentioned in the speech from the throne. I want to take up the effect the operation of the St. Lawrence seaway may have upon our district, particularly the Welland canal district, Hamilton and Toronto. The hon. member said that he is free to bring up matters in caucus and I would be very glad to have him raise this one there.

The St. Lawrence seaway authority and its counterpart in the United States have held hearings in preparation for an agreement for the imposition of tolls on vessels and cargos that will be using the St. Lawrence seaway when completed and the Welland ship canal.

As members of parliament we should be interested in the cost of vessel operation in so far as tolls will add to the cost of transporting cargoes and we should consider what effect this will have on industry, agriculture and trade and commerce in general. We should be interested in the shipping industry itself which employs thousands of Canadians as seamen as well as many others as shipbuilders and suppliers. We should also be interested in the welfare of Canadians generally.

I have often read that 40 per cent of our workmen depend for their livelihood on our foreign trade. I am sure that the prosperity of Canada as a whole depends in large measure on the continuing expansion of our foreign trade. We have two main outlets for foreign trade outside of Canada. On the west coast we have Vancouver and Prince Rupert and through these ports our goods go to the Far East. Then we have the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes basin which is Canada's single great trade route to Europe. Much of our trade with the United States and in Canada itself is along and across this route.

Water transportation in this area is called the most economical transportation system in the world and because of its economy it has been greatly responsible for building up our country. It has helped our farmers to market their wheat in highly competitive markets even though that wheat is grown thousands of miles from the seaboard. It helps our industries to assemble raw materials and to sell their finished products into highly competitive markets.

Today this system of water transportation is becoming even more important to Canada because of the prospect of shipping large quantities of iron ore from Labrador and Quebec to United States and Canadian mills on the shores of the great lakes. Some plants in Toronto and Hamilton and on the Welland canal are unfavourably situated as far as tolls are concerned since most of their waterborne raw materials must pass through some part of the toll system. This is particularly true of the Steel Company of Canada in Hamilton. I am told that it takes nearly 3½ tons of raw material to make one ton of iron which means that the Steel Company of Canada would have to pay tolls on approximately 3½ tons of raw material in order to get one ton of the finished product. In my opinion this puts the Steel Company of Canada in an unfavourable competitive position with other steel companies, for example, the companies in Cleveland which get ore from the shores of lake Superior free of any toll charges.

I read over the bill authorizing the St. Lawrence seaway authority to charge tolls and to cover operational costs of the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal. This bill received the support of all parties in this house and was passed in December, 1951. There was no division on any reading or committee stage of the bill. About the only opposition that occurred at the time was the statement that this bill was being passed as window dressing to help the Ontario government develop hydroelectric projects along the St. Lawrence river.

The transition from the use of smaller canal boats to the larger carriers is bound to take a considerable time. It will be during this period, before we reach the maximum tonnages likely to use the canal, that amortization costs per ton will be the highest unless the government can make some satisfactory arrangement with the United States government. Our government should not lose sight of the fact that because of completely different circumstances in our two countries, the United States government will probably approach this question from a different point of view than our government. We must not forget that except on the great lakes themselves the United States has no similar restrictions on the flow of their goods to foreign markets. Their wheat goes down the Mississippi to the gulf of Mexico by means of pusher units. A good many of their industries are located close to coastal ports or at least have easy access to coastal ports by sending ships down rivers. We must not forget either that the United States has a very large domestic market and does not depend to the same extent as Canada on foreign trade.

The St. Lawrence seaway is not such a major factor in the economy of the United States. If the tolls on the seaway are too high the United States has alternative water and other routes to carry its commerce. For instance, in the lake Erie and lake Ontario area some commerce can be sent through the Erie canal. In the Chicago area ships can be sent down through the Mississippi.

I feel the government should remember also that the railway interests of the United States, who opposed the seaway for so long, would have a financial interest in keeping the tolls as high as possible. If the tolls are too high a large amount of United States tonnage that would otherwise use our canal system will be diverted to other cheaper routes. The shipping of commodities will become cheaper after the completion of the seaway only because larger carriers will be used. Consideration should be given to those plants that cannot make use of larger carriers, as this will add materially to their costs. We have several such plants along the Welland canal, in Port Colborne, Welland and Thorold. There may be some such plants in Toronto, Hamilton and Kingston.

In most instances the docks are short and not adapted to the servicing of water carriers of any greater length than those now used. Some of the companies bringing in raw materials cannot make any greater physical use of the waterway by employing larger carriers. An example of this would be the paper mills. At the present time they load pulpwood at the mouths of rivers and it would not be economic for them to build larger, more expensive docks or to deepen the channels to service deeper draft vessels. The cutting of pulpwood is a depleting process, and the amount that can be floated down each river is limited. Many of our companies settled along the Welland ship canal because of the close proximity of hydroelectric power at Niagara falls. They were confident in their belief in the continuous free use of our international waterways because of a treaty between Canada and the United States relating to boundary waters dated January 11, 1909. The two countries solemnly covenanted that:

> Navigation on all boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants and the ships—of both countries.

I do not suppose for a moment that implied that if canals had to be enlarged they would necessarily be toll free. I can remember ten years ago hearing a man interested in shipping quote from this passage in an argument that shipping along our great lake system would always continue to be toll free. Now the advantage of proximity to electric power is gone because of the standardization of rates in Ontario. As a result of this Niagara power is the same price at Windsor, 250 miles away, as it is in Niagara Falls itself. In other words, the users at Niagara Falls pay some of the transmission costs to Windsor and other centres.

If we have the application of tolls on the seaway and the Welland canal there will be an adverse effect on the production costs of our Welland canal industries as well as those in Hamilton and Toronto. We have cement, flour and nickel plants at Port Colborne. At Welland we have a steel plant, tube mills and a chemical works, all of which use the canal. At Thorold and Merritton we have the paper mills and in Grantham we have the General Motors plant. Many of these companies use coal that comes in by boat, so the price of the coal and all the other raw materials would naturally be increased by the extent of the toll.

I should like to go into some detail in connection with the Ontario Paper Company at Thorold. This company has 1,200 employees and an annual payroll of $8 million. They have wood-preparing plants and research facilities in Ontario. In addition, the Ontario Paper Company owns a plant at Baie Comeau in Quebec on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, where it has its own power and wood-preparing plants. The company also owns a fleet of eleven ships engaged in transporting not only its own products but general commerce as well. Altogether this company has 7,910 permanent and seasonal employees, with a total annual payroll of $25,700,000. Its total production amounts to over $60 million of which $58 million was exported to the United States, and this is equivalent to 2.3 per cent of Canada's total exports to that country.

The Ontario Paper Company has always treated labour most fairly. I think this company's contribution and that of its top executives is a fine example of responsible Canadian industry. This company presented a brief to the tolls committee of the St. Lawrence seaway authority not long ago. I wish to quote part of this brief as follows:

> The locational advantage of proximity to its power source is now being threatened if the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission carries out its policy of applying power rates on a system-wide basis rather than based on cost of transmission of power from close sources. If, in addition, a burden of $800,000 per year for tolls upon its traffic is superimposed upon it, it could be the means of forcing the location into an untenable position, thus forcing consideration of either abandonment or relocating its manufacturing equipment to a location where we have our own power facilities and avoiding the burden of tolls.

If the Ontario Paper Company finds that it is necessary to relocate because of these extra burdens, that is their higher cost of power and the proposed seaway tolls, it will be a tremendous loss to the Niagara district and to the province of Ontario. I cannot think that this government or any tolls committee would want to see this happen. The building of the waterway will not in any way add to the economy of this company's operations.

When I look at the map of the great lakes and contemplate the large tonnages of iron ore, wheat, and pulpwood that will be loaded on its shores, I cannot help but think that the great bulk of it destined for United States ports will stop short of the tollage area, while our wheat and other exports are obliged to go through the tollage area. I hope that the great bulk of the iron ore tonnage from Seven Islands and from Labrador will go through the canal system and help to keep down the tollage amortization cost. Even here I have some doubts.

Many will argue that the users should pay for the canal in full. As the member for Welland I would agree to this proposition if there was any economy added to the operation of our plants by virtue of deepening the Welland canal. On account of an unfair toll system being applied I do not want to see any plants closed down or their operations curtailed. This would mean unemployment. If the price of skelp, for instance, from the Steel Company of Canada at Hamilton should be increased until it is too high in price to the tube mills in Welland it could be that the United States would supply more of our Canadian pipe requirements and thus cause unemployment in the tube mills as well as in the steel mill at Hamilton.

In any case I think the Welland canal should not be put in the same category as the St. Lawrence seaway itself. The Canadian government did not impose tolls after rebuilding and enlarging it. The canal was conceived in order to have a more closely knit Canadian economy. The maritimes now ship paper and some other products through the Welland ship canal. The other day in Hamilton, according to the press, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) said that Nova Scotia coal would compete with United States coal and be used in Hamilton. I sincerely hope that he is right. I wonder, however, if when he made that statement he gave consideration to the fact that Pennsylvania coal could be railed to nearby Rochester and shipped to all Canadian ports on lake Ontario, including Hamilton, without paying any toll whatsoever.

There are so many problems in connection with the application of tolls that I feel that this government will have to be extremely careful in setting up toll charges that they do not dislocate any part of our economy and make ourselves even less of a factor in the processing of our own raw materials.

The one big danger of setting tolls too high is that the seaway canal system might price itself out of the market against competitive carrier systems in eastern United States so far as our iron ore from Seven Islands and Labrador is concerned. As Canadians we would not be concerned if tolls were free and this ore went by another route because then we would have fewer local problems with canal traffic. However, if this happened with the proposed system—that is the system of tollage that we are about to set up—we would fail to collect canal tollage on a good or major part of our own iron ore destined for United States steel centres. In my opinion our ore should help to pay for the canals. If it does not assume a large share of canal costs, then our wheat, our pulpwood and other commodities will have to pay more per ton to go through the canals in order to meet the yearly amortization costs.

As a private member I should like to make some suggestions for the consideration of this government. I suggest that tolls be delayed until the larger seaway tonnages are established, and I do not think the seaway tonnages can be established until the deepening of the upper lake channel starting at the Detroit river and all the way up to lake Superior is completed. At least they cannot be established fully.

My second suggestion is that consideration be given to plants already established on our great lakes system whose raw or finished products or both are caught in the tollage areas. Few United States plants are so unfavourably situated; and if they are, they have competitive routes, since the cost of the deepening of the Detroit, the St. Clair and the St. Mary's rivers is not to be charged directly against shipping. I also suggest that in the transition period smaller canal freighters be given special consideration until an opportunity is given for the building of larger freighters and that consideration be continued to be given to the smaller freighters because of the difficulty or impossibility of using larger ones at the source of raw materials.

The amortization costs are made up of the cost of the seaway plus interest plus operational charges. This will amount to a large sum of money every year. It is my honest opinion, having in mind the increased cost of the seaway over the estimated cost, that shipping cannot stand this in full. For instance, there are about 23 million tons going through the seaway. It would take $28 million or close to that figure to pay those charges. That would be well over a dollar a ton. Of course I realize that the shipping through this canal will greatly increase and thus will bring down these charges. On the other hand, I do not think anyone knows what is the physical capacity of the Welland and the seaway canals.

As one measure of relief why should not the governments themselves operate and maintain the canals as our government has done for the last 50 years? If our government does not continue to assume this obligation it will be saving a good deal of money over what is now being spent on the canals.

One good argument in favour of both governments assuming some of the costs of these canals is that it was argued here in this House and in the United States that these canals were required for the defence of both our countries and certainly that would have very little to do with shipping.

One last suggestion is that the Welland canal should continue with the charges as now paid for the passage of ships. After all its deepening will cost only about one-twelfth of the cost of the deepening of the upper lake channels. I realize that as canal traffic increases certainly the per-ton costs will come down. I hope that rates will be worked out to agree with the terms laid down by the United States congress in which they said the rates should be fair and equitable and give due consideration to the encouragement of an increased utilization of navigational facilities.

Now the other day the hon. Minister of Transport was shown over the Welland canal by the St. Lawrence seaway authorities and my good friend the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Smith) and I were asked by the minister's office here in Ottawa to join the party. I do not think there is anything controversial in this as the minister is not here. The officials drove the minister so fast through the area that we who were riding in other cars had no opportunity to show him some of our local problems in that area, and certainly we have some problems. We have the need of overpasses or underpasses in two or three areas on the canal and we have that old problem, the old Welland canal cleanup. There is a good deal of congestion of traffic on the highway in the Niagara peninsula crossing the Welland canal and this traffic is particularly bad in Welland, Port Colborne and on the Homer bridge on the Queen Elizabeth way near St. Catharines. The mayor of Welland was here in Ottawa and he saw the former minister of transport who directed him to take his problems to the minister of highways of Ontario, promising that if that minister would make some recommendations regarding the crossing of the canal at Welland he would be glad to recommend financial assistance from this government in Ottawa. That was before the election. I know the minister of highways for Ontario was approached and I was sorry to learn in the question period last Friday, October 18, that he had not yet approached the new Minister of Transport with regard to this matter.

It is rumoured that as soon as the St. Lawrence and the Welland canals are completed their operation will be handed over to the St. Lawrence seaway authority. In the past the canals have been run very efficiently under all governments, either under the Department of Transport or the department of railways and canals. The canals have been staffed very efficiently with men who have the know-how. To turn the operation of these canals over to an authority which would not have the same or as direct responsibility to parliament would, in my mind, be very unwise.

I would just like to make one reference to another point. When I was home last weekend I heard a good deal of talk about unemployment. I met some heads of industry who claimed that they were getting no economic directives from this government. Now I think we all remember that early in the session the former minister of trade and commerce always gave the house and the country his idea of our economic outlook. On the change of government, with the talk of free trade with Britain and so forth, I think it is up to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) to get up and tell this house what the country, industry and the people should expect. Some heads of industry are losing confidence in this government, in fact I may say some heads of industry who supported this government are now losing confidence in it. The wholesalers are not building up inventories and I think this tends to cause unemployment.

I listened to the Minister of Trade and Commerce during a television interview when he was in London speaking about the sale of wheat. As far as I can remember he said the sale of wheat was a long-term view. I think I am right in repeating his words. Also he said he had seen the bankers, the buyers and the bakers. In my view he might just as well have seen the butchers and the candlestick makers, because he did not seem to sell any wheat while he was in Britain. A day or two after that I saw a dispatch from London to the effect that England had bought a large shipment of wheat from the United States. I do think the people of Canada deserve to have an economic report on our prospects of trade at this time.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in my place for the first time in this house it is with all humility that I deliver this reply to Her Majesty's speech from the throne. Before I start I would like to tell you that I have just come through a bout of flu and still have a persistent cough which is troubling me. So if I am interrupted by this cough I ask you to forgive me. I do not intend to use all of the time allotted to me because I do not believe my voice will carry me that far and of course there will be many things which I would like to discuss but, for this reason, I cannot do so.

First, and again in all humility and seriousness, allow me to congratulate the Speaker on his election to the high and exacting position as Speaker of this house. I should like also to congratulate the senior members of our Social Credit group and particularly our leader for their achievements in returning a colleague to every seat occupied by our party prior to the last election.

While it may not be customary, but because I like to give credit where credit is due, allow me to congratulate the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for the success of his party on June 10th, which I believe is largely due to his own personal effort.

Mr. Speaker, the experience I have had and the events I have witnessed here in Ottawa during the past few days are ones I shall never forget, and I would like to express my appreciation to the electors of the Medicine Hat and surrounding districts for having seen fit to send me as their representative to these history making events. My respect, my admiration and my loyalty are on an even higher plane, if that is possible, for Her Majesty and His Royal Highness now that I have come in closer contact with them. May I also extend my sincere congratulations to the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the reply to the speech from the throne and to the Prime Minister for his choice.

As you will all know, I can deeply appreciate the words of the hon. member for Calgary South when he spoke of the terror and the subsequent reduction to straight fear in the hearts of new members when they are in the position in which I now find myself. I beg to advise the house that if he was gripped with these emotions then I am even more their victim not having behind me the valued and distinguished service in the provincial legislature it was his good fortune to have had.

It is also of particular interest to me that the Prime Minister has seen fit to recognize the ability of all his colleagues from Alberta, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), now our Minister of Agriculture; the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who is parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence; and the hon. member for Calgary South to whom was given the honour of moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I congratulate all of them.

Since Tuesday October 15, when the Prime Minister announced that the governor in council had established a royal commission to enquire into and make recommendations concerning energy and sources of energy, it has been difficult for me to believe that this commission could do the best job possible without a representative from the province of Alberta when we know that a large percentage of the known sources of energy such as natural gas, coal and oil are found there. Many of Canada's important rivers rise in Alberta and I do not think it presumptuous to suggest that possibly many of the most efficient hydro sites may be located in that province where the elevation drops sharply to the east.

Perhaps I may refer again to the words of the hon. member for Calgary South when he informed this house of the fact that the Alberta government has already assessed its resources and as a consequence was able to develop policies for conservation—and I might add utilization—which have been in the interest of the people as a whole. I quite honestly believe that even though this information may be available, a representative of the people who prepared it could make an invaluable contribution to the commission.

We in Alberta are perhaps more interested in developing the sources of energy than in ascertaining where they are. In that regard I would like to read a part of an editorial taken from The Albertan of October 16, 1957:

> So far as oil and gas are concerned, there's a mountain of evidence. The Alberta conservation board, more competent and more in tune with Alberta's interests than is the Diefenbaker royal commission, has conducted several formal investigations and keeps a constant watch on all phases of the industry.
>
> Now all that will be explored again, and not only for oil and gas but for all energy sources, coal, hydro power, atomic energy and so on.
> We aren't opposed to facts being ascertained, but we suspect the purpose of this move is to becloud facts, not uncover them, and the prime fact is the need for getting on with development of Alberta's oil and gas. A commission on how to reach additional markets might have been welcomed by this province, but not one that puts an extra barrier in the way.

I do not agree with all of the opinions expressed in the editorial but the reason I read it is that it is my sincere hope that the commission will not be a barrier to the development of those resources that are already known.

I am primarily interested in my own constituency and as it is customary for a new member to talk about his constituency let me first of all say that while many of the things I will talk about may possibly be familiar to the older members there may be some of the new members who are not as well informed as to the problems, conditions, etc. in southeast Alberta as indeed I am unfamiliar with many of the constituencies in other parts of Canada.

The constituency of Medicine Hat is a large prairie area consisting of some 365 townships and the people are chiefly engaged in agriculture, growing a wide variety of foodstuffs, cereals, sugar beets and many other crops suitable to dry land and irrigated farming, and in raising livestock. There is, however, a highly important industrial centre in the city of Medicine Hat and also at Redcliff and of course there is a concentration of industrial workers there who man the plants. One of the most serious handicaps to these industries is the extremely high cost of transportation of their products to the markets and because of this I would urge the new government to give consideration to the adjustment of the unfavourable freight rates to and from Alberta. Of course the workers in these industrial areas have many problems that are peculiar to themselves but by and large their well-being is dependent on the well-being of agriculture in the west in general.

I would also like to point out at this time that in the city of Medicine Hat we have a need for a new federal building. At the present time the offices of the various departments of the federal government are scattered all across the city and some of them, I may say, are not even located in the downtown section. The post office is virtually bursting at the seams. I would ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) if he would seriously consider the erection of a building in the centre of the city to house all of the offices of the federal government under one roof.

One other thing in the city of Medicine Hat which is a concern of the federal government is the airport. At the present time the facilities at the Medicine Hat airport are such that many of the aircraft the air lines are using cannot touch down there. For example, only last month when the chamber of commerce of Edmonton was going to pay us a visit they arrived in a Viscount and were required to land at Suffield some 35 miles away. We would appreciate if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) would consider enlarging our airport to accommodate this type of aircraft.

Turning back to agriculture now, Mr. Speaker, it is needless for me to say we are keenly interested in the proposal of advancing money to farmers for farm-stored grain. I will not dwell on the point which so many hon. members have ably discussed, that being the fact that the farmers are far more interested in selling their wheat and moving it into the hands and stomachs of hungry people all over the world than they are in receiving advance payments, subsidies or anything of that nature. Of course, as we do not know as yet all the details of the proposed machinery for advancing this money I will leave that for comment at a later date.

The farmers in my constituency wish to commend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) for his efforts in organizing trade delegations. We do not know as yet how much favourable effect this has had in building up markets for wheat but certainly we have something to sell and I believe some genuine salesmanship is necessary to move our wheat in this age of highly competitive international markets. I would also like to suggest that when they make up this trade delegation they put some professional salesmen on it.

There are one or two other things about cereals and cereal production which may not have received proper consideration. I have read press reports in which prominent men have indicated that the major contributing factor leading up to the present surplus of cereals is the series of big crops due to abnormal weather. There have also been suggestions that a return to normal would relieve the situation. Certainly I will have to agree with part of this opinion. However, this year, 1957, has pointed up one thing that many farmers have been coming to believe and I feel that we may as well be realistic and recognize the fact that today we can and do produce far larger yields, given the same amount of precipitation during the growing season, than we could 10 to 15 years ago.

This, of course, has been brought about by several things, more know-how, new and better methods, new and better equipment, particularly in moisture conservation from one year to the next. There are other things, too, such as new varieties of grain and many other factors. This year, for example, 15 to 20 bushel crops of wheat were not uncommon where there was but one to two inches of rainfall during the growing season. This, of course, would have been impossible 15 years ago. The significance of this development is that I now believe the dry land areas in western Canada can produce all of the domestic and export market requirements of cereal grains in the immediate future; indeed, until there is some plan put into operation whereby we can share our production with those parts of the world that cannot produce enough for themselves.

The cost of production of crops, particularly cereals, which are adapted to dry-land farming is substantially lower than on irrigated land. For this reason I think that when there are suggestions to build new irrigation projects and bring more land under the ditch there must also be serious consideration given to what the people farming this land will try to grow. The farmers in my constituency who are trying to grow dry-land crops on irrigated acres in competition with the lower cost operation of dry-land farming are the ones who are now in the most serious difficulty.

We certainly do not take the dog-in-the-manger attitude towards new development of irrigation projects because we already have these projects in operation. We do not object to hydro development, but—and I emphasize this—two or more farmers in serious economic difficulty is a worse situation than one who is doing fairly well farming the same land.

Unless and until we can set up ways of marketing or distributing the products particularly adapted to irrigated farming, and until the acres now under the ditch are being utilized, I think we should proceed with caution with any new projects. To this end, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the new government that they seriously consider giving assistance to establishing this distributing machinery.

We know that southern Alberta now has acreage under irrigation with the capacity to produce thousands of tons of specialized crops and we also know that there are thousands of tons of products being imported from the United States, which could be grown in south Alberta, especially vegetable crops. I have several briefs prepared by an official of the provincial government and various chambers of commerce to substantiate these statements.

In viewing the whole picture of irrigation, it becomes apparent that we already have the potential productive capacity and also the markets, but there is a link missing, that of processing and distributing. The farmers cannot start growing certain crops until there is a plant to process them, and it is difficult to interest anyone in building the plants until the crops are being grown. Now I am not suggesting that the government should get into the business of processing and distributing vegetables; but I do believe they should underwrite the financing of these plants, preferably producer co-operative efforts.

The speech from the throne indicates that there will be increases in old age and other pensions. This I wholeheartedly endorse. I only hope they are large enough to compensate for the increased cost of living during the last number of years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the members of this house have been very kind and considerate to me as a new member and before sitting down I would like to make one or two observations on the debates thus far in the house. Many references have been made to what certain hon. members of the government, particularly cabinet ministers, said in the past sessions prior to the last election. This appears to me to be a kind of negative criticism which I do not believe the Canadian people will approve of. On the other hand, some of the hon. members on the government side apparently have a chip on their shoulders, and have taken the attitude of daring the opposition parties to defeat them. They apparently feel the tide is running in favour of the Conservative party. They may do well to bear in mind what the electors did to the Liberal party last June which was contrary to all predictions.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have sent a group of minority parties here to administer their affairs. They are looking for a high degree of statesmanship rather than political manoeuvring. Anyone, and I care not from which side of the house he comes, who attempts to manoeuvre for political advantage only, who obstructs solely to obstruct, who criticizes without a constructive thought, will have to answer to the people, and I am sure that these members will be severely rebuked by the electors.

If members of the government do not mind I would like to offer a suggestion. There is a far more effective way to deal with some of the front-benchers of the official opposition while they are jockeying for position in the race for leadership of the Liberal party and that suggestion, sir, is to kill them with kindness.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate you and the Deputy Speaker on the high position that you now grace in Canada's 23rd parliament. To the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) I would just like to say a heartfelt "well done". I am quite sure that the constituencies of Calgary South and Bonaventure will be very proud of you. I think your ability in the house, your dignity and fluency will make a great contribution to this chamber and to Canada.

A great deal of verbal sparring has been going on in parliament, Mr. Speaker, since we convened about a fortnight ago, and I think this is as it should be. Parliament is a place for talk; it is a place for airing opinions, but I am not going to contribute to that verbal sparring today because I find myself in a singularly benign mood.

One reason for this is the throne speech which promises to bring about so many of those things that should have been brought about long before this. Ever since coming into the House of Commons I have worked for and raised my voice on behalf of those senior citizens in my constituency of York-Humber who have been trying to live on their old age pensions. They are a gallant, uncomplaining group of people and they have made no small contribution to the progress and prosperity of Canada today.

Rising costs of living have visited very real hardship upon these pensioners, in fact, upon all pensioners, and I do commend the government for its promise to improve the lot of the senior citizens in our community and for the promise of increased payments under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act.

I also find myself in a happy frame of mind over the government's promise to shorten the qualifying period of residence for old age pensioners. As has been said in the house many times, to set 20 years arbitrarily as the necessary period of residence before receiving the old age pension is, it seems to me, to establish a second-class citizenship. If a man or woman meets the qualifications to become a citizen of Canada, then surely the benefits that we are able to bestow upon Canadians are theirs by right long before two decades.

Finally, there was that tantalizing little sentence in the throne speech, "Changes in certain of the taxing statutes will be submitted for your approval." I do not know just what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has in mind but I should like to say this. In Canada today there are more than 2½ million persons earning less than $4,000 a year, or about 77 per cent of the taxpayers. They are the people who need and deserve some relief from taxation because as it is with pensioners on fixed incomes so it is with the lower income bracket Canadian. The increased cost of living has played havoc with his budget. Again I am speaking on behalf of a good many of my constituents in York-Humber which is a suburban riding and full of young people just starting out on their careers. They are finding the taxation burden very heavy indeed.

These are some of the things in the throne speech that have contributed to my benign mood these days. Now I come to something less tangible but equally important. This something has filled my heart and mind with a profound gratefulness for Canada and for being a Canadian. This summer I went on a sort of busman's holiday which took me behind the iron curtain into Russia. I call it a busman's holiday because I did not go in any official or even professional capacity. I was not invited to go. I simply went on my own as a tourist because I wanted to see with my own eyes that puzzling and menacing country on the other side of the iron curtain.

I went, I saw and I came home thanking God for this beautiful land of freedom, for our parliamentary system where the people choose their government and we who are given the honour to serve in parliament answer to the people, not, Mr. Speaker, to a power-hungry group of 15 people in an ivory tower called the kremlin.

Last year we of the Conservative party put up a strong fight for what we believed were the rights of parliament. We believed that parliament was being gagged by closure. We could not and did not win that good fight because there was a large parliamentary majority against us. But, Mr. Speaker, under our system of government it is not in the end parliamentary majorities that decide great or small issues, it is the people. This could not happen in Russia or in any communist country.

In the throne speech Her Majesty spoke of our parliamentary government as having been fashioned by the wisdom of many centuries. Russia's system is founded on fear. Some years ago the Right Hon. Sir Winston Churchill described our parliamentary system in his own inimitable way when he said:

> By trial and error and perseverance through the centuries, we have found a very good plan.

During the past fortnight we have seen how that very good plan works in response to the voice of the people. The other day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) spoke of the ease and smoothness with which this change of government was accomplished. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to it also when he said that it illustrated the concept of true democracy.

My sortie behind the iron curtain, Mr. Speaker, has given me an even greater appreciation of this concept of true democracy. When the people choose to elect a new government former leaders are not purged or banished to Outer Mongolia. Fear does not burn deep into the hearts and minds of those who did the opposing. In our very good plan we move with ease and smoothness to fulfil the wishes of the people. The former opposition becomes Her Majesty's government and the former government becomes Her Majesty's loyal opposition.

I am not going to hold forth on my trip to the U.S.S.R. except to say that in that country behind the iron curtain there are none of the freedoms that we cherish. There is no freedom of speech, no freedom of the press, no freedom of privacy. I think one of the things that shocked me most in Russia was the dreadful overcrowding in housing. There is no freedom of choice. Certainly there is freedom to work. Everybody works, men and women, but they have no choice of a job. A job is allocated to them. There is no freedom of movement. Even within Russia itself the people cannot travel at will. As the Russians have told us, and it is true, there is freedom of religion, but religion is not a menace any longer to communism because in 30 years religion has been wiped out in Russia. Today all the young adults in that country are declared atheists.

Communism reduces people and living to the lowest denominator. It is absolutely incomprehensible to me how any Canadian with any spiritual values whatsoever can look with favour upon or even tolerate communism. It is incomprehensible to me how any Canadian labour union can allow communist domination within its ranks. Russian labour has none of the hard-won rights to bargain, to strike, to negotiate for higher pay and shorter hours, such as Canadian labour has.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say these few words, and in conclusion I say to every member in this house, let us guard well the very good plan that our forefathers have evolved through the centuries by trial, error and perseverance.

(Translation):

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Deputy Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I should like to join with those who preceded me in this debate in offering you my most sincere congratulations on having been elected to the chairmanship of the committees of this house.

And through you, also, I would like to offer my most sincere and heartfelt congratulations to Mr. Speaker on his appointment. I am sure that he will at all times uphold the finest traditions of democracy and of the British parliamentary system.

I would also like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply, who have both acquitted themselves of their task, in a masterful way, a fact which reflects credit on their respective constituencies.

I would deserve censure, Mr. Speaker, if I were not to recall briefly the memorable moments we have all lived through during the solemn ceremonies which took place on the opening of this session. Through her presence, Her Majesty has most assuredly imparted to the opening ceremonies a character as yet unique in all Canadian history.

As a result, the colourful ceremonial and ritual observed on the opening of a new session of parliament will become better known and better appreciated. As for those of us who are of French-Canadian or Acadian descent, that is of French origin, we have been deeply moved by the words spoken by Her Majesty in our native tongue.

True, Her Majesty had a right to expect the Canadian people to express their feelings towards her as they did, but we must also recognize that the grace, charm and ease with which Her Majesty the Queen addressed us in the two official languages of this country should be such as to provoke some soul-searching on the part of those sitting on the other side of this house who unfortunately are far too prone to neglect those principles of national unity so essential to the progress and advancement of the Canadian nation.

(Text):

In the few minutes at my disposal, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with the contents of the speech from the throne. If we are to judge from certain press reports the present government, perhaps I should say the members of the present government, are very sensitive to criticism. For instance, in the Globe and Mail of Saturday, October 19, we read the following:

> Conservative members in and out of Commons are talking about the possibility of a snap election unless cutting attacks which have been followed by the all-but-unanimous vote in favour of the government are toned down.

Here we are in the House of Commons, facing a government which pretends to be not quite immune to attack and criticism. I am not at all surprised at the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) announcement that a bill will be introduced at this session to abolish closure, a measure which is so commonly used in the British parliament. Is it possible that the present government, not satisfied with the criticism offered by Her Majesty's official opposition and not being in a position to apply this parliamentary procedure which is so essential to the protection of the will of the majority will counter-attack by saying, "If you do not stop or cut down your attacks we will dissolve parliament and call an immediate election." What a situation to exist in a progressive country like Canada, a country which so proudly pretends to be an example of freedom and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, as long as I am sitting in this chamber as a member of parliament I have a duty to my constituents to defend their rights and interests. It is not my intention to follow the practice of certain opposition members in the last parliament and call cabinet ministers by unparliamentary names, or to act in such an unparliamentary manner that it could result in Mr. Speaker failing to recognize me when I am asking for the floor. I do not intend to do this, Mr. Speaker, even if those unparliamentary practices of certain members met with the approval of the Prime Minister when he was acting as leader of the official opposition. It is my intention to offer constructive criticism as I feel that is the duty of the official opposition in this house.

The announcement made by the Prime Minister, as reported in the Telegraph-Journal of Friday, September 27, that Ottawa was ready to spend $3.5 million on a major harbour development at Bathurst, in my constituency, was received with great satisfaction by the entire population of Gloucester county. It is true that the project has been approved, conditional upon the New Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited going ahead with plans for a further $20 million development of its property in this area. I should like to point out, however, that a decision of this kind is not taken even three or four months after a new government has taken office. A decision of this kind is too important, even for the present government, to take quickly and decisively without study. The engineers of the Department of Public Works had been carrying on experiments for the last two years to determine the possibility of such a major project. No later than April 16 last the then minister of public works, the Hon. Robert Winters, the manager of the mining company and myself visited the site of the proposed project and thoroughly discussed the possibility.

I want to commend the Prime Minister and his Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) upon their decision to proceed with this development as soon as the mining company is prepared to go ahead with its own plans for expansion. I would remind the Minister of Public Works, however, that the announcement made no mention of the public wharf to be built on the south side of the company's main wharf. The need for a suitable wharf to provide adequate shipping facilities for our local industries is urgent in the Bathurst area. I sincerely hope that this request will be recognized and that the department will undertake this major project.

On Wednesday, October 16, I asked the Minister of Public Works the following question, as reported on page 36 of Hansard for that date:

> Can the minister advise this house whether he has received a copy of a resolution dealing with low cost housing passed by the National Retail Lumbermen's Council of Canada at their eleventh annual meeting held at Clear Lake, Manitoba, in September of this year; and if so, what action if any has the government taken to implement the recommendations contained therein?

In his reply the minister stated that he would have to ask his department to see whether he had a copy of these recommendations. I am sure that the resolution of the National Retail Lumbermen's Council referred to in my question was of such importance to the general economy of this country, and even more so to the lumber industry, that the minister should have been in a position to refresh his memory and state at once what measures, if any, had been taken by his department to implement it. I should like at this point to place on the records of the house the contents of this resolution passed by the National Retail Lumbermen's Council of Canada at their eleventh annual meeting at Clear Lake, Manitoba, on September 11, 1957:

> Whereas it is recognized the low but stable income group of Canadians are increasingly dependent on their own manual efforts and private financing to provide low cost houses.
> And whereas they represent a very large portion of our population.
>
> And whereas there is a reluctance on the part of lending institutions and on the part of these citizens to assume a contract under National Housing Act regulations.
>
> And whereas many are being forced to assume obligations beyond their means to obtain accommodation commensurate with their needs and locality.
>
> And whereas the government should foster and assist the Canadian tradition of home ownership.
>
> And whereas statistics indicate there is a decreasing number of people in low and middle income brackets building under present regulations.
>
> And whereas our forefathers through their individual initiative built Canada as their funds and labour permitted.
> Therefore be it resolved that the government give consideration to legislation that would permit this important group of our citizens to enjoy, in proportion to their means, the borrowing privileges now available to those in the higher income group by the following:
> 1. Down payment to be considered on the basis of lot and/or foundations and owner labour.
> 2. Amount of mortgage to be determined by the bare minimum living standards required by the borrower, all such building as may be done to conform to a recognized standard.
> 3. Home to be completed as owners' funds permit with inspection and valuation carried out through present Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation inspectors, Veterans Land Act inspectors, mortgage and loan company inspectors, municipal building inspectors or other qualified inspectors.
> 4. This would be applicable to approved serviced or unserviced rural land.

We all heard the reply given in this house on October 16 by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) to a question asked by my colleague the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) and dealing with the unemployment situation in New Brunswick. One of the main causes of this approximately 100 per cent increase in the number of persons registered as unemployed in New Brunswick today, as compared with the same date last year, is the unhealthy and uncertain position of our lumber and pulp and paper industries. The average home built under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is too expensive for the majority of the average prospective home owners in Gloucester county and in many other areas of New Brunswick. A large number of families in the $50 per week bracket have been unable to build new homes which although not entirely up to the present Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation standards would be adequate and suitable having regard to the needs of the area without creating the possibility of additional slums which we all agree should not be incurred.

I am informed that the National Retail Lumbermen's Council has taken on its own the responsibility of building a model house which would meet the minimum standards required by this particular class of borrowers and I strongly urge the minister concerned to recommend its acceptance by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Such a move involving loans of less than $4,000 or $5,000 would stimulate home construction in many sections of the country and would give new stimulus to our seriously affected lumber industry.

One of the major problems also facing the lumber industry in the Atlantic provinces is the greatly increased cost of transportation. It would appear desirable for a manufacturer in the lumber field to have his processing plant as close as possible to the source of production or to his raw material. However, this becomes rather impractical mainly on account of heavy competition and the high cost of modern plants required to meet this competition which exists in the lumber industry as well as in other similar enterprises.

In the lumber industry, for example, it is only logical that the raw material required, which in this case is green lumber, usually sawn near the cutting area, be transported from its source of origin to the drying and planing mill. There exists, as we all know, a great difference between the weight of rough product and that of the dressed product, as well as the weight between green and air-dried lumber.

Prior to the year 1951 there existed a milling in transit privilege allowing a lumber manufacturer to bring in his lumber by rail from any point in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia on a basis of reduced rates under tariff No. CF.220-2. This privilege allowed the shipment of rough lumber from points of origin on a special rate and after having been piled up in the manufacturer's yards, sometimes up to a period of two years, at which time he would get the throughrate from point of origin to ultimate destination of his finished product in effect at the time of original shipment along with refund of incoming freight, less shrinkage and stop-off.

This privilege was abolished in 1951 when the Canadian National Railways cancelled tariff CF.220-2 and replaced it by a local rate tariff known as CF.299, thus increasing the incoming rate to point of stop or manufacturing by approximately 100 per cent. This unfavourable decision by the board of transport commissioners has been seriously penalizing all planing mills east of Diamond Junction in the province of Quebec.

This most unfortunate situation has a paralysing effect on Atlantic provinces lumber manufacturers and is resulting in unavoidable increases in unemployment.

At Bathurst, in my constituency, we have one of the most modern and effective lumber manufacturing and planing mills in eastern Canada. This company alone, handling from 1,100 to 1,200 cars for a total of approximately 20 million board feet of lumber per year, is penalized to the extent of $55,000 to $60,000 per year, this amount being only approximately the increased cost on this 1951 change-over of tariff. How can a maritime industry compete under such circumstances? This most serious situation should be given immediate consideration by the government and by the board of transport commissioners.

In giving a rather ambiguous reply to the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) stated, as reported at page 125 of Hansard, that the transportation problems in the Atlantic region are presently under serious study by the bureau of transportation economics within his own department. As this bureau falls under the direct and immediate jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport I would suggest to the minister that immediate and serious consideration be given by his officials to this transportation matter which is so vital to the economy of the Atlantic provinces. The people of Gloucester county are more interested today in finding work or employment than they are in measures dealing with social security or the passing of a bill to abolish closure.

I was pleased to hear in the speech from the throne that in order to ensure the farmers of Canada a fair share of the national income we shall be asked during the present session to enact a measure to provide greater stability in the prices of their products. I sincerely hope that when this measure is introduced before the house for consideration, it will make provision not only for farm products but also for other commodities such as lumber and natural products of the forest which are so essential and so vital and important to the economy of the farmers of eastern Canada. It is my intention to speak further on this subject at a later date.

In the speech from the throne what do we find about the products of the sea? I quote from the speech from the throne the following paragraph dealing with our fisheries:

> My government will strive to secure additional markets for the products of our fisheries and to promote the development of international rules to safeguard the living resources of the sea.

That is a short paragraph which says very little and gives very little hope to the 70,000 employees who derive their living direct from the sea and to the thousands of workers who were employed in packaging, processing and preparing fish for market. The most important aspect of the situation and the one which deserves immediate consideration today is the price being paid to the primary producer, which in this case is the price being paid to the fisherman for his catch. I will not have time, Mr. Speaker, to deal thoroughly with this problem today but I would like to have the indulgence of the house for a moment while I deal specifically with the problems affecting a certain species of ground fish, a certain branch of the industry, that is the cod fishing branch.

Cod makes up about 60 per cent of all ground fish resources of Canada and affects a larger number of fishermen in the Atlantic area than any other type or variety of fish; indeed I would be inclined to add, a larger number of fishermen than all the other varieties of fish put together.

During the 1957 season in my own constituency of Gloucester alone the 60-odd draggers and the 200 smaller boats will land over 50 million pounds of cod which will be processed at three main landing points, Lameque, Shippegan and Caraquet. This production provides employment to hundreds of shore workers who are engaged in preparing this commodity for market. The major portion will be processed and shipped as frozen fillets while a certain proportion of the catch will be salted for drying purposes or be prepared as boneless cod.

I realize that the industry has co-operated by investing substantial capital for the construction of modern processing and cold storage plants to take care of this improved catch of ground fish which has practically tripled in the last 10 years. I realize also that the provincial governments of the Atlantic provinces have co-operated by creating a fishermen's loan board to finance the construction of the most modern fishing fleet built subject to a federal subsidy of $165 per gross ton.

Now what about the primary producer himself? What about the fisherman who is sole owner of the fishing craft that cost approximately $45,000 to $50,000 a unit. These fishermen have had a serious obligation to meet. They had to raise $5,000 or $6,000 deposit before they could take possession of their new dragger; they had to pay 4 per cent interest to the fishermen's loan board on the balance of $35,000 to $40,000 due on their boat. There is the insurance premium which will vary from $300 to $600 per year; municipal taxes which in some cases exceed $1,000 per unit; crew operating costs, fuel oil, gear, engine repairs; ice at $6 or even $8 per ton, and all the other unforeseeable expenses that a dragger owner has to meet from his five to six months' fishing period when he operates practically 24 hours a day, five or six days a week.

With all these troubles, all these obligations to meet, he has to deliver his catch at the processing plant for a price varying from 1¾ cents to 3¼ cents per pound! The point I want to bring out is this: why should there be such a discrepancy in price for the same quality of fish landed at different landing points in the Atlantic provinces. I have before me the price paid for fresh cod landed during the week of August 15 at different points along the Atlantic coast. While the fishermen of Lunenburg and Halifax were being paid 3¼ cents per pound for their small and markets and 1½ cents for their small percentage of scrod, the price at Souris was 2¼ cents for ungraded fish and at Caraquet the fishermen were receiving 2½ cents for small and markets and 1½ cents for the few scrods.

Why should there be such a discrepancy in the price for a similar product? Is it the cost of processing or an additional cost of transportation? I would believe that the Gloucester codfish dealers can compete favourably, both in processing and transportation, with any of the Nova Scotia producers. The same applies to the fish dealers in the minister's own province of Prince Edward Island. Far from my mind would be the intention of throwing blame on our local fish dealers by insinuating that they are reaping too heavy profits. On the contrary I fully understand the hazards and small margins of profit which the fishing industry is experiencing today. However, I cannot help but assert that no codfisherman, whether the owner of a dragger or the proprietor of a smaller craft, can operate successfully unless he is assured the minimum price of at least three cents per pound for his landed catch. In the spring of the year before the dragger owner of a dragger or the proprietor of a for the opening of the fishing season he should be in position to assure his fishermen that they will share in the gross revenue of the catch on a basis of at least three cents per pound throughout that particular season. Only then will these fishermen cease to operate for the benefit of the oil companies and of dealers in engine repairs and fishing gear, as was suggested in this house by my colleague the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) a few days ago.

I am suggesting to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) that he should call without delay either a special committee of the house and the Senate or appoint a royal commission to study this most deporable situation which exists in our codfishing industry at this time. There may also be in existence too much of a price spread between the prices paid to fishermen and the one asked for by the retailers of this particular commodity. While it takes approximately three pounds of fresh cod to produce one pound of fresh or frozen fillet, the fishermen receive a total of approximately 7½ to nine cents per pound for a product which is offered in Ottawa today at a retail price of 30 to 32 cents a pound.

There is, I admit, a heavy cost involved in the processing, packaging, freezing and storage, as well as transportation but just the same the committee or commission suggested should be given ample terms of reference within which to look into all these details. The knowledge that a minimum price of three cents per pound would be assured and guaranteed at the opening of the season would reduce one of the many uncertainties that face our fishermen. There are the natural conditions which face our fisherman and which can influence his productivity but also a far too low and fluctuating price can substantially effect the total of his season's output or production.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, when the house arose at six o'clock I had just completed the few remarks I intended to make at this time concerning the fishing industry. However before resuming my seat I would suggest that the Minister of Fisheries take a serious look at this alarming situation which is so obvious even to the fishermen of his own province where the price of 2¼ cents is paid for cod landed at Souris compared with a price of 3¼ cents at Halifax and Lunenburg.

During the last four years the Department of Public Works has co-operated in improving landing and harbour facilities in various fishing communities in my constituency. However in two important fishing centres the facilities are still inadequate and the fishermen have to curtail or limit their operations due to lack of proper landing facilities. The proposed extension to the Blue Cove wharf should be proceeded with without delay in order to provide these fishermen with adequate wharf space and shelter for their 35 fishing boats. The total revenue of the fish landed at Blue Cove wharf during the last two seasons I am convinced was sufficient to meet the requirements of the economic branch of the Department of Public Works and there is no reason whatsoever why this project should be delayed any further.

A similar situation exists at Maisonnette and if the department is not prepared to proceed at once with the wharf extension at this particular locality consideration should be given at least to recommending the dredging of the approach to the existing wharf in order that the Maisonnette fishermen may use this wharf to land their daily catch.

I would like now to mention another item which appears in the speech from the throne and relates to a matter which directly concerns the province of New Brunswick. The throne speech announced that we would be asked to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project which has been under construction in New Brunswick. Before making any comments on this announcement I would prefer to wait until the measure is introduced to the house for consideration. I hope, however, that the assistance or financial aid to be provided for Beechwood will not interfere in any way with the program outlined in the last budget, providing for the entire financing by the federal government of the thermo plants in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia together with the integration of the power systems of these two provinces.

I also notice that the speech from the throne mentions that we will be asked to approve certain bills relating to certain railway branch lines. In a reply I received this morning from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) the house was told that no plans have been made to introduce during the present session a bill to authorize the construction of a spur line from the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation ore deposits to the site of the proposed harbour development near Bathurst. An early start on this branch line would provide additional employment and would alleviate to some degree the critical labour situation presently existing in Gloucester county where the number of unemployed today is more than twice what it was at the same time last year.

Mr. Pallett: It is a little lower than it was on June 1 last year.

Mr. Robichaud: I am sorry, but I think the hon. member is misinformed and I could also tell him, Mr. Speaker, that the situation in Restigouche-Madawaska is not as rosy as it was described this afternoon by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne).

An hon. Member: Don't pay any attention to these members from upper Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: I realize, Mr. Speaker, it may be a good policy for the government to fulfil some of its election or pre-election promises but I do not hesitate to state that our industries are more concerned about maintaining their operations and in giving employment to their employees than in having to curtail their production and face a three or four-day week operation with a percentage of their regular employees out of work.

Social security measures have their good points. I understand perfectly the needs of the aged, the disabled and the blind; but there is also an economic heresy which goes something like this: "The state can give without taking in with one hand what it hands out with the other." We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the truth really is that the state is not a source of wealth. The individuals produce and what is given out by the state originates from this source of production. Public funds are provided from taxes whether through direct or indirect taxation and taxes originate from the sweat of the brow of the man who works.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate as a newly elected member I understand there are certain courtesies which are accorded new members in that others do not interject, intervene or make any comments. I also understand that one is not generally supposed to be too harsh in his initial remarks with respect to government policy and so on. As far as I am concerned, if any hon. members feel they need to interject or offer some comments during the course of my remarks I hope they will feel free to do so.

I would like to offer my congratulations to you, sir, as other hon. members have done, in the election to the post you now hold, and also extend my congratulations to the other presiding officers of this house. I am personally very partial to the system of having what is known as a permanent speaker and I hope—and I am sure in my own mind—that your activities and interpretation of the rules of the house and your application of them will result in your being Speaker, not only for this parliament but for many parliaments to come regardless of which party might sit on your right side as the government.

However, I do not think we could quite properly apply the system which is in effect in the United Kingdom to the post you hold here in Canada. I am of the opinion that the general public enjoy having a member in this house who is vocal, one who is ready, willing and able, as the saying goes, to present the problems of his constituents, to speak in debate on the various matters affecting people all across the nation even though they may not reside within his particular constituency. Having thought about this matter I offer as a suggestion the idea that we might approach the question of having a permanent Speaker in Canada, not along the lines of having his seat uncontested during election time but of establishing this House of Commons as an additional constituency, the members of this chamber being his constituents and accordingly electing a Speaker at each new parliament. In that way each constituency in Canada would have a member in this house who is not restricted in his speech as Mr. Speaker normally is. I do not know whether this suggestion will meet with approval on the part of the government but I hope we can approach the question in that light.

I could spend considerable time discussing the beauties and glories of the constituency of Skeena, one of the largest in Canada, but I doubt whether we should take the time of this house on that sort of thing at this particular moment. However, I might say in passing that I have a large number of 35-millimetre size coloured slides of various scenic, industrial and human interest shots taken in the riding of Skeena and if you, Mr. Speaker, or any hon. members would be interested in seeing them at any time I would be more than pleased to show you in that way some of the natural beauty of the riding I have the privilege of representing. One of the main reasons I think it is the best riding in Canada—I am sure I will find many hon. members disagreeing with me on this—naturally is that it is contained within the best province of Canada and I am sure I will find less hon. members disagreeing with me on that point than on the other.

Seriously though, Mr. Speaker, the constituents in Skeena have many problems which are similar to those which have already been mentioned in this house by other hon. members from all across the nation. I think I will have an opportunity of presenting those problems and grievances in some other proceedings before this house and I would rather leave them until that particular time presents itself.

There are, however, a couple of matters with which I should like to deal and with which other members have dealt, relating to other parts of the country. So far I have enjoyed very much listening to other hon. members relating matters affecting their particular part of the country. I was particularly interested in the question of unemployment, with which I should like to deal to some extent, not only because it affects us particularly in northern British Columbia but because it affects people all across this nation.

The most interesting discussion I have heard so far, sir, relating to unemployment, are the proposals and the criticisms advanced by the hon. members who happen to sit in the official opposition. I have noticed also that they are attempting to pass themselves off at this time as champions of practically all causes in Canada, hoping thereby, of course, to curry some favours in various sections at the next election, whenever that might be held. But personally I do not look too kindly upon their attitude now with respect to unemployment, particularly in view of the callous attitude they had while they were in office with regard to the unemployed and industries closing and laying people off. I know the individual members certainly may be sincere in their desire to overcome this problem of people being unemployed and out of work and not having the wherewithal to provide the food, clothing and shelter necessary for themselves and their families. I wonder whether this is an approach that we can expect the general public of Canada to agree with, especially in as much as those hon. gentlemen belong to the Liberal party.

We hear, of course, that unemployment in Canada and in certain parts of it has become a problem only since June 10, or a little bit later on, probably when this government took office. For the benefit of the hon. members and others who might be interested and who will have an opportunity to look at these things, may I say there are a few figures that I should like to put on the record with respect to unemployment this year and last year. To do that I must go back to the first of the year when our friends the Liberals were in office in this country. I will not bore the house with reciting facts and figures attempting to show the difference; I will merely relate to the house the percentage of one month over the other as it applied all across Canada during the early months of this particular year. Incidentally, these are unemployment insurance commission figures.

In January of this year we had a 12 per cent increase in unemployed workers in Canada over January, 1956. In February the situation was quite a bit better than that in that the figure was 10 per cent; but there the good picture ends. In March we see a difference of 11 per cent; April, 17 per cent; May, 32 per cent; June, the middle of the year when unemployment is supposed to be at its peak, the election month, we find a 40 per cent increase in unemployment this year over last year. I hope the citizens across the nation will take cognizance of these figures and will look at the record of the party that was in office at that time when these things existed.

The picture, as it relates to British Columbia—and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) also mentioned this today—is as follows. British Columbia appears to be the hardest hit of any of the provinces in the nation today in regard to over-unemployment. We find a similar set of percentage figures. They are similar in that there are more unemployed every month this year than there were last year. The percentage figures are high and I should like to relate them to the house.

In January this year there was a 35 per cent increase in unemployment in British Columbia over the year before. In February the figure was 32 per cent; in March, 23 per cent; in April, 39 per cent; in May, 62 per cent; and in June, 48 per cent.

I do not want to go beyond these figures because these are the only official ones I could get to date from the Department of Labour; but from information given to this house by the Minister of Labour in reply to questions we can see the situation has not bettered itself in the last few months in that unemployment is steadily on the increase, with a much greater percentage in each month this year over the same month last year.

If we look at individual communities we find substantially the same picture; therefore, it is not a localized question; it is not the result of some peculiarities of an industry, be it over-production, bad weather, or some other reason. It is a general nation-wide problem and the Liberals must stand up and take the proper amount of blame that they should take for having been in office during the time that this sad thing was developing. My hon. friends opposite can pound their desks because they in turn should be subjected to the same sort of criticism. Actually they are no better than the other people were when it comes to this question. Both of the parties, the one representing the government and the other representing the official opposition—incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I enjoy that expression "official opposition"; it makes us in this corner feel just that much more sure of ourselves as being the real opposition in the house—say that this is so; I am not telling you anything that they do not agree with themselves. They agree that our present capitalist system is the one which must carry on and the only one with which they will have anything to do. So long as both parties take that attitude, so long as they refuse anything in the nature of public direction, anything in the nature of public ownership of the proper means of production and distribution, so long shall we have unemployment along with it because they know as well as I do that industry will operate and will build up the productive means of their plants if it is profitable to do so. If it does not become profitable or things become a little bit difficult the next thing they will do is to cut back their production, lay off their employees and then unemployment develops. This is a cyclical thing and it happens time after time and has been going on continuously throughout the tenure of office of the last government. Unless this government changes its attitude and is willing to take these other factors into account and do something concrete and constructive about it they will have to suffer the consequences.

I see some hon. members over here wish to say something. I am sorry I cannot hear them and am not able to make the proper comment.

An hon. Member: They did not say anything.

Mr. Howard: Oh, they did not say anything. Well, quite seriously, Mr. Speaker, the question of the steadily increasing number of unemployed in Canada is the one thing facing not only the government but every hon. member in this house and to which we must all put our best effort in order to find a solution immediately, not next spring or next summer or at some other time but right now when the crisis is imminent. There is every indication that our army of unemployed will reach a figure of three-quarters of a million this coming winter and it would not surprise me one bit if this turned out to be so. There is every indication that we are heading in that direction.

But the situation of people being unemployed is not the only thing that is bad. Of course some people will say that these unemployed are able to get unemployment insurance; some of them are and that helps to tide them over somewhat. However, in my opinion there is one thing with regard to which we must take immediate action. I was very dismayed when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), in answer to a question the other day, replied that it was not the intention of the government, because the present session was going to be a short one or something of that nature, to introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is time that amendments were made to the Unemployment Insurance Act. If we are not going to take action now along concrete, economic lines to deal with the problem, then let us take action along the other line and assist the unemployment insurance commission in whatever way we can in order to make things a little bit easier.

If I am not mistaken the minister was a member of a house committee that dealt with the Unemployment Insurance Act a few years ago and made amendments to it. Therefore he is probably far more familiar with the matter to which I wish to refer than I am. There is a particular section of the Unemployment Insurance Act, section 45, subsection 2, that sets up the qualifications a person must meet before he is eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. One of those qualifications is that if a person has a previous benefit year, that is if he has applied for unemployment insurance before, then in the case of a subsequent claim he must have 24 weeks of benefit contributions to the fund in that 52-week period before he can qualify.

I am thinking specifically now of the lumber and logging industries of the west coast of British Columbia which have been in the doldrums for some time so far as employment is concerned. Under that particular section the result will be that this coming winter there are going to be many hundreds of loggers on the west coast of British Columbia who are not going to qualify under the 24-week contribution provision because they will not have had 24 weeks of employment throughout the year. Many of them are already unemployed.

From talking with the president of district council No. 1 of the international woodworkers of America, who keeps a very close watch on the situation in British Columbia and Alberta, I understand that there are somewhere in the neighbourhood of 4,000 loggers unemployed at the present time which is far in excess of the normal figure for this time of the year. These unemployed people are going to have a pretty difficult time this winter to try to qualify under that particular section of the act. I hope the minister and the government will reconsider the matter of introducing amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act at this fall session in order to help to alleviate the economic picture of these unemployed workers. I do not think it would take a great deal of study to draft an appropriate amendment or even to guess at what the effect would be on the unemployment insurance fund which stands at $800 million or $900 million at the moment. It would merely mean reducing the 24-week period to some smaller number of weeks, 20 or 18, and I am sure such a move would mean that a great many more loggers could qualify than is the case at the present time.

With respect to disqualification you may think I am talking about figures for the sake of talking, but from statistics compiled by the unemployment insurance commission I find that in the first six months of this year, January to June, 275,000 people who became unemployed and applied for unemployment insurance benefits were disqualified because they could not meet the benefit contribution qualification. The figure of 275,000 does not include people who quit their jobs or were fired or left for some reason for which they might legitimately be disqualified under the act, but people who could not meet the minimum benefit contribution requirement. There were 275,000 disqualified during the first six months of the year and the situation is not going to get better as time goes on.

I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a little booklet with the title "Labour" in black print. I do not know how many members have received one of these but I am sure most members on the government side will have had them. I only wish to refer to it briefly. It contains what I assume you would call the election promises of the Conservatives and it deals with quite a number of subjects. I am sure hon. members opposite are familiar with the booklet. They probably held it in their hands during the election campaign, waved it around and said, "This is what we will do." I do not know whether the numerical order in which these promises appear indicates the degree of importance placed upon them but I see that the first one is "maintain full employment and the highest possible standard of living". I agree with both of these proposals because I think they are sound and I think some attempt should be made to put them into effect. However, as I said, I doubt whether it is possible if the government is going to follow the present pattern of our society.

They deal with a number of items to improve the Unemployment Insurance Act. I would not be at all upset if out of the six items with various subheadings that appear in the booklet they would select the one relating to some form of economic assistance to unemployed people this coming winter and not leave these people to wander around, as the hon. member for Vancouver East said, and have to go to the community chest or other organizations of that nature to get a hand-out to tide them over for a day or two and then have to wonder what is going to happen to them.

While we are on the question of employment and unemployment I should like to refer to the recent action of the government in releasing an additional $150 million from the consolidated revenue fund into the economy of the country for home building purposes. I understand that depletes the statutory limit of money which the government is able to transfer or give to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I certainly welcome this action. To some limited degree it will help people to buy their own homes and also stimulate employment in the case of those who build the homes and supply the raw materials that go into them.

I know the government is quite proud of its action in releasing that amount of money to the general public for the great purpose of building homes but I do not know whether they should be as proud as they are when there is additional action that can be taken with respect to unemployment and also stimulation of the lumber industry which finds itself in an upset condition in central Canada and it is also pretty sick in British Columbia. Not only can the government do something by way of stimulation in that regard but they can also take a concrete, definite forward step in helping people to own their own homes and in making provision for low rental housing units, slum clearance and things of that nature.

What happens to the $150 million the government has decided to release? A person who wants to borrow part of it has to go to one of the loan sharks and interest hounds operating our banking system and has to pay through the nose to them to get his own money, which he paid in taxes in the first place, in order to buy a home, and for which he has to pay the exorbitantly high rate of 6 per cent interest.

We are also paying fees to these banks out of the public treasury for administering the loans. We are paying money to the banks for lending money to people who paid it into the public treasury in the form of taxes. Now, a much more sensible way of doing it, and a much less costly way to the person who is building a home, would be for this government to take immediate steps to arrange for that money to be lent directly through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and not at the same interest rate that would be paid to a bank, 6 per cent, but at an interest rate that would be acceptable. Perhaps the interest rate could be sufficient merely to cover the cost of administering the loan and the administration costs of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As the situation is now with this 6 per cent interest rate or 5½ or 5¾ per cent, I do not care what it is, all we are doing is placing an additional burden on the person who wants to build a home. We can assist him immensely by cutting that interest rate in half. This will enable him to get a better home at less cost. This could be done in addition to all the other good things that can be done under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

At the outset I only wished to mention these two problems, one being unemployment as is evidenced by the amendment moved by the leader of the C.C.F. group. I think unemployment is the most important question facing the people across the country today. It is true that cash advances to farmers on farm-stored grain will be of great assistance to them, but that is something that is limited to a particular area of Canada. It is true that an increase in the payments to old age pensioners, as well as the recipients of other pensions, will help in so far as the inflationary problem is of concern to them. It will help them to get along a little better in life. However, I felt that unemployment was the one question that faced everybody, in all walks of life, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is a problem about which our government has not indicated they are going to do anything except make this $150 million available, which is a mere drop in the bucket.

They have indicated also they have asked the national employment service to step up their program of finding jobs for people who become unemployed, but that is going to be rather difficult to do if there are no jobs available. Then mention was made of programming federal works so that more would be done during the winter. I mentioned this problem of unemployment because I thought it was so important. Housing is equally important and is connected with unemployment and with the economy of the lumber industry itself. I give you these two thoughts, and I want to thank you for your attention. I hope I shall have the opportunity later of participating in debates on specific matters relating to my constituency.

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my first word is one of congratulation to you upon your election as Speaker of the house. I am one of those who, as a student-at-law, looked down on you from the gallery with respect and admiration when you were first elected to the legislature of Ontario, little thinking at that time the day would come when I would have the opportunity of addressing the representatives of the Canadian people through you as Speaker of the House of Commons. May I congratulate also the ministers of this government upon their appointments, and thank them and those members who have been here before for the many kind things they have done to assist those of us who are here for the first time.

The riding which I have the honour to represent is the second most populous electoral district in the nation, with a total population of 130,000 men, women and children and 75,000 electors. The constituency of York Centre lies immediately north of that much maligned, but nevertheless great city of Toronto. In fact many of our people journey south each day to their work in that city. York Centre has a character of its own. It is probably the best example in the country of that kind of community which has been called suburbia. Into the township of North York, most of which lies in York Centre, 100,000 people have moved during the past five years. Many thousands have settled in housing built under the provisions of the National Housing Act. The schoolhouse has become the community centre, and during the five years in which I have had the privilege of serving the educational system as an elected representative, 35 new schools were constructed in the township of North York alone. As I drive through this riding on these fall weekends and talk to the members of these young families who are working so hard to maintain their homes and provide all they can for their children I am deeply conscious of the responsibilities I have as their representative in parliament.

While many immigrants have settled in York Centre, most of our young families have come from the city or the farm. We have representatives of every major ethnic group. I have the honour of representing many thousands of people of the Jewish community. In the past four years six new synagogues have been built in the riding and a new Jewish home and hospital for the aged, which is considered by qualified social workers to be the finest institution of its kind on the continent. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that a civilization may well be measured by the concern it shows for its elder citizens. In building a home for the aged and Baycrest hospital the Jewish people in metropolitan Toronto have shown not only concern but a high sense of responsibility to their community.

I should like also to express my esteem for the large numbers of people from Italy who have come to my riding in recent years. As businessmen and artisans they have had a share in the commercial and housing developments which have taken place in York Centre.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word, through you, to the hon. members here who speak French as their first language.

For five years I was associated with the educational system in my constituency as a member of the local board of education. Many of the teachers of French in our schools there had had the privilege of residing or carrying on studies at some time in the province of Quebec. Because of this experience, they were better teachers of the language and better qualified to introduce French literature to their English speaking students.

How much better it would be, however, if these people came from Quebec and spoke the French language as their native tongue. While legislation in the field of education is not a matter for this House of Commons, I think we would do well as individuals to promote an exchange of teachers of language between our two great provinces.

It seems to me also, that we would do well to encourage our young professional and business men in my province, to undertake part of their academic and professional training in the province of Quebec. Much is said these days about the need to persuade these young men to take a larger part in politics and business affairs. Yet how much better qualified they would be if they had a greater understanding of the laws and customs and language of French Canada.

It is a rare experience for the young English speaking members here to have the opportunity of serving our country in this house with our French speaking brothers. We can develop here a true fellowship, and this will help us in our task of bringing together the people whom we represent. Mr. Speaker, it lies in our hands to make the dream of Macdonald and Cartier come true.

(Text):

May I now bring to the attention of the house certain matters which I believe to be of importance, not only to my constituents but to those of all other hon. members. The first of these is that I believe that our main responsibility is to see to it that our country makes its full contribution to the preservation of peace. Occupied as we are with the problems of these days, it is easy for us to forget that only 13 years ago tens of thousands of young Canadians were engaged in the utterly unproductive and wasteful activities of war and that many thousands lost their lives in the service of their country. It is our solemn obligation to make every possible effort to ensure that that kind of thing will not happen again in our time.

I hope that our government will attract skilful and dedicated people to the cause of scientific research so that our country with its immense resources may be prepared to participate in a significant way in resisting an attack from the other side of the world.

It is even more important, Mr. Speaker, that we should accept a greater responsibility for assisting the under-developed countries of the world and for helping in the re-establishment of refugees. One cannot read the report of the United Nations high commissioner for refugees without thinking that this country has yet to make any real sacrifice to alleviate the distress of these homeless people.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to express the regard which I think is held by all the young members of our group for the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) each of whom has brought honour to Canada by service rendered to the world at the United Nations. It is impossible to calculate the effect of what they have done, but Canadians everywhere should be grateful to them.

I come now to the matter of dominion-provincial-municipal relationships in the field of taxation. In the riding of York Centre, the small home owner has reached the limit of his capacity to pay municipal taxes, and yet local councils are faced with the need to find more and more revenue with which to provide services not properly chargeable to owners of real property. Those who have been associated with these councils and boards of education have a great interest in the meetings of the dominion-provincial conference to be held here at the end of next month. So also do our constituents, especially those in these suburban communities where municipal taxation has become so severe.

Mr. Speaker, on taking my seat here the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Taylor) presented me with a statement made by Edmund Burke to the electors of Bristol in November, 1774. It is as follows:

> It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitted attention.
> It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interests to his own. Nevertheless, your representative owes you not his industry only, but his judgment, and he betrays instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

This statement, Mr. Speaker, is one which I intend to keep before me as a reminder of my responsibilities here. These are important days for Canada, days of great opportunity for us who have been sent here to conduct the business of the country. To the members of this house and to the electors of York Centre I pledge my very best efforts as a member of this twenty-third parliament.

I shall vote in favour of the motion before this house.

Mr. Maurice Breton (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join all of my colleagues in congratulating you on your election as Speaker of this house. Your reputation for courtesy and for grace of manner is such that we are sure you will carry out your duties with all the integrity and sense of fairness that we know are yours. I also offer my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker.

Some information was given to this house last Friday (October 18th 1957) by the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) on the question of simultaneous translation. As this information might mislead the house because it is incomplete or incorrect, may I say a few words on this subject.

To a question about the disposal of the simultaneous translation system used on the occasion of the universal postal union congress, the Postmaster General answered that the system was installed by the Department of National Defence which at all times retained ownership and possession of it. This declaration is contrary to that made by the postmaster general, Hon. Hugues Lapointe, in the last parliament whose words are recorded in the Hansard of March 7, 1957, page 1985, to the effect that the government was actually purchasing part of the equipment and that it would probably be taken up afterwards by the armed services who had been asked to provide for the installation. This answer was given in response to the demand of the member for Notre Dame de Grace.

Now when I asked the Postmaster General at what price we had disposed of the system, I believe I am right in saying that was the answer given. The Solicitor General gave another answer which is also incomplete or incorrect, to the effect that a special committee had been formed or would be formed to study the project of the installation of such a system in the House of Commons. In fact his answer was so confused that it is probably better to ignore it until the project is officially laid before this house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason I raise this question is that for at least four or five years many French speaking members in this house have brought this matter before the commons and I am glad to say that last year we organized a committee which inquired of the members their reaction to such an installation and a great many of them, both French and English speaking, were very sympathetic to the idea. We felt sure, therefore, that the system would be installed, especially in view of the fact that on the occasion of the universal postal union congress the government had bought all the necessary equipment for such installation.

On September 17 I wrote a letter to the Postmaster General, a copy of which I sent to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), and I received an answer explaining that the system was not entirely fit for immediate installation but that nothing of a technical nature interfered with the possibilities of such installation in this house.

I think the time is now ripe for such a reform in the House of Commons and I am sure this is the feeling of all the French speaking members. We believe that a transmitting system should be installed to give French-speaking members a chance to take part in their own language in all debates. Last year I said to this house in words which I believed were polite but firm that we feel when we speak in French the members of this house are not interested. I do not think I will be disagreeable to my English speaking colleagues when I say that if the situation were reversed and they were in our position, with one-third of the house speaking English and two-thirds speaking French, the one-third would put up a strong case for simultaneous translation.

Now one day I heard a minister say that the members from the province of Quebec did not seem interested in the legislation of this country outside their own province. I admit that there seems to be some truth in that observation. However, I think one of the main reasons is the fact that the 75 members have to follow speeches in another language. In a democracy, under the system in which we believe and which we want to defend, with a parliament that we want to protect, I believe that we should have a system which allows everybody to speak in his own language and not be obliged to merely address the walls, the ceilings or the press. I think we are entitled to this opportunity. In making this statement I do not do so, I assure you, from a nationalistic point of view. It is made simply on the basis of a desire to preserve the democratic system which we all cherish.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that you will admit the time has come to instal a system, using the experience gained in other fields such as the United Nations and the various national and international conventions and congresses. Such a system is widely used in actual practice.

I might add that a simultaneous translating system would cost no more than our present amplifier system. The initial cost of putting in this present system was $33,529 and the annual cost for maintenance, operation and rental of the equipment is $27,500. The proposed scheme could hardly be turned down for reasons of economy. I would add that the system which we have in this house, and which is so expensive, is far from being perfect because many members complain that they have difficulty in hearing other members speak and this has been proven by the efforts of some members to obtain special earphones. I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) will agree that the system is not perfect. When I asked why, with the money we had spent on this system a better result had not been obtained acoustically, I was told that we could have a more perfect system than our present one but that the employees of the public works department felt it would spoil the appearance of the house. Therefore we have sacrificed efficiency to beauty.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the hon. member if he has any figures as to what it would cost for translators, because he would have to have two of them.

Mr. Breton: Last year I wrote to the United Nations requesting some information and was informed that the installation cost is $15 per seat. In this house we have 300 seats and there are 600 seats in the gallery and so for the full amount of $15,000 the system could be installed in this house.

Last year while asking some questions of the former postmaster general the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Hamilton) also quoted these figures. He advised that he had made inquiries and had been informed that the cost would be around $15,000.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member what would be the cost of engaging translators?

Mr. Breton: Well I am advised that at the United Nations translators are paid $15,000 a year. They are engaged for the entire year and naturally we would require them here for only a portion of the year. I am glad the hon. member raised this question because if the government is sincerely interested in this project it would be well advised to make immediate arrangements for engaging people who could be trained as translators because I am told it takes six months to become a truly competent, expert translator.

Mr. Fraser: That would mean an additional $30,000.

Mr. Breton: It would be expensive but the new system would be much better than the existing system. In addition to that if the unfortunate situation should prevail where the Speaker does not speak both languages he would be able to understand the discussion between hon. members if a simultaneous translation system were installed. For all these reasons, I think the government should seriously consider this request.

Last year I had a resolution on the order paper that did not come before the house prior to the end of the session. This resolution appears again on the order paper this year and will come to the attention of the house on an early occasion. I am sure that all French speaking members in this house, and I also know many English speaking members will support my resolution. We will not stop asking for this reform until it has been given to us.

The government claims that it wants to protect the rights of parliament and of hon. members of this house. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said in the speech from the throne:

> . . . it will be the high purpose of my ministers . . . to take steps to make both houses of this parliament more effective in the discharge of their responsibilities to the people of Canada.

I feel that the first step towards protecting the rights of parliament would be to extend to each hon. member of this house the right and opportunity to be heard and understood in his own language.

International bodies of all kinds are adopting the system of simultaneous translation for the benefit of their members. It is fitting that an example of the harmonious relations that should exist between the two great races and language groups in our country should be underscored by the installation of such a system in the House of Commons.

(Translation):

And now, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to continue my remarks in French and this, in itself, emphasizes at once what a drawback it is for the Speaker to be unable to follow speeches in both languages. As a representative of the province of Quebec, I owe it to my province and to my fellow-citizens to speak French in the House of Commons.

I should like at this point to make a few comments on some disquieting contradictions of the speech from the throne.

The Prime Minister stated many times during the electoral campaign and the last session of parliament that there was need for "a return to the spirit of confederation". This statement, which sounded impressive, and implied that there had been a deviation from the spirit of the fathers of confederation, might suggest to many people that it was a matter of safeguarding the autonomy of the provinces.

I do not know whether the Prime Minister made the statement intentionally or not, but any one who has given the instrument of confederation some little study will admit, —and that I believe is the opinion of every jurist without exception,— that this constitutional document of 1867, in spirit as well as in letter, had markedly centralizing tendencies. It is therefore somewhat ironical to hear the Prime Minister talk about a return to the spirit of confederation while, in the same breath, he speaks of provincial autonomy.

The former prime minister (Mr. St. Laurent) had well understood that this document needed amending and had to be adapted to present conditions. In fact in 1949 he suggested certain new procedures for amending the constitution, which were to be acceptable to the provinces. Unfortunately these could not be accepted by the provinces because of lack of understanding among them. The only deviations from the spirit of confederation were made from time to time by judicial decision. That is to say that when we hear the Prime Minister talk of a return to the spirit of confederation, I wonder whether he is not thinking of even greater centralization of the economy of this country into the hands of the federal government. Whatever the case may be, Mr. Speaker, whatever his intention, the fact remains that the speech from the throne in its present state represents a real move towards centralization. I hope I may be allowed to dwell on this point for a few moments.

It will be remembered—and it is well that we should remind ourselves of these things— that the Hon. Mr. Duplessis, premier of Quebec, adopted an autonomous attitude during the federal-provincial conference of 1945. At that time he made statements which are important to read and to remember, having regard to the forthcoming conference.

The Hon. Mr. Duplessis made the following statements which will be found on page 409 of the brief submitted by the province of Quebec and presented by Mr. Duplessis.

> It is the considered opinion of the province of Quebec, it is the considered opinion of highly qualified jurists, that the fact that the constitution of 1867 specifically gives to the province the right of direct taxation means conclusively that the provinces have priority in the matter of direct taxation.

This word priority has been used repeatedly by the Quebec press and I recall that, at one time, Mr. Duplessis even used the word "exclusivity" which, in his mind, as he explained, made it incumbent upon the federal government to withdraw completely from the field of direct taxation.

Mr. Speaker, on page 412 of the same presentation, there is a further statement which it would be well to recall because it applied exactly to the situation today. The new government promised to increase financial assistance to the provinces. Indeed it has given the provinces to understand that it would give them greater assistance as well as to municipalities. It also promised,—and therein lies the contradiction which surprised everybody,—that it was going to reduce taxes. Here we can recall the statement made by Mr. Duplessis in 1946 when he said:

> The federal government is stating that they wish to decrease taxes.

It will be recalled that in 1945, the government actually meant to cut down taxes and indeed did so. Moreover, it proposed a tax agreement with the provinces in order to find a means of financing them while reducing taxes. And Mr. Duplessis added:

> I do not know how they can decrease taxes. If it is their secret I do not ask them for the secret. What strikes me is this. How would it be possible logically to decrease taxes when they contend that the provinces will get more from the taxes, Ottawa will get more and the taxes will decrease?

Under such conditions, how could taxes be reduced?

> I must admit that my intellect is not sufficient to arrive at such a conclusion.

I believe that this passage from the 1946 brief should be remembered. But that is not all. There is also a most interesting passage there concerning natural resources. Here is what Mr. Duplessis stated on that point:

> Natural resources belong to the provinces. They belong to the provinces to such an extent that the privy council decided that even a federal loan does not affect provincial natural resources.

Note that, Mr. Speaker. The privy council has decided that a federal loan could not even concern provincial natural resources. Mr. Duplessis continues:

> That is why I say that some consideration should be given to the exclusive and essentially indispensable right of the provinces in connection with natural resources, forests, water power, mining and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, I have quoted these statements to show that they are in gross contradiction with the intentions of the present government and the provisions of the speech from the throne. I wonder how these tendencies and statements can be reconciled.

You may perhaps say that the hon. Mr. Duplessis represents Quebec but there are also in this house some members who, formerly, were sitting on the opposition side and who, at that time, not only endorsed the stand of the government of the province of Quebec on the constitutional question but made themselves, in this house, the spokesmen of the hon. Mr. Duplessis.

The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), who now sits on the other side of the house, is in an embarrassing situation. He has repeated time and again that direct taxation and subsidies are contrary to the spirit and the letter of the constitution, and he now finds himself saddled with the sad responsibility of sticking to his principles or letting his party down.

Mr. Balcer: You do not know what will happen.

Mr. Breton: I am not speaking lightly. I will quote textually. In 1953, the hon. member for Three Rivers made a speech on that question and said this, as shown on page 67 of volume I of Hansard for 1953-1954:

> . . . for the federal-provincial relations will not be settled by mere subsidies from the central government. These grants are contrary to the spirit which inspired the fathers of confederation and merely tend to make of Canada a centralizing country, that is to say a country having only one government.

It is clear that after such a statement there is no alternative. They do not criticize the manner in which the subsidies are distributed, but merely their distribution, which is in fact the opinion of the Quebec government.

On Friday last, I asked the hon. Solicitor General the following question:

> When sitting in the opposition the hon. Solicitor General has, on various occasions, given expression to the well-known thought that federal subsidies are unconstitutional. The opinion which he voiced then was shared in every way by the government of the province of Quebec. In view of the proposed federal-provincial meeting on fiscal matters, could he tell us now if he will oppose the subsidies which his government seems to be preparing at this time?

And here is his answer:

> I would like to tell my hon. friend that I am still opposed to subsidies such as were proposed by the former government . . .

Here is the difference of interpretation: "as were proposed by the former government"; it was not a question of subsidies, but rather of the way in which they were granted.

Mr. Balcer: What I said at that time still holds true, and I will go on saying it.

Mr. Breton: My colleague will be able to speak when his time comes, if he wants to, and I hope that the house will accept his statement.

[Mr. Breton.]

As far as his question is concerned, it seems to be a hypothetical one, since the proposals of the federal government are not yet known, but I am convinced that they will be made on a very different basis from those of the former government.

Mr. Balcer: They are going to be based on a position far different from that of the former government.

Mr. Dupuis: It is a subsidy just the same.

Mr. Balcer: This means that we are no centralizers, but that we want the rights of the provinces to be respected.

Mr. Breton: It will still be a subsidy. It is obvious that, in the past, the hon. member for Three Rivers simply came out against subsidies themselves but not the way they were distributed.

Mr. Balcer: I was opposed to the subsidies as distributed by your government.

Mr. Breton: I could quote here part of a speech which he delivered during the 1953-54 session, and which he could not repudiate.

He is now trying to reconcile his former opinions with those of the government of which he is a member. Yet, if he considers only the attitude of the Quebec government, —as I imagine he still holds the same views about provincial autonomy,—I hope he will make strong representations to his government.

The same questions were put to two other minister representing the province of Quebec in the cabinet. These two ministers did not want to commit themselves and refused to answer.

The other day, in laying the corner-stone of a new college in Montreal, the hon. Mr. Duplessis stated that he had no intention whatever of surrendering any of his rights in educational matters. This is the latest statement he has made about this question. I am now wondering whether his statement, which is very restrained on the whole and which regards only education, is not actually a change, preparing the ground for a more conciliatory stand towards the new government, and whether we must consider his previous statements as strictly political declarations. This is something to wonder about, not only in this house, but in the province of Quebec, and throughout the country.

Now I know, Mr. Speaker, that the next federal-provincial meeting will prepare another one, just as the meeting at Mont Tremblant was just a preamble for other conferences; I also know that the government would like to be elected on its intentions rather than on its record, for its members very well realize the impossible situation they will have to face three or four years from now, and that is why I say that we now have a government of intentions. It is a government of intentions . . .

Mr. Balcer: If this is a government of intentions, why don't you vote against it?

Mr. Breton: Ah! my dear friend, I could tell you that, the last four months the government has been in power, we have found two trends, but no achievements.

The papers were saying, the other day, that it was high time the government did something. The first trend is striking evidence of the value of the Liberal administration, because it is now possible to increase pensions without too much trouble. The other is a return to political attitudes which, in spite of the temporary favour enjoyed by the Conservative party, are neither in accord with our mentality nor with our wish for independence on behalf of the Canadian nation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will add this. The representatives of the province of Quebec in the cabinet are in an embarrassing position, for they cannot prevent the centralizing trend of the government. While the Liberal position remains the same, some of our friends opposite will encounter great difficulties in explaining their about-turn to the people of our province.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. members opposite are forced to change their minds realizing that, in the present circumstances, there are things that cannot be changed. Such admissions have been made, in fact, by several ministers, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), who all admitted that everything was going well under the former administration.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that our friends who represent the province of Quebec in the cabinet will make representations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to the government in favour of a financial equalization system for the development of the natural resources of the provinces. What we have been noticing for the past four months, Mr. Speaker, is that the province of Quebec has been completely ignored by the new government. I do not know what our friends may think of the government's intention to spend millions on the construction of a dam in Saskatchewan, or millions more to develop the natural resources of the maritimes. We are by no means opposed to such proposals. But we must point out that the province of Quebec is ignored in that field as in every other field. It is ignored in the field of social security because, as everyone knows, the province favoured an increase in family allowances before anything else.

Mr. Balcer: Are you against increasing old age pensions?

Mr. Breton: We are not against old age pensions, we are in favour of old age pensions.

Mr. Balcer: Why have you been refusing them for the past 22 years?

Mr. Breton: You are among those, my friend, who at the Conservative convention held in Ottawa asked for adoption of a resolution in favour of the increase of family allowances.

Mr. Balcer: This will be more readily done under our administration than under yours.

Mr. Breton: We shall see what we shall see. All we ask you is to give proof, nothing more. I said that the province of Quebec was being ignored in the field of social security, in the field of financial help, in the field of development of natural resources. I can also say that it is still ignored in the field of cabinet representation. According to the Prime Minister, we should have five ministers whereas we only have three.

I close by saying, Mr. Speaker, that the representatives of the province of Quebec in the federal cabinet will have a lot of work to do to improve the reputation of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec.

(Text):

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I believe that there was fairly general approval of the proposals contained in the speech from the throne regarding our senior citizens, war veterans allowances and certain aspects of agriculture. However, on account of the vagueness of those proposals I will wait until the legislation is brought down before I refer to them further.

We in this group were sorry to note that there was no mention in the speech from the throne with regard to the tight money policy that is slowing down the Canadian economy, and it is for that reason that the leader of this group, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), moved an amendment.

This afternoon the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), the former minister of agriculture, was somewhat critical of the C.C.F. group and our group for moving an amendment and a subamendment. He stated that we had promised to support government legislation but, of course, we did not make any such sweeping promise. We stated that we would support government legislation that was in the national interest even though it did not go as far as we would like to see it go but that we would certainly still feel justified in moving amendments where we thought legislation was of an undesirable character or where there had been any serious omissions. Not only would we feel justified but we would feel it a duty and a responsibility to move amendments in that case.

The amendment moved by the leader of this group reads:

> That all the words in the amendment after the word "once" be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:
> "However, we regret that there is nothing in the speech from the throne to indicate that it is the government's intention to ask parliament to lay down a scientific, modern financial policy for Canada that will guide the Bank of Canada in its operations, bring about a speedy end to the present tight money policy, and effectively check the ever-rising cost of living."

It will be recalled that the former government during previous sessions and during the election campaign stated that things had never been so good. Since that time the people have spoken and I think they spoke in such a way as to make it clear to the former government that they were not in agreement with that slogan. They showed their disapproval by the way they voted.

It is true that during the past six years there was a fairly general level of prosperity but there were danger signals evident in the year 1955. By then the cost of living had started to rise. We had an adverse balance of trade of around $800 million with the United States and $427 million with the world at large. The amount of consumer debt had risen to the figure of $2.2 billion and agriculture had become quite seriously depressed.

The governor of the Bank of Canada met with the chartered banks in the fall of 1955 and laid down the foundation for the tight money policy that has been in operation for the past two years. In laying down that policy he justified it very largely on the ground that there was a shortage of labour. He pointed out that consequently were the money supply to be increased it would create a demand for goods that could not be satisfied due to the fact that we lacked the labour with which to expand our production. He makes that clear on page 39 of the Bank of Canada report for 1956.

Now, two years later, in the light of that situation and in the light of the situation today I think most of us would agree that the policy has been somewhat of a flop because since then there has been a steady rise in the cost of living. The adverse balance of trade which was worrying us then has pretty well doubled; consumer debt has expanded from $2.2 billion to $2.6 billion.

It may be said perhaps that one of the achievements of his policy has been the loosening up of the labour situation. At that time he said there was a shortage of labour. Very largely as the result of his financial policy we find we have many thousands of unemployed. Whether or not he would feel that is an advantage I do not know, but I think the people of this country are justified in demanding that a financial policy be instituted which makes it possible to maintain full employment in this country.

I would say that one of the direct results of the restriction of credit has been the sharp rise in interest rates, and that has forced up costs and forced up prices. High interest rates have encouraged foreign investment in this country. I know it is argued that we need a high level of foreign investment in this country in order to meet our adverse balance of trade, but let us not forget that our adverse balance of trade is actually the counterpart of foreign investment and, of course, the more money that is invested in this country the more there is spent on United States goods. Consequently, the adverse balance of trade is expanded. The practice has been accelerated as a result of United States business getting more control over our industries, and consequently buying many of their requirements in the United States instead of buying them in Canada.

In addition the tight money policy is causing our provinces and municipalities to borrow in the United States instead of borrowing in Canada, partly perhaps because they cannot borrow in Canada and partly perhaps because they can borrow money cheaper in the United States than they can in this country. The result, of course, is a steadily expanding debt between Canada and the United States.

The tight money policy is also putting the small business firms out of business and giving the United States a stranglehold on Canadian business. I was talking to a businessman in Edmonton the other day, the manager of a firm which supplies heavy equipment for construction. He told me that many of the small business firms supplying heavy equipment were being driven out of business. He said, "We have to wait quite a while for payments from construction firms and they have to wait quite a while for payments from municipalities, provincial governments and the federal government". He said, "Normally, having to wait did not bother us at all because we were able to get a line of credit from the banks, but today that line of credit has been cut off". As a consequence, many of these small firms have already been driven into bankruptcy. What he most strongly objected to was the fact that their main competitors are larger firms with parent companies in the United States and they are able to get all the capital they want from the United States. Consequently the larger firms are taking over the Canadian firms or driving the Canadian firms out of business because the Canadian firms cannot get capital whilst their United States competitors can.

I think most of us agree that is a very undesirable situation. The other day I was told that the situation is easing; the cash reserves of the chartered banks are increasing. However, it is going to take a long time for those cash reserves to filter back to those firms who are so direly in need of an extension of credit today.

The tight money policy has also caused a high premium on the Canadian dollar. This is a very severe handicap for Canadian exporters. Years ago it used to be the practice for a nation with an adverse balance of trade to depreciate its currency in order that its exporters might be able to compete with foreign countries by underselling them. This policy would, at the same time, discourage imports. In this way it helped to ease the adverse balance of trade. But what do we find in Canada? In Canada we have a very serious adverse balance of trade, yet instead of depreciating our dollar, as has usually been the custom, we maintain the dollar at a highly appreciated rate. This results in making it very difficult for our exporters to compete with our competitors in foreign countries. At the same time we make it easier to import goods. By making it harder to export and easier to import, we are steadily widening the adverse balance of trade which is causing a great deal of concern in the country at the present time.

This policy has also severely handicapped our farmers, that is the policy of maintaining the dollar at an appreciated rate. For instance, our wheat is sold in terms of United States currency. This means that when we get paid in United States currency, instead of getting a dollar we get 96 cents. On a bushel of wheat, therefore, today the farmer loses around 7 cents as compared with what he would receive if the dollar were at par. If we compare the present situation with the situation when the dollar was held at 90 cents in terms of the United States dollar, as was the case in 1950, we find that the farmer today is losing 27 cents a bushel as a result of this highly appreciated dollar.

We in this group have always taken the stand that we should maintain foreign exchange control. We opposed the proposal to remove foreign exchange control. On the other hand, if we are not going to have foreign exchange control, if we are going to maintain the appreciated dollar, then the farmers have every right to demand that they be compensated for the penalty imposed as the result of that appreciated dollar.

I feel that parliament should make it clear to the governor of the Bank of Canada that it will not tolerate a money policy that forces us farther and farther into debt with the United States; that causes us to lose markets and, expands unemployment, and more important, places us under a severe handicap in the cold war with Russia by slowing down our production. This type of sabotage took place no later than the thirties before the world war in 1939. We suffered severely as a consequence of having allowed our production to slow down before that war. I am not suggesting the situation is similar today but I would say, in view of the fact we are entering the atomic age, the consequences might be even worse than they were in 1939. We cannot afford to slow down today whilst our competitor, in the form of Russia, is doing everything in its power to accelerate its rate of producton.

It has been stated that the tight money policy was needed to deal with inflation in this country. I think the important point to know is that there has not been any real inflation in Canada, as that condition has been defined in the past by the governor of the Bank of Canada, by our own finance officials and by former ministers of the crown. We have been told time and again that inflation means too much money chasing too few goods, yet for the past two years inventories in this country have been steadily rising while the money supply has been curtailed. I would say that what we really had in the past two years was a wage-price spiral. Certain unions find that certain industries are making large profits and they call for an increase in wages. Then that industry increases prices, not merely sufficiently high to cover the wages but in order to give them a profit on the increased wages they are paying.

I was sorry that the proposal put forward by Walter Reuther was not given greater consideration. I thought it was an excellent proposal. The proposal to the automobile industry was that it should reduce the price of cars by $100, and in return the union would modify its proposal for an increase in wages. I should like to see the unions right across the country press the point that where there are large profits, those profits be used for the purpose of reducing prices rather than for the purpose of increasing wages because in that way they would be increasing the value of their own wages. Everybody would benefit, including the people with small fixed incomes such as those receiving old age pensions. Everybody would benefit by a reduction in price and that reduction in turn would make our prices more competitive with those in other countries and thus make it possible for us to expand our exports.

The governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Coyne, points out that consumer spending has not been a major factor in this country. I think we should note that statement because so many people seem to think that the consumers have been going on a spending spree. I note what the governor had to say at page 15 of his report for 1956:

> Although certain forms of consumer expenditure financed to an increasing degree by a particular kind of credit expansion have contributed to the inflationary pressures, consumer expenditures in total have not been a major factor: consumers have not gone on a "spending spree" on the whole, and the rate of personal savings as a percentage of income has increased since the middle of 1955.

It is also interesting to note according to the October 12 edition of Saturday Night, that the managing director of the international monetary fund, speaking at the twelfth annual meeting of the world bank and international monetary fund, warned that today for trading nations deflation was a far greater danger than inflation. Perhaps I had better quote what the article said:

> The other development was the backing given the fund's managing director, Mr. Jacobbson, in his contention that smaller trader nations have more to fear now from deflation than inflation—a contention that has significance for Canada. Canadians have been echoing American warnings about the dangers of inflation. Our cost of living index has continued to rise. But at the same time prices for most of our raw materials are going down and we have more unemployment than a year ago.
> We hope Mr. Fleming listened carefully to what Mr. Jacobbson and his supporters had to say.

[Mr. Quelch.]

During the past six years there has been a tremendous expansion in capital investment. We have today created a tremendous productive capacity and we are in the process of turning out vast supplies of consumer goods. The greatest problem we are facing in the future is to maintain an effective demand against that production. I will agree that consumer debt today is too high. But if the total production is to be sold, and if consumer credit is to be restricted, then who is going to buy the goods that are today being bought with consumer credit? It is quite obvious that we shall be obliged to provide other sources of purchasing power by means of which to buy the total production of the country if we are going to curtail consumer credit. Otherwise goods will pile up, production will be restricted, capital investment will fall off and unemployment will steadily increase. Bankers invariably seem to be a little bit timid about a condition of full employment. They know there is a weakness in the present financial system. They know that when we have built up our productive capacity to turn out a tremendous volume of consumer goods, invariably there is difficulty in finding a market for that production. Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, in his report for 1956 refers to that situation in these words:

> It is not an accident that periods of inflationary prosperity are usually followed by periods of dislocation in production and employment. One of the main purposes of efforts to contain inflation is to avoid this aftermath.

I would certainly agree that it is no accident, Mr. Speaker. It is a deliberately planned recession. It is what the bankers usually call a breathing spell. But unfortunately the unemployed are not paid during that breathing spell. Why are periods of prosperity, as pointed out by the governor of the Bank of Canada, invariably followed by dislocation and unemployment? That has invariably been the situation.

We have from time to time pointed out that the reason lies in the fact that owing to certain practices that are inherent in our present system industry is not able to maintain effective demand against its own production except in times of abnormal capital goods construction such as you have in wartime, in the development of a new country or at times when there is large scale foreign investment in the country as, for instance, we have in Canada at the present time.

We have always pointed out that that situation is largely owing to the practice of saving and the reinvestment of saving. I know that proposition is nothing new. That proposition has been propounded for many years by prominent economists such as

J. Maynard Keynes, Professor G. D. H. Cole and many others. I think perhaps it has been put most clearly by the president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce in his 1952 annual report when he refers to the problem in these words:

> If it is agreed that gross national production should as a minimum be sustained at present levels, then deterrents both to personal and corporate saving (investment) require immediate and careful examination. Income cannot be redistributed for consumption and at the same time invested to expand productivity without some serious strains developing—in short, deterrents to domestic investment must be examined and where consistent with domestic policies, be removed . . . Increasing consumption, both domestic and foreign, is necessary, if the heavier volume of goods and services arising out of our enlarged capacity to produce is to be absorbed.

If our objective is the optimum development of the resources of the country—and I think everybody would agree that it should be—and if a large percentage of income is to be diverted from the purchase of consumer goods to the production of more goods, then obviously purchasing power will have to be issued in order to finance the purchase of goods corresponding to the amount of purchasing power so diverted. Otherwise there is bound to be expanding consumer debt such as we have today. So when Mr. Coyne adopts a policy which is aimed at restricting credit for consumption, at the same time steps must be taken to provide for the purchase of those goods that are being bought with consumer credit. Otherwise, as I say, there is bound to be a slump, a fall-off in demand and an increase in unemployment.

In order to deal with that situation we have from time to time advocated the establishment of a national monetary commission, responsible to parliament, whose main responsibility would be to maintain the balance between the effective purchasing power of the people and the aggregate of prices of goods available for distribution. It will be their responsibility to keep a day by day check on the relationship between demand and supply. If they found that plants were running at a percentage of their capacity and if they found that demand was lagging behind supply, they would then take steps to increase the purchasing power of the people. We would suggest that the most logical way in which to do that would be to authorize a discount on the price of consumer goods so that the people's purchasing power might be equated with the aggregate of prices.

If for instance they found that demand was only 90 per cent of supply they could authorize 10 per cent discount on the sale of goods in order to equate demand with supply. Industry would sell the goods at 90 per cent of the cost, they would turn their slips into the chartered banks and be credited with the 10 per cent and the chartered banks would then recover the amount from the national monetary authority. In that way you would help to increase the purchasing power of the people, such help being of a non-inflationary character because the increase in money supplied in that case would be used for the purpose of reducing prices rather than increasing prices.

The amount of money so issued would be just enough to equate the lag between demand and supply. Money required for that purpose would be obtained from the Bank of Canada so as not to increase the debt charges to the nation. The government would deposit non-negotiable dominion certificates in order to receive the money. The rate of interest would be immaterial because all the profits of the Bank of Canada would go back to the government and they would therefore be receiving this money at actual cost.

I know that some will argue that if this is done you are going to expand the cash reserves of the chartered banks which will enable them in turn to expand their loans and cause inflation. That has been the argument in the past but it is not valid today because in 1954 when the Bank of Canada Act was under revision it was amended so that the Bank of Canada today has the power to alter the minimum cash ratio to be held by the chartered banks within the limits of 8 to 12 per cent of the deposit liabilities. This empowers the Bank of Canada to raise the cash reserve requirements up to 12 per cent. When this measure was before the banking and commerce committee the Social Credit party moved that the 12 per cent limitation be removed. We were supported by the C.C.F. group. We do not see any reason to have the 12 per cent limitation. The time may come when it will be desirable to raise the cash reserve requirements of the chartered banks above that level to whatever level the Bank of Canada may decide is necessary.

I intend to turn now to the question of markets because we feel the only real solution to our agricultural problems is the expansion of markets. Of course there are two markets, the home market and the external market. Of the two, the home market is by far the more important for this reason: the home market has to absorb an amount of production equivalent to the total production of the country. That is to say, it has to absorb the goods left within the country and, in addition, it has to absorb the imports brought into the country in exchange for our exports. That is why we in the Social Credit group have always insisted that if we are going to maintain full employment and maximum production in this country we have to maintain the purchasing power of the people at a level which will make it possible for them to buy the total production of the country. Otherwise goods will be left unsold, unemployment will increase and the consumer debt will steadily rise.

There is no doubt that today we have a tremendous potential market in Canada. This could be used to buy more of our agricultural products and many of the other commodities that are being piled up in the form of inventories. We have a potential market in the unemployed, the old age pensioners, the recipients of war veterans allowances and many others and we can increase our market by extending the amounts paid to those individuals and also by the establishment of a discount on prices which I have already mentioned. If we have large supplies of certain goods in Canada the discount on these goods could be increased in order to encourage their consumption. Goods in short supply could be without the discount or with a smaller discount so there would not be the same encouragement to increase the consumption of those goods in short supply.

On the question of foreign markets, we all know that we have lost many of these. We claim the reason why we have lost these markets is the slavish adherence to the principles laid down in the Bretton Woods agreement, that is to say the right of nations to receive payment in their own currencies without any obligation whatsoever to accept goods in payment.

Now if we are going to insist on payment in dollars, and refuse to balance our trade with other nations then it would make it impossible for those nations to pay for their imports from us. For that reason we have suggested time and time again that we should be willing to accept sterling from the sterling area to the degree necessary to make it possible for that area to balance its trade with us. After all, what is the purpose of international trade? Surely it should be the exchange of goods and services between nations on a basis of mutual advantage. If we agree on that basis, then when we export goods the only currency we need is the currency of the importing nations, because it is that nation's currency which will buy that nation's goods.

I recall the former minister of trade and commerce often having argued that if we were to accept sterling we would not be in a position to spend it in a sterling area. Well fortunately many of us have had experience with sterling and have found that when we have a sterling balance in England we can use it for the purchase of goods in the sterling area and can ship them to Canada. I have done that myself. Therefore when anybody talks about not being able to use sterling balances in order to export goods to this country, they are just talking through the top of their hats; they are talking about something they do not understand.

I noticed last year that the right hon. A. B. Low, secretary of state for the board of trade in England, made that perfectly clear while he was in Canada. During an interview by the Western Producer, reported in their issue of October 11, 1956, he said that pounds sterling accepted by Canadian exporters for sales to Britain could be used for purchases of goods anywhere in the sterling area. I think therefore to the extent we have a favorable balance of trade with Britain we should be prepared to accept sterling in payment and then use our surplus for the purchase of goods from Britain. The Prime Minister has stated that he is anxious we should divert imports from the United States, such imports to be purchased from Britain. If we were willing to accept sterling we could very well use it to buy goods from Britain which we are today buying from the United States. In that way we would hope to reduce the adverse balance of trade with the United States.

On motion of Mr. Quelch the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we wish to proceed with this debate. It is our intention on Thursday to take up the resolution to precede a bill to provide for cash advances on grain, and if that by any chance should not take all day Thursday we would go on with the resolutions appearing in Votes and Proceedings today.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DUTIES ON SOYBEANS AND VEGETABLE OILS

Question No. 11—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received any representations from any organization or individual that the rates of duty on all vegetable oils entering Canada to be used for edible purposes should be increased and that a parallel duty should be put on soybeans entering Canada?

2. If so, what action, if any, has been taken by the government to increase the rate of duty on soybeans and vegetable oils entering Canada for edible purposes, including those products which presently enter Canada duty free from commonwealth countries?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes. The government has received communications renewing representations made to the former government, and on which no positive action was taken by the former government, requesting that rates of duty on vegetable oils entering Canada to be used for edible purposes be increased and that a duty be put on soybeans entering Canada.

2. The government is reviewing the representations that have been made, and the various interests that would be affected. The government is also reviewing the extent to which international commitments made by the former government would stand in the way of possible action.

POSTAL CONGRESS—SIMILTANEOUS TRANSLATION OF DEBATES

Question No. 18—Mr. Poulin:

1. Did the government put into operation a system of simultaneous translation of the debates in the House of Commons, on the occasion of the international postal congress recently held in the parliament buildings?

2. If so, what was the installation cost of such system?

3. During how many weeks was the system in operation?

4. What was the maintenance and operation cost thereof?

5. Were the results obtained satisfactory?

6. How was such equipment disposed of by the government: (a) was it given, sold, leased, loaned or otherwise disposed of; (b) at what price or on what terms?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. The Department of National Defence installed for the universal postal union congress a transportable conference simultaneous translation system capable of being used for five languages at any location.

2. The cost of technical equipment in this installation was $30,000. Equipment to the value of $5,000 was already owned by the Department of National Defence and equipment to the value of $25,000 was purchased by the Department of National Defence with funds transferred to that department by the Post Office Department. The total cost of components, engineering construction, transportation and salaries of the Department of National Defence personnel employed in installation and operation was $50,000.

3. Seven weeks and two days.

4. Approximately $11,500.

5. Yes.

6. (a) The equipment was not disposed of. It is in the custody of the Department of National Defence and it is so designed that it may be used for future international conferences.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CERTIFICATE OF JUDGMENT VOIDING ELECTION IN YUKON CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received from Hon. Mr. Justice J. E. Gibben of the territorial court of the Yukon and Hon. Mr. J. O. Wilson, of the supreme court of British Columbia, the two judges selected for the trial of an election petition pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate of judgment in the matter of the election in the electoral district of Yukon, held June 10, 1957, declaring such election void. It is as follows. Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: This document will be tabled and printed in the Votes and Proceedings. It is the judgment in the electoral hearing. Is it agreed that I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I should also inform the house that the learned judges have stated that it was not possible to complete the notes of evidence so they could accompany the reasons for judgment, but they have advised that the typewritten evidence will be forwarded with the minimum of delay.

I have also the honour to inform the house that in conformity with section 69 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, chapter 87, revised statutes, 1952, I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

TRADE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON RECENT CONFERENCES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on October 15 the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asked me certain questions pertaining to matters arising out of recent trade conferences, and I indicated at that time that I should be glad to make a statement, if it were the wish of the house, on the subject of the trade proposals and the various recent trade conferences. The following day the hon. member pursued his question further and asked if I would include in the statement reference to the conference at Washington. Similar questions were asked by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin).

I should like to bring that statement to the house now; and as the conferences were three in number, somewhat different in character and circumstances, and all of some importance, the reports I am about to make are not as short as I should have wished they might be. The first of these conferences—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, will my hon. friend permit an interruption? Would he not think it would be more convenient if the statement could be made under circumstances which would permit interrogations?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, there will be ample opportunity for the submission of questions on the statement on the orders of the day, in accordance with the practice of the house. I shall be glad to deal with them.

The first of these conferences was the conference of commonwealth finance ministers held at Mont Tremblant. That conference was proposed by the Prime Minister when he attended the conference of prime ministers at London last June. It has been the practice for the commonwealth finance ministers each year to hold a meeting following the annual meeting of the governors of the international bank and the international monetary fund at Washington. Those meetings have normally been held at Washington. On this occasion our Prime Minister proposed that the conference should be held in Canada, and that invitation was accepted.

The conference was attended by all the finance ministers of the commonwealth with the exception of New Zealand, which was represented by its minister for external affairs. The Canadian representation consisted of my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), and myself, and we were supported by a very strong team of Canadian officials drawn from the departments of finance, trade and commerce and external affairs.

The preparation for the conference was intensive. It continued throughout the entire summer.

The selection of Mont Tremblant as the venue of the conference was indeed a happy one, and the circumstances there contributed very greatly to the creation of a friendly atmosphere which was conducive to understanding and to agreement.

The agenda of that conference consisted of three topics. The first concerned matters in relation to the pound sterling and problems of exchange in relation to sterling. The second topic concerned the proposed European free trade area or the European economic integration, as it is called.

These two topics were discussed at the sessions of the conference on the Saturday. On the Monday and Tuesday the conference devoted its consideration to the Canadian proposals for enlarging trade within the commonwealth and improving economic relations among the countries of the commonwealth. As hon. members are aware, the conference achieved agreement, and the extent of the agreement and the enthusiasm with which that agreement was hailed by the ministerial representatives of the commonwealth countries are alike testimony to the success of the conference. It is a pleasure indeed to assure the house that as the result of the unanimous decision that was taken at that Mont Tremblant conference, a full dress commonwealth trade and economic conference will be held some time next year. The place has not been finally decided. The date has not been finally decided. The Canadian government has extended to the governments of the other countries of the commonwealth an invitation to hold the conference in Canada. In due course we expect a final answer to that invitation.

I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that a great deal of preparation, as was recognized by the ministers of finance, will be required for such a conference, and plans have been made and are proceeding for a conference of officials, drawn from the various countries, to be held at a time and place yet to be agreed upon. The officials will have the responsibility at such a meeting for shaping the agenda for the conference and arranging plans.

I wish, in concluding my remarks on the Mont Tremblant conference, to say that in the closing meeting of the conference, which was public, minister after minister testified to his belief that the conference had achieved significant results and had done something worthy in strengthening commonwealth consciousness and fellow feeling. By leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, I now table the communique that was issued at the close of the conference by the ministers there present.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that this document be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: I turn now to the second subject, which concerns bilateral discussions between Canada and the United Kingdom. Prior to the Mont Tremblant conference we had received information from the Chancellor of the Exchequer that it was the wish of the United Kingdom ministers who were attending the conference to come to Ottawa at the conclusion of the Mont Tremblant conference for a discussion of matters of mutual interest. We had no indication of the particular matters they proposed to discuss with us when that suggestion was made to us. We, of course, said the Canadian ministers concerned would be more than pleased to make themselves available to meet with their counterparts in the British government in any discussions. I stress the fact that there was no indication of an agenda, and that there was no suggestion of a formal conference. I think that fact needs to be clearly understood.

On the Saturday, during the progress of the first day's sittings of the Mont Tremblant conference, a news story appeared in the Montreal Daily Star, and copies of that newspaper became available during the afternoon recess at Mont Tremblant. That news story purported to refer to the intention of the United Kingdom ministers to propose the establishment of a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada. I had been designated by the conference as its chairman and also as the individual to give to the press each day statements on such matters as were discussed at the conference. The house will realize, of course, that the proceedings of the conference were closed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Secret.

Mr. Fleming: A meeting was arranged with the press that evening for that purpose. In the course of the meeting questions were asked concerning the proposal that had been reported in the news report to which I have just referred. The Chancellor of the Exchequer and I were both present and took part in the conference. In reply to those questions the Chancellor of the Exchequer outlined a proposal which he indicated he intended to submit to the Canadian government when he came on to Ottawa the following week at the conclusion of the Mont Tremblant conference. It was a proposal, as he indicated in reply to various questions, for the establishment of a free trade area between the two countries, and to achieve it on a progressive basis over a period of years.

It was obviously a very far-reaching proposal. In the course of that conference I was invited to state the attitude of the Canadian government with respect to that proposal. Obviously it would have been improper of me to do such a thing under the circumstances. The proposal had not yet been submitted. Obviously it had never been before the Canadian government. I was just listening in the course of Mr. Thorneycroft's answers to the questions put to him at the conference as to the features of the proposal as he unfolded them at that time, and I declined—and I think quite properly so—to make any comment on that proposal except to say that I thought it would be realized that it would involve formidable difficulties in any consideration that might be given to it by the Canadian government. However, until the proposal had been set forth and submitted, I indicated that I could not undertake to make any comments on it.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the end of that matter so far as the Mont Tremblant conference was concerned. That matter was never discussed at the Mont Tremblant conference. It never had any place whatever in the proceedings of the conference. Indeed, it would not have been permissible to introduce it. In that conference we were engaged in a discussion of commonwealth trade and the Canadian proposal for the holding of a commonwealth trade and economic conference. I may say to the house that no bilateral arrangements were discussed in the course of the conference proceedings.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that what I have said will leave no room for doubt, and that there will be an end to such confusion as has been evidenced on this subject.

At the conclusion of the Mont Tremblant conference two of the British ministers, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Thorneycroft, and the president of the board of trade, Sir David Eccles, came on to Ottawa. In the course of two or three days of meetings here the United Kingdom ministers submitted a proposal in relation to the establishment of a free trade area between Canada and the United Kingdom to be brought about over a period which, we were told, might be in the neighbourhood of, say, 12 to 15 years.

I wish here to say one word by way of clarification of a matter which has been referred to more than once in this connection. That is the matter which the Prime Minister mentioned on his return to Ottawa from the conference of prime ministers last summer, when at the airport he pointed out in reply to questions put to him that the diversion from the United States to the United Kingdom of 15 per cent of the purchases which Canadians are now making in the United States would redress a trade situation which I think must and does give a great many Canadians serious concern.

This concern is based upon two principal considerations, the first being the extent to which the Canadian trading eggs are being laid in one basket, in other words the extent to which Canadian external trade is—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that this is one of those difficult problems with which Your Honour will have to deal, namely the latitude to be allowed to ministers in making statements on the order for motions. You will find in the records of this house plenty of discussions on this point in which my hon. friends opposite have taken part. It does seem to me that the house is willing to accept the practice that ministers be permitted, either on motions or on orders of the day, to make announcements, statements of ministerial changes or explanations of government policy having the character of an announcement or being of an urgent nature. This is shown by the fact that the house was generous today in not objecting to what the Minister of Finance asked for at the start. But with all respect it does seem to me he is now really indulging in debate. He has not announced anything new. He has commented on things that have been said about statements made by the Prime Minister and, with respect, I think Your Honour should consider whether this is the time to make a statement like this.

I am not quarrelling very much as to the difference between making statements on motions and on orders of the day. That difference is not great. If a statement is made on motions we can ask questions on orders of the day, but I think it has been ruled in the past that it is better to make such statements on orders of the day so that members can ask questions right away. I question, however, whether this statement should be made on either orders of the day or on motions. It is not an announcement of government policy; it is a matter of debate, and I think the minister should have waited his turn to take part in the debate on the address. That is still in progress, and I think it is not in order for the Minister of Finance to make such a statement at this time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when I intervened at the opening of my hon. friend's statement today I asked if he could not make his statement under circumstances which would permit interrogation. I had in mind precisely the point now raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Under the rules of this house I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, that this kind of statement at this particular juncture and under these circumstances is not in order. My hon. friend can take the time of the house in respect to this very important matter, even today, during the debate which is now formally before the house. That would afford other speakers on this side and elsewhere an opportunity to make speeches in reply.

A more preferable arrangement, I strongly suggest to the Minister of Finance, would be, for instance, when we are discussing, let us say, international affairs along the lines indicated by the Prime Minister himself the other day, when I assume we would be in committee and would have the opportunity of putting to the Minister of Finance questions arising out of the very important matter about which he is seeking now to make so inadequate a statement.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate what hon. members have drawn to my attention, and perhaps I should say a word before any further steps are taken along this course. As I understand it, what was done in the last two parliaments, at least when there was an important statement to be made by a minister, was for that statement to be made either at this time or on the orders of the day. Then the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other two opposition parties were given an opportunity to make a brief comment or to ask a question about the statement in order that it might not simply be a unilateral statement, if it was an extended statement such as this.

I had that practice in mind when I allowed the matter to proceed, thinking that it might be satisfactory to the house if, when the Minister of Finance had finished, the leaders of the opposition parties were to do that.

Of course there is no question before the house, and we cannot carry on a general or an extended debate; we are under the limitation restricting comments and replies in that way. Since we have gone this far, and I trust that the minister's statement is practically finished, I suggest we might follow the course I had in mind, and that the house will consider it a satisfactory way of dealing with this matter.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should make any comment except to say that there are many precedents which can be pointed out, and that I had prepared the statement at the request of the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Speaker, I was mentioning the background of the matters discussed in the informal discussions here in Ottawa. The basis of what the Prime Minister said on the occasion I mentioned, having regard to the deficit in our trade with the United States, was to seek a diversion from the United States to the United Kingdom of purchases that Canada is now making from the United States. It was not part of that proposal to divert to the United Kingdom purchases by Canadians of Canadian products. The proposal of the United Kingdom ministers therefore introduced quite a new dimension into the considerations which had arisen out of the Prime Minister's reference.

In these several days of discussion here in Ottawa many matters pertaining to the trade interests of the two countries were discussed. The proceedings were very informal in character; the discussions were frank and friendly. The discussions were necessarily of a preliminary character because, for instance, the United Kingdom ministers were not authorized to discuss the question of imports of Canadian agricultural products into the United Kingdom.

It was agreed in the light of the discussion, and of the circumstances, that it was important to achieve the holding of the commonwealth trade conference next year, and as the proposal of the United Kingdom was of a long-range nature, which neither required nor was expected to be given immediate consideration by the Canadian government, or even consideration prior to the commonwealth trade and economic conference, that the matter should rest there in the form in which it was referred to later in the communique which was issued.

As to the proposals advanced by the Canadian government, I mention this only briefly to indicate that we propose to seek, wherever possible, to transfer government purchases that are now being made in the United States to the United Kingdom on terms that are fair to all concerned; to enlarge as soon as may be the amounts of goods purchased that tourists may bring back with them following visits to the United Kingdom.

Then in the third place—and this, in the view of the government, is one of very considerable importance, sir—we propose to send to the United Kingdom next month the most important trade mission which Canada has ever sent abroad. It will be a large trade mission; it will be a mission sponsored by the Canadian government, and it will include leading representatives of business, industry, labour, agriculture and other primary production from all areas of Canada.

In leaving that subject, sir, may I table the communique or agreed statement that was issued by the ministers of the two governments, the United Kingdom and Canada, at the conclusion of the Canada-United Kingdom talks on October 4.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this communique be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: The third of the conferences, Mr. Speaker, was held at Washington. It was the third meeting of the joint United States-Canadian committee on trade and economic matters. The first two meetings of that committee had been held in March, 1954, and September, 1955, respectively. This, therefore, was the first meeting of that committee in more than two years; and, having regard to the fact that there had been a change of government in Canada, it was particularly opportune that the meeting should then be held.

The Canadian ministers who were members of the committee went to Washington then at the invitation of the United States government. The committee has definite limits set upon the scope of its consideration. Its terms of reference are limited, sir. They are, first, to consider matters affecting the harmonious economic relations between the two countries; second, in particular, to exchange information and views on matters which might adversely affect the high level of mutually profitable trade which has been built up; third, to report to the respective governments on such discussions in order that consideration may be given to measures deemed appropriate and necessary to improve economic relations and to encourage the flow of trade. The purpose of the conference, therefore, broadly speaking was an exchange of points of view.

The committee has no power of its own to arrive at definite conclusions.

The purpose of the Canadian delegation, which consisted of four ministers, my colleagues the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and myself, assisted by a very strong team of officials from the four departments concerned, was to place before the four members of the United States cabinet the point of view that we considered to be a true representation of the feeling of the Canadian people concerning the trend of trade between the two countries, and the effect upon the well-being of Canadian agriculture of the policies being followed by the United States administration in the disposal of agricultural surpluses.

The proceedings were informal, intimate, frank and friendly. The discussions were characterized by a vigorous presentation of the points of view of both governments, and I may say that so far as the presentation of the Canadian point of view was concerned it was put forward just as vigorously as it has been put forward at any time by the persons concerned on the floor of this House of Commons.

Now, sir, the proceedings continued for two days. As to the results of the conference, I think briefly they can be put under four headings. First, I think there was value in the conference in that it afforded an opportunity for a frank exchange of points of view; second, it afforded an opportunity for the exchange of information, and in that exchange I think representatives of both countries derived information that will be of benefit to them in shaping their policies in certain respects. Third—perhaps this may not be so important—it afforded an opportunity for the ministers of both countries to become acquainted with their opposite numbers; and fourth—and perhaps of most direct interest—was the decision that was arrived at in reference to one particular feature of the methods pursued by the United States administration in the disposal of agricultural surpluses. We received from the four United States secretaries an affirmation in these terms:

> The United States members affirm to the Canadian ministers their intention in all surplus disposal activities to avoid, in so far as possible, interfering with normal commercial marketings.
> They gave assurance that under the present revised commodity credit corporation barter program each barter contract must result in a net increase in exports of the agricultural commodity involved, and that interest must be paid until the strategic materials are delivered or payment is otherwise effected for the agricultural commodities.

The United States administration, through the secretary for agriculture, had made a somewhat similar statement about the middle of the summer in regard to the barter feature of the methods pursued by the United States administration in disposing of agricultural surpluses. This is the first time to our knowledge that this has become a matter of undertaking on the part of the United States administration to any other government. While we would like to have seen some assurances that all the objectionable features in the methods pursued by the United States administration—that is, objectionable from the Canadian point of view—in their agricultural disposal program would be eliminated, at any rate this was an assurance that, so far as it went, we were glad to receive.

Now, sir, I think I should ask the leave of the house to table the communique that was agreed upon at the conference and was issued on October 8, embodying the conclusions and reviewing the nature of the discussions on various topics carried on at that conference.

I make just this one observation in conclusion, Mr. Speaker. While the realm of positive agreement resulting from the Washington meetings is necessarily limited, limited by the nature of the meeting and limited by the powers of the committee, it was felt by the Canadian ministers who attended that conference that the conference had served a very useful purpose.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure you at once that I am not going to overlook your warning that this could not be the occasion for a debate. Hon. members on both sides will have their own views as to how near or how close to a debate on the subject the Minister of Finance chose to tread. The conferences in question have all had to do very much with all the external trade policies of the Canadian government, and certainly cannot be dealt with in the limits that are indicated in the warning you gave when a point of order was submitted to you a few moments ago.

There will certainly be other opportunities, because there are very diverging views as to the achievements the hon. gentleman has mentioned in the statement he made today. The substance, I think, is summarized as glamorously as it could be made to appear in the communiques which have been laid on the table and which we have all had the opportunity of reading in the press before this day. The views that have been expressed about the limited extent of those achievements are not apt to be very much affected by the statement we have just heard from the Minister of Finance.

It may very well be that there will be some questions on the orders of the day or at another more opportune moment to elucidate some of the points touched upon by the Minister of Finance in his statement, and there is no doubt that, Canada being in proportion to its population perhaps the most active trading nation in the world, there should be all sorts of complications resulting from the channels trade takes in the interests of those who are engaged in that trade.

It may be that the hon. gentlemen feel that the methods that were resorted to by the previous government can be pursued with greater vigour by them than they were by their predecessors, but that also is a matter about which there are very serious diverging views. The only new suggestion that seems to have arisen with respect to this attempt to divert trade, not from Canadian production but from United States sources to United Kingdom sources, is the increase in the allowance that tourists may have for purchases made in the United Kingdom on the occasion of a trip to that country. That would not have any substantial effect in diverting trade from United States sources to British sources and would perhaps have some effect, although not serious, upon a possible diversion of some trade from Canadian production to the producers of the country the tourists would have visited.

These are all matters that deserve very careful consideration, and about which more will be required than the statement just made by the Minister of Finance to destroy the impression that nothing very new has transpired.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you first that it might be well to look into what constitutes a ministerial statement, because in reality I think the statement made by the minister today should have been made on the address in reply to the speech from the throne so that we might have debated the matter. However, I am going to ask the minister a question. One cannot deal with the United Kingdom proposition, one cannot deal with commonwealth trade, one cannot deal with commercial relations with the United States in one question, but I am going to confine myself to one question.

In view of what the minister said about the satisfactory outcome of the discussions with the secretary of agriculture and others in the United States, may I ask him this question. Has he seen the report that the secretary of agriculture of the United States, Mr. Benson, is about to proceed to Japan, where he hopes to enter the wheat market which we have so assiduously cultivated over the last number of years and where we have gained a very pronounced entry to our benefit, with a view to entering into a trading agreement with Japan whereby the United States will take Japanese currency for American wheat and invest the proceeds in Japan? Has the minister seen that report? If not, I would refer him to the financial page of the Montreal Gazette of today's date.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report in question, but I can assure the hon. member that no ground was given by the Canadian ministers at Washington—

Some hon Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: —in regard to the methods being pursued by the United States in disposing of their agricultural surpluses. There has been very strong denouncement and very strong disapproval expressed of the methods being pursued, particularly with regard to the way they are hurting the marketing of Canadian agricultural products.

Mr. Coldwell: Then I say that the minister's presentation to the house this afternoon was merely a confession of failure.

Mr. Fleming: Far from being a confession of failure, it was a report to the house on the strong position taken by the Canadian ministers at Washington.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: No stronger position could have been taken by any Canadian government. Indeed, it was the strongest position that has ever been taken by any Canadian government in such discussions at Washington.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If there is no spokesman for the Social Credit party I would ask other members to hold their questions, if they have further questions, until we reach orders of the day, so that we may at least preserve the appearance of not having engaged in a debate.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): That was the very point on which I was rising. I wanted to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the completely new precedent of cabinet ministers making statements before the orders of the day also embraces the opportunity for others to comment and debate, as was actually done by the minister, or is this a new precedent that can be made use of only by the Conservatives on the government side of the house?

Mr. Robichaud: It could be a new kind of closure.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to ask a question or to say anything at this stage on the statement made by the Minister of Finance. I did not do so for the reason that my colleague the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), still has about seven or eight minutes of his time left in the speech from the throne debate, and he will be commenting on the statement in the course of what he has to say.

Mr. Winch: Is it possible to have an answer?

Mr. Speaker: It is not customary to ask the Speaker hypothetical questions. I take it that the hon. member's comments have been heard by the house. They were probably out of order as well as some of the other things that have been done here. I may say to the house that it has been quite customary for ministers to make important statements on the order for motions.

Mr. Pearson: Never like that.

Mr. Speaker: No one knows in advance what will be their content or extent, or how far they will develop into an argument, and we just have to take these matters as they come. I think the house will agree that no further discussion should take place at this time.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance if I am right in concluding that the first time he heard of the British proposals was on the occasion of the recent visit of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, or is it not a fact that he first learned of this proposal from the mouth of the Minister of Food and Agriculture on September 10 last, and that a few days later the president of the board of trade journeyed from Washington to visit the Prime Minister when he was at the United Nations to acquaint him with the details of the proposal for a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada?

I should like also to ask the Minister of Finance if he would not table the proposals which he said were put forward by the government of Canada through him at Mont Tremblant. Would he not table the details of the British proposal itself, because I say to him with great respect, realizing the limitations of time today, I do not think we are clear yet as to what are the full details of the British proposals.

Also he may tell us whether, when he was in Washington, there was a serious discussion of a proposal made by the Prime Minister of Canada as to the diversion, to the extent of 15 per cent, of Canada's purchases from the United States to the United Kingdom. Is the press accurate in saying that the Minister of Finance said that the Prime Minister's proposal really was an afterthought, and not to be taken too seriously?

Mr. Fleming: I lost track of the number of questions, and I am not sure that I can remember them in their multitudinous profusion. I shall deal with them as well as I can remember them.

First of all let me say this, that the first time the Canadian government received any formal proposal or anything at all that could be said to be definite in regard to that proposal—

Mr. McIlraith: Formal?

Mr. Fleming: Who is giving the answer? May I give the answer?

Mr. Pickersgill: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. McIlraith: Nobody is giving the answer.

Mr. Fleming: If the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate wishes to give the answer, perhaps the time of the house can be saved. If he knows all the answers then he should satisfy the curiosity of the hon. member for Essex East.

The first time the Canadian government received that proposal, as a proposal with any aspect of definiteness to it at all, was when on returning from Mont Tremblant and arriving in Ottawa I received a written communication from the Chancellor of the Exchequer embodying the proposal; that was the first time. The hon. member asks about the visit of the British Minister of Food and Agriculture, Right Hon. Derick Heathcoat-Amory. When Mr. Amory was here in the course of a tour across Canada he touched very lightly on the possibility that the United Kingdom ministers, when they came here later on, might be putting forward some suggestion of a free trade area. But he did not put forward any proposal, on behalf of his government, as a proposal to the Canadian government. Let me make that very clear.

What was next in this group of questions? Oh, yes; the hon. member referred to some trip that Sir David Eccles is supposed to have made to this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, the trip Sir David Eccles made from Washington to visit the Prime Minister when he was at the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not true.

Mr. Fleming: The Prime Minister says that is not true. I think that is plain. Sir David Eccles was one of the British ministers attending the Mont Tremblant conference with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He came to Ottawa for the several days of discussion. There was a third member of the British cabinet, Right Hon. Reginald Maudling, the paymaster general, who attended the Mont Tremblant conference but who did not come on to Ottawa.

The next question the hon. member asked was whether this had not been discussed in Washington. The hon. member shakes his head, so may I get the question right?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The question I asked about Washington was whether or not my hon. friend discussed the proposal made to the press gallery by the Prime Minister of Canada, that there should be a diversion of Canadian purchases from the United States to the United Kingdom. The report is that the Minister of Finance said that that proposal was a long-term one, and the impression was created from reading the particular article that the Minister of Finance did not believe the proposal by the Prime Minister of Canada was to be taken too seriously.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member for Essex East has got his facts all wrong, as usual. Let me say this. There was nothing said by the Minister of Finance to the press at Washington or elsewhere to indicate or suggest that what the Prime Minister of Canada had said about a diversion of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom was not to be taken seriously. On the contrary, what the Minister of Finance said on all such occasions was that obviously this is something that cannot be accomplished overnight. It never was suggested it could be accomplished overnight, but it was put forward by the Prime Minister as an objective and it remains an objective of the Canadian government. If the hon. member wants the reasons I can give them to him.

Mr. McIlraith: Do it on a proper occasion.

Mr. Fleming: Oh, I see. It is all right for the questions to be asked with all the insinuations in them, but the questions are not to be answered when it does not suit the purposes of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is the same old closure complex.

Mr. McIlraith: You have no respect for any of the rules of the house.

An hon. Member: How many helpers has he?

Mr. Fleming: I am trying to remember question No. 5, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps my hon. friend will assist me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Question No. 3 was whether or not my hon. friend would table the British proposal. Question No. 4 was this. Will he table the Canadian proposal which he said the government brought to the conference at Mont Tremblant?

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member well knows that exchanges between governments cannot be tabled. They are secret communications and are always privileged. How many times have I heard the hon. gentleman and his colleagues assert that position in the house: "These were secret communications". The communication by the Canadian government of its proposal in this respect to the other commonwealth governments was a secret proposal, as the hon. gentleman well knows, and the communication that we received from the Chancellor of the Exchequer was a secret communication and is privileged. The hon. member should not attempt to try to give anybody the impression that this is a departure from the position that he and his colleagues took day in and day out in the house.

Mr. Pearson: And you objected to it.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it true that following on his visit to Washington he was "fixed"? Is it equally true that after the British proposal on free trade he was transfixed?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is no. The hon. member, of course, refers to a remark which the United States secretary for commerce, Mr. Sinclair Weeks, dropped on his way out of one of the sessions of the conference. In order that the record may be fair on this point I think I should say that, when I was in Washington, I heard about this remark that was attributed to Mr. Weeks, the remark being "We fixed 'em". I realized at once that it was purely a jocular remark—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: —because it had no validity as applied to anything that happened in the conference. Naturally, under the circumstances, I was a little disappointed to find that some newspapers not friendly to the new government took this comment up and tried to make much of it. I therefore communicated with Mr. Weeks about it, realizing that this use that was being made of a chance jocular remark did not do him justice. Mr. Weeks issued, from the United States embassy here in Ottawa several days ago, the following statement:

> I was deeply concerned to learn that the meaning of a chance colloquialism of mine is being misrepresented to give a false impression of the fine accomplishments and excellent team work resulting from the recent conferences between representatives of Canada and the United States.
> As I left one of the meetings I was asked for comments and in a hurried jest without even pausing for discussion I responded, "We fixed 'em" —obviously meaning only that we, all of us, Canadians and Americans together, had fixed or settled a lot of things. The fact is that never have I said or implied or felt that the meeting was other than a great success from the standpoint of our mutual objectives. This year's meeting was the third in which I have sat and one of the best of the whole series.
> No peoples are more closely bound by friendship and respect than are Canadians and Americans. The grave problems of this age are compelling reasons for greater mutual understanding and cooperation.
> It is this spirit of respect and friendship and not distorted chance remarks that reveal my appreciation of the representatives of Canada and their great independent nation. Such esteem, I assure you, is shared by all Americans associated in the recent conference.

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government given consideration to the acceptance of sterling in an effort to increase Canadian exports to Britain and other commonwealth nations? If so, has a decision been reached, and what was the nature of that decision?

Mr. Fleming: No such proposal was made to the Canadian government.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the recent discussions in Washington. Was the minister made aware of the tie-in or tie-up between the metal crisis at this time and the disposal program of the United States government? This is a matter of a good deal of interest at this time because of the crisis existing in metals in Canada at this time.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, that matter was discussed. It was a matter of considerable concern to the Canadian government, and we were extremely anxious to know what were the plans of the United States government both with regard to the possibility of continued stockpiling and also with reference to the possibility of tariff action against Canadian metals, in particular zinc and lead. This matter was fully discussed, and in the communique the hon. member will find reference to the subject.

So far as the first matter is concerned, namely the policy on stockpiling, I may tell him that the United States government is not continuing the policy of stockpiling of these particular metals which Canada has been exporting in quantity to the United States. So far as the possibility of future United States tariff action against Canadian lead and zinc is concerned, the communique contains the following:

> The Canadian ministers expressed concern over the effect on Canadian producers which would result from any future action by the United States to raise duties on imported lead and zinc. The United States members explained the situation confronting their domestic producers. They called attention to the continued need for imports of certain minerals and metals and indicated that any United States tariff action that might be taken to relieve serious injury to United States producers would have the primary objective of maintaining a normal relationship between imports and domestic production. They noted that any such action would be applied in accordance with the procedures of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

I am sure the hon. member is aware that the United States tariff rates on importations of lead and zinc—and this applies to imports of these two base metals from Canada—are bound by the general agreement on tariffs and trade. If the United States congress at the next session proceeds to increase tariffs on imports of lead and zinc so far as Canada is concerned, it will mean that the United States will have to obtain, from the countries which are signatories to GATT, agreement to waive the provisions in that respect. That will give the countries concerned the right, if they so choose, to demand concessions.

In conclusion I may assure the hon. gentleman that the Canadian government regards this as a matter of serious concern, and pressed the case of the Canadian producers of zinc and lead very firmly and very hard.

Mr. Byrne: Pressed it how?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, we pressed the case for the Canadian producers of all metals. There was extensive discussion on the subject.

Mr. Byrne: The Financial Post article dated October 19 last seems to indicate that there was a close tie-up between the American disposal program and the present price of metals. That was my question.

Mr. Fleming: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article to which my hon. friend refers, but if the Financial Post is no more accurate in that article than in the one appearing during the week before which was quoted last Wednesday by the Leader of the Opposition, then, believe me, there is not one jot or tittle of accuracy in it.

Mr. Sinclair: The freedom of the press.

Mr. Coldwell: I would like to ask a supplementary question which has a bearing on the main question asked. When the minister was at Washington may I ask if there was any understanding arrived at regarding any limitation of our exports of coarse grains to the United States? Several years ago we agreed that we would limit the exportation of oats. I remember that distinctly, and I am wondering if perhaps some other farm commodities were discussed; or is the arrangement still in effect whereby we voluntarily limit the export of certain farm commodities to the United States? If so, does the minister not think, in view of the United States actions in regard to our foreign markets, we might withdraw such an undertaking if it is still in effect?

Mr. Fleming: That subject was not discussed at Washington. Obviously it was not the sort of subject which was in our interest to raise, and the United States secretaries did not raise it either.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Coldwell: Why not? Why is it not in our interest to raise this subject when it is our limitation? We had agreed several years ago on the limiting of exports of certain coarse grains to the United States, in the interests of the United States because they had a large production surplus. Is that agreement still in effect? The minister might look into it.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, but I might assure my hon. friend that that subject was not raised. There was an extended discussion as to the marketing by both countries of their agricultural products, we being in the position of complaining about the methods pursued by the United States administration; but so far as the subject of agreed quotas is concerned, such quotas being imposed by the exporting country on its own exports, that subject was not raised.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I may not have fully understood some of the answers given this afternoon, may I ask the Prime Minister this very simple question. Did he attend a meeting with the United Kingdom president of the board of trade in New York at the opening of the United Nations assembly?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): When I was in New York to speak at the United Nations a luncheon was arranged at which one of the guests was Sir David Eccles, who was en route to Washington. There was no meeting at any time with him in New York with reference to any questions which have been raised here today. It was simply a social gathering at noon at which, by reason of our relevant positions, we were placed side by side.

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski): I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's picture having been published in 12 of the last 16 issues of Time magazine, is it the intention of the government to abolish the special tax on Canadian editions of American publications?

Mr. Stefura: I would like an answer to the question which I asked previously. That was, has the government given consideration to the acceptance of sterling in an effort to increase Canadian exports to Britain and other commonwealth countries? If so, has a decision been reached and what was the nature of that decision?

Mr. Fleming: I have already told my hon. friend that question has not even been raised by anyone.

Mr. Stefura: Not among yourselves?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister yet been able to determine in his own mind if the backstairs entry of two trade commissioners into China is an official mission?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps the hon. member will confine the inquiry to the intricacies of his own mind.

Some hon. Members: That is a proper question.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I would like to ask a supplementary question to one which was asked previously by the member for Vegreville (Mr. Stefura). Will the Minister of Finance and his government give serious consideration to the acceptance of sterling in part payment at least for our exports to Great Britain? The reason I ask this question is that I consider it to be very serious, particularly in our part of the country; and this was something which was promised by the Conservatives in the last election.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I must correct the hon. gentleman's statement which he appended to his last question. There was no such promise made in the campaign at all.

Mr. Sinclair: There was by my opponent.

Mr. Fleming: Well, it was not a promise made on behalf of the Conservative party. My hon. friend can hold his local debates to his heart's content, but I make the assertion that no such undertaking was given to the Canadian people during the last election.

To deal with the question, however, until somebody asks us to accept sterling in part payment for Canadian exports I see no reason why we should go out looking for the opportunity to purchase sterling.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you not trying to sell our wheat?

Mr. Fleming: We are interested in the flow of two-way trade between Canada and the United Kingdom, and we are interested in the flow of commonwealth trade. We think this would be a good thing in rectifying the weaknesses in the Canadian trade position. However, until some of the countries on a sterling basis regard this as a matter of sufficient importance to them to come and ask us to accept such an arrangement, I do not see any reason why we should go out proposing to take sterling. We are interested in the two-way flow of trade and payment by commodities that are being purchased from non-commonwealth sources.

Mr. Quelch: Did anybody ask the United States to accept foreign currency for their exports?

Mr. Fleming: I think that question had better be directed to the United States administration. I find it keeps me occupied in trying to answer for my own job in Canada.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he advise the house as to whether it is his intention to bring forward for consideration at this session legislation concerning the development and improvement of the national capital?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. The cabinet has considered this matter but has decided regretfully that it must be deferred until the next session. In saying that, may I point out that a bill was placed on the order paper in the records of the house during last session. It was not proceeded with at that time and many matters in connection with it will have to be considered. Furthermore, having regard to some of the emergent matters of this session, it is felt that in order to give full and comprehensive consideration to this very important matter and to ensure that Canada's capital will be worthy of her nationhood the whole question might well be postponed until the ensuing session.

[Mr. Monteith.]

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO END POLLUTION OF OTTAWA RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I also ask a question with regard to the national capital plan. I direct my question to the Prime Minister now that he resides on the banks of the beautiful Ottawa river. When the capital plan comes up for consideration will he try to get the authorities responsible to do something to stop the pollution of this very beautiful river?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the hon. gentleman in this matter. This is one of those problems which over the years have received very intensive study on my part—the necessity of action being taken in order to preserve and maintain the purity of our waters. It is a problem which is surrounded by many complexities when an interprovincial river is concerned, but I can assure the hon. member of this: The interest I have taken in the past has not been diminished in any way by the position I now occupy, and I feel that this is a matter which deserves the most serious attention of parliament. I am having it looked into. Naturally, I have not missed the controversies that have been going on within this city within the last few days. All over this country there is a general demand that something should be done by the federal government and the provincial governments in co-operation, to maintain the flow uninterrupted, and also unimpaired by pollution, of the rivers and waters of our country.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GORDON COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance based on a statement found on page 2 of the preliminary report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects to the effect that a comprehensive final report is in preparation and will appear some time in 1957, also giving a list of the studies to be published by the commission. My question is: Can the Minister of Finance tell us whether the final report of the Gordon commission has yet been made? Can he also tell us whether the study intituled "Canadian Energy Prospects", referred to in appendix "C" of the preliminary report, has yet been published, and if it has not been published when we may expect that it will be published?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be precise in my answer to the first question asked, but the chairman of the royal commission intimated to me some time ago that he hoped to complete the final report, I think he said this autumn. This has been a very heavy task and, as hon. members may be aware, the secretary of the royal commission, Mr. LePan, was taken ill during the summer and is only back at his post on a part-time basis. Accordingly, the completion of the report has been somewhat delayed.

So far as the various studies are concerned, they have been proceeding, and there is one due this week. As to the one about which the hon. member inquired, the study on energy, I have no knowledge that it has been issued, and I think I would have been made aware of the fact if it had been issued recently. But I will be glad to make inquiries as to how far it is advanced and give the hon. member that information.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

REPORTED DISCLOSURES OF INFORMATION RESPECTING LOAN APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that when a farmer makes application for a loan from the Canadian farm loan board the board, before acknowledging the request, informs implement companies in the area of the application and of the board's disposition of the request for the loan? If the minister finds this to be the case, will he assure the house that he will instruct the board to cease immediately this unethical, high-handed and deplorable practice?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member telephoned me fifteen minutes before the session opened this afternoon to inform me that he was aware of a case in which, while an application by a farmer to the Canadian farm loan board was pending and the farmer had not yet been notified as to the disposition of the case, an implement firm to which he was indebted was notified by the board that the board was declining the application. I expressed some surprise at that. I can assure the hon. member, and I can assure the house, that if the board has done what he intimates, it will not do it again.

As I understand it, an application by a farmer to the loan board is not a public matter and it is certainly not a matter to be discussed with persons who may be interested in the affairs of an applicant farmer. I have asked the hon. member to give me particulars of the case in question. I can assure the house that I will make it my business to go to the bottom of this matter; and if this sort of thing is happening I can assure him that as far as I am concerned I shall see to it that it has happened for the last time.

TRANSPORT

FERRY "WILLIAM CARSON"—REQUESTED PROVISION OF PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. When will the minister carry out the recommendation by the Newfoundland board of trade for the ferry William Carson to carry passengers on her run between Argentia and North Sydney?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. The question of the M.V. William Carson carrying passengers and automobiles in addition to freight on its temporary run between North Sydney and Argentia has been before the management of the Canadian National Railways and the former minister of transport on several occasions in the past. In announcing the service the former minister spoke in the house on July 20, 1955, as follows:

> In the meantime the William Carson will, within the next few weeks, be placed in service by the C.N.R. on a limited basis between North Sydney and Argentia. Because the ship is designed to fit into specialized unloading and loading facilities that are available only at North Sydney and Port aux Basques, this temporary service to Argentia will be for freight movement only and will not provide for passengers or the carrying of automobiles. This temporary service to Argentia will provide valuable experience as to the operation of this highly specialized ship and should bring about an improvement in the carriage of freight to and from Newfoundland.

Since then, as I say, the matter of carrying passengers and automobiles was considered from time to time but no action was taken. I am advised that the William Carson is a highly specialized vessel in many respects, and in particular the ship requires special shore facilities in order to function properly; and that to accommodate passengers and automobiles on the run to Argentia would mean a substantial expansion of facilities.

I discussed this matter with the Newfoundland board of trade when I was in St. John's a month or two ago, and they told me that in their opinion automobiles could be landed and taken off this vessel at Argentia. I asked them if they had actually seen it done, or taken cars on and off the vessel, and they said they had not. I said: if you can go down to Argentia and demonstrate to the officials of the C.N.R. that cars can be moved on and off that vessel without danger I will recommend to the C.N.R. that cars should be loaded. I have not heard from the Newfoundland board of trade on the matter since that time.

L'ISLE AUX COUDRES-ST. JOSEPH DE LA RIVE—REQUESTED WINTER FERRY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the coming winter season will steps be taken to bring about the establishment of a winter ferry service between L'Isle aux Coudres and St. Joseph de la Rive on the St. Lawrence north shore?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. When I was in the province of Quebec this summer I was asked by prominent citizens of L'Isle aux Coudres to look into the possibility of providing such a ferry. They told me that they had been asking the previous government for a number of years past to provide such a ferry and that they had not met with any success. I told them that it would be impossible to know whether or not such a ferry could be provided until an inspection could be made of the ice and current conditions during the winter season and that my department would have an inspector look into those conditions when winter arrived.

Mr. Maltais: May I ask the minister if there is any truth in the statement he then made that the people of L'Isle aux Coudres might expect to get this ferry if they would vote Conservative at the next federal election?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker, but after my talk with the estimable citizens of L'Isle aux Coudres I am convinced that the very high quality of their mentality makes them realize that with a new government in power they have more chance of obtaining it.

Mr. Maltais: Another supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think there have been enough supplementaries on that point. The discussion might degenerate into another debate.

[Mr. Hees.]

LIVESTOCK—SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the shortage of livestock box cars in certain sections of western Canada and, if so, what action, if any, has been taken to correct this situation?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I should like to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. Since receiving the notice I have checked with my department and I can find no instance of our being advised of such a shortage. If he will advise me of any specific shortages that he knows of I shall be very glad to pass that information along to the railways concerned.

BANK OF CANADA

REQUEST FOR PRESERVATION OF TORONTO BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what are his plans regarding the future of a well-known architectural landmark on a street in the city of Toronto, namely the Bank of Canada building, which many Torontians are anxious to see preserved.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if this is a proper matter to raise on the orders of the day I will say to the hon. member that this matter has been inquired into. The premises in question are the property of the Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Canada has planned to erect a new building suitable for its purposes in Toronto. It is true that the building in question has stood there for a long time, and that it has architectural features which one would like to see preserved. The difficulty is that this is a relatively small building standing on a very valuable piece of property on the west side of Toronto street and under the pressure of increasing demand for space in that part of the city it becomes a question whether the Bank of Canada is to be expected to preserve that building on a property very much more valuable than would warrant the continuation of a small building.

Anybody who wishes to preserve architectural features I suppose can make his proper complaint about this matter, but it is the fact—it may be an unfortunate fact—that the property on which that building stands is so valuable now that the Bank of Canada, after considering all these questions, feels that it must put the land to other uses.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST TO HAVE NOTICES OF MOTIONS AND QUESTIONS DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a question of the house leader, the Minister of Public Works. It is a matter of procedure. Usually the questions that appear on the order paper are not answered until the debate on the address has been concluded. I understand we are to take up other business tomorrow. I am wondering whether he could arrange to have the questions that are on the order paper as well as the motions for production of papers proceeded with.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into that and see what can be done to meet the hon. member's request.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR 1956-57

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): On Friday last the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) asked me the following question:

> How many people are registered as unemployed in Montreal? Could I also, perhaps, have the comparative figures for the same period last year?

The answer is that the number of persons registered in Montreal on October 4, 1956, was: men, 8,612; women, 7,152; total, 15,764. On October 3, 1957, men, 17,371; women, 8,247; total, 25,618.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE—CHANGES IN OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister consider making a brief statement at an early date as to what precise changes have been made in the operation of the national employment service to implement the policy which was recently announced?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I think, Mr. Speaker, I can answer the question by saying that a directive has been sent out over my signature asking all managers of all offices to alert their staffs and to give instructions to their staffs to accelerate their action in securing employment for those who are registered as unemployed in the offices across Canada. I might add that I have received a number of letters from managers complimenting and thanking me for the instruction and saying that the directive will be carried out with, it is expected, good results.

Mr. Barnett: Has the minister made provision for any extra facilities or additional staff to deal with the situation in the manner which his directive states it should be dealt with?

Mr. Starr: The managers of various offices have been told and know that if necessary staff has to be hired they have the authority to do so under ordinary circumstances through the civil service commission.

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister look into the situation at Quesnel at an early date? We have been seeking an unemployment insurance commission office there for some time and it would facilitate the very thing that the minister is proposing.

Mr. Starr: We shall be glad to look into the situation.

LIVESTOCK

STATEMENT ON DISTRIBUTION OF TROLENE FOR CONTROL OF WARBLES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) asked this question, Mr. Speaker:

> Has the minister been informed of the systemic treatment by trolene for the control of warbles in cattle? If so, can he inform the house whether the government has any plan to undertake the free distribution of this treatment, as has been done with certain serums, in order to wipe out most of the annual loss of $14 million now estimated to be caused by warble fly infestation?

The answer is: the Department of Agriculture has investigated several systemic treatments, including trolene, for the control of warble fly. Trolene has been registered under the Pest Control Products Act. The government has no plans for the free distribution of this material. I might perhaps add that it is quite an expensive treatment and we have considerable hopes that a much cheaper treatment, and one which can be much more easily administered, will soon be available.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

REPLACEMENT OF M. V. "BURIN" ON PLACENTIA BAY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What steps are being taken, or are being contemplated, either by the government of Canada or by the Canadian National Railways to replace the coastal boat M. V. Burin now employed by the C.N.R. on the Placentia bay service with another boat having more and better passenger accommodation?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The question of the Newfoundland coastal steamship service is one of the matters that are being studied by my department at the present time, and the particular question he has asked will certainly be included in that study. I should like to advise him at this time that the Canadian National Railways expect to announce shortly improvements in the Placentia bay service.

PENSIONS

RETIRED C.N.R. EMPLOYEES AND CIVIL SERVANTS—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister take a personal interest in and speak to the appropriate ministers about the plight of retired Candian National Railways employees and superannuated civil servants whose pensions are in the lower brackets, about whom he and his colleagues quite often went on record and had a good deal to say in days gone by? Can he give the hope that something might be done to improve the pensions of these groups of people at an early date?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the factual recitation that I have shown an interest in this matter in the past is in accordance with the facts. It is of interest to know that it is expected of this government that everything be done in a matter of a few weeks. The matter to which he refers is one that is particularly close to me by reason of my father having been a civil servant and I can assure him that the attention that this government has already paid in raising the salaries of civil servants is but an indication of one of the steps to be taken which ultimately will, I am sure, remove the causes of complaint to which he has made reference.

[Mr. Harkness.]

GRAIN

WHEAT—REFERENCE TO REPORTED DECREASE IN EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister care to comment on the decline in Canadian exports of wheat during the present crop year, now some 7 million bushels below the very low exports during the same period last year? Would the minister inform the house as to what steps the government is taking to increase exports during the present crop year?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I propose to give a review of the situation at the second reading stage of the bill on cash advances, if he would not mind waiting until then. That will likely be Friday, all being well.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED FEE-SPREADING BY SOME MEMBERS OF MEDICAL PROFESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. As a result of a phone call received yesterday morning I was given to understand that this afternoon I would receive an answer to my question as to what action, if any, is going to be taken by his department on the question of kick-backs in the medical profession. In accordance with the phone call yesterday, is the minister now prepared to give me an answer? If not, just how soon may we expect the answer?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I think there must have been some misunderstanding about the telephone call. I did not understand I had to give any further answer. When the hon. member asked me the question the other day with respect to kickbacks and asked whether any investigation was now being carried on with respect to that practice I was not aware of the newspaper clippings at the time; I have since read them and I have also read the decision of the court.

The reason for the discovery of this practice, apparently, as suggested by the hon. member, is that it fell from heaven. Actually, of course, it was as a result of the investigation carried on by this department prior to the appeal which resulted in the disclosure. In other words, all of the evidence was adduced by the lawyers representing the department as the result of an investigation which they carried on and there was no adventitious disclosure whatsoever. As a matter of fact, this department is always conducting investigations of various matters such as this, sometimes to a degree which is sometimes resented by the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Winch: That was not my question. I know it was because of their investigation they discovered over $300,000 of kick-backs in two cities alone in one province. My question was: Because of that are you now going to make an investigation of the entire situation of kick-backs in the entire profession?

Mr. Nowlan: The officers of the department are as usual and as always carrying on investigations of all matters affecting the affairs of the taxpayers of this country.

STEEL

REPORTED DECISION TO INCREASE TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is it correct that, according to press reports, the government has decided to proceed with plans to boost tariffs on a wide range of steel products and has notified a number of countries which come under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, including the United States, of its intention?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I did not hear all of my hon. friend's question. Would he mind repeating it, please?

Mr. Schulz: I notified the minister of the question beforehand. Is it correct that, according to press reports, the government has decided to proceed with plans to boost tariffs on a wide range of steel products and has notified a number of countries which come under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, including the United States, of its intention?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, having regard to some of the language used here and the strength of some of the terms employed, I suppose I would be justified in giving a summary negative answer but I think that would not be altogether fair to the house. I propose, when I table some recent reports of the Canadian tariff board, which I hope to do within the next several days, to make a statement that will cover the question that my hon. friend has asked, as well as other matters.

FOOD

INTERNATIONAL AGENCY FOR POOLING OF SURPLUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken any action to promote an international agency for the pooling of surplus food products? If so, what has been done?

Hon. Douglas S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this being a matter which comes under the Department of Agriculture the Prime Minister has referred it to me. The answer is as follows: FAO proposed a world food board at Copenhagen in 1946. In subsequent months the proposal was reviewed in Washington by a special international commission. The commission, in which Canada was represented, recommended against the formation of such a body. This was subsequently followed by several other proposals, one for the establishment of an international commodity clearing house. None of these has met with acceptance by the member nations of FAO.

FAO then established its committee on commodity problems to review commodity situations and to consider surpluses. This was followed by the establishment of a special subcommittee in Washington which meets frequently to review surplus problems and to provide a forum for discussion. The committee prepared a set of principles relating to surplus disposal, designed among other things to eliminate or reduce competition with commercial transactions when surpluses are disposed of on concessional terms. Some 30 countries, including the leading trading nations, have subscribed to these principles. Canada has been an active participant in the committee on commodity problems and in the deliberations of the subcommittee on surplus disposal.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder whether I might ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether the present government would be prepared to reverse the position taken by the previous administration and come out positively now in support of an international world food pool as one means of disposing of our surplus agricultural products?

Mr. Harkness: I would not be prepared to make a statement on that at the moment.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to ask is perhaps based on the fact that a similar decision to the one you have just made was not made with regard to the answer to a previous question. The question had to do with a decision made by the FAO concerning the suggestion that there should be a method of dealing with surpluses. A very definite statement was made as to the position taken by Canada at that time.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Gardiner: This is not a question, and I know it is out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: I am asking the question because the answer, which was given following the discussion that has taken place, was also out of order.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Gardiner: I headed the delegation at that time, and the position that was reported here is not in accordance with the position taken by Canada at that time.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

ST. GEORGES DE BEAUCE—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister tell the house whether the previous government initiated an inquiry respecting the erection of an administration building at St. Georges de Beauce and, if so, is it the intention of the government to carry on such inquiry?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his question and this is the answer. Inquiry into the necessity of a new federal building at St. Georges de Beauce was initiated during 1956-57. The report indicated that increased space for the Post Office Department was justified and that a new building could accommodate the unemployment insurance commission, at present in leased premises.

Difficulty was experienced in deciding upon a new site and it is only recently the conclusion was reached that the most suitable site was property adjacent to the present building. Plans for the new building are in the early stage of preparation and work will continue on them. Construction will commence when the necessary funds are voted by parliament.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

BRIDGES

NUNS' ISLAND—LOCATION AS TO MUNICIPALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yves Leduc (Verdun): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister be good enough to tell the house through which municipality the new bridge will pass before crossing the St. Lawrence river via Nuns' island to connect with Laprairie?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes. The new bridge will first pass through the municipality of Verdun.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SOUND SYSTEM—DIRECTIONS TO NEW MEMBERS AS TO USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I have the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of directing a question to you, strictly non-political? I believe there are over 90 members in the house who do not realize that the loudspeaker system is arranged in such a manner that if you are on the three back benches on either side, unless you direct your voice in a certain way and do not turn around, as some do, and talk to the curtains, you cannot be heard. May I ask if it is not possible for you, within the next few days, to arrange something similar to what occurred in 1953, that is at the opening hour those who are interested could have an explanation of the use of the loudspeaker system. Personally I am interested in hearing what everyone has to say, and on occasion even with our loudspeakers I have not been able to hear. I believe my voice can be heard, but I want to hear what others say.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member and I must say I am sorry that some members are having difficulty in hearing the very interesting things that have been said this afternoon. I shall take that under consideration and see if any improvement can be made in that respect.

Mr. Winch: I am not questioning the system, I am merely stating you have to understand how to use the system.

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO THE DATE OF BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet made a decision as to the date of the by-election to be held in the Yukon constituency?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sinclair: The sooner the better.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can the Minister of Finance inform the house whether or not it is the intention of the government to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act so as to increase the availability of loans and extend the supervision of loans so as to give counsel and advice to farmers procuring such loans?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend sent notice of this question to my office, but it was late in arriving and I received it only ten minutes ago in the house. I may say to my friend that the question he asks obviously touches on a matter of government policy and no statement can be made at this time in regard to that subject.

May I ask him to bear this in mind in relation to this question and similar questions. There is a limit to the amount of business parliament can cram into one short fall session. There is a limit to what the government can propose to parliament. Under the circumstances, we are doing our best to bring forward, as fast as the transaction of business in the house will permit, all the legislation possible in the time available for this session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) for an address to Her Majesty the Queen in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Shortly before the adjournment last night, I had been advocating an extension of trade with the sterling area, the acceptance of inconvertible currency and the spending of that sterling to buy goods in the sterling area that we are presently buying from the United States. In that way we would enable the sterling area to achieve a greater degree of balance with Canada, and would enable Canada to achieve a greater degree of balance with the United States, or at least to reduce our imbalance of trade with that country.

My time is limited, but I wish to say a few words regarding the surplus disposal program of the United States. The former government was very critical of that program, and I gather the present government is not very much more favourably disposed towards it. I feel the United States is to be highly commended upon that program because under it the United States today is making surplus food available to the hungry people of nations that are not able to obtain food through the normal channels of trade. At the same time the United States is paying the farmers a fair price for that food.

Let me state very briefly the history of this surplus. It will be recalled that in the latter years of the war the food and agricultural organization warned the nations of the world that two-thirds of the population of the world was hungry. They further warned that unless the nations that had the ability to expand the production of their food did everything in their power to do so there may be worldwide starvation. The United States went all out to expand production of food. They paid very substantial support prices to their farmers, and as a consequence the United States did build up a substantial reserve of food in the form of farm products.

Unfortunately the food and agricultural organization did not provide the international machinery to distribute this surplus to the nations that needed it. It is true that they did bring forth a proposal for a world food bank but that was rejected by member nations. Then, I think it was in 1950, they proposed an international commodity clearing house. Personally, I felt that was an excellent idea, but again the member nations rejected it. So, we found we had a situation where the surpluses of each country were left on their own doorsteps.

It was then that the United States expanded the program by which they would be able to distribute surplus food to the nations that needed it. They proclaimed, in effect, that any nation that was not able to obtain the food they needed through the normal channels of trade would be able to obtain their food from the United States, if the United States had it in surplus quantity, by the acceptance of their currency, by barter agreement or, in a case of dire distress, by outright gift. Let me point out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) that the United States did not wait for some nation to ask them to accept their currency. They saw the problem and they believed the solution to that problem was to accept foreign currency. As a result of that the United States has sold hundreds of millions of dollars worth of food for foreign currency. I am not suggesting for one minute that we should go as far as the United States did, but I am suggesting we could go as far as I have suggested. We could accept inconvertible sterling for the goods we export to the sterling area, and then spend that inconvertible sterling in the sterling area to buy the goods which we are at present buying from the United States.

In that way we might accomplish the proclaimed purpose of the Prime Minister. I can recall that some years ago, the Prime Minister supported a motion to accept sterling. I am therefore hopeful that he will regard that proposal in a sympathetic way. I believe the proposal I put forward is the logical way in which to achieve the Prime Minister's objective of diverting 15 per cent of our imports from the United States to the sterling area.

I listened to the long statement of the Minister of Finance this afternoon. After we have read that statement we shall have an opportunity to sift the wheat from the chaff, if we can find any. But I must say that on the face of it that statement does not seem to provide much hope for any considerable increase in trade. I say that for the reason that it does not provide for any substantial change in policy.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, my first and pleasant duty is to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne. Incidentally, may I say that I am sorry if there was any misunderstanding as between me and the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) as to the order of our speaking.

Mr. Pearson: No.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have a special personal pleasure in congratulating the mover because for some years I was the deskmate in this house of his father whom I remember being referred to by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) who said so truly that we all loved him. I had the good fortune to be his seatmate and it is a pleasure to be in this house and to see the worthly son of a worthy father taking his place in the house. As to the seconder, I congratulate him as I congratulate every citizen of this country who is bilingual. It is my greatest regret that I am not bilingual. I especially congratulate the hon. member who seconded the motion on his excellent English.

It is perhaps natural, Mr. Speaker, for one who sat on the opposite side of the house for 12 years in the opposition to make some comments on the change which has taken place. As I look across the floor sometimes it is hard for me to believe that I am looking at the same men. A change seems to have come. There is a strange look of selfconscious modesty, shall I say.

Mr. Pearson: It works both ways.

Mr. Macdonnell: If people can be modest in success, that is good. As I say, there is a certain selfconscious modesty to which we were not accustomed. We were accustomed to looking at men who seemed to have a good deal of, shall I say, self-esteem. I do not wish to put it more strongly than that. Indeed, I remember suggesting to them once that they might follow the prayer of the highland minister who said to his flock: "Oh Lord, if it be possible, make us worthy in some measure of the high esteem in which we hold ourselves". I hope that the then ministers took cognizance of what I said.

But the other thing that struck us sitting opposite them in those days was that the high esteem brought with it also a feeling of indispensability. It is surprising that even with the most modest men, when they have power for more than a certain amount of time I think a feeling of indispensability creeps over them. I had an illustration of it once some years ago when we in the opposition had won several by-elections. I had a very pleasant letter from a member of the government who congratulated me on the victory but who said, "Of course it could not happen in a general election, could it?"

I think that was the attitude that crept over members of the government. They felt that, among other things, we were not competent, that we could not form a government. I think the Canadian people felt differently and have demonstrated differently. But when the election came I think it was hardly dreamt of in their philosophy that anyone could take their place. I might describe their feeling I think as the feeling that the change could hardly have happened. I might describe it by the answer of the little boy who had learned his twelve times twelve tables and who when asked thirteen times two said "You can't". I feel that in the same way the members of the government, after being defeated on June 10, really felt "You can't".

After the Prime Minister's speech which was mild and, I felt, almost apologetic, I was reminded of Benjamin Disraeli's description of the treasury bench sitting opposite to him so many years ago. Here are his words describing the Liberal treasury bench sitting opposite:

> Some took refuge in melancholy, and their eminent chief alternated between a menace and a sigh. As I sat opposite the treasury bench, the ministers reminded me of one of those marine landscapes not very unusual on the coasts of South America. You behold a range of exhausted volcanoes. Not a flame flickers on a single pallid crest. But the situation is still dangerous. There are occasional earthquakes and ever and anon the dark rumbling of the sea.

It is true that since then there have not been what I would call earthquakes, I would rather call them small tremors like the small outbursts from the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) and the milder one from the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler). But in general the attitude of the opposition has been conciliatory.

As for the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), the former minister of health and welfare, it is interesting to see him in the opposition. We remember his technique in the government. We remember how, in answering questions, he would give more or less of an answer; he would use words having some vague relation to the question and then the desk would open and a prepared speech would be produced in which we had eloquent testimony to the excellence of the government. The question was just a peg on which to hang it. It was a well developed technique. Then the minister, as I said, would soar away, using the question as a springboard.

But I think the greatest surprise was the former minister of agriculture. Instead of a lion we had a lamb or, perhaps better, a dove of peace bearing olive branches. The only thing that seemed to be the same was the glass of water. The minister is fortunate because no one will doubt that it was a glass of water. No one will suspect that he did what Disraeli is reported to have done in one of his several-hour speeches. He was drinking frequently of a white liquid and it is said that the liquid was not water at all but gin and that he consumed two bottles of it during his speech. I admit that the speech was several hours long. No one will suspect the former minister of agriculture of doing that.

I was touched by the height of patriotic devotion he showed in explaining the attitude of the party. He claimed that it was in effect "high and lifted up", that it was going to concern itself only with the welfare of the country and not with any party advantage. He admonished the other parties in the house that they should do the same thing.

If the minister will allow me to do so, I should like to put in a little plug for him by relating a remark which I understand he made when he was first in this house. I have quoted it previously and I hope he will not mind my quoting it here. The former minister, as all hon. members will observe, has not run to many unnecessary inches as have some other people in this house. Indeed, when the ex-minister stands up, not very much happens.

As I understand, the first time he stood up in this house a big fellow on the other side, as long as I am, twice as wide and three times as thick, said when the minister was already on his feet, "Stand up". There was a little titter at this but the then minister replied "In the part of the country where I come from, a man is reckoned according to what he has above the shoulders".

The former minister of transport, now the hon. member for Laurier, (Mr. Chevrier), several years ago left the Ottawa for the St. Lawrence but has now returned to the Ottawa. Whether he feels he chose the best moment to return I am not quite clear. I propose to say something about his speech of the other day later on.

In general I would wish to be encouraging to the opposition. I would like to say to them that we have always felt, and I think they have felt also, that the opposition was a necessary feature of government. They wanted the country to believe in democratic party government and you could not have democratic party government without an opposition. Therefore the government felt there must be an opposition, but of course it must not expect to win. Once a member of the government was reported to have made the statement that he did not know what the opposition was for. However, I think most of them knew what it was for and they felt that as long as it kept its place it was very useful. Now I would like to say to the opposition they will learn the duties of the opposition in time. After all they are men of intelligence and they are going to have plenty of time to learn their new duties.

I would say a word about the member for Algoma East. He has been pretty mild on the whole. I am just wondering whether he is going to sit it out. Really "he ain't saying nothing", and it may be that he has in fact decided to sit it out and wait to see what happens in January.

Now I would like to return to the Prime Minister's speech. I realize I have done the same thing as my leader has done. I correct myself and say I would like to return to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Pearson: You have done it twice.

Mr. Macdonnell: Oh, have I done it twice? Well then I am equal to my Prime Minister and I hope I will not do it a third time.

It did not seem to me that the Leader of the Opposition put very much heart into it. Coming back to the words of Disraeli that it was between a menace and a sigh, I would not say there was much menace in it, I would say it was nearer to a sigh. He stood there with the remnants of his cabinet around him, hardly crediting the situation. I do not speak of the ones who are absent. There are certain absent faces, absent with the full consent of the Canadian people and these are casualties which, as I say, we remember very well and we should let them rest in peace.

Now the speech of the Leader of the Opposition seemed to me to be in defence, naturally, of the record of his cabinet and to contain a mild assertion that in any event whatever the last government had not done could not be done. Now no one denies the difficulties which have been left to us, but from both Britain and the United States we get a clear indication about the old government. I quote the words of the Cleveland Plain Dealer commenting on the Prime Minister's Dartmouth speech when he was discussing the Canadian-American problems:

> Since the war the Liberal government preceding the Diefenbaker government administration was willing enough to let matters ride.

Similarly from the Financial Times of London on July 8 comes the comment that for a long time attempts to improve economic co-operation in the commonwealth had been handicapped by Canadian indifference. How convincing this is to me, having sat here for 12 years. How often in this house did the present Prime Minister and the former leader of the opposition, Mr. Drew, seek to stir the government to action. It seemed to me like pushing a dead weight; they did not seem really interested. At best there was acquiescence in the idea of a conference. They were content to ride the crest of the American boom. One could never think of them as crusaders; they were more like camp followers. Now what do we get from the opposition? Well, we get words of discouragement. Things are not good, they say, but nothing can be done. That was the situation really, as outlined by the Prime Minister and by the member for Coast-Capilano—

Mr. Pearson: That is the third time.

Mr. Macdonnell: Oh, that is terrible and I apologize. It is hard to get over the results of 12 years and I still find it awfully difficult to turn to the left in order to bow to the Speaker.

Mr. Sinclair: You are a real Tory, you do not change.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Macdonnell: I think I might be forgiven for my mistake.

No one denies the difficulties left us. The members of the late government should know that more than anyone else because we are their legatees of the problems of unsold wheat, a huge balance of imports from the the United States, the fear of rising United States tariffs to which the member for Coast-Capilano referred very properly the other day, unemployment and so on. We know we are the legatees from the opposition of these difficulties and we must recognize that legacy, but we will also try to remember what Churchill said on D-day "Don't talk to me of the difficulties, the difficulties will argue for themselves."

I believe and I am happy to believe that the new government has introduced a new spirit. I believe that the Prime Minister has taken, virtually from the dust-bin, ideas in which the previous government were not interested, and he has made people think and talk about them in a way that they have not done for years.

I think we can say that instead of gloom and hesitation, we now have action and hope. The trade difficulties with Britain and the United States are fully recognized but they have been grappled with. This has been recognized both at home and abroad. The Financial Times of London, in speaking of the commonwealth conference in London, referred to it as unusually successful and they gave credit to the present Prime Minister. I have already mentioned the statement that co-operation in the past was handicapped by Canadian indifference. Now on July 8 the Financial Times of London, referring to the commonwealth economic conference as a desirable achievement, said that the Prime Minister has "shaken up the settled and defeatist thinking which had already abandoned hope of the expansion of commonwealth trade". Those are their words and I believe them to be true, in fact they so exactly express my own feelings that I wish I had written them myself.

This I think describes well what has been done. If the spirit is right impossible things can be accomplished. I remember the music hall catch phrase, "where there is a will there are three ways". Well, I think there has not been a will and while difficulties remain and we do not have any magic wand with which to brush them off, nevertheless there is a new spirit.

The Montreal Gazette stressed the importance of the conference and mentions very properly the anxiety that Britain might move more and more into the European trade orbit. This is an appealing reason for vigorous action and for this reason, to quote again the Gazette, "the Prime Minister's proposal comes just at the moment when the needs and opportunities of commonwealth trade ought to be put forward."

Let us now turn to the United States. There are problems there which we all know exist and there again the Prime Minister has spoken and his remarks on the American situation and the general attitude he has expressed have been seriously and favourably received by the American press. The Washington Post refers to the Prime Minister's frank yet friendly remarks and goes on to say that "the traditional friendship of the two countries can only be preserved and fostered by such straightforward exchange of views." This speech of the Prime Minister incidentally was carried over the C.B.S. national network and the New York Times refers to it as "a sobering indictment coming from one who is clearly a champion of Canadian-United States unity." Further on, referring to the Prime Minister's "spirit of candor" and willingness to seek mutually satisfactory solutions, it said these provide a setting for ironing out the present irritants.

We are not content with words; action is not lacking. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) has been to Europe and is organizing an imposing delegation of well-known businessmen to go there again soon. I think it is fair to say that what vigour, courage and imagination can accomplish has been and will be done.

It is true that time has been lost. The last government was content to ride the crest of the wave and even now there is evidence that the former government does not know the score. The former minister of finance in a speech the other day complained that the new government was upsetting "normal and healthy trade lanes". I wonder if he has heard of the imbalance of trade? I wonder if he has heard of the danger of higher tariffs and all the other difficulties which confront us? I wonder if, in the light of that, he is complaining that there is a vigorous and sincere attempt being made to marshal the countries in the commonwealth to deal with them, an effort which has been set on foot by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and in which he is so ably seconded by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to digress a moment in order to speak about one thing which was said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) in his quality as a socialist. I am never very clear whether the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is a real socialist, but certainly this sounded like a socialist utterance. He referred to price controls during the last war and spoke of the kind of public planning that was used then and seemed willing to return to it. I wonder how far the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is ready to go. Does he really want the wartime controls back? Does he really want, for example, wage controls? Does he want to go back to the hordes of officials which existed then?

I am going to read to the house for a few moments a few sentences describing what controls were like before they were abolished. Here is a brief picture of controls as they existed at the end of the war: First, we have the chairman, the deputy chairman and members of the board. Then we have what are called the head office divisions, of which there are twelve, each with a supervisor or secretary or controller, as the case may be. Then we come to what are called the associated companies, of which there are several. Then we go on to what are called co-ordinations. These include capital equipment, foods, pulp and paper, textiles and clothing, and emergency shelter. Then we go on to a directory of administrations, and here we really plunge into big things, because on a short count I find that the directory of administrations includes about 150. I should like to direct your attention to just a few of them. There is one for books and writing paper; for cork and cork products; for fertilizers and pesticides; clothing and woollens; honey. There is jewellery, which is divided into seven categories. There is meat and meat products; there is fruit. There is one category which I find very interesting: cleaning, decorating, hairdressing, painting, renovating, undertaking, warehousing and storage.

Is this really what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar wants? May I remind him that the British labour party has been steering away from controls for some years. Several years ago at their annual meeting there was a striking vote against nationalization. At their recent meeting their policy with regard to nationalization was watered down to the following further extent:

> "Labour will reserve the right to extend public ownership in any industry or part of industry which, after thorough investigation, is found to be seriously failing the nation. This will not necessarily mean taking over the entire industry; it may be that the solution will lie in the acquisition for the community of one or a number of firms."

In other words, this is a striking illustration of the way in which United Kingdom labour policy is turning away from nationalization. And this is indicated particularly by its new policy to allow the proposed national pension fund to invest in equities provided these acquisitions are to be guided solely by investment considerations and will not be aimed at securing control.

May I tell the hon. member at once that we are not against planning. No sensible man is against planning. But who is to do the planning? Is it to be done by a few bureaucrats, or is to be done by hundreds of thousands of individuals each working to the limit of his power? Where government enters is in the field of regulation. There must be regulation—no one denies that—but this idea of control, this blessed word "planning" seems to me to be entirely contrary to our way of life and to our welfare. Planning, after all, means executing. There is no use attempting to plan unless you make people conform to those plans. We have had enough evidence in the past 20 years to enable us to know what planning means, and I never will understand how my socialist friends believe you can have planning and controls and still have freedom. As the negro gentleman said: "Dem two t'ings don't paralyse".

I hope the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar can, perhaps, answer me on another occasion. I am very sorry he is not here now, because we all have a great respect for him, and it surprises me beyond measure to hear him use those words about planning and controls.

Incidentally, with regard to controls as a cure for inflation, the hon. member will find, if he will look up the records, that prices rose during war time. I remember, too, being told by someone who went into a shop that he could not get what he wanted because manufacturers sheered away from making the standard things, the ordinary articles in common use, and tried to manufacture substitutes which were not under control and which would not come under the letter of the law. I have no time to say more than that.

I want to say something now about the hon. member for Laurier. He was in this house a few years ago and he then had the esteem of us all. I will say that I used to observe sometimes that when he got into the constituencies his language did not seem to be entirely the same as the language he used here in the house. But be that as it may, he was a good friend and we liked him. I was very sorry indeed to hear the line he took the other day. It seems to me he was trying to create disunity. It seems to me he was trying to set one province against another. He went back half a century in this quest and, what was even more regrettable, he gave a lead to others who seemed to follow on the same lines. I suggest he might have gone a little further back still and if he had done so he might have found that when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was first prime minister and went to Europe he had these words to say, speaking in Paris, about his country. Speaking of the motto of the French republic: "liberty, fraternity and equality" he said:

> All that there is of worth, of greatness, of generosity in that device, we have today in Canada; that is our conquest. We have liberty, absolute, complete, . . . liberty for our religion, with its worship, its ceremonies, its prayers, its customs; liberty for our language, which is the official language as English is. Equality is ours; fraternity is ours. There is with us no domination of one race over another . . .

I suggest to the hon. member for Laurier that he might have been better employed in bringing this to our attention rather than in seeking, seeking, seeking for past events on which to base suggestions of discord.

I wish to say this. I believe that the present Leader of the Opposition—I got it right that time—so far as he was personally concerned was completely in the Laurier tradition and I hope the hon. member for Laurier may perhaps from here on follow the Laurier tradition.

Mr. Pickersgill: He always has.

Mr. Macdonnell: The word "always" covers a lot of territory.

Mr. Pickersgill: He always has.

Mr. Macdonnell: I was at pains to say that I thought he sometimes did and I hope he always will in the future.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there is any doubt.

Mr. Macdonnell: Our Prime Minister has made it perfectly clear that he is in the tradition which was followed by Laurier and which was established by Macdonald in his day when there was complete understanding and sympathy between the provinces. This divisive influence came in later. I will not be too specific about that, but we all know where it came from. I say our present Prime Minister seeks nothing but full, complete understanding between the races and I am quite sure he will do everything to promote it.

(Translation):

I hope and believe that those who served with me in this house will agree that I have always sincerely desired racial understanding and good will. The day before yesterday, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) eloquently expressed my views. Surely, racial feeling between the two original races should be put away once and for all. We of the two old races have shared joys and sorrows in peace and war, and I believe that our party, now that it is in power, will give such a lead that we may look confidently to closer and closer racial sympathy and understanding.

What I have been trying to say in my poor French is this: I hope and believe those who have served with me in this house will agree that I have sincerely desired racial understanding and good will. The day before yesterday the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) eloquently expressed my views. Surely racial feeling between the two original races should be put away once and for all. We of the two old races have shared joys and sorrows in peace and war and I believe that our party, now that it is in power, will give such a lead that we may look confidently to closer and closer racial sympathy and understanding.

It is four months since the election. What is the record? Speaking with, I believe, some detachment, because I have not the burden of a department, I can say that never in my experience have men worked harder. Paraphrasing Sir Winston Churchill, I might say never was more work done by so few in so short a time. They have worked desperately hard.

Now as to quality. If we judge by one of the great acid tests, the answering of questions in this house,—and bear in mind that they had only a few months to master situations which some of the questioners had been familiar with for years—my feeling, with whatever detachment I am capable of, is that we in this party have everything to be proud of and nothing to be ashamed of in what they have done. I believe the people of Canada will so regard us. Legislation has come forward and will come forward rapidly, giving complete evidence of the implementing of promises which were made. The Prime Minister has made a distinct impression on the economic thinking of the United States and of the commonwealth and has paved the way, not for magic solution, but for patient and enduring struggle with the problems which exist between us and the United States on the one side and between us and the commonwealth on the other. I believe that when the people of Canada survey what has been done if we are able to carry on as we have done, as I believe we surely shall, when the time comes for another election there will be no doubt as to the result and we shall come back with a complete and over-all majority.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on the address my first words must be to thank Her Majesty with great respect for opening this parliament in person and for reading in person the address which we are now debating. The participation of Her Majesty in these historic ceremonies gave them a deeper meaning, I think, to all of us and emphasized the continuity of our historical development and the depth of our roots. For her visit we are all, I think, better Canadians and better members of the commonwealth of nations.

Then, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will allow me to congratulate you on your elevation to this office of dignity and importance. If I may be pardoned a personal remark perhaps I have known you for as long a time as any member in this house. Our friendship has been warm and close; for, among other things, we played hockey together at college. While we have been opponents in recent years in our political activities we have never allowed, and never will allow, that to interfere with our friendship.

May I also, and in no mere perfunctory manner, congratulate the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The seconder will not, I think, take it amiss if I say to the mover a special word, not only because it was his maiden speech, as it was the maiden speech of the seconder, but because, as so many hon. members have remarked, of the position which his father held in this house for such a long time. His memory will always be regarded by those of us who were fortunate enough to know him with respect and affection.

This, Mr. Speaker, of course, is the first speech I have made on this side of the house, and I confess, with hon. members opposite, particularly perhaps the hon. member who just sat down who referred three times to one of us over here as the prime minister, it is not easy to get accustomed to this change of venue. The way I show my uncertainty, if I may use that word, is that even now when I come into the house I invariably turn left and bow, Mr. Speaker, but I hope you will not consider that a reflection on yourself but rather an indication of my continuing esteem and affection for my leader who sits to my left. He was my minister when I was a deputy. He was my prime minister when I was a minister and he will always be my chief whatever may happen in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to follow the interesting and amiable political musings of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. He perhaps did not give us as much information about the policies of the government of which he is a member as we might have hoped for. He spent a good deal of his time, and this is another indication that he has forgotten where he is sitting, in criticizing those of us over here who are now the opposition. Nevertheless we should be thankful because he is, I think, the only minister who has taken part in this debate up to the present time.

When he mentions the self-esteem, as he put it, which gathered around us when we sat on that side—I am not quarrelling with him for his interpretation of our attitudes, he might remember his own words; I hope they are not going to portray the attitude of the present government to the opposition—when he indicated to us that the role of the opposition might be, in the words of Sir Winston Churchill quoted by him, "Don't tell me of the difficulties". I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that we will do just that.

If I may I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the members of the government and, indeed, the members of the government party for the measure of success which they achieved at the last general election and also perhaps for the easy and ostensibly comfortable way that they are adapting themselves to their new positions. They are, however—I hope they will pardon me for saying this—beginning to show certain of the attitudes which when they imputed them so often to us, and unfairly, I think, they found very disagreeable.

I noticed with some interest that the Prime Minister in a speech outside the house insisted that he and his government were not going to be pushed around by the opposition and I detected just a faint note of expectancy that perhaps that attempt would be made with results that he might be able to exploit to his political advantage and which might serve for the time being at least as a substitute for the heavy responsibility of trying to fulfil his electoral promises.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the hon. gentleman who has just sat down mentioned the circumstances of their accession to power. You might have thought from, if I may call it that, the characteristic exuberance of the language of the Prime Minister that they had inherited declining revenues, a shrinking national income, a deteriorating economy, an arrested national development and foreign markets gone or going. Of course, as all of us know, no matter on what side of the house we sit that would be a caricature of the real situation because the fact is that the government inherited a situation in this country where over years of Liberal administration Canada had experienced, in spite of the many gloomy opposition forecasts that the contrary would happen; I can remember so many of them from the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell)—a period of unprecedented economic progress, of national development and international achievement unparallelled in the history of the country.

[Mr. Pearson.]

And when, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party took over, the position of this country—we all know this to be true—financially, economically and internationally was the envy of the world. What happens from now on will inevitably be compared with that position, and I am sure the opposition will not complain about that. I admit, of course, as we all admit—the hon. member who just sat down referred to it—that they inherited problems, many serious problems; problems that faced us in June and face us today, and which we have always admitted. But they were problems of development, not of depression; they were problems of advance, not of retreat.

I confess that a good many of these problems seem to me to have been discussed in the recent past by some members of the government in a way which indicated that they were rather not expecting to have the responsibility of solving them. They did, however, during those days and weeks and months make specific, categorical and confident statements that they would solve them, not at some vague and future date but quickly and decisively because the Prime Minister is a quick and decisive gentleman. It is in the light of these statements and the implementation of the promises that they contain that this government will be judged.

I had thought, Mr. Speaker, of talking about external affairs today because it is the subject about which I am normally expected to talk, but I am not going to do so for two reasons. One is that the Prime Minister has promised, and I hope the promise will be implemented without delay, a debate on the international situation. In view of the character, the stress and strain and dangers of that situation the sooner we can have that discussion the better it will be for parliament and perhaps even for the country. The other reason why I am not going to refer to external affairs on this occasion is the statement that was introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and which has certainly intensified my own interest and my own desire to say something about the matters which he dealt with in the house this afternoon on motions.

The first of the matters he dealt with and the first which I will try to deal with is the promise to divert 15 per cent of our imports from the United States to the United Kingdom. We know, I think, although not much reference was made to it this afternoon, of the origin of what I consider to be an extraordinary, using "extraordinary" in the very literal sense of the word, initiative in economic diplomacy. This proposal originated in a statement by the Prime Minister to the press after a trans-Atlantic air flight from London where he had been attending the commonwealth prime ministers' meeting. At that time he is reported as having said that he would like to see about a 15 per cent diversion and he did not think that this would be detrimental to Canada-United States business generally.

There was some speculation—indeed, I took part in the speculation myself—that this 15 per cent figure had been chosen without much consideration of what it really meant and that it might soon be forgotten. Not at all. In Ottawa on July 23, not long afterwards, the Prime Minister reaffirmed this figure and that 15 per cent of Canada's purchases in the United States of America could be diverted to the United Kingdom without damaging this country's commercial relations with our neighbour. I think it is fair to say that the impression was created, whether or not it was meant to be created—it certainly was created in my mind—that just as his predecessor, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, had promised shortly after he was elected to blast his way into the markets of the world, so the present Prime Minister thought it would be possible to blast 15 per cent of our imports from the United States to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is just nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: I will just go on, Mr. Speaker. As I was hoping to explain, it would take quite an atomic blast. Let us just see what is involved. I think this is one of the most careless assertions ever made by any head of a Canadian government. In saying that I do not for one minute suggest that if it could be done by the right method, and without doing this country any harm in other ways, it would not be a good thing to do. However, let us just see whether or not it could be done in that way. This 15 per cent might seem to be a small amount, but it means the diversion of $625 million worth of trade from one country to another. This would not be done, of course, over the next 20, 40 or 50 years; that is not the impression that was given. It would be done by switching from one tap to another, in the doing of which we would help the United Kingdom, whom we are all anxious to help and we help ourselves in doing so. Also in doing it we would escape or help to escape United States domination. This is a phrase we heard quite often from members of the present government before June 10, but not nearly so much since.

Let us get back to a consideration of what this actually means. It means an increase in United Kingdom exports to Canada of 130 per cent over the 1956 figure. In 1956, the United Kingdom took 8.5 per cent of our exports, and a 15 per cent increase in that figure would bring it up to 19.5 per cent. The only time since 1921 that that figure was ever reached was during the depression of 1932 to 1936. We know the reason for the high United Kingdom percentage then. I admit, of course, that there was some diversion by reason of the Ottawa conference arrangements, but even more that change was due to the fact that the depression cut down United States imports far more than those of the United Kingdom because of the nature of the United Kingdom imports. However, more important than that is the fact that while at that time the United Kingdom percentage was higher, it was only a bigger slice of a much smaller pie.

Surely, we do not want to take any steps which might bring about an experience of that kind of diversion in 1957. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that since those days the United States share of our market has grown, and we know why. There has been a change in consumer demand in Canada away from the United Kingdom and towards the United States type of goods; the ability of the United States salesmanship to take advantage of this; the United States distribution and transportation arrangements give them an advantage over the United Kingdom. Then there are the price and supply advantages generally.

Then, and this is very important; it is due in part at least, and in no small part, to a great increase in United States investment in Canada, which was bound to increase the United States imports because capital export must mean an export of goods. This export from the United States, without which our development of recent years could not have proceeded in the way it did proceed, came at a time when the United Kingdom, because of the sacrifices which she had made in world war II and of which we are all the beneficiaries, was not in a position to make similar investments. The United Kingdom was not in a position to take advantage to the fullest extent of the Canadian market. The question of sterling balances in London made it of the utmost importance that they seek markets for their goods in areas where competition would not be so keen. All this I think, Mr. Speaker, puts this proposed change in our pattern of trade in the proper perspective.

Now, what about this 15 per cent diversion as a practical proposition? The statistics and nature of our trade show that in perhaps 60 per cent of our imports from the United States little, if any, diversion is possible. In order to reach 15 per cent of the total, or that figure of $625 million, we would have to divert one-third of the other imports where there is at least a possibility of such diversion. This means that the United Kingdom's share of the Canadian market in these categories of goods would have to be more than trebled. I refer to such things as textiles, chemicals, iron and steel products, transportation and industrial equipment. I ask the question, could that possibly be done without seriously affecting Canadian industry?

How, whatever the result, could it be attempted? There are various methods. First, of course, it might be done by persuasion, by the use of the slogan "Buy British" and all that kind of thing. We have been trying that in this country officially and non-officially for a good many years. We have in being at the present time a very efficient and very industrious dollar-sterling export board under the leadership of Mr. Duncan which has done as much as any board could do towards diverting trade through this means. We have sent trade missions and they have sent trade missions. There is nothing new in that. I do not think it will be done by voluntary action, though anything that can be done would be welcome by all of us.

What about governmental action? What form could that take? First, perhaps it could take the form of tariff reductions, but there are a few facts on this score that bear on such a proposal. The first one is that 60 per cent of United Kingdom imports into this country are free of duty now. Of the 40 per cent remaining, a large proportion of them come in under very low duties. In 1949 when the devaluation of the British pound gave the British exporter an additional 20 per cent advantage over his competitor from the United States by a reduction in tariffs, which was brought about by that devaluation, the United Kingdom was not aided very much in increasing exports to Canada or displacing United States goods. What about renegotiated tariff schedules upwards under GATT, without discrimination, and keeping British preferences? Mr. Speaker, this procedure might keep out a few United States goods, and it might bring in a few more British goods. However, it might also bring in a few more goods from countries such as Japan and Germany as well as the United Kingdom. It might also, indeed I think it would, reduce our trade generally and, going back to the old days, to the thirties, only give the United Kingdom a higher proportion of a smaller market. It would be a return to the restrictive tariff principles of the early thirties with the result which I am sure we do not wish to repeat in 1957. It would increase prices and costs of production in Canada and make it more difficult for our exporters to compete in world markets. In short, it would have a restrictive effect on trade, something for which this party has never stood and will not stand.

There then remains direct discrimination against United States exports to Canada. This brings up at once the question of GATT, to which my friends opposite have once again pledged their support in the communique from Washington. What about our efforts to broaden the basis of trade, to increase our trade with the United Kingdom in an expanding and not a restrictive international market? More important even than that, what about United States retaliation? There is a very real danger, as my hon. friends probably know, of that happening. When we were in office we tried hard, we did our best, to keep the United States government from adding to its duties and its controls against our products. We were not able to accomplish all the things we had hoped, but we did have very considerable success in that regard.

But if the Canadian government now threatens, or even more if they were actually successful in bringing about a diversion by discriminatory governmental action,—and what other way is there to do it short of free trade?—how long will this government be able to persuade—and I quote just one example which is very much in our mind now—Washington not to raise the present duty on fish or not to put a duty on fish? The pressures in that direction are already very great, as the report, from the tariff commission over there indicates. Those pressures would probably be intolerable for any United States administration if there was any threatening of discriminatory action from this side of the border. I think the government should be warned on this matter.

So we come to the final method by which it might be done, namely the establishment of a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada. The United Kingdom government took seriously the Prime Minister's offer of the 15 per cent diversion, although I confess that some unkind people put it that they decided to call the Prime Minister's bluff. The result—an indication that they took it seriously—was the free trade proposal made by the United Kingdom government through the Chancellor of the Exchequer as the only practicable way of implementing the Canadian proposal. We know that in September of this year the minister of agriculture of the United Kingdom had not put forward, as we learned this afternoon, any formal proposal to this end but had indicated in Ottawa that this idea was very much in their mind.

The public offer, however, was first made—and I admit it was an unusual way in which to make it—at a press conference held in connection with the Mont Tremblant conference of finance ministers. Some of the details surrounding it, however, were, I was going to say, made clear—perhaps that is not exactly the right expression—were given to us this afternoon. What was the Canadian government's reaction to this offer by the United Kingdom government through the Chancellor of the Exchequer at Mont Tremblant? It was not what we had a right to expect it would be. It was one of surprise and consternation. Why the surprise, apart from the fact that there may have been earlier informal consideration of this matter. This was the only possible way in which the offer could be implemented. As the Manchester Guardian put it on September 20:

> The total of 15 per cent looks impracticable unless Mr. Diefenbaker is prepared to risk both unpopularity and upsetting the rhythm of parts of industry in Canada.

So the United Kingdom proposal was made and made seriously. Then silence fell on the Canadian Prime Minister and his colleagues where silence, though still golden, has lately not been customary. It was no doubt hoped that the whole unhappy business could be swept under the rug. There was not a word from the Prime Minister. There was not a word from the Minister of Finance except that it was a difficult proposition. There were a great many words from the Minister of Finance this afternoon but not many that threw much light on the government's attitude towards this proposal.

Then we remember—those of us who watched television—the appearance of the Minister of Finance when he was explaining this Mont Tremblant conference. I gathered the impression—and I hope that I am not being unfair to him—that on this occasion and in connection with this particular proposition he had lost some of his steely confidence. Why no welcome of this proposal, at least in principle, because it was the only way by which the 15 per cent could be diverted without direct discriminatory action against the United States. Why no appraisal of it for parliament or the people of Canada, even if that appraisal had to be an agonizing one.

Some journalists at Mont Tremblant reported that there was a Canadian government reaction and that it was one of "alarm and hostility". Is that right? Is there any information concerning it in the communique issued after the United Kingdom-Canadian talks in Ottawa? There is none. It was set aside as something of a long-term nature only. That was supposed to satisfy us in parliament and to satisfy the people in the country in connection with a proposal which has not been exceeded in importance in economic matters for many years in this country.

Instead of any indication of the government's decision on that proposal, we were given in the communique three decisions to increase British exports to this country. In so far as those proposals can be worked out they are to be welcomed. But what about the 15 per cent, no part of which would be affected by the proposals in the Ottawa communique? As Mr. Blakely of the Gazette said on October 7, and I think perhaps he is right in this: "The hair raising British free trade area proposal has been shelved". But, Mr. Speaker, it has not been shelved without some damage already being done to Anglo-Canadian relations because recriminations have already begun on both sides and misunderstandings have been created as to the nature of this proposal and as to whether it is, in fact, to be implemented.

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: Let me just try to give some evidence of what I have said,—

Mr. Churchill: Try.

Mr. Pearson: —and which seems to amuse the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill). The Hamilton Spectator, no great supporter of the Liberal party, says this:

> —it was callous of the British government merely to ridicule PM's offer by making proposals that were manifestly absurd.

Then there is the Globe and Mail of Toronto which was friendly enough to this proposal on October 2 when it first commented on it. Then something seems to have happened, because a few days later the same paper became extremely violent about the chancellor of the exchequer to whom it referred in terms which it often has used in respect of Americans whom it has disliked. That editorial—and this again surely does not help Anglo-Canadian relations—talks about > —casual even callous action—

Referring to Mr. Thorneycroft:

> —his flambuoyant outburst . . . calamitous lapse of taste and judgment . . . by one ill-considered action he did serious harm to Anglo-Canadian relationships . . . his diplomacy of a kind we expect from Moscow not London.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why such an attack as this is made on the British government for taking a serious and obvious step in reply to a proposal made by the Canadian Prime Minister. The Economist, a magazine which my friend the hon. member for Greenwood so often quotes in this house, said on October

5 that Mr. Thorneycroft,—referring to the Chancellor of the Exchequer—in putting his proposal forward, > —is saying, in clinical terms, what the statement by all the commonwealth finance ministers said in the usual pious phraseology on Tuesday, at the end of their meeting at Mont Tremblant, when they advocated in aid of the pound sterling the promotion of "freer and expanding trade and payments."

Then also this editorial in The Economist commented as follows:

> What is needed in commonwealth trade is a sense of shock and a clearing away of double-talk. Mr. Thorneycroft has administered the first; now is the time to get on with the second.

Mr. Speaker, I commend that advice to the government. They have had their shock, so let us clear away the doubletalk.

Mr. Hodgson: I think you fellows had a shock too.

Mr. Pearson: Let us hear what their policy is going to be with respect to this matter. We have heard nothing about it yet.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is your policy?

Mr. Pearson: Our policy over here is to get the government which is responsible to tell the people of Canada what their policy is.

An hon. Member: Well it is a lot better than yours ever have been, anyway.

Mr. Pearson: I was going to add a few comments about the Mont Tremblant conference and the upshot of that conference in respect to the commonwealth economic situation, but I see that my time is running short and I will reserve my comments on that subject for another day.

Mr. Hodgson: Why do you not go back and tell us about the Suez affair.

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to talk to my hon. friend either inside or outside the house on that matter at any time that it is proper to do so.

Mr. Hodgson: I hope you will have an opportunity to talk to me outside the house.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend referred to the Suez affair and I commend him to the new Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Smith, who took such a realistic attitude with respect to that matter.

Mr. Hodgson: You probably will not have time to talk to me about that outside of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pearson: Now the Prime Minister spoke with his customary vigour at Charlottetown a few weeks ago. According to the press, and that is all I have to go on, he indicated that as a result of his Dartmouth speech, which we have all read with so much interest, the United States had made a new appraisal of its trade policies and of certain measures which had not been passed at the recent session of congress. Therefore, in the light of that optimistic forecast respecting the influence of the Canadian government in Washington we might have been pardoned for expecting great results from this Washington meeting. Well, did they occur? I think it has never been better put than by Mr. Blakely the columnist in the Montreal Gazette, when he wrote that there had been other pilgrimages to Washington—and I have taken part in them myself—which could be said to have produced nothing, but it is doubtful there have been any which could be said to have produced less than this one. The Gazette, I think although I am not sure it was on the same day, in its editorial columns, in explaining some of the difficulties that have to be faced, described this pilgrimage as a force less than irresistible which met an object not perceptibly movable.

Now with respect to the Washington communique which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance discussed at some length this afternoon, I might say I know something about communiques issued after international conferences and I have had a good deal of experience in reading between their lines. I have indeed compared this one with two other communiques previously issued after such conferences, but in this case we do not have to read between the lines. The secretary of commerce is reported to have said, which statement was explained in this house this afternoon, "We fixed them". I know it was explained by the Minister of Finance that he was speaking in a jocular way and I am sure he did not expect those words to be reproduced in the press. Perhaps that makes them all the more impressive.

The Minister of Finance referred this afternoon to the fine atmosphere of the conference and I am sure the atmosphere was fine. He said, although he did not use these words, that we really laid it on the line and made known the Canadian position exactly and in much stronger terms than previously. However, the United States undersecretary of state in charge of economic affairs, as reported in Washington, is said to have expressed some satisfaction—and perhaps the satisfaction is understandable in view of the feeling he would have had in advance of the arrival of this delegation—and to have said that the general climate on the wheat problem at these talks was better than that at the meeting he attended in Ottawa before the election. I suspect it was because at that earlier meeting the United States government was left in no doubt as to our views and there was no desire on their part at that time to issue a communique in which we would have expressed our views.

The communique speaks for itself—the Americans will do "what they can" to help us. They will do away with these barter transactions of which my hon. friend made so much this afternoon, without emphasizing the fact that this position was taken by them before the election. It was taken, as I understand it, not in the summer as he suggests, but last April. Then the Minister of Finance explained that it was different this time in Washington. To quote from a press statement made by him on leaving that city he said:

> The barter suspension has been confirmed in a Canadian context—

Whatever that may mean.

> —and this places it now on a level of an international agreement beyond domestic pressures.

I would say to my hon. friend that in the light of the experience I have had in negotiating and discussing economic matters with the United States I would never have gone out on that limb. I think he probably will very soon regret his confidence.

There has been domestic pressure brought before on their congress to alter an arrangement made previously by the administration. Well, Mr. Speaker, we will see what will happen. I, like all members of this house, hope that the result will be as forecast and that the Americans will abandon these arrangements and these practices. However the most important one and perhaps the most dangerous one has not even been mentioned in the communique. That is the question of tied-in sales. In short I think we will be making a great mistake if we go overboard with optimism on the results of this conference. This talk took place—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the rather positive speech which we have just heard reminds me of when I first entered Victoria college in 1946. I noticed a mark up on the wall and I inquired as to how it got there—it was a sort of grease stain. I was told that a number of years ago a very radical undergraduate in a moment of protest had hurled a plate of butter at the wall. I inquired as to the name of the undergraduate and what had happened to him and it was reported that he was the secretary of state for external affairs. Now the story is probably apocryphal but it is very interesting for me as a new member to sit here and watch him spread butter in an entirely new way. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to add my mite—spelled "mite"—to the congratulatory credits which have been accorded to you, to your deputy and to the mover (Mr. Smith, Calgary South) and the seconder (Mr. Arsenault) of the motions.

A maiden speech is usually or reportedly a moment of emotion and, at emotional times, I tend to turn to my favourite poet Sarah Binks, the prairie songstress. But not only do we have some Saskatchewan songsters here in my own party, we have a really sonorous and melodious songster on the treasury bench and so I am going to move on without any metered flourishes to the flat directness of northwestern Ontario. I plan to cover the following topics.

Firstly, the significance of the electoral result in the constituency of Port Arthur; secondly the role of the press and television in the political campaign; thirdly the problems of the constituency of Port Arthur; and fourthly, some questions on the principles and ideas of Liberals and Conservatives. That is to say the parties, not the small "l" liberal or the small "c" conservative.

Love and liking have been very noticeable in the drama which has so far unfolded in the House of Commons. Everybody loves democracy, everybody loves the monarchy, everybody loves the French language, everybody loves the old age pensioner, almost everybody loves the speech from the throne, everyone likes the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) and everyone has a great deal of respect for the Speaker.

In this sweet atmosphere I felt that I could do no less than express from a distance my appreciation of an association even in a minor way, with some of the great figures of this house.

For example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)—it is a conviction of mine that members of parliament do to some extent reflect the personality or the character of their constituents. A number of years ago, I earned my living in Toronto by delivering beer. Some routes in the city were much more prized than others. The member who represents Cabbagetown, or whose constituency covers that ward, may be interested to know, for example, that this area was a favourite one—one of the most prized in the city—because of the tips that were given—and one occasionally got something else as a reward for bringing the product around. One section of the city was very unpopular. That was the area of prosperity above St. Clair and centring on Eglinton. There the good women invariably insisted on a back-door delivery, often asked that the truck be parked several doors up the way, and were very careful to give only the exact change.

If the hon. minister reflects such circumspect frugality, he will make an ideal minister of finance. Of course, I will watch him closely, because we all remarked how the occasional Eglinton area housewife liked to scrub out a ketchup bottle and slip it in so as to pose as a lager bottle and reap the three cents.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very interested in watching the development of the party on my extreme left. I am sorry that there is to be no debate on health insurance or anything like that in the immediate future, because I would like to know the attitude of that party toward naturopathic medicine. I am wondering, too, whether they have any views on the McGill fence.

One last bit of personalia, Mr. Speaker, is with regard to the illustrious graduate of Victoria who is soon going to face problems in that direction. I hope the ghostly pipers of the 1948 Liberal convention will not march again, and if they do that they will not march successfully. We in this corner hope no young Lochinvar from the border comes and grabs the Liberal maiden early in 1958.

The two constituencies to the west of Port Arthur and the two constituencies to the east of Port Arthur returned Liberal members on June 10. A careless observer might say that Port Arthur's failure to do so reflected a weakness in the candidate. With all respect to the successful Liberals, such reasoning will not do. There are some reasons which I would offer for the failure of the former minister of trade and commerce to return here. I am not impudent enough to be Mr. Howe's valedictorian. The great corporations and trusts of Canada will do and are doing that chore. I would suggest, however, that our electoral victory in Port Arthur does represent a vindication for the view that the Canadian people want parliament to retain its right of free discussions, and that an abstract issue can be taken seriously by the voters. Further, the campaign in Port Arthur reveals, in my opinion, that when a C.C.F. candidate is in a fairly equal position in presenting his party's policies, a goodly portion of the electorate can appreciate its merits. One accolade one can bestow on Mr. Howe is that he never used his tremendous power to build up a personal machine in his riding. There was no P.F.R.A. in the constituency of Port Arthur.

On this matter of party warfare and party machines I would like to refer one of the members of the treasury branch to a newsletter, No. 177, of the Canadian chamber of commerce which said:

> Not very long ago a prominent provincial politician is reported to have said 'It is no secret that the country represented by the (party in power) member has a better chance of getting government help than a country where (an opposition) member is elected . . . That is only human nature, and there is nothing we can do to change that. This, in effect, tells the voters of that particular area that unless they vote the right way they can expect nothing from the government.

Recently a minister of the new government, on a lightning foray into the lakehead, made the remark that he was unaware of a certain contentious problem until the defeated Conservative candidate directed it to his notice. Gamesmanship such as this is of the spirit that the Canadian chamber of commerce deplores in its newsletter. May we have no more of it, even if in this case, Liberal members were the whipping boys.

On motion of Mr. Fisher the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorow we shall proceed with the resolution to provide for cash advances on grain. In view of the fact that we are not going on with the debate on the speech from the throne, I think the house will meet at 2.30 p.m. rather than at eleven o'clock in the morning. If there should be time left after this resolution has been dealt with the house will proceed to consider the four resolutions having to do with old age pensions, old age assistance, blind persons' pensions and disability pensions, and if we should succeed in completing all this business we will come back to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the announcement which has been made regarding tomorrow's business, this house stands adjourned until 2.30.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INNISFAIL, ALTA.—ARMOURY RENOVATIONS

Question No. 24—Mr. Shaw:

1. What has been the total cost to date of renovations made to the armoury at Innisfail, Alberta?
2. What is the estimated cost of completing such renovations?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Total cost of renovations since 1952—$20,600.

2. It is estimated that an additional sum of $775 will be required to complete these renovations.

C.B.C.—BOOSTER STATION PROGRAMS

Question No. 29—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is it imperative that the C.B.C. radio booster stations now serving small isolated communities do continue to broadcast only the trans-Canada network programs, even though the dominion network programs are readily available to these stations?
2. Has the C.B.C. received any requests from the communities served by such stations to have a switch to the dominion network from the trans-Canada network or to have an intermixing of such programs?
3. Have any of the operators of such stations been threatened with dismissal for making the switch for certain programs on their own initiative?

Answer by: Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises:

1. It is necessary for operating and financial reasons that the C.B.C. radio relay stations in question generally carry trans-Canada network service, except that, in some instances where arrangements can be made without disrupting main network services, certain special programs from the dominion network are fed to the relay stations.

2. No. A few requests have been received from individuals.

3. How many regulations have been issued annually in each of the last three calendar years?

Questions

4. When a regulation is cancelled or superseded what action is taken to give the private stations a convenient record of the matter?

Answer by: Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises:

1. The last complete issue of C.B.C. regulations for broadcasting stations was made in mimeograph form as of December 1, 1955.

2. Since the present issue is still up to date no further issue is contemplated until there is a change in the regulations.

3. 1955—3 changes in regulations; 1956 and 1957—none.

4. All stations are advised by special letter; in addition shortly afterwards they are supplied with a new revised issue of the regulations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 24, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, October 24, 1957

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Robert Taschereau, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 24th October, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to a certain bill.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General
(Administrative)

UNITED NATIONS

TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY OF SIGNING OF CHARTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house may I mention the fact that today is the twelfth anniversary of the signing of the charter of the United Nations. Canadians generally are joining with the other nations of the world in observing the anniversary of an organization which plays such a great role in the world of today. At the entrance to the parliament buildings are displayed the 82 flags of the member nations of the United Nations. The United Nations flag is being flown from the eastern flag pole of the centre block. This day represents an anniversary of an institution that we, as Canadians, believe to be necessary for the preservation and maintenance of peace. To that end Canada, in company with the other member nations, joins in a rededication to its principles.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure all hon. members read with interest the statement that was issued by the Prime Minister earlier today in connection with the twelfth anniversary of the coming into force of the charter of the United Nations. We have all listened with some emotion to the references the Prime Minister has made to that anniversary. I think it is fortunate that in this country the Canadian people generally have regarded the attitude of the Canadian government toward that organization as something that was not the subject of any political partisanship, but that it has the unanimous support of the Canadian people because of the aims and ideals of that great organization.

It is now 12 years since the charter became operative. Not all the hopes of the right hon. gentleman and others who were with me at the time the charter was under discussion at San Francisco have been realized. Nevertheless I think there will be general agreement that it has served a useful purpose, and that it is still one of the main hopes of most of civilized humanity for the maintenance of as peaceful conditions in this troubled world as are possible under the present circumstances.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I am quite sure that there is unanimity, both in the House of Commons and in the country, regarding the recognition of this day and the signing of the charter of the United Nations. Those of us who had the privilege of being present at the San Francisco conference will remember the great hopes we had for the future under the United Nations charter. Those hopes have not all been realized. Nonetheless, it is better to have had a place where men of diverse views, representing nations with many interests, could get together and talk their problems out than to indulge in a shooting war.

In looking to the future, we can all hope the United Nations will fulfil its functions much better in the future than it has in the past. I have no doubt it has already played a great part in preserving the peace of the world and in bringing help to the underdeveloped countries and the less privileged nations of the world. I have no doubt it will continue to do that, and will serve mankind better in the future than it has in the past.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I am sure there is unanimity of hopes and wishes, perhaps even of dreams throughout Canada and particularly throughout this house concerning the United Nations. I am very glad to add my voice to those who have already spoken in this chamber today in connection with this twelfth anniversary of the putting in force of the United Nations charter. It is true that the international organization that was born 12 years ago has not fulfilled all the hopes and dreams we had concerning it. There were weaknesses in the charter to begin with, and those weaknesses have been intensified over the years, in the opinion of many people. Nevertheless it appears to be the only international forum that we have in existence where the nations of the world can meet and talk out their problems rather than resorting to a shooting war.

Recognizing that fact, we all must express the hope that the work of the United Nations will become much more effective in the years ahead.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 13, to amend the Criminal Code (subversive activities).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. LaCroix: The purpose of the first amendment is to make it a criminal offence for any person to participate in subversive activities with a view to establishing in Canada a totalitarian dictatorship contrary to our democratic way of life.

The purpose of the second amendment is to prevent dissemination through the mails of subversive propaganda.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCES, INCOME, COVERAGE, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952, to increase the monthly rates of certain allowances and permissible income; to extend the provisions of the act to additional classes of veterans, widows and orphans; and to increase the salaries of the members of the war veterans allowance board.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPENDANTS, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Pension Act to place dependants of persons who served in world war II in a position comparable to that of dependants of persons who served in world war I in cases of disability or death due to improper conduct; to ensure that pensions may be paid to the dependants of deceased members of the forces resident and domiciled in Newfoundland; to provide for the continuation of disability pensions and widows' pensions to the end of the month in which death occurred except in cases where no additional pension for dependants is payable; to provide for the payment of pension to the daughter of a pensioned widower where the domestic establishment is maintained after his death; to provide for an increase in the clothing allowance on account of amputation or use of appliances; to provide for an increase in the allowances for funeral and burial expenses; to remove the limitation on the amount of pension payable to a dependent parent of a deceased pensioner after discontinuance of pension to other dependants; to authorize payment of widows' pensions at current rates upon reinstatement of discontinued pensions; and to remove the limitation on payment of pensions to or in respect of children born after a specified date, or to wives whose marriage to a member of the forces or a pensioner took place after a specified date; such measure to include, in addition, certain consequential and clarifying amendments.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

REPORTED TRADE MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister now inform the house regarding the proposed visit of our trade commissioner at Hong Kong—if he proceeds to China to look into the possibilities of trade on the mainland, what arrangements are being made for his visit, who will obtain for him the necessary visa and provide advice, introductions, and protection for him when he is in China? Is he to be accompanied by any official of any other department and, if so, what department; and what steps will be taken to secure visas for them also?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In view of the interest of the house in this matter I am having a full report prepared, which I hope to make available at the earliest possible date.

OATS—CANADIAN LIMIT ON EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry I did not give him notice, but I think he will be able to answer it. Yesterday I inquired about Canada's agreement, as recorded at page 861 of Hansard of December 14, 1953, to limit the export of oats to the United States for a relatively short period. Since these short periods sometimes become rather extended, I should like to ask if Canada still limits the export of oats or any other grain to the United States, and whether this arrangement has been ended or replaced by any other agreement or understanding having substantially the same effect.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to look up the reference to which the hon. member has referred me and make a reply tomorrow.

HOUSING

REPORTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. My question arises out of a newspaper item which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen yesterday, and which reads as follows:

> Interest rate has been upped from 4¼ per cent to 4½ per cent on government-insured loans for low-rental housing developments.
> Rate on loans for "primary industry" loans made to companies building company housing has been upped from 5¼ per cent to 5½ per cent.

My question, based on that item, is this. In view of the minister's strictures on the previous government with regard to the raising of interest rates, does he care to comment in this particular connection?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I could not hear the hon. member reading from the news article in question. I will be glad to have a look at it, and if any comment is warranted I will be glad to make it.

CAMP PETAWAWA—ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is he aware of the acute shortage of housing at Camp Petawawa, and if so what steps are being taken to remedy it? Why has the agreement for the construction of houses for troops at Camp Petawawa, made prior to June 10, not been implemented?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): There is a shortage of married quarters and housing facilities as a result of the return of the men who have been stationed in Germany. This shortage is being partly taken care of by the facilities which are granted to the men to find locations within 500 miles of Petawawa. There are 35 days granted to the men to enable them to be thus located.

In addition there is a housing program continuing at Petawawa, and I believe some 150 houses are under construction.

Mr. Forgie: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that this acute housing situation has existed for some considerable time, and that the agreement that was entered into prior to June 10 for the construction of houses on property purchased by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Defence, with the assistance of an entrepreneur at no cost whatever to the department, has not been implemented but has been postponed?

Mr. Pearkes: I will take that question as notice.

FINANCE

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in view of the statement made at a Progressive Conservative meeting at the University of Toronto by the provincial treasurer of Ontario with respect to university grants, whether the vote for university grants in Mr. Harris' estimates is one of the votes he intends to reduce at this session.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was not at the meeting in question. I gather that my hon. friend was present.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is very well reported in the press.

Mr. Fleming: He is quoting something he appears to have heard. I have not announced any intention of proposing any reduction in the item in question.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question then, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if the government has any intention of reducing the university grants?

Mr. Speaker: May I say with respect to the question that it is a direct request for an announcement of policy, which is hardly the function of oral questions on orders of the day. If the minister wishes to deal with it, then that is his decision.

PENITENTIARIES

ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF NEW BUILDING IN DRUMHELLER AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) which I would have asked yesterday but the minister was away.

I understand he was ill, and I am glad to see he has now regained his health and is here today.

The question I wish to direct to the minister is as follows. Will the minister make a statement to the house concerning the government's intention of constructing a penitentiary in Alberta in the near future? Will he also state if the government will give consideration to constructing this penitentiary in the Drumheller area, as reported by myself on many previous occasions and by the Drumheller and district chamber of commerce by letter to the minister dated August 26, 1957?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his kind words, and also for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. In reply I would advise him and other hon. members who are interested that the construction of a new penitentiary in western Canada is being held in abeyance until there has been an opportunity of discussing with all the provinces concerned the proposal contained in the report of Mr. Justice Fauteux's committee that the dominion authorities should take over a large number of prisoners now looked after by the provinces.

This may involve agreement with the provinces for the taking over of some existing provincial institutions if agreement on the overall question is reached.

Therefore about all I can say in direct answer to the question is that if and when new construction by the dominion authorities is considered necessary, representations made on behalf of Drumheller as well as those made on behalf on many other municipalities and districts in British Columbia and Alberta will receive due consideration.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

REQUEST FOR SURVEY IN SOUTHEASTERN NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Will the government give consideration to conducting an immediate airborne magnetic survey in southeastern New Brunswick to include the counties of Westmorland and Albert?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I will take good note of the question asked by the hon. member and give him an appropriate answer at the first opportunity.

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—STATEMENT ON EFFECT OF DOSCO PURCHASE ON COAL AND STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond asked on October 18 if any studies have been made by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys to determine the possible effect of the purchase of Dosco by A. V. Roe, on the Nova Scotia coal and steel industry. The answer is no, because a public statement is yet to come from A. V. Roe as to the future policy of the company. The dominion coal board will continue to analyse the company's operation on a day to day basis, as it has done in the past.

In answer to the supplementary question on the same subject asked by the hon. member for Gloucester, the minister and the dominion coal board are aware of the situation, and this government is doing its best to improve it, according to its policy.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SATELLITE STATIONS IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Revenue, of which notice has been sent him. I would like to ask whether the following report in the Port Arthur News-Chronicle of October 23 is true—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member was good enough to send me a copy of the question he proposed to ask. I am sorry I did not have an opportunity to communicate with him, but may I request him to put his question as a question of fact arising from the report, and not to read the report itself. It is not customary to read such reports or make any statement of facts other than what may be necessary to explain the question itself.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether the gist of this report is true, namely that the C.B.C. has committed itself to establishing four satellite transmission stations in northwestern Ontario, as announced by the provincial member of parliament last night in Port Arthur?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to send me notice of this question which I received this morning.

The senior officers of the C.B.C. under whose aegis this falls are in Toronto and were tied up by the fact that their plane was grounded, as a result of which I have not been able to speak to them personally about the matter.

I do know of my own knowledge that the C.B.C. has been making exploratory surveys with regard to the possible extension of services in the area to which the hon. member has drawn attention, as well as in other areas in Canada. These steps are exploratory only; no firm commitments have been made, and I would assume that no firm commitments could be made until parliament had authorized sufficient funds to the C.B.C. for the forward program.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Does this mean that the report is untrue?

Mr. Nowlan: I have not seen the report, Mr. Speaker, so I am not prepared to comment upon it at all. I presume it has some semblance of correctness, the same as the report I have in my hand of an interview the hon. member gave to the press some time ago in which he prophesied what the C.B.C. was going to do.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REPORTED REQUEST FOR MEETING OF PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if it is true, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press of October 18, that the minister of health of Manitoba has asked my hon. friend to call a meeting of provincial ministers of health to discuss the federal government's hospital insurance program and, if such a request has been received, would the minister advise the house as to the government's intention in that matter?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for having informed me of his intention to ask this question. I have seen the article to which he refers, and it is true that the minister of health of Manitoba has corresponded with me and we have replied. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked if we would table the correspondence, as will be done.

I can say that the government is giving very intensive consideration to the whole matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps before the conference is held it would be possible for the minister to give consideration to answering the questions which stand in my name in respect of this matter.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, I would be delighted, Mr. Speaker.

FRUIT

APPLES—REPORTED IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES CULLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, prior to the discussion of the problems concerning wheat growers this afternoon I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture that concerns apple growers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister inform the house what steps are being taken by his department to prevent the importation and sale of cull apples from the United States in Canada, and what steps are being taken by the minister's department to promote the sale of Canadian apples in Canada?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. Yesterday the hon. member for Melville brought this matter to my attention, and gave me a sample of some of these cull apples which had been turned over to him. I immediately took up the matter with the officials of my department and gave them instructions to investigate this particular shipment and also to find out what other shipments, if any, were coming into the country and to prepare a memorandum for me on the possible steps we could take in order to prevent shipments of this kind coming into Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

OTTAWA—PROVISION OF SUITABLE ATTIRE FOR MESSENGER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, although I recognize that possibly it comes within your purview. I regret that I did not have time to send notice of this question, but it might be taken as such.

What provision, if any, is made for suitable attire in inclement weather such as we have today in Ottawa for the messenger service operating between government-operated buildings?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have quite a lot of duties, some of which I have not discovered yet. However, I do not think I have anything to do with providing uniforms for the staff of the house.

Mr. Nowlan: Nor umbrellas.

Mr. Green: Indeed, nor umbrellas.

[Later:]

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up the matter raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. I am sure if the house leader had understood fully the question that was asked he would have given a little different answer. That may have been our fault. We realize that the matter of providing suitable rain gear for the messengers in the government service, particularly those in the service of the house, comes within Your Honour's purview, but we cannot ask you questions.

We would like to ask the house leader if he will discuss with Mr. Speaker the possibility of providing suitable rain gear for these messengers, and then make some announcement in the house. I draw the attention of the house leader to the fact that we expect these gentlemen to go out at call in all kinds of weather. Many of them do not have suitable rain gear, and I have seen them come back to the building soaked to the skin.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, now that the matter has been drawn to Your Honour's attention I am sure you will not need any assistance from me in dealing with it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC CITY—REPORTED CRITICAL UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rene Begin (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister tell me if the government or his department has taken or intends to take any special measure concerning the critical situation in which Quebec city and especially my riding of Quebec West now find themselves due to ever-increasing unemployment?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the same action is being taken in Quebec West as in any other part of Canada where we have unemployment at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the action?

Some hon. Members: What action?

[Mr. Hahn.]

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. I wonder whether he would detail to the house this action which he is taking across the country to counter unemployment which is rising so alarmingly.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question I wish he would look up Hansard, where I answered a question of the same nature very fully as to what the Department of Labour was doing at this moment and what action the government was taking at this moment. I do not know what else can be done at present to offset the heritage that we received from the former government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: —and the conditions which have arisen because of the policies of the hon. gentleman and others on the other side of the house.

Mr. Sinclair: I would remind the minister—

Mr. Fleming: Are you going to ask for more?

An hon. Member: Let him ask his question.

Mr. Sinclair: There will be lots of time to discuss unemployment. Is the minister aware that, despite his words in the house, unemployment has increased every day in this country since the government took office?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to say anything about this matter but since the hon. gentleman has brought it up may I say that on a number of occasions members have risen and asked questions about unemployment and compared October of this year with October of last year, but unemployment in June was higher than in both those instances.

(Translation):

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFFS IN LOUISEVILLE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Finance. In view of the lay-offs which are occurring in the Louiseville textile industry, in my riding, as a consequence of increased imports of British textiles, as reported in yesterday morning's Gazette, what measures is the government contemplating in order to prevent further increase of these imports, so as to protect our own industry?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not read yesterday's Gazette and, therefore, shall answer tomorrow the question asked by the hon. member.

(Text):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT TRANSCONA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of reports which have appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press indicating lay-offs for Canadian National Railways employees in Transcona, as well as elsewhere, are any efforts being made to assimilate into other branches those men displaced by dieselization?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Whenever lay-offs become necessary in any part of the Canadian National Railways system, all efforts are made to assimilate the affected personnel.

[Later:]

Mr. Deniset: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport in view of his reply that efforts are being made regarding such lay-offs. What efforts are being made in Transcona, which is the nerve centre of employment in Manitoba?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think I should make my answer very clear. Whenever lay-offs unfortunately become necessary, the Canadian National Railways make every possible effort to find other work for those people who are affected.

Mr. Deniset: Could we ask on another occasion for at least some idea of what those efforts are, something specific?

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): My question is supplementary to the Minister of Labour's answer concerning the unemployment situation in the city of Montreal. In view of the alarming increase in unemployment, would the minister consider setting a date for a general debate on unemployment in order that this house may examine the reasons for the sharp increase since June 10?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I should like to inform the hon. member that if he wishes to bring up what he terms the acute unemployment situation in Montreal he may do so in his speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I want to point out to him that since June there has been a drop of 5,577 in the unemployed. When we took office there were 5,577 more unemployed than there are at the present moment.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I ask a supplementary question. Do we have to assume that this government is afraid to discuss this matter of unemployment?

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC CITY—PROMENADE OUTSIDE CITADEL WALLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has a contract been awarded for the building of a promenade outside the Citadel walls around Cap Diamant in Quebec city in order that the work can be completed in 1958, which marks the 350th anniversary of Quebec city?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his patience in trying to get his question before this house the last two days. The answer is no.

Mr. Lesage: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the minister to ask for tenders and to award a contract before the end of the present fiscal year?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): As the hon. member knows, the construction of this board walk and ancillary services is a very complicated project requiring the most careful designing. With the very limited facilities at the department's disposal it has not been possible to complete the design work yet, and it will probably take some months to finish the task. We know now that it will take two construction seasons to complete the project; therefore it could not be finished in any event in time for the celebration of the 350th anniversary of the founding of Quebec city. In these circumstances the project is being given further consideration.

Mr. Lesage: I have a further supplementary question. Is the $50,000 provided for that purpose in the supplementary estimates still available for that purpose, or has it been transferred for other purposes?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to take that supplementary question as notice.

IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE TO CHINESE BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION BRIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will he be able to advise the house soon that he has given careful consideration to the brief presented to him by Mr. Wong Foon Sien on behalf of the Chinese benevolent association?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I would only say in reply that the brief is now before my department for consideration, and as soon as we are able to formulate some definite reply we will advise Mr. Foon Sien and make a copy available to the hon. member if it seems appropriate to do so.

BRIDGES

ALASKA HIGHWAY—DISRUPTION OF COMMUNICATIONS OVER PEACE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or the appropriate minister. Can the minister bring the house up to date in connection with the matter of the Peace river bridge? Does the federal government intend to assume responsibility and liability for its reconstruction?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): A couple of days ago I told the house of the steps which were being taken to relieve the situation created by the collapse of the Peace river bridge. Those steps have been effective in that they are now restoring traffic. Future disposition will be a matter of awaiting further reports as to what action should be taken.

Mr. Christian: My other question was whether the federal government intends to assume responsibility and liability for the reconstruction of the bridge.

Mr. Pearkes: The responsibility of the federal government in connection with the northwest highway system is that it must be maintained as a military highway. The bridge is part of the northwest highway system, and unless some alternative routing is carried out traffic must be maintained in that area.

POSTAL SERVICE

REQUEST FOR TWICE-DAILY DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the minister's great interest when he was in the opposition and, indeed, the great interest of many other members, in the subject of two mail deliveries daily in the residential areas of Canadian towns and cities, can the minister now say on what date it is proposed that this service will be instituted?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Garland: Can the minister say if he has at any time recommended this proposal to his colleagues in the present government?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): In the light of additional information which it is now possible to obtain from the department as minister, and which was rather difficult to obtain when I sat on the other side of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —this is a matter which I am considering at the present time.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, that was not the question I asked. I asked if at any time since the present government took over he as Postmaster General has recommended this action to his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: The old "beating your wife" question.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, unlike some of my predecessors on this side of the house it is my custom to consider a matter before making recommendations to the cabinet.

POWER

MEETINGS ON DISPOSITION OF DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS IN INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources if, since our exchange on Tuesday about negotiations with the United States authorities on the subject of waters crossing the boundary, he has inquired from the department whether there have been any meetings with the United States authorities since May 20?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will read my answer on that day he will get the answer to his question there.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a supplementary question. The minister said on that occasion that there had been—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: Ask your question.

Mr. Lesage: —that there had been negotiations with members of the government of the United States. My question is a very simple one. Have there been any meetings? If there have been no meetings, how were those negotiations conducted?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I believe the dangers of a minister speculating on such matters are obvious.

Mr. Lesage: As a further supplementary question, may I ask if there have been any meetings since May 20?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Answer.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In view of the fact the previous minister of northern affairs and national resources kept the house informed on these matters when questioned by his colleagues, as to dates of meetings, personnel, results and so on, would not the minister consider it would be in the interests of this house to follow his example?

NEWFOUNDLAND

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENCE OF U.S. ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will take into consideration making a statement on government policy regarding United States armed forces based in Newfoundland?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I see no reason for making such a statement. If there is any real reason at any time, I certainly will do so, but at the moment I can think of no reason why any statement should be made in that regard.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO AIR TRAINING PROGRAM—CONTINUANCE OF CLARESHOLM TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, and it is in two parts, one general and the other specific. Will the minister inform the house whether or not there is to be any readjustment in Canada's contribution to the NATO air training plan? Would the minister make a statement in respect to the possible future of the air training school at Claresholm, Alberta?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): In answer to the first question, Canada agreed as part of her NATO commitments to train pilots and navigators of her NATO partners. Under that scheme some 5,000 students have already been trained. Most of the NATO countries have now built up their own training facilities so there is not the same requirement for Canada to train as many pilots for her NATO partners as when the NATO organization came into being.

In so far as the second part of the question is concerned, the reduction in the training of NATO students removes some of the requirement for the training facilities at Claresholm, and it is expected that station will be closed down by the end of 1958, unless there is some change in the over-all training plans.

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF GROUND TO AIR MISSILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Breton (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it true that the government has the intention of abandoning the production of ground to air missiles, especially the "Sparrow", and that from now on the purchase of these missiles will be made from England?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Canada has not entered into any agreement with any country at the present time for the production or purchase of any ground to air missiles.

GOLD

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BRIEF PRESENTED TO GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has a brief been presented to the government by the gold mining industry at a meeting on August 21 of this year? If so, will the minister table that brief for the information of hon. members?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): A brief was submitted to the Minister of Finance in August by representatives of the gold mining industry. It has never been the practice to table in this house briefs submitted to ministers.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT TO DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the minister inform the house if it is his intention to appoint an assistant to his deputy minister? If so, I should like to know if he is in a position to tell us when that appointment will be made.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. It is not the intention to appoint an assistant deputy minister in the Post Office Department. The appointment which existed for about a year, until a few weeks ago, was an unusual one. We had no previous experience with that position. It was made in recognition of the fact that the deputy minister would be almost fully concerned for many months with preparations for the universal postal union congress, and was going to retire after that. It was necessary to have someone with a higher degree of authority than normal in order to assist him in his work.

REFERENCE TO DIRECTIVE CONCERNING MAIL CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I refer him to the general directive 9/4 MS dated August 8 and directed to mail contractors, which includes the statement that mail contractors are not civil servants and that if involved in political activity they may incur cancellation of the mail contract. My question to the Postmaster General is this. Did he authorize the contents of this directive?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, at the time I took office my attention was drawn by a number of people to the fact that rural mail contractors, or some of them, in the course of the performance of the duties for which they were paid by the federal government in carrying the mail were also engaging directly in political activity through carrying aspiring candidates with them on their routes and introducing them to the people to whom they were delivering mail, through displaying posters on their vehicles, and in other ways.

I must say that I feel the handling and delivery of Her Majesty's mail should not become involved in the immediate political life of this country. I took that view. Perhaps some others may take a different view; I do not know. Therefore after I discussed this matter with the officials of my department we came to the conclusion that it was advisable that these people who are handling the rural mail should be advised of the department's feeling on this matter.

I might point out that in all the years the previous government was in office no attempt whatsoever had been made to suggest to rural mail carriers that it would be preferable if they did not, at the same time as they were delivering Her Majesty's mail, carry political posters on their vehicles or carry around political candidates to introduce them to the people who were receiving that mail and others.

Mr. Lesage: Do I understand the Postmaster General to say the directive applies to rural mail carriers and mail contractors only during the time they are on duty?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That was very definitely the thought in my mind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: You didn't put that in the directive.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): These men are contractors who have a contractual obligation with the government, and in the performance of that contractual obligation I take the view that the government is in a position to decide what they may or may not do as a matter of propriety in carrying out their contracts. Now, it may very well be that some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house have to have every jot and tittle of a government directive or suggestion spelled out for them, but I think I can say that our rural mail carriers are men with a very high degree of intelligence.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Under what statute was that directive issued?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Lesage: And do I understand that the mail contractor who has to carry mail from the station to the post office once per day—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lesage: This is a question. Do I understand that a mail carrier who has to carry the mail once a day between the post office and the station, which takes him about one-half hour per day, is completely free for the 23½ hours which are left in each day to carry on political activities without being disturbed by the department or the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is going far beyond the range of supplementary questions. We started on a directive and if there is a supplementary question with respect to that, very well.

Mr. Lesage: With all due deference, Mr. Speaker, may I remark I am simply asking for a clarification of the directive.

An hon. Member: A very important one.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If the government is expected to clarify each individual directive—

Mr. Sinclair: It should. That is your job, and you should not have to clarify a directive because it should be spelled out.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): May I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper or perhaps ask it at a time when the estimates are before the house. Then at any appropriate time I will be delighted to deal with the question, because it is one in which I take a certain amount of pride. But I am inclined to feel it may be unwise to now take up the time of the house with a long series of questions.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): May I ask the Minister of Public Works if the same directive was issued to contractors who might be doing work for his department?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, I do not know of any such directive issued by my department.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he inform the house under what statute such a directive would be authorized?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did not issue the directive; therefore the question has not come before me.

GRAIN

STATEMENT ON LICENSING OF OFF-SITE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I answer a question which was asked two days ago by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort.

The question was:

Is it not a fact that the government is now approving and authorizing elevator companies to acquire off-site storage?

The answer is in the following terms. I am informed by the board of grain commissioners for Canada that no applications for off-site storage have been approved subsequent to June, 1956.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

QUESNEL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe). The hon. member pointed out, with some justification, that the people of Quesnel had been seeking an employment office for some time, and I trust he will be happy to learn that, this matter having been given consideration, such an office will be established very shortly in the federal building there. It will be a branch office under the office at Prince George.

STEEL

REPORTED DECISION TO INCREASE TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is really a repetition of a question I asked yesterday, when the minister complained that my language was not good enough and that he was therefore prevented from answering the question. Today I have constructed it as simply as I could in the hope that he may give a simple answer.

According to the press report the government has decided to proceed with plans to boost tariffs on a wide range of steel products, and has notified a number of countries which come under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, including the United States, of its intentions. Is this report correct?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. I drew attention to some of the strong terms used in the question, such as talking about a boost on a wide range of steel products. I said that if I were to take the question literally I should no doubt have to give a negative answer. However, I felt that in fairness to the hon. gentleman I should not put too literal an interpretation on some of the rather strong expressions he used in his question, and that as I expect to be tabling certain reports of the tariff board within the next several days I should be glad to make a statement on this subject at that time for the information of the house, if it is desired.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

APPLICATIONS FOR CITIZENSHIP—STENOGRAPHIC RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I had intended to ask him two questions but I will defer the second until he recovers from his temporary indisposition.

In view of the fact that, unless requested, stenographic records are not kept in courts of Canadian citizenship; in view of the fact that where applications for citizenship are opposed—and there is one being opposed at the present time in which a good many Canadians are interested, and I am glad it is being opposed—this is most important, would the minister give consideration to having stenographic records kept in all cases where applications for citizenship are opposed?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. gentleman's interest in my welfare but I can assure him that I feel equal to answering more than one question if he cares to ask it. However, I will deal with the one he has asked at the moment. As he himself has said, there is a great deal of interest in citizenship applications, in some more than in others. The point he raised is one of rather unusual interest, and I am glad he has raised it at this time. However, he himself will appreciate that it involves important policy considerations. The question of whether or not records of these proceedings should be kept and be made public is one on which no one would care to make a snap decision. I am grateful to the hon. member for having brought it specifically to my attention. I can assure him it is one to which we will give immediate study in the department and that, when we have reached a decision, if there is anything in that decision which involves a new policy which should be communicated to the house, we will do so at once.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GORDON COMMISSION—STATEMENT ON FINAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was asked a question by the hon. member for Ottawa West concerning the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects and the expected date of the tabling of the official report, and also a particular publication. The hon. member sent me notice of his question, but it did not reach me until some time after he had put his question in the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I delivered it personally to your office in the morning.

Mr. Fleming: Well, apparently the hon. member delivered it to the wrong office, because it did not reach me until after his question was put to me in the house. I have made a statement which is a fact.

Mr. McIlraith: And I have made the statement that I delivered it to your office.

Mr. Fleming: Apparently the hon. member wants to be quarrelsome, but I have said it did not reach me until after the question was asked. Is that plain?

Mr. Chevrier: Don't lose your temper.

Mr. Fleming: I am not. There were two parts to the question, and I have already answered the first part orally. In reply to the question concerning the probability of issuance of a study entitled "Canada's Energy Prospects", I would like to inform the hon. member that this study has not yet been published. It is now in the hands of the printers, and is expected to be available for distribution by about the first week in December.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. With regard to his statement, could my hon. friend inform me as to the authors of this study on energy undertaken for the royal commission?

Mr. Fleming: I am afraid I cannot answer that question, but it will obviously be the persons appointed by the royal commission for that purpose. The royal commission engaged a number of experts to conduct, under the direction of the secretary of the commission, Mr. LePan, various studies, some of which have been published and some of which have not yet been completed or published. If my hon. friend is interested in having the names of the particular persons engaged on this one study I would be pleased to make inquiries in that regard.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you.

PRICE SPREADS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Lewry) has been trying to catch my eye for some time, and I am sorry to have neglected him for so long.

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister, arising out of the fact that No. 1 flour is now selling for $7 per hundredweight in western Canada while farmers are receiving $2 per hundredweight for wheat. In view of the necessity of inquiring into this exorbitant spread, can the Prime Minister yet say when the royal commission on price spreads will be established?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As far as the preliminary remarks are concerned I have no information in that regard, but one of these days, as soon as we get the legislation now before the house passed by this house—the emergent legislation, as it were—then in due course the personnel of the commission will be announced.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON REQUEST TO HAVE NOTICES OF MOTIONS AND QUESTIONS DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Yesterday the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) asked whether it would be possible for some arrangement to be made whereby starred questions and notices of motions for the production of papers could be dealt with before the conclusion of the debate on the speech from the throne. If all members of the house are agreed, the government would be willing to have that course followed tomorrow, immediately preceding orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Is the proposed course agreeable to the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hansell: Does that only apply to starred questions? How about the others?

Mr. Speaker: That referred to motions for production of papers, as I understood it. Is that correct?

Mr. Green: My understanding is, Mr. Speaker, that ordinary questions do not have to be raised on the floor of the house.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION STABILIZING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): May I direct a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of his answer a short time ago regarding stabilization of prices, which is referred to in the speech from the throne. Due to the very unsatisfactory prices that are being obtained for many commodities which are being harvested at the present time, would the minister consider before the conclusion of the speech from the throne debate the possibility of bringing in legislation regarding the stabilization of these prices? I ask this question since we find in our district that some of these commodities are now being distributed back on the soil which produced them because they are not worthy of the labour to harvest them.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I am aware of the very unsatisfactory conditions which exist and have existed, as far as agriculture is concerned, for some considerable length of time. I found the situation in this regard, when I took office as Minister of Agriculture, extremely serious. I have been doing what I can to try and improve the situation as far as some agricultural products are concerned, and I can assure the hon. member that this government will continue to take every possible step with all possible speed to correct this unfortunate situation which we and the country inherited so far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. Huffman: May I just ask the minister if he is aware that corn which was selling for $1.20 a while ago was marketed yesterday for 46 cents?

Mr. Sinclair: Shame, shame; the lowest since 1934.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the making of advances on account of initial payments for grain produced in the designated area, as defined in the Canadian Wheat Board Act, prior to delivery thereof upon undertakings by the producers thereof to deliver the grain to the Canadian wheat board; and to provide for the costs, expenses and other financial obligations required in the making of such advances; such measure to include such further related and consequential provisions as are necessary to give effect to the foregoing.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this resolution is the first of a series of resolutions introducing measures which will be for the benefit of the people of Canada. This is the first item of our legislative program, and it is designed to permit prairie farmers to receive advance payment for the grain they can expect to deliver this year. The legislation is necessary because of the large surplus of wheat which has been accumulated in recent years due to a number of factors such as larger than average crops, a reduction in exports because of the loss of former markets, increased productivity per acre, subsidized competition from other wheat exporting countries, and so on.

The facts of the grain problem are that on August 1 of this year there was in Canada in storage in country and terminal elevators and in transit about 400 million bushels of wheat. An additional 300 million bushels was estimated by the dominion bureau of statistics to be held on farms, making a total carryover of 700 million bushels. That constitutes a substantial legacy from the past.

The new crop year was commenced on August 1, and the estimate of production for 1957-58 is about 350 million bushels. With the elevators crammed to capacity the prairie farmer is at the present time in the unhappy position of having good quality wheat available but little or no opportunity to deliver to the elevator and, therefore, no prospect of receiving in the fall the cash return he requires from his year's operation and the cash return that he might reasonably expect. Through no fault of his own, and due to a situation beyond his control, the prairie farmer cannot get immediately the cash he needs for his farming expenses and daily requirements.

It is to meet that requirement, that immediate need, that the legislation about to be put before the house has been prepared. An active and vigorous selling program is in progress. There is no relaxation of our efforts to dispose of our stocks of wheat at a fair return to the farmer. At the second reading stage of the bill I will discuss our sales program as well as other aspects of our wheat economy. However, hon. members may be interested in the situation at the moment, and I have promised the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that I will give an answer to his question the other day on that subject. But hon. members may have noticed an accurate report in the Gazette this morning which was headlined "Canada Wheat Leads the World" and which reads as follows:

> Canada led the world in wheat exports in August, though the amount shipped was slightly below that of last year. This was the first time in four years that Canada has topped the United States in wheat exports in the opening month of the new crop year. Canadian shipments totalled 27,200,000 bushels, down from 29,300,000 shipped in August last year, but above the 10-year average of 20,400,000 bushels.

That report comes from the dominion bureau of statistics.

The cash advance is not a hand-out or a subsidy to western farmers. All we are proposing is a cash advance on grain that will be delivered later, in the ensuing months. We have no reason to doubt that the grain will be delivered, that space will become available in the elevators, and that exports will continue. The grain export trade of Canada is proceeding actively. There will be used up within Canada during the 12-month period from August 1, 1957, to July 31, 1958, at least 150 million bushels of wheat in one way or another, and there will be exported from Canada approximately 300 million bushels. That means that the equivalent of this year's crop will be all used up and, in addition, 100 million bushels of the carryover from preceding years.

But we cannot expect the prairie farmer to wait six months or a year before he gets some cash. While he is waiting to make delivery of his grain we consider that he should have some money to tide him over. The scheme we propose has been made as simple as possible. For many years the farmer has been delivering his grain on a quota system, receiving an initial payment from the elevator agent and producing his permit book to have the transaction recorded. The same system will be continued. The permit book will be produced, the elevator agent will make the advance and record the transaction, and the wheat board will keep accurate files concerning each farmer's receipts in advance. The only differences are that the actual delivery of the grain will be made later, when elevator space becomes available, and the advance will, of course, be less than the initial payment.

Let us follow the procedure further. When elevator space becomes available the farmer will make his delivery, and one-half the value of the quantity of grain delivered will be applied to reducing the advance he has received. At each delivery the farmer will receive some cash so that he will not return home empty handed. Then, further, this fall he will get full return of the unit quota which is presently being delivered. Cash advances will apply on the 6-bushel quota which the wheat board considers will be applicable for the 1957-58 crop year.

The safeguards of the scheme are clear and definite. The chief one is the permit book in which will be recorded the cash advances that have been paid, and the elevator agent will be able to determine by an examination of the permit book whether or not an advance has been paid off. Responsibility for making the advance will rest with the elevator agent, and the agent must be reasonably sure that the farmer seeking the advance has on his farm the grain that must subsequently be delivered. In the third place, the farmer will be required to sign an affidavit in respect of the quantity of grain available with respect to which he is seeking an advance, and I hope to deal with that question again when the opportunity presents itself. In the event I did not make it clear in my opening remarks I should reiterate that it is intended to have the cash advance system apply to wheat, oats and barley.

With regard to the financing of the scheme, that will be done in precisely the same way as at present when deliveries are made to an elevator, and shipments will be now entered with the wheat board and the offices of the elevator companies. With regard to the details of the financial aspect, we will be able to examine this in the committee stage.

The advance will be related to deliveries within a quota of 6 bushels per specified crop. The amount per bushel will be 50 cents for wheat, 20 cents for oats and 35 cents for barley. A ceiling of $3,000 will be set as the total that may be obtained by an applicant.

Now, to consider the size of the problem, the number of permit holders is approximately 231,000. Not every permit holder will require a cash advance, because conditions differ from area to area. I spoke about the unit quota. That is estimated to amount in total to 69 million bushels of wheat which will be complete in delivery very shortly, because the rate of marketing is approximately 30 million bushels per month.

With regard to the total amount of wheat that may be marketed in the course of the crop year, the estimate is based on the specified acreage and the returns from that acreage. It is expected that 372 million bushels would be the amount for which cash advances might be required. As each month proceeds deliveries are being made and the number of cash advances required will be correspondingly reduced. It is estimated, in so far as one can estimate in advance, that the total amount of money required for cash advances under the proposed plan may range from $100 million to $150 million. Repayment commences immediately as deliveries of grain are made, and in most instances will likely be completed within six or eight months. Interest charges as they accrue to the wheat board will be paid by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund, and administrative charges will be undertaken by the wheat board.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the broad outlines of the plan for cash advances. I could have dealt at some considerable length with the wheat economy of western Canada and at this stage given the picture as I see it with regard to our wheat problem, but I thought at the resolution stage I would curtail my remarks. I know there are many hon. members in the house who are keenly interested in cash advances but who may prefer to discuss the subject on second reading or in the committee of the whole house after the printed bill is in their hands. If it is the wish of the house to complete the resolution stage today we could have the bill distributed this evening and proceed with second reading tomorrow, and on that occasion I would give a somewhat more complete account of our wheat problem. However, it is up to the good sense of the house as to what is required. We are prepared to discuss this at any stage and to any extent that hon. members may like.

In conclusion may I just say that the government is prepared to introduce this legislation at this time with confidence that its enactment will result in immediate benefit to agriculture. This measure is urgently required, and will be welcomed by thousands of farm families in western Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, the resolution which has just been moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is of course of necessity in very general terms. It provides:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the making of advances on account of initial payments for grain produced in the designated area—

—that area being, of course, the usual area covered by matters relating to the wheat board's operation, the three prairie provinces and including a part of British Columbia.

When we in the opposition formed the government party we dealt with this question over quite a considerable period of time, and we can fully understand why on this occasion the minister asked that the resolution be accepted now and that general discussion of the question take place at a later stage in the advancement of the measure through the house. I am not going to make any criticism of that, nor am I going to suggest it should be done otherwise, as has been the usual custom in connection with matters of this kind. There were, however, one or two remarks made in the short time the minister took to introduce the resolution upon which I think some comment should be made.

One of them was his statement to the effect that there are over 700 million bushels of carryover. It will be recalled by hon. members in general and by the minister in particular that when the announcement was made earlier in the season it was suggested that the figure for the carryover was something in excess of 600 million bushels. When a statement is made today that statistics indicate it is now over 700 million bushels, I would simply call attention to the fact that those who handle the grain—that is the three pools in western Canada and the grain exchange in Winnipeg—were of the opinion that the figure of 700 million bushels was rather high. I believe they all issued statements to the effect that they did not think this figure was borne out by the facts. I believe it is important that attention should be called to that fact at this moment, although I am sure there will be other occasions during the session when we can be perhaps a little more critical of the figure which is said to be the carryover.

The criticism I made when I read that statement in the press for the first time was to the effect that the reason given for the necessity for the adjustment was that the bureau of statistics had made a mistake for each of the last five years, and I have just been wondering whether the calculations of those who have made a mistake for the last five years should be accepted without some examination into the facts to discover whether or not they are correct this time, particularly as all those who are handling the grain feel they are wrong. I think we should have it pretty well established at an early date just what the figure ought to be.

There is another point I wish to make at this time, and it is that there is nothing unexpected in the suggestions made in the resolution nor in the statement which has just been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As I have already pointed out, this is a subject which has been before the house on many previous occasions, and about which there has been considerable discussion.

But I am only going to refer to two of those occasions and only take a few words out of the statements which were made at the time to indicate the reason why there is no surprise when the statement is made at this time. When introducing amendments to the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, a measure which had been on the statute books for some few years, the former minister of trade and commerce, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, had this to say as found at page 2196 of Hansard of March 14, 1956:

> We were asked to enact this legislation by every farm organization in western Canada. I had thought as a matter of fact that our grain legislation could very well be deferred until the autumn, when any steps we might take could be taken in the light of the coming season's crop results.
>
> The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, western section, met in Winnipeg about two months ago—

That would be in January.

> —to discuss what it wanted the government to do and out of that meeting came just one request . . . There was a second meeting attended by representatives of every farm organization in Canada which was held in Saskatoon. The three wheat pools were represented, the federation of agriculture, the farmers' union and the United Grain Growers. From this meeting came just one request.
> [Mr. Gardiner.]

To pass on and leave out some of the details of the discussion, Mr. Howe went on to say:

> Why did we not get other requests from these meetings? I am sure both meetings discussed cash advances. That is what both meetings were held for. We received no request for cash advances. Why? Because there was no agreement as to how such a plan could be administered. I am told there was the widest difference among various groups as to what they wanted by way of machinery for cash advances.

The proposed amendments were suggested to the house and following that an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Moose Mountain and these two matters were under consideration for some time. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Mountain was in these words, as found at page 2699 of Hansard of March 26, 1957:

> That Bill No. 263 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the advisability of introducing legislation to provide a permanent system of cash advances on farm-stored grain.

I am not too sure as to how permanent the present proposal is but it might be taken to be a proposal to pay such advances on a somewhat permanent basis. But when the measure to amend the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act came up for discussion in the house, again the former minister of trade and commerce was quite clear in expressing his views with regard to the matter. The matter before the house on April 6, 1957 was the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Mountain together with the proposed amendments to the previous legislation brought in by the minister of trade and commerce. In discussing the matter in his final remarks to the house before the bill received final passage, Mr. Howe stated, as found at page 3210 of Hansard of April 6, 1957:

> We have heard vague talk from the opposition about cash advances, free of interest, on farm-stored grain. Various people have suggested ways in which the cash could be put out but no one, as far as I have been able to follow the debate, has suggested any way in which such an advance could be recovered.
> Mr. Chairman, I did have a meeting with representative farm organizations a month or so ago, and at that time those present urged that this legislation be passed.

That is the legislation providing for bank loans.

> They said they were not ready to put forward any other plan at this time but that they might be in the autumn.

Of course, we have come to the autumn. Mr. Howe went on to point out that the proper time to give consideration to the matter would be in the autumn. He went on, as found at page 3210 of Hansard, to refer to the resolutions passed and wired him by the farm organizations in that area of the country to the effect that the then government should again bring down the measure providing for loans from the banks, that they should double the amount and should change the date to the 1st of September. The measure brought down at that time took that action.

I only wish to emphasize at this time that the whole matter was to be reconsidered in the autumn. The only solution, the only plan I have ever heard of that was placed before the farm organizations of the west and the trade in general was a plan placed before them by the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, Mr. John Wesson. Insofar as I can understand the legislation from the few remarks made today that proposal is identical to the one which is now being proposed by the government. Of course we will find out as we go along whether it is exactly identical. There may be some difference in the figures that it will be necessary to discuss but in principle I think it is the same thing.

From the remarks which I have read and which were placed on Hansard last spring it will be understood, of course, that no agreement was reached by those to whom Mr. Wesson made the proposal on the matter. I understand it was placed before the three western pools and the grain trade and there was some difference of opinion as to whether they were prepared to accept the procedure which I understand this legislation provides for and which has been outlined to us in those terms this afternoon. But apparently many of the same individuals representing the same organizations were in Ottawa at a meeting which was held about two weeks ago. I am inclined to think that the ideas that were presented to the government were ideas which would have been presented to any government that might have been here at this particular time.

I want to say to the members of the present government that if the measure turns out to be one of the nature I think it is, judging from what I know of the whole situation they are not likely to find very much opposition from this group in the house with regard to the bringing down of the legislation and it will be our intention to promote, as far as it is possible to do so, the early bringing down of the legislation in order that we may have an early look at it and be in a position to discuss it intelligently, having all the facts before us when we do. Therefore I am not going to attempt to go into the detail of it at present. I am only going to say that it is carrying out an intention which it was indicated to the house by the previous minister of trade and commerce in March and April of this year would be carried out by the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gardiner: Well, there is no doubt about it. My friends apparently have not been reading Hansard—

Mr. Hees: Was that what he said at Morris?

Mr. Gardiner:—and apparently they have forgotten what is in Hansard. They had better go back and read it. Then, of course, there is always the possibility that when we see the legislation there may be terms in it that will not be entirely satisfactory to us. Therefore I am not going to undertake at the moment that we will support the legislation in every particular when it comes down, but I am supporting the idea put forward this afternoon by the minister that this legislation should be brought down just as soon as possible, that we should take a good look at it and then make up our minds what we are going to do about it.

My friend says we should have done that a year ago. Probably he will find if he ever becomes a member of a government, as the members of the present government have already found, you have to give consideration to matters through a considerable period of time before you just spout out everything you think about them. That is the situation which exists at present. We do not know exactly what is going to be in the legislation, but we do feel it is necessary to provide the farmers who are growing wheat in western Canada and who are unable to sell it with as much cash as the treasury of the wheat board and the treasury of Canada can support. We are hopeful when this legislation is brought down that it will provide for something along that line.

There is one thing I should like to say at this stage. There is no indication in the remarks of the minister, nor is there any indication in the resolution, as to the government's intention with regard to the legislation covered by Bill No. 263 of the last session or the legislation of the 1956 session entitled the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act. I should like to suggest that as the government found that measure helpful in the early part of this marketing season, it could be helpful in the early part of any marketing season and, as a matter of fact, all through the marketing period. I am hopeful that legislation will not be repealed, and there is nothing to indicate that it is going to be repealed. I would suggest that there are obvious benefits which can come from that legislation which probably could not be taken advantage of by some farmers under the legislation which is proposed. I would hope that we may have both measures on the statute books after this legislation is passed, and that from the two acts farmers may be able to get more cash than they have been able to get up to this time.

If the legislation is such as to provide that that will be the case, then I can assure the government the measure will be given most earnest consideration. We are hoping that it will do all that the government hopes to have it do. If it does, it can only be helpful to the farmers.

Having said that, I just want to conclude by saying we are hopeful, as the minister is, that the resolution will not be held up unreasonably long and that we may get along to the position where the bill can be distributed. After that is done I hope I will not find it necessary to say too much with regard to it in the remaining part of the session. But I can assure hon. members if I think there is any necessity for saying much about it, I will proceed to say it. At the moment, we will support the resolution.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, as we in this group understood the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely that the legislation would provide for cash advances through the elevator system and that the interest charges would be borne by the treasury, we naturally will support the bill if it includes those features. I was most interested as I am sure all members of the house were, in the statement made by the hon. member for Melville. He built up a case for himself, and he may not have convinced anyone else but apparently he convinced himself that if we had been so unfortunate in this country as to have as the minister of trade and commerce the former member for Port Arthur Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe there would have been placed before this house at this time legislation along the lines of the legislation now before us. This is a statement with which we cannot agree at all. It would seem to me that if the minister had converted himself to the idea that we should have a system of interest-free cash advances, I could only conclude that, on this subject at any rate, he has learned more since June 10 than in all the years before that. However, I am not too sure he has been converted, because after he made that statement he said that before he could assure the minister and the house they were going to vote for the bill they were going to have to take a careful look at it. We can say, on the basis of the statement made by the minister, that so long as the bill contains those provisions we are going to support it.

We are going to support this legislation because we have had a part, and I believe a very considerable part, along with farm organizations and members of parliament in other parties in this house, over the years in promoting the idea, in publicizing it and getting support for it. The idea was that when a farmer harvests his grain in the fall, when he can send it only to a government agency, which is his preference, and there is no opportunity because of congestion and the absence of markets to deliver his grain, then a responsibility falls upon the government which operates the marketing agency to provide a system for making payments to the producers.

We feel that because we have helped to pioneer this legislation—I remind the house that an amendement was moved by this group asking for cash advances as far back as 1951—we are to some extent responsible for this legislation now being placed before the House of Commons. I think we can take particular satisfaction from these two features because in the debate on this question in this house one year ago we were the first and only group for a matter of days to say that we were so much opposed to the idea of farmers being forced to pay interest on really what was their own money that we were prepared to oppose the bank loan legislation. Gradually, after some days of debate, other members from other parties came to that point of view. I believe that as a result of that work in this house we are now faced with the likelihood that farmers are going to have this advance in worth-while legislation.

We recognize, of course, that the legislation before us is not a solution to the agricultural problem that faces this country. While it is absolutely necessary, and must be a part of an orderly system of grain marketing to have in legislative form a system of interest-free cash advances, basically this is not much more than a measure to assist in times of very bad conditions. We are hopeful that the government will take the other basic and necessary steps that will result in an improvement to the whole of the agricultural economy.

The best interpretation I am able to place on the remarks of the hon. member for Melville is that he is waiting for the farm organizations. While he has assured nobody he will go as far as the farm organizations go, he will never go any farther than the farm organizations go. I am one who is prepared to do my own thinking. Although I am a member of, and a supporter of all the large farm organizations in western Canada, I believe that so far as the interest rate is concerned until recent days this legislation has been in advance of the general conclusions of the farm organizations. I, for one, do not intend to be merely a spokesman in this house for a given farm organization. I am prepared to do my own thinking, and our group will advance legislation which we feel meets the situation.

So in this instance some leadership has been given. However, I thought the hon. member for Melville might have had some objections to this legislation because I can recall so vividly when he sat on the other side of the house with his colleagues that they rose time after time and said, "If you have any arrangement like this through the Canadian wheat board, it means the end of the Canadian wheat board; it cannot be done; it is a terrible thing." We even heard it said that if the government at the time had suggested this type of legislation all of the wheat board members would tender their resignations. It was just as much poppycock at that time as it would be to say it now. There is nothing to it.

Mr. Gardiner: This is not what you are talking about today.

Mr. Argue: We said that it should be through the elevator system; the government said no. They wanted to do it through their friends, the chartered banks. There was no risk for the banks; there was a government guarantee. The farmers did not want it through the banks but that is the best the former administration could provide. There has been an almost complete collapse of many of the export markets that we formerly occupied. The former administration had no suggestions; they had no ideas.

It used to be that the Liberal party had some ideas. They used to be a party of promises and they went out in one election after another and made great promises. But in the past election they made no promises. They did not have an idea. They did not have a clue. When the Leader of the Opposition came to speak in the city of Regina in the recent election, what did he offer the farmers in what perhaps is considered to be the wheat capital of Canada in order to help them in this situation? He offered nothing. He did not have a single concrete offer.

However, he went over all of the moneys that the farmers had ever obtained through any legislation that the government had ever had anything to do with,—when it had given a guarantee to the banks and the farm loans,—he added it up and, if I remember correctly, came to the astronomic figure of $750 million that he said was the extent to which the government of the day was helping agriculture of this country. The farmers reached up and scratched their heads and said, "Well, we still owe most of it. We are going to have to pay it." When he forces us to go to the banks now and to borrow the money and to pay interest on our credit, he comes out and tells us that it is part of the government's assistance program for farmers.

Hence the producers naturally took a great deal of objection to the attitude of that administration. That fact, of course, accounts in large measure for the fact that this once great, virile Liberal party is now the smallest of the parties in the four western provinces. With the record of the Liberal party in the past and the ineptitude of the members of the official opposition at this time it will not be at all surprising that, when the Manitoba election is over, the Liberal party, as far as western Canada is concerned, will be almost as extinct as the historic prairie buffalo. We do not expect much difficulty in doing what other members of this party have already said we shall do, namely being the real opposition and the effective alternative to the policies and the programs that may be advanced.

But after having said some complimentary things about this legislation, after having said that we are proud we have had a hand in bringing it forward, I want to impress upon the government that we are today in a period of great congestion as far as grain marketing is concerned. Right now we are probably in a period of lower quotas than we have seen for many years at this stage. In spite of the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, our markets for the current crop year do not compare favourably with our exports and markets in the previous year.

As far as the basic condition of agriculture today is concerned, the ability to get enough income to cover expenses and to provide the farmer with a living, there is no doubt about it that agriculture is worse off today than it was on that memorable occasion of June 10. The price-cost squeeze has continued. The basic conditions that over the last years have made it difficult for the farmers still exist, as far as I can see. We are seeing more and more inflation and a greater and greater rise in prices as the days go by, but we are not seeing any strengthening generally of agricultural prices. We are seeing instead a gradual but rather consistent deterioration of agricultural prices.

I know there are members in this house who think that the people from western Canada and from agricultural constituencies are just cry-babies and that we overestimate the difficulties which the agricultural industry faces. However, I want to remind hon. members of this fact. Since 1947 this industry has experienced an increase in costs of 46 per cent, as far as western Canada is concerned, and a drop in agricultural prices of 8 per cent. What other industry in a 10-year period could survive an increase in costs of 46 per cent while they receive a reduction of 8 per cent in the price of products they had to sell? For the wheat producer the position is even worse because in the same period of time the price of wheat dropped even more. As far as the farmer is concerned, it dropped for average grade by 34 cents a bushel, from $1.63 to $1.29 per bushel.

What should be done to correct this difficulty that is facing agriculture? The present measure is welcome; it is necessary. But the thing which must be done now is to improve the prices of agricultural products. We are looking forward to the new legislation which we expect will be before the house before many days are past.

Let me suggest that the government at this time should consider establishing something for which the farm organizations have been campaigning for many years. I refer to the establishment of a domestic parity price for wheat. I suggest that the price should be not less than $2.25 a bushel. Lest people who are consumers of grain and consumers of bread and who are not in the production of grain think that such an increase would result in an astronomic rise in the price of bread, let me suggest that the increased cost would not amount to more than one cent per loaf. As I have read the resolutions of the Canadian Labour Congress; they have gone hand in hand with the farm organizations in this country in asking for a system of parity prices and a system of support prices that will give to the agricultural producer a reasonable standard of living.

I would suggest also that the government might consider the suggestion of farm organizations that a system of deficiency payments should be established. What the farm organizations mean by deficiency payments is a straight payment out of the national treasury to the people who produce these products. They say that if conditions are such that their prices are allowed to collapse until their industry is threatened, there should be a subsidy—call it deficiency payment or call it what you like—from the treasury to an extent necessary to keep this industry in existence. Of course, that is not a proposition that was put only to this government, it was put to the previous administration.

As to something that might be done immediately, I would suggest to the minister that he consider the immediate payment of an interim sum of money. On the wheat market, on the 1956 to 1957 crops, farm organizations asked that this deficiency payment be amended to an interim payment of not less than 20 cents a bushel. Now the time for interim payments is getting late. We used to get the interim payments during the crop year through which we were passing and now the crop year has gone by. Year after year the interim and final payments are becoming later and later.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce may say to me that there really is not enough money in the fund, that the former administration juggled the accounts and did some slick bookkeeping in order to get a small final payment through just before the election came. Even if that is true, even if the former administration, in order to get the farmers' vote, did make a payment just before election, I suggest to the minister that nevertheless the request of the farm organizations for 20 cents per bushel, based on the present costs of production and on the present prices for agricultural products, is one that the government should consider.

I have mentioned the tremendous increase in the cost of production, and I have mentioned also the congestion in the country. I have here the latest figures from the Canadian wheat board statistical summary showing that in country elevators on October 9 there were some 37 million bushels more than in the previous year. Lakehead stocks were up, Pacific stocks were up and there was general congestion. Now the general situation is just a little worse than it was a year ago.

I also have the figures of existing quotas in western Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce mentioned the unit quota which is in effect at the present time. The unit quota is a quota for only 300 bushels of wheat. Even if the wheat is of good grade it amounts to a sum of just $350. For the vast majority of wheat producers on the prairie and for the vast majority of the people who hold the 231,000 permit books of which the minister spoke, that is the sum of money they have received since August 1. Three hundred and fifty dollars to pay their taxes, to pay their fuel bill, to pay their repair accounts, to pay their store accounts. That situation is demonstrated by the fact that out of just over 2,000 delivery points on October 17 there were 1,547 still on the unit quota and just 497 had advanced to the one bushel quota first specified; a very serious and a very difficult situation. Their income in the past has not been great because our exports last year were at a low point. The minister said that in August we were just a little above the American exports. Let us hope that our relative position will improve because last year, while we exported 262.8 million bushels of wheat the United States in the same period exported 541.6 million bushels of wheat, more than twice as much as we exported from this country.

That is the general situation—a price-cost squeeze, tremendous congestion and a substantial falling off in markets. This government has suggested two positive things; one is this legislation and the other is a resolution which foreshadows legislation to support it. However, this government has made other statements and has informed us of other attitudes in the last few weeks which I suggest are rather disturbing and which paint the picture of the real situation and the basic attitude of the government.

One of the clauses and one of the provisions in this legislation is that the advance will be made on a six bushel quota. A six bushel quota is a small quota; a six bushel quota is very little more than the farmers marketed last year, so what the minister is saying in this legislation is that this government, with its visits to Washington and with every other thing it might be trying to do to improve our exports, so far as making a cash advance is concerned and as far as this legislation is concerned—and that is the proof of their thinking—are not certain that they are going to be able to export any more than in previous years. Well that is very disturbing. The farm organizations have asked for an advance on at least an eight bushel quota. That has been their general attitude in years gone by. We in this group would like to see an advance made on all of the grain held by these family farms but that is the best the government is doing in this legislation.

We had an intimation yesterday from the Minister of Finance that the government has done no new thinking as to how it might increase exports. When somebody asked the minister whether the government had considered taking sterling he said "nobody has asked us and therefore we have not made any such suggestion." Well that is one of the suggested new policies which have been advanced from time to time and one of the things that I believe could be of real benefit to this country.

Many ministers in this government in the last few weeks have made statements which led a lot of us to hope there would be a great expansion in the Colombo plan, there would be much more money placed at the disposal of the plan and that a great part of this large increase would be used for the purchase of food. We had an announcement the other day that there was going to be an increase and it would be from $34,400,000 to $35 million, scarcely an increase at all. I wondered if the government had not learned anything from the increase given by the former administration to the old age pensioners, that a small and inadequate increase does not gain either sympathy or support for the administration. That is another opportunity this government has lost.

I believe it was yesterday that I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether or not his government was prepared to reverse the attitude of the former administration towards an international food bank with the idea of an international commodity clearing house. He said the government has no different policy or has not made up its mind in that regard—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member wishes to be unfair. I stated to him that I was not prepared to make a statement on this subject at that time.

Mr. Argue: I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that since June 21, in view of the many statements made by the present Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister, the member for Brandon and other representatives of his party when they were on this side of the house as to the desirability of an international food bank, they would have decided some weeks ago, to reverse at the United Nations the opinion of the former administration.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I call to the attention of the hon. member the report made by the Minister of Agriculture. It says that "the commission in which Canada was represented recommended against the formation of such a body." That does not say the delegation from Canada made that representation; it was the commission of which we were a member. We did not have a majority of the votes in that commission.

Mr. Argue: Oh, I know all about the record of this government so far as the international food bank is concerned and, so far as the previous government is concerned, at no time did the former administration come out by voice and by vote in favour of an international pool.

Mr. Gardiner: That is absolutely wrong. I did so at Copenhagen.

Mr. Argue: But it would be very nice to have in this debate the statement of the former minister of agriculture at Copenhagen. I have not seen the statement but I would imagine it is something like the statement made here by the hon. member this afternoon. He was on both sides of the question, and if any one ever attempted to corner him he would have a way out. It is a fact that under the last administration there never was an official statement made by a minister of the government supporting an international food bank.

Mr. Gardiner: There was, right up to the time it was turned down by the commission.

Mr. Argue: Not at all. I have been over the record, and so has the hon. member for Acadia, and I do not think we need accept the interpretation put out at this late date by the hon. member for Melville on that well-known mistake he made over a period of so many years.

I could go on to refer to other suggestions, or statements made by the government. The one that causes me most concern is this, because it seems to me to be the conclusion of all these other attitudes as far as the 6-bushel quota is concerned, as far as sterling is concerned, as far as the Colombo plan is concerned, as far as the international food bank is concerned. I refer to the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the national dairy council of Canada at Winnipeg on September 9, 1957. It reads as follows:

> The long-range view with regard to our wheat entails a forward-looking policy with regard to general production, and it may well be that progressively over the years our acreage devoted solely to the growing of wheat should be appreciably reduced—

There it is. The forward-looking policy means that wheat acreage should be reduced.

> —and greater emphasis should be placed on diversified crops and on the livestock industry.

I am not going to read the rest of that 40-minute speech.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member is not being fair about it. I mentioned an acreage of 20 million and a 400 million bushel average production, which I think the hon. member should, in all fairness, state, because it is not much below the acreage at the present time.

Mr. Argue: No, as a matter of fact it is not below; it is above, and that is what confused me. The minister says we are going to have 20 million acres but he wanted it reduced below 19 million acres. But I will send the speech over to the minister and he can correct it if he wishes.

Mr. Churchill: I want the hon. member to correct his now. There is a 21-22 million acreage now. My figure was to bring it down to 20 million.

Mr. Argue: All right. I will ask the minister this: what will he put the acreage into when he reduces it?

Mr. Churchill: What has been done in the past.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: Very well, what has been done in the past. You put it into oats; you put it into barley. That is what has been done since 1954, the reduction of four million acres has gone into oats and barley.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt, but I must advise the hon. member that his time is expired.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, there has been large scale dissatisfaction in western Canada over the guaranteed loans to farmers by the chartered banks, provided for by legislation. The farmers did not want an opportunity to plunge further into debt. They did not want to have to borrow; they wanted to be able to sell, and in the fall of 1955 there were large protest meetings at which farmers asked the government to pass legislation to make advances against grain held on the farms.

I cannot help being somewhat amused by the sidestepping of the former minister of agriculture when he told us that the farm organizations had met and had only passed one resolution—apparently they did not pass one regarding cash advances. But, of course, he just picked out the particular farm organization he wanted to pick out. Let me remind him that the interprovincial farm union council asked about cash advances some two years ago. They presented a brief in this house on February 16, 1956, and I will read the resolution.

Mr. Gardiner: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is putting words into my mouth. I read out of Hansard what he is going to answer, and the record is there, and I referred to the page for any one to read it.

Mr. Quelch: Yes. The hon. member kept referring to the fact that certain farm organizations had met and had not asked for advances. But on February 16 the interprovincial farm union council brief contained this passage:

> The interprovincial farm union council is continuing to press for adoption of its original proposal, which has been endorsed at the three wheat pool delegate meetings, that the government arrange for interest-free cash advances by the Canadian wheat board on farm-stored grain to the value of 50 per cent of the initial payment on an estimated delivery of eight bushels per cultivated acre.

I want to congratulate the present government for having introduced the present resolution. Apparently it only provides for advances on a quota of 6 bushels to the acre. I am sure the minister will agree that it is going to be very hard for farmers to finance on the basis of even an 8-bushel quota to the acre, and if he cuts the advance down to an amount on 6 bushels to the acre it is going to make it that much harder. I hope therefore he will give consideration to raising it from six to eight. I am not suggesting we should go as far as the hon. member for Assiniboia has suggested when he said advances should be made against all the grain on the farm. I have not heard any farm organization meetings—and I have attended a very large number of meetings in the constituencies—which have once suggested that.

Mr. Argue: May I remind the hon. member, for whom we all have great respect, that I was speaking of a family farm. I was not suggesting that it should apply in the case of huge farms; there should be some acreage limitation.

Mr. Quelch: Even so, there is a good reason, I think, why that suggestion would not be sound, and this is the reason; it is one that was brought to my attention by farmers at meeting after meeting. They said: we should like an advance on all the grain on our farms but we realize that if the government were to make advances against all the grain there would have to be very close inspection, and the cost would be prohibitive, so it would be better to leave a wide margin so that advances can be made without inspection at very little cost. To try to make the advance against the total amount of grain held on the farm would, I think, wreck the whole proposal.

Mr. Chairman, some people ask why should we make advances against grain and not against other farm commodities? Of course, the reason is obvious. Grain and wheat are in a congested state; farmers cannot sell their crops and, therefore, they need advances. In addition to that, the price of wheat is lower than the price of practically any other farm commodity. The price today is less than 70 per cent of parity on the basis used by the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1943-45. On the basis of that, the parity price would be around $2.37 a bushel.

I want to make it absolutely clear that I am not in any way criticizing the Canadian wheat board for their handling of wheat. I think they have done an exceptionally good job, and they have done it under very severe handicaps.

I say they have operated under extremely severe handicaps because they have had to face unfair competition in the world markets. They have had to pay the farmers on the basis of world prices while practically every other country has subsidized the price of wheat. For that reason I think the request of the interprovincial farm union for a deficiency payment of 20 cents a bushel on the 1956-57 crop is a fair one. Even then it would leave the price of wheat considerably below that of the parity price. But even worse than that situation is the fact that the wheat board has been forced to sell through the normal channels of trade whilst their main competitor, the United States, has been selling wheat and accepting payment in foreign currencies and by barter. As a consequence of that we have lost a number of our markets.

Not satisfied with placing the wheat board under the two handicaps I have mentioned the government in the past added another handicap by making the wheat board demand payment in an appreciated currency, a currency at a premium of four cents which meant that the farmers lost approximately seven cents a bushel as a result of that appreciated currency on the basis of par. Let us compare that with what happened in 1950 when the Canadian dollar was held at a value of 90 cents as compared with the United States dollar. Compared with that situation the farmers today are losing 27 cents a bushel as a result of the appreciated value of the dollar.

I am suggesting that if the government considers it sound from a national point of view to maintain the dollar at an appreciated level, if the general economy as a whole benefits by so doing, then the farmers would be absolutely justified in asking that they be compensated to the amount of seven cents a bushel to make up their loss as a result of the government's financial policy.

The former minister of trade and commerce blamed the unsatisfactory condition of agriculture upon a succession of good crops which of course created surpluses and forced the price of wheat down. We insist that the former government must accept the full responsibility for that bad situation as it depended upon orthodox channels of trade to sell its commodities and as a consequence we lost markets.

Whilst the former government followed this policy of laissez faire our main competitors opened up new channels of trade and step by step succeeded in diverting sales of wheat from Canada to the United States, and as a consequence our sales have fallen off and our surpluses have accumulated. The former minister of trade and commerce was asked on a number of occasions whether he thought the farmers should reduce their production of grain. It was suggested to the government that the success of its policy depended largely upon crop failures. I recall that the former minister of trade and commerce said in this house he hoped that in western Canada we would harvest a bumper crop which would have further added to the government's difficulties in disposing of our wheat.

Then he said the government considered it wise to maintain a substantial reserve of wheat on hand so that in the event of a succession of crop failures it would have a reserve of wheat to meet our domestic needs and the needs of other nations. I think the minister was justified in that attitude at that time because it had been pointed out to us time and time again by the Food and Agriculture Organization that 50 per cent of the population of the world was still unfed and hungry and therefore if there had been a succession of crop failures we might very well have had world wide famine.

If the government considers it to be in the national interest to maintain a substantial reserve of wheat on hand then undoubtedly it should be a national responsibility to provide storage to handle that reserve so that it may be held without its interfering with the normal handling of the current crop, it should be a national responsibility to pay the carrying charges on that reserve and it should also be a national responsibility to make advances against grain held on a farm when due to the fact that the reserve is plugging the channels through which the grain moves the farmers are unable to deliver their grain.

I believe that the situation could have been eased last year and could be eased even now to some extent by the government reconsidering what is apparently its decision not to license off-site storage. I was not satisfied with the reply given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce yesterday and I am not blaming him because after all the government has been in office only a short time and has inherited a lot of policies of the former government which up to the present time they have not had a chance to modify.

Let us examine the reasons given for refusing to license off-site storage. It was argued that the grain in off-site storage might deteriorate. I read a report issued by the Alberta wheat pool last year which said that the amount of deterioration in off-site storage was infinitesimal, that the grain in off-site storage was being carried just as efficiently and well as grain in the elevators.

It was also argued by the government that grain in off-site storage would not be as accessible as grain in elevators. I would say that grain in off-site storage would be just about as accessible as grain held in annexes that have no auger because grain held in annexes of this kind has to be loaded up into a truck and moved into the elevator. When you consider that as a rule off-site storage is only a few yards from the elevator it cannot seriously be argued that grain held in off-site storage is not accessible.

I am sorry the government has decided not to license off-site storage because by such an action it is destroying the initiative of the farmers and local business people. I think there is a great deal of credit due the farmers and local businessmen when they have provided buildings in which grain can be stored. The building is then leased to an elevator company and more grain can be delivered.

There is no reason why the wheat board should be too concerned about whether or not grain held in off-site storage will deteriorate because if there is any loss involved it is the local elevator company rather than the wheat board which must sustain the loss because it has to deliver the same type of wheat as that which it accepts into storage. I am sure no local elevator company is going to agree to rent a building which it does not consider satisfactory for the storage of grain.

I am afraid there is another reason why the government refuses to license off-site storage. I think the obvious reason is because it has agreed to paying the carrying charges on the wheat and just the minute it accepts grain into off-site storage it has to pay the storage charges on it to the extent that the total storage is in excess of 187 million bushels. I believe that is the real reason the government refuses to license off-site storage because it does not want to increase its payments for storage.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has suggested that perhaps there should be a reduction in wheat acreage. I listened very carefully to what he said just now. I am of the impression that the Minister of Agriculture has also made a somewhat similar statement to the effect that it might be wise to divert certain acreage from the producion of wheat to the production of livestock.

But I think one has got to be extremely careful how one attempts to do that because the result could very easily be a surplus of livestock and a surplus of livestock will be far more difficult to handle than a surplus of grain. We have had that experience in the past with hogs. We know what happens when we have a surplus of hogs. You cannot hold them. They have got to move when they are at a certain weight and the result is that you completely wreck the market. Therefore we have got to be very careful in that regard unless we are prepared to adopt some such proposal as the soil bank in the United States. Personally I am not advocating that because I do not believe there is any necessity of reducing acreage. In the light of the world situation today, with 50 per cent of the population of the world undernourished, our problem is to find ways and means of getting the wheat to the people who are hungry.

I think the United States today is giving a wonderful example of how surplus food can be got to hungry people. Instead of worrying about reducing acreage, let the government explore every means of getting our surplus wheat to nations who are unable to obtain it through the normal channels of trade. Let the government make that wheat available to them for their own currency or by barter or, in the case of absolute distress, by gift. It would be far better to make that wheat available by gift than to reduce the acreage. If letting these people have our wheat meant that somebody in this country had to go without I would not make the suggestion, but there is no suggestion that anyone would be penalized as the result of making such gifts.

The first thing is to accept foreign currency, especially sterling, and use that sterling for the purchase of commodities in the sterling area which we are purchasing at the present time from the United States. I am encouraged to hope that the government may give consideration to that proposal because I recall that on December 3, 1953, the present Prime Minister voted in support of the acceptance of sterling. Therefore I am hoping that the Conservative government may even yet consider the desirability of such action.

We in this group have argued ever since 1952 that farm produce should be sold in this country under a two-price system, that is that farm commodities sold in the domestic market should be sold at a parity price and our exports at the best price obtainable. By "parity price" we merely mean a price that bears a fair relationship to the price of other commodities. We believe that should be the policy in regard to wheat and wheat that is to be exported should be sold preferably through the international wheat agreement or at least supported at a price that bears a fair relationship to cost. Then to the extent that the total price received by the farmers for agricultural produce gives them an income less than their fair share, deficiency payments might very well be made.

There is a good reason why grain growers have the right to expect better consideration than they have received in the past. Let us not forget that shortly after the war the government of that day signed the British wheat agreement and they said that was to be regarded as a form of stabilization. Let us not forget that as the result of the British wheat agreement the farmers of this country lost $431 million representing the difference between what they would have received on the world market and the price they received under the British wheat agreement. But not only that, they sold wheat in the domestic market for the same price which meant a loss to the farmers of another $136.9 million. All in all, as the result of the government wheat policy in those days, the farmers during that period lost a total of $568 million.

I know that many people are under the delusion that the grain producers of this country have been subsidized. The grain producers have never been subsidized. They sold at world market prices. The only government in the world that forced farmers to accept less than the world market price was the Liberal government of the past. In view of the fact that the farmers of this country subsidized Canadian consumers for a number of years to the extent of $136 million they have a right to look upon that $136 million as a premium that they paid on a form of insurance that guaranteed that they would get fair prices in the future. Therefore the farmers have every right today to expect the government to stabilize the price of grain at a fair level along with other farm commodities.

I am glad to see the government bringing down this legislation. I am glad to hear that the government is going to bring down additional legislation regarding support prices. I do not expect the government to redress all the evils of the former government. The former government showed a total lack of appreciation of the welfare of the farmers and I am hoping that in the next few months this government will be able to undo a lot of the evil that the former government did.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I think that at the present time the people of Canada are more concerned about what they are going to get in the way of legislation from the present government than they are about trying to find fault with what has happened during the last several years. The people of Canada were asked to pass a verdict on June 10 and they voted for more members representing the party of the then opposition than they did for those representing the former government, indicating that they believed the promises made by the present Prime Minister and thought they were worthy of support. Therefore I suggest that what the people of Canada are interested in now is to what extent the Prime Minister and the government are prepared to go to carry out the promises held out to the people by the Prime Minister and on the basis of which he holds his present office. In my opinion the government will be judged by the extent to which they justify the hopes that they raised when they were asking for support at that time.

My purpose this afternoon is to indicate what I think the people of western Canada were led to expect from the statements of the present Prime Minister in regard to this very matter and to indicate that I hope the bill goes some substantial way toward meeting those hopes and promises. I think that is what we have a right to expect when the government acts in a matter about which it has taken a very definite stand in the past. In that regard I wish to refer to what the present Prime Minister said on March 14, 1957 as recorded on page 2188 of Hansard. There the present Prime Minister spoke in these words:

> Mr. Chairman, the amendments that are provided for in the resolution now before this committee were set forth yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in these words as reported at page 2161 of Hansard:
> ". . . that the maximum amount of loan to an individual producer be raised from $1,500 to $3,000; second, that the rate of interest, which is 5 per cent at present, be left to the determination of the governor in council; and loans be extended by one month by moving the opening date forward from October 1 to September 1."

The Prime Minister went on to say:

> That in general represents the changes that are to be made when the bill is brought before the house. I believe that what is being done here represents a complete disregard of the wishes and requirements of all western farm organizations and of farmers throughout westen Canada.

As found at page 2189 of Hansard the present Prime Minister went on to say:

> Those in general summarize the arguments that we in this party have advanced through the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. They represent the stand we have taken since 1952. We believe that the only salvation for the western farmer, with his markets lost and his wheat therefore unmarketable, is that there should be cash advances. Second, we believe that every encouragement should be given to the farmer to provide his own storage, and that in the provision of such storage additional write-offs should be permitted when determining the amount of his income tax.
> We believe that under proper circumstances there should be provision for cash advances on farm-stored grain similar to the system in effect in the United States.

There was a definite pronouncement in the house by the present Prime Minister on behalf of his party. I am waiting with great anticipation to see if this bill puts in force any system of cash advances on farm-stored grain similar to the system in effect in the United States. It seems to me that the suggestion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon of permitting a maximum advance up to $3,000 is not in accordance with the hopes held out to the farmers at the time the present government was appealing for support.

Just look at what it amounts to, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the average farm would not be bigger than three quarter sections. Supposing the specified acreage on such a farm were 400 acres. The amount of help which a farmer could get under this proposal would be $1,200. He then has to repay half of the amount he gets from any grain subsequently delivered. He would only be able to deliver these six bushels per specified acre over a period of a year, and assuming he takes a full year to deliver it he probably has, on an average, $600 for perhaps nine months. But, supposing one figures he has $900 for the whole year? What does this proposal mean? The only thing he gets out of it is firstly that it will be easier to get the money from the elevators than from the banks. And, as I understand the proposal, secondly to cancel the interest on that small amount. Today the farmer is in a much worse position than he was on June 10, and certainly far worse than he was a year ago, yet the measure of relief held out by the present government is the cancellation of interest which will not amount to more than $40 or $45, on an average.

So there may be no mistake as to what the people of western Canada really expected of the present government, let me read some more of what the present Prime Minister said, as reported at page 2188 of Hansard for March 14, 1957:

> For several years we in this party have been supporting the need for cash advances. In 1952, as reported in Hansard for December 17 of that year, Hon. George Drew, then leader of the opposition, supported an amendment which had been moved recommending legislation providing for the payment to producers in respect of farm-stored grain of an advance equal to 75 per cent of the initial price established August 1 in each crop year.

I believe the initial price then was $1.20, it might have been $1.40, and this proposal would result in the payment of around 90 cents a bushel. I continue quoting:

> Our only change over the passing years has been that while 75 per cent was the amount asked for at that time, the demand since has been generally that 50 per cent should be advanced. That demand has been universal, and in the face of that demand the bringing in of a loan system again is a denial of the wishes of farmers everywhere.

Now, what do we have proposed today? The proposal was scaled down to 50 per cent of the initial advance. Supposing you take the initial advance at $1.40, less the charges to Fort William which would get it down to $1.20; 50 per cent of that is 60 cents a bushel, not 50 cents as proposed. But it goes farther than that. There was no idea, as I understand it, of restricting the basis of advance to six bushels per specified acre. What I think many people in western Canada had in mind as proposed was what the present Prime Minister had said himself, a system of cash advances like that in force in the United States. There was no rigid low limit there such as the limit of $3,000 proposed here. Under the proposed set-up the farmer is to get no more than $3,000 and that is to be repaid out of his deliveries so that at the end of the year actually he will be no better off than under the present system by means of which he could also get $3,000. It was to be repaid in the same way from deliveries of grain.

The Prime Minister referred to what Mr. Drew had said on the matter, and said the only change was a reduction from 75 per cent to 50 per cent. Here is what Mr. Drew said, as referred to by the Prime Minister, and as found at page 858 of Hansard for December 17, 1952. The amendment to the amendment to which Mr. Drew was speaking was:

> To recommend legislation providing for the payment to producers, in respect to farm-stored grain, of an advance equal to 75 per cent of the initial price as established at August 1 in each crop year.

In dealing with this subamendment the former leader of the opposition, Mr. Drew, said:

> In effect this subamendment does two things. It is a proposal that legislation be introduced to provide for a cash advance to producers in respect of their farm-stored grain equal to 75 per cent of the initial payment the producer would have received if he had been able to deliver that grain to an agency of the wheat board.

There is no suggestion there that it should be only on six bushels per specified acre. It speaks about "that grain" and "the grain on hand". Then, Mr. Drew referred to his own remarks in the early stages of the same debate, and he quotes his own remarks. I again call your attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the present Prime Minister referred to this statement and said that the only change that would be made by them was to reduce the payment from 75 per cent to 50 per cent. Here is what Mr. Drew said:

> The whole system of handling and distribution has broken down. The government, no matter what its explanation may be, has failed to take effective steps to provide for the handling of grain, in spite of the knowledge many months ago, and the warnings many months ago, that this situation was going to arise. In western Canada today there are many farmers, with huge quantities of wheat and other grains worth considerable sums of money, who are unable to get money at this time to cover their harvesting and living expenses because of their inability to deliver that grain to market.
> This is a situation with which the government should deal immediately. It is urgent and calls for attention without delay.

I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the idea held out to the farmers at that time. It was that many farmers who had huge quantities of wheat on hand should be able to turn that wheat into cash, and this was something that should be dealt with without delay. There appeared to be no idea of restricting it to six bushels, no idea of restricting it to $3,000. When the suggestion was made by the former administration to help the individual farmer to the extent of a loan of $3,000, the present Prime Minister felt very dissatisfied. He said this at page 2188 of Hansard for March 14, 1957:

> I summarize our attitude towards this resolution and the bill to be founded thereon—

The bill being referred to was to give help up to $3,000. I admit the help was to be given through the banks and the farmers preferred to deal through the elevator companies, but what does this present proposal do? Does it give more than $3,000? Does it provide that they can have money until they deliver their wheat? They have to pay the debt off within a year if they can deliver up to six bushels an acre. The only thing accomplished by this proposal is merely a rebate of interest. Here is what the present Prime Minister had to say about the earlier proposal:

> I summarize our attitude toward this resolution and the bill to be founded thereon as follows. What is being given to the farmer is a stone when he is asking for bread, and what is being provided under this resolution is something unwanted by the farmer, something totally ineffective to meet his needs, and something which in effect will be inoperative, as was the legislation to a large extent during the past year.

I cite that passage to the present Prime Minister—they are his own words—in regard to this former bill. He said, "It is totally inadequate". Is $3,000 today more adequate than it was a year ago? I wonder. This was said to be a stone a year ago or less. It was said to be a stone on March 14. According to the words of the present leader of the government, "What is being provided is something unwanted by the farmer". I submit that the farmer wanted help then; he wants help now. But after all the speeches that were made to him on the floor of this house by the former leader of the Progressive Conservative party, endorsed by the present Prime Minister, he expected more help than this proposal of an advance which he must pay back within a year, limited to $3,000 and also limited to the extent of 50 cents a bushel on wheat and to the extent of 6 bushels an acre on his specified acreage.

Mr. Churchill: Are you going to vote against this bill?

Mr. Tucker: I am saying that anything that is given by this present government that will help the farmers is something that I will vote for.

Mr. Churchill: You have another ten minutes.

Mr. Tucker: What I am saying is this,—

Mr. Harkness: You have changed your mind about these cash advances. You were against them a year ago.

Mr. Tucker: I never said I was against cash advances.

Mr. Harkness: You have changed your mind.

Mr. Tucker: The Minister of Agriculture is saying something that is not correct.

Mr. Harkness: Oh, no.

Mr. Tucker: I said a year ago, as stated by the hon. member for Melville, that the farm organizations in a conference had asked for advances through the bank and I said that it had been the policy of the Liberal government for many years, in handling wheat through the wheat board, to listen very much to the wishes of the farm organizations. I said that when they had asked for this method then I thought the government was justified in giving this method to the farmers.

Mr. Harkness: Did that fellow shoot you on television because you were in favour of cash advances?

Mr. Tucker: I will say to the Minister of Agriculture that he is not going to get away with doing nothing by talking about what the previous government did or did not do. They are going to have to answer as to whether or not they carried out their promises.

Mr. Harkness: We are doing it as fast as we can.

Mr. Studer: With a stone.

Mr. Tucker: Is this really such a great advance? If this is as fast as the present government is going to move to carry out its promises, it is going to take a long time to get very much done.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Tucker: Let the Minister of Agriculture say what difference there is, except in the manner of getting it, between getting $3,000 now and getting $3,000 under the proposal six months ago.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. Churchill: If you have not figured that out you should not be here.

Mr. Tucker: What is the difference? At that time, as I recall it, there was not even the rigid limitation there is in this bill. Suppose a man has a half-section, suppose therefore his specified acreage is, we will say, 300 bushels; the most that he can get under this measure is $900.

Mr. Studer: Three hundred acres.

Mr. Tucker: Yes, 300 acres; at six bushels a specified acre, that makes 1,800 bushels. All he will be able to get is $900.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is a rebate of interest.

Mr. Tucker: The interest? I have already dealt with that matter. It is really all that is being given. The interest on $900 at 5 per cent for say nine months is three-quarters of $45—around—$35. Is this carrying out the promise of the present Prime Minister that we were going to have a system like that existing in the United States, under which farmers are going to get money on the huge quantities of wheat they had in hand?

We are told by the Minister of Agriculture that they are proceeding as fast as they can to carry out their promises. Here is the way they are doing so on one specific question. What have they done? Under the present legislation they have provided less in regard to what small farmers could get. All they are providing differently is that the farmer gets the money from the elevator company instead of from the bank and there is rebate of interest to the extent of perhaps $40.

I want to say that as far as we are concerned,—and I think it is true of all members from western Canada, regardless of party—we think our farmers in western Canada are in a position where they are entitled to receive some real assistance in their present difficulties until their wheat can be disposed of. I really wonder whether the government thinks that this measure is going to satisfy the people of western Canada after all they had to say about the deficiencies and lack of effectiveness of the measure brought forward by the last government.

Mr. Churchill: Does it satisfy you?

Mr. Tucker: As I have already said,—

Mr. Churchill: You have said that you are going to vote for it.

Mr. Tucker: As has been said, half a loaf is better than none. I was led to believe that I could expect a great measure of amelioration of our present situation under the leadership of my good friend the present Prime Minister, the great tribune from the west, the man who was going to do things that have never been done before for western Canada. He made the speeches that I have read and they cannot be denied. Then we get this measure. Can anyone say that this measure does not fall far short of what we were led to expect in western Canada, even though it does mean giving $35, $40 or $45 as a rebate of interest to our hard-pressed farmers? On their behalf I will eagerly accept what assistance is now offered, but I am not going to tell them that this is the kind of measure we expected from the government, after the high hopes that were held out.

Mr. Cardiff: Vote against it.

Mr. Tucker: I know you would like to see that. Would it not be something? Hon. gentlemen opposite held out hopes of really constructive and effective action. Then they bring in a measure that goes such a short distance and even want me to vote against that. Judging by what they have done now I expect that they are going to do so little that we had better accept as quickly as possible anything they do.

An hon. Member: Why don't you sit down? You do not want us to vote.

Mr. Tucker: I know you would like me to sit down; I can understand that. But after all, I understood that the attitude of the leader of your party was that parliament should be permitted to speak its mind.

Mr. Churchill: You approve of that now.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Discuss the principles of the bill.

Mr. Tucker: I am discussing the principle of the bill. It goes such a short distance that I am just pointing it out for the edification of my hon. friends. Let me read again what the Prime Minister held out and express the hope that he will yet reconsider and make this bill into something more in line with the needs of western Canada and more in line with the hopes he held out when those neighbours of both his and mine voted for him. Here is what he said, as reported at page 2189 of Hansard of March 14, 1957:

> . . . the only salvation for the western farmer, with his markets lost and his wheat therefore unmarketable, is that there should be cash advances.

Is this such a cash advance measure when you can get up to $3,000 which is taken back from you within a year and can market only up to six bushels per specified acre? Is this the solution which the Prime Minister had in mind?

Is it to be said that after what happened to them in their attempt at Washington to get some reconsideration of the surplus disposal policy of the United States that they the government really expect any great amelioration of the marketing problem? The situation is still there, just the same and worse.

Then the Prime Minister has said there should be cash advances; now this is really a temporary advance, repayable within a year. Is this going to really help our farmers in the way in which they were led to believe they would be helped? The Prime Minister said:

> We believe that every encouragement should be given to the farmer to provide their own storage and that with the provision of such storage, additional writeoffs should be permitted when determining the amount of his income tax.

I hope that the government will carry out that promise.

It was suggested from time to time that that should be done right in the Wheat Board Act so there would be no doubt about it but, in any event, this is something which should be done at this session of parliament and without delay, because the situation in western Canada is very difficult as the Prime Minister very well knows. I would like the government to give consideration to this question and the Minister of Trade and Commerce can answer it if he wishes to do so: does he seriously suggest that this proposal he has just made carries out the promises of the Prime Minister who said: "We believe that under proper circumstances there should be provision for cash advances on farm-stored grain similar to the system in effect in the United States."

Mr. Churchill: Every promise made by the Prime Minister will be carried out.

Mr. Tucker: Well, when? We were assured by the present government that they were going to speedily carry out some of these promises. Is this how fast they are going to proceed? We keep getting stories; we keep hearing suggestions that it is not going to be done this session as it should be in order to show that the government is really endeavouring to carry out its promises. I suggest to the Prime Minister, and he knows the people in western Canada as well as I do—

An hon. Member: He knows them better.

Mr. Tucker: Well if he knows them better he will act at this stage and I suggest to him that if he wishes to hold the goodwill he has at the present time in western Canada by carrying out his promises he is going to have to go a good deal further in carrying them out than has been proposed in this bill.

Grain

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, before I became a member of parliament my constituents used to ask me "Why is it, when we have so many representatives from the west in the Liberal party and on the government side of the house, that the farmers are unable to receive more in the way of assistance?" After listening to the hon. member for Rosthern this afternoon I can assure you I will be able to go back and tell them why.

Now in speaking on this resolution on advance payments on farm-stored grain I would like to take the opportunity of expressing the appreciation of the farmers I represent that this measure should be introduced at this early stage of the session.

I noticed that the last speaker, in telling the Prime Minister that he should be getting on with these things, failed to mention that a lot of this legislation could have been passed had it not been for the amount of verbiage to which we have had to listen from the opposite side of the house.

I would also like to mention at this time that the farmers are pleased that the advances on grain are on all grain and not on wheat alone for that would penalize those farmers who attempted to reduce their wheat acreage. I would point out, as the hon. member for Melville well knows, that this has been the practice of many of the farmers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan during the last couple of years. The result is of course that we have had a considerable volume of coarse grains as well as wheat being stored on the prairie farms.

Now one of the most serious problems facing agriculture and the prairie economy generally has been the lack of cash in the hands of farmers at the completion of harvesting and this has meant unpaid taxes, fuel and other bills, and has created a serious credit situation, not only for the farmer himself but for the merchants and dealers in the small villages and towns who have been providing goods and services on credit to the farmer. The inability of the farmer to dispose of any substantial amount of his production of grains at harvest time has created the situation. This has been steadily worsening especially during the past two years and has now become very critical.

The legislation the government is bringing in is both bold and imaginative; it was refused by the former government but it will do much to prevent any further deterioration in the farmers' cash position. In spite of what the hon. member for Melville said, the former government failed to recognize the seriousness of the farmers' cash position. Their half-hearted efforts to deal with the problem have forced the farmer to further increase his indebtedness by borrowing from the banks and this has only aggravated the situation. This policy of the former government largely contributed to the fact that many farm people decided to quit the business and seek employment elsewhere before their credit condition got into a state from which they would be unable to extricate themselves.

Farm organizations, prairie business men who supply the goods and services to enable the farmer to operate his holdings and the farmers themselves have been waiting patiently for this legislation to be adopted by this house because they accepted the assurances of the Prime Minister that this would be done. They realize that this legislation is only to take care of their critical situation, whether it arises this year as it has, or in future years, and that it is not a solution to their overall problems. Farmers are counting on the farm legislation and the long-term program of national development as indicated in the speech from the throne to bring more stability to this basic industry and eventually make unnecessary this legislation which we are discussing today.

The farmers realize that national development, in co-operation with the provinces, in such things as the South Saskatchewan dam, the Beechwood project in New Brunswick and the Red river valley water development program, now under study by the Manitoba government, would contribute much to the economic well-being, not only of the people of the areas directly concerned but of the whole nation.

Furthermore the fact that the government by bringing in this legislation has shown that it intends to live up to these commitments will reassure the people of this nation that it intends to carry out its long-term policy of national development and through it build a better and more healthy Canada.

Payment of cash advances on farm-stored grain is actually not something new. The wheat board has been paying advances on grain delivered by the farmer to the board since its inception, the final payment being made as the grain is sold. This particular legislation becomes necessary since the board, the sole purchasing agency, is unable to take delivery of the farmers' grain because of the congested commercial storage space. Now, what was the answer of the former government to the same situation? You will remember they brought out their grain loan program wherein they would guarantee to the banks 10 per cent of the loan made to the farmer.

Hon. members may remember that a program was brought out under which farmers were able to borrow $3,000 if they possessed the required security. Unfortunately this measure never worked out in practice as it was intended because if a farmer had the $3,000 security which was required of him he was able to borrow without the guarantee: if he did not, then he could not borrow in any circumstances. The result was that very few farmers in the west took advantage of that particular legislation.

The hon. member for Rosthern mentioned that when the farmer got through he would not have too much money left anyway. What this legislation does is pay for a portion of the farmer's grain before he delivers it. Naturally he would not expect to be paid for it again when he delivered it to the elevator. The government set up this program under which the wheat board will pay the farmer an advance on his grain; when he delivers the grain the balance of the payment will be made to him after certain deductions have been made in respect of the money already advanced. This will ensure that a certain amount of money is available to him throughout the year.

I think this scheme will enable the farmers to finance their operations more easily, and at the same time it will protect the wheat board in its operations. I think the western farmer is going to be very pleased with this legislation and this government should be commended on bringing it in at this time. It is to be hoped that this legislation will not be held up by lengthy debate.

The seriousness of the credit situation throughout the whole prairie economy places on this house the responsibility of passing this bill at the earliest possible moment in order that the wheat board can get the cash out to the farmers at once.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Assiniboia made a comprehensive statement on behalf of our party earlier this afternoon and it is therefore my intention to be as brief as possible in order to accommodate supporters of the government or other hon. members who may wish to comment on this proposed legislation.

However, I feel it is my duty to express a certain amount of satisfaction on behalf of the grain producers I represent, and grain producers generally, now that we have reached, to some extent, the main objective for which hon. members of this group have fought so persistently. I am glad to welcome this legislation as far as it goes. I think we shall have to describe this in the usual manner by saying it is a step in the right direction.

We were, of course, very interested and not a little amused by the statement made by the hon. member for Melville, remembering some of the things he had to say when he was sitting on the other side of the house. While he was speaking my good friend from Selkirk mentioned to me a gentleman in his district who believed in self-imposed punishment and who, whenever he had done anything wrong, used to fill his boots with peas and walk all the way to Winnipeg. It seems to me that that record is beaten today, because we have witnessed the spectacle of the hon. member for Melville walking all the way from Melville with peas in his boots. Apparently he was in good shape when he got here, because I note that he did a perfect verbal Irish jig.

I also wish to commend the hon. member for Rosthern for having apparently changed his mind substantially on this question. I cannot help but recall that last year, the year before, and in the years before that, whenever we placed this proposal before the house—and I wish to remind hon. members that it was always the C.C.F. party which took the lead in this matter—when we offered this cake on a platter, the hon. member for Rosthern would not even touch the icing; but today he ate half way through the platter before he sat down. He was not satisfied with this legislation; if I read his remarks correctly, he wanted the government to go the whole way.

I am quite prepared to go further than the government has gone. But it is interesting to note that members of the Liberal party who not long ago were not prepared to take even the first step in this matter are now demanding the whole cake.

This proposal would be of material assistance to prairie farmers in enabling them to convert their grain into immediate cash. To that extent we welcome it and commend the government for it and I, personally, take a certain amount of satisfaction in recalling that it was a minister from the province of Manitoba who introduced the first real legislation on this subject. We are known as "the keystone province" in this country and we hope this is going to be the key to bigger and better things in the future. But I believe we must not leave this question without taking into account the limitations inherent in this legislation and in the situation in which we find ourselves. I believe the government should seriously consider at this time taking a further step and, I believe, a practical step, namely, to provide government storage for grain.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1958.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the making of advances on account of initial payments for grain produced in the designated area, as defined in the Canadian Wheat Board Act, prior to delivery thereof upon undertakings by the producers thereof to deliver the grain to the Canadian wheat board; and to provide for the costs, expenses and other financial obligations required in the making of such advances; such measure to include such further related and consequential provisions as are necessary to give effect to the foregoing.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I had just drawn attention to the fact that the measure we are now discussing is of a limited nature and that, in my humble opinion, further steps would be required to cover the whole question of the disposal of grain. It seems to me that the government should take into immediate consideration certain further steps to put the available grain into a sales position, as efficiently and as quickly as possible, and to make provision for the disposal of it at fair prices to the producers. I would advocate three steps by which I think that this could accomplished.

First of all, I would advocate that the government finance, either directly or through the wheat board, the construction of additional storage space in this country on a huge and imaginative scale. I would advocate that the government finance the construction of additional storage, either at terminals or off-terminal sites at strategic positions, sufficiently large to store about 300 million bushels of grain. This grain would then be in position for immediate shipment in the event that the efforts of the Department of Trade and Commerce or our trade commissioners meet with the optimistic success which we hope they will. One of these days we may find that we will get a sudden flood of orders for grain from various parts of the world, and they may come at a time when the grain stored on farms cannot be readily delivered to the shipping points.

As a matter of fact, even under conditions of surplus and congestion, this has already occurred. There were times when the wheat board made calls for certain types of grain during the winter or early spring months when the roads were not passable and the country elevators were not able to supply the grain required, in spite of the fact that there were hundreds of millions of bushels of this grain stored on farms. In addition to this I feel that looking at it from the long-range point of view there is no better national asset that we could have than approximately 300 million bushels of grain stored in properly constructed storage, which grain could be kept for an indefinite period.

Mr. Churchill: Does the hon. member mean over and above the storage capacity now?

Mr. Zaplitny: That is right. We have in the past assumed we were on the gold standard. I think that assumption has pretty well evaporated, but since this country is chiefly an agricultural country I feel we would be better off to be on a grain standard than the gold standard because we would have as an asset a useful and usable product which, with all due respect, in comparison with gold would give a much greater degree of stability and give the world a far better sense of stability than the digging of gold in one country and burying it in another.

As a second step, I would advocate that the government take some immediate steps to give this house a little more encouragement than has been the case so far with regard to the establishment of an international food bank. I would not for a moment assume that this government or this parliament could, by itself, set up an international food bank. However, we can do our share. We must start on a national basis with the role which we would play in the general set-up of an international food bank.

The provision of proper facilities, as I have mentioned, for the storage of grain would be one step towards that objective and would have this other advantage that once the grain is delivered to such storage, once it is in the hands of the wheat board and the farmer has been paid for the grain, the wheat board knows where the grain is and that it can be kept in good condition. These are advantages over this idea of cash advances which we are now using as a temporary or, at least, as an emergency measure.

On the question of the international food bank, the hon. member for Assiniboia has already discussed the matter. There were some exchanges during his remarks about who was responsible for the lack of action on the part of Canada in taking her part in the establishment of such a food bank. Apparently there were accusations and denials going back and forth between former ministers and present ministers. I feel that so far as this government is concerned, they are firmly on record as to what they intend to do. According to a press report in the Montreal Gazette of May 20, the Prime Minister is reported as having said at Red Deer, Alberta—he is not quoted verbatim, but these are the words he used:

> Earlier at Red Deer he advocated formation of an international food bank under NATO to ease the threat to wheat markets from "vast" world wheat surpluses.

Then the article continues to give greater detail as to what the present Prime Minister advocated. In spite of what may have been the case up until now, and without trying to place the blame for the lack of action as between the former minister and the present minister, the present Prime Minister is on record, speaking in a province which is very interested in this question of grain, as being in favour of setting up an international food bank.

As a third step, I would advocate—I will only touch on this because it is my intention to go into this matter in much greater detail in the general debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne—that the government show some real action in the removal of trade barriers. I must admit that so far, on this particular point, I have been disappointed.

I am one of those who believe that Canada's destiny in the future lies in the direction of freer trade. We had hoped that we would be moving in that direction rather rapidly, in fact I have been hoping for that for a considerable number of years. There was a time when the Liberal party of this country was the low-tariff party, while the Conservatives had earned a reputation as being the high-tariff party. When the change of government took place in 1935, at which time I cast my first vote, I thought perhaps we would see some real action towards the removal of trade barriers. It took 22 years for the disillusionment to become rather complete.

We have a new administration now, and in spite of their past—I say that not in any sense of bitterness but because I think perhaps the members of the new government are big enough men to be able to forget some of the past of the party—perhaps they will now show an example to the world by taking some real action toward the removal of trade barriers. They were given an excellent opportunity to demonstrate that only recently when the government of the United Kingdom made quite a sensational, and in my opinion excellent proposition to this country to establish a free trade area as between the United Kingdom and Canada over a period of years. I hoped that not only would the government have taken them up immediately on that proposition, but have made some plans to widen that proposition to include all the commonwealth countries.

Here again I find that on the record the present Prime Minister seems to have something of that sort in mind. But according to the Ottawa Citizen of May 15, the Prime Minister is reported to have said at Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, the following:

> He also called for a commonwealth economic conference to restore Canada's markets, loans to Japan to buy wheat here and action to maintain European markets in the face of the proposed European common market system.

May I just say that with regard to the last part of that statement that in the last few days news has come out to the effect that Great Britain is now prepared to include agricultural products in the European common market system, something which they had been deliberately withholding in the hope, I believe, of coming to some terms with Canada for a free-trade area. But apparently because of the singular lack of action and, as a matter of fact, the almost complete lack of interest that was shown by the Minister of Finance at the Mont Tremblant conference, subsequently the British government, I think quite rightly, has perhaps come to the conclusion that Canada is not the least bit interested in the establishment of a free-trade area and removal of trade barriers between those two countries and is now looking elsewhere where countries are more favourably disposed.

If that happened I warn this government that it would be a serious blow to the agricultural industry of this country and not only to the agricultural industry. I can assure him that so far as all of western Canada is concerned and so far as the maritimes are concerned, this government and his party would lose a terrific amount of prestige and support if it were found that the new Conservative government is no different with regard to trade barriers from the old Conservative governments that we have had. I issue that as a friendly warning and add to that warning that it is going to take on the part of the Prime Minister a great deal more than the stentorian voice and the rolling phrase to cover up this lack of action.

The people of the prairies and the people of the maritimes are interested in seeing an east-west trade arrangement between the United Kingdom and Canada. I am not going to go further into that matter at this moment because I realize that other members perhaps want to participate in this debate. However, it is my intention to go into more detail later.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, unlike the other members who have spoken on this particular bill, I want to confine my remarks to the bill itself, and they are going to be very short and to the point. I was greatly interested in the remarks made by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Melville, when he said that the Liberals had they been given time, would have enacted this legislation. I was interested in some of the statements he made as to what Mr. Howe had said to the effect that this legislation was not necessary, that the farmers were quite satisfied with the interim financing bill as it was, that all farm organizations had approved it.

I come from a farm and I am directly concerned with the interim financing bill and the legislation that is now before us. My mind goes back to a night not too long ago when the hon. member for Rosthern was attempting to defend the interim financing bill on a television program. I think most hon. members will recall what happened that night when his image was blasted off the television screen by a shotgun. Perhaps the former minister of agriculture feels that he is justified in saying that the leaders of the farm organizations and the people he represented were satisfied with that bill, but I think this proves rather conclusively that the farmers were not satisfied.

My mind also goes back to a time shortly after that when the then minister of justice, Mr. Garson, attended a meeting in Minedosa and received the same treatment from the farmers. Then the last but certainly not the least occasion was when the former minister of trade and commerce attended a meeting in Morris. Here again was ample evidence of what the farmers felt about this bill. In spite of the advice the former minister of agriculture has received regarding this bill, I think the actions of the farmers themselves speak a great deal louder.

The hon. member for Rosthern set himself up as a champion of the farmers. This is a rather belated effort. He had 22 years to be the champion of the farmer and he failed to do so. Now, all of a sudden, he expects this government to go out and accomplish miracles. He expects us to implement a policy that would require a tremendous administrative organization and to do that in the space of a few months. I know the farmers fairly well and I know that they are reasonable enough not to expect the government to come up with an administrative program of that kind, certainly not in the short space of time that they have had. I know that they are quite satisfied to have the bill as it is to help them over an extremely difficult situation. Nobody in this house or outside of it expects that this bill is going to be the answer to the farm problem, it is merely a piece of legislation designed to help the farmers over an extremely difficult period.

The need for cash in the hands of the farmers at this time need not be retold by me. I have had communications from municipalities that are in desperate need of help because of the lack of cash. Everyone, including fuel dealers and storekeepers, is feeling the pinch. I have heard member after member rise in this house and suggest that something be done to remedy unemployment. In my opinion, this is one of the ways in which you can help the unemployment situation.

We know that when the farmers have not the ready cash they are unable to buy the things that are necessary to carry on their farming operations. According to the records of machine companies, sales have gone down in the past year and you can understand how this factor reflects back in the employment field. You have serious negative factors compounding each other in the wrong direction and unless something is done to place money in the hands of the farmer so he can carry on, meet his obligations and continue farming and to keep the industries working in this country, then the situation is not going to improve. I suggest that the passing of this bill is going to do a great deal to help the farmer and to help this country in general.

(Translation):

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Chairman, from what we have heard this afternoon, it does seem that the farmers of the western provinces do not share equally with the rest of the Canadian people, in the prosperity which Canada has enjoyed in recent years.

It is also becoming more and more obvious that, since the wave of promises which has swept across our country, from coast to coast, since June 10 last, other districts in Canada are showing a degree of economic pessimism which seems quite justified as we go along.

(Text):

When the minister this afternoon introduced the legislation he gave several reasons for introducing it at this time. He mentioned the loss of markets and the increased costs. Another reason that we heard in this house previously was this.

Well to say that this is a problem inherited from the previous legislation is, in my opinion, a very weak defence. If one wants to bring in a piece of legislation, I say that is a weak way to do it, to try and bring it in, blaming somebody else for the difficulties. It reminds me of a story I was told, that as long as we live in a community, in fact as long as we live, we will find day by day there will always be problems, just the same as there are in every family. What we have inherited from our forefathers we like to conserve and to improve so we can pass it on to those who come after us.

These problems which the government is facing with respect to the western provinces are problems created because of the fact the farmers were required to produce more and were certainly getting encouragement to do so, most likely being led to believe that there would be markets for their increased production. The ministers should not blame the previous government, and I specifically refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, saying that they had inherited these problems from the former administration because these problems were caused by the increased production of the farmers out west.

Now as I want to be brief I will refer to just one aspect of this legislation which particularly strikes me, that is the free of interest aspect of these loans. I understand very clearly that in the western provinces this is a local matter but, Mr. Chairman, how many Canadians would approve of a crown corporation engaged in producing consumer goods being encouraged to go along and be given help in the form of subsidies in order to increase the volume of production of private industry?

I would like to refer to the central provinces, particularly to where I come from on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river. We also have farmers there and most of those farmers right now are trying to get away from the farm because there is a feeling coming from the west that they cannot get a reasonable sale price for the commodities they produce. Now those same farmers in my region who are obliged to call for help are now being asked to pay a further premium on that grain by having to pay taxes which will cover this free interest rate, for they are going to have to pay for it.

It may be that in the proposed legislation about which we have heard today from the Minister of Agriculture the farmers of this country will be taken care of, but may I suggest that he rectify, at least in part, the discrimination against farmers in my district. We should have some additional legislation to increase the subsidies for grain moved into distant provinces.

I would like to refer for a moment to a remark made by the speaker immediately preceding myself. He said that this help to the farmer out west would also go a long way towards reducing unemployment. Some of the farmers in the province of Quebec, and I believe also in some parts of Ontario, live by the production of pulpwood. In our district these farmers who have been engaged in the production of pulpwood for years will this year be unable to get any suitable employment in the cutting of wood. As everybody knows, unemployment insurance does not yet apply to labour on the farm.

It is my hope and expectation that the Minister of Labour—although he did not pay too much attention at question time to the questions of unemployment—will get in touch with the Minister of Agriculture who will explain to him that in the province of Quebec, and more especially along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, the farm labour force is discriminated against by this legislation now before us. This is easy to understand because, as the legislation now stands, nobody wants to work on the farm because there is no unemployment insurance benefit provided. When the farmer wants to obtain labour he finds it very difficult to do so because the sons of farmers prefer to leave the farm and work in industry where such benefits are provided.

In closing my remarks I say I will certainly support the bill, and I am sure you will not be surprised at this. I am glad to hear the gentlemen opposite clap because at least my remarks are receiving some attention and I hope that some of the smiles of approbation I see on the faces of the ministers will also be there later on when I make requests respecting other projects in my riding.

Grain

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have too much to say in respect to the present legislation, although I do not believe I can let this occasion go by without making some remarks. In the first place I do want to congratulate the government on this measure. The legislation has been brought in partly because of promises during election time and partly because I am sure the present Prime Minister, as a western representative, recognizes something of the particular and pressing needs of the Canadian wheat farmer. We are pleased that these measures are being introduced for another reason and that is that we have advocated cash advances for some considerable time now. We are happy it is now being realized that some suggestions we have made in the past are able to be used to the advantage of the western farmer.

Although we are pleased that this measure has been brought in, as the member for Acadia has already said it does not for one moment mean that it will be an entire solution to the problems of the western farmer for, after all, the real solution is for him to be able to sell his wheat at a price which will keep him in business, give him a fair share of the national income and a good standard of living. That means you have to go back and attempt to appraise the situation in the same way as a doctor would attempt to diagnose and appraise a disease of the body. Something has caused the surplus of wheat which we have now. There must be a root cause which has resulted in a surplus of which we have not been able to dispose, and I say we have to discover what this root cause is in order to find a solution to the problems of the western farmers.

We talk of surpluses. I think we will all agree that the term "surplus" is a relative term. When we talk of a surplus we should really ask ourselves: surplus to what? If we say it is surplus to what the Canadian wheat board has been able to dispose of in the normal course of trade and through the normal channels of trade, then, of course, we have a surplus. But if one thinks of surplus in terms of world need I declare that we do not have a surplus because we recognize, as the hon. member for Acadia has mentioned, that a number of the nations of the world are living on starvation level.

I hold in my hand a document which, I am inclined to believe, was referred to the other day, although I am not certain whether this was the document or not. If it is, it is worth referring to again. It was put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and was issued in April 1957 under the previous administration. It contains an article entitled "We Live in an Unequal World". The writer talks of the surpluses which apparently exist in the world, yet, at the same time, the article shows that the world is in need of those so-called surpluses. Of course, I am not going to read the entire article, but I do want to point out one or two very striking things contained in it.

The article starts out by saying that two and a half billion people live in the 80 nations of this earth but that only 8 per cent of the earth's surface is under cultivation; one-third of mankind consumes three-quarters of the worlds' food, and in spite of all the efforts of international organizations, available food supplies are barely as great today as they were before the war. In spite of increased production, food supplies are just keeping pace with the growth in population. I may interject here that this article has been prepared from a United Nations report. It contains a few diagrams, and one diagram shows three skinny men standing beside two rather fat men, and it shows that three people out of five in the world are hungry. This is what the article says in this respect:

> If all people were to have enough of the right kind of food, according to a United Nations committee of scientists, the production of cereals would have to be increased by 50 per cent.

Sometimes when we have surpluses of agricultural products we begin to talk in terms of a reduction in the quantity produced, and in terms of taking land out of production. That may be all right in certain circumstances. It would be proper to take land out of production if it were for the purpose of revitalizing the soil or for the rotation of crops in order, on a long-term basis, to get the very best out of the land. We are all aware that in the United States they have what is known as a soil bank, and I do not know why something of that kind cannot be instituted in Canada eventually. Whether the government is giving consideration to that or not, I do not know. All I am saying is that if this United Nations committee of scientists is correct in saying that production of cereals would have to be increased by 50 per cent in order that the world might be properly fed, I cannot see how we actually have a surplus of food stuffs or grains in Canada. It is true we have a surplus relative to what we have been able to dispose of through the regular channels of trade, but not a surplus in respect to the needs of the world, which only means this: if people need the food we must go behind the scenes and attempt to diagnose why we are unable to deliver it to them.

In the case of meat products, according to this article the supply of meat would have to be increased by 90 per cent. I come from a cattle country, as well as a wheat growing country. My constituency takes in part of the foothills country of southern Alberta in which some of the finest beef cattle in the world are raised. Imagine my ranchers hearing that, and knowing that in order to feed the world properly meat supplies would have to be increased by 90 per cent.

The production of milk and dairy products would have to be increased by 125 per cent; production of vegetable oils would have to be increased by 125 per cent, and the production of fruit and vegetables by 300 per cent.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, when we talk of surpluses we question whether or not we do actually have surpluses in the light of world needs. I say we do not have such surpluses. It is all very well for ministers of the crown and individuals to run around and become a bit hysterical about our failure to dispose of our surplus, but I would say this—and I claim that our social credit policy should be worthy of some study—that unless we get behind the scenes and diagnose this situation properly and find out exactly what is basically wrong we will never be able to solve our problems. Our social credit position is that unless basic financial and trade policies are changed we will never be able to solve the problem of so-called surpluses.

I hold in my hand here the preliminary report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. What does the Gordon commission report say in respect to wheat? Here is what I personally take to be a somewhat alarming statement. The report says:

> The surplus of wheat in Canada at present does not seem to have arisen out of the procedures used to market the crop.

I would take issue with the report there, but the matter is not too important for my argument. It goes on to say:

> It has resulted primarily from weather conditions.

It is all very well to make that appraisal, but I am going to ask this simple question: what kind of weather conditions do we want, anyway? Surely we want weather conditions which are most conducive to the production of those vital foods which come from the land. I have never yet seen a farmer go out into his field after he has planted his crop—let us assume the weather has been dry—and say: "my hope is that it doesn't rain; if it rains it is going to be catastrophic". Of course he does not do that.

We want the proper weather conditions that will enable the land to produce the best kind of crops and an abundance of them; surely we do. Again I would pose a question. What is land for if it is not to produce? These questions are simple ones and naturally they should be easy to answer. To my way of thinking land awaits the energy from the sun and rain from the clouds so it will produce an abundance of food. It should be that the more we are able to produce the better, but somehow or other because we have had good weather conditions it presents a problem to us. The problem is not one of overproduction. The problem, of course, is one of underconsumption. Therefore I say that what the government must do is once again look behind the scenes and see what is actually wrong and attempt to correct the basic fault.

When the present government first came into office everybody expected it was going to do something. Well, the members of the government did do something, they did a lot of talking for one thing and talk is sometimes of value. The Prime Minister went down to Dartmouth and of course he lashed out at the United States for what is sometimes known as its give-away program. I was a little amazed at this because, after all, the present Prime Minister had been sitting in this chamber for a number of sessions and while he may have been mildly critical of the United States give-away program I did not hear him raise his voice too vigorously or in very strong protest against it. Of course, he was now the Prime Minister and he had to do something and it meant making a big noise in Dartmouth and receiving lots of publicity by railling at the United States for its give-away program.

I believe it was last session I said in this house that I found it rather difficult to criticize the United States for this program. I do not know that it was altogether a give-away program either. As I see it, under this program the United States approached the nations and said, "Our Commodities Credit Corporations have amassed vast abundances of surplus agricultural products. Now, what nations of the world want to take them? If you want to take them, do so and we will talk about payment for it later." In speaking of it in this way I am only using layman's language. What they did in effect was to beat us to the punch, that is all. The previous government was in office at that time and I am not sure they raised too much hullabaloo about it.

I have found and continue to find it difficult to criticize the United States too harshly for its policy because it has accomplished something useful. In the first place it helped to feed some of the hungry nations of the world and in the second place it reasonably satisfied the farmers of the United States.

Another simple question I would ask is this. Can you criticize any nation that attempts to feed the hungry people of the world? I do not think so. I would also ask if you can criticize a government that attempts to look after its own people first? I do not think you can criticize that, either. It occurs to me that in cases like this the United States is simply beating us to the punch which is putting it in what may be considered rather vulgar language.

For example, it was drawn to our attention by press reports the other day that the United States is sending a trade commission to Japan in an effort to facilitate and increase trade with that country, and dispose of some United States agricultural products. Is the United States going to beat us to the punch there, too? The present government has had preliminary trade conferences and I am not prepared to say what has actually happened as a result of them. We cannot expect too much at the beginning and these were simply preliminary conferences. Nevertheless I would point out that we can go all around the world and call all the trade conferences we want but I contend that unless our basic fiscal and trade policies are changed we will continue to face the problems we have today in respect to the sale of our production.

There is one other matter with which I wish to deal, Mr. Chairman, and then I will not take any more of the committee's time. We would have no need for cash advances on farm-stored grain if we had been able to dispose of our surplus production and if the farm population of Canada was receiving its fair share of the national income. This means we must enter the economic field and the realm of fiscal and monetary policy.

For instance, take the matter of the price squeeze. You cannot begin to seek a solution for this problem without becoming involved in the subject of monetary and financial policy; it simply cannot be done. The price squeeze is affecting the low income of the farmers of this country. The hon. member who preceded me spoke of the farmers who are going to the cities to find work in industry. This is so because matters have reached a stage where they are unable to derive adequate income from their farm operations. I think this is particularly true in Ontario and Quebec.

I wish to deal in greater detail with the question of the price squeeze. I have in my hand some figures presented to the cabinet of the previous government on March 9, 1957 by the Western Wheat Pools dealing with western farm costs and farm prices from 1947 to 1956. They show the price of wheat as compared to the price farmers must pay for the things they buy. I do not intend to read all of this table but the last paragraph is significant and I wish to place it on the record:

> Briefly, the above table shows that in 1956 the value per bushel of wheat marketed in Saskatchewan—

This would be true anywhere in the west.

> —was almost 21 per cent below that of 1947. During the same period the western wheat grower's costs had risen by almost 46 per cent.

Surely there is something wrong with our monetary policy when we observe this sort of thing happening in respect to the price structure throughout Canada. The brief presented by the Western Wheat Pools from which I quoted also dealt with farm products apart from wheat. The cabinet received this brief and they had their officials and figure men there who could vouch for the accuracy or point out the inaccuracy of the figures contained in the tables.

In the same brief there is a table respecting over-all farm products as follows:

> Saskatchewan farm costs today are 45.9 per cent higher than they were ten years ago while farm prices are 7.1 per cent lower than they were in 1947.

That will give the committee a picture of the reason why the farmer is complaining. He is coming off at the short end of the deal. I am going to close my remarks and once again I close with an urgent appeal. I appeal, not only to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who we recognize has a problem on his hands, and I think we sympathize with him; not only to the Minister of Agriculture who is doing his best to help to solve some of these problems, but also to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to attempt to get behind the scenes so far as the trouble is concerned, appraise the disease and find out where are the roots of the disease. If you cure the body politic at the roots then the bloodstream and the patient will eventually revive and become healthy.

The Chairman: It seems to me that some members are discussing matters that are not related to the resolution. I would like to remind hon. members that speeches in committee of the whole should be strictly relevant to the resolution. May I ask hon. members to assist me in enforcing the rule of relevancy.

(Translation):

Mr. Gour: Mr. Chairman, the resolution now being considered by the committee constitutes, in my opinion, a very dangerous precedent. However, I shall support the measure.

(Text):

I will speak in English in order that my English speaking colleagues, including the Minister of Agriculture, my good friend, may understand what I said in French: This legislation sets a dangerous precedent but at the same time I will, as I have always done, endorse it because it is a form of help for the west at the moment. I will also endorse other bills that will provide help for other districts in our country.

M. Harkness: Très bien.

Mr. Gour: In my time in the house and prior the Liberal government provided large amounts of money to help the people of the west when they had no crops. At that time the federal government gave many millions of dollars to help the farmers who were in a bad position. In 1947, I think, we voted, and I was in favour of it, for a Liberal government measure that gave the western farmers $65 million and we did so because of the price of wheat at that time. Last year we took steps to protect the banks so far as losses might be involved in lending money to the people of the west who needed it.

This session we have another bill to pay cash to the farmers so that they will be able to get money without having to pay interest.

I claim that this bill establishes a dangerous precedent because the government will now have many calls for money from people who would like to secure money without having to pay interest. In my own riding we will pay this year at least $1 million for wheat or other grain from the west. The farmers of my riding also have to pay for farm machinery purchased through farm development loans or by giving their own notes to the bank. They have to pay from 5 per cent to 7 per cent interest to buy the things they need.

My riding is a dairy farming district and the farmers have to wait three years before a cow is able to give milk and they can get any money out of their investment. They have to wait three years before they can get a dollar, before they can milk the cow and sell the milk to the cheese factory. Therefore I am of the opinion that after this legislation is passed the government should bring forward other bills to give similar help to the people in other parts of Canada engaged in various occupations such as dairying, raising chickens, producing eggs, fishing and so on. After all, farmers everywhere have to pay high prices for what they buy. It is not the fault of the government. It is the fault of the prosperity we have in this country. We have a very high level of living and when we want something we have to pay a high price for it.

Therefore I support the measure and I will support other bills that I hope the Minister of Agriculture will bring forward with a view to helping the people of the east and of central Canada. I will support them as long as we are able to pay and so that we may give a square deal to every part of the country without discrimination against any particular part.

Mr. Lewry: Mr. Chairman, I wish to join with others who have welcomed the legislation to provide cash advances to the hard-pressed farmers of western Canada. But I also wish to stress that this is only one small part of necessary assistance that is needed in the agricultural industry. Cash advances are not a solution to the farmers' problems. Indeed, cash advances will only postpone the inevitable bankruptcy of the small family farm unless the government is willing to take a firm grasp of the problem and come up with a solution. Cash advances, while welcomed, will give about a six months hoist to the necessity of coming to grips with the ever-increasing problem.

Just prior to coming to Ottawa for this session I made a 4,700 mile trip round my constituency. I can tell you that the farmers are worried about the future of their industry and their livelihood. In some areas where distressing hailstorms occurred in the summer months, and because of the lack of a comprehensive crop insurance plan, the farmers have been forced to go into other labour markets at a time of decreasing employment opportunities. Some farmers have thousands of bushels of wheat in storage on their farms. Others have no storage problem. But both classes are in the same predicament. They have no ready cash.

The farmer with a crop this year will be able to take advantage of the cash advances now proposed. But what of the man who was hailed out or the farmer who has had successive crop losses? We say that a comprehensive crop insurance plan is the answer to those problems.

Again I repeat that we welcome this legislation as a stopgap at this time, but the farmers want to know if the government is going to pay lip service only to the problem in general terms or is it going to try to do something to alleviate the plight in which the farmers find themselves? Cash advances will enable farmers to pay their taxes to the hard-pressed municipalities. They will be able to pay their grocery and fuel bills and thus reestablish their credit for another few months. The legislation is worthy in that it will establish the principle, I believe, that cash advances are a right, not a hand-out at the discretion of the banking interests.

There is one point that I believe the government should be asked to clarify. Do former negotiated loans have precedence when these cash advances are paid by the elevator companies? In other words, is the paying agent obliged to make sure that before making cash advance payments the recipient is debt free of other bank loans? Would such loans have to be deducted from these new cash advances?

Since 1952, when farm costs started their unprecedented upward trend, farmers have found themselves going into debt, not to buy new equipment but to maintain their own living.

While in many other industries Canadians have seen booming conditions, the farming industry has been declining steadily. The farmers have felt the cost-price squeeze more than other Canadians. While farm prices have been sagging, costs have been soaring. Throughout my constituency the farmers have been living on the depreciation of their machinery for the past several years. This cannot continue. Cash advances will not help them replace machinery to any great extent. It will allow them only to continue existence while other parts of the Canadian economy continue to boom. The farmers of western Canada in particular are demanding a fair share of the national income.

In almost every other agricultural country the farmer is assisted and protected by the government in the interests of the whole country. Yet in this great country, built on the solid foundations laid by our pioneer agriculturists, we have had a government that refused to face the necessity of substantial assistance to this industry. The Saskatchewan wheat pool has recently published a table based on figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics. The figures show that the average farm price for wheat dropped from $1.63 in 1947 to a low of an estimated $1.29 in 1956, a drop of 21 per cent. In that same ten-year period farm costs have increased by almost 46 per cent. Similar difficulties are being experienced by almost all agricultural commodity groups, and telling wheat farmers they should cut down their seeded acreage, or go into livestock production, is no salvation to them. Livestock raisers themselves are looking to the government for legislation to stabilize prices in order to prevent further losses resulting from declining livestock prices.

It is becoming increasingly evident that farmers in western Canada cannot survive if the government refuses to accept the responsibility of providing the incentive necessary to give the industry the necessary shot in the arm. Until a planned economy is provided for by federal legislation this creeping paralysis, which now has the agricultural industry in its grasp, will continue. May I repeat, Mr. Chairman, we of the C.C.F. will support the plans for cash advances, but we want it on the record that this legislation in itself is far from a solution to the ever-increasing problem that is now on the farmers' doorstep, a problem that has been accepted by other governments as their responsibility, but which in Canada has been left to the initiative of the farmers throughout the country.

(Translation):

Mr. Landry: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take part in this debate though not as an expert on the question of wheat, for everyone knows that it takes a great deal of time for a newcomer to the House of Commons to grasp the whole implications of so complex a question as that of the wheat of the western provinces.

However, let me add that it is from a general point of view that I would like to consider this important problem, and urge the government to find the best possible solution. I should also point out that, in order to solve all problems involving a particular area of the country, the people as a whole, no less than members of parliament, should realize that the economy of the country in general depends on the particular economy of the various areas making up this country. Being a member of the great Canadian family, I sincerely believe that closer study should be made of these financial questions, which seem to involve only one part of the country but which in the end affect the entire nation.

I am pleased to say here that I heartily support any measure designed to help our fellow citizens, the western farmers, within the powers vested in this government and parliament by the constitution, provided, of course, such measures would also take into account the effects of their application on the economy of Canada as a whole.

We from Quebec are well aware that western wheat producers are faced with a genuine problem; therefore we will unhesitatingly support any measure designed to help them.

This does not mean, however, that we should overlook the sad situation prevailing at this time in almost half the province of Quebec, and more particularly in rural constituencies where our farmers' secondary industry, if not their primary industry, is the cutting of pulpwood.

Speaking on behalf of the several thousand farmers of the rural constituencies adjoining the forests of Quebec,—and I presume that many other ridings are in the same situation,—it would perhaps be appropriate to recall that, for the majority of those farmers, pulpwood is the only source of revenue on which to rely to meet the deficits arising from farming operations.

It might not be amiss to point out here that for the past four or five months, those farmers who had felt they could count on this probable revenue, have been left with growing stocks of unsold pulpwood. The difference between supply and demand has become so great that the selling price hardly covers the cost of haulage. Because of this lack of a market for pulpwood our farmers now find themselves in exactly the same predicament as the western wheat grower.

I therefore feel justified in asking the government to extend its financial aid policy so as to give our own farmers the same advantage which it is now proposed to extend to their brothers in western Canada.

As I have already said in the first speech I made in this house, growing unemployment as a result of this depressed market for pulpwood constitutes a high priority problem for the government. I think that the situation in which the western farmers now find themselves, which I, for one, find most unfortunate and which the government is well advised to deal with as quickly as possible, bears peculiar resemblance to the situation of our own farmers with regard to pulpwood.

Once more I urge the government to consider the problem of pulpwood as a national problem, which will no doubt affect other parts of the country if the government fails to take the necessary remedial action.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we are happy to be able to contribute to the solution of the problems which exist in western Canada, but the people of Canada would be happier still if the government were to extend its help to every agricultural field in this country, where the problem of unemployment seems to be daily growing worse.

(Text):

Mr. Bryson: It is not my intention at this time to make any extended remarks of a general nature, Mr. Chairman, in line with your request of a moment ago. As a matter of fact, I am going to forego even the luxury of commenting on the verbal thunderbolts that were hurled with great inaccuracy this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern. We do welcome this legislation.

My purpose in rising is to pose a couple of questions that are in my mind so that when the minister next makes his reply he may take note of them and possibly we shall have some further clarification. Certainly no one in this group has any illusions regarding the over-all importance of this legislation as a solution of the agricultural problem. The farmers have no illusions and I am sure, at least I hope, the government itself has no illusions that this piece of legislation is going to be of tremendous importance in solving the very serious farm problem that exists in this country. I am happy to note that according to the speech from the throne the government contemplates legislation having to do with the stabilization of farm prices. If that is a comprehensive program, then this piece of legislation which we are discussing at the moment will be an important part of an over-all federal agricultural policy.

I believe the Prime Minister's remarks of last year concerning the bank loan legislation when he said it was a stopgap can be aptly applied to the present proposal. He went on to say that it was only a postponement of effective action. I hope, therefore, that no one on the government side is under any illusions as to the great importance of this measure. We welcome this measure for two or three reasons.

First of all, we are all conscious of the plight of agriculture and in particular the plight of the western grain farmer. For the benefit, if it is necessary, of new members from eastern Canada who possibly—and quite understandably I suppose—are not too well acquainted with what is happening out there, I would advise you to recall the figures that were placed on Hansard a day or two ago by the hon. member for Springfield when he pointed out that in three of the last five years, western agriculture has received no labour income of any kind. When you consider that there are over 200,000 permit holders, you begin to appreciate something of the magnitude of this problem. To put it another way, it is just about the same thing as saying that all of the people in Ottawa had no labour income for a three-year period. What would that mean? That would not only be a national disaster but a national disgrace.

When you look at the matter in that light, you begin to appreciate something of the enormity of the situation as it is found in western Canada. You will immediately say, "That cannot be so. How are these people living? You cannot exist if you have no income over a period of time". That is probably true. But may I remind hon. members that what the farmer has been doing in the last five years is living off his depreciation. The day is coming, and shortly, when he is going to be obliged to replace that investment if he is to stay in business. In the meantime he is caught in this spiraling of costs. In 1946 a combine cost something in the neighbourhood of $3,700 or $3,800; today that same combine of an inferior quality will cost well over $7,000. Hence it is going to become more difficult to make these replacements which will certainly require to be made.

In this legislation I see something of some value. First of all, we must go along in agreement that it is going to put some ready cash into the hands of farmers who are desperately in need of it. It is going to be of some assistance in that direction. But in this legislation I see something more and it is possibly as important. It is going to do something to iron out the great inequities in the marketing of grain under the quota system.

What I have in mind is this. In my area there are a great many points that to date have not been able to market their initial 300-bushel unit because the elevators have been plugged. Possibly at the next station the farmers have been able to get rid of their unit quota. In my own case I have been able to market two bushels because I am in the fortunate position of living on the railroad that hauls grain to Churchill. I am therefore in an enviable position as compared with some of my neighbours to the south of me a few miles. Therefore I see in this piece of legislation something that is going to iron out these inequities. For that reason I think it has a great deal of merit.

I am going to ask the minister now a couple of questions. First, I should like to know what disposition is going to be made of the needy farmer who owes taxes. Is he going to be subject to the same restrictions to which he was subjected under the former bank loan legislation? When he owed taxes he was automatically ruled out from getting any advance because the excuse was that the municipalities had first priority on grain that was hauled to the elevator. I hope the minister will make some clarification of the situation in that regard.

Mr. Gardiner: It was cleared up long ago.

Mr. Bryson: This question of taxes is becoming a great problem. I am thinking in particular of the tenant farmer who is trying to exist on a one-bushel quota. After a lapse of a couple of months or three months here is what is developing, and it is going to become more serious as time goes on. In the past it has been possible for most of the landlords who have retired with a small amount of money to pay the taxes, and in a good many cases the tenant has not been able to operate unless the landlord forgave his portion of the one-bushel quota. But now the situation is becoming aggravated and the landlord finds himself in an impossible position wherein he must depend on the proceeds of the grain to pay the taxes.

There you have this split in this one-bushel quota which places the tenant in a most untenable position. I am therefore wondering what disposition the government intends to make in this regard. I am also wondering about partnerships and co-operative farms. Are these partnerships going to be limited as individuals with regard to the ceiling of $3,000? When the minister replies I hope he will say something in that regard also.

We in this group over the years have advocated cash advances on properly stored farm grain. We welcome this measure and we are going to support it. At the same time I want to make it clear that when we made this proposal we always coupled it with the proposition that it should be part of an overall, comprehensive federal agricultural policy. I am certainly hoping that when we discuss the other matters referred to in the speech from the throne we are going to get down to the real root of the agricultural problem. Then this legislation, incorporated into something more comprehensive, will be of a great deal more value.

Mr. Huffman: I was greatly interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Macleod when he was speaking. In part of his remarks he was referring to the surplus, and that the reason for this legislation is the surplus of wheat in western Canada. He referred also to some of the commodities that are not in surplus quantity. I come from an area in which we do not have surplus commodities, but in our particular area—and that is in old Ontario—we find that we are not able to get for our commodities, especially primary commodities, prices that are consistent with the cost of production.

It seems to me that there is a new principle in the legislation that is proposed at this time. I am quite convinced that if the principle involved in this legislation could be extended to all of Canada it would not be necessary for some of our people to be compelled to sacrifice their commodities on the altar of necessity. There is no question that a great number of people at this time are finding it most difficult to finance their operations and to pay the taxes that it will be necessary to pay very shortly.

For this reason,—and I am not going to delay this resolution by speaking at any length at all—I would recommend to the minister who is sponsoring this legislation and to the ministry as a whole that they give serious consideration to extending the provisions of this bill to all of Canada. In doing so you would not discriminate against any part of the country and I think it would be a most worth-while objective. I am sure this suggestion should commend itself to the minister sponsoring the bill.

Now I believe also that any amount of money turned into the purchasing stream will help every part of this country. I know there are many people on farms whose operations are not as efficient as they should be and who would like to buy some equipment at this time. They would then be able to increase their efficiency but because of the short cash position of many of our primary producers they are unable to do so. I therefore call on the government to extend the provisions of this proposed legislation to cover every part of Canada.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear so many Liberal members speak in support of this legislation. Had some of those members a year ago stood up in their places and admitted that this was a serious national crisis, probably their government would still be sitting over on the other side.

I think the major cause of the upset last June was because the party which had been in power for 22 years had refused absolutely to consider that the Canadian farmers were in the cost-price squeeze. I appreciate very much the remarks made by the hon. member for Russell. Sometimes it is said that we western members talk too much, but we are sent here to present the problems of our people and we cannot very well sit quietly by while we see our people being forced off the farms and compelled to abandon the good life for which they have been trained.

I was very interested in reading the remarks made by the former minister of trade and commerce a year ago. He reported that as a result of the previous legislation producers had borrowed a little less than $8 million and at the time he was speaking, on March 13, 1957, he said, as of January 31, for the new year, the volume was less than $4 million. He submitted these facts to give the impression that we had been talking nonsense, that the pockets of the farmers were bulging with money. The present member for Melville echoed his views,—that the farmers never had it so good and if they did not, they would have no one to blame but themselves.

I am very glad to hear the new Minister of Trade and Commerce suggest that this legislation is going to make between $100 millions and $150 millions available to the farmers. I certainly admit that is a big help; it is quite a contrast to the $4 million and $8 million which was the best the previous government could present but I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he should read some of the speeches made by the present Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Churchill: Heavens, I have listened to him for years; I do not want to have to read him again.

Mr. Nicholson: —I said the present Minister of Agriculture, your colleague, the present minister.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, you have been talking about the others all along.

Mr. Gardiner: We made available $1,120 million in cash for the farmers.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister of agriculture has spoken so often but I do not think he has ever made such a feeble effort as today.

An hon. Member: Which one are you talking about?

Mr. Nicholson: The member for Melville, the former minister of agriculture.

Mr. Harkness: So long as we know.

Mr. Nicholson: I want to suggest to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce that he read the speech of his Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Churchill: I will be pleased to.

Mr. Nicholson: When he spoke here on the 13 March last year he urged that what was needed was a long-term solution of a definite and positive kind rather than sitting back with hands folded waiting for a drought period to come along and cure the situation in that way. I think that was good advice and I submit that the minister does not have a long-term solution, although he probably is not pretending that it is. The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs also made a very good speech a year ago when he stressed the fact that we needed a long-term program. The present Prime Minister used even stronger language when he said he summarized his party's attitude towards this resolution and the bill as follows: "what is being given to the farmer is a stone when he is asking for bread". Well I would like to say frankly that this is a big improvement on the legislation brought down a year ago, but it is not a solution. I think the present administration cannot delay much longer facing up to this problem.

Mr. Churchill: You will give us one or two days longer though?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, we will give you all the time you need but time is running out and I also think the minister should come up with a statement on his proposed mission to China tomorrow when he is discussing that.

Mr. Churchill: I am not going to China.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister has apparently issued instructions to one of his officers to go to China early next month.

Mr. Churchill: You are making statements which may be untrue and you are out of order anyway.

An hon. Member: What has this got to do with cash advances?

An hon. Member: Why don't you sit down and let us get on with the business?

An hon. Member: Just like the Liberals.

Mr. Nicholson: I am somewhat surprised that members who were in the official opposition over here and who opposed closure should object to a rural member having fifteen minutes to discuss this issue and I submit that the finding of new markets for Canadian wheat is of very urgent importance. Furthermore the minister himself, in answering questions asked by my leader the other day, suggested that in the sending of this delegation to China, people would be happy if they were able to sell some wheat. However the minister will have a chance to deal with that subject and I hope he will do so when he is bringing in the bill for second reading and will tell us what is the government's marketing policy.

The Prime Minister spoke about the very small contributions that the previous administration were making towards the undeveloped countries of the world. He suggested something in the terms of $100 million would not be an unreasonable amount for a country like Canada to supply, but I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce should remember that the government of the United States is spending a million dollars a day to put subsidies into the pockets of their buyers. I realize that we are not as rich in resources as the government of the United States but our government is spending $5 million a day on our defence program and I think a country that can spend $5 million a day on defence can do something better to help our farm people who are in a life and death struggle. I am not speaking of the wheat farmers alone, I speak of the farmers all across Canada.

I therefore hope when the minister is speaking tomorrow he will give our farm people some hope that in addition to getting a maximum of $3,000 on the basis of 50 cents a bushel for six bushels, something better than that will be available.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, we have been sitting here now for nearly two weeks and during that period I would say that 75 per cent of the time has been taken up by discussions in connection with agriculture. We have heard about parity prices, cash advances, differential payments and many other services which the government feels agriculture is needing at this time.

I have never opposed any legislation that has ever come before the house since I have been here that would be of assistance to any primary producer, but I believe that we have in this country of ours today primary producers who are very much more in need of assistance than are the grain growers on the prairies. I speak from first hand knowledge of conditions that I have witnessed myself within the last three or four months, and I feel that it is my duty to take the time of this house for just a few minutes in order to place before the government the conditions which I have found confronting many of those producers.

In the Atlantic provinces, and I believe this would apply in a large extent to British Columbia as well, the pulp producers—the pulp they produce is of great importance to us in New Brunswick—are unable to sell their product at this time. I see no reason why they should not be allowed to cut pulp and leave it lying in the bush or alongside the road until such time as there is a market for it. If such a service can be provided for the grain producers, why not for the pulp producers? We have heard discussions here regarding those who produce base metals in British Columbia. Why not place them in the same category as that in which the western farmers are being placed by virtue of this proposal?

In the 12 years I have been here I do not believe the Liberal government has any regrets in this house with regard to the services and the protection which has been afforded to agriculture in this country, particularly in the west. That is my opinion as an easterner.

An hon. Member: Protection?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): But why is this legislation designed to help out just one area? Why not take in all the farming community in this country? There is a friend of mine in this chamber at this time who has told me that farmers in his province are producing onions at 30 cents a bag. They have to grow them and dig them, and it costs 18 cents for the bag alone. But no assistance is being given in this direction as far as this government is concerned. The only desire seems to be to get something for the grain growers in the west.

Now, I want to take a few minutes to explain to the committee the difficulties that the fishermen in my riding and in all the maritime provinces are facing, and the prices they are getting—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Perfectly proper, I would think, Mr. Chairman—cash advances for fishermen. The fishermen in the area from which I come have been producing fish for the last three or four months at prices well below the cost of production. They have been selling fish for one-third of a cent a pound, and even below that. Nothing that this government has said so far would indicate that they are going to help that situation. There has never been any suggestion up to this time that there was any need to give assistance to these fishermen.

An hon. Member: How about the Liberal government?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am glad the hon. member referred to that. Every effort was made to improve this condition. Up until last spring, however, prices were good and we had no complaint. The sardine fishermen were getting a good price for their sardines and I will give some figures bearing out what I have in mind.

From the first of July they had been receiving between $4 and $5 for 1,200 pounds. That is what the fishermen have been receiving for 1,200 pounds of sardines. This summer I saw pollock, one of the finest fish that ever came out of salt water, being sold to reduction plants for fertilizer at one cent a pound, something that has never happened before in the fishing industry.

The Conservative members for New Brunswick have been talking year after year about the situation in which the potato growers find themselves. They were asking: what is the Liberal government going to do for the potato growers in New Brunswick. Well, there is nothing here that mentions the potato growers or the apple growers in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. No mention is made of any primary producers other than the grain growers on the prairie.

I have every sympathy in the world with those men. I was a primary producer myself for 25 years, and I know what they go through. But I do not believe in discrimination. I maintain that if this assistance is to be provided for the primary producers in one area it should be provided for all primary producers in Canada.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Are you going to vote against the bill?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am going to vote against the bill, and you will know exactly why—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Are you going to vote against Beechwood too?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am glad the hon. member has brought up the matter of Beechwood, and I am going to take one minute to reply to him—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Answer yes or no.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Unless we have some rain down there we need not worry about Beechwood operating for a long time. And let me add it may well serve a useful purpose because should there ever be a flood it would be the safest place for the people of New Brunswick to go.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am not talking about Beechwood, I am talking about primary producers. Now I would like to ask the hon. member a question. After the announcement made by the Prime Minister yesterday, will he vote for additional financial assistance being provided under the Colombo plan? We have today in my own county sardine canners with the greatest inventory ever known in history. Every available space to be found is filled with canned sardines.

An hon. Member: You told us that yesterday.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I didn't interfere with the hon. member when he was speaking from over there.

The Chairman: Order. Clause 2 of standing order 59 directs that speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration. I ask the hon. member to take note of that.

Grain

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I am speaking about cash advances on primary products and I believe I am perfectly within my rights in the house to speak on this subject. Unless we are going to have closure—

The Chairman: We are discussing cash advances on wheat.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member discussed at the beginning of his remarks the question of cash advances on wheat, and I submit with respect that having done so he has now the right to compare the position of other primary producers in the country such as fishermen or others he has mentioned, and I do not think the rule to which you referred precludes him from doing that.

An hon. Member: Are you going to vote against the bill, too?

Mr. Chevrier: When an hon. member is speaking to a point of order he has the floor and if another hon. member wishes to interrupt him by asking a question he has the right to do so; otherwise he should keep his peace and sit in his chair.

I would like to complete my remarks as briefly as I can by saying, with due deference to you, Mr. Chairman, that having regard to what has been done in this house before, the hon. member has a perfect right to speak about other primary producers in this country on this resolution.

The Chairman: I will ask the hon. member to help me in my duty, and to try to keep near the resolution being discussed.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to discuss the resolution unless I can mention the primary producers in whom I am interested. I would like to make comparisons—

Mr. Harkness: It is impossible for you to keep in order if you talk about sardines.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I will say one thing then, Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat. I had not expected that I would be called to order for discussing an extremely serious situation that prevails in the Atlantic provinces, one which I feel bears directly on the particular resolution which is before us at this time. I believe that I had a perfect right to take the course I followed, but I wish to make one comment and then resume my seat.

There is one condition upon which I would be prepared to support this resolution and that is if the Prime Minister were to stand on his feet in this chamber at this time and inform us that exactly the same consideration and treatment in terms of cash advances with no interest would be provided for every other primary producer in Canada. If he were to do this I would be pleased to rise in my place and support the resolution. However, if that assurance is not forthcoming from the government I shall be obliged to vote against the resolution.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I am amazed at the transition which has taken place both in the government benches and in the benches of the official opposition because it was just last November, approximately a year ago tonight, when we were in special session that my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, rose in his place and suggested that instead of adjourning the house should consider matters of urgent public importance. He said, as reported at page 133 of Hansard of Thursday, November 29, 1956:

> I said also that if hon. members had any further business that they wished to bring before the house an opportunity should be given for them to do so. In my opinion there are pressing matters which hon. members might like to bring before the house.

I am surprised that the hon. member for Charlotte did not rise in his place at that moment and bring to the attention of the house the problems he has just presented. I am equally amazed at the behaviour of the acting Leader of the Opposition who at that time was only too readily in agreement with the motion of the then prime minister to adjourn the house. I am pleased that this transition is taking place.

I was disappointed, as were many of the farmers in western Canada, that there was not a September session as promised by the Prime Minister to deal with this urgent question. Nevertheless, I think the government is to be commended for having seen fit to postpone the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne to bring in this legislation today so that it may be given consideration at the earliest possible date. I am pleased, as I say, because we in the C.C.F. have advocated over the years a system of cash advances for farm-stored grain as a permanent aspect of our marketing system. It is a measure that in our consideration and in the opinion of the farm organizations would do much to stabilize the marketing of this commodity.

I see that the hour is getting on, Mr. Chairman, and although there are other remarks I would like to make I am certain that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will have some comments to offer at this time and I certainly do not wish to delay the proceedings.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Argue: Question.

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that we are discussing farm production I think it should be my privilege to ask a question of the minister in connection with butter.

Is it the intention of the government to maintain the policy of the last government in providing a floor price for butter? I would also like to know if it is the intention of the government to maintain the practice followed by the last government of granting religious and charitable institutions the privilege of buying butter at privileged prices?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this is completely out of order. If the hon. member wishes to ask these questions in a subsequent debate in connection with general agricultural policy, or if he wishes to put his questions on the order paper or raise them on orders of the day I will be very glad to deal with them. However, I do not think I should attempt to answer at this time because there is no question but that the hon. member is completely out of order in raising such questions during a discussion of cash advances on farm-stored grain.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Resolution agreed to: Yeas, 138; nays, 3.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the amount of monthly pension payable thereunder to fifty-five dollars per month, to reduce the basic residence requirements for pensioners from twenty years to ten years and to increase the length of permissible temporary absences of pensioners from Canada from three to six months.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Monteith: Yes. Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the committee has for its purpose the accomplishment of three important changes in the Old Age Security Act. The proposed changes are: (1) an increase in the rate of benefit to $55 a month; (2) a reduction in the basic residence requirement from 20 to 10 years; (3) an extension from three to six months in the length of time which pensioners are free to spend outside of Canada in any calendar year without loss of pension.

In recommending these changes to the house the government is acting promptly to honour the pledges which our leader and our party made to the senior citizens of this country during the recent election. Through the legislation foreshadowed by this resolution and the other resolutions which will follow further proof is being given to the people of Canada that this government and the Progressive Conservative party mean what they say and that they can be relied upon to keep the promises which they make.

When we criticized the previous government earlier this year for asking parliament to authorize an increase of only $6 a month, we said at that time that while voting for the additional amount we regarded it as entirely inadequate. We are now asking for authority to provide a further $9 a month which, added to the $6 increase already in effect, will mean an over-all addition of $15 a month to the basic $40 rate prevailing at the beginning of the year. By approving this increase the parliament of Canada will be setting the benefit level for our senior citizens at the highest level, both in dollar terms and in purchasing power, that it has ever been in the 30-year history of old age pensions in this country.

May I add a further word, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the level of benefit that is now proposed, namely, $55 per month. We make no extravagant claims with respect to this benefit. We do not say that it is the final or perfect solution, or that there is any magic rightness about this particular amount. We make no extravagant claims as to the generosity of the amount we are now proposing. It is my view, rather, that we should try to measure what we are doing here not in terms of generosity but in terms of justice.

This government does not believe that it should try to make a good fellow of itself with the taxpayers' money.

An hon. Member: Oh, no?

Mr. Monteith: It was not entrusted with power for that purpose. It does believe that it was elected for the purpose of ensuring that just and fair treatment is accorded to our senior citizens, having in mind the many other heavy burdens and responsibilities that the people of Canada have to assume.

I can only say on behalf of the government that we believe that with the increase which is now proposed substantial justice will in fact be done. The benefit level of $55 monthly bears respectable, indeed favourable, comparison with the level or benefits payable in other countries. Only in the case of one country, the United States, is there any ground for arguing that the benefits payable are higher than those which we propose at this time for Canada. I shall be glad to make more detailed comparisons, if that is desired, when we reach the stage of second reading of the bill or possibly in committee on the bill. Meanwhile, I shall content myself with saying this. While it is true that the average benefit payable to a single retired worker is higher under the United States insurance program than it will be under this present proposal, the average married benefit payable under the United States scheme is not as high as the $110 monthly that will henceforth be payable in Canada where both spouses have reached the pensionable age and are eligible.

We can therefore truthfully say, when these amendments have been approved, that the benefits payable to our senior citizens in Canada will compare favourably with those provided under old age security programs in existence anywhere.

I should like to turn next, Mr. Chairman, to the second proposed change in the Old Age Security Act, namely, the reduction in the residence requirement. This government recognizes that with an old age security program such as we have in Canada some residence requirement is necessary. This plus the age requirement are in fact the only two conditions of eligibility. No detailed record of past employment and contributions is required, as is true of the United Kingdom and United States programs. Benefits are not, as under the Swedish scheme, denied to those of alien birth who have lived and worked in this country without ever taking out citizenship papers. Consequently, since all of these other detailed eligibility requirements have been left out of our Canadian legislation, some residence requirement is obviously necessary.

But this government believes that the 20-year requirement at present in the act is altogether too long. It considers that persons who have come from another country in the prime of life, at 50 or 55 years of age, and who have contributed their most mature and productive years to the building up of this country, should not on reaching pensionable age be denied the benefit of the old age security program. This is all the more true when one considers that these individuals throughout the period of their residence in Canada are required to contribute to the costs of the old age security program through taxes paid on the same basis as those of us who have lived all our lives in this country.

The government believes that the interests of the Canadian taxpayer and of the Canadian economy will not be jeopardized if the residence requirement is reduced to a more reasonable figure than the present 20 years. A ten-year residence requirement is already in our Blind Persons Act and our Disabled Persons Act where there are, of course, additional conditions of eligibility as well. Experience with the ten-year clause in these two acts has led us to conclude that we should make a similar reduction now in our old age security residence requirement.

The numbers who will benefit immediately as a result of this change are chiefly those who came to Canada in the decade 1938 to 1948 when immigration was at a relatively low level. Consequently, the full financial effects of the change will only become apparent over a period of years as we reach the point where the persons affected will be those who came to Canada in the post-war years when immigration was much higher. I am confident that the reduction now proposed will be warmly welcomed throughout the country, particularly by those who themselves have come from other lands to live in Canada. In proposing this amendment the government believes, and I am sure that the people of Canada will agree, that we are acting with justice as well as with generosity towards these more recent arrivals in our land.

Before leaving this point, Mr. Chairman, I should of course add that in reducing the basic residence requirement from 20 to 10 years the government also proposes that a corresponding change be made in the residence requirement affecting persons whose residence was interrupted by absences from Canada in the years immediately preceding the attainment of pensionable age.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the minister? Is he proposing to go on?

Mr. Monteith: I was just going to finish this one sentence and ask permission to continue. Persons who have been absent from Canada between age 60 and age 70 will be allowed to make up these periods of absence on a two for one basis as at present.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, may I ask for leave to finish the statement if hon. members see fit?

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I think all hon. members are anxious to hear the whole statement.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Nicholson: I am sure hon. members are prepared to give unanimous consent to the minister to enable him to make his statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: With unanimous consent, I shall continue with this statement. I will add only a word about the third change that is proposed, before proceeding to a summation of the financial costs involved. The third proposal affects only those who are actually in receipt of old age security at any time and who wish to journey, for whatever reason, outside of Canada. Many of our senior citizens desire, some even find it necessary on health grounds, to spend the winter months in a warmer climate. Others, with family ties of origin in other lands, may wish to visit back home for a while. The legislation presently provides for absences extending up to three clear months in any year without loss of benefits. Having in mind the length of our winters in many parts of Canada, the government does not consider that this period has been long enough. Conquently, it is recommending that the period be extended to allow as much as six months continuous absence from Canada in any year without the loss of benefit. This will permit, for example, an uninterrupted period of absence during the cold weather each year, from October through to March or November into April, without any loss of benefit. We believe this will be fair and equitable to all concerned.

The three amendments which we are now proposing, Mr. Chairman, will of course involve a considerable additional expenditure; but the government is convinced that the people of Canada are aware of this and that none will begrudge the extra expenditure on behalf of our senior citizens. Last month, September, 1957, our old age security case load totalled approximately 817,000. Consequently, over the next year or so the additional cost of the $9 monthly increase for these 817,000 beneficiaries would be in excess of $88 million a year. But, as everyone knows, our old age security case load is not remaining static. It is increasing by 2,000 to 2,500 each month, and this increase will continue during the months ahead.

In addition, the reduction in the residence requirements is expected to add another 5,000 to 10,000 beneficiaries, persons who now have ten years or more residence in Canada but lack the full 20 years presently required. The additional numbers thus brought on the rolls, either because of natural growth or because of the changes in the residence requirement, will mean that for the fiscal year 1958-59 we will have to count on an average monthly case load of 855,000 and, consequently, an annual cost of $564 million.

So far as the changes presently before the house are concerned, it is estimated that the additional annual cost resulting from their approval will amount to about $96 million in the first full year made up as follows: Increase in pension rate to $55, 92 million; reduction in residence period, $3.5 million; extension of period of permissible absence, possibly half a million dollars, or a total of $96 million.

With these explanations, Mr. Chairman, I believe that I have given the house an adequate explanation of the changes which we propose to ask for in the bill when it is brought down, the reason for these changes and the additional cost involved. I intend to make a further statement when we reach the stage of second reading of the bill, but I hope the house will now agree to passage of the resolution so we can proceed to discuss any questions which may present themselves with the actual text of the bill before us.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, we intend to commence with second reading of the bill to provide for cash advances on farm-stored grain; then take the resolution which has just been commenced this evening, and following that the other three resolutions in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Should we get all those through, we will then go back to the throne speech debate.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if the minister would not give consideration to this point: We have not received the bill that is now before us for second reading, and we probably will not have it until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. I do not believe, therefore, it is quite fair for our members who have not seen it to be asked to discuss it. My suggestion is that we go on with the resolution which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has begun, discuss it, and then perhaps later we can take the other.

Mr. Green: We will try to have the bill available early in the morning. If that is not possible, then we would commence with the resolution dealing with old age security.

Mr. Chevrier: If we did have the bill available early in the morning I do not think it would give us an opportunity to consider it sufficiently in order to come here at eleven o'clock and discuss it. This situation has arisen from time to time before and requests have been made by the opposition; most of the time they were granted.

Mr. Argue: On this point, I may say I feel the house should be prepared to go ahead with the bill in question at eleven o'clock. We had a statement from the minister which outlined the main principles of the bill, and we shall have the bill, according to the Minister of Public Works, early in the morning. We can then look at the details. The discussion of principle, I am sure, will take some hours at the second reading stage and so far as the details are concerned the hon. member will have ample time to digest the clauses of the bill by the time we reach them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to do anything or suggest anything that will cause a lack of full discussion in regard to the bill. I was very anxious, if it could have been expedited, because of the approach of November 1 to have it passed for this time after reasonable consideration. But if in the view of members of the opposition they will not be in a position tomorrow to discuss it properly, then of course naturally it will have to be fixed for a later date.

Mr. Chevrier: The request is not an unreasonable one, having regard to the consideration that was given to the legislation today. I think it is only reasonable that we be allowed to look at it, and perhaps it may be possible for me to tell the leader later on in the day that the time has arrived when we can discuss it. But our people would like to see it in order to be prepared for it when the discussion takes place.

Mr. Green: We would want to reserve the right to go ahead with that bill later in the day tomorrow, in any event.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

MARINE RAILWAY, N.B.

Question No. 42—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Minister of Public Works received any official representations or requests from the government of the province of New Brunswick, since June 10, 1957, requesting financial assistance for the construction of a marine railway or haul-up at Caraquet or Shippegan, Gloucester county, New Brunswick?
2. If so, has any decision been reached in this regard?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

RESTIGOUCHE RIVER BRIDGE

Question No. 45—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the government given its approval to the spending of $1,400,000, plus one-third of any additional cost, for the construction of a bridge across the Restigouche river from Campbellton, New Brunswick, to Cross Point, Quebec?
2. If so, on what date was the order in council passed to that effect?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. No. The Minister of Public Works has written to the provincial governments of Quebec and New Brunswick setting out a proposal for the construction of this interprovincial structure. Under the terms of the proposal, Canada would contribute $1,400,000 in lieu of providing the present maintenance of wharves and dredging which it undertakes to provide for vehicular crossing. The remainder of the cost would be divided equally between the three governments with the provinces being responsible for providing the highway approaches. To date, a reply has been received from the provincial government of New Brunswick agreeing in principle, but there has been no word from the provincial government of Quebec.

2. There has been no order in council, as agreement in principle to the above by the three parties is required.

FEDERAL PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWCASTLE, N.B.

Question No. 46—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Did the Minister of Public Works receive representations from the town council of the town of Newcastle, New Brunswick, with respect to a change in the site and size of the federal public building now being erected in that town?
2. If so, what decision was reached and on what basis was the decision arrived at?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes.

2. Regarding the site, the department agreed to set back the building 10 feet to meet traffic problems on the understanding that the town would provide an equivalent strip to the rear of the site. Regarding the size of the building, it was possible to show town officials that the space provided was sufficient for the needs of the various occupying departments. There is also room on the site to extend the building if the need arises.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY—PUBLICATIONS OUT OF PRINT

Question No. 52—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is there available for public purchase a list of the publications of the geological survey indicating which publications are out of print?
2. If not, is such a list under consideration at the present time?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 25, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

FINANCE

TABLING OF REPORTS OF TARIFF BOARD

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies, in English and in French, of four reports that have been submitted by the tariff board. The reports in question are as follows: reference No. 118, basic iron and steel products; reference No. 119, pipes and tubes of iron or steel; reference No. 121, waterproof footwear and rubber-soled canvas footwear; reference No. 122, zinc and zinc products. Three of the reports were submitted some time ago to my predecessor and were released by him for public distribution in June of this year. I am now tabling these reports and also transcripts of the evidence taken at the public hearings of the board, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act. I am tabling also a report, and the transcript of evidence, relating to zinc and zinc products which was submitted to me by the chairman of the tariff board earlier this week.

I should like to comment briefly on each of these reports at this time and to indicate how the government proposes to deal with them. I hope my remarks will provide an answer to the question asked two days ago by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schulz) and to similar questions which may be in the minds of other hon. members.

I wish to refer first to the reference relating to basic iron and steel products. In this very broad and important reference the board's inquiries related to some 113 existing tariff classifications. Of this total the board considered that 21 items were not in need of revision. It recommended that the remaining 92 items be reduced in number to 38. In detailed explanatory notes included in its report the board has furnished information which permits comparisons between the existing rates and the proposed rates of duty.

The effect of the board's recommendation is that some rates are increased while others are decreased. They are designed to provide what the tariff board considered, on the basis of the evidence presented to it, to be adequate protection where it is required.

With regard to the wording and arrangement of the proposed tariff items, the most striking change from the present situation is the substantial simplification of the iron and steel schedule accomplished by the elimination of numerous special purpose items, and the consolidation of the remaining items into four major groups relating to plate, structurals, bars and sheet and strip respectively.

The tariff board's recommendations on pipes and tubes are also intended to bring up to date and simplify a section of the tariff which has become out of date. These recommendations, like those affecting basic iron and steel, involve reductions in some rates and increases in others. The board's terms of reference contemplated recommendations which would modernize the pipes and tubes schedule. The board's recommendations are, I believe, consistent with its terms of reference.

I wish to refer next to the report which has just been received, that on zinc and zinc products, as the situation with regard to these items is much like the situation with regard to the iron and steel items. In this reference the board was instructed to investigate and make recommendations regarding alleged anomalies in the existing tariff structure, having regard to the obligations and procedures of the general agreement on tariffs and trade. The board found that anomalies did exist, and it recommended changes to remove them. As in the case of the other reports to which I have referred, these changes involve some increases in rates of duty and also some decreases.

A review of the three reports to which I have referred leads to the conclusion that the proposed increases and decreases are broadly in balance, and that the recommendations taken together constitute what might be called a negotiable package. I would emphasize, however, that it is a package which requires negotiation with other countries and on which we could not, in view of existing international obligations, take unilateral action without giving other countries rights to withdraw concessions of value to Canadian exporters. The government is taking advantage of the present GATT negotiations in Geneva to undertake such negotiations.

I believe hon. members will be interested in some aspects of the negotiations. First, the lists of the bound items which Canada is seeking to modify have been notified to other contracting parties and in some instances have been made public by them. There is no objection to this on our part. It does not necessarily follow, however, that the giving of notice of our desire to negotiate a particular item indicates an intention to raise the rate of duty thereon. Frequently the reverse will be the case, as when two or more existing classifications are to be combined under circumstances where the proposed new rate is lower than the average of the existing rates. In other instances what is involved may be merely a change in wording. I hope this will answer questions that have been asked and will also serve to clear up any possible misconceptions.

Second, the negotiations at Geneva will necessarily be conducted in private, and they will be conducted in so far as Canada is concerned with careful reference to the tariff board's recommendations. However, I should emphasize at this time that what ultimately emerges should be expected to differ in some respects from these recommendations. This will be the case not only because of the give and take that necessarily occurs in any such negotiations, but also because the government will wish in some instances to take account of the new developments affecting individual tariff items. After the negotiations are concluded, it would be the intention of the government to introduce in parliament at an appropriate time the tariff changes which the government considers to be desirable.

I would like to refer briefly to the fourth report which I am tabling today, namely that on waterproof footwear and rubber soled canvas footwear, reference No. 121. As hon. members will have noted, in making this reference to the tariff board my predecessor did not ask for recommendations. Accordingly none were made by the board in this report. However, on studying the report which is being tabled today I came to the conclusion that it might be useful to have the board prepare a supplementary report on this reference, including therein any recommendations which the board might deem warranted regarding the retention or modification of the present duties. This supplementary report has not yet been received; when it is it will be tabled in accordance with the provisions of the Tariff Board Act.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question of the minister. Does the minister not feel it rather anomalous at the present time to be recommending tariff increases on steel wares and on tubes which will have the effect, of course, of making it more difficult for the British to sell their products in Canada, at a time when his leader is advocating a 15 per cent increase in purchases of goods from British sources?

Mr. Fleming: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would tell the house, then, why the government of which he was a member directed this reference to the board in the first place. Was it just intended to be an empty gesture and to waste the board's time?

Mr. Sinclair: Since I have been asked I will be very happy to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The reference to the tariff board was made in accordance with the laws of Canada, but the government is under no obligation to accept the recommendations of the tariff board for raising tariffs, as this government appears to have done.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): These items may form the basis of agreement with other countries joining the Geneva convention on tariffs and trade. Would that not imply that if the negotiations were successful the government is prepared to carry out the results of those negotiations? It seems to me that this is such an important matter that the whole question should be discussed in parliament, because it appears that we may be obligating ourselves to tariff adjustments of which many of us would not approve. Increases in tariffs at this time I think are against the public interest.

Mr. Fleming: I think the hon. member is under a misapprehension, and may not have followed too closely the statement I gave to the house. The reports of the tariff board should not be regarded and should not be represented as reports the net effect of which is going to be increases in tariffs. The board has reviewed a great number of items in portions of the tariff which are very old and which the board found in many respects to be obsolete and, as I have indicated, what the board has recommended is a group of changes in the tariff in which there are as many decreases as increases.

These are bound items, that is to say bound against increase by our existing international obligations; and of course before the government can consider any submissions to parliament we have to negotiate with other countries to see where they stand on these matters. That is what will be carried out in the course of the next two months at Geneva and it will necessarily have to be in the light of those negotiations that the particular proposals which the government will be submitting to the house thereafter will be framed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance regarding the answer he gave in reply to a question by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair). How many items have been referred to the tariff board since this present government took office?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, we directed a reference to the tariff board on fluorspar, a reference as to the textile items in the tariff, and we sent back to the tariff board for recommendations a matter on which they had already made a report on the instructions of the former minister of finance, on the subject of rubber and canvas footwear. There are other references standing on the docket of the board which were directed to them by the former minister of finance.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF REPORT ON FLUORSPAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the reports which he tabled this morning. Is the tariff board preparing a similar report on raw and semi-processed fluorspar? If so, when will such report likely be tabled?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, about a month ago I referred this item to the tariff board and requested an inquiry and report, but I understand that the board has not yet been able to commence the inquiry. They still have quite a bit of work on hand, and I am not in a position to answer the second part of my hon. friend's question.

RUBBER FOOTWEAR—SUBMISSIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received any submission from any individual or group in respect of the Canadian rubber footwear companies since June 10, 1957?
2. If so, will the government indicate if included in these representations are representations from any Canadian labour organizations, or from any corporations engaged in the fabrication of rubber footwear?
3. What steps are being taken by the government to give effect to any representations that have been made?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question—has the government received any submission from any individual or group in respect of the Canadian rubber footwear companies since June 10, 1957,—the answer from June 21, 1957, is yes.

The second part of the question reads:

Will the government indicate if included in these representations are representations from any Canadian labour organizations, or from any corporations engaged in the fabrication of rubber footwear.

The answer is that on August 28, 1957, the Minister of Finance received a joint submission by the Canadian rubber footwear companies and the Canadian Labour Congress. This submission was signed by officers of certain corporations engaged in the fabrication of rubber footwear and also by officers of the Canadian Labour Congress.

The third question was:

What steps are being taken by the government to give effect to any representations that have been made?

The answer is that government policy will be announced in due course.

EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 2—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received any representations from any group or individual in Canada for the elimination of the excise tax on automobiles?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

2. If this tax is eliminated, will steps be taken to see that the reduction is passed on to the consumer?
3. Is the government aware of any serious unemployment problem confronting the automobile industry?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes.

The second must be a hypothetical question until government policy is announced, but I am sure that any administration that proposed a reduction in such a tax would wish to see that so far as government action can assure it the benefit of the reduction would be passed on to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was announced in the election campaign.

Mr. Fleming: The answer to the third question is that there is not a serious unemployment problem. I am told there has been some delay on the part of the public in buying in this new season and on the part of the dealers in taking deliveries from the industry.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask what has been the result of that delay?

Mr. Fleming: No unemployment as yet, but if there were a continued holding back on the part of the public in purchasing the new models for the new season, then at some later point this fall unemployment could result.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Is my hon. friend not aware of the fact that in the automobile industry in my community there are more men out of work now than there were on June 21, and does my hon. friend not think it is a mistake to blame the public for the policies of this government?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I will not blame the public at all, but I will blame the hon. gentleman for a palpable violation of the rules of the house.

An hon. Member: Do you want him to walk out?

HOSPITAL INSURANCE

Question No. 3—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Have agreements been signed between the federal government and any one of the following provinces: British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, pursuant to the Hospital Insurance Act passed in the last session of parliament?
2. What negotiations have taken place since June 10, 1957, between the federal government and the provinces in the matter of providing for hospital insurance and diagnostic services?
3. What steps have been taken by the federal government since June 10 last to obtain an agreement for hospital insurance in the provinces of Quebec, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick?

4. Has the federal government taken any steps with the province of Ontario towards the implementation of hospital insurance in that province prior to January 1, 1959?

5. Has the government received any representations from any province for a general conference in the matter of hospital insurance?

6. If so, what reply has been given by the federal government?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no.

The answer to the second question is that continuing consultations are being held between officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and their provincial counterparts.

In answer to the third question, I wish to advise the house that officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been constantly available for discussions with the provinces interested in obtaining information on the hospital insurance program and visits have been made by them to Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The answer to the fourth question is that officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare are having continuous discussions with their provincial counterparts and assisting in every way possible with further steps for the implementation of this program.

The reply to the fifth question is yes; and with regard to the sixth question I would advise that this matter is certainly under intensive consideration, as I mentioned earlier.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think hon. members would do well to bear in mind that there will be an opportunity for raising such questions on orders of the day, and it is not the practice to ask supplementary questions during the starred question period.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite correct, Mr. Speaker.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY HARBOURS

Question No. 4—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Has the government any plans for the development of ports and harbours along the route of the seaway?

2. What is being done at the port of Montreal? Are the plans as announced by the former administration being carried out? What plans are being evolved for the development of the south shore?

3. Is this area to be taken over by the national harbours board? Are port facilities to be erected here for the expected increase in volume of trade?

4. What is being done at the port of Trois-Rivieres?

5. Is consideration being given to the construction of additional wharves and warehouses?

6. Will the national harbours board provide cargo handling equipment at the port for vertical hatch loading and unloading, extra space on existing wharves and new docks?

7. Is consideration being given to the construction of a grain elevator here?

8. What is being done at the port of Sorel?

9. Will the national harbours board provide cargo handling equipment at the port for vertical hatch loading and unloading, extra space on existing wharves and new docks?

10. Are port facilities in this area considered adequate for seaway traffic?

VICTORIA BRIDGE, MONTREAL-ST. LAMBERT

Question No. 5—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What was the cost of the Victoria bridge between Montreal and St. Lambert?

2. What are the operating costs, operating expenses and profit and loss position in the last 25 years?

3. What amount of tolls were collected on this bridge in the last 10 years?

4. Will tolls be abolished on this bridge?

JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE, MONTREAL-LONGUEUIL

Question No. 6—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What was the cost of the Jacques Cartier bridge between Montreal and Longueuil?

2. What are the operating costs, operating expenses and profit and loss position in the last 10 years?

3. Did the city of Montreal pay its share of the deficit in accordance with its tripartite agreement?

4. Did the province of Quebec pay its share of the deficit in accordance with its tripartite agreement?

5. Does the government intend to do anything about this?

6. What amount of tolls has been collected on this bridge since the beginning?

7. Does the government propose to abolish tolls on the Jacques Cartier bridge?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): These three questions are rather extensive and require detailed answers. These answers are being prepared at the present time by the national harbours board and the seaway authority. I expect to have the answers when the questions are next called.

Mr. Chevrier: May I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that several of these questions concern the Minister of Public Works, and not himself?

Mr. Hees: That is one of the reasons why it is taking quite some time.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is very bright this morning; this is an excellent example of passing the buck.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Questions stand.

TELEPHONE CABLE, U.K.-CANADA

Question No. 7—Mr. Marler:

1. Has an agreement been entered into with the United Kingdom for the construction of a new telephone cable between Canada and the United Kingdom?

2. If no such agreement has been entered into, what steps have been taken to provide additional telephone cable facilities between Canada and the United Kingdom?

Questions

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): If I may proceed to answer this question, the answer to parts 1 and 2 is that no agreement with the United Kingdom for the construction of a new trans-Atlantic telephone cable has as yet been completed, but the project has been approved by both the Canadian and United Kingdom governments and negotiations for conclusion of the agreement, as well as the technical planning for the cable itself, are proceeding in a satisfactory fashion.

PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION, NORTHERN ONTARIO—LABOUR TURNOVER

Question No. 8—Mr. Fisher:

1. What has been the total labour turnover for each of the four contractors' spreads on the natural gas pipe line west of Port Arthur in the period to October 1, 1957?
2. What was the average number of men on each spread for each month from April to October, 1957?
3. What percentage of the labour force on each spread was American for each of these months?
4. How many of the men who separated from the job on each spread were fired?
5. What percentage of the Americans working on this section of the pipe line were in this country under a six months' permit?

PENRYN SECURITIES—OFFICERS

Question No. 9—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited ever hold any position with Penryn Securities Company or with Penryn Holding Company?
2. Who are the present officers of this company?
3. If the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited held any office in these companies, what were the dates of such tenure?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I alone am responsible for these two questions. The answers are being prepared and will be ready, I think, the next time questions are dealt with.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Questions stand.

SOVIET EARTH SATELLITE

Question No. 10—Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North):

1. Has the earth satellite been fired in accordance with any agreement arrived at during the international geophysical year?
2. Is the soviet earth satellite infringing on the air space above Canada?
3. How far vertically does the sovereignty of Canada extend?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think the hon. gentleman will allow this question to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Question stands.

[Mr. Marler.]

HOUSING LOANS AND STARTS BY PROVINCES

Question No. 11—Mr. Johnston (Bow River):

1. How much of the $150,000,000 which was made available for housing has been actually loaned out to each of the provinces?
2. How many housing starts since the $150,000,000 was made available for housing have taken place in each of the provinces, classified according to types and cost?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first part of the question is as follows: The schedule of approvals of agency loans as at October 18, 1957, is as follows: Newfoundland, none; Prince Edward Island, none; Nova Scotia, loans, 21, units, 26, amount, $220,831.86; New Brunswick, loans, 24, units, 24, amount, $209,-925.59. I might point out that the results in the Atlantic provinces indicate that the people in those provinces have not as yet been taking advantage of this plan. Quebec, loans, 636, units, 696, amount, $6,841,629.23; Ontario, loans, 2,380, units, 3,059, amount, $30,837,-902.79; Manitoba, loans, 254, units, 254, amount, $2,327,846.76; Saskatchewan, loans, 74, units, 74, amount, $659,366.71; Alberta—which is very good—loans, 736, units, 763, amount, $7,202,995.97 British Columbia,—where again there has been some lag—loans, 110, units, 150, amount, $1,292,306.63. The total loans, and this is as of October 18, were 4,235; total units, 5,046, and the total amount, $49,592,805.54.

In addition to those actual loans, as of October 18 there was an apparent additional potential of $63,300,000, which comprised requests for loans and requests for approval in the office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and applications still in the hands of the approved lenders. This indicates a total being earmarked of over $112 million, which means, of course, that there is not a great deal left. The Atlantic provinces and British Columbia, if they continue to remain behind, are apt to suffer as a result.

The answer to the second part is that the schedule of housing starts of agency loans as at September 30—we do not have these figures of starts as of October 18; the latest report I have is September 30—and it is as follows: Ontario, 17; average cost $13,409, totalling $227,952. These figures apply only to bungalows. For Alberta the figures are 12 starts; average cost $12,500, for a total of $150,000. The total of units is 29, the average cost is $13,033 for the whole 29, and a total cost of $377,952. As of that time there were no starts reported for the other provinces and bungalows were the only type of house reported. I would point out also that the builders have 90 days in which to commence construction after they have obtained loans.

R.M.C. LIBRARY ADMINISTRATION BUILDING, KINGSTON

Question No. 12—Mr. Fisher:

1. What was the proposed cost of the library administration building planned for Royal Military College, Kingston?
2. Has a decision been taken to either (a) postpone this building; or (b) cancel construction plans completely?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): The answer to the first part is that the original estimate was $1,258,000. The second part is answered as follows. We are awaiting plans and specifications for this building which, I am informed, are now nearing completion. When those are received and have been studied a decision will be made in these respects.

TRADE

MISSION TO CHINA—PRESS COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the proposed Canadian trade delegation to China—

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I said I would make a full statement on this in due course. That statement is being prepared.

Mr. Sinclair: I am not questioning the composition of the delegation. I may say I have a special interest in this question because of my own unfortunate experience with the Chinese.

Mr. Churchill: I have already said I would make a full statement on this at a later date.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because the minister is going to make a statement, that does not preclude an hon. member from asking a question.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): He is not asking a question.

Mr. Sinclair: All right, I will. When this Canadian trade delegation make this trip, will they be accompanied by Canadian press representatives who may wish to accompany them? Will provision be made for any Canadian reporters who wish to accompany them?

Mr. Churchill: I follow the hon. member's question. He does not need to repeat it. Will the hon. gentleman restrain his impatience and wait for the statement?

Mr. Sinclair: I think this is very important for the press people to know. I should like to ask another question on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Another question, yes; but the hon. member will appreciate that he cannot compel the minister to answer further. If he wishes to ask, I will permit another question.

Mr. Sinclair: Does the minister not feel it extraordinarily important for the Canadian people to have reports from our reporters, because that was the only way they got accurate information on the trade conferences at Mont Tremblant and Washington?

Mr. Churchill: I think it is extraordinarily important that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano is making a mockery of the question period in the House of Commons.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): What did you do yourself when you were on this side?

GATT—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT MEETING AT GENEVA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of his statement earlier today when he tabled four reports of the tariff board. My question is whether or not there has been a decision by the government to send ministerial representation to the negotiations at Geneva. If such a decision has been taken, what is the decision; and if ministers are being sent, what ministers will represent Canada at these negotiations?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation to the GATT negotiations at Geneva will be headed by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He, of course, will not be able to remain there throughout the entire period of negotiations. My hon. friend is aware that it has been customary in the past for ministers heading delegations of that kind to remain for the first few days of the conference, and then turn over the extended work of negotiation to the other members of the delegation.

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PRIME MINISTER OF UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister can inform the house if he proposes to take advantage of the presence tonight and tomorrow of the British Prime Minister to discuss with the latter a proposal which the Canadian Prime Minister first made in this country for a diversion of Canadian purchases from one friendly country to another. Would he also say whether he proposes to discuss with the British Prime Minister further refinements in connection with the proposal made by the British government to Canada in the matter of a free trade area between the two countries?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intend to discuss all matters of mutual interest to the United Kingdom and Canada that time will permit.

OATS—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN LIMIT ON EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the question asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. He was referring to the limitations placed upon the export of oats to the United States in 1953, and asked whether Canada still limits the export of oats or any other grain to the United States.

The answer is that there are no quantitative limitations, formal or informal, on the import of Canadian oats and barley into the United States.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF CROWN FOR CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. He may wish to take it as notice, because I did not send him notice. In view of the fact that Her Majesty the Queen is not permitted, by a British statute passed in the first year of the reign of William and Mary, to take the crown outside of Britain, and since Her Majesty has expressed the intention of returning to this country, and since Her Majesty expressly visited the United States of America and opened this parliament as Queen of Canada, what consideration, if any, is being given to having a crown of Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had no notice of this question. I may say that there is no crown of Canada but there is, for all parts of the commonwealth, a crown that is divisible yet indivisible, representative of all parts of the British commonwealth.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

INCOME TAX

CASH ADVANCES TO FARMERS—INQUIRY AS TO TAXABILITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister tell the house whether the cash advances to farmers contemplated by legislation coming before the house today will constitute taxable income under the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt if it is proper, on orders of the day, to ask a minister to give a legal opinion.

Mr. Cannon: With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a legal opinion. I think it is a question of fact that is of interest not only to members of the house but to the farmers as well.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): That is a matter for the law officers of the department when they have had an opportunity of studying the terms of the bill that was brought into this house last night.

Mr. Cannon: If the answer is in the affirmative, and as a lawyer I have no doubt that the answer should be in the affirmative, as I am sure the minister will agree, will the amount of the advance be taxable in the year in which the money will be received by the farmer or in the year in which the grain will be delivered?

Mr. Nowlan: If advances are taxable they will be taxable in accordance with the terms of the Income Tax Act.

QUEBEC—TAXATION OF CONSORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister planning to make a statement at an early date with reference to the recent decision of the income tax appeal board relating to taxation of consorts on community property in the province of Quebec?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I thank the hon. gentleman for having sent me notice of his question this morning. As the hon. gentleman knows, the issues involved in that hearing are of great importance in the administration of the Income Tax Act. The decision is now being reviewed and considered by the legal officers of my department. When they have concluded their review and when I have found time to discuss it with them, a statement will be made to the house as to the intentions with respect to this matter. However, I would not anticipate that could be done before the end of next week.

IMMIGRATION

ALFRED KRUPP—INQUIRY AS TO RE-ENTRY TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, as the minister and also somewhat on the basis of one comrade to another. In view of the already strongly expressed objections of organized labour and the opinion of veterans, their relatives and a multitude of other Canadians, does the minister consider there is any merit in permitting war criminal Alfred Krupp to re-enter Canada?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question, and in reply to advise him that, in dealing with an application for admission to Canada, any minister involved does not form a personal judgment on the basis of his like or dislike—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what the minister used to say.

Mr. Fulton: —but assesses the question of admissibility in accordance with the provisions of the Immigration Act. With regard to the particular question, I might point out that there would be three or four departments concerned in the granting of a visa in a case such as this, and, of course, the decision would be the joint decision of the ministers involved as to whether or not a visa should be granted in the particular case.

I think I should point out also, in view of the words "war criminal" used in the hon. gentleman's question, that Alfred Krupp had his sentence commuted by the United States high commissioner in 1951. His sentence was commuted to the time already served in prison, and his property was ordered returned to him by the United States high commissioner.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Does the Minister of Justice consider that his judgment should be governed by the decisions of a foreign court, in this case a United States tribunal?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I was answering the earlier question in my capacity as Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and I take it the hon. gentleman wished me to give this answer in that same capacity.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the trouble, you have too many hats.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. minister should not always judge other people by himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You can't take it.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you for considering that I am still a minister.

Mr. Fulton: Of course, Mr. Speaker, in forming the judgment it will be established on the basis of the law applicable in Canada.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I want to ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that persons applying for entry into Canada who have served sentences for criminal offences have been debarred and are debarred from entering Canada?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct, yes; but as I explained to the hon. member for Kootenay West the other day the words "criminal offences" as used in the Immigration Act are words with a technical meaning. The words used by the hon. member in his question have not been found capable of such a technical definition.

JAN WOJTALA—REPORTED DEPORTATION TO POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to put a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is it now the practice of the department to deport persons to countries behind the iron curtain?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the practice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it not true that a certain person named Jan Wojtala, who claims to be a stateless person, is, as the Vancouver Sun has reported, being flown to England en route to Poland by the department for which the minister is acting?

Mr. Fulton: I have not seen the newspaper report and therefore I cannot comment on its accuracy. I have not looked at the departmental file for the last week and must therefore speak from recollection and subject to correction. My recollection of the circumstances is that the man in question was in possession of—I am afraid I do not recall the technical term—what in effect was a travel document issued by the United Kingdom, and my understanding is that he is being sent back to the United Kingdom in accordance with that document. I should also inform the house that in my review of the file of this case it was brought to my attention that the man in question had expressed his desire to be returned.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask a further supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could explain why this man, who claims to be a stateless person, should have been treated differently from Mr. Christian George Hanna.

Mr. Fulton: The main reason, of course, is that there is a different government in office at the moment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: —and the treatment accorded to the man in question is therefore more considerate. As I have pointed out the man in this case expressed a desire to be returned, which is quite different from the desire of Mr. Hanna.

TRANSPORT

LIVESTOCK—SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government's attention been drawn to the shortage of railway stock cars for the movement of cattle in southern Alberta? If so, what is being done to remedy the situation?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last evening the Minister of Agriculture drew my attention to an article in the Lethbridge Herald stating that there is such a shortage at Lethbridge and Calgary. It then being too late to get in touch with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the railway concerned, I did so the first thing this morning. They are checking now with their western representatives, and as soon as I receive a report from them I will communicate it to the house and to the hon. member.

PENSIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF REMARRIED WAR WIDOWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the government consider taking the necessary steps for the reinstatement of remarried war widows whose husbands have died and who were in receipt of pensions before their remarriage?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I wish to thank the hon. member for Westmorland for giving me notice of his question. This matter is covered by the Pension Act, and in each case is considered in the light of the provisions of the act. Section 45, subsection 1, of the Pension Act provides that when a pensioned widow remarries she is entitled to one year's pension as a final payment and her pension ceases.

Section 45, subsection 2, of the act makes the further provision that if the new husband dies within five years after such marriage and the widow is left in a dependent condition, her award may be restored by the commission in whole or in part. The statutory limitation must be noted, and the benefit is only available when death takes place within the five-year period. That is the provision in the act at the present time.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): There is no provision in the case of the death of the husband after the five-year period? You are not going to consider any steps?

Mr. Brooks: I have just quoted the act as it is at the present time. I may say it is the act as passed by my hon. friend's government. We may consider changes later on.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have a further supplementary question. Will the government consider the necessary changes in the act to take in those widows whose husbands have died after the five-year period?

Mr. Brooks: Well, it was the considered opinion of the former government, of the veterans affairs committee and also of veterans organizations that five years should be the period. The act may be considered later on and we may give the matter further consideration, but I am quoting the act as it stands at the present time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In the light of the increases in the cost of living and also the government's recognition of the need for increases in other welfare payments, will the minister endeavour to get his colleagues to reconsider their position with regard to bringing in legislation to provide for increased benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, these matters are always under consideration by the unemployment insurance commission. In answer to the latter part of the hon. member's question, I might say it is a matter of policy upon which the government has to decide as to what will be done with any recommendation.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Then may I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister inform us, in view of the very serious unemployment situation, when we may expect the government to fulfil the pledge it made prior to the election that unemployment insurance benefits would be increased to extend full coverage 52 weeks of the year?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance commission is studying this possibility at the moment. We have not received any recommendations from them as yet, but when we do they will be presented to the government for their decision.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INTEREST-FREE LOANS TO PRIMARY PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister consider extending the provisions of Bill No. 14 standing in his name, or some other measure, so that interest-free loans may be obtained by primary producers in all Canada?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. gentleman is not fully informed with regard to the nature of the bill. I am happy that we will be studying it now and he will see that there are no interest-free loans mentioned at all. The bill has to do with cash advances.

Mr. Huffman: What is the difference?

Mr. Churchill: I trust the hon. member can make that distinction. I will draw this to the attention of the hon. member because apparently he has not paid any attention to it at all. I will read out to him just what the bill is: Bill No. 14—an act to provide for advance payments on prairie grain prior to delivery thereof. If that act is to be extended in any way perhaps the hon. member would suggest the action necessary, if he wants something done. There may be other things required to be done in the interests of the people of Canada but I can assure the hon. member that this government will undertake the necessary steps for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. Huffman: All I was asking was if the Minister of Trade and Commerce would consider extending the provisions of this act to all the primary producers.

An hon. Member: He did not pay attention to the question.

Mr. Churchill: I did pay attention.

BANK OF CANADA—REPORTED SELL-OFFS OF U. S. DOLLARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I have not given him notice and the answer may be a little involved, so perhaps he could answer this question on Monday. Has the minister been informed that the Bank of Canada has reported substantial sell-offs of United States dollars? The press reports state that these increase the flow of cash available to the federal treasury. My actual question is this. As the Bank of Canada loans no money to the government, in what way is it expected that this move will ease the tight money policy? Perhaps the minister could answer now, but I would be satisfied to wait until Monday.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada operates as the fiscal agent of the Minister of Finance in all operations relating to the exchange fund, and so far as reports to the Minister of Finance are concerned, the Minister of Finance receives reports constantly from the Bank of Canada concerning any operations carried on by the Bank of Canada in relation to the purchase and sale of exchange. It is hard for me to see what relationship this matter has to any question of tight money policy.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REFERENCE TO DIRECTIVE CONCERNING MAIL CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Would the minister table directive 9/4 MS dated August 8, 1957, sent to rural mail carriers, which was referred to yesterday in this house?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I will be very glad to look at the document, Mr. Speaker.

QUEBEC CITY—COMMEMORATIVE STAMP FOR 350TH ANNIVERSARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Landry (Dorchester): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General decided to implement the decision of his predecessor to issue a special stamp in 1958 to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the city of Quebec?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I will be very glad to take my hon. friend's question as notice and give him my answer next week.

REFERENCE TO DESIGN OF TWENTY-FIVE CENT CANADIAN STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Will the Postmaster General at an early date examine the 25-cent Canadian postage stamp and explain its design, which to many looks like a still used in the manufacture of moonshine.

Some hon. Members: How would you know?

Mr. Hees: It reminds him of home.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Look at the moon.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the minister under whom this stamp was produced and issued and who I think should explain its significance is no longer here to do so. I would suggest that the best course of action for the hon. member for Red Deer to follow would be to ask the man who was responsible for the stamp to explain its significance.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Most amusing, but not an answer.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT TO DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Postmaster General.

Yesterday I asked the Postmaster General if he was giving consideration to the appointment of an assistant to the deputy minister. His answer led me to understand that the position has been abolished. However, on going through the estimates of his department I find that provision has been made for the office of a chief executive, the position left vacant by the promotion of Mr. Boyle.

Can the minister inform the house if it is his intention to appoint someone to that position or to a similar one? If so, I should like to know whether the minister is in a position to tell us when that appointment will be made.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The entire matter is under consideration at the present time, and I expect action will be taken before too long.

[Mr. Landry.]

NORTH HATLEY, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TAKEN CONCERNING THEFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Roberge (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General. Is the minister aware that the post office at North Hatley was recently broken into and some $7,500 stolen, and what action has been taken with regard to this matter?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the minister is aware of this matter, and it is under investigation at the present time.

HOUSING

CAMP PETAWAWA—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Forgie) asked me if I was aware of an agreement which had been entered into prior to June 10 regarding construction of houses on property purchased from the Department of Veterans Affairs by the Department of National Defence.

I have made full inquiries, and I am informed that there were no agreements prior to June 10 between the Department of National Defence and any other interest in regard to the construction of houses on property transferred to my department from the Department of Veterans Affairs. In fact Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been unable to find private interests willing to erect rental guaranteed housing or to promote limited dividend housing, mainly in view of the cost of servicing the said land.

REPORTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Finance is in a position to make the comment for which I asked him yesterday on the reported increase in the interest rates on loans for low rental housing under the National Housing Act?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of getting hold of the newspaper report to which my hon. friend referred, but I hope to be able to answer his inquiry on Monday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CF-100 MARK VI—DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I would like to address a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of National Defence. Is it true that the government, after cancelling its production program with respect to the CF-100 mark VI in an economy move, is now continuing the development program of the CF-100 mark VI?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): That is not correct.

AUTOMOBILES

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUE OF LICENSE PLATES

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Is he of the opinion that the low-number license plates which were at one time so useful in the province of Quebec could be as useful today in the province of Ontario?

HEALTH INSURANCE

REPLY TO LETTER FROM PREMIER OF MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I direct a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like to ask him if the government has yet made any answer to the letter addressed to the Prime Minister by the premier of Manitoba early in August with respect to hospital insurance?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I certainly have answered any letters coming to my department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, perhaps I might direct the question to the Prime Minister, in that case.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will examine the files and see whether any letter remains unanswered. If any letter does remain unanswered it is due to inadvertence, and I will have it looked into.

QUEBEC—ATTITUDE TOWARD PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the province of Quebec ignore the offer to participate in the hospital insurance plan, or did it refuse? If the province refused, what reasons were given?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am in a position to answer that question. I have not examined the correspondence or gone into the meetings with Quebec.

Mr. Deschatelets: Is it the intention of the minister to take the opportunity afforded by the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference to talk the matter over with the premier of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Monteith: Well, the agenda for that conference has not yet been set, I understand, but it would seem like one of the subjects which might well be discussed at that time.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC CITY—STATEMENT ON PROMENADE OUTSIDE CITADEL WALLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on October 24 the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage) asked a supplementary question regarding the proposed board walk around the Quebec Citadel. He asked whether the sum of $50,000 provided for in supplementary estimates was still available for this purpose.

The answer is that not all this sum is available. Some of it, about $2,500, was left available to carry out the preliminary engineering and design work. Because only seven-twelfths supply was voted, another part had to be transferred to meet urgent parks reconstruction work along the Banff-Windermere highway and at other points. Lastly, the previous government had agreed to contribute $7,500 toward the urgently needed widening of Champlain street in lower Quebec. As no funds had been provided to meet this urgent need, it became necessary for this government to obtain funds by means of transfer from the amounts provided for the board walk.

I might add that the engineering and planning work has not been held up in any way due to these transfers. As I said yesterday, lack of staff has been the governing factor.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister not aware that it would have been possible, as was planned by the previous administration, to have provided the $7,500 needed for the widening of Champlain street in the further supplementary estimates which were tabled some time ago?

An hon. Member: You have spies in that department.

Mr. Lesage: I have no spies. I was there.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GORDON COMMISSION—AUTHOR OF STUDY ON ENERGY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) asked me, at page 350 of Hansard, if I could inform him as to the authors of the study on energy undertaken on behalf of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects.

I have made inquiries, and I am informed that the author of this study is Mr. John Davis, an economist who was retained by the commission.

AGRICULTURE

GUELPH—COMPLETION DATE OF SERVICE LABORATORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. When may we in Wellington South expect the completion and opening of the new agricultural science service building now nearing completion on the outskirts of Guelph?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question—

An hon. Member: How curious.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We used to do the same thing.

Mr. Harkness: I may say that a considerable number of hon. members on the other side of the house have been good enough to give me notice of their questions also. But to answer the question, it is expected that the new livestock insect laboratory at present under construction at Guelph will be completed by February next.

CORN—STATEMENT ON PRICE IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to the following question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Kent, Ontario (Mr. Huffman):

May I just ask the minister if he is aware that corn which was selling for $1.20 a while ago was marketed yesterday for 46 cents?

By this question the hon. member has left the impression that the corn selling for $1.20 a while ago, which was in fact last year's corn and perfectly dry, would compare with the new crop at a price of 46 cents. Our information is as follows: The method most commonly used in pricing corn in southwestern Ontario is to establish a bushel price for shelled corn basis 15.5 per cent moisture. A standard formula is used for relating that price to corn of lower moisture.

The present base price for corn purchased on that formula is $1.05 per bushel. On that basis the price for corn of lower moisture follows the following pattern:

Per Cent Moisture	Price Per Bushel
15.5	$1.05
20.5	.93
25.5	.83
30.5	.73

We understand that the average moisture of corn now being marketed runs between 27 per cent and 29 per cent. This is about 2 per cent above normal. Corn of that moisture would bring slightly under 80 cents by the above formula.

We were unable to learn of any prices in the order of 50 cents per bushel for shelled corn, but the 73 cents price for shelled corn of 30.5 per cent moisture would work back to about 50 cents per bushel for cob corn of that moisture.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—STATEMENT AS TO LAY-OFFS IN LOUISEVILLE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this may be an appropriate time for me to answer the question directed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Langlois), which concerned a statement in an article appearing in the Montreal Gazette of October 23 reporting that a curtailment of operations at the Louiseville, Quebec, plant of Associated Textiles of Canada was attributed by the chairman of the board of the company to "continued heavy imports of synthetic textile fabrics into the Canadian market."

The hon. member is aware that all the items under the tariff pertaining to textiles have been referred to the tariff board in order that the board may review them and make a report. This is not the first time that a reference has been directed to the tariff board concerning items in the tariff structure in relation to textiles. About three years ago the former government directed a reference to the tariff board concerning the items pertaining to woollen textiles. On that occasion the board was directed to make an inquiry but not to make recommendations.

The new reference to the tariff board will give the board the opportunity to make recommendations as well as to make a report in general, and the new reference is of course broader than the reference of three years ago. In taking this course I may say it has been gratifying, Mr. Speaker, to find that it has apparently met with such wide approval on the part of many hon. gentlemen opposite, who were very silent in former years with regard to conditions in the textile industry in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Order.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR SURVEY OF SOUTHEASTERN NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) I wish to say that the counties of Westmorland and Albert are included in our program of airborne magnetometer survey in New Brunswick in next summer's field season.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 24, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Monteith—Mr. Rea in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the amount of monthly pension payable thereunder to fifty-five dollars per month, to reduce the basic residence requirements for pensioners from twenty years to ten years and to increase the length of permissible temporary absence of pensioners from Canada from three to six months.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I have read with considerable interest the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in presenting to the house this particular resolution. I must apologize to him for not being here last night when he made his statement. I was engaged in constituency business, but had I known that my hon. friend was going to introduce the resolution I certainly would have made other arrangements.

I am sure the house generally will find the resolution of great interest, and I am equally certain that the minister himself as he introduced it must have felt he was the pivot, as it were, in a rather historic effort by his party, because it represents the first time that anyone speaking for a Conservative government has put forward legislation having to do with some aspects of social welfare.

Mr. Fleming: That is not true; that is utterly untrue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not the first time, of course, that we in this house have dealt with matters in this field that have been proposed by spokesmen for the party represented by the government opposite, because hon. members will well recall, as we were reminded the other day by the former minister of agriculture, that in the election of 1930 the then leader of the Conservative party said to the people of Canada in substance, "Elect me; I will call parliament together and I will enact a real old age pensions measure." That statement was made in the town of Renfrew, in the town of Newcastle and in my own city of Windsor, and at a time when modifications in old age pensions would have been of great benefit to the people of this country.

The history of parliament between 1930 and 1935 will show that this promise of the then leader of the Conservative party, a distinguished gentleman who became prime minister, was not kept and his government did nothing whatsoever not only with regard to old age security or old age pensions but for that matter with regard to any particular measure relating to social welfare, except in its dying days when it brought in the unemployment insurance act which the Supreme Court of Canada shortly thereafter declared ultra vires.

Mr. Fleming: That statement is untrue.

Mr. Marler: Take it quietly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My esteemed friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare was in the happy position last night, for which I sincerely congratulate him, of presenting to this house an amendment based upon an act of parliament introduced in 1951 by the government headed by the present Leader of the Opposition. In expressing our approval of this resolution and all its terms I might say, speaking for those of us on this side, that our approval can be understood particularly in the light of some of the facts which have preceded the introduction of this amendment from the time old age pensions were first enacted by this parliament.

I think it is important to remember that in 1926 the minister of labour in the government of Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King proposed, on an enabling basis, legislation that would provide old age pensions to those citizens of Canada residing in provinces whose governments were prepared to accept the proposal made by the government of that day. It is a matter of history that the old age pensions proposal of that day would have become law in 1926 but for the action taken by the upper house, then made up in its majority by members who supported the party now constituting the government of the day. It is significant, too, that while the opposition in parliament at that time, headed by the Right Hon. Mr. Arthur Meighen, supported the program for old age pensions introduced by the Mackenzie King government, some very strong speeches were made by the opposition in the house at that time against the introduction of this measure. For instance, if hon. members will refer to Hansard of April 15, 1926, volume III, at page 2470, they will find, among others, this kind of expression, the view expressed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St.George, a distinguished member of the Conservative party, who said:

> Mr. Chairman, I am altogether opposed to the scheme of old age pensions as placed before the house in this resolution. I can understand an old age pension scheme which depends upon the incapacity of the recipient to earn a living, but unlike every other old age pension scheme with which I have been able to come in contact during a rather extensive search, this scheme altogether eliminates the element of incapacity. It assumes that at 70 years of age every Canadian who has lived in this country for 20 years is utterly incapacitated to earn a living. I object to that assumption, because actual incapacity should be the fundamental principle embodied in any pension scheme.

As the house knows, the act upon which this amendment is based provides for a pension as of right to every person in Canada 70 years of age and over, and the question of incapacity was dealt with by the previous administration through another legislative enactment. What was the view of the leader of the opposition? At that time Mr. Meighen supported, by the speech he made the same day, the position taken by Mr. Cahan.

Mr. Cardiff: What has that to do with us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has everything. It shows that this measure was first introduced by the Liberal party and it was opposed by members of the Conservative party. It is well for us to realize that and to keep emphasizing that what is now being done is by way of amendment to an act introduced in this parliament by the administration of the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Churchill: Are you in favour of the amendment?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What are the facts with respect to the act upon which this amendment is based? It will be remembered that in 1950 the government of the day proposed that an all-party committee should be set up to consider ways and means of improving existing old age pension legislation in this country. That committee had in its membership the present Minister of Finance as the main spokeman for hon. gentlemen sitting opposite. As a result of the deliberations of that committee certain recommendations were made to this house, and the government of the day accepted most of those recommendations.

The result was the establishment in this country of the universal old age pension system which provided as a matter of right to every citizen in Canada 70 years of age and over a pension based in part upon the principle of contribution—based, I say, in part on the principle of contribution. The significant thing is that it was, and continues to be, the only old age pension scheme to be found in any country of the world that does not have a means test.

This amendment, good as it is, must be related to the basic document of which it is a part, introduced by those representative of the party which sits to Mr. Speaker's left.

When the old age pension was provided for after the elections that were held in 1926, in revolt against the stand taken by a Conservative Senate, every citizen in Canada 70 years of age and over, on a means test basis, was provided with a pension of $20 a month, the federal government sharing the cost of this scheme with the provinces on a basis that was maintained until 1932. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite who bring forward this measure pursuant to election promises—and I commend them for that— are for the first time giving evidence of their official interest in this kind of matter, having denied themselves the opportunity during the dark days of 1930 to 1935 of doing something for the old people of this country.

Not only did we bring in old age pensions, those of us who support the Liberal party, but during the period from 1926 to 1930 we made some improvements in the legislation and from 1935 to 1940 income ceilings were raised. As minister of national health and welfare I had the great honour on two occasions of bringing in on behalf of the government, supported by those who sat behind us when we sat at Mr. Speaker's right, increases in the basic amounts of the pension, with the result that we were able to say in 1951 that we had provided for the people of Canada the most comprehensive and, in dollar terms, the most generous old age pension scheme available to any people in any section of the world. It is with the background of this history that this amendment is introduced today.

Mr. Green: Don't forget the $6 a month you brought in.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says, "Don't forget the $6 a month". I am coming to that. Let my hon. friend not forget that the only contributions his party made to old age security in this country is this. Out of the proposed $55 pension it is responsible only for the recommendation of $9.

Mr. Green: We have had to kick you all along.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Last night the Minister of National Health and Welfare said this scheme would cost around $90 million.

Mr. Monteith: I said $96 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Knowing something of the facilities that my hon. friend has for accurate calculation I accept, of course, his estimate of the total cost. The total cost of the amendment should be considered in the light of the total cost of old age security itself. As introduced in 1926 I think the projected cost was something in the neighbourhood of $12 million. When we embarked upon the universal scheme in 1952 the total cost of old age pensions chargeable to the government of Canada was in the neighbourhood of $90 million. When we left the benches now occupied by the hon. gentlemen the government of that day had introduced legislation which resulted in an expenditure of some $460 million by way of assistance to the old people of our country.

Mr. Macdonnell: Tell us about the $6.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now my friend is recommending an amendment involving an expenditure of $90 million. I commend him for that. Any assistance we can give to those classes in our country who need assistance will be approved, politics notwithstanding, by everyone in all sections of this house and in most sections of this country. It is important to realize the extent to which my friend now proposes to go. He is proposing an expenditure of some $90 million—an expenditure which some of the newspapers supporting my hon. friend are criticizing already as being an extravagant proposal—and that should be compared with the expenditure which we made in the last session to the extent of $60 million in addition to a total of $400 million for which the government of Canada had already committed the people before this government came into power.

Mr. Brooks: Yes; 22 years and 4 months respectively.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says 22 years and 4 months. My hon. friend may sit there doing all the musing he wants, but the history of this legislation shows that it was a Liberal government that was largely responsible for its implementation. No last minute repentance on the part of those who opposed social security measures will alter this fact.

My hon. friend has made an important proposal in his amendment when he suggests that we should reduce the qualifying period of residence from 20 to 10 years. My hon. friend will, of course, have access to the departmental records. He will know something of the discussions that prevailed in connection with that matter between myself, as minister of national health and welfare, and the provinces. My hon. friend will have access now to other memoranda in the department which clearly indicate what was in contemplation in this regard.

Mr. Churchill: And your opposition to the idea.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce should realize that with his journeys to England, his sale of wheat and his problems in China, it would be better if he confined himself to those absorbing problems.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member had problems in January; he is thinking of January.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In 1951 the parliamentary committee gave consideration to the question of residence. If the hon. gentleman will look at the report of the committee on old age security he will find at page 111, paragraph numbered 69, the following expression of view, which was not the expression of view of one party but was the considered recommendation of all parties and unanimously given:

> In the committee's view, it is not unreasonable to suggest that for the universal pension program a residence requirement of 20 years should be established similar to that which exists now under the present federal-provincial old age assistance program.

Now, what does this mean? It means that the Minister of Finance and the late hon. member for Lanark, for whom we all have the deepest respect and happy memory, shared the view of members of the C.C.F. and of the Social Credit party and of the party of which I am a member, that the period of residence for qualifying purposes should be 20 years.

Then it is significant that in paragraph 70 it is said:

> With respect to an old age assistance program for persons 65 years of age and over on the basis of an eligibility test, it is the committee's view that a requirement of 15 years' residence should be considered.

Mr. MacEwan: Why wasn't it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am going to give you the answer now. If my hon. friend will read Hansard he will find why. It was because the provinces, which had shared in the costs of old age assistance from 65 to 70, were reluctant to make any changes whatever in the matter of the qualifying period of residence, and among those provinces was Ontario. This is a matter of record. I am happy, as we all are now, that provincial-dominion relations are such that my hon. friends are now able to take a step which will have, at least in so far as other legislation is concerned, an exemplary effect in being able to persuade the provinces that they should reduce their qualifying period of residence as well.

Mr. Cardiff: The only thing that was wrong with the hon. member was that he could not persuade them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is quite right; I was not able to persuade certain governments, including the government of Ontario, of the desirability of doing that very thing. But if I had, my hon. friend may be sure that I would have taken the step to bring about a reduction in the residential requirement under the existing act. I hope the country will now have the advantage of the close collaboration that exists between the federal government on the one hand and the provincial governments on the other, so many of whom share the same political convictions as hon. gentlemen opposite.

This brings me to the very important role of the provinces in this matter. Last night my hon. friend properly said in his speech, as reported at page 385 of Hansard for October 24, 1957:

> We do not say that it is the final or perfect solution, or that there is any magic rightness about this particular amount. We make no extravagant claims as to the generosity of the amount we are now proposing.

I understand what prompted my hon. friend to make that remark, and he is quite right. No grant of any social benefit provided by this or any other legislation can possibly, in every instance, fully satisfy the existing need in the case of many old people. I agree with my hon. friend. But there are many thousands of people in this country who are not going to fully benefit from the proposal made by my hon. friend or from the proposal which we made before June 10. There is only one satisfactory way of meeting that, and that is by the provinces of our country recognizing that they too have a responsibility in this matter. I suggest to my friends, now that they are in office and now that the relationship between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Ontario is of the most intimate kind, that it ought to be possible for the Prime Minister of Canada to do something I was not able to do; that is, convince the government of Ontario that it has a responsibility and that in needy cases it ought to provide supplementary benefits under a more generous arrangement than now exists. What is the situation?

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member was not able to convince the provinces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan there are supplementary benefits paid to needy persons, in the case of British Columbia right across the board. But in the case of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island—

Some hon. Members: And Manitoba.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and Manitoba, all except Newfoundland and the three western provinces I have mentioned, the provincial governments are not bearing their share of the cost of assisting the elderly people of this country. The total cost assumed by all 10 provinces in the matter of old age pensions, apart from supplementary payments, is about $35 million. The federal government is assuming responsibility for $460 million, and now the $90 million proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Cardiff: Under the old formula they were taking about 85 per cent of the taxes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not too much to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, for whom I have the highest regard, to use his influence in trying to bring about an improvement in that respect, particularly in our own province where so many people reside.

During the election we were told that the government was going to give us much more than is now proposed. We were told by the Prime Minister, "Elect me. I will call parliament together in September and I will give you the most generous old age security system of any country in the world."

An hon. Member: So he did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): "We are going to do something about what is being done in the United States." Then listen to this statement. The Prime Minister said:

> . . . I'm not going to indulge in any auction block type of politics by promising the impossible. Some political parties are promising the impossible and they know that they will not have the responsibility of power.

Then he said this:

> We believe the old age pension is inadequate. We intend, this September, to call together a parliament and there and then fix a fair and reasonable amount for the old age pensioner, indeed for the other pensioners, and also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, providing that it continues.

That last proviso was an essential part of the program.

Mr. Monteith: That will be looked after.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But this amendment says nothing about that. This amendment does not live up to the promise of the Prime Minister of having a provision in the law that the pension will go up or down depending on the cost of living.

An hon. Member: Give us time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has the government abandoned this particular feature of its program, or does it intend to introduce legislation?

Mr. Cardiff: Wait till he has had 22 years in office.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If it does intend to introduce legislation should it not do so at this session, because the Prime Minister said they were going to do it in the month of September Then what about the proposal made frequently during the election by the Prime Minister and also by the Minister of Transport that we should embark upon a program of assistance such as is provided to old people in the United States? There they have a superannuation system under which contributions are provided by the employer and by the employee.

It is true that those superannuation benefits exceed the monetary return of our old age security plan. It is significant that in the United States plan there is no financial participation by the government of the United States or by the state governments in any particular. But are we going to have that plan? The Prime Minister said it commended itself to him. Are we going to have it, or has he now come to the conclusion reached by the Minister of Finance when he was a member of the parliamentary committee in 1951, a committee that examined this problem, that the universal old age assistance system being proposed by the government of the day was preferable to the particular superannuation scheme which I have just mentioned, and which exists in the United States?

Has he now concluded that our system is better? Has the minister come to the conclusion that our universal old age assistance scheme is preferable because it does not only embrace those workers in factories who can be reached by the principle of deduction of contributions from pay cheques.

The fact is that the United States scheme, which I believe has a lot to commend it, is something we had been considering and something that can be adopted, because it does not involve any action by government at all. Nevertheless we must look at the realities of the situation, and realize that if we adopted the United States system, as the Prime Minister suggested during the course of his election he would, we would not be touching the bulk of the population of our country. We would not be touching the farmers. We would not be touching the fishermen. We would only be embracing those who can be reached by the mechanism of deducting contributions from pay cheques.

So it is one thing to say that our system falls short of that of the United States, and it is another thing to say that we can study that system and also that we can adopt it without violating the principle of our own universal system. But my hon. friend, in the introduction of the amendment now before the house, has done nothing whatsoever to realize the suggestions made by the Prime Minister about the validity of the United States scheme. He does not do any more than confirm by this amendment the validity of the act which we introduced in 1951.

An hon. Member: And you are going to vote for the amendment, too.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said I was going to vote for it, and I certainly am.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the speech just delivered I had to try to determine whether there had been an election on June 10 last. To hear the former minister of national health and welfare upbraiding the present government for not doing anything seems very strange coming from his lips. I must confess that when the election results were announced on the evening of June 10 one of the thoughts that ran through my mind was just what sort of approach the Liberal party would take in the House of Commons with respect to legislation. I wondered at that time whether the former ministers would have the brass, after having sat on their haunches for 22 years, to emerge suddenly as champions of last action.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that we of the C.C.F. have always considered that the differences between Liberals and Conservatives are superficial. It is simply a question of which party happens to be in office and which party happens to be on the opposition side of the house. But it does seem passing strange that the man who could have done so much when he was minister has now suddenly realized the enormity of the problem facing our senior citizens. Yet at the same time I did not hear one single suggestion during his 30-minute speech as to what he thought should be the figure, as to what he thought should be done at the present time. He went back into history—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend want me to deal with that?

Mr. Ellis: On some other occasion. I had expected that the Liberal party would now reveal to us just what they think the pension rate ought to be. We know that earlier this year they had a decision to make. They had to decide how much the pension increase should be, and they decided on a figure of $6. I think the niggardliness of the increase was one of the most important contributing factors in the defeat of the former government. From press reports I have read in newspapers from one end of Canada to the other it was quite evident before the voters went to the polls on June 10 that the people of Canada were not satisfied with the $6 increase. The government had allowed the position of the old age pensioners to deteriorate year by year and only—I am using the former minister's expression—at the eleventh hour, a few months before the election, did they bring forward a $6 increase.

We know what happened. The former minister would be quite happy to forget what happened on June 10, and in an effort to forget is going back 20, 25 or 30 years into dim history. Well, of course I understand the desire of the Liberal party to retreat into the past, but I was intrigued by a statement which the hon. member for Essex East had to make regarding the proposal made by Mr. King in 1926 about the old age pension.

I think all hon. members are very aware of the situation which existed in this house at that time. While I could not find the quotation, I can recall reading a statement made by Mr. Bennett to Mr. King, when Mr. Bennett quite properly pointed out that he only brought in the old age pension when he had a gun pointed at his head by the late Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, the founder of the C.C.F. party, who at that time was the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The reason we got the old age pension in 1956 was that both the old parties lacked a clear majority in the House of Commons and Mr. Woodsworth, as we are all aware, approached the party leaders—Mr. Meighen of the Conservatives and Mr. King of the Liberals—to find out which party would give the most firm undertaking that the old age pension legislation would be brought down. Mr. Meighen's answer at that time was very unsatisfactory; Mr. King, being a very astute politician, replied in a more favourable manner. As a result of the strategic position held in the House of Commons by two labour members at that time, the people of Canada got the old age pension legislation.

Thus it seems rather strange now to hear Liberals claiming credit for bringing in the old age pension legislation in this country. If credit is to be given, then I think in all honesty and fairness the credit for the old age pension legislation should go squarely to the late Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Heaps, the two labour members in this house.

An hon. Member: Who introduced the measure?

Mr. Ellis: I do not propose to deal further with the approach taken by the official opposition today, because I think the people of Canada gave their answer on June 10 and I think hon. members should keep their peace until such time as there may be some concrete and practical proposals to bring forth on behalf of the Liberal party. Of course I realize there is a convention coming up in January, and I suppose that these debates must be made the occasion for a little campaign oratory. That is the only possible reason I could imagine for the hon. member for Essex East reaching these heights of oratory in which, of course, nothing of a practical nature was said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, no hon. member has the right to impute the motives of another hon. member, and I would simply say that the reason the hon. member for Essex East spoke as he did was because, as everyone in this house knows, his whole record is one which shows a deep and abiding interest in social welfare measures.

Mr. Ellis: The attitude of the C.C.F. toward the resolution now before the house was summed up in the amendment which we moved in connection with the reply to the speech from the throne. Of course we expressed our great interest and support of the legislation forecast in the throne speech. We went on to urge the government to bring down this legislation at the earliest possible date. I was very disappointed that the Prime Minister did not see fit to keep one of his pledges prior to the election, that there would be a September session in order that the senior citizens might have obtained the benefits of this legislation at an earlier date. However, we are most anxious to facilitate the passage of this legislation, and we are very pleased that there has been this interruption in the debate on the address in order that the house might consider this matter with all dispatch.

We have established our position in this house over the years in unmistakably clear language. We in the C.C.F. have always maintained that the hallmark of a good society is the willingness of the society to take cognizance of the needs of those among us who through no fault of their own, either through age or infirmity, find it difficult to take care of themselves. Hence we have always believed that what we should have in this country is a comprehensive social welfare program that will provide for all our citizens a decent standard of living. Consequently for our senior citizens we have always thought that the old age pension should be based on the need to provide these people with an adequate standard of living.

We believe that the old age pension is not a question of charity; it is not a favour bestowed upon our senior citizens. It is a matter of right, a right of citizenship which over the years our senior citizens have made great sacrifices to earn. They have built this nation, and in their declining years have a right to expect from this society a decent standard of living. Indeed, I can wholeheartedly agree with the statement made by the Conservative party prior to the election in respect to the new national policy adopted by it and endorsed, of course, by its leader. I am going to put this on record, because it is something with which we in the C.C.F. find ourselves in complete agreement, and I suggest this a commitment made by the government to our senior citizens.

> We condem the meagre and niggardly assistance given to old age pensioners which leaves them in a position worse off in purchasing power than they were in 1951 when $40 a month was first established. No government worthy of its responsibilities can justify this picayune increase made to the old age pensioners. The Conservative party proposes to set the amount at a figure high enough to meet the needs of our older citizens.

I think we are in complete agreement with that. That same statement could have been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or the hon. member for Mackenzie or the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. We agree that the figure established should be set at such a level as to provide to our senior citizens a decent standard of living. Now, then, what is the figure?

Well, Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, before lunch I had been discussing the commitment made by the present Prime Minister and his party to the Canadian public prior to June 10, and I had placed on record an excerpt from the new national policy under which the Conservative party had pledged itself to support the setting of the old age pension figure high enough to meet the needs of our older citizens. I suggest that the words "high enough" and the words "to meet the needs" are the most significant portions of that statement.

The question we must ask ourselves now is whether or not the present proposed increased rate does, in fact, meet the needs of our senior citizens. I do not believe that hon. members of this house would find it possible to live on $55 a month; much less, of course, would they be able to live on the smaller figure granted under the Liberal administration. But if we do believe that $55 a month will satisfy the needs of our senior citizens, then I suppose we can conclude that this pre-election commitment has been met at this time.

While we are very pleased that the increase is coming forward, we in this party must remind the government that we must move forward until we reach the stage when the old age pension is high enough—in the words of the Conservative statement—to meet the needs of the senior citizens adequately. We in the C.C.F. party have pointed out that in order to provide a minimum standard of living an old age pensioner requires approximately $75 a month, and hon. members may recall that earlier this year, during the last session of the previous parliament, my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo moved an amendment asking the government to increase the pension rate to $75 a month. The present Prime Minister voted against that amendment and indicated that the amount was too high.

I suggest that if we want to arrive at a figure based on economic reality we must take into account Canada's gross national product and satisfy ourselves that our senior citizens are getting their fair share of Canada's productivity. They would not be getting any special consideration, merely what they as citizens have the right to expect. Their just share of the national income would call for a pension of approximately $75 a month.

If hon. members feel that that figure is still too high, I would draw their attention to reports which have been made by various social welfare agencies in different parts of Canada. In one report dated August 1956 the Montreal social council agencies noted—and I shall quote the relative sentence—that an old age pensioner requires at least $70.87 a month in order to buy food and clothing, and shelter himself at current Montreal prices. That was in August 1956. Since that time the cost of living has increased, with the result that today the figure which we suggested last year of $75 a month is in line with the economic necessity of the moment. I suggest that if we are going to meet the objective of providing a pension high enough to fulfil the legitimate requirements of our senior citizens the amount this party suggested, namely $75, is the minimum which should be granted.

That was the attitude we took last session. I believe our position was valid then and, in view of the continuing increase in the cost of living, it is even more valid today. However, as I mentioned before lunch, the failure of the past government to recognize the needs of our senior citizens was one of the contributing factors in the defeat of that government. The $6 increase they brought forth did not meet with general approval throughout the country, and it appeared quite obvious that the new government was in a position where it would find itself in very difficult circumstances indeed if it did not proceed to grant an increase, and an increase which would have to be larger than the increase of $6 given by the previous government. Thus one may conclude that the figure of $55 contained in this amendment constitutes the minimum figure which could be arrived at by the government without running into serious opposition and criticism such as was encountered by the previous administration.

I am satisfied that the old age pensioners in my constituency were concerned about one thing, the amount of the increase. They knew that the political situation in this country indicated that some increase would be forthcoming, and the question they were asking was: what is the new pension going to be? Is it going to be $60? Is it going to be more, or less? I think the old age pensioners of this country had every reason to expect that the pension would be set at a figure of at least $60 a month.

During the last session the present Prime Minister voted against an amendment calling on the government to increase the pension to $75. He indicated that while he was opposed to the figure of $75, by implication, at least, he suggested that $60 might be a reasonable figure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just read what was said.

Mr. Ellis: I recall that at the time the then leader of the opposition suggested that the premier of Saskatchewan thought $60 would be a fair pension, and he endorsed the attitude of the premier at that time, so by implication he placed himself on record as supporting the idea of a $60 pension.

In any event, I suggest, while supporting this legislation, that we should bear in mind that there is a great deal more to be done and that this is only one step toward the kind of pension which we believe the senior citizens of this country deserve. Some people have told me that to them the $60 pension seems to represent a big increase. If this is so, if the increase seems to be large, it is because in former times our senior citizens have been so much neglected that they have been allowed to fall ever further behind year by year, to the extent that it required, not only one or two steps to bring them into line again with the others but several giant strides. However, I do not feel that because these pensioners have been neglected for so long by the former administration there is any excuse for not looking at the situation realistically now and setting the pension at a figure commensurate with the needs of those who will receive it.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of other provisions in the resolution before the house. We welcome the proposed reduction in the residence qualification, but I suggest that the pension ought to be a right of citizenship and that the government might explore the possibility of lowering the residence qualification as suggested, I believe, by one of its own supporters the other day.

While the other recommendation with respect to increasing from three to six months the period of permissible absence from Canada seems to be a step in the right direction we feel nevertheless there is no justifiable reason for restricting the movement of our senior citizens. Today the old age pension is on a contributory basis. Every taxpayer in Canada through the payment of income tax and sales tax on his purchases contributes to his old age security. Why then should the government say, "You will not have the right to go and live with your relatives in Utah, in the United Kingdom or in some other part of the world". Our senior citizens have earned their pensions and when in receipt of them they should be perfectly free to live anywhere they want to live. The proposed restriction of six months works a hardship on the people in the low income brackets. Those with means can leave the country in the winter months and return to Canada in order to protect their rights under the act whereas those who are not well off cannot do so. I believe the only fair way to deal with the situation would be to completely remove any restriction with respect to pensioners who desire to reside outside the borders of Canada when they qualify for pensions.

The proposed legislation before us today is regarded by those in the C.C.F. party as a step forward toward the goal which we in this group envisage. I mentioned earlier the work of the late Mr. J. S. Woodsworth in bringing legislation of this kind into this chamber in the first place. Since that time C.C.F. members both in the house and outside of it have fought to bring about a fair deal for our senior citizens. We are very pleased that there has been some recognition of the need for further increases but we call on the government to move forward in future sessions towards raising old age pensions to a level which in the words of the Prime Minister in the statement of policy issued by his party, "ought to be high enough to take care of their needs".

Is he convinced that $55 is sufficient to take care of the needs of senior citizens in providing housing, food and clothing for them? That is a matter of opinion; but I suggest we have a long way to go yet. We ought to move forward from the present legislation to the desirable goal of providing our senior citizens with the standard of living which they have every right to expect. In the meantime we in this group are happy that the present legislation constitutes a step forward toward the goal of this party of having a social security program that will guarantee to all Canadians who are unable to take care of themselves the type of standard of living which every Canadian citizen ought to enjoy.

Mr. Shaw: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately many hon. members of this house have had to listen once again while other hon. members went back 31 years through history in an attempt to convey the impression that one political party or another deserves more credit than the rest for the fact that we have old age pensions in Canada today. While the hon. member for Essex East was speaking and during the earlier remarks of the hon. member for Regina I could not help but think; does the Canadian pioneer citizen, or any Canadian in fact, give one hoot in hades as to what happened in 1926?

It is probably true as was stated, that in 1926 some of the Conservatives—or all of them perhaps—may have opposed pensions. It may also be true that the then prime minister of Canada with gun at head introduced pension legislation in 1926. Again it may also be true that Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Heaps, not by argument but by political pistols held at head, played some part in causing a Liberal government to introduce that legislation. Regardless of what may have occurred in 1926, Mr. Chairman, it is a known fact that all parties in this country today are in favour of old age pensions of one kind or another.

We may disagree as far as the amount to be paid or the regulations under which it will be administered are concerned, but surely no one should have thought that by reference to history he could prove any party opposes it today or that one party deserves special credit because it exists. The behaviour I have described reminds me somewhat of the idea held by some people that if eight or ten members of a party speak on a certain issue and only one or two in another party speak on the same issue the party having eight speakers favours a certain proposition more strongly than does the other. That fantastic sort of notion is held by some people.

Prior to June 10 the Liberal government in its attitude toward pensions believed that in the light of all known facts, including other commitments, we should increase old age security by an amount of approximately 20 cents a day. It was also believed by the government that we should increase old age assistance payments by 20 cents a day, 10 cents of which the federal government would pay. This was their belief, their conviction. Obviously it did not meet the approval of a great many Canadian people.

With reference to the Liberal administration I might point out that quite apart from the amount paid to our senior citizens the attitude of the former minister of national health and welfare itself probably had as much to do with annoying Canadians in this matter as anything else I know because he had a habit of standing in the house and claiming for his government, if not for his party, all the credit for everything that had been done in the field of old age pensions.

I recall that on January 29 last in answer to a question in this house he quite brazenly rose to his feet and claimed all the credit for, as he put it, his side of the house. You can well imagine how the citizens of British Columbia felt, how the people of Alberta felt and how the people of Saskatchewan felt upon reading that declaration by the then minister. His was the bad habit of claiming credit where he had no right to claim credit.

The Conservative government has now come to the conclusion that our senior citizens require an additional 30 cents a day, or approximately that sum. As far as those over 70 years of age are concerned, the federal government will pay the 30 cents per day. With regard to old age assistance the federal government will pay 15 cents and the provinces will pay 15 cents. Certainly I wish to express my deep appreciation of the fact that there has been an increase but I am not going so far as to agree that it is sufficient to provide a decent standard of living for our pioneer citizens who are dependent upon the receipt of their pension and that alone in order to meet the day to day cost of living.

It is definitely an improvement. I recall that when I first came to this House of Commons some 18 years ago our old age pensioners were receiving $20 a month. It did jump to $40; it did jump to $46; and now the proposal is to pay $55 a month. I have seen their status steadily improve, and I was pleased to note that the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that this was not intended as a final goal or the end-all as far as the amount of payment was concerned. I wish to express appreciation—and I know our old age pensioners will express appreciation—for that additional 30 cents a day. Let me also say, though, in connection with my observations that I do not feel it will enable those who are wholly dependent upon pensions to meet the cost of living, and that I also do not believe it is all that Canada can afford.

We talk of surpluses that worry us, surpluses of foodstuffs and surpluses of farm production. Our pensioners claim nothing more and deserve nothing more than a claim upon, as someone said, a fair share of that which is bothering us so much in this country, namely, so-called surplus foods.

The federal government has proposed that the period of residence for the purpose of qualification under the act shall be reduced from 20 years to 10 years. There may be some differences of opinion with respect to that action. I say the strongest argument probably in support of it is that it brings it into line with our Disabled Persons Act and our Blind Persons Act. The discrimination which existed heretofore certainly could not be justified. Personally, I am very much in favour of that period of required residence being reduced from 20 years to 10 years.

The government proposes to double the period of permissible absence from Canada. I have knowledge of quite a number of cases, Mr. Chairman, where persons, because of health conditions and for no other reason, were obliged to leave our country for a period exceeding three months, more particularly during the winter time. And it does seem to me to be somewhat of a tragedy that those pensioners should encounter difficulties with pension boards because of the fact that they had been absent for more than the prescribed period of time. I think that change is most acceptable.

It is an important step forward, as are the proposed increases in the total allowable income, inclusive of pension. But I still cannot understand, Mr. Chairman—and I hope the government will try to assist me in understanding—why the total allowable income, including pension, either in the case of a single person or a married person, should be less than the allowable basic deductions under our Income Tax Act, namely $1,000 and $2,000. I hope the minister will try to indicate why he did not see fit to provide those basic exemptions when so many of his associates, while members of the opposition, strongly advocated such a proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I speak of this it reminds me of something else that I believe I should mention to the minister. Under our regulations today we find so often that where a person's income may exceed the total allowable income during a given year, even by as little as $10 or $20, he has been told that he must wait for a year in order to submit a second application. We accept the fact that he should be permitted to have, let us say, $1,320 but he has $1,400. I am using these figures at the moment only for illustration purposes. He has earned that $1,320 or has acquired it through earnings and pension during the past 12 months, and it can be assumed that the basic allowance was the amount required to keep him during those 12 months. But we say that because you had $80 more than the allowable you must wait another year before applying. To me that is a tragedy without reason and without excuse. Surely, it would not hurt us to say, You have $80 more than the maximum allowable; therefore, you should wait 70/1320 of the next year. I say, even if you were to say that, you would be assisting so many of those who have encountered difficulties as a consequence of that provision.

Let me say also with respect to the regulations, in the past the former minister of national health and welfare always tried to claim, or at least create the impression,—I will be fairer to him and put it in that way—that these regulations were drafted as a consequence of the representatives of the provinces and the officials of his department sitting down more or less from scratch and drawing the regulations. The fact, of course, always has been that the federal authorities have drafted the regulations and the provincial officials have been called in in order to come to some uniformity as far as interpretation and application are concerned.

I trust that the present government will go much farther in permitting the provincial representatives to assist in drafting the regulations with respect to the Old Age Assistance Act, which is the one I am speaking of specifically. After all, let us not forget that even though the former minister of national health and welfare tried to create the impression this morning that the bulk of the cost of the pensions is paid by the federal government, the fact is that in some provinces at least that certainly is not the fact and therefore the provinces should have just as much say as has the federal government.

In my own province of Alberta, for example, it is true that the federal government pays the total cost of old age security but I must remind hon. members here that a substantial part of the revenue of Canada comes out of my province, far more than is paid back into it, in spite of Liberal propaganda in the last election. Because of our vast resources, because of the wise policies administered in the development of those resources, quite a substantial part of the revenue of this country comes out of my province. My province pays half the old age security; my province pays the total cost of administration; my province pays a supplementary allowance of $15 a month plus, with very limited exceptions, medical, dental, optical, and hospital services to those pensioners and to the dependents of those pensioners. Therefore, I say to you, why should not the provinces be given just as much say in the drafting of old age security regulations as the federal government itself has to say in the drafting?

I do feel, regardless of what the Conservatives may have said during the election, that they would have been wise, had it been possible—I am suggesting that it is possible; I see no obstacle—to have placed in those pension acts an escalator clause, a provision under which those pensions would automatically increase with increases in the cost of living index.

It would seem to me that the government could have escaped a lot of criticism; the house could have been saved a great deal of time and pensioners themselves could have benefited as the cost of living index rose. I think that was a provision that certainly should have been included in the legislation which is presently before us.

I am not going to occupy more of the time of the house, Mr. Chairman. We always supported the principle of old age pensions, whether it be old age security or old age assistance or whether it be other social benefits such as the disabled persons' pension and so on. We do not take a back seat to anyone in that respect, yet you never heard us claiming credit for all that has been done. I may even say in that connection that if people are going to start claiming the credit, they had better start in the provinces and not in Ottawa. They had better learn what the provinces themselves are doing to assist our pioneer citizens who are in receipt of pensions in one form or another. I say we do not take a back seat to anyone in this respect. We support and welcome the provision of these measures. We will probably be heard from again. The government will no doubt have us pressing them for a bit more realism so far as some of the provisions are concerned. But that does not mean for one moment that we are not grateful for those concessions that have been made. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, we have every justification for supporting them and we hope that the government will in every session of parliament which it might be fortunate enough to attend as the government go just as far as it has this time with respect to this matter.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this morning the hon. member for Algoma East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Essex East. They are interchangeable.

Mr. Green: Essex East — I apologize to the hon. member for Algoma East—in his best oratorical style set a rather controversial precedent for the discussion of this measure. This was a bit surprising to me because I would have thought that he would be the last member in the house to make a speech of that kind. It shows you what changes can come over a former minister when he becomes a frontbencher on the opposition side of the house. Just a few short months ago this very ex-minister introduced the Liberal plan for the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my friend permit a question? The former minister, about whom my friend is now speaking, did no such thing.

Mr. Green: That is not a point of order and it is not a fact, either.

Mr. Chairman, the member for Essex East was responsible for the old age pension policy of the Liberal party in 1957.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What the minister said was that I had introduced the measure.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. If the hon. member for Essex East has a point of order, I would be glad to hear it. Otherwise, the Minister of Public Works has the floor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will deal with the hon. gentleman afterwards.

Mr. Green: We had a supplementary estimate introduced in the dying days of the session by this ex-minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not true.

Mr. Green: No opportunity was given to the house for the adequate debate of this measure in that session. An announcement had been made many weeks earlier in the budget speech of the minister of finance as to what this former government proposed to do for these senior citizens. But there was no attempt made to bring about a discussion of the measure until the last possible moment, when the only thing that was done was to vote interim supply to cover the amount required for the matter of a few months to provide the increase of $6 a month. There was no adequate opportunity to debate this policy of the former government. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Essex East above all failed the senior citizens of Canada utterly just a few short months ago, yet today he has the nerve to get up in this house and try to lay all the blame on the members who now constitute the government. This is something which shows great nerve, to say the least. This ex-minister might well be dubbed the $6 minister. This $6 plan is the plan of himself and the former government, and it is on that plan that they must be judged today. The hon. member's talk today certainly does not fit in with his actions just a few months ago.

I notice that hon. members on the other side of the house smile. They think that the member for Essex East is on the spot, which he certainly is. I do not doubt that they are happy that he should be getting most of the blame, but the cold hard facts are that practically every Liberal in the house today, all but a handful, was in the house last spring. Did they raise their voices to say anything by way of demanding larger increases? They were quite happy to sit still and support the plan of their government—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Richardson: Not at all.

Mr. Green: —for an increase of $6 per month. Let them not try to say now, in October, that they think the Conservative plan is no good when they did not have the courage to stand up to their own ministers in April.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Green: If you have a point of order, raise it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just asking the hon. gentleman if he would permit a question.

Mr. Green: You know I won't.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is just what I expected.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Closure.

Mr. Green: Not from the hon. member for Twisted-Billingsgate, anyway.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a question of privilege.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. Has the hon. member a point of order he wishes to bring up?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, mine is a question of privilege, it is not a point of order. I could not care less for myself, but for my constituents who live in the place where Canada was discovered, I think it is rather an insult from the Tory benches not to know the name.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I feel very sorry for the constituents of Bonavista-Twillingate also. The hon. member for Algoma East—Essex East—

An hon. Member: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Green: —in his covering-up speech this morning took refuge in the past.

Mr. Chevrier: The speech must have hurt.

Mr. Green: He went back to 1926 and he gave great credit to the Liberal party for bringing in old age pensions at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Green: Well, I am glad hon. members can find something to be happy about because they are going to need it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!
